Students form lobby committee

By RICHARD VIGIL
State Press

Student leaders are concerned that legislators are not aware of the concerns of college students and have devised a plan that would give students a louder voice in the Arizona Legislature.

Associated Students of ASU president John Fees and other student leaders have formed the Student Legislative Steering Committee to organize lobbying efforts on behalf of students.

Fees said there are about 80 students involved in the committee.

"For too long we have had only one or two students representing us to state government," Fees said.

"John Fees, student body president, isn't going to get anything done at the state Capitol. But if more students show they care, we can accomplish something."

He said past student lobbying efforts have been successful, citing a rally last fall against a proposed tuition increase and the on-going campaign in the Arizona Legislature to give voting powers to the student member of the Board of Regents.

Fees said the legislature is going to begin work on the state's budget and how much the state will appropriate for ASU, UofA and NAU.

Fees said the committee is aimed at rectifying the funding inequity between ASU and UofA. The Arizona Board of Regents reported that ASU has been underfunded by $5 million each fiscal year compared to the UofA and called for an increase of $2.5 million for the next two years to offset the difference.

Fees said 60 percent of the $2.5 million equity fund will go toward undergraduate programs, with the bulk of that money directly aiding 100- and 200-level classes.

Fees said the other 40 percent would go toward improvements to student services, including financial aid services; career services and the registrar.

The Legislature must first approve the budget increase, however, Fees said students can be an effective lobbying force.

Fees said one problem in obtaining the equity funding is that lawmakers from Pima County are fighting against the increase. He said that the legislators need to acknowledge that some ASU students are in fact Pima County residents and constituents.

Committee member Kim Fisher, an ASU senior political science major, said: "We want students to have an effect."

Both Fees and Fisher said the group should continue its efforts even after the current budget proceedings have ended.

ASU prof named to Council on Germany

By CAROLYN HOFIG
State Press

Gerald Kleinfeld, ASU history professor and head of the Consortium for Atlantic Studies, has been named to the American Council on Germany.

Kleinfeld, who instructs a popular ASU course on Adolf Hitler as well as Modern Germany and other history classes, has been at the University since 1962. He founded the CAS, a research-oriented center that focuses on U.S.-West European relations, on campus nearly a year ago.

The American Council on Germany is a nonprofit, nongovernmental organization dedicated to the improvement of understanding between the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Established shortly after World War II, the council has 250 members nationwide who represent government, industry, media and academia. The group sponsors conferences, workshops and seminars to explore the issues that shape the policies of the two countries.

Kleinfeld said he did not know he was under consideration for lifelong membership in the council until he was notified two weeks ago.

He said he was nominated to the council by the group's president, Carroll Brown.

"It will give me a chance to be involved with whatever influential decisions are being made in the area, which is very nice," Kleinfeld said.

He defined the American Council on Germany as an organization of individuals who believe that, "for American interests, the connection with Germany is important for us."

"That connection is not only a question of strategic and security affairs but a question of economic interests for the United States and an important part of our foreign policy in general for cultural and other reasons," he said.

"Members of the Board of Directors reflect this (diversity)," Kleinfeld said.

The board includes Lawrence S. Eagleburger, assistant U.S. secretary of state; John E. Reilly, president of the Chicago Council on Foreign Affairs; Joe E. Ritchie, national- and world-news editor at the Detroit Free Press; and Paul Volcker, former head of the Federal Reserve Board.

"It's an opportunity for people who have some knowledge of and interest in the German connection with the United States to come together and talk about it; where things are, what to do," Kleinfeld said.

Kleinfeld said the council is not a lobbying group, but an "influence group," which does not seek to sway lawmakers but rather to "serve as a focus for American interests."

Scharfe downplays parking fee increase

By TYRONE MEIGHAN
State Press

ASU's Associate Director of Disabled students said Tuesday that University disabled students should pay higher parking fees because rates have not increased since 1985.

Furthermore, the University has the best program for disabled students in the country, said Tedde Scharfe, who has been associate director for Disabled Students Resources at ASU for eight years and is disabled herself.

"We kept the fees down for a long time," she said. "We have done so much for students. We have a program that provides for every type of disability."

"There isn't another program in the country that has the program and funding that ASU does. I don't think our disabled students have a lot to complain about."

Scharfe's comments came despite criticism Monday from disabled students of the five-year parking plan that would increase the rates for disabled parking on campus to $105 a year by 1992-93. Currently, disabled students pay $47 a year.

Disabled students say that the proposed increase is unfair because disabled students have no alternative but to pay the higher rates and many of them will suffer financial hardships as a result.

The rate increase will go before the Arizona Board of Regents in March for final approval.

Scharfe said it is not necessary for disabled students to park close to the campus.

Scharfe said that disabled students can park in any lot that has disabled spaces. Students who park far from campus can schedule one of the five carts that Disabled Students Resources operates, she said.

"It's a lot easier if they can pull their car in the center of campus," she said. "But nothing is going to be perfect for everyone."

Scharfe said that disabled students who park close to the campus should pay the fee increase because they are not forced to park there.

"The students make that choice," she said.

Paul Barberini, director of ASU's student financial assistance, said although disabled students have large expenses with their daily living, they have more financial aid

Police, FBI agents score biggest heroin bust in U.S. history

NEW YORK (AP) — Police and FBI agents confiscated 800 pounds of heroin Tuesday — enough to supply nearly 100,000 addicts for a year — in what the assistant FBI director said was the biggest such bust in U.S. history.

Officials said the raid in Queens smashed a major Southeast Asian drug ring that smuggled heroin into the country inside hollow rubber wheels. The raid resulted in 17 arrests and netted $3 million in cash, officials said.

The street value of the heroin, said to be 90 percent pure, was estimated at more than $1 billion by Assistant FBI Director James M. Fox during a news conference.

The amount "would supply 40 to 50 percent of all the heroin needed for some 200,000 addicts on an annual basis in New York City," said U.S. Attorney Andrew Maloney.

"That makes this the largest heroin seizure ever in the United States," Fox said.

Maloney, whose office had prosecuted some of the famous "French Connection" heroin cases, said "800 pounds of heroin is unheard of."

"The largest 'French Connection' type of case that I'm aware of is about 200 pounds back in 1971, but nothing of this scope," Maloney said.

North described as patriot, liar by attorneys as trial begins

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver North's criminal trial opened Tuesday with the prosecutor portraying him as a liar who "places himself above the law" but with North's lawyer defending him as a patriotic Marine who obeyed unflinchingly the orders of his commander in chief.

North, now retired from the service, listened intently as prosecutor John Kecker told the jury the defendant had lied time and again to his president and to Congress about the Iran-Contra affair.

Chief defense lawyer Brendan Sullivan countered that North, a former top National Security Council aide, worked in a secret world where "he always acted with the approval of his superiors; he acted always with the best interests of his country."

Officials say money for Bush's proposals will be hard to find

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education officials indicated Tuesday that they don't know where they will get $441 million to pay for President Bush's education proposals, leading one Democratic lawmaker to wonder whether they are real initiatives.

Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos, testifying before a House appropriations subcommittee, also said he did not know how much money Bush is proposing for his department's fiscal 1990 budget.

Former President Ronald Reagan recommended spending authority of $21.9 billion, the same as this year, and Bush has proposed a number of new programs totaling $441 million. It is not clear whether his initiatives would come over and above the Reagan plan or at the expense of existing programs.

Reagan recommended that 24 programs be eliminated and the resulting $750 million in savings be shifted to several large programs serving the disadvantaged.

opportunities than other students.

He said that disabled students get the same benefits that all students get, plus the regents have authorized waivers to disabled students.

In addition, Barberini said the recent sale of property that was bequeathed to the University will be used for disabled students' scholarships. The sale of the property created more than $500,000 in the scholarship fund.

But Barberini said that it is difficult to tell if students will be able to afford the parking increases.

"I think it would be very hard to generalize who can afford it and who can't," he said, adding that student should be able to absorb the parking increases because they are phased in over five years.

"I think the staging of the increase over that period of years is a very rational way of doing this," he said.

Sharfe said that disabled students also receive grants and donated money.

"They are all eligible for more financial aid than other students," she said. "There are many resources."

Scharfe said that she understands the disabled students' concerns about the rate but said, "Nobody likes to be charged more money for anything."

Sharfe said that disabled students should be treated equal.

"As a disabled person all my life and as many people that I work with, we want to be looked (at) as someone who doesn't need to be taken care of," she said.

Accreditation agency plans to bring headquarters to ASU

Staff and Wire Reports

The North Central Association Commission on Schools, an accreditation agency, will move its headquarters from the University of Colorado to ASU in May, the executive director of the agency said Tuesday.

Ken Gose said the agency needed to leave Boulder, Colo., "because of escalating costs in Colorado and the increasing numbers of late arrivals and departures at the Denver airport."

The agency accredits 6,200 elementary, junior and senior high schools in 19 states as well as those of the Navajo Nation and 250 Department of Defense schools overseas. Another arm headquartered in Chicago accredits about 1,000 post-secondary education institutions, including those in Arizona.

Gose earned a doctorate in educational administration at the UofA.

Gose served 10 years with schools in Sahuarita, including the position of superintendent, and was superintendent of schools at Wilcox for three years.

He headed the agency's Arizona office before becoming executive director in 1986.

ASU was among five finalists for housing the agency, and Gose said he will bring one associate as part of the move and will have three staff support members.

The Grapevine
BY BILL SYNSTAD

The Loire region of France is famous for glorious castles and fine wines. To look at a map of the area is to see the famous names of familiar wines lined up one after another. A wide variety of wines -- white, rose, and a few reds, still and sparkling -- come from there.

By the sea, around Nantes, they make Muscadet, fresh, dry, and crisp. Drink it young with fish of all kinds.

Other wonderful white wines are made at the upper end of the river from the Sauvignon Blanc grape. Sancerre is dry, but rounder and fuller than Muscadet. Pouilly-Fume is a star of the region.

Anjou is most famous for its rose wines, made from the Gamay grape, from Groslot and, best of all, from Cabernet. The wine is soft and somewhat sweet. Drink it young for best enjoyment.

The name "brandy" comes from the Dutch "brandywijn," meaning burned wine. Wine was distilled to make it more stable and easier to ship. All of France's famous Cognac is brandy, but not all brandy is Cognac.

Highway robbery

ASU bike cops unfairly enforce campus cycle regulations

Darrin Hostetler
Columnist

ASU bike cops were out on Cady Mall Tuesday robbing students.

So what's new, you say? After all, ASU's two-wheeled keepers of the peace are out there every day, lurking behind trees and bushes, just waiting to pounce and give out a scandalously exorbitant ticket — regardless of the excuse or the circumstances — to some starving student who commits the cardinal sin of riding a bike on the mall.

But what happened Tuesday was much worse than the normal bike cop ticketing procedures. And it amounted to nothing less than simple thievery.

Here's the story: Yesterday morning, ASU Police Officer Al Campoy began ticketing dozens of student bikes that were locked to the wall that surrounds Danforth Chapel. In addition to ticketing, Campoy placed police U-locks on the bikes, thus rendering each — to use police jargon — "immobile."

Students who returned to the chapel to claim their bikes later in the day were surprised to find them restrained in this manner, and then were startled to learn that they had to show Campoy their student ID and accept an $18 ticket before the police lock would be removed.

Actually, "surprised" and "startled" don't quite cover the range of the students' emotions.

Furious or mad as hell might better suffice.

You see, there was no sign posted by the chapel wall to indicate that bikes could not be parked there.

I asked Campoy how the police could ticket students — and effectively confiscate their bikes without warning — for parking in an area that wasn't designated as "off limits."

Campoy replied testily that "ASU has 100 signs posted all over the place telling students where they can't park, so even though there isn't a sign here, students should be able to figure out that it isn't appropriate."

Of course, it is expressly because ASU has posted 100 signs telling students exactly where parking is prohibited that it is natural for them to park anywhere the signs aren't. But Campoy was oblivious.

"Any more questions?" he growled.

No. I think I understand.

The new ASU Police bike policy is that officers may make up laws and rules as they go. It doesn't matter if students responsibly park their bikes in a location where there is no posted University prohibition against doing so. They should have been able to "figure out" that the ASU Police would find the location inappropriate. Too bad. That will be $18, please.

Either this is just another revenue-generating move brought to you by the University that gave the world "car-booting," or ASU officers really believe that it is fair and just to slap arbitrary fines on students.

And either way, we lose.

In an age when students are being crushed financially from all sides and when ASU, a commuter institution, is suffering from a shortage of parking spaces, it seems that the University should be encouraging students to ride their bikes. Instead, the ASU Police capriciously enforce non-rules designed to discourage and unnecessarily hassle bike riders.

ASU bike cops have always been vaguely amusing. The absurd sight of an overweight, middle-age ex-security guard with a Dirty Harry fantasy ripping down the mall on a souped-up Schwinn "attack bike" — in hot pursuit of a freshman sorority girl who just rode past a "dismount" sign — used to bring a smile to the lips.

But it's not funny anymore. So to all of the students out there who got tickets from ASU Police for locking their bikes to a wall by Danforth Chapel, I offer a suggestion:

Don't pay. File an appeal and fight the ticket.

Don't allow yourself to get robbed simply because the thief has a badge.

AP can't tell AK from MP ... Sheez!

Editor:

Perhaps you should heed the old adage not to believe everything you read. Last Friday's State Press carried a review of the movie "Die Hard," courtesy of the AP. The review states, in part: "Die Hard" turns out to be a sleeper of a thriller with perky dialogue and a believable Willis, if you can get past his Rambo-like dirty undershirt and AK-47."

Once again, the anti-gun media shows its true colors. The Russian-designed AK-47 has become the new sacrificial lamb for the anti-gun lobby. The mention of this model gun in a negative context ("Rambo-like") is no surprise. The key fact is that Bruce Willis did not use an AK-47 in "Die Hard." He carried a West German-designed and manufactured Heckler and Kotch MP-5, a 9 mm parabellum (pistol round) chambered sub-machine gun. This bears little resemblance to the 7.62 X 39mm rifle cartridge chambered by the full size AK. Leave it to the ignorant, biased media to grab any excuse to mention the newest target for the gun grabbers. Next time, just the facts, not the latest fancy.

Bad guy

Rushdie affair proves good guy doesn't always win

Jeff Greenfield
 Universal Press Syndicate

NEW YORK — Forgive me another look at the travails of Salman Rushdie, but events of the last few days have put a much more ominous spin on what looked like just another tale of book-burning.

Rushdie and his family have gone into hiding. His American book tour has been canceled. Waldenbooks, the nation's largest chain, has pulled "The Satanic Verses" from its shelves, and it is increasingly likely that other chains will refuse to reorder or to stock the book. Rushdie's U.S. publisher, Viking, has been victimized at least twice by bomb scares, and shut down its headquarters on Friday.

Meanwhile, crowds march through the streets of Tehran, Islamabad and other centers of Moslem fundamentalism with signs reading "Rushdie must be stoned to death" or "Rushdie must be executed." And the Ayatollah Khomeini promises instant entry into heaven for any martyr who murders the author, or a few million dollars in more earthly compensation.

I offer this depressing summary of recent events to underline an even more depressing fact of life: Sometimes the bad guys win. Sometimes immoral, dangerous strategies and tactics reward precisely those forces we most want to see deterred, because the remorselessness of the bad guys is more powerful than the will of the good guys.

How does a schoolyard bully extort lunch money from his victim? It's simple. He is willing to break all the rules, to stalk his prey after school, to use his fists, to threaten his target with more violence should he complain. The combination of fear and shame usually does the job.

How does a protection racket, or a shakedown in the construction industry or in Assume the legitimacy of their outrage over the irreverent treatment of the Prophet Mohammed, acknowledge their right to protest, to boycott the publisher, and your left with one stark fact: The spiritual leaders within this movement have now convinced countless followers that it is right — indeed, obligatory — to kill a writer for saying things they do not like.

And what is the sanction that can be imposed for so startling an assertion? Yes, some Western nations have protested; a Dutch official has canceled a visit to Iran. And, to their credit, a group of Islamic writers and scholars have strongly protested the "kill Rushdie" hysteria, citing "universal principles of rational discussion and freedom of expression."

But that's exactly the problem; these are not "universal principles." In fact, it most of the world, they are neither practiced nor even recognized. When temporal and religious leaders can say, in almost so many words, "You have said something deeply offensive to us; therefore we will kill you," that is the operative principle — especially in a world where bombs blow airplanes out of the sky, and where there are no demilitarized zones.

As of now, the fallout from the Rushdie affair is that the next writer or artist who wants to say provocative things about religion, or international affairs — or who knows what else — will find himself with a powerful reason to stay his hand and to still his tongue. The next publisher or producer who wishes to support such an enterprise will have similar strong reasons to do so.

Car stolen by 2 men posing as buyers

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Two men posing as customers interested in buying an ASU student's car Monday stole the vehicle and sped off from Lot 59, police said.

ASU police said Christopher A. Baca was trying to sell his 1979 Ford sedan about 6:45 p.m. when he met with two men who were dropped off by a man driving a white Datsun.

The men seemed like they were interested in the $3,500 car until they drove off with it, fleeing the parking lot at a high rate of speed, police said.

Police described one of the suspects who drove off with the car as a Hispanic male in his early to mid-20s, 5-foot-8 and 160 pounds. He had a dark complexion, a thin mustache and wore a red or lavender sweat suit and tennis shoes.

His accomplice is also a Hispanic male, 5-foot-10 and 170 pounds with dark gray and brown hair. He was last seen wearing a white T-shirt, jeans and combat boots.

police report

The driver of the car that dropped off the two suspects is described as a white male, 5-foot-8, 145 pounds with medium brown hair and a receding hair line.

ASU police also reported the following incidents:

A male student accidentally cut his right wrist Monday when the window in his Sahuaro Hall room broke while he was trying to close it.

He was taken to a hospital by friends after the 6:45 p.m. incident, and was treated and released.

The Police Department's bicycle enforcement unit issued nine citations Monday in addition to 38 warnings.

Student arrested on weapons charge

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

An ASU student who accidentally shot himself in the hand last week was arrested Monday in connection with the incident, police said.

ASU police said Hans C. Momberger, 19, was cited and released at 12:15 p.m. on a misdemeanor charge of discharging a firearm within a municipality.

The incident has also been referred to the Office of the Dean of Student Life for an alleged violation of the University's Code of Conduct, which prohibits possession, use or storage of weapons on campus, police said.

Police said they confiscated an arsenal of weapons from Momberger's room after the shooting. The weapons included a semi-automatic assault rifle, seven handguns, six knives and about 1,000 rounds of various ammunition.

Momberger, a freshman, was injured while unloading a 9mm semi-automatic handgun in his Hayden Hall dormitory room. The weapon accidentally fired and a hollow-point slug blew a two-inch hole through his left hand, police said.

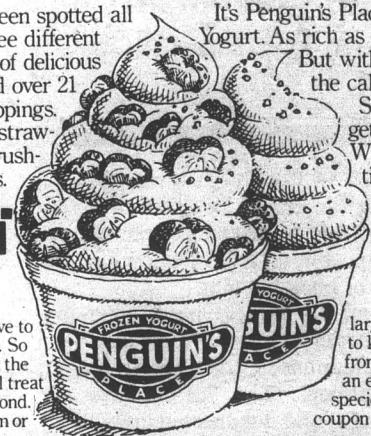

He said after he was released from a local hospital Saturday that doctors told him he should regain use of his hand.

Momberger, who friends described as a gun enthusiast, said he usually keeps the weapons at a relative's home. He said that he had them in his room Friday because was preparing for a weekend trip to a local shooting range.

Grand jury bill to be held over despite victory in committee

PHOENIX (AP) — A bill to increase the penalty for disclosing secret grand-jury proceedings will be yanked from further consideration in the House, even though it sailed through committee with no opposition, the sponsor of the measure said Tuesday.

Rep. Jim Skelly, R-Scottsdale, said that he has asked House Speaker Jane Hull to hold the bill because he does not want to become involved in a prolonged battle with Democrats over what he considers "a minor matter."

"I've got too many other fish to fry," Skelly said.

Earlier this week, a Skelly bill that would have upped the penalty for leaving the scene of an injury accident was killed after it ran into a solid wall of Democratic opposition on the House floor.

Several Democrats have said they will oppose any bill increasing the penalty for any crime until there is a comprehensive review of the criminal code and the impact of sentencing practices on the state's overcrowded prisons.

Skelly wants to increase the penalty for disclosing information about a grand jury proceeding by elevating the offense from a misdemeanor to a felony.

But he said the measure would not come to the House floor for a vote "as long as the Democrats are playing those games."

The bill had been placed on a consent calendar, meaning it would be voted on by the House without debate, but it was taken off the consent calendar last week.

Although Skelly said his only purpose in introducing the measure was to increase the disclosure penalty, some attorneys have expressed reservations about another of its provisions.

Current law prohibits disclosure of grand-jury testimony or other information "which is required by law to be kept secret."

Skelly's bill would delete "which is required by law to be kept secret."

Without that phrase, reporters worry that the law could prohibit them from identifying people who enter or leave a grand-jury room. And media attorney Dan Barr says it could even prevent attorneys from acknowledging that a client had appeared before a grand jury.

But Skelly said he was not even aware that the bill would delete that language from the law.

"My intent was only to increase the penalty," Skelly said. "You can ruin someone's reputation by disclosing what goes on in a grand jury."

Skelly said the bill was brought to him by Steve Twist, chief assistant attorney general.

"The reason why the bill proposes that (deletion of the phrase) is that no one can say what it means," Twist said. "Nowhere else in any statute does it say what that refers to. Merely injecting that language out of the blue simply makes it too vague."

It is absurd to believe the change would keep reporters from identifying anyone who enters or leave a grand-jury room, Twist said.

"Reporters have a First Amendment right and a duty to report what they see," he said.

He said that he also finds it hard to understand how deleting the phrase could keep an attorney from revealing that a client has appeared before a grand jury because "no one knows what that (the current language) means anyway."

Twist said he would support the addition of guidelines to the law to make clear what grand jury matters may not be revealed "if it's possible to be that specific."

"A balance must be struck between the public's right to know and the protection of the rights of someone who might be a witness or a target of a grand-jury investigation," Twist said.

Composer to give free concert at Recital Hall

By JENNIFER LYNN JOHNSON
State Press

The sounds of falling water, rustling leaves and rattling seed pods may be noise to some people, but to composer Eric Stokes, they are as useful as violins and flutes.

Stokes, who is one of the visiting composers at ASU this semester, will be giving a free concert of some of his "naturalist" pieces at the Recital Hall tonight at 7:30. He will also give a lecture/master class in the Recital Hall this morning at 11:40.

Stokes' fondness for natural sounds, which he uses freely in much of his work, extends into 20th-century life. Some of his compositions incorporate scissors, breaking glass and moving ice as well as the more rustic soundings of nature. His frequent use of long lyric melodies in a field that often seems to favor atonality make his compositions all the more unique.

The use of natural sounds in composition is a direction that many 20th-century composers are exploring. Many "New Age" artists incorporate sounds of rain, waterfalls or bird songs into their pieces to produce a soothing and quieting effect. While the use of these sounds in orchestral music is uncommon, such things as sea shells, clay pots and windchimes are finding their way into orchestral percussion sections.

Stokes' music, in addition to being rich with lyrical melodies, is often tinted with 20th-century stylistic devices. His early compositions, such as "Smoke and Steel," showed a fascination with American music and subject matter that later became a vital part of his work.

His first opera was "Horspfa," produced by the Minnesota Opera Company in 1969. The misadventures and tragedies of the American Indians since the arrival of the white man is the theme of this show, which combines vocal and instrumental forces with film. The orchestra has 17 instruments, not all of which are immediately recognizable, and requires up to five different conductors.

Stokes began his education at Lawrence College. He later attended the New England Conservatory and the University of Minnesota, where he became a professor in 1977. He founded the university's electronic music laboratory and a new music ensemble, First Minnesota Moving and Storage Warehouse Band, six years earlier.

Stokes began to question the traditional definitions of tonal music early in his career. His discovery, or perhaps rediscovery, of natural sounds led to a new era in his composing life. His first such piece, "Rock and Roll (Phonic Paradigm I)," employs rocks of different sizes being shaken together and rolled around on the stage.

Stokes was on campus Monday to hear the ASU Symphonic Band rehearse one of his pieces, "Continental Harp and Band Report." This work incorporates traditional American folk melodies and elements of Dixieland jazz, but in very unconventional ways.

Dr. Richard Strange, band director, said that Stokes liked what he heard at the rehearsal and offered helpful critiques to the ensemble.

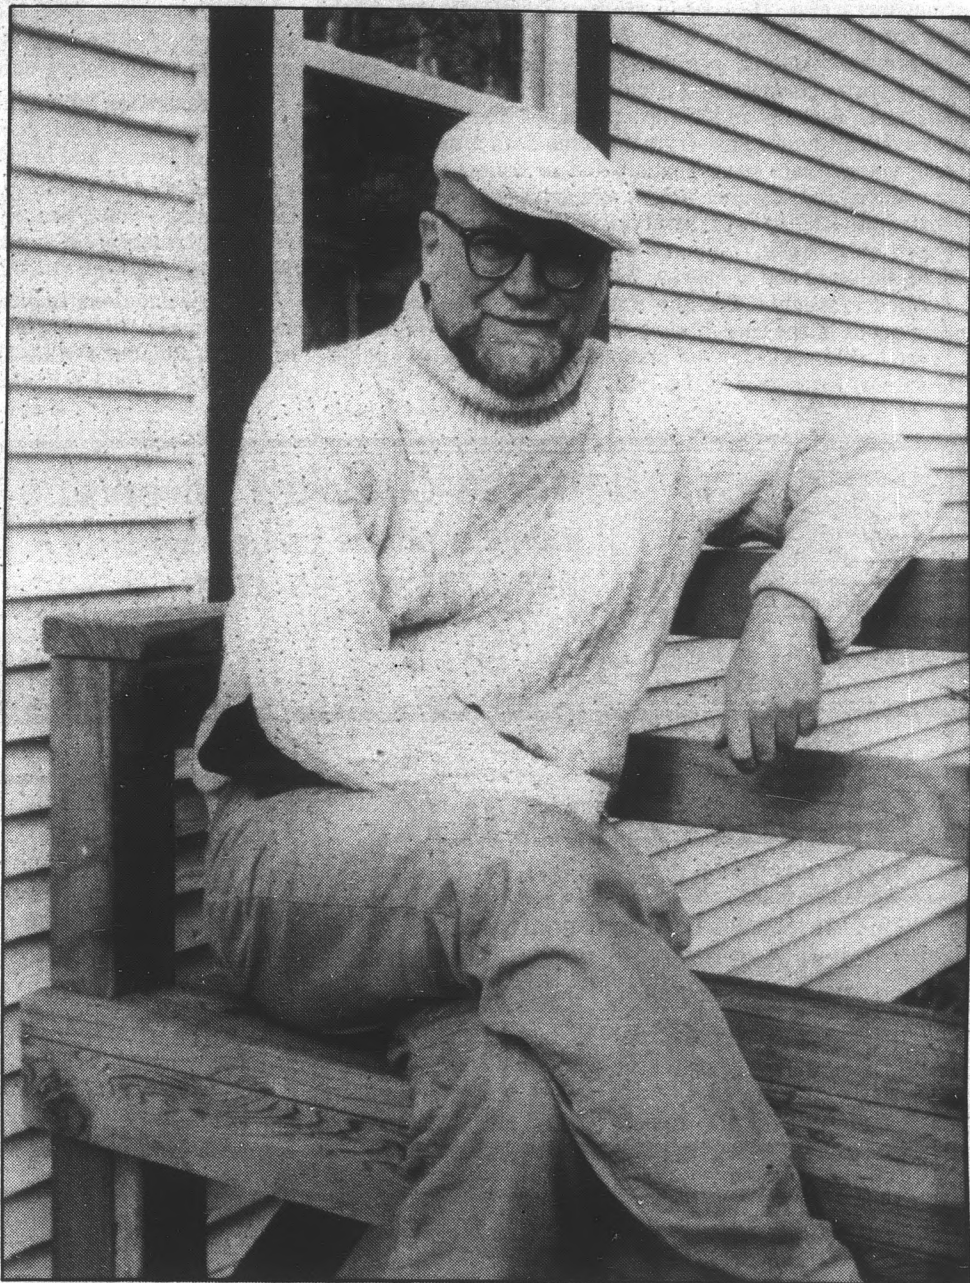

"The piece uses Dixieland and 'cornball' jazz, but it's thrown together in such an untraditional way," Strange said. "It's a fun piece."

The band performed the work as part of their Tuesday night concert.

Shelley Mikus, one of the musicians in the Symphonic Band, said that performing with the composer present can be stressful, but that the piece is fun to play nonetheless.

"I'll bet he's Irish," she added, referring to the folk melodies found throughout the piece.

Free parking for tonight's recital is available in the Gammage Center lot and along Gammage Parkway. Parking for the lecture/master class is available in Parking Structure One, on the corner of College Avenue and Lemon Street. For more information, call the School of Music Events Hotline at 965-TUNE.

Composer Eric Stokes will give a free concert at the Recital Hall at 7:30 tonight.

New restaurant serves quality Mexican cuisine

By JENNIFER YEE
State Press

Have you ever noticed some Mexican restaurants are like those cheap rent-a-bands? They both blow a big horn, but not very well.

For example, take the Mexican food restaurant Fiesta's, located on Scottsdale Road, north of McDowell Road. They have a menu which offers more than just tacos and burritos, but a random sampling proved that it all tastes the same.

We ordered five different items — three of them "Fiesta's Specialties." The Enchilada Extravaganza, Mexican Turnover and Torta de Pollo, all cost $5-7, while Chicken Fajitas were $7.95, and the Crispy Chile Relleno was $2.95. The evening proceeded like this:

After a 20 minute wait for our table, we were seated in the corner of a room that reminded me of a renovated Denny's.

This was only because booths lined the walls, and there were several square tables in the center. However, the decor was much higher class than any coffee shop — plants, brass and earthtones gave the restaurant an uplifting environment. Not dark and red like most Mexican and Chinese restaurants usually are.

The meal started off with chips, salsa and hot sauce. No problem here. The salsa was exceptionally flavorful, with large chunks of tomatoes that made it seem like Mom's. (Not my mom's, though.) We followed with orders of "Nachos Fiesta," a feast of nachos with shredded beef, beans, melted cheese, jalapenos, tomatoes, guacamole and sour cream. For $6.45, you can easily feed at least five hungry eaters, as we did. Generous portions of toppings helped.

Next came the entrees. Usually what I do in my reviews is describe the plates individually, and make appropriate comments. But this time, I can't. Four of the five dishes looked and tasted almost identical, except for a few minor alterations. The Chile Relleno was supposed to be a stuffed green chile, dipped in egg batter and deep fried. Our Chile Relleno was something different. It looked and tasted just like the next dish.

The "Enchilada Extravaganza" was a "bountiful platter of enchiladas, beef, cheese and chicken, smothered in red chile and served with rice and beans." According to my connoisseurs of Mexican cuisine, regular enchiladas taste different than the ones we were served, which looked and tasted like, yes, you guessed it, the dish before it, and the dish after it, which was . . .

The "Torta de Pollo." Described as "a tower of tortillas laced with tender chicken and covered with zesty green chile capped with cheese, lettuce, tomatoes, sour cream and black olives." While there's no arguing that the "Torta de Pollo" did include all of the aforementioned items, it too was flavored like its companions on the menu. By this point, I was beginning to wonder if it was just my taste buds. But a round of consent verified that the dishes seemed to mirror each other too readily.

Last of the look alike was their "Mexican Turnover, Fiesta's Specialty. Beef, cheese and onions wrapped in flour dough and fried to perfection. Smothered in exciting green chile and topped with cheese, lettuce, tomato and sour cream." A great concept, which unfortunately was unsuccessful simply because it was a replica of other dishes past.

Fiesta's Chicken Fajitas were the one thing that really stood out in this meal. At $7.95, this sizzling dish was served with large, moist strips of marinated and grilled chicken. It was a large portion that gave enough for all five of us to sample.

You can see that the only areas we had trouble with were the composition of the plates, and the flavors involved in each. A little shuffling here and a little more cayenne there is all this restaurant needs. One of my guests even informed me that the three specialties tasted better after she'd taken them home and eaten them the next day.

The portions at Fiesta's are large and the ingredients are quality. They have the makings of what is sure to be a successful establishment. They've only been open three and a half months, which puts them in their "seasoning stage." In a few months, Fiesta's is apt to find their niche in the local Mexican food competition.

Festival offers historic flashback

By JENNIFER YEE
State Press

The European Renaissance era, a fabled yet fascinating point in time, is alive and full of festivities just outside Apache Junction.

Hundreds of costumed participants re-create the atmosphere of a "European Market Fair" with activities that entertain, educate and involve.

The entire festival is a stage, as entertainers walk the streets portraying characters out of history. King Henry and his court, duelists and ladies, pageants and parades, all dressed in authentic garb from the Renaissance era. Many of these entertainers have participated in training programs for aspiring Renaissance actors and actresses.

In tradition of the royal lifestyle, visitors can eat like kings. "Steak on a Stake," spinach and feta cheese pies, Greek salad, desserts and of course, Renaissance-type beverages.

Skilled craftsmen line the marketplace using tools and other goods of the time period. Glassblown figurines, wood-carved knickknacks, armor and jester caps are all available for sale with prices starting at $1.

King Henry's joust, Jacob's Ladder and archery make up the spirited competition geared to those young at heart. You can ride an elephant or a camel, or abuse an insulting peasant at Vegetable Justice.

The Village Round-a-Bout is a carousel-like ride featuring dragons, swans, unicorns and other characters who are vividly decorated and set into motion via pedals. Created by artist Archie Peltier, this version of an early amusement ride was drawn from history and fairy tales.

If you're looking for knights in shining armor, you've come to the right place. Combat jousting brings the excitement of two tons of horses and armor clashing in battle.

Festival producer Jeffrey Siegal and his team has worked hard to make this a beautiful celebration. Over the next 10 years this celebration is planned to be developed in phases. The initial stage will run on weekends through March 19.

The Arizona Renaissance Festival is located nine miles east of Apache Junction on State Highway 60/89. Admission is $7.75 in advance at all Dillard's locations and $8.75 the day of the show at the Festival gate.

Rees' fastball stifles Chaparrals' offense

By DEAN GYORGY
State Press

Freshman lefthander Sean Rees went nine innings and struck out 12 batters as the Sun Devils (10-5) defeated Lubbock Christian, 6-1, on Tuesday at Packard Stadium.

It was the most strikeouts recorded by an ASU pitcher since Doug Henry fanned 15 against UC-Riverside in 1985.

"The fastball was my pitch today," Rees said, "and I was working it in and out. I had good rhythm and mechanics. It's definitely the best I've felt all year."

It is not unlike Rees to have a high strikeout total, but Tuesday he did it essentially without his best pitch, the curveball. He had trouble spotting the curve and had to rely on his fastball, which had better than normal velocity.

"What surprised me was the way he did it," ASU coach Jim Brock said. "His breaking pitch, what we thought would be a big factor, was not today. If he had the curveball he's had in previous outings, he'd have been overwhelming."

"He was able to throw strikes when he needed to . . . He was certainly very impressive."

Rees said he had been thinking about the vacant third position in the starting rotation. Brock has yet to name a pitcher for Sunday's game with UCLA.

"The third spot is pretty much wide open," Rees said. "I was pumped up about throwing nine (innings). That should help. I've got to get my curveball working again. But other guys have been throwing well too, so after today it's still wide open."

Brock agrees. He said the third man will come from among a number of people and it is likely to change throughout the season.

The Sun Devils did all their scoring in the second inning on Tuesday.

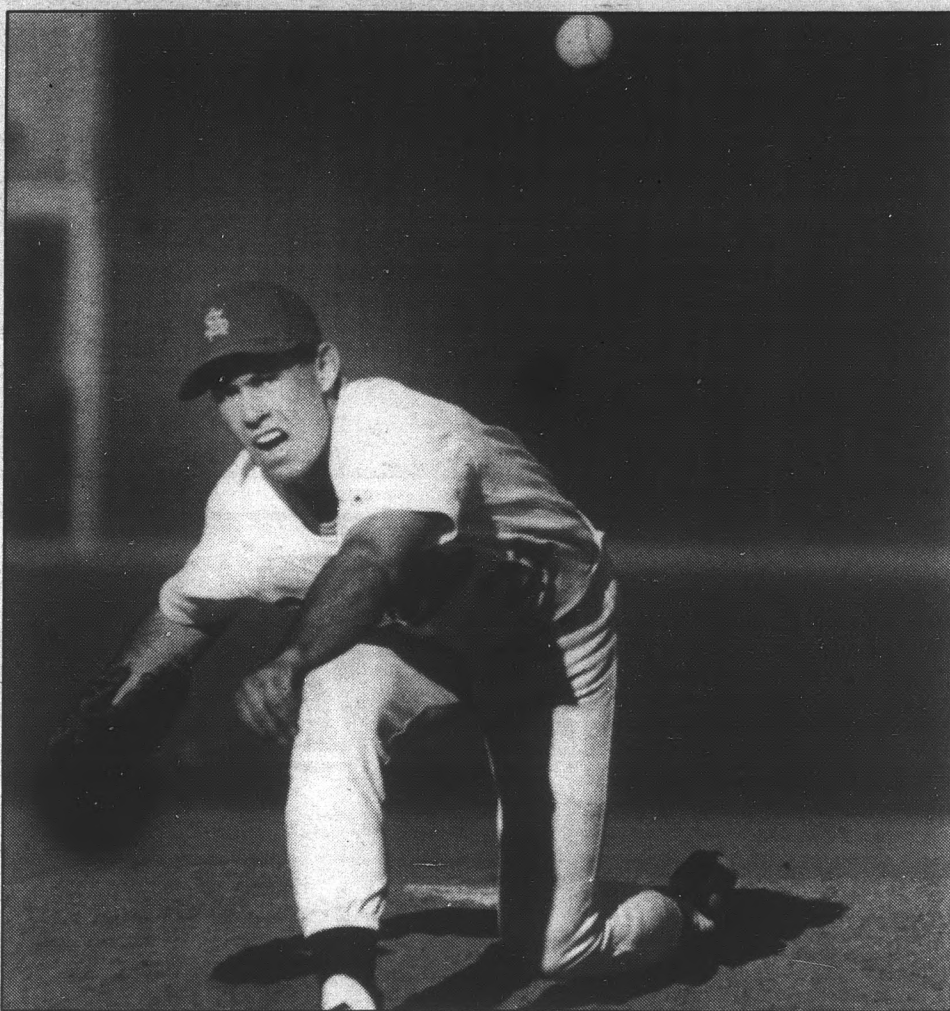

Mike Kelly walked to lead off the inning, went to third on Tucker Hammargren's single and scored on Jim Austin's single to left.

Bob Dombrowski followed with a three-run homer to left-center field to make it 4-0. It was his second homer in two games.

Dombrowski missed all of last season due to a leg injury, and has been used sparingly in a utility role this season. He has played the last two games at first base.

"I think the year off made me smarter, more mature as far as hitting goes," Dombrowski said. "It feels good, for all the hard work I did (in rehabilitation), to get something out of it."

Third baseman John Finn singled, extending his hitting streak to a career-high 11 games, and Kevin Higgins followed with a two-run homer to right field for a 6-0 lead.

Freshman pitcher Sean Rees threw 12 strikeouts in nine innings, the most by any previous Sun Devil, during ASU's 6-1 victory against Lubbock Christian Tuesday.

Sun Devil Fifield making the most of her senior year

By KYLE D. ENG
State Press

Karen Fifield likes to have fun.

The ASU second baseman, who is hitting .417 this season, said she loves to play softball.

Fifield, a senior, is the only returning all-Pac-10 player on the Devils squad this year. After four games this season she leads the team in hits (five), doubles (one), and slugging percentage (.500).

"I just loving playing this game," Fifield said. "I hope to rub off on other players, because it's a team sport."

The senior has started every game for ASU since her freshman year, in 1986. Fifield, who ranked third in batting in the Pac-10, will apply the experience she gained from 156 previous games to her playing time this season.

"I look at myself as the motivator," said Fifield, who plans to graduate in May 1990 with a degree in manufacturing engineering technology. "I think the main thing in playing softball is just playing to have fun."

"I like for this whole team to have fun. Everyone out on the field has been playing ball for a long time. We all know having fun is the key factor."

Fifield has improved in nearly every statistical category since her freshman year. In previous years she had hit .248 and .264, but increased her average to .320 last season. Her hit-total production improved from 38 to

Karen Fifield

46, then climbed this season to 49.

"Karen has been our most consistent player over the past three years," ASU coach Mary Littlewood said. "She is our anchor in the infield, because of her experience at her position."

Fifield said she hopes her final year will be her best.

"I always want to improve on at least one aspect of my game," she said. "Whether it is improving my batting, my fielding or whatever statistic I could improve on."

Fifield is one of seven seniors on this year's squad. Four of them have started together since they were freshman and plan to finish their final season together as well.

However, pitcher Donna Stewart is out with an injury and pitcher Michele Gravatt comes in only in relief situations. That leaves rightfielder Yvette Baltazar and Fifield as the two seniors out on the field in most of the games.

"It is a nice feeling to be one of four seniors who will be graduating this year," Fifield said. "It would be even nicer to win a lot of games and go out as winners."

"I think we could go to regionals this year. It would be nice for us to be able to do that. It would be a fitting tribute to coach Littlewood."

Fifield said the off-field relationships of the other players add to the key to success.

"I think all of us are a team on the field and off the field too," Fifield said. "This thing is a team effort, but that doesn't have to limit us to the field."

"It's not just the girl talk or the fun we have, I think its the friendship we've built over the years."

"That, I wouldn't trade for anything."

Results at ASU prove satisfying to All-American

Dan Ray/State Press

ASU senior Missy Allington will end her collegiate swimming career with the Pac-10 Conference meet and NCAA Championships coming up in March.

By CHRIS NACKINO
State Press

Post-season action will mark the end of a successful and memorable swimming career for senior Missy Allington as a Sun Devil.

"If someone told me I had to quit swimming tomorrow I would feel very happy with my career," Allington said. "Being on a college team has been the most fun I have ever had in swimming."

As captain of this year's team, Allington has established several ASU all-time records. She ranks fifth in the 50-yard freestyle, fourth 100-yard freestyle and fourth in the 100-yard butterfly.

"I've never been the type of person that always wants to win or be the star of a team," Allington said. "I could be on a relay team and swim faster for the team than if I was by myself . . . I just want to go out and get better each time I swim."

After spending one season at the University of Nebraska, Allington transferred to ASU in 1986 and began swimming under head coach Tim Hill.

"Nebraska was not the type of program that I was looking for," Allington said. "Also the weather was terrible — I just couldn't handle 40 below."

Allington said another factor that played a major role in her decision to attend ASU was Hill's coaching ability.

"If I had to pick any coach I don't think that I would choose anyone but Tim," Allington said. "He picks up on the littlest things that seems to help us the most."

Hill said Allington has contributed to the team's success in countless ways.

"She is very tough in clutch situations — a very tenacious individual," he said. "She is a good motivator for the team . . . maybe not the rah-rah cheerleader type but she has great leadership ability."

During her sophomore year, Allington said she had her most memorable collegiate swimming experience against Southern Cal.

"The best moment I have ever had was against USC," Allington said. "As a team we really pulled together . . . the talent of USC seemed so unbeatable, but we did it."

Last season, Allington earned All-America accolades in four relays at the NCAA Championships and placed fourth in the 100-meter freestyle and fifth in the 50-meter freestyle at the Pac-10s.

"She is probably one of the big keys at our past dual meets and NCAA," Hill said. "She sees the value of really getting up and racing."

However, this season she was struck with severe injuries including back problems and was forced to cut her training nearly in half.

"This season has to be one of the hardest that I have ever had because I have had numerous injuries," Allington said. "I think that it (not qualifying) will be one of the biggest letdowns if I don't make it as a senior."

Although the Pac-10 tournament starts on Thursday and signifies the final chance to register NCAA qualifying times, Allington said she believes the team has a chance to finish as high as second.

"At the beginning of this year we hoped we would do well, but all the injuries have set us back," Allington said. "I think we can beat UCLA, USC and California and if we have a good meet we could finish second in the Pac-10."

After the Pac-10s, the team will prepare for the NCAA Championships March 16-18 at Indiana University.

Allington said the talent of the this year's team exceeds any she has seen at ASU.

"Since there is no (Olympic gold medalist) Janet Evans on the team, I think the talent is spread out and the talent goes so far down," Allington said. "It is not like there's a dominate person on the team because everyone is a leader within themselves."
