

Education students complain to regents

By TERESA OWEN
State Press

Forty graduate students in ASU's College of Education have named several complaints about the college and dean in a letter to the Arizona Board of Regents, including Gov. Rose Mofford, saying they hope their questions finally will be addressed.

Johnston

"It was a last resort," said one graduate student who asked not to be named because she fears reprisals from Dean Gladys Styles Johnston.

"There have been attempts to communicate with the dean, but they weren't successful," the student said. "She treats us like children, and it's hard to have an adult-to-adult conversation with her."

Johnston said she could not comment on the letter because she has not yet seen it.

However, Mike McCormick, one of Mofford's assistants, said he spoke with Johnston last week about the letter.

But Johnston said her conversation with McCormick regarded faculty recruitment. "I don't know what you're talking about," she said. "I don't have a copy of the letter," McCormick said this is the first letter Mofford has received of this nature.

"This is rare," McCormick said. "Seldom do we hear from students."

The letter lists problems with curriculum and expenditures, but it does not cite any specific charges.

The graduate students' previous concerns include the University spending $80,000 to redecorate the dean's office, adjacent lobbies and other administrative offices while simultaneously reducing benefits for students.

Records in the Comptroller's office show that nearly $60,000 was spent to renovate those areas.

Pat Tackett, another ASU graduate student, said the letter was written because there are many issues with which students are concerned, and they are merely raising questions.

"There are so many issues, and we didn't want to point fingers," Tackett said. "Our motivation is just to have our questions answered."

The letter requests an audit of the college by an independent agency.

"It is the only way to be objective," said a graduate student who wishes to remain anonymous.

Regent Andrew Hurwitz said he received a copy of the letter and added that an investigation might result.

"The letter is of concern," he said. "Once I see more information I can make a decision. They have done the right thing by putting their concerns in a letter."

In the letter, graduate students say there are numerous curriculum problems that are causing the quality of the college to decline.

"In addition to the curriculum issues brought to your attention by (student regent) Patrick McWhortor, we believe ... this has significantly affected the morale of students

Landlord fined for renting home to unrelated tenants

By RICHARD VIGIL
State Press

A Tempe landlord was fined $1,000 and sentenced by Tempe Municipal Court Monday to one year probation for violating a city ordinance forbidding more than three unrelated persons to occupy the same single family dwelling.

Kevin Cabianca, 25, was convicted of allowing five people to live in a house at 720 E. Solana Drive, Tempe. He is the first person prosecuted under the rarely enforced city ordinance created to control groups of ASU students who live together to reduce rent costs.

Cabianca had been convicted on Nov. 17, 1988, of allowing four unrelated ASU students to live in a house at 300 E. 14th St.

During his testimony at the sentencing hearing today, Cabianca said he owned "15 or 20" houses in Tempe, all within one mile of ASU.

Cabianca, sentenced by Municipal Court Judge Stephen Mirretti, declined comment on the advice of his attorney, Paul Blunt. But Blunt said Cabianca's conviction will be appealed to Maricopa County Superior Court.

Blunt said Cabianca will appeal on the constitutionality of the Tempe law, saying it was selectively enforced against Cabianca.

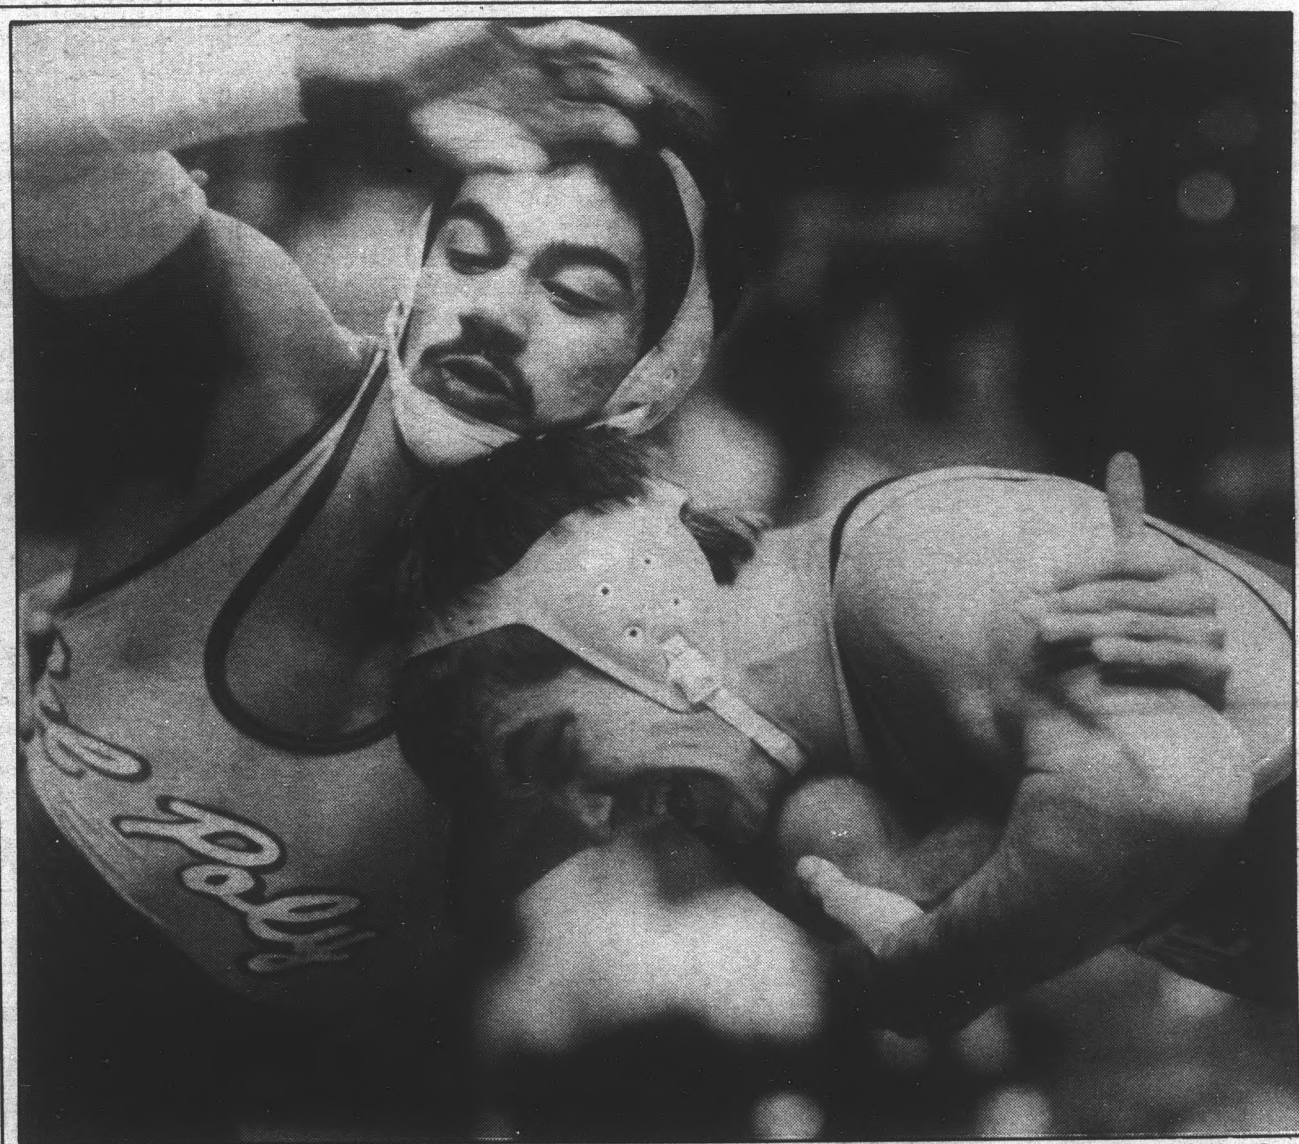

During his closing arguments, Blunt said Cabianca was the first landlord tried under the ordinance which has "been on the books for decades."

Cabianca testified that he believes 75 percent of rented single-family dwellings in Tempe are rented to groups and are in violation of the city ordinance.

"Many of these types of homes are rented to more than three unrelated persons with or without the landlord's knowledge," Cabianca said.

Prosecutor Geraldine Mattern asked for a sentence of three years' probation, a $3,000 fine and 30 days in jail.

Goldwater takes stand against ValTrans

By LORI ZUBALIK
State Press

Former Sen. Barry Goldwater said Monday he probably will vote against Proposition 300 because the measure would increase taxes, disagreeing with the majority of panelists assembled in the MU to discuss the mass transit system in Phoenix.

If approved by voters, Proposition 300 will provide funding to build and operate ValTrans, the Maricopa County-wide public transit system which combines automated rapid transit, commuter rail and an expanded bus service.

"Transportation has always been a problem," Goldwater told more than 250 people who had gathered for the first of a series of lectures featuring Goldwater.

"I have been living in the Valley for 80 years now, and I can't remember a time when there wasn't a transportation problem," Goldwater said.

If Proposition 300 is passed, the main portion of funding will be derived through a half-cent sales tax that will cost the average household an estimated $44 a year.

"I don't want to see my taxes raised," Goldwater added.

But Cyril Hodgins, staff consultant for the Regional Public Transportation Authority, said that ValTrans will be more than worth the expense.

Hodgins presented a slide show which illustrated what he saw as the many benefits of the proposed mass transit system. A decrease in personal automobile expense, labor force enhancement, environmental improvement and conservation of energy were among those mentioned.

"ValTrans will cut down on car operating expenses, as less miles will be used for short runs into town," Hodgins said.

"And if you believe in the adage 'time is money,' you'll appreciate the fact that public transit alleviates the lost time spent while driving," Hodgins added.

Hodgins said he predicts that if Proposition 300 is passed, ValTrans will have a direct impact on the labor market by 1995.

"Public transit, by making more jobs available, will enhance the labor force in the Valley by improving employment access," Hodgins said.

Pat Gober, an ASU geography professor, said she is

Investigation into disaster of United jumbo jet continues

HONOLULU (AP) — Airlines worldwide were advised to check the cargo doors of their Boeing 747s on Monday as federal investigators focused on the cargo door latch system of a United jumbo jet that ripped open at 22,000 feet.

U.S. Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner said he thinks "it's very important that we not jump to conclusions until that report (on the investigation) is done."

"The preliminary indications, of course, are that the (cargo) door opened or at least the skin peeled around the door, but let's wait until the board reports. Then we'll know finally what went on," Skinner said in an interview Monday with ABC's "Good Morning America."

United's Flight 811 was gaining altitude 100 miles south of Honolulu after taking off for Auckland, New Zealand, early Friday when a 10-by-20-foot section of the fuselage ripped away, including the right front cargo door.

Nine passengers disappeared when 10 seats in the business class on the right side were blown out through the gaping hole, investigators said.

There was no indication from the ground crew or cockpit crew that anything was amiss when the cargo door was secured for flight, said Lee Dickinson, a National Transportation Safety Board investigator.

Death toll triples world's annual average in 1988 earthquakes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Earthquake deaths last year nearly tripled the world's annual average, largely as a result of the tragic Armenian tremor, the U.S. Geological Survey reported Monday.

The year's loss of life in earth tremors was the worst in more than a decade and occurred despite a decline in the total number of significant earthquakes reported during the year, survey officials reported.

The exact number of deaths remains unknown but is likely to nearly triple the average annual toll of about 10,000 fatalities worldwide.

Lawyer's illness could force a mistrial in Night Stalker case

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The attorney for "Night Stalker" murder defendant Richard Ramirez is suffering from trial-related nervous exhaustion, the judge said Monday, and the prosecutor said they might have to start the trial over.

"Probably the chances of a mistrial are good," Deputy District Attorney P. Philip Halpin said. "We can't keep this jury hanging around indefinitely."

A mistrial would mean a new jury would need to be selected in the 3½-year-old case.

Ramirez, 28, is charged with 13 murders and 30 related felonies in a series of grisly nighttime attacks that terrified Southern California in the summer of 1985.

A doctor's report submitted to the judge said attorney Daniel Hernandez is suffering from stress-related nervous exhaustion resulting from his participation in the long-delayed trial. The doctor recommended psychological counseling and said recovery could take six weeks.

Physician stresses illness prevention

By ROBIE KAKONGE
State Press

The future well-being of college students rests solely on themselves and not with their physicians, according to a Phoenix health and fitness doctor.

Art Mollen said in the future, contemporary medicine will benefit more individuals who learn how important it is to take care of themselves in an effort to prevent illnesses like cancer and heart diseases.

"Students may look great now, but unless they start to exercise and have a balanced diet, it is very unlikely that they will continue to be as healthy," he said.

"It's like going to the dentist; people don't go only when their teeth hurt, they also go for check ups or cleanings to make sure that, in the future, nothing will hurt.

"The question will no longer be, 'What can your doctor do for you?' Mollen said. 'It will be, 'What can you do for yourself to prevent illness?'"

Mollen, who founded the Phoenix 10K road race and is the author of "Run for Your Life," plans to speak about health issues at ASU at 7 p.m. Wednesday, in the Great Hall of the College of Law.

Mollen, the founder and director of the Southwest Health Institute, said too often college students fail to attend to their health unless they are suffering.

And those who seek professional help in the health area do so because they want to lose weight and look pretty.

"Most college students are in the first stage of life, the grace stage, when you are 25 years or younger and you think 'nothing is going to happen to me'," he said.

"This is the stage in which students may think they may never get fat, ill, have cancer or any other 'serious' illness and so they think their bodies will be just fine," he said.

Mollen said the other two stages are the reaction stage and the destruction stages.

"The reaction stage occurs between the ages of 25 and 50," he said. "This is when the body reacts to the abuses like alcohol, tobacco and medication.

"Destruction — the final stage — is when the body is overwhelmed by all the stress and people get heart attacks, cancer and other illness."

Mollen, who works out two hours a day, said the key to making a real difference is to set a priority and to work out for at least 10 minutes a day.

"Getting in shape can be done, all it takes to get started is a 10-minute walk, jog, swim or taking the stairs instead of an elevator," he said.

Mollen, who has run the Boston Marathon three times, participated in five triathlons and 10 decathlons, said,

Art Mollen

"Getting into shape doesn't have to be threatening, just incorporate the things you enjoy doing into routine exercises."

Mollen said not having time or enough willpower are excuses he used when he was in college.

"I used to lift weights when I was in college, but I never really thought how exercise connected to my well being until I was in med school and saw what sort of shape the doctors were in," he said. "At that time I decided that if I didn't want to look like them, I had to start taking care of my body."

Mollen, who also wrote "The Mollen Method" book, said his personal health success was based on it.

"I finally realized that there were no quick fixes to getting healthy, and that in fact, quick weight-loss gimmicks only make you gain the weight back that much faster," he said.

Mollen said, "The Mollen Method" diet program and exercise program works because it combines diet and exercise with a positive mental attitude.

"I have done the program for the last 17 years and I still didn't have to give up my favorite food, pizza. I just learned that some things like red meat where not good for me and now I eat veggie pizzas," he said.

FDA issues standards for non-prescription medicines

The Food and Drug Administration on Monday issued standards for expectorants in nonprescription cough/cold medicines that allow only one proven active ingredient to remain on the market.

Guaifenesin was the only ingredient found by the FDA to be safe and effective in increasing sputum or phlegm volume and making it easier to cough up.

About 20 other expectorant ingredients were found not to be useful and products using these ingredients will have to be reformulated or taken off the market within one year.

Scientists study ways to tag smokestack pollutants

Scientists are studying ways to "tag" smokestack pollutants much the way biologists tag birds and animals as part of research into pinpointing the chemicals that contribute to acid rain.

In tests begun last summer, W. Robert Kelly of the National Institute of Standards and Technology and University of Maryland aerosol chemist John Ondov injected an enriched isotope of the metal neodymium into smoke from a coal-burning power plant in northern Virginia.

Kelly and Ondov are seeking an Environmental Protection Agency grant to study whether the particle tracing will work over longer distances. The EPA is testing isotope tracers in diesel fuel used by public vehicles in Roanoke, Va.

Acid rain is formed from sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide released by the combustion of coal and other fossil fuels. In combination with water, they form nitric acid gas and sulfuric acid droplets, which dissolve in rain.

Trust fund

Time to speak out

Once again, it's time for financially strapped students to speak out.

Last semester, when hundreds of students turned out in the Great Hall of ASU's College of Law to protest an increase in tuition that they simply couldn't afford to pay, the Arizona Board of Regents listened — and the result was an unprecedented student victory and a more manageable increase.

This time it's the Arizona state Legislature that needs to hear from students who are facing tough times — and who recognize the need for a comprehensive financial aid program for Arizona students.

Wednesday morning at the Arizona capitol, the House of Representatives Education Committee will consider a bill that would create a student trust fund which would generate $1 million a year in direct aid for students by forming a financial partnership between students and legislators.

Students would pay $6 per semester into the fund, which would be matched by equal monies from the Legislature. Half of the $1 million raised from this arrangement every year would be made available as outright grants to deserving students, while the other half would go into a trust fund to accrue interest for future use. In other words, the trust fund would grow and benefit more students every year.

Students who are in the critical "notch group" — those middle and lower-middle income students who don't qualify for federal or state aid, but at the same time don't have enough resources to get through school — will be the first to benefit from the trust fund, as will minorities and students with children or other dependents.

It's vital that students make the trek to the Legislature Wednesday to voice support for the plan — or at least show support by being there — and to drive home the fact to legislators that for many students, the trust fund may make the difference between graduation and elimination from the university.

Associated Students will be offering van rides to the Legislature Wednesday morning for students who wish to attend the trust fund hearing. Those interested should contact ASASU State Relations at 965-1151 or 965-3161.

Resurrection at ASU!

Editor:

Regarding the Feb. 20 article, "Upcoming Events for School of Music:" I was delighted to learn that Benjamin Britten is now a professor in the School of Music. Let me be the first to congratulate ace reporter Jennifer Lynn Johnson for unearthing this astonishing and little-known fact. Most of us in the School of Music had foolishly believed reports that the British composer (famous for, among other works, "The Turn of the Screw," "War Requiem" and "Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra") had died in December of 1976. Thank you for setting us straight.

I look forward to further revelations.

Koran written by God, not prophet

Editor:

Recently, Salman Rushdie's novel "The Satanic Verses" has caused pandemonium within the Moslem community. Many Moslems have judged the book as being blasphemous due to its denunciation of the prophet Muhammad and the Koran, Islam's holy book.

The "Satanic Verses" portrays the prophet Muhammad's wives as prostitutes and it suggests that Muhammad wrote the Koran himself rather than receiving it directly from God. However, it is written in the Koran in Sura XCVI, "The Blood-Clot," that the prophet Mohammed could not read nor write. Furthermore, in the Koran, the number 19 is a mysterious number for the following reasons:

- The Koran contains 114 Suras: 114 divided by 19 equals six (whole number).
- The number of occurrences of each letter in the Koran is evenly divisible by 19.
- Each Sura starts with the following line in Arabic: "In the Name of God, the Merciful, the Compassionate" which contains 19 Arabic letters

It is very difficult for a man to construct an entire book in which these rules apply. Therefore it is only logical that the Koran is the work of God.

It can only be assumed that the major reasons for an author to write such a book as the "Satanic Verses" are publicity and monetary objectives. Yet, Rushdie's work only brought him unfavorable publicity and a life of indefinite concealment. As far as the monetary objectives are concerned, several major bookstores already refuse to distribute the book due to the controversy it involves.

In conclusion, we, the Islamic world, are for human rights and free expression, but we must respect the sensitivities in the beliefs of others. When these beliefs are unjustly criticized, we lose both the real meanings of free expression and human values.

Fine Arts Complex radiates "self-expression"

Editor:

As concerned architecture students, we offer a response to Tod McCoy's article printed Feb. 23 in the State Press: "Architecturally Speaking: New buildings on campus just don't seem to fit in."

While it is true that Frank Lloyd Wright believed that a building should be an extension of the environment, for McCoy to arrogate Wright's disapproval of the Fine Arts Complex is inappropriate and wholly irrelevant.

New structures for ASU should meet the following criteria designated by the Design Review Board:

"Buildings should be designed to reveal cultural artifact in their own right, rich in allusion and metaphor, symbol and ordering; they should stimulate engagement and reward contemplation."

We believe that Antoine Predock's Fine Arts Complex meets these qualifications. It is a fortress because it demonstrates the strength of art in our society. It is a vault because art should be valued.

Predock's concrete and steel arch is a symbolic gateway to ASU, and serves to complete Orange Mall. The rectangular columns on the Mill Avenue facade draw visitors into the building where their perceptions are manipulated by varied ceiling heights. Predock is most successful in designing the play of light and shadow. His glass block windows and metal grillwork illuminate the unruffled planes.

Predock's Fine Arts Complex radiates self-expression; this is appropriate for the creative endeavors of the College of Fine Arts.

Active architecture needs controversy to encourage people to take notice of their environment.

George doesn't need an itchy trigger finger

Jeff Greenfield
 Universal Press Syndicate

NEW YORK — A month into his administration, George Bush is off on his first foreign trip amid concern that he is losing the "strategic initiative" to the Soviets. Despite the cries from the sidelines for the president to "gallop and charge," here's one observer quietly murmuring "Whoa!"

If there was one clear message that George Bush managed to communicate in last year's election, it was his conviction that the foreign and defense policies of the United States were essentially on course.

Even Michael Dukakis began asserting that he was closer to Ronald Reagan on foreign and defense policies than was Bush. It didn't have a lot of credence, but it sure made the point that Ronald Reagan — through design or dumb luck — had managed to leave the United States in an enviable position.

So if the Bush administration has not yet named an assistant secretary of state of European affairs, or for Asian and Pacific affairs, does that reflect a major foreign policy dilemma?

Or look at it from Mikhail Gorbachev's side of the world. The Soviet leader seems to be everywhere at once, now moving to patch up the 25-year-old rift with China, now signaling new interest in a Mideast peace accord, now aggressively courting Western Europe with the Soviets' energetic "peace offensive."

Why is this happening? Because the Soviet Union is hemorrhaging on all fronts. Afghanistan has been an acknowledged disaster — and the Brezhnev Doctrine that proclaimed the irreversibility of communist ascension in a country lies in tatters.

The "union" of Soviet socialist republics has never been so disunited. From the Moslem republics in the south, to the long-simmering resentments in the Ukraine, minorities within the Soviet Union are using glasnost to challenge root premises of Moscow's domination.

To the east, Poland and Czechoslovakia appear once again ready for revolt — or a protest as close to a revolt as a nation can manage while occupied with the armed forces of a superpower. Cuba and Nicaragua increasingly appear on the Soviet ledgers as the costs, rather than the assets, of empire.

And all of this is being played out at a time when the Soviet economy, the standard of living, life expectancy and self-confidence are all heading down.

Of course Gorbachev is more active than George Bush — in the same sense that a man whose house is on fire is undoubtedly moving much more energetically than the man whose house is not.

Moreover, there is nothing inherently admirable about a new administration racing off to establish the initiative around the world. We have only to remember the bright-eyed energy of the Kennedy administration, convinced that America had grown soft around the middle, eagerly setting off to demonstrate its muscularity in Southeast Asia. In hindsight, a period of reflection and study might have served the nation a lot better.

Yes, it would be helpful for Baker, Scowcroft and company to figure out something convincing to tell West Germany about why the importunings of Moscow need to be treated cautiously.

Yes, it would be good to remind Western Europe that the deployment of intermediate-range missiles in the early 1980s was a powerful magnet that drew the Soviets back to the bargaining table.

But the new administration need not pace itself to the demands of an impatient Washington, or even to the deadline schedules of newspapers and TV news broadcasts.

Demanding that President Bush get moving is simply too reminiscent of the character in an S. J. Perelman story who jumped on his horse and rode off in all directions. That's no way to get anywhere.

Moslem countries not free from "vice"

Editor:

I am writing in response to Samaria Jones' letter (Feb. 23). I seem to me that Ms. Jones made her comments about American society out of ignorance by implying that Americans are: criminals, rapists, child molesters, prostitutes, drug users and homosexuals. I do not know of any American that fits that description.

What makes Moslems so much better? America does not send 13- and 14-year-olds and old men into battle. America does not send terrorists onto airplanes or into international airports with explosives and automatic weapons to take civilized humans as hostages. I wonder if Ms. Jones could have written such a letter in the press of a Moslem country without the worry of not waking up the next morning.

Now, as to the Bible, here in America everyone has the right to worship what they please, as they please. That is not a God-given right, but a right of what we Americans like to refer to as the Bill of Rights. I will have to agree on one thing with Ms. Jones: some of Mike Ritter's cartoons are insulting, but he has the right to express himself as he pleases as does the State Press for the above reason. I will admit I do not know as much about the Islamic religion or about Moslem countries, but I know and understand enough that if I had to be, I'd rather be a criminal, rapist, child molester, prostitute, drug user, homosexual and live here in this "modern-day Rome, Babylon, Sodom and Gomorrah" if that is what it takes to be a free American in the eyes of the Islamic people. Oh, one more question to Ms. Jones. I wonder if my head is worth $7 million to some religious leader (narrow-minded, terrorist leader hell-bent on wreaking havoc on the world) of some Moslem country. Learn the truth Ms. Jones.

pursuing studies in the College of Education," the letter states.

McWhortor has said that the education colleges at ASU, UofA and NAU do not adequately prepare students to be teachers.

"I hope it (the letter) has some impact," McWhortor said. "I hope they pursue the issue. The ball is in their court. My goal has been to start the ball rolling, and now it's up to the students to continue."

Johnston said she doesn't believe the morale of the college has decreased, because the faculty gave her a positive evaluation earlier this year.

"The evaluation refutes this claim," she said.

But the letter claims that graduate course offerings have been reduced and graduate assistantships will be cut next fall, which will hinder their education.

"She's cutting out a very important experience that's a part of our education," said a graduate student who does not want to be named.

The students said they only had two days to collect signatures on the letter because they wanted to present it at the regents meeting Feb. 10 in Tucson.

"There's no doubt in my mind that this is not a representative sample," said Tackett, who added that they could have gathered more signatures if they would have had more time.

The letter also questions Johnston's funding decisions.

"Funding priorities have compromised the quality and integrity of graduate education," the letter states.

The graduate students and McWhortor said Johnston had the right to have her office remodeled, but there must be a limit.

"There has been a loss of priorities, and we're just questioning her judgement," a graduate student said. "On one hand, she says we have to cut the budget, and on the other, she spends a lot of money to redecorate her office."

In earlier interviews, ASU Provost for Academic Affairs Richard Peck said remodeling Johnston's office was in her contract when she came to ASU in May 1986.

But graduate students said the money could have been used for graduate student salaries, which are among the lowest at ASU, rather than spending exorbitant amounts to remodel her office.

McWhortor said although large sums of money may have been used to redecorate the office, money in the operations fund, which only can be used for equipment or physical improvements and not salaries, was probably accurately used.

Under Mirretti's ruling, Cabianca will have to provide zoning officials with a list of all properties owned by him, including ownership conditions and management arrangements.

In addition, the list must be updated by Cabianca whenever he acquires another property. If he violates the ordinance, he will be subject to a probation hearing.

Cabianca also must provide on all leases a clause which requires that tenants subscribe to the city's law concerning the number of residents in homes.

The trial was brought about by repeated complaints from neighbors of the house at 720 E. Solana Drive that there was excessive noise and that too many people were living in the house.

Walter Douglas, a city zoning law inspector, testified that Cabianca was found to be in violation of the zoning law on at least three occasions between 1986 and 1988 before charges were filed.

After each complaint, Cabianca complied with the zoning ordinances by reducing the number of occupants to three.

Pauline Brunz, who lives next door to the house, testified that she "lived in fear" because two of Cabianca's tenants were arrested, one on a charge of attempted murder and the other in connection with a bank robbery.

Cabianca testified that he evicted those residents when he was informed of the charges against them.

skeptical of the ValTrans proposal.

"Phoenix is a metropolitan area that is turning itself inside out," Gober said. "The fixed rail component seems costly and aimed at a higher income group."

"ValTrans is too risky a development compared to alternatives that could be utilized."

Rob Melnick, director of ASU's Morrison Institute for Public Policy, said that he recognized the need for a good mass transit system, but said he looks at the proposal as a "quality of life" issue.

"We do know that we have a terrible problem in mass transit in the Valley," Melnick said. "Not only is a mass transit system necessary, it would be good for the city's image."

"Unfortunately, voters will base their decisions on economic value rather than a quality of life issue."

Ron Pulice, president of the Association of General Contractors, said he was initially against ValTrans but now is a serious proponent of the mass transit system.

"Our problem with the freeways was that we didn't see the need for them 20 years ago, and now we've got problems," Pulice said. "I don't want us to vote down Proposition 300 and in 20 years say 'hey, we need Valtrans.'"

Man escapes from police after 4-mile freeway chase

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A man driving a Ford Mustang with stolen license plates escaped from Tempe police early Monday when he ditched the car and ran into a group of townhouses after a four-mile chase on the Superstition Freeway, police said.

While police were guarding the suspect's car, a Phoenix man suffered minor injuries when his car slammed into the back of an unmarked police car, said Officer Roger Austin, a Tempe police spokesman.

Randolph Goeman, 38, was taken to Desert Samaritan Hospital in Mesa where he was treated and released, an emergency room nurse said.

Austin said the chase began about 3:39 a.m. after Officer Steven Wozniak spotted the white Mustang speeding on the Superstition Freeway near McClintock Drive and stopped the car at Minton and Alder Drives.

Just after the Mustang stopped, the driver sped off and got back on the freeway driving west until he stopped at the ramp to southbound Interstate 10, he added.

The suspect fled on foot into a group of townhouses at 1600 W. Village Way. A police dog was brought to the scene, but officers were unsuccessful in finding the suspect, Austin said.

He said the Mustang was possibly stolen from Tucson.

police report

Tempe police also reported the following incidents Monday:
•A Phoenix man who suffered a skull fracture when he fell from a walkway Friday at a Tempe hotel was listed in critical but stable condition Monday at Maricopa County Medical Center, a nursing supervisor said.

Sonny Curtis Wolverton, 23, was injured about 9:41 p.m. at Westcourt in the Buttes when he was sliding down a banister, lost his balance and fell.

•Two people robbed a Tempe gas station of $140 at gunpoint Friday.

The robbery occurred about 1:30 a.m. at the Mobil station at 1845 E. University Drive. The suspects demanded cash and seemed to know how the business' timed safe worked, police said. They threatened the female cashier and called the gas station 45 minutes after the holdup to tell her she could call the police.

•A 36-year-old man was arrested on burglary charges Saturday after a cab driver turned the man over to police. The suspect reportedly had the cabbie drive him around so he could sell items from a burglary at a Tempe home.

ASU police reported the following incidents Monday:

•A thief stole a student's 9mm handgun from a desk drawer at the Cholla apartment complex Sunday. The unloaded weapon is valued at $400.

•A vandal broke five video game and pinball machines at Ocotillo Hall during the weekend and stole money from them. Damage and dollar loss is unknown.

•A thief stole a $500 ASU-owned truck Saturday from Lot 21. The vehicle's keys were left in the ashtray.

•A fan was injured at the ASU-UCLA baseball game Sunday when he was struck in the head by a foul ball. The man, who is unaffiliated with the University, was treated at the scene and taken to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital.

•A thief stole a $2,500 men's gold and diamond wedding ring Saturday from the P.E. East building.

•A vandal caused $100 damage by smearing red paint on the sidewalk near the art building and also damaged a concrete bench by trying to move it.

•A thief stole a $350 mens 25-inch turquoise and gray Raleigh 12-speed bicycle Sunday from outside Hayden Library.

ASU student allegedly kidnaps, rapes woman

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

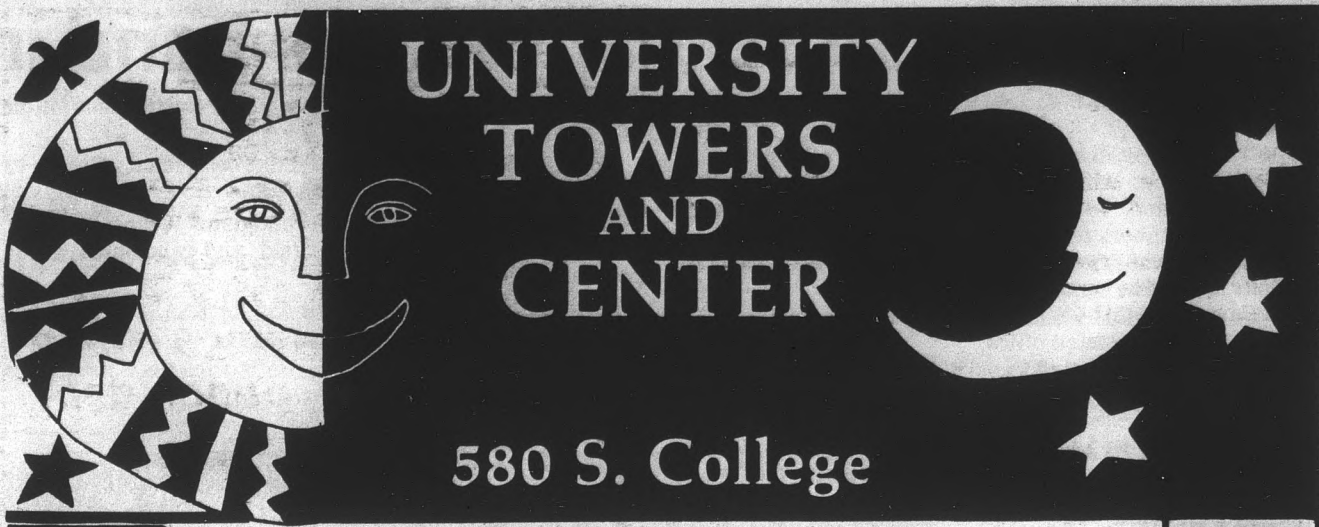

A 22-year-old ASU student was arrested Sunday after he allegedly raped an 18-year-old woman twice after she went to his apartment after a party, police said.

Steve Paul Cranston, of the 1700 block of East Eighth Street, was booked into Tempe City Jail on two counts of sexual assault and one count of kidnapping, said Officer Roger Austin, a Tempe police spokesman.

Austin said Cranston, a senior communications major, met the woman about 12:30 a.m. in the parking lot of his apartment complex and invited her to his apartment after they went to a party.

The pair had several alcoholic drinks before having sex, Austin said, adding that the woman told investigators Cranston later allegedly had sex with her twice against her will.

Austin said the woman passed out and when she awoke called a friend to pick her up. The woman then called police.

Potential ASASU candidates hand in election petitions

By MICHAEL VAN DYKE
State Press

The race for Associated Students of ASU executive and senatorial offices will become clearer today as potential candidates hand in their petitions allowing election committee members to verify signatures.

David Cavecche, elections coordinator, said he expects 50 students to hand in completed petitions.

But Cavecche said he is not certain how many students will be vying for each elected office.

Hopefuls for executive offices will hand in petitions with at least 750 signatures, and senatorial candidates will offer their petitions with 150 signatures to the election committee at 10 a.m.

Seven students had submitted their completed petitions as of Tuesday afternoon, Cavecche said.

Students will become official candidates Wednesday after signatures on petitions are verified, and candidates' grade point averages are approved.

Fewer students took out petitions for ASASU offices this year than in the previous two years.

Reasons given for the decline in the number of students seeking office differ among ASASU officials.

ASASU President John Fees said the lack of a campaign spending limit has discouraged students from running for offices.

But Todd Martensen, ASASU activities vice president, said ASASU officers who are backing their staffs and securing voting blocs have discouraged other students from running.

Cavecche suggested that apathy for ASASU and its activities could explain the lower turnout.

Campaigning officially begins March 12. Candidate forums are scheduled for March 14-15 and the general elections are slated for March 21-22.

Gesundheit! Flu season hits ASU

By STACY HAYMES
State Press

A flu epidemic is apparently keeping many students from enjoying the warm spring weather, a physician at ASU's Student Health Center said Monday.

"We are definitely experiencing an epidemic of flu on campus," Dr. Dale Bowen said.

The state health department received 21 flu-positive culture samples from the Health Center on Friday; however, Bowen said the Health Center probably sees many more cases.

"We probably see 100 cases a day," he said. "I would say one-third of the cases we see are probably influenza-related right now."

The symptoms of flu are headaches, fever, cough and muscle aches. Most people are ill for three or four days.

If the influenza turns into pneumonia it can be dangerous — even life-threatening, but death is rare among college-age students, Bowen said.

The Health Center has been working with the state Health Department by conducting random throat washes to keep track of the number of cases.

Seventeen cases of Type-A influenza and three Type-B were documented.

Bowen recommends if students are sick they should stay home to prevent spreading the disease. He suggested they drink a lot of fluids and take Tylenol or Advil rather than aspirin if experiencing muscle aches.

Mixed bag of hopefuls seek Nelson's job

From Staff Reports

Twenty-five of the 188 candidates being considered to replace ASU President J. Russell Nelson are women and 10 are minorities, a representative of the search firm hired to find a new president said Monday.

William J. Bowen of Heidrick and Struggles, Inc. presented a breakdown of candidates during a Presidential Search Committee meeting in the MU. The Arizona Board of Regents' 14-member committee consists of regents, professors, students and community leaders.

Fifty-nine candidates are presidents or chancellors at public or private institutions, 22 are executives in business or government and 97 are academic officers. The firm could not name the candidates because the search is confidential.

Nelson had announced his resignation in August, saying he would return to ASU after a year's leave of absence to teach in the College of Business. But the president announced Feb. 6 he will go instead to the University of Colorado-Boulder in September.

Molly Broad, the regents' executive director, said that during an executive session the committee discussed the candidates on whom it wants to focus.

A final list of candidates most likely will be presented to the full board in May, Broad said.

Ex-KGB officer to speak at ASU

By SCOTT C. SECKEL
State Press

Major Stanislav Levchenko, the highest ranking officer of the KGB to defect to the United States, will speak in the MU Arizona Room at 8 p.m.

The author of "On The Wrong Side," an account of the Soviet intelligence agency, sought political asylum in October 1979 because of disgust with the intelligence world.

The acronym KGB stands for Komitet Gosudarstvennoi Bezopasnosti, or committee for state security, in English.

Levchenko was recruited by the KGB in 1971 as a staff operations officer for the Foreign Intelligence branch of the agency after working as an analyst and spokesman for various organizations affiliated with the International Department of the Central Committee.

Organizations like the Afro-Asian Solidarity Committee and the Soviet Peace Committee, for which Levchenko worked, reportedly exist for the purpose of being liaison or "front" organizations with the Soviet Union for third-world Marxist insurgencies.

A bachelor's degree in Japanese language, literature and history from Moscow University and post-graduate studies at the Academy of Science of the U.S.S.R. in the modern history of Japan and other Asian countries led Levchenko to a post in Japan from 1975 to 1979.

His cover was the bureau chief of the Soviet affairs-international affairs weekly "New Times," but the KGB officer actually gathered information and conducted large-scale covert operations in Japan and other Asian nations.

Levchenko was promoted to major in 1979 and assumed the job of Chief of the Active Measures or covert operations, at the KGB's Tokyo station.

The lecture, which is sponsored by ASASU Lecture Series, is free to ASU students.

Engineering College combines 'Derby Day,' spring Career Fair

By STACY HAYMES
State Press

ASU's College of Engineering and Applied Sciences Council is holding its Spring '89 Career Fair and Derby Day today and Wednesday for about 10,000 students to explore the various fields of engineering.

Ted Honning, the coordinator of the event, said the council has incorporated Derby Day, which is when students build miniature cars and race them, to the Career Fair this year so recruiters can see students' creativity and ability.

Honning said students will not be interviewing for jobs during the Career Fair, but rather learning about opportunities in engineering and what employers look for when they hire students.

He said too many freshmen believe they will be the head engineer of a company by the age of 25.

"If we can get freshmen informed in specific fields in engineering, he or she will mold their studies to meet their career goals," Honning said.

"I want companies to show students what they are doing; and if interested, the students can visit the company during spring break."

The Career Fair also will inform new students on new developments in the sciences and engineering commercial fields and allow them to find out the future directions of the companies.

AT & T, Texas Instruments and National Electric Corp. will be among the 40 companies which will be set up along Tyler Mall in front of Noble library.

"By (students) creating a car these companies will watch these students, and from there, determine if the students would meet their company's criteria," Honning said.

Students are invited to participate in the derby by building a vehicle out of plywood. No electric motors are allowed on the vehicles, but the plywood is available at the Engineering Center at no cost.

The race track will be set up on the lawn between Noble Library and the Physical Science Building Monday for students to practice.

Honning estimates that 50 vehicles will be entered in the race. The cars will travel down a 24-foot wooden ramp and then travel across 8 feet of water 12-inches deep.

Anyone can enter the race, but only engineering students will be eligible to collect the $100 first-place prize. Honning said the money is only for engineering students because it is being supplied by the Engineering and Applied Sciences College Council and is budgeted toward students in that college.

Courier testifies in North trial about ASU history professor

From Staff and Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — Robert Owen, who served as the courier between Oliver North and Nicaragua's Contras, testified Monday that he discussed the construction of a Costa Rican airstrip to be used as a Contra resupply route with then-U.S. ambassador Lewis Tams at a time when aid to the rebels was banned.

Owen, testifying under immunity from prosecution, said he and the CIA station chief in Costa Rica toured a site for a rebel resupply airfield and that their trip was known to Tams, who is now an ASU history professor.

Owen said that "to the best of my recollection" he discussed the airfield, later built at Santa Elena on the extreme northwestern Costa Rican coast, with Tams.

Tams had testified at congressional hearings in May 1987 that before he left for his new post in Costa Rica in July 1985, North, an aide to the National Security Council, asked him to open a "southern front" for the guerrillas. Tams said he had known about the congressional ban called the Boland Amendment but "you can't really expect people in the field to be constitutional lawyers."

Tams resigned his post as ambassador in December 1986 shortly after the existence of the airstrip was revealed.

Owen's testimony, elicited by defense attorney Brendan Sullivan under cross-examination, was an example of the defense's attempt to distribute knowledge of North's dealings among higher officials at a time when U.S. aid was banned.

CIA station chief Joseph Fernandez, known in Central America as Tomas Castillo, was indicted on charges that he illegally helped North set up the airfield in Costa Rica and lied to his superiors. That indictment was dismissed on procedural grounds, but independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh has indicated he will bring the case anew.

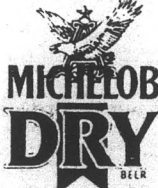

Tams, who is on sabbatical this semester, will not be called as a witness in the trial. Jim Weighart, a spokesman for independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, said he could not comment on why Tams would not be called to testify.

Tams could not be reached for comment.

Law School wins competition

By MICHAEL LEWIS
State Press

A team of three ASU law students beat out teams from 20 other schools to win a national collegiate environmental law moot court competition Saturday in New York.

The winning team consisted of David Goldberg, John Mayo, and Michael Running, all third-year law students planning on graduating this May.

The competition consisted of each team submitting a case brief by mail in December, followed by six rounds of oral arguments against other teams over three days that will end this Saturday at Pace University in White Plains, N.Y.

Joe Feller, associate professor of law and coach of the winning team, said winning this competition is a feather in the students' cap.

"It shows their ability to deal very competently with an extremely complex legal problem," Feller said Monday. "They were really dedicated and put in a tremendous amount of hard work."

Teams from the ASU Law College have done well in recent competitions, said Kathleen Neitzel, development officer at the Law College. Last year ASU won the national negotiations competition, and this year placed second in the regional competition in Los Angeles.

"The ASU College of Law is gaining a national reputation for the increasing quality of the oral advocacy skills of its moot court teams," Neitzel said.

Team member Mayo said: "It's nice for ASU to get recognition at a national competition."

Mayo said he is planning on spending one year as a clerk for a judge in New Jersey after graduating.

Three teams from ASU entered the competition. One team, consisting of second year law students Michael Burke, Myron Scott and Laurie Stewart, made it to the quarter final round. That team also won an award for having one of the three best briefs.

A third team made up of third-year law students Peter Schelstraete, Brenda Taylor and second-year law student Vernon Harris won their first preliminary round of the oral arguments.

Feller said the competition case was a very difficult one. The case revolved around the most current issues of environmental law, he said.

"It was a dispute between the state government, an industrial polluter and a citizen's environmental organization," Feller said. In each round, the team had to represent a different side of the argument, he said.

Feller said he judged nine practice rounds where the ASU teams could engage in arguments in front of law professors and attorneys from the Phoenix area.

Mayo said the questions the professors

Jack W. Beasley Jr./State Press

John Mayo, left, Dave Goldberg, and Mike Running, all third-year law students, were winners of the National Court Competition this weekend in New York.

and attorneys asked were very helpful in preparing them for the intensity of the competition.

"We could anticipate the most difficult questions," he said.

The winning ASU team also won a preliminary award for having the best legal brief in the competition. The high score on the brief helped that team win all six rounds of oral arguments this weekend.

Feller said the Law School Alumni

Association and the Law College raised the money that made it possible to send the three teams to where the competition was held.

The winning team will be honored at a small reception today at 11 a.m. at the College of Law. The school will soon be receiving the traveling trophy for this competition, which is a specially commissioned watercolor painting of a landscape, Feller said.

Archeologists attempt to save unexcavated land in Tempe

By MICHELE McDONALD
State Press

An unexcavated segment of the largest HoHoKam village in Tempe will be destroyed if American Continental Corporation does not cooperate with archeologists when building a commercial development at Baseline Road and Hardy Drive, a professional archeologist said.

American Continental Corporation has not received zoning approval from Tempe's Planning and Zoning Commission and the commission does not have any definite information about the archaeological site, said Ash Campbell of Tempe's community development.

If approved, the development would include a shopping center, theater, restaurant, car wash and apartments.

The village, called Los Hornos (the ovens), is oval and measures one mile long and one half-mile wide. Located on the northeast corner of Baseline Road and Hardy Drive, the village is the largest and last of a series of sites in the area.

Patricia Johnson from American

Continental Corporation and developer of the proposed center, said she did not know about the archaeological site until Feb. 10 and does not know exactly what will be done in the area.

"We hope to determine exactly what the site is," Johnson said. "It's something that has a tremendous impact on the area."

"At most sites in Arizona, we have been able to see pieces of it (HoHoKam village) but not the whole site," said Jerry Howard of Soil System Inc. and the Southwest Archaeological Team. "Seeing the site change as a whole has been the most interesting feature," Howard said.

The HoHoKams lived at Los Hornos from A.D. 500 until their unexplained disappearance in A.D. 1450. They had a lasting effect on the Valley because without their culture and canal system, early settlers may not have survived, Howard said.

"They were the only ones using canal systems," he said. "Our canal systems followed theirs."

"I think it's significant in a lot of respects," Howard said. "People in the Valley have been intrigued with people living in the desert."

Howard expects to find archaeological features that will help the community learn more about the HoHoKams, who had a culture similar to that of the Mayans in Mexico.

"We know from our records that there are several large features called compounds ... at the site," Howard said.

Compounds resemble apartment complexes with open-air plazas, he said. A compound measuring 60 meters long and capable of inhabiting 30-50 people may be at the site.

Also, Howard said pit houses, like single family homes, along with trash pits may be located on the site.

A platform mound with recreational ball courts, similar to the pyramids in Mexico, was bulldozed at a nearby site in 1957. A similar mound may be at the area, Howard said.

When the Casa Fiesta RV Park, located on the site, was under construction around 1975, local citizens monitored and did some excavation in the utility trenches but they did not extensively excavate the location, he said.

However, the new development would obliterate the archaeological features.

Howard said the price and length of the excavation depends upon "a lot of variables."

Excavation can cost anywhere from $40,000 to $3 million and could last three months to one year depending on the amount of artifacts, Howard said. But the cost probably is not in the high range, he said.

"It's difficult to deal with governmental agencies and developers because they're used to an 'x' amount of dollars and time," he said.

"We (archaeologists) never really stop projects," Howard said. "We very rarely do that (interfere with scheduling)."

In 1988, an exposed site near Priest Drive was opened to the public and more than 2,000 people turned out to see the ancient site.

Sun Devils claim fifth consecutive title

By CHRIS DORSEY
State Press

It was a night of peaks and valleys for the ASU wrestling team as it claimed its fifth consecutive Pac-10 crown.

But Sun Devil coach Bobby Douglas was not overly pleased with the team's performance.

"That was not a thing a beauty you watched out there tonight," Douglas said. "I was pleased that we won the tournament, but I was not pleased with the way we did it."

Defending conference champions Zeke Jones (118 pounds) and Thom Ortiz (150 pounds) suffered losses. Jones said following Sunday's action that the team looked a bit sluggish and it carried over into the championship round.

ASU won the tournament with 88.75 points while Oregon claimed second place with 70.50. Boise State was third with 45 points, Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo took fourth place at 42.75, Cal State Bakersfield garnered 41 points, Cal State Fullerton at 35.50, Fresno State with 30.75, Oregon State tallied 19.75, Stanford with 14 points and Utah State rounded out the field with 10.50.

The Sun Devils and Oregon filled the top two positions last year but the margin was cut drastically. ASU held the top position with a secure cushion of 55.5 points.

"The conference has gotten a lot better," Douglas said. "They are improving."

Some bright spots on the evening were seniors Jim Gressley (177 pounds) and John Ginther (190 pounds) earning their first Pac-10 title. The Sun Devils have been the bridesmaids of the conference throughout their career.

Gressley earned three runner-up medals but in front of a crowd of 1,472 claimed the 177 pound title. He decisioned Curt Stramm of Oregon, 4-3, despite wrestling the final two periods with injured ribs.

"I am happy for Jimmy," Douglas said. "He struggled with torn rib cartilage."

The senior had to come from behind but earned the title when he scored a reversal with 1:33 left to wrestle in the match. Gressley never looked back.

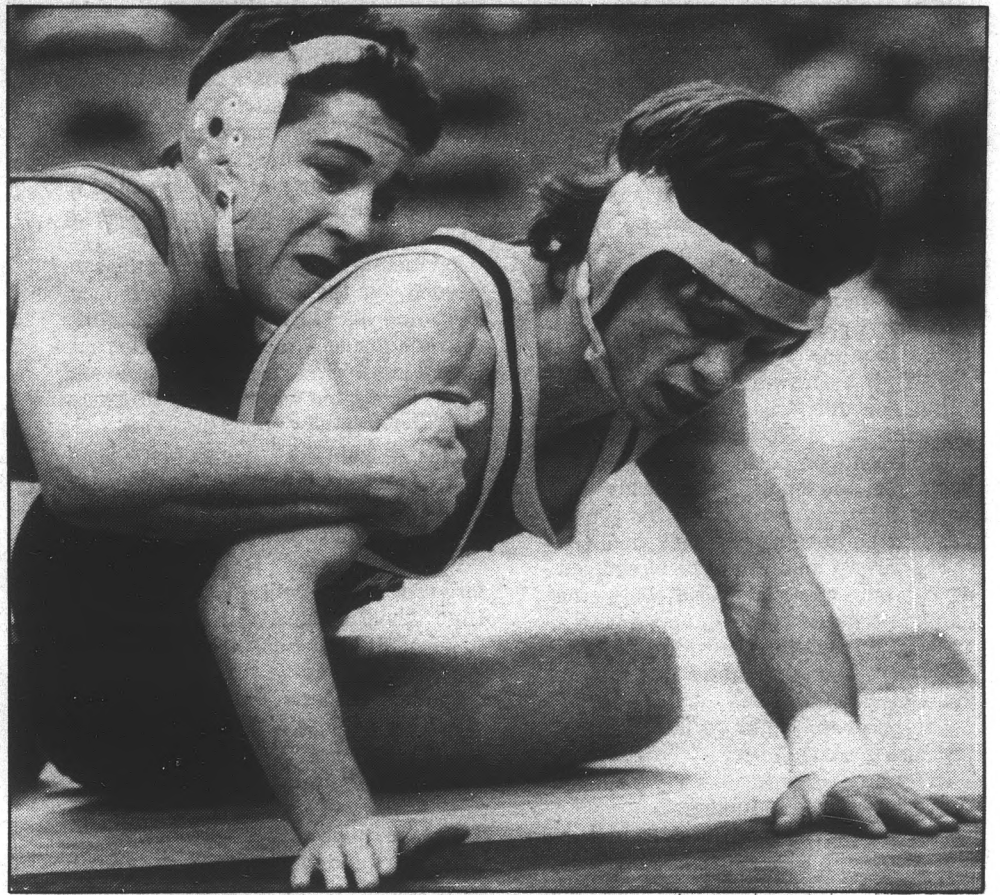

Ginther recorded a pin over Fred King of Oregon State with only three ticks left on the clock to go out in style. He dominated the entire match and finished off his opponent with a fall, which was one of two ASU pins.

"It was a good stepping stone for national," Ginther said. "I finally had a good tournament."

The Muncie, Ind., native missed last year's meet after suffering a torn groin muscle.

The Pac-10 meet serves as a qualifying tournament for the national meet March 16-18 in Oklahoma City. ASU will send eight grapplers to defend its national title, which seven Sun Devils brought home in 1988.

"We are not sending the quality as we did last year," Douglas said. "We need to keep everyone together and have that team unity."

Jack W. Bessley Jr./State Press

Oregon's Dan Vidlak controls the action in his 118 pound championship match with Sun Devil Zeke Jones. Vidlak was named the tournament most outstanding wrestler with his 17-12 victory.

Track coach uncertain of Devil's uncoming meet

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

With the first track meet of the season a few days away, distance coach Ken Lehman said anything could happen.

"I'm never quite sure what to expect until the first meet is over," he said. "But after it's over, I'll know what to expect for the rest of the season."

The ASU men's and women's track and field team will play host to Texas Tech and UC-Irvine Saturday at Sun Angel Stadium.

Lehman, who is in his third year as an ASU assistant track coach, said he has high expectations for the women's team with seniors Laura LaMena and Teresa Barrios at the helm.

"In women's distance we should be pretty competitive with anyone," Lehman said. "There is a lot of talent there."

LaMena, who competes in the 1500-meter, 3000-meter, 5000-meter and 10,000-meter runs, earned All-America accolades in the 10,000-meter event in 1987. She also captured a ninth-place finish at the 1987 NCAA Championships in the same event. Last season, she set the school record in this event with a time of 33:45.

"Laura is one of the best collegiate runners in the United States," Lehman said.

Barrios, who competes in the same events, qualified for cross country nationals in 1988 after placing fourth in the Pac-10 championship. She did not compete in the 1988 track season.

"I think Teresa will have the best season she's ever had, barring sickness," Lehman said.

Other talent for the distance women's team includes junior Amy Komitzky, who will compete in the longer distances; and juniors Kathy Jarvis and Kim McKay, who will participate in the shorter distances, Lehman said.

On the men's squad, the top competitor is sophomore Todd Lewis.

"He is definitely the top distance (runner)," Lehman said. "Even though he's young, he's quite good."

Lewis will compete in the longer distance events, including the steeplechase.

In the 800-meter event, Sun Devils junior Darren Viner, freshman Chuck Belcher, junior Mark Bowland and senior Dave Spargo will compete.

"Strength for this team is definitely the shorter distances," Lehman said. "We're looking for younger distance runners to take advantage of the chance to compete and step in and do the job."

Juniors Paul Boudreaux and Rob Dorf will anchor the team in the longer distance events.

"We are a little short on number," Lehman said. "We have a lot of work yet to do."

With the first of a four-home-meet schedule, the distance team is focusing on fast-type workouts.

"We're cutting back on the longer distances," Lehman said. "Concentration and relaxation are what I'm yelling right now."

Lehman said his runners are the least affected by the two-year track probation that went into effect last summer.

"They got to compete in cross country," he said, adding that the team was able to travel while the track team cannot.

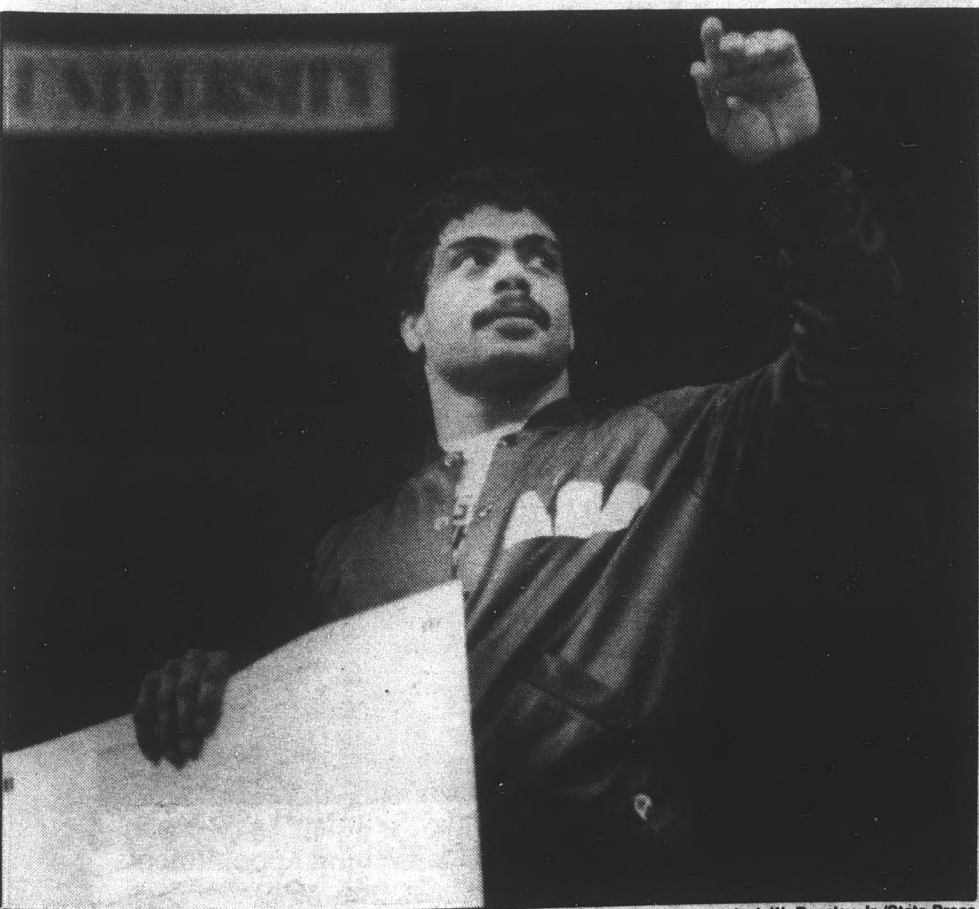

Lehman said the distance runners are making the best of the probation by having positive attitudes.

"They're making a bad situation into a good situation," he said.

For many, the sprint events are more exciting for the fans, but the distance events are just as thrilling, Lehman said.

"We look at sprint events as extra time for distance people to rest between their events," he said. "I've seen the fans get excited in the 1500-meter on the 12th lap when it comes down to a sprint."

"But naturally the sprinters get a little more attention because it's short and fast."

Jack W. Bessley Jr./State Press

ASU 142-pounder Junior Saunders salutes the crowd of 1,472 as he displays his Pac-10 conference title card. The junior decisioned John Martin of Cal Poly SLO, 8-5.

Saunders claims 142 pound crown in Pac-10 tournament

By KYLE D. ENG
State Press

It was business as usual for Junior Saunders last night.

The fifth-ranked Saunders claimed the 142-pound crown for ASU at the Pac-10 wrestling tournament in the University Activity Center.

The ASU grappler defeated Cal Poly San Luis Obispo's John Martin, 8-3. The win extended Saunders' perfect record to 11-0 in conference competition and 33-4 overall.

It was Saunders' first Pac-10 championship as well as his inaugural year wrestling in conference competition. Saunders, a junior, sat out last year on a redshirt transfer. Two years ago, he claimed the NCAA Division II 142-pound crown wrestling for Cal-State Bakersfield.

"This one feels good," an exhausted Saunders said after his match. "It was a tough match, and it feels good to win."

Saunders has come a long way since his 1985 second-place finish in the state tournament before graduating from Torrance High School in California.

"It's been a long road," Saunders said. "But I guess this is the reward you get when you put in all those long hours in practice."

"I think (ASU head) coach (Bobby

Douglas has helped me tremendously making the transition of Division I and Division II."

In the championship match, Saunders opened the scoring in the first period with a two-point takedown at the 2:22 mark. Martin then reversed out of a Saunders hold gaining one point at 1:52 in the period.

With 1:10 left in the first period Saunders scored a takedown, but Martin quickly reversed Saunders' hold earning a point. At the end of the first period, the score stood 4-2 in favor of the Sun Devil.

The second period was nearly scoreless except for a reversal by Martin with 1:54 left. Going into the final period, Saunders held a narrow lead, 4-3.

In the final period Saunders took control. He scored four straight points on takedowns at the 1:24 and the 1:18 marks in the period to wrap up the match.

Although he is now a conference champion, Saunders said he likes to take a back seat when it comes to the spotlight.

"I leave it up to (158-pounder) Dan (St. John) and (118-pounder) Zeke (Jones) to be in the spotlight," Saunders said. "I think it's my job to be a quiet leader."

"I like to lead by example so to speak — I would like my winning to do the talking."

Keeping Horn could be big bargain for ASU

Gary Jackson
Sports Editor

ASU and UofA have produced one of the biggest rivalries at the collegiate level.

And at this very moment the Sun Devils are preparing to go one up on the Wildcats.

The UofA administration will have to fork out almost $30,000 for a new and exciting, super deluxe "A" logo — that's like the Pentagon dishing out $10,000 for a screwdriver.

But now the ASU men's basketball program has a tremendous chance to make UofA's preposterous expenditure seem like monopoly money when the dollar figure is established for a new head coach to be named next month.

The largest sum might be buying out a current contract. One big-name candidate would come equipped with a $200,000 price tag just to sign with ASU — sorry, no successful season is guaranteed in the deal.

The program could go into debt by just luring a coach here.

In what other ways can the University disperse fundage?

How about enticing a coach with a car, a house, a wife, kids and two dogs.

How about asking ASU interim head coach Bob Schermerhorn to keep his current position. He already has two sons, and at 44, it is unlikely that he will be paying any more maternity bills.

Like any coach coming to ASU, the University could offer Horn a TV coach's show. The man is a stand-up comedian. Whichever station lands Horn will notice an instant increase in ratings during that half-hour slot.

Everyone in the media knows what Horn's personality is like. But a new coach might not attract viewers, or spectators in the University Activity Center for that matter.

A new coaching staff may result in a conflict with the players — shades of what occurred last season.

Former head coach Steve Patterson weeded out the bad apples, and now Horn and his staff are ready to work with the grade-A players. The current Sun Devils seem to have adapted to his style of play, but will the athletes be as receptive to a new coach?

This season Horn began his second year at ASU as a basketball coach and added recruiting coordinator to his list of responsibilities.

In November, Horn attracted forward Marlon Jones of Mesa Dobson High School and guard Brian Camper of Lakewood High School in California. Both will be among the top prospects from their respective states.

In April, additional high school recruits will sign on national letter of intent day. It is questionable whether ASU would be a worthwhile ticket if there is an unproven coach at the helm.

Keep in mind that previous records at other schools do not always carry over. So far, rumor has it that candidates have been coaches who are currently at schools in the East.

UofA head coach Lute Olson would be the exception to the rule, but not really. Although Olson previously was the head coach at Iowa (1974-1983), he began his tenure at Long Beach State and various California high schools. He was familiar to the West Coast style and was clearly effective with the Wildcats.

Although no Pac-10 school will be able to dethrone the Tucson NBA-caliber team, Horn could re-establish ASU as a top contender in the conference.

Prior to a four-year stint at Southern Utah State, Horn coached at Cal-Irvine, Chaffey Junior College, Orange Community College and Canyon High School, all California schools.

But Horn will have to battle the odds of stepping up to head coach because he follows in Patterson's footsteps by taking the interim route to the position.

But the two are different coaches in separate situations.

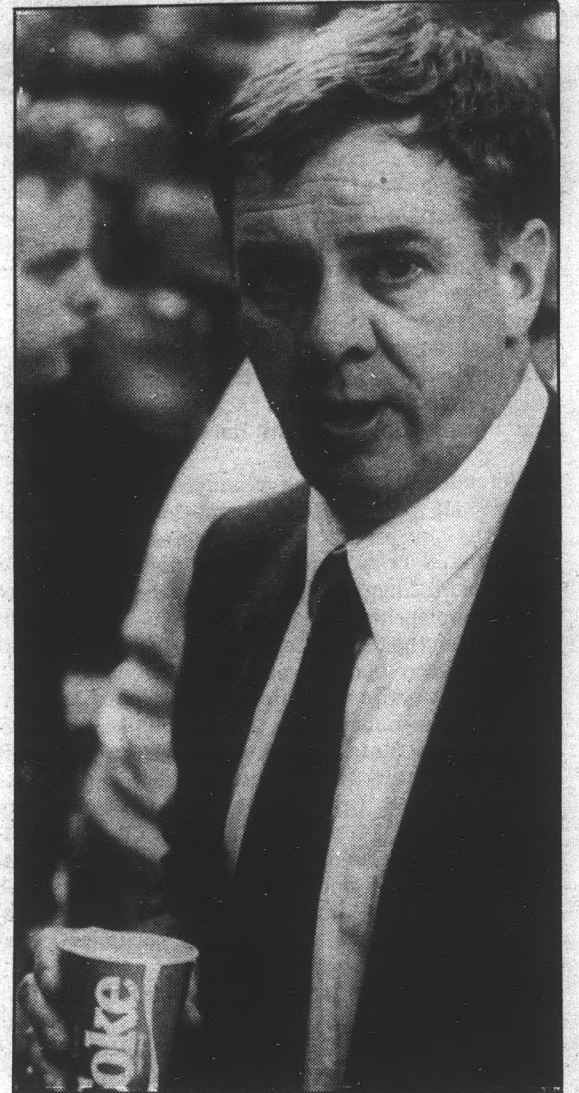

Patterson began his coaching tenure in 1981 as opposed to Horn, who has been coaching for 20 years.

During Patterson's initial year as head coach, the ASU basketball program was under NCAA probation. Horn would not have to begin with this handicap.

Any coach will shoot for the moon when negotiating a contract, but Horn will not be a six-million-dollar man.

With the potential high cost of luring a new coach to ASU comes the risk of sending the basketball program into bankruptcy.

A top-dollar coach does not necessarily mean a packed house or a good basketball team — if ASU sticks with Horn, the team will be able to afford new shoes next season.

ASU swimmers complete Pac-10s, look to NCAAs

By CHRISSEY NACKINO
State Press

The ASU men's and women's diving teams turned in top performances over the weekend during the Pac-10 Championships at the Mona Plummer Aquatic Center.

Sun Devil freshman Janae Lautenschlager placed second in the one-meter, sixth in the three-meter and seventh on the platform.

Two ASU freshmen contributed top-10 finishes: Jessica Tudos, who finished eighth, and Lisa Cribari, who finished ninth on the platform.

Stanford's Katie Connors won the three-meter competition while UCLA's Karla Goltman took top honors in the one-meter.

Stanford's Mike Burton and Stella Kahn recorded top honors in the men's and women's platform diving competition.

On the ASU men's team, freshman Rick Sawtell placed sixth and junior Josh Appel took 10th on the platform.

Both the Sun Devil men's and women's teams will finish the season with the NCAA Zone in early March and the NCAA Zone E Championships on March 10-11.

Additional action took place this weekend as the ASU women's swim team competed in the Pac-10 Championships in Cerritos, Calif.

The 200-meter freestyle relay team consisting of freshman

Heidi Hendricks, sophomores Michelle Thompson and Nancy Osborne and senior Missy Allington won the event with a time of 1:33.43.

Top individual Sun Devil scores were produced by Thompson, placing fourth in the 50-meter freestyle and fifth in both the 200-meter and 100-meter freestyle.

Hendricks also ended with honors finishing fourth in the 100-meter breaststroke and eighth in the 200-meter breaststroke.

The women's team will train for the next three weeks in preparation for the NCAA Championships at Indiana University on March 16-18.

The Sun Devils will have make reservations for Jones, Ortiz, Ginther, Gressley, Dan St. John (158 pounds), Junior Saunders (142 pounds), Marco Sanchez (126 pounds) and G.T. Taylor (167 pounds), as they will represent ASU at nationals.

St. John notched the Sun Devils' first pin of the night to claim his second Pac-10 title. He recorded a fall over K.C. Lane in 1:56, which coincidentally was the deciding factor in ASU's championship.

"I had a slow start but I came up to where I should be," St. John said. "I am looking forward to the big throw down in two weeks."

The junior, touting a 40-1 record, is the leading contender for the national title at 158 pounds this season.

Saunders earned his first Pac-10 title with an 8-5 victory over John Martin of Cal Poly San Luis Obispo.

Jones and Ortiz took second place after suffering disappointing losses.

Oregon's Dan Vidlak, the tournament's most outstanding wrestler, defeated Jones 17-12 for the 118 pound crown.

"I have never seen him before," Jones said, "but I didn't take him lightly. He just outwrestled me."

Jones fell behind early despite scoring the first points of the match on a takedown.

"I could tell from the beginning that he was out there confident and could win," Jones said.

Ortiz lost to Richard Baily of Cal Santa Barbara, 7-1. It was the same case with Ortiz as with Jones, falling behind out of the blocks and being unable to catch up.

Freshmen Sanchez and Taylor earned third place honors in their inaugural Pac-10 meet. While Andy McNaughton (134 pounds) and Mike Anderson (HWT) garnered fifth place to round out the Devil scoring.
