By MICHAEL VAN DYKE
State Press

Associated Students of ASU President John Fees has complained to University officials that the campus alcohol policy is not being properly enforced after wine was served at an early evening staff development seminar in the MU last week.

Fees telephoned Lawrence Mankin, assistant to the ASU president, Monday about the incident and said he plans to send a memo to ASU President J. Russell Nelson next week.

Fees said he was angered by the serving of alcohol from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. at the University Career Women's seminar Thursday.

The group's members were participating in a seminar conducted by Steve Saffron, a nationally known motivational speaker from Scottsdale Community College.

Fees was attending a Devil's Advocate meeting in the room next door during the seminar.

Suzanne Bias, program committee chair for the University Career Women, confirmed that wine was served at the group's meeting, but declined comment regarding alcohol being served on campus during the week.

University Career Women is an organization for ASU staff members which provides professional development opportunities for women on campus.

ASU's alcohol policy states that the University president has "the authority to permit alcohol service at designated special events."

Fees said he is concerned that staff members are being allowed to drink in front of students on weekday evenings, while alcohol cannot be served at any student function.

He said that the University should only allow alcohol on campus during special events or at weekend functions. Each request must be approved by Nelson or one of his assistants.

John Fees

"I think it's a double standard," Fees said. "Why are they doing this in front of students? I'm not attacking this organization (University Career Women) in any way, but why are they allowing alcohol on this campus on a Thursday night?"

"If it were on a weekend then it would be OK, or a special event. I'd like to find out how this was approved."

Fees said he plans to discuss the policy with ASU general counsel Bruce Meyerson today.

"I want to find out how this policy is being enforced," Fees said. "I don't think President Nelson should be approving alcohol on campus."

Nelson said that he does not recall granting authorization for alcohol to be served at the University Career Women's meeting.

Nelson said that all events where alcohol is served must have his approval.

Meyerson said there is no restrictions in the alcohol policy regarding serving alcohol on campus at certain times of day or days of the week.

Meyerson said all decisions regarding time restrictions are left to Nelson's discretion.

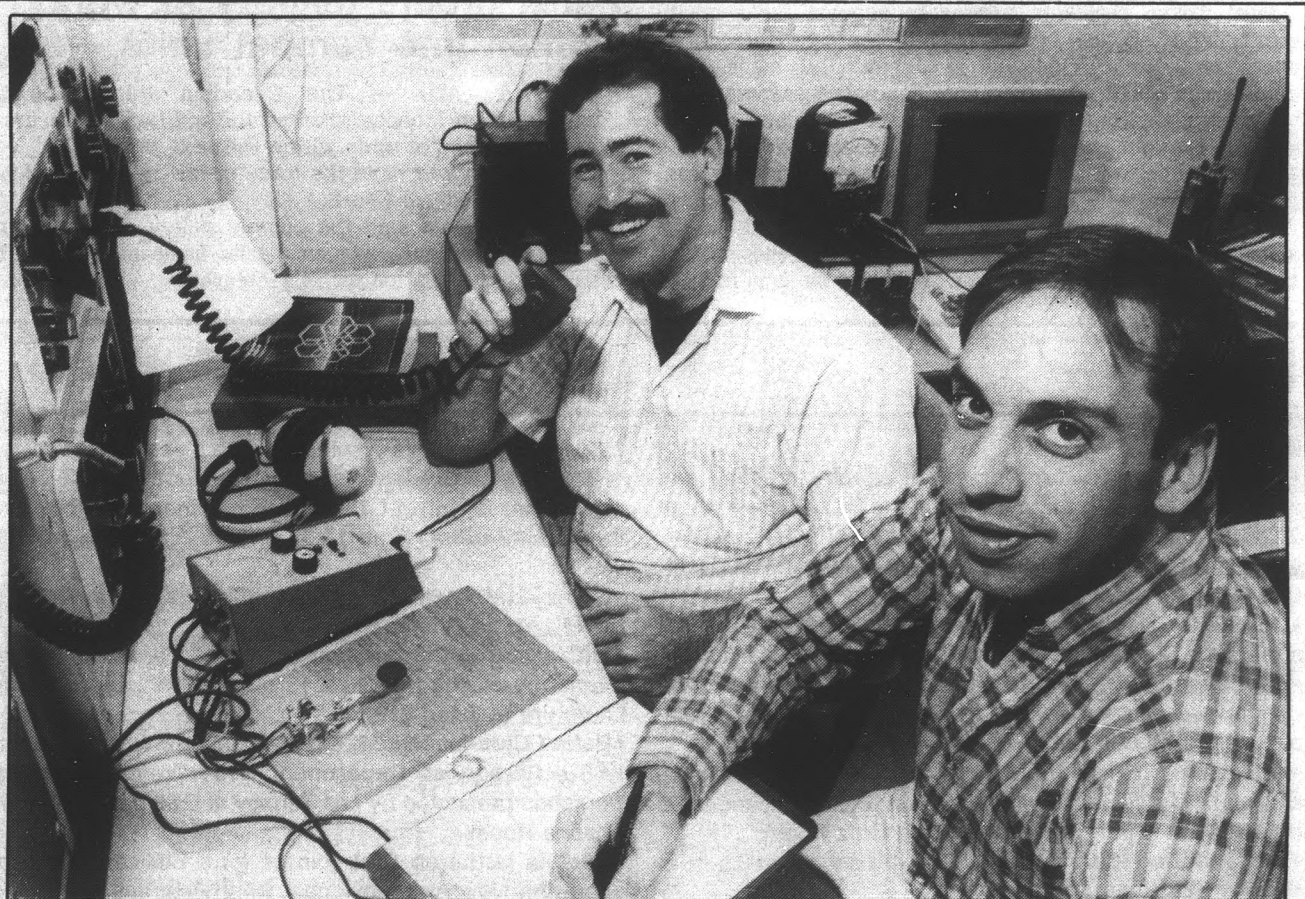

Nelson said that he does not have an established policy regarding restricting alcohol during certain times of the day.

"In practice, organizations are limited to serving alcohol at times after normal class hours," Meyerson said. "We advise organizations to have their functions after regular class hours."

Meyerson said he was not willing to pinpoint what times of the day he recommends groups serve alcohol at functions or what he considers "regular class hours."

He said time restrictions vary in different campus buildings according to the scheduling of student activities.

State Press reporter Stacy Haymes contributed to this report.

Disabled criticize parking fee hike

By TYRONE MEIGHAN
State Press

A five-year plan devised by ASU officials to increase parking rates would more than double parking fees for disabled students by 1992, drawing sharp criticism from the students who say the rate hike would create a "hardship."

Currently, disabled students pay $47 a year to park in one of the 152 reserved disabled spaces on campus. Under the plan, the students will pay $105 a year by 1992-93.

Richard Landreth, director of ASU parking services, said disabled students should pay more because they can park in lots that other students cannot.

"They (disabled students) actually have more privileges than Access A (students)," Landreth said. "Their parking opportunities are much greater."

Under the new proposal, disabled students and those with Gate Access A or B decals would pay the same at the end of the five years. The proposal will go before the Arizona Board of Regents in March for final approval.

Gate Access A provides decal holders with access to one of the parking structures and to Lots 3, 26, 41, 44 and 55.

Disabled parking stalls are available in most lots. Vehicles displaying a valid ASU disabled parking permit may park in any disabled stall.

But Elisa Terranova, an ASU fine arts graduate student who uses a wheelchair, said that disabled parking is a "necessity."

"I don't think it (the increase) is right because we don't have a choice in parking," she said. "Being in a wheelchair is not a privilege."

Terranova said that disabled students already have extra expenses and most cannot afford a rate increase. She said that modifications allowing her to drive her van cost $11,000.

She added that she also pays a personal attendant $250 a month to help her in her daily activities.

Associated Students of ASU President John Fees said the rate increase for the disabled "was never an issue" during the two weeks students and University administrators were negotiating the fee increase schedule.

Fees said he spoke with several disabled students who said they did not like the increase, but did not strongly object to the proposal.

"They (disabled students) want to be treated the way everyone is treated," Fees said. "They want to be treated as equals."

C. J. Huhn, program coordinator for ASU's Veteran's Upward Bound, said he knew nothing about the proposal to increase disabled student parking fees.

"I am concerned that it would be a hardship for (disabled students)," he said. "They (the administrators) are changing policy without notifying anybody."

Veteran's Upward Bound is a group that prepares veterans for attending college. The organization includes many handicapped people.

Landreth said that Tedde Scharf, associate director for disabled students resources, agreed to the proposed increase.

Scharf, who has been ill since October, was not available for comment Monday. But Michele Martinez, a disabled student resources staff member, said she doubts Scharf would agree to such an increase.

Victor Zafrá, ASU vice president for business affairs, said: "It's a question of everybody being treated the same."

But Martinez said a $58 increase over five years for a disabled decal is not justified.

"That doesn't sound like being treated equal to me," she said.

Ray Basabilbazo, a senior education major who is confined to a wheelchair, said: "They (officials) are adding to the Security will try to ensure state funeral for Hirohito is safe

TOKYO (AP) — About 32,000 police are in town to ensure Friday's state funeral for Emperor Hirohito is safe, and residents are feeling the pressure.

Police say the massive force is justified by radical groups and the possibility that international terrorists might target one of the many visiting heads of state, including President Bush.

Most Tokyo residents appear to support the security effort, which police say is part of the largest security operation ever carried out in Japan. But some have complained about what they consider police excesses.

"The major issue regards police pulling cars over at random for spot checks," said a volunteer with a "human rights hot line" set up by several Christian, civic and legal groups to deal with complaints involving funeral security.

"People are also unhappy with being stopped on the street to answer questions and with police searches of their homes," said the volunteer, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

He said the hot line has had more than 90 calls since Feb. 2.

Police have searched an undisclosed number of homes and apartments on or near the route the funeral procession will follow through central Tokyo.

"Residents are asked to voluntarily cooperate with the officers conducting the examination," said one ranking official of the National Police Agency. "If they refuse, we keep going back until they change their mind."

Panel orders military to work women into combat units

OTTAWA (AP) — The Canadian Human Rights Commission on Monday ordered the military to integrate women into combat units within the next 10 years.

The decision will have the force of law in 10 days if not appealed in Federal Court.

The commission said the current policy of introducing women into combat units on a trial basis now should be considered preparation for full integration.

1 soldier injured as IRA bombs western England army barracks

LONDON (AP) — The IRA bombed a British army barracks in western England early Monday, but most of the men had been evacuated before the blasts and only one soldier was injured.

A half-hour before the three explosions a sentry spotted two intruders and fired warning shots, then woke the sleeping soldiers and told them to get out.

Police set up roadblocks in the area of the Ternhill barracks following the pre-dawn blasts and said two suspects observed by the sentry were thought to be at large in a stolen car.

The explosions shook nearby houses, started fires, blew out the wall of one accommodation block and destroyed the roof of another at the home of the 2nd Battalion of the Parachute Regiment, said Col. Peter Hicks, an army spokesman.

It was the second IRA bombing in six months at a British Army barracks in Britain.

Campus ham radio operators try to revive club

By RICHARD VIGIL
State Press

ASU owns "thousands of dollars" worth of amateur radio equipment, but none of it can be used unless the Amateur Radio Society — defunct since 1985 — is resurrected, an Associated Students of ASU senator said.

David Auerbach, a senator from the College of Education, and ASU geology graduate student David Palais, both licensed "ham radio" operators, are trying to bring interested students together so the equipment can be used again.

"The equipment is old, but you can still go up there and fire that thing up and talk to someone in India if you want to," Auerbach said.

The 20-year-old equipment is located in the campus Technology Center, adjacent to the Psychology Building. Auerbach said he was not sure how much money has been invested in the unused ASU equipment, but Palais said he estimates the equipment's value at more than $1,000.

"It is not a cheap hobby to get into," said Palais, adding that students can join the ham radio club and use ASU's equipment instead of buying their own "rig."

The frequencies on which ham radio operates are reserved for hobbyists. International rules forbid the use of ham radios for business.

Palais and Auerbach are interested in getting licensed ham operators involved with the club, as well as interested students who need to get licenses.

In order to get licensed, applicants must pass a two-part test. They must be able to transmit and receive morse code at a rate of five words per minute. There is also a multiple-choice test covering radio operation.

"The novice test is not that hard," Auerbach said. "Usually one or two months of practicing morse code are enough."

Palais and Auerbach said the club could help students become proficient at morse code so they can pass the test and get a license.

Ham radio can be used for more than just talking or sending morse code messages, they said. Auerbach said people can use ham radio to communicate with distant relatives when they cannot get to a telephone.

He said "hams" often call other hams to reassure people that relatives involved in disasters have survived, adding that ham radio operators were used most recently in the aftermath of the earthquake in Soviet Armenia and hurricane Gilbert.

Palais said ham radio operators relay messages as a public service and are not allowed to accept payment of any kind for their help.

Ham radios also can be used with computers to set up "packet radio," which is computer networking using a ham radio instead of telephone.

But Auerbach and Palais said the most important use of ham radio is exchange of cultures. Ham radio operators are heard all over the world.

When ham operators make contact, they often send postcards called "QSL cards" to confirm their radio contact.

ASU's ham radio "shack" is filled with QSL cards from all over the world, including Australia, Japan, South Africa and many European countries.

"Sharing of cultures is a very important part of ASU," Auerbach said. "We are a culturally diverse University."

Avoiding the L.A. mistake

The Valley of the Sun in the year 2000:

Choking smog fouls the air. Cars jam the freeways, essentially reducing area roads to parking lots and forcing members of the area's exploding population to virtually crawl to their destinations. The "brown cloud" that occasionally engulfs the Valley every year becomes a permanent fixture, blotting out the mountains, the sky and the sun.

But it's not an unrealistic prediction, either. In fact, we need look no farther than our neighbor to the west — Los Angeles — for confirmation that such a scene lies in Phoenix's not-too-distant future unless action is taken.

Arizona has followed the L.A. growth plan for years — put simply, grow fast and damn the consequences. The fruits of such thinking in southern California have been an urban nightmare of maze-like freeways, deadly smog, overcrowding and a resulting decline in the quality of life. But now Valley voters have a chance to distinguish their home from the California Colossus and make a choice that may provide a way out of such a bleak future.

The choice: ValTrans.

Proposition 300, which would authorize a half-cent sales tax for the next 30 years, will come before the voters March 28. If passed, the measure would provide funding for an extensive Valley-wide system of elevated, automated electric light-rail trains and a dramatic expansion of the Valley's bus fleet — from 350 to 1,500 by the year 2020.

While critics attack the proposition as too costly — $8 billion over several decades — and maintain that the system will be plagued by insufficient ridership, the benefits are self-evident, especially for ASU.

ValTrans would provide new handicapped-equipped buses for seven-days-a-week service in and around the University. The 30,000 ASU students who live out of the Tempe area would benefit from this service by the spring of 1990.

And most importantly, the first light-rail line slated for construction would connect Glendale, Sky Harbor and ASU. By 1995, students, faculty and staff would be able to commute quickly, quietly and safely from northwest Phoenix (and ASU West) to the main campus.

ValTrans requires area residents to rethink their way of life, and it will be no easy task to convince those accustomed to driving to school and work to take public transportation. But other mass transit systems have overcome that obstacle before — notably in Vancouver and Washington, D.C.

It must also be acknowledged that the cost of the system is high. The expenditure of $8 billion is nothing to approve hastily.

But ValTrans should not be viewed as some pie-in-the-sky Disneyland monorail — an unnecessary luxury item, like the ill-fated Rio Salado development project that went down to a crushing defeat in 1987.

ValTrans is a vital part of Arizona's urban planning as we prepare to enter the next century. Only with an integrated system of mass transit can the area avoid the Los Angeles/big city pratfall of urban roadway congestion — which ultimately reduces life in the city to little more than an aggravating effort to move from here to there.

ASU's Young Democrats and other campus groups will be on the malls for the next few weeks registering voters and providing information on ValTrans.

Take a few minutes to consider Proposition 300, and make it to the polls March 28.

Ritter column insulting to gun owners

Editor:

I found Mike Ritter's editorial on Feb. 14 to be an insult to all law abiding citizens who own guns. I now know how truly hypocritical Mike Ritter actually is. He overreacted and jumped right on the anti-gun bandwagon after the incident in Stockton, Calif., where an obviously insane man murdered several children. Mike's and many other people's fingers were immediately pointed at the "ownership" of the AK-47 rifle rather than how it was used. Common sense says you don't outlaw automobiles when a drunk driver kills innocent people.

Mike, I believe it's time you dedicate your energy and fancy rhetoric to more constructive criticism. I have worked in a hospital for seven years and I'm witness to the results of crimes much worse in this country that are not identified by name in the Constitution. And by the way, one is promoted by the State Press daily. I can tell you more people occupy hospitals from smoking cigarettes and consuming alcohol than people who have been shot by an AK-47.

Gun control needed

Editor:

Congratulations, Mike Ritter, on a powerful, informative column — "NRA: Will the real psychopaths please stand up" (Feb. 14). You are right on target.

I debated the president of the National Rifle Association, Mr. (Joe) Foss (a real Phoenix "cowboy type") on Channel 12's Sunday morning show "Buyer Beware." Mr. Foss said we should not have gun control... this despite the fact that I pointed out that many of the police departments are major supporters of gun control.

The Morton Grove, Ill. city council was one of the first to pass gun control laws. Mr. Thomas Agnos, Maricopa County Sheriff is for gun control. Rep. Dave Carson (R-Prescott) has proposed legislation which would allow private citizens to carry concealed weapons. Mr. Agnos pointed out on the Channel 12 Rick Romero program that the proposed legislation by Rep. Carson will only add to the problem.

Your cartoons and columns are right on, Mike. Keep up the courageous fight for gun control... my seven grandchildren thank you, as do I.

Prisons or classrooms?

Editor:

The taxpayers of Arizona are being told that prisons have to be built. They are "necessary." The state director of corrections says that 1,800 more beds will be needed by April of 1990. Legislators who want us to maintain our inflexible mandatory sentencing law say that they are opposed to raising taxes.

Now, I am the suspicious sort. How much will these prisons cost? And if taxes are not raised to build these prisons, where will the money come from?

Conservative estimates are that it costs $28,000 per inmate to build a cell, not counting interest, and $15,000 per year, per cell to operate it. Let's be generous and figure that the cell will last 20 years. Using these figures, the cost of the proposed facility is a whopping $280,000,000 (that is 280 million dollars), and the tab for maintaining an additional 3,600 prisoners could easily come to $54,000,000 per year.

The approved 1988-89 budget for ASU is $215,731,700. If we add the budget for ASU West the total for both campuses is still only $226,208,900. Could it be that in order to build these prisons (without raising taxes), the Corrections Industry is looking at the University System budget? Has some bureaucrat noticed that they could close down ASU and ASU West, and still have money left over? No more argumentative, expensive students. Just nice quiet prisoners...

Freedom of speech is a rare commodity in this world

Jeff Greenfield
Univeral Press Syndicate

NEW YORK — The news that fun-loving literary critic Ayatollah Khomeini has ordered the entire Moslem world to murder author Salman Rushdie suggests a few long-overdue thoughts about the once-fashionable notion of "cultural relativism."

Is it a symptom of Western egocentrism to find the fury over "The Satanic Verses" something close to lunacy? Is it a form of aesthetic imperialism to recoil from the specter of murderous violence against an author's use of Moslem beliefs and traditions? Is it a sign that we Westerners just do not understand the very different traditions that govern a billion of our fellow citizens of the world?

Stuff and nonsense. It is about time that we recognized that, while the political institutions undergirding freedom can vary widely, the premises of freedom are not subject to boundaries of geography or tradition.

I got my first taste of relativism in the early 1960s when I heard an official from Ghana named Tom Mboya talk about his country. This was the time when John Kennedy was telling us that the battle against communism would be won or lost amid the newly emerging nations of the Third World, and the political winds that were blowing in Asia and Africa were of central concern to what were then called "thoughtful liberals."

One such worthy wanted to know why the nation of Ghana had become a one-party state under the permanent leadership of Kwame Nkrumah, and why opponents of the regime were silenced, or jailed, or worse.

You must understand, replied Mr. Mboya, that we have very different traditions from yours; we have a tradition of a leader who embodies the will of the people; therefore, dissent is treated very differently from the way it is in the West.

This seemed to satisfy most of the audience, although I suspect Mr. Mboya may have rethought his position in the moments before his life was ended by an assassin's bullet a few years later.

And indeed, there are plenty of examples of Westerners assuming that their premises about a faraway nation could work, in the face of powerful evidence to the contrary.

Vietnam seems a classic case; early on in America's muddled involvement, we assumed that a family of wealthy Catholics could rally the Vietnamese for the West, even though the vast majority of Vietnamese regarded the family of Ngo Dinh Diem as something close to traitors. And the image of American officials gathered in Honolulu in 1967 to write South Vietnam's Constitution — the bicameral legislature was a matter of intense debate — surely does raise the issue of arrogance.

Here, however, we are talking about something else: the impulse to speak and write what you believe. We are talking about the desire to object to unfair, immoral, even outrageous conduct on the part of the governors of a town or region or nation.

We are talking about the creative impulse that can find new meaning in an old idea, or image, or tradition. We are talking about the innate urge of some — artist, madmen, thinkers — to unsettle settled opinion, to comfort the afflicted, to afflict the comfortable.

Ask the good people at Amnesty International or the Lawyers' Committee for Human Rights whether such impulses are limited by culture. From the gulags of the Soviet Union to the military prisons of Chile, from the dungeons of Turkey to the killing grounds of Ethiopia, people lose their freedom, their livelihood, their lives every day for the crime of thinking or writing or saying the wrong things.

Do we dare to draw no distinction between the right to protest a book, to fight offensive speech with more speech, and the impulse to burn a book and murder its author?

On the contrary. The assault on Salman Rushdie and "The Satanic Verses" is not a case of Western cultural elitism. It is, rather, a sign that there is in the world a substantial body of opinion that says only its thoughts can be permitted free expression.

That body of opinion, whatever the color, creed or national origin of its supporters, is wrongheaded, dangerous and immoral. And those of us who understand that have an obligation to stand up and say so.

Phoenix man arrested for allegedly firing at officer

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A Phoenix man who was firing a rifle near an industrial area in west Tempe was arrested Sunday after he allegedly fired a shot at a police officer, police said.

The shot missed Officer Kim Hale. Police arrested Johnny Ray Peterson, 35, in connection with the 2:47 p.m. incident near First and 52nd Streets, said Officer Roger Austin, a Tempe police spokesman.

Peterson was booked into Tempe City Jail on a charge of aggravated assault on a police officer and was also being held on warrants issued by the East Phoenix Justice of the Peace Court for possession of narcotics, assault and disorderly conduct, Austin said.

Austin said Hale was on patrol when he heard gunshots. Hale then spotted a man with a .22-caliber rifle and when he approached him, the man pointed the weapon at him and fired, Austin said.

police report

Tempe police also reported the following incidents Monday:
•An arson fire caused $10,000 damage to a Tempe school Saturday night.

The blaze occurred at the Tempe Adventist Christian School, 630 W. 17th Place, about 11:30 p.m., after someone set fire to a plastic garbage can outside the building. The fire then heated plexiglass windows which ignited curtains inside the school and spread the fire.

Police said an arsonist also hit the school Feb. 4., causing about $100 in damages.

•A motorcyclist who was injured critically in an accident Sunday night was upgraded Monday to fair condition at Maricopa County Medical Center, a hospital nursing supervisor said.

Richard Alberty of Tempe was injured about 11 p.m. when his Honda motorcycle slammed into the side of a car in the 400 block of West Baseline Road. The driver of the car was not injured.

The accident still is under investigation and no citations have been issued.

•A man who exposed and fondled himself outside a Tempe woman's apartment Saturday was arrested when he returned the next day.

The man was arrested on a charge of public sexual indecency.

ASU police reported the following incident ending at 7 a.m. Monday:

Two men were injured Sunday in unrelated incidents during the ASU-Texas baseball game at Packard Stadium. Neither of them were ASU students.

One of the men suffered a cut and bruise to his hand after he was hit with a foul ball. He was treated at the scene by paramedics.

The other man suffered a large bump to his head and was taken to Scottsdale Memorial Hospital-Osborn after he fell from the stands. He was reportedly trying to climb the bleachers.

Legal assistance office extends evening hours

By KATHLEEN WINSTEAD
State Press

ASU's Student Legal Assistance office has expanded its hours to meet the needs of commuters and evening students, ASASU's campus affairs vice president said.

The office now assists students Monday and Tuesday from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., Wednesday and Thursday from 8 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. and Friday from 8 a.m. to 12 p.m., said Vince Micone.

Micone said the office, which sees about 23 students each day, provides free legal advice and counsel to students through two part-time attorneys, Doug MacArthur and David Swain.

MacArthur said he and Swain help students resolve disputes including those involving automobile repairs and purchases, collection and consumer disputes, domestic relations, wages and employment, landlord/tenant disputes and guardian disputes.

"(The attorneys') advice is better because they care about students and want to help them," Micone said.

More than 3,000 students used the legal assistance office last year, MacArthur said, adding that he expects more than 3,500 to use it this year.

MacArthur said he has worked part-time for the office for 12 of the 14 years it has been open. He said he works for the office because "it's a lot of fun," and he "feels good" about helping students.

Although the attorneys handle a variety of cases, most involve tenant and landlord disputes, MacArthur said. Most of these disputes involve a landlord who fails to return cleaning deposits or will not make necessary repairs to the rental property, he said.

"We often resolve landlord/tenant problems with a letter," he said.

He added that about 90 percent of the cases can be resolved by informing students of their legal rights and various avenues they can take to resolve disputes.

Although the legal assistance office is not permitted to handle disputes between students, staff, faculty members and the administration, MacArthur said he sometimes mediates such disputes if both parties consult him together.

Parking

problems. You tell them to get into a wheelchair for a week."

The parking increase plan has been approved by both ASU officials and student leaders after disagreeing for two weeks on whether to increase fees for students parking in Lot 59 by $8. The officials eventually agreed to divide the increase into two annual rate hikes of $4.

"I think it was a victory for students in general," Fees said. "We got a compromise for the majority of students who use parking."

Fees said there are 14,000 students who park in Lot 59.

"We have been discussing alternative ways to finance this and limit the damages on the perimeter parking people or the middle-income students who are finding it difficult to afford parking on campus," he said.

Students who obtain perimeter decals will pay $41 for 1989-90 and $45 for 1990-91. The $45 rate for perimeter decals will continue for the remainder of the five-year plan.

"We have to make perimeter parking affordable," Student Regent Pat McWhortor said. "Students are upset about parking as it is."

But Landreth said all students have received improved services in the past four years with no price increase.

"We have not increased fees in most areas since 1985," he said.

He added that two years ago, Lot 59 was re-surfaced, costing $1.8 million, and no extra fees were imposed.

Fees said that a parking rate increase should result in an upgrade of services for students.

"They're saying we need the money to improve it and we're not going to improve it until we have the money," he said.

Landreth said that part of the additional funds from the new rates will go toward buying two new trams.

Landreth said that 750,000 people were served by trams last year, adding that two new trams will be in operation next year. One of the trams will service Lots 40 and 42 and the other will serve Parking Structure Five and the fine arts complex, he said.

"We are providing services for which there have been no increases," Landreth said.

Landreth said that if parking services has a surplus above $350,000 after five years, they would reduce the rate for perimeter parking for the next year.

If there is a $30,000 surplus for 10,000 students parking in the Lot 59, there would be a $3 rebate for the next year, he said.

Landreth said the five-year plan would generate $400,000 a year in student parking, event parking would generate $300,000 and visitor parking would generate $120,000.

Gerard school to close

PHOENIX (AP) — Gerard Catholic High School will be closed at the end of this school year, the Diocese of Phoenix has announced.

The Most Rev. Thomas O'Brien, bishop of Phoenix, wrote parents Friday, saying a diocesan education committee had recommended the closure.

However, he said the decision would not be finalized until after a meeting with parents at the school Wednesday night.

O'Brien has refused to comment about the move or the letter.

"The letter speaks for itself," said diocesan vice chancellor Tim Davern. "It's not appropriate for me to say anything more until after the bishop speaks to the parents."

O'Brien's letter said the committee, formed last June, had come to grips with "unfortunate realities." It said the most obvious were reduced enrollment and the high cost of operating Gerard, which has only 250 students in four grades.

"This action does not in any way diminish my support and appreciation of the value of Catholic education," O'Brien wrote. "We just need to find a more cost-effective and realistic way of providing that education to our children."

If he had read the State Press today, he wouldn't be wondering what to say.

ASU slow but successful in final dual meet

By CHRIS DORSEY
State Press

Airplane travel is generally considered fast and simple, but for the ASU wrestling team, last weekend's roadtrip had its hassles.

The second-ranked Sun Devils spent six hours in the Dallas airport following their return from Stillwater, Okla.

The fatigue factor resulted in a sloppy 27-8 decision over Cal-State Bakersfield Monday night.

ASU (16-4-2) was unable to bury the Roadrunners as expected by a dismal crowd. At one point in the match, the Sun Devil grapplers were being heckled by the crowd. But the crowd of less than 200 did not know the circumstances behind their wrestlers' performance.

"We looked real slow because of the roadtrip," 118-pounder Zeke Jones said. "Our bodies were tired."

Jones (29-6) started things off for the Sun Devils, as he recorded a major decision over Bakersfield's Shane Rosselle, 11-3.

The junior All-America gave ASU a 4-0 lead that it would never relinquish.

Freshman Marco Sanchez settled for a 1-1 draw with Ahmed El-Sokkary, a sophomore touting an 8-6-1 mark, in the 126 pound match.

The match provided no scoring until the second period when the Bakersfield grappler recorded an escape with 23 seconds remaining. The third stanza resembled the first with neither wrestler notching a point.

But in the opening period, Sanchez (13-16-2) accumulated enough riding time, 1:23, to give him a point in the end, which provided the final margin.

The draw put two points on the board for Cal-State Bakersfield while ASU increased its lead to six.

The Roadrunners cut the deficit to one point after Chris Pratt (15-9-1) upset ASU's Andy McNaughton, 6-5.

McNaughton (15-14-1) pulled out to an early 2-0 lead after the opening period and held the advantage until the closing seconds of the final stanza. Pratt was able to put the Sun Devil on his back, which was the turning point of the match.

ASU boosted its score due to 142-pounder Junior Saunders' 5-1 decision over Steve Morris (17-5-2).

Saunders wrestled for Cal-State Bakersfield before coming to Tempe last season. While a Roadrunner, the junior (32-4, for the Devils) earned an NCAA Division II championship at 142 pounds in 1987.

The Sun Devil recorded a takedown at the 1:26 mark in the opening stanza and never looked back.

Richard Bailey, Bakersfield's lone-ranked grappler (150 pounds), suffered his fourth loss of the season to the hands of Thom Ortiz (28-5), 2-1.

Ortiz scored a takedown with 1:22 remaining in the second period to creep past Bailey.

ASU carried a 12-5 advantage into the 158 pound match, in which Dan St. John pounded freshman Brian Malavar, 15-5.

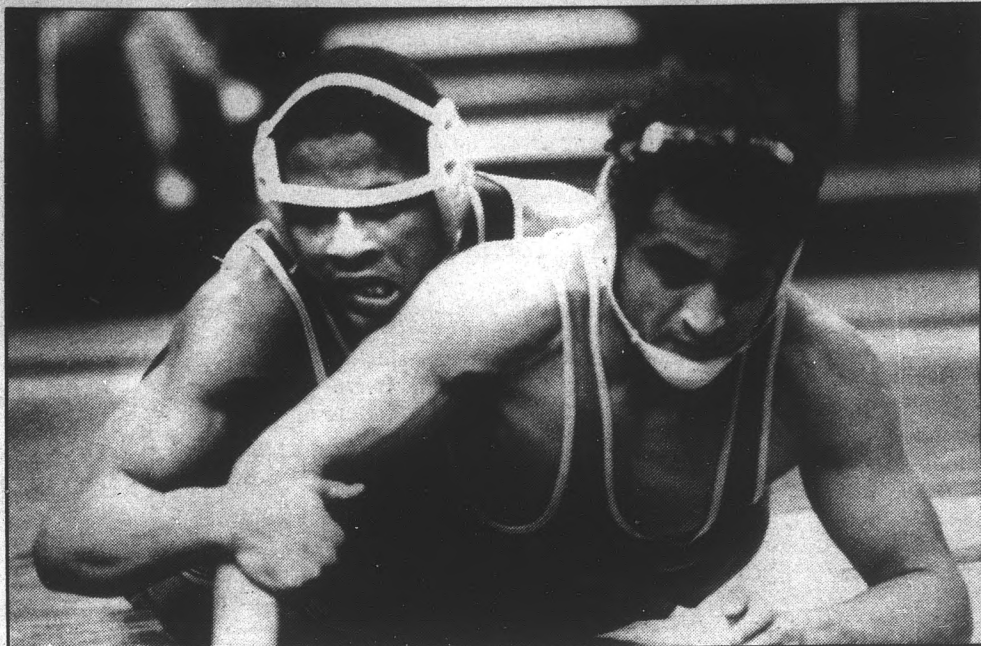

The Sun Devil earned the major decision increasing the lead to 16-5.

The match was all St. John, who has the most wins, 36, for the Devils, as he dominated the final 1:35.

St. John's win put him in the Sun Devils wrestling annals for earning the most dual wins in a season, 21. ASU had five grapplers that won the honor.

The Sun Devils continued to build to their large lead and freshman 167-pounder G.T. Taylor bettered ASU's chances of posting a victory.

Taylor (12-7-2) decisioned Brian Woods, 3-2, despite injuring a finger in the closing seconds of the match. With five ticks left on the clock, Taylor dislocated a finger, but held on for the win.

In his last dual meet, senior All-America Jim Gressley notched a major decision over Craig Doerfert, 13-4.

The match was controlled by Gressley as he recorded a takedown at the 2:54 mark in the opening stanza and would never relinquish the advantage.

Gressley's win (22-6) put him one shy of 100 as a Sun Devil.

ASU held a 23-5 lead with only two matches left to wrestle.

Also wrestling in his last dual as a Sun Devil was 190-pounder John Ginther (17-3-2). His results resembled Gressley's — a big win.

Ginther, a senior All-America, tabulated a major decision over Roadrunner Andy Silvestro, 16-5.

"It was really disgusting when I got taken down," Ginther said. "It was my last meet and I wanted to blow him out."

ASU boasted a 27-5 advantage and the future was gloomy for Cal-State Bakersfield.

The Sun Devils' second loss of the match came in the heavyweight bout with Mike Anderson falling to Tom Osendorf, 5-3.

The loss provided the final margin, 27-8.

ASU plays host to the Pac-10 Conference Wrestling Championships this coming Sunday and Monday in the University Activity Center.

Tumblers gear up for Southwest Cup Invitational

Men's coach offers a glance at the best

By GARY JACKSON
State Press

An open door at the P.E. West Building has enticed many people to take a glance inside. What they have found are the ASU gymnastic teams, who practice there in the afternoon.

However, men's coach Don Robinson said many people stop by, but not that many ever watch an actual meet. On Saturday the Sun Devils play host to the Southwest Cup.

"They don't have to sneak a peek," Robinson said. UCLA usually packs in a large crowd at Pauley Pavilion despite a $9 admission fee.

ASU students with a valid identification card are admitted at no cost, and the general public is charged only $3 to watch the Sun Devils perform. Still, the University Activity Center averages just over 100 spectators during meets.

Robinson said ASU offers world-class routines in every meet.

"To see Paul Linne do a full-twisting ginger on the high bar is worth the price of admission," he said. "The most difficult skill people have seen on TV, can be seen in the Activity Center on Saturday night."

Linne, a senior, is tied for first in the national rankings on

Team depth propels Sun Devil gymnasts

By CHRIS DORSEY
State Press

Depth is often the strength for any athletic team, and ASU women's gymnastics coach John Spini experienced that last weekend at the UCLA Invitational.

Sophomore Michelle Colavin, one of the Sun Devils' most consistent all-arounders, fell during warm-ups sending her to the sidelines for all but one event Saturday.

Spini counted on the services of Kelly Cyskiewicz, a freshman, to step into the limelight.

"Kelly did a great job of stepping in and filling the gap," Sun Devil Tracy Butler said.

While Colavin watched, 10th-ranked ASU scored a 188.15, good enough for third place.

Cyskiewicz competed in two events, the balance beam and floor exercise, scoring a 9.5 and 9.45, respectively.

"There was pressure because we needed a score," Cyskiewicz said. "I went in and did the best job I could."

The Sun Devils finished behind second-ranked UCLA (190.95) and third-ranked Cal-State Fullerton (188.20).

"It was a meet in which we saw the top schools," Butler said. "I thought we did well. We definitely made mistakes we

Despite Pac-10 losses, Devils look ahead to No. 1

The seventh-ranked ASU women's tennis team lost two Pac-10 matches as No. 5 USC and No. 3 UCLA both slipped by the Sun Devils, 5-4, last weekend at Whiteman Tennis Center.

"They (top teams) sometimes make you play bad," ASU head coach Sheila McInerney said. "It's not like you just didn't play well, you're playing against good people, too."

On Saturday against the Bruins, the Sun Devils trailed, 4-2, after singles competition.

No. 3 ASU seed Barb Thompson and No. 6 seed Luann Klimchok were ASU's lone singles victors.

"I think we could have played a lot better in the singles," McInerney said. "You never like to lose, but you always have to look for the positives. I think the positives are that we can definitely play better in the singles without a doubt. If we do that, we've got a good chance to beat teams like these."

Doubles competition was the strong point for the Sun Devils.

No. 1 seeds Jennifer Rojohn and Karen Bergen and No. 3 seeds Thompson and Klimchok won in straight sets.

"I think we played very, very well in our doubles," McInerney said. "Two weeks ago that's what we needed to work on. In both matches (this weekend) we won two out of three of our doubles matches. I think our doubles is coming along well."

Sunday the Sun Devils may have felt a little deja vu as the Bruins, like the Trojans, led 4-2 after singles play.

Defeating the Bruins in singles were No. 2 seed Kristi Jonkosky and No. 6 seed Paola Conte.

The Sun Devil's No. 1 singles seed Krista Amend suffered her second loss of the season. Before Saturday, Amend had boasted a undefeated record, 7-0.

However, Amend lost to the Bruins and the Trojans in straight sets.

"I put too much pressure on myself," Amend said. "I kind of have to learn how to go for it."

In No. 1 doubles competition against the Bruins, Sun Devils Jonkosky and Bergen defeated Jessica Emmons and Alysia May, 6-4 and 6-2.

No. 3 seeds, Thompson and Klimchok, downed Catherine O'Meara and Maria LeFranchi, 6-3 and 6-0.

The first two losses of the season will not create a snowball effect for the Sun Devils who displayed great effort and confidence, McInerney said.

"The team was disappointed afterward which is only natural, but I think that says our program is going in the right direction," McInerney said. "We end up losing 5-4 to these traditional tennis powers and we're ticked about it, and that's good."

ASU plays host to No. 1 tennis powerhouse, Stanford, at 1:30 p.m. on Friday at the Whiteman Tennis Center.

the high bar, senior Scott Hohman is No. 2 in floor exercise and Christian Rhode is No. 3 in pommel horse.

The sixth-ranked Sun Devils play host to No. 1 Ohio State, No. 3 UCLA, No. 12 UC-Santa Barbara and No. 17 CS-Fullerton.

Robinson said the top six teams are relatively equal. OSU has averaged a 277.72 score in meets compared to ASU's 272.73.

"We want to find out if this team is as good as their scores indicate," Robinson said. "We think we can beat them."

Robinson said the ASU squad, which was hit with a flu epidemic, is now healthy after a week away from competition. On Saturday the team had a great workout and appeared to be in top form, he said.

"I feel good about our team right now, and I feel good about our chances," Robinson said.

But the University lacks one major element that could assist the Sun Devils in a victory, he said.

"Recognition is one of the most important concepts — people need a pat on the back," Robinson said. "Mark Twain said, 'A good compliment will last me two months.' Don Robinson says, 'A good compliment will last me the rest of my life.'"

Assistant Athletic Director Herman Frazier was recently awarded a 10-year pin. ASU staff members receive a pin for every five years at the University.

But Robinson, who is in his 21st year at ASU, said he has not enjoyed such honors.

Similarly, he said the Sun Devils have been deprived by not having a large crowd backing them at the gymnastic meets.

It is common psychology that individuals need reassurance, and Robinson said this definitely applies to sports.

"If you can get people cheering for you, you can't help but get excited — you feel good and we need that," he said.

It does not take an expert to understand the basics of gymnastics, Robinson said. Even the amateur knows a good routine from a bad one, he said.

The biggest impact a crowd can make is its influence on the judges' scoring, Robinson said.

If not for the sport itself, he said there are other tactics that can be used to lure people to the UAC.

"If they want to see hardbodies," Robinson said, "pound for pound gymnasts are the strongest athletes in the world."

ASU SOCCER

Rodney Dangerfield seems to get more respect than the ASU soccer club.

Apart from the fact that the club receives a minimal amount of money each season from ASU Intramurals, approximately $400, it has also suffered the loss of its practice field because of construction on Sahura field.

The team is forced to practice on the intramurals field near the archery range. This new site does not offer goals, a marked field or parking for players without decals.

Practices are sometimes held at Kiwanis Park on Baseline (road) which is an inconvenient distance for those who do not have motorized transportation.

Senior forward Chris Ferraby jokingly refers to the ASU soccer club as the "traveling squad" because practices and games are held at so many different places.

Ferraby said that the players are not playing for popularity or prestige, but simply out of devotion to the sport. Since the A and B teams are unable to compete in the NCAA, the chances of any ASU players going on to make money from the sport are slim.

The soccer club consists of two teams an A and a B team. In the fall season the two squads practice together, but play separate games.

This season, however, they hold separate practices.

Ferraby said this is a positive step overall because it seems to have eliminated a lot of the conflicts between the coach and players.

Certain players were uncertain of which team they were playing on from week to week, which created dissention among several players. Others were unhappy with the general organization of the club.

The break-up might lead to a loss of overall unity throughout the club, Ferraby said.

Sophomore forward Rod Romeburg said, the strong points of the team are aggression, devotion, and a lot of heart. Both teams have gained some new talent this season, he said.

Romeburg said the youthful B squad has potential to progress extremely well during the spring season.

In retrospect, he said

"However, if the high turnover rate among players continues each season, it will begin to take its toll on the team because all the other teams in our league have played together for a long time."

While the A team continues to dominate its Tempe Men's League, the B team has taken on the greater challenge of joining the Central Arizona Soccer League. This is one of the three divisions in the Arizona League, the others being the North and South divisions. Ultimately, the B team is now a thriving member of the United States Soccer Federation. The USSF is a national soccer league that includes amateur and professional teams. Manager/player Jay Serle said, "the Central Arizona Soccer League is by far the most competitive league in the state."

There are nine teams in the league including Italian, Persian, and Yugoslavian based teams from the Valley and one team from Prescott.

The ASU B team will be competing in the Painbow Cup Tournament starting March 5 and proudly encourages fan support.

need to clean up this weekend."

Spini and company will face the same two teams this weekend in the Southwest Cup, a tournament in which ASU plays host. The event will also attract Nebraska and Ohio State.

Sun Devil freshmen Butler and Cyskiewicz, who played major parts in ASU's success at UCLA, will be expected to provide similar support on Saturday.

"We concentrated on what we needed to do," Butler said. Butler tallied a 37.60 mark in the all-around, second highest score on the team next to senior All-American Karli Urban. Butler recorded a team-high 9.6 on the uneven bars and balance beam while notching scores of 9.35 on the floor exercise and 9.05 on the vault.

The Worthington, Ohio, native is currently ranked sixth in the nation on the balance beam with a 9.53 average.

Spini inserted Cyskiewicz into the lineup and received quality results. Cyskiewicz came to ASU as a gymnast who excelled in the vault and floor exercise.

This combination gave the ninth-year coach a fine freshmen tandem.

"I have two freshmen who have been competitive for us and provided enthusiasm," Spini said. "Not only have they been energetic, but they stepped in and have done tremendously."

The Sun Devils have been able to compete with a full squad throughout the entire season. ASU is just getting Marika LeSieur back into the lineup after an injury and junior Heather Carter is expected to compete this weekend in the Southwest Cup.

ASU's Urban turned in an all-around score of 38.40, which placed her second to the top-ranked Tanya Service of UCLA. The senior scored a 9.7 on the balance beam, 9.45 on the uneven bars, 9.75 on the floor exercise and 9.5 on the vault to earn runner-up honors.

She is ranked 11th in the nation in the all-around. Following Urban and Butler in scoring was junior Colette Anderson. She recorded a 37.00 in the all-around while posting marks of 9.45 in the floor exercise, 9.4 on the vault, 9.15 on the uneven bars and 9.00 on the beam.

Another high-points to note was All-American Suzy Baldock scoring a 9.5 on the uneven bars and beam while posting a 9.45 on the vault.

"Suzy has been a pleasant surprise coming off her injury," Spini said. "She is gung-ho, healthy and feels really confident. Suzy offers a 9.5 plus in uneven bars, beam and vault."

Junior Molly Carpenter tabulated a 36.15 in the all-around and tallied scores of 9.4 on the floor exercise and 9.2 on the uneven bars.

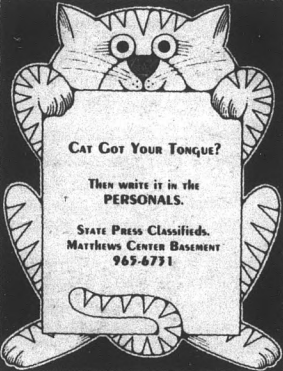

The Southwest Cup kicks off at 2 p.m. Saturday at the University Activity Center.
