

Ex-KGB agent calls coercion global concern

By SCOTT C. SECKEL
State Press

People all over the globe are easily susceptible to subversion and coercion and are being recruited by the Soviet intelligence service to be used as spies against their own countries, a former KGB major said Tuesday night in the MU.

Major Stanislav Levchenko, the highest-ranking KGB officer ever to defect from the Soviet Union to the United States, said that, "Human beings are very cheap."

Agents will not retire and become "lazy millionaires" if they are low-paid, said Levchenko, who was awarded U.S. citizenship on Jan. 12.

"If you pay them a lot of money, they will become millionaires and they will not want to work," he said. "If you pay them a little bit, they will keep working."

The KGB has excellent experience in recruiting, he continued, and espionage has gone practically everywhere.

Levchenko, who holds a bachelor's degree from Moscow University in Japanese language and history and post-graduate studies at the Academy of Science of the U.S.S.R. in the modern history of Japan, was a master spy coordinating and running covert operations out of the KGB Tokyo station for four years.

A crowd of approximately 640 heard Levchenko speak for an hour in the Arizona Room.

Levchenko spoke clearly at a moderate speed with a slight accent. He termed the spy case involving the Walker family as the espionage incident "of the century" and gave it as the classic example of how Soviet intelligence operates — by pressuring and enticing the weaknesses of greed, ideology, blackmail and egotism.

He added that John Walker, the leader of the family ring, only earned $365,000 over 18 years of involvement with the KGB, and Walker could have "made more money delivering pizza in a good neighborhood with tips."

Greed, which Levchenko termed the "oldest sin of man," is the easiest to manipulate.

Ideological sympathizers are not ideal targets for agents, because few of them ever rise to information-privileged government positions due to their known sympathies.

Compromise, especially by homosexual operatives, is frequently used to recruit spys. But the soberly-dressed Soviet said that "swallows," or attractive agents being assigned to seduce targets are a myth.

He added, "there is no special school by the Black Sea to train these people. If there is, I am too late to be assigned there."

Ego is a very big tool from the master spies' box, according to Levchenko, and people such as officials, academics and journalists, "who are egomaniacs and never satisfied" are easier to recruit.

Financial aid bill would require community service

By ADRIANE HOPKINS
State Press

Incoming college students applying for federal financial aid may have to join the military or perform community work in order to receive the aid if a bill introduced in Congress this session is approved.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Georgia, and Rep. Dave McCurdy, D-Oklahoma, introduced in January the National Service bill, which would replace the current federal student aid program that they say is not working.

Introduced in both the House and Senate, the Nunn-McCurdy bill would set up a program of national service allowing those 18 to 25 years old to earn vouchers from $10,000 to $24,000 for service in the military or civilian service corps.

The civilian service corps would include jobs in social service agencies, nursing homes, day care centers or construction of homes or shelters.

The vouchers would be used to pay for college, technical school or a down payment on a house, the bill states.

Paul Barberini, director of ASU's Student Financial Assistance office, said that although he is generally in favor of the bill, he believes it could impair low-income students.

"It is a good concept but only if down the road the bill provides more options," he said.

"This is a topic that is not going to go away," he said. "The thing I question about the bill are the options left open for students."

Both Nunn and McCurdy say if the bill is approved it would help young people from low- and middle-income families earn their way into college.

Last year, seven separate bills dealing with community and military service were submitted to Congress. Each bill outlines different requirements and conditions.

The Nunn-McCurdy bill calls for the program to be implemented over a five-year period, while simultaneously phasing out the existing federal financial aid programs.

Barberini said that if the bill is approved, he hopes Congress will try to use existing federal programs in addition to the community and military service requirement.

He predicted that if the bill passes, it will take up to two years before the program is

Students file petitions to run for ASASU office

By MICHAEL VAN DYKE
State Press

Twenty-five students handed in petitions Tuesday in hopes of being placed on the Associated Students of ASU general election ballot March 21-22.

David Cavecche, ASASU elections coordinator, said eight students handed in petitions to become ASASU executive officers.

But Cavecche said the 25 students will not become official candidates until signatures on the petitions are verified and their grade point averages approved.

Official candidates will be announced at a meeting today at 3 p.m.

The following students have handed in petitions for ASASU executive offices:

President: liberal arts majors Mark Escobedo, Paul Larson and Sal Rivera.

Executive Vice President: public programs major Mike Pressendo and business major Marco Spagnuolo.

Campus Affairs Vice President: liberal arts major Tami Willingham.

Activities Vice President: business major Charles "Spike" Lawrence and public programs major J'Lein Liese.

The following students handed in petitions for ASASU senate positions:

College of Engineering and Applied Sciences: Jack A. Albert and James Patrick Shirley.

College of Law: Cindee Badalamente and Michael Lane.

College of Education: Anne Emily Borchardt.

College of Public Programs: Greg Champion and Mary Moran.

College of Liberal Arts: Carlos Galindo-Elvira, J. A. Papic, Chris Stiles and Gloria Ruiz.

College of Business: Richard Joachim and Mike Croatti.

College of Architecture: Andy McGuire, Scott Grubb and Greg Smith.

College of Fine Arts: Stacey Vogel.

The 25 petitions handed in Tuesday before the deadline equaled only half of the number expected to respond.

Cavecche said Monday he expected about 50 students to submit petitions.

Reasons suggested by ASASU officials for the lower turnout of participants in this election than the previous two years vary.

ASASU President John Fees said he believes the lack of a campaign spending limit has discouraged students from running for office.

Todd Martensen, ASASU activities vice president, said ASASU officers who are backing their staffs and securing voting blocs have discouraged other students from running.

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies and slightly cooler temperatures, with a high near 80. The overnight low should be around 55.

North trial halted over confusion of secret classified documents

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver North's Iran-Contra trial ground to a halt and was thrown into confusion Tuesday by documents introduced in court as classified but made available in uncensored versions to a private activist group.

North's lawyer Brendan Sullivan asked the judge to throw out all 12 criminal charges in the case, asserting prosecutors were guilty of "a fraud on the defense."

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell said he was "not trying to look for sanctions" against anyone but was concerned about "getting to the bottom of what's going on" regarding the use of classified information at the trial.

"My concern is whether this presents an example of looseness in governmental dealings with this problem of classified information," the judge said during a lengthy afternoon hearing. He wondered aloud whether all the pretrial work on rules for handling such information would have to be done over.

The stumbling block was the discovery that 10 memos introduced in the trial with names and other information blacked out had long ago been turned over, uncensored, to the Christie Institute as part of a lawsuit filed by the group, which is strongly opposed to administration policy in Central America.

Daley political legacy lives on in Chicago as mayoral race starts

CHICAGO (AP) — Richard M. Daley, son of the legendary boss of Chicago politics, defeated Mayor Eugene Sawyer in a Democratic primary Tuesday and took a giant step toward the City Hall office his father held for 21 years.

Daley jumped into a commanding lead in early returns from predominantly white wards on the city's Southwest and Northeast Sides. Although Sawyer, the city's second black mayor, ran up impressive margins in his own South and West Side strongholds, he was hampered by a lower turnout among blacks than whites.

With 63 percent of the city's 2,911 precincts reporting, Daley had 359,298 votes, or 64 percent, to Sawyer's 195,410 votes, or 35 percent. Three other candidates divided the remaining votes.

Human rights group accuses Iraq of torturing children

LONDON (AP) — Amnesty International on Tuesday accused Iraq of torturing children — including some infants — to extract information or executing them to punish their parents.

In a 33-page report titled "Children: Innocent Victims of Political Repression," the international human rights group said children held by Iraqi authorities are routinely tortured by beatings, whippings, sexual abuse and electric shock.

It said the aim is often to "force them to reveal information about their relatives. . . . In sum, children and young people have become the innocent victims of a policy of political repression."

"Opponents and critics of the government have frequently had to pay a price for their activities in terms of the welfare — and sometimes the lives — of their children," it said.

Amnesty appealed to Iraq to stop the reported brutality and said it asked the U. N. Commission for Human Rights, meeting in Geneva, to investigate.

fully implemented.

The bill would allow students unsure of their future an opportunity to find out what jobs are available, Barbarini said.

McCain

"Students could get an understanding of what is out there in the world before entering college," he said.

"Right now, the G.I. Bill is an example of a current service requirement in exchange for tuition. Community and military service are patriotic for our country."

In a USA Today interview McCurdy said there are about four million undergraduates who currently receive some kind of federal financial aid.

Research shows that each year the federal government pays $1.4 billion to $1.6 billion on student loan defaults.

McCurdy said he hopes the bill generates 800,000 participants.

Upon completion of the service the participant would receive the voucher. There are four different levels from which participants can choose.

The first level is $10,000 for a year of civilian duty, or $20,000 for two years; $12,000 for eight years of military reserve; and $24,000 for two years of active military duty with six years of reserve status.

Rocky Roasacker, an intern working for Sen. John McCain, R-Arizona, and a spokesman for the senator, said McCain feels strongly about the equality and fairness of the bill.

Roasacker said McCain believes it is unfair that those above a certain income level would not have to serve while those below the income level would.

The senator plans to submit his own national service bill to Congress, Roasacker said, adding that McCain has talked to many students who say the community and military aspect is not bad as long as everyone has to serve.

McCain wants the requirement to be universal, Roasacker said. "Everybody who is able physically to serve should serve," he said.

If a program were set up as outlined in the bill, it would mean giving up, at least temporarily, the chances for higher income and a delay for the participant to enter a college and the work force.

Bill Raby, part-time professor at ASU's School of Accounting, led a discussion workshop on the bill earlier this month.

"The criticism is that a person would have to delay going to a four-year university until the service is completed," Raby said. "A person choosing the military service, would be delayed two years entering the job market."

Critics of the bill say that high-school graduates from low-income families will be less likely to attend college if they have to fulfill a service requirement for federal student aid.

They contend that requiring a prerequisite for federal financial aid would leave millions of students without any other choice for aid.

Another issue raised is whether community services could handle the training and supervising of new volunteers.

The bill states that if a student cannot be placed in a community service job, they could be exempt and apply for financial aid without serving.

Mecham cancels planned Chicago speech to Populist Party

PHOENIX (AP) — Former Arizona Gov. Evan Mecham says he cancelled a planned speech to a controversial group in Chicago that wanted to have him on the same platform as former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke because it threatened to turn into a "media circus."

Mecham had angered state Republican leaders last week when he announced plans to deliver a keynote speech Saturday to the Populist Party of America's annual convention in Chicago.

The party also invited Duke, who was elected to the Louisiana legislature as a Republican despite opposition from President Bush, former president Ronald Reagan and other party leaders.

"I regret any inconvenience this may cause (the Populist Party) but feel it is necessary to avoid what appears to be building as a media circus that would overshadow the positive message I had planned to give," Mecham said in a written statement Tuesday.

"Originally I accepted the invitation to speak on a normal fee arrangement and did not anticipate drawing more than a passing interest outside the organization itself," he added. "The finger pointing by various groups whose questions, charges and innuendoes were magnified and massaged by ever aggressive units of the public news media have eliminated the hope I had of delivering a message on the need to restore traditional family moral values."

Mecham also denied speculation that he might want to run for president on the Populist Party ticket in 1992, saying he was "a life-long Republican."

"If I decide to seek office again it will assuredly be as a Republican," he added.

Mecham, elected in 1986 as a maverick Republican on his fifth try for governor, was impeached and ousted last year by the GOP-controlled legislature and has been seeking a legislative appropriation to pay expenses incurred in a recall campaign that was aborted by the impeachment.

Teachers learn by teaching classes, not taking them

Ed Schubert
Columnist

"We're better off not doing the job of teacher preparation at all than doing it improperly."

— Student Regent Patrick McWhortor

One statistic must give pause to anyone who asks how aspiring teachers are best prepared for the classroom:

Of all beginning teachers who will graduate this spring from education colleges across the nation, less than 50 percent will still be teaching two years down the road.

Given this terrible attrition rate, is there anything a teacher preparation program can do to take a college student and, in the course of two or three years, transform him or her into an effective elementary or high school teacher?

As one who has been through ASU's teacher preparation program and who is currently a first year teacher, my answer is: not really.

Here's why.

If you're in the teacher preparation program, you'll find that the education college will tell you much about, say, Jean Piaget's research into the stages of cognitive development, and you will leave knowing that kids think and perceive reality much differently than adults.

But at the same time, the University will do something very subversive to your knowledge. Believe it or not, during the several years you spend here, you are being conditioned to think like a college student.

And because most of the people you deal with are college students, you are being conditioned to think that everybody thinks like a college student.

And when you get your first teaching job, you may make the same mistake I made. I looked out over a roomful of bright, eager eighth graders and assumed I was looking at a roomful of miniature college students.

Worse, I acted on that assumption. I knew better, but my conditioning had undermined my training.

The bottom line is: you learn to teach by teaching. To expect an education college to teach students to become teachers is to expect the logically impossible. Apart from field experience, the best a teacher preparation program can do is give an individual a sound background in basic pedagogy.

Unfortunately, as another recent education college graduate has observed, education classes are "generally mired down in esoteric fluff and theoretical diatribe."

Fluff is not what education students need nor is it what the school districts that will interview them are looking for, but it is all too often what they get.

Starting teachers need basic stuff: essential elements of instruction, assertive discipline, knowledge of important court cases involving school law, basic educational psychology — that sort of thing. This is the knowledge that principals look for when they interview prospective teachers.

Unfortunately, this material gets deadly boring very quickly for those who have to teach it semester after semester. Education professors are understandably tempted to drift away from the basics; they don't want to become intellectually stagnant. That's necessary and healthy; up to a point.

But if they drift too far, their students are shortchanged. If they drift far enough, they will eventually come to believe they can transform their students into teachers by lecturing at them.

To be effective, the college of education must divest itself of the notion that it can produce a master teacher in a year or two. Instead, it should concentrate on the more realistic and attainable goal of giving their students the skills and knowledge that school districts expect of a beginning teacher. In a word, to become consumer-oriented.

But to accomplish this, the college needs a change of metaphor. The metaphor that prevails now holds that education is a mountain, and the college is a fairy castle on the summit — the peak of accomplishment in the field of education. Elementary and high school teachers, laboring underpaid and under-recognized on the mountain's lower slopes, may seem small and inconsequential from these heights.

The metaphor that ought to prevail would see that education is a battlefield with the classroom teachers on the front lines and the education college comfortably in the rear. The primary function of any education college is to support the teachers and school districts.

This is a humbling proposition; it implies that the lowly, underpaid classroom teacher is more important in the scheme of things than a professor of education — or even a dean, who can spend $60,000 to $80,000 to redecorate her office.

But that's the way it really is. If every education college in the country were to be vaporized tonight, the schools would open as usual tomorrow morning.

In the grand scheme of things, education colleges are expendable.

Teachers aren't.

'One human life' not worth gun control

Editor:

Mike Ritter's cartoon of Feb. 16 depicts a crew-cut, beer-bellied slob with "NRA" tattooed on his arm. This libelous name-calling only undermines his anti-gun position. The NRA's job is easier when people see that its 3 millions members are a responsible cross section of their friends and neighbors, not the fire-breathing Bubbah Joe Rambo caricature of the media. Even more ludicrous is Ritter's cartoon of Feb. 14 in which he as much as stated that anyone who believes in the Second Amendment should be locked in an insane asylum.

But I suppose Ritter in his naivete can be forgiven for his sophomoric scribbles. Prof. Roger Axford on the other hand, most emphatically cannot. On television a few days ago, Axford debated Joe Foss, who is not only the president of the the NRA but also a Medal-of-Honor-winning fighter pilot and the former governor of South Dakota. In Axford's letter to the editor of Feb. 21, however, Foss is dismissed as a "real Phoenix cowboy type." It is only because of cowboy types who put their lives on the line that men like Axford — safe at home — never had to learn German.

Unfortunately, Ritter and Axford seem to have fallen victim to the emotional appeal that runs along the lines of: "If it saves just one human life, isn't it worth doing?" No, it usually isn't. Irrational, quasi-utilitarian calculations of this type are useless. Public policy affecting millions of people cannot be held hostage to the actions of a few deranged madmen.

The proper function of the legal system in this battle is to punish in the most severe fashion possible those who knowingly misuse firearms, and to keep head-cases like the Stockton killer in mental treatment where they belong.

Shredding the Bill of Rights is unacceptable and would be completely ineffective.

U.S. offers freedoms not found in Moslem nations

Editor:

In regards to the letter to the editor submitted by Ms. Samaria Jones; Ms. Jones you have overreacted to Mike Ritter's insertion of the Koran into his Feb. 21 cartoon. In the cartoon, the Koran is used as a mere vehicle to express the undignified and sadistic behavior once again displayed by the Ayatollah Khomeini when he publicly put a price on Salman Rushdie's head for writing the "Satanic Verses."

You, Ms. Jones, neglected to acknowledge this point in your letter. However, you were able to point out faults within the Bible and also within our own nation, faults which you said were nonexistent in Moslem countries. I will be the first to admit our nation has many problems. All countries and governments have their shortcomings. That is why I would seriously have to question your proclamation that, "Moslem countries have virtually no crime rate, no rape, no child molestation, no prostitution, or drug use and no homosexuality." Moslem countries such as Iran, however, have internal conflicts, wars and substantially less freedom than the United States.

Freedom of speech would be one example.

Financial aid

Bill pending in House deserves student support

By PATRICK McWHORTOR

(Patrick McWhortor is a political science graduate student and the student representative to the Arizona Board of Regents.)

I have become very concerned about a trend developing in our universities.

Over my eight months as Student Regent, I have heard some disturbing stories about people who could not attend our universities because they did not have enough money. Others are struggling through, but because they have to work 40 hours a week to make ends meet, their grades suffer thus requiring six years for them to get a four-year degree. For still others, once they graduate, they must find a job paying no less than $40,000 per year because they have wracked up that much in debt.

If you are one of these students, I want to make you an offer. My offer is that you become a member of a new team that can solve these problems. The team's goal is to pass a law creating a new source of financial aid.

The Arizona Financial Aid Trust is a proposal facing legislators in the House Education Committee at 9 a.m. today. This plan would require full-time students to pay $6 per semester (part-time students and summer session students would pay $3 for the fund). In return, the Legislature would appropriate an identical matching amount, which would be just over $1 million this year.

Half of this money would be used to provide financial aid in the form of grants — not loans or work study — for students who have unique financial needs and who have not been able to qualify for federal aid under its restrictive formula. The other half of this money would be placed in a trust fund, which would be invested to start earning interest. This student/appropriation match would take place annually, meaning that the trust fund would increase by a growing amount in the coming years.

Some of you may be questioning the strategy of asking students to pay more money for financial aid when they already can't afford tuition at its current level. Let me respond to that concern.

First, the $6 per semester contribution is not tuition. It will not be used for any general university operation. That contribution will be directly deposited in the trust fund account.

Secondly, if you cannot afford to pay your registration fees today, that probably means you are not receiving any financial aid or at least not enough. But by creating this fund, you will have a much better chance of receiving assistance. In other words, if you believe that you cannot afford the extra $6 per semester this plan requires, you have a good chance of getting it back, plus some.

Why I am asking you to join the team? Because it is imperative that legislators learn some facts about Arizona university students. And if you are one of the people I described above, you are just the person who can educate the legislators.

We need you to describe to legislators how you applied for financial aid and were told that your contribution or your parent's contribution to your education was so great that you didn't need any assistance. And yet, you are not receiving that amount from your parents — for various legitimate reasons — or it is ludicrous to believe that you can contribute as much as the federal government says you should. Arizona legislators need to hear your story.

Arizona legislators must hear the statistics about how far behind most other states Arizona is in providing assistance to college students. At a time when the emphasis of federal aid has been shifted to work study and loans and has been cut back in real terms, states are increasingly expected to make up the difference. Arizona must take steps to do that. And you — the student who lives the life behind the statistics — must be the one to deliver that message.

Finally, I ask you to think about your future. Many of you already have children, or plan to someday, or you have younger brothers and sisters who will hopefully one day attend the University. Will they be able to afford it? Without creation of the Financial Aid Trust, they may not. But if the Legislature takes this step today, in 20 years we could be drawing $8 to $9 million a year off a $120 million fund. Wouldn't you be thankful today if someone had the foresight 20 years ago to create such a fund for your education.

The Arizona Board of Regents and the Arizona Students Association are working very hard to convince the Legislature to pass House Bill 2144. And President Nelson and his colleagues at the other two universities have identified this as one of the highest priorities for the state universities. We have built a team of supporters, including legislators, who want to see the Trust Fund created in 1989. The only person who still needs to join the team is the most important one — you.

I ask you to join the team today and make a difference in your own life and others'. Travel to the Capitol this morning if you can, or at least write a letter to your legislator explaining your story and why the Trust Fund will help you. If the bill passes this morning, we will not be through; it still must pass through several other stages to become law. Your help is still critical.

Sign up for the team today by contacting Associated Students of ASU. With your help, our team can win.

Teachers learn by teaching classes, not taking them

Ed Schubert
Columnist

"We're better off not doing the job of teacher preparation at all than doing it improperly."

— Student Regent Patrick McWhortor

One statistic must give pause to anyone who asks how aspiring teachers are best prepared for the classroom:

Of all beginning teachers who will graduate this spring from education colleges across the nation, less than 50 percent will still be teaching two years down the road.

Given this terrible attrition rate, is there anything a teacher preparation program can do to take a college student and, in the course of two or three years, transform him or her into an effective elementary or high school teacher?

As one who has been through ASU's teacher preparation program and who is currently a first year teacher, my answer is: not really.

Here's why.

If you're in the teacher preparation program, you'll find that the education college will tell you much about, say, Jean Piaget's research into the stages of cognitive development, and you will leave knowing that kids think and perceive reality much differently than adults.

But at the same time, the University will do something very subversive to your knowledge. Believe it or not, during the several years you spend here, you are being conditioned to think like a college student.

And because most of the people you deal with are college students, you are being conditioned to think that everybody thinks like a college student.

And when you get your first teaching job, you may make the same mistake I made. I looked out over a roomful of bright, eager eighth graders and assumed I was looking at a roomful of miniature college students. Worse, I acted on that assumption.

I knew better, but my conditioning had undermined my training.

The bottom line is: you learn to teach by teaching. To expect an education college to teach students to become teachers is to expect the logically impossible. Apart from field experience, the best a teacher preparation program can do is give an individual a sound background in basic pedagogy.

Unfortunately, as another recent education college graduate has observed, education classes are "generally mired down in esoteric fluff and theoretical diatribe."

Fluff is not what education students need nor is it what the school districts that will interview them are looking for, but it is all too often what they get.

Starting teachers need basic stuff: essential elements of instruction, assertive discipline, knowledge of important court cases involving school law, basic educational psychology — that sort of thing. This is the knowledge that principals look for when they interview prospective teachers.

Unfortunately, this material gets deadly boring very quickly for those who have to teach it semester after semester. Education professors are understandably tempted to drift away from the basics; they don't want to become intellectually stagnant. That's necessary and healthy; up to a point.

But if they drift too far, their students are shortchanged. If they drift far enough, they will eventually come to believe they can transform their students into teachers by lecturing at them.

To be effective, the college of education must divest itself of the notion that it can produce a master teacher in a year or two. Instead, it should concentrate on the more realistic and attainable goal of giving their students the skills and knowledge that school districts expect of a beginning teacher. In a word, to become consumer-oriented.

But to accomplish this, the college needs a change of metaphor. The metaphor that prevails now holds that education is a mountain, and the college is a fairy castle on the summit — the peak of accomplishment in the field of education. Elementary and high school teachers, laboring underpaid and under-recognized on the mountain's lower slopes, may seem small and inconsequential from these heights.

The metaphor that ought to prevail would see that education is a battlefield with the classroom teachers on the front lines and the education college comfortably in the rear. The primary function of any education college is to support the teachers and school districts.

This is a humbling proposition; it implies that the lowly, underpaid classroom teacher is more important in the scheme of things than a professor of education — or even a dean, who can spend $60,000 to $80,000 to redecorate her office.

But that's the way it really is.

If every education college in the country were to be vaporized tonight, the schools would open as usual tomorrow morning.

In the grand scheme of things, education colleges are expendable.

Teachers aren't.

'One human life' not worth gun control

Editor:

Mike Ritter's cartoon of Feb. 16 depicts a crew-cut, beer-bellied slob with "NRA" tattooed on his arm. This libelous name-calling only undermines his anti-gun position. The NRA's job is easier when people see that its 3 millions members are a responsible cross section of their friends and neighbors, not the fire-breathing Bubbah Joe Rambo caricature of the media. Even more ludicrous is Ritter's column of Feb. 14 in which he as much as stated that anyone who believes in the Second Amendment should be locked in an insane asylum.

But I suppose Ritter in his naivete can be forgiven for his sophomoric scribbles. Prof. Roger Axford on the other hand, most emphatically cannot. On television a few days ago, Axford debated Joe Foss, who is not only the president of the the NRA but also a Medal-of-Honor-winning fighter pilot and the former governor of South Dakota. In Axford's letter to the editor of Feb. 21, however, Foss is dismissed as a "real Phoenix cowboy type." It is only because of cowboy types who put their lives on the line that men like Axford — safe at home — never had to learn German.

Unfortunately, Ritter and Axford seem to have fallen victim to the emotional appeal that runs along the lines of: "If it saves just one human life, isn't it worth doing?" No, it usually isn't. Irrational, quasi-utilitarian calculations of this type are useless. Public policy affecting millions of people cannot be held hostage to the actions of a few deranged madmen.

The proper function of the legal system in this battle is to punish in the most severe fashion possible those who knowingly misuse firearms, and to keep head-cases like the Stockton killer in mental treatment where they belong.

Shredding the Bill of Rights is unacceptable and would be completely ineffective.

U.S. offers freedoms not found in Moslem nations

Editor:

In regards to the letter to the editor submitted by Ms. Samaria Jones; Ms. Jones you have overreacted to Mike Ritter's insertion of the Koran into his Feb. 21 cartoon. In the cartoon, the Koran is used as a mere vehicle to express the undignified and sadistic behavior once again displayed by the Ayatollah Khomeini when he publicly put a price on Salman Rushdie's head for writing the "Satanic Verses."

You, Ms. Jones, neglected to acknowledge this point in your letter. However, you were able to point out faults within the Bible and also within our own nation, faults which you said were nonexistent in Moslem countries. I will be the first to admit our nation has many problems. All countries and governments have their shortcomings. That is why I would seriously have to question your proclamation that, "Moslem countries have virtually no crime rate, no rape, no child molestation, no prostitution, or drug use and no homosexuality." Moslem countries such as Iran, however, have internal conflicts, wars and substantially less freedom than the United States.

Freedom of speech would be one example.

Financial aid

Bill pending in House deserves student support

By PATRICK McWHORTOR

(Patrick McWhortor is a political science graduate student and the student representative to the Arizona Board of Regents.)

I have become very concerned about a trend developing in our universities.

Over my eight months as Student Regent, I have heard some disturbing stories about people who could not attend our universities because they did not have enough money. Others are struggling through, but because they have to work 40 hours a week to make ends meet, their grades suffer thus requiring six years for them to get a four-year degree. For still others, once they graduate, they must find a job paying no less than $40,000 per year because they have wracked up that much in debt.

If you are one of these students, I want to make you an offer. My offer is that you become a member of a new team that can solve these problems. The team's goal is to pass a law creating a new source of financial aid.

The Arizona Financial Aid Trust is a proposal facing legislators in the House Education Committee at 9 a.m. today. This plan would require full-time students to pay $6 per semester (part-time students and summer session students would pay $3 for the fund). In return, the Legislature would appropriate an identical matching amount, which would be just over $1 million this year.

Half of this money would be used to provide financial aid in the form of grants — not loans or work study — for students who have unique financial needs and who have not been able to qualify for federal aid under its restrictive formula. The other half of this money would be placed in a trust fund, which would be invested to start earning interest. This student/appropriation match would take place annually, meaning that the trust fund would increase by a growing amount in the coming years.

Some of you may be questioning the strategy of asking students to pay more money for financial aid when they already can't afford tuition at its current level. Let me respond to that concern.

First, the $6 per semester contribution is not tuition. It will not be used for any general university operation. That contribution will be directly deposited in the trust fund account.

Democrats say Party out of 'vogue'

By ROBIE KAKONGE
State Press

Two members of the National Democratic Party told members of the ASU Young Democrat Club Tuesday afternoon the party has fallen out of "vogue" and called upon the students to join a movement to re-establish and redefine the party's traditions.

Fred DuVal, who chaired Bruce Babbitt's presidential campaign, and Jack Whiteman, a longtime Democratic activist, told approximately 20 students in the MU Navajo Room that young Democrats owe it to their future to regain the White House and to keep the rights and traditions of the party.

"It was a hell of a fight to get things like civil rights and social security and other public services and unless you young people do something, those rights will continue to be swept right off the bench," Whiteman said.

Whiteman, who is president and chairman of the Board of the Empire Machine, said today's younger generation needs to do some "soul searching or the human race will not survive for long."

"Basically, in the overall political process, what it comes down to is, does a party stand for the people or does it stand for property?" Whiteman said. "And unfortunately too many young people are looking for short-term answers and are not concerned with the over all well being of everyone."

DuVal, who is a government relations adviser for a Phoenix law firm and conducted Babbitt's 1988 campaign, said another issue facing the party is the unsuccessful effort to elect a Democrat president in recent elections.

"Unfortunately, there is a lack of visibility of Democrats in high positions and in fact the only Democrat president this college generation has is Jimmy Carter," DuVal said.

DuVal said there is a need for Democrats to become more "credible" by changing their campaign strategies if they want to be elected.

"This is critical," he said. "For too long, Democrats have taken the government's services too seriously, and unfortunately, they (other parties) don't see it the same way we do."

"When we campaign, we do it in detail, we talk about the homeless, race relations, and all the problems related with those things, but we fail to talk about about prosperity and how to get there and this makes us look less credible."

"We need to redefine our strategies if we want the pendulum to swing back."

DuVal said another issue facing the party is internal conflict between blacks and Jews.

"Historically, both groups have been our biggest supporters in terms of votes and finances but if I could sum it

Jack W. Beasley Jr./State Press

Fred DuVal, who conducted Bruce Babbitt's presidential campaign, spoke to the ASU Young Democrats meeting on Tuesday. DuVal said that the split between blacks and jews is hurting the Democratic Party.

up in one word, the problem is 'Farrakhan,'" Duvall said, referring to Black Muslim leader Louis Farrakhan whose alleged anti-Semitic remarks have caused a rift between the black and Jewish communities in some cities.

"Unless both groups start talking to each other, this will continue to be a termoil," DuVal said.

During the meeting, students responded to the speakers with comments and possible solutions to the issues discussed.

Scott Fellows, an ASU history student and a Democrat said: "Having made some observations at ASU, there is no doubt that we have fallen into a self-interest mode."

Department of Commerce offers summer internship

By CAROLYN HOFIG
State Press

A "breakthrough" internship program will, for the first time, offer ASU students a summer position in the Bureau of Export Administration in the U.S. Commerce Department.

The assistantship is in the Bureau's Office of Foreign Availability, which gathers and analyzes information concerning U.S. exports.

"This is a top-level internship," said Gerald Kleinfeld, who heads ASU's Consortium for Atlantic Studies, which is organizing the new internship. "The opportunities for that student are excellent."

"Usually interns at the Department of Commerce get an employment opportunity with the department," said Otto Khera, program coordinator at CAS.

The internship is open to both undergraduate and graduate students majoring in chemistry, engineering, computers, electronics, physics, international relations or international business, Kleinfeld said.

"We may actually have two (interns from ASU), depending on the quality of the students," he said.

Also, applicants must be American citizens because they will need a security clearance, he said.

Students must be nominated to CAS by their department chairs. Deadline for application is March 17.

Kleinfeld said interested students can obtain more information from the CAS office, Moer 137.

"We've been working on this for about a year," Kleinfeld said. "We feel this is an excellent opportunity for ASU students and an excellent opportunity for our University."

He said universities with "traditional involvement with federal agencies" normally fill positions in the U.S. government.

"This represents a breakthrough for ASU as far as establishing contact with a federal agency," he said.

"It's good for them and it's good for us that we have a reputation in Washington of producing good students."

ASU Right to Choose holds rally

By RICHARD VIGIL
State Press

About 200 people gathered on Cady Mall Tuesday for a pro-choice rally sponsored by the ASU chapter of Arizona Right to Choose.

Four speakers, including two ASU professors, encouraged the mostly female crowd to call on their state lawmakers to defeat an anti-abortion bill currently in the Arizona House of Representatives.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Jim Skelly, R-Scottsdale, would make abortions illegal except when the health of the mother is at risk. Gov. Rose Mofford has said she will veto the bill.

Peg Bortner, an ASU associate professor of justice studies, said women, not the government, have the right to choose what is right for them.

"Making abortion illegal will not stop abortion," she said. "We are committed to the fight to preserve the right to choose."

Mary Rothschild, an ASU associate professor of history, said women in this country have been getting abortions since before the revolution, but she added that the first laws outlawing abortion were not enacted until the 1860s.

She said that in Mexico, where abortion is illegal, unsafe abortions are the leading cause of death among women ages 16-34.

She also cited data from a 1950 study by Alfred Kinsey that revealed that 22 percent of married women in the United States had had an abortion and that nine out of 10 premarital pregnancies were terminated by abortion.

"The truth is that women will always have abortions," Rothschild said. "The question is: Will they be safe and legal or unsafe and illegal?"

Pro-choice activist Chiquita Rollins said she has had two legal abortions, but said she would have risked her life to get the abortions even if it had been illegal.

She said although the choice to have an abortion is difficult, women should have the right to choose.

There will be a debate over abortion rights at noon today in the MU Pima Room. Three pro-abortion advocates and three anti-abortion advocates are scheduled to speak.

ASU student hit by garbage truck

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

An ASU student was injured seriously Monday when he was hit by a city-owned garbage truck while riding his bicycle in north Tempe, police said.

Tempe police said Gregory S. Spencer, 23, of the 800 block of East McKellips Road, suffered pelvic injuries and was taken to Scottsdale Memorial Hospital-Osborn.

Spencer, a graduate student in physics, was injured about 3:49 p.m. while he was riding against traffic north on Scottsdale Road at Hancock Avenue. He was hit by a southbound garbage truck that had just made a right turn onto Scottsdale Road from Hancock Avenue, police said.

The driver of the truck, Juan Barrera, 25, was uninjured. Police said the accident still is under investigation and no citations have been issued.

Tempe police also reported the following incidents Tuesday:
•A Phoenix youth was arrested early Tuesday on a charge of carrying a concealed weapon after he was stopped by police in front of a Circle K store at 131 E. Southern Ave.

The 17-year-old was arrested about 2:12 a.m. after undercover officers patrolling the area of the convenience store saw the juvenile turn his car's lights off and drive behind the Valley Fair Shopping Center where he parked and began walking toward the store.

•A 10-year-old Tempe girl allegedly was molested by a babysitter on five different occasions. The incidents occurred between Jan. 6 and Feb. 16 at the girl's home in the 900 block of West 17th Place.

Police have not been able to locate the suspect. ASU police reported the following incidents Tuesday:
•An ASU student was arrested Monday on an ASU police warrant for theft and two counts of assault.

Aaron Keith Stuckey, an 18-year-old freshman, was booked in the Maricopa County Jail in Mesa on $1,370 bond.

police report

ASU police Sgt. Bob Jones said the warrant was issued in connection with a theft from a pizza deliveryman in a parking lot near Palo Verde West residence hall.

•The Police Department's bicycle enforcement unit issued nine citations and 35 warnings Monday. Five bicycles were booted.

Rape charges dropped against ASU student

The Maricopa County attorney's office has refused to charge an ASU student who was accused of sexually assaulting a Scottsdale woman during the weekend, police said.

Tempe police Lt. Steve Graehling, head of the department's sex crimes unit, said the county attorney's office declined to charge Steve Paul Cranston, 22, with sexual assault and kidnapping because the victim lacked credibility and because she willingly participated in sex with Cranston before the alleged incidents.

Police had accused Cranston, a senior communications major, of sexually assaulting the 18-year-old woman he had invited to his apartment after the pair went to a party.

The pair had several drinks at his apartment early Sunday before they had sex, but the woman told investigators Cranston later had sex with her twice against her will, police reported Monday.

Police said Cranston was arrested and booked into Tempe City Jail on two counts of sexual assault and one count of kidnapping after the woman called police. He was later released.

Although the county attorney would not charge Cranston with sexual assault or kidnapping, Graehling said Tuesday that police may file charges of providing alcohol to a person under 21.

'Nasty' cigarette snuffed out

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Consumers didn't like them, so R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. is withdrawing its Premier brand "smokeless" cigarettes after five months of market testing.

The company said Tuesday in a statement that "while smokers are very interested in the concept, the current product has not achieved adequate consumer acceptance."

"The two primary areas that the test showed us we have to work on is taste and the aroma," company spokesman David Fishel said. "All I can say for competitive reasons is that we learned a lot in the test marketing that we will be able to use later on."

R. J. Reynolds had test-marketed Premier in Arizona and eastern Missouri.

"They're terrible. They're nasty. They're beyond nasty," Mark Padgett, an employee at a 7-Eleven store in Phoenix, said shortly after the cigarette hit the market in October.

Premier was advertised as "the cleaner smoke" because, the company said, it substantially reduced certain compounds found in the smoke of tobacco-burning cigarettes and virtually eliminated cigarette ashes and smoke.

Several health organizations, including the American Medical Association, asked the Food and Drug Administration to ban sale of the cigarette. The AMA said Premier was a drug-delivery device, not a cigarette.

The cigarette works by heating instead of burning tobacco. Smokers light a carbon heat source at the cigarette's tip. During inhalation, air is heated by the smoldering carbon and passed over an aluminum-encased flavor capsule.

"We are pleased to see R. J. Reynolds withdrawing Premier from the market," Dr. James H. Sammons, executive vice president of the AMA, said in a statement Tuesday. He said the AMA would continue to pursue its request with the FDA, which has not issued a ruling yet.

"This probably makes that a moot petition," said Bill Grigg, a spokesman for the FDA in Washington. Grigg said FDA lawyers would have to review the situation.

Last year, Reynolds refused a request from the Arizona Board of Pharmacy to voluntarily withdraw the cigarette.

Reynolds said Tuesday that it had no plans to reintroduce Premier or a similar product "unless we have fully addressed the issues raised in the test markets."

Fishel said the company had used small groups to test Premier before moving into the two-state test markets. Asked if the results of the test-marketing differed from the reaction of small groups, Fishel said, "I think that's a safe statement."

Reynolds' major cigarette brands are Winston, Salem, Camel, Vantage, Doral, Century, More, NOW and Ritz.

Court nominees announced

PHOENIX (AP) — A trial judge, a law school professor and a private attorney were nominated Tuesday to fill a vacancy on the mid-level Court of Appeals.

Nominated were Judge Edward Voss of Maricopa County Superior Court, associate professor Bonnie Tucker of Arizona State University's law school and attorney Jefferrson L. Lankford of the Jennings, Strouss and Salmon law firm in Phoenix.

Voss, 45, and Lankford, 37, are Democrats. Tucker, 49 is a registered independent.

The vacancy was created when Democratic Gov. Rose Mofford elevated Court of Appeals Judge Robert Corcoran to the state Supreme Court last month.

State law requires Mofford to pick from among the nominees. Her appointment is not reviewable by the Legislature.

Council members visit China to initiate sister city

By MICHELE McDONALD
State Press

Members of the Tempe City Council will go to mainland China Friday for an eight-day visit to officially make Zhen Jiang Tempe's new sister city.

Zhen Jiang, where the main commodity is silk, has a population of 600,000 and is in the province of Jiangsu. It will be Tempe's fourth sister city and will join the ranks of Skopje, Yugoslavia; Lower Hutt, New Zealand and Regensburg, West Germany.

"It's a very interesting opportunity for all of us," said Councilwoman Carol Smith. "I feel that the sister city program itself is such a wonderful opportunity."

Tempe has exchanged high school students, firefighters, policemen, teachers, bankers, electronics engineers, retail workers and government employees with its sister cities, Smith said.

Smith said Zhen Jiang will present different problems than the other sister cities, but said she is looking forward to the challenge.

"It perhaps will be a little more difficult because our cultures are so different," Smith said. "There is more of a language problem."

Smith said she hopes to exchange dance troupes, choirs or sports teams with Zhen Jiang, and she is taking an audio tape of the Phoenix Boys' Choir to entice the Chinese to invite the choir.

Mayor Harry Mitchell, Council members Don Cassano, Carol Smith, Frank Plencner along with Tempe Sister City office members Bob Peshall and Dick Neuheisel will be the guests of Zhen Jiang.

Once the entourage reaches mainland China, the city of Zhen Jiang will pay all of the group's expenses, except their airfare and any souvenirs, said Smith.

Vice-Mayor Don Cassano said the trip will "formalize our relationship with the sister city," and will "set up the vehicle for communication and exchange of visitors and information."

"China chose the city," Cassano said. "I think they made the selection of this city because of the way the Chinese people feel about the city."

"It's called 'the beautiful city' and the people that live there are called 'the beautiful people.'"

Cassano said he does not think that students immediately will go to Zhen Jiang because of the cultural differences.

However, Zhen Jiang is interested in bringing business and technical experts from Tempe to China.

"Tempe is fortunate in having ASU here," Cassano said. "I know that they (the Chinese) are probably eager for that type of technology and expertise."

Also, the group of city officials will establish contacts for business to decrease Chinese bureaucracy red tape, Cassano said.

Bob Peshall of the Tempe Sister City office said the negotiations to link the two cities have been conducted since 1982 because China is so selective. He said that last summer delegates from Zhen Jiang came to Tempe to discuss the possibility of becoming a sister city.

The Grapevine

BY BILL SYNSTAD

The tanks and barrels a vintner chooses in making his wines have a decided effect on how the finished product will turn out. Through history, winemakers have put wine in skins, in clay amphorae, and in various kinds of barrels. Today we have a choice.

Stainless steel tanks are the first choice for white wines in most cases. The tanks are easier to refrigerate, and they're airtight so that the wine can retain its freshness and fruitiness.

Large redwood tanks are still being used for fermenting some red wines to add complexity of flavor and aroma. The wines actually pick up some elements from the pores in the wood.

Some white wines today are fermented in oak barrels, and both red and white may be aged in wood. Wood tanks serve to soften the tannins in red wines and add a desirable flavor to some whites.

Vintners get different results with different woods. Some Italian reds are aged in chestnut instead of oak for a softer finish.

Vintners ferment the grape carefully and age the wine to perfection -- all for your enjoyment. You'll like the wine selection you find at

Feelings

Band's lyrics convey bittersweet emotions

By MISH TELL
State Press

... You've got my senses on the run/Itching for your touch and aching when you're gone/I feel so restless on my own/But long before I met you, I never knew I was alone/When you're gone it seems so long/Is this the Shape of Things to Come/...

Love and Money's new LP, "Strange Kind of Love" is a revolution in lyrical content.

On an overbearing investigation through the bittersweet triumphs of love and the agony pains of heartbreak, Love and Money seems to find the right words to convey accurate feelings.

But the band geared its talents in this direction for a purpose.

"On the first record, I tended to blurt things out or skirt around them instead of cutting to the heart of the matter," said James Grant, leader of the band.

According to Grant, the new LP is more groove-oriented and the music is more pop-fashionable. And most important, the lyrical content has been highlighted.

"Some people call me depressing," Grant said. "I hope the songs throw you into them and not just wash over (the listener)," he said.

Grant's vision of love is definitely that of both good and bad. Perhaps this is the key to the album's success in relaying these heavy emotions.

"I think that when most people think of love, they think of it as benevolent. The best and worst things come from love," he said.

Love and Money's "Strange Kind of Love," which resembles the sounds of post-modern-punk (somewhat ABC meets Spandau Ballet), is a monotone album whose uplifting tempos somehow even make the depressing songs sound happy.

The record can be considered classy music. Though it's definitely "easy listening," the music will not put the listener to sleep. In many of the songs, the lyrics tend to convey that the vocalist is hurting and in his voice these strange turmoils are reflected.

"Going back (to the song writing) we wanted to spotlight on the lyrics," Grant said. "We thought he worked with good grooves and good guitars."

'That's Italian' restaurant has quality food, prices

By JENNIFER YEE
State Press

When the television commercial says, "That's Italian!" you have to stop and ask yourself, "What does it take to make something REALLY Italian?" The answer to this question can easily be found at a restaurant in Scottsdale named after that famous quote, "That's Italian."

The first thing that hits you when you walk in "That's Italian" is the enticing "Italiany" aroma. The tomato and oregano scent was almost comforting as my friend and I sat ourselves at the table of our choice.

Because it was 7 p.m. on a Friday, this restaurant was at 80 percent capacity. As the evening progressed, the room filled steadily, keeping the two friendly and efficient waitresses busy. The atmosphere was very "family-like," or so it seemed, as one of the employees spoke in Italian to the customers at the table next to us. "Pizanno!" he said to the little girl, who immediately ran and said it to someone else. (Pizanno is Italian for "friend.")

After a quick glance at the menu, we ordered three dishes — Spaghetti with Meat Sauce, the Combo Platter and their Special Calzone.

The Spaghetti and the Combo Platter both included dinner salads, which were served to us immediately. A small bowl of crispy lettuce topped with a single tomato slice and a sweet, creamy Italian dressing was a pleasing start to a satisfying meal.

While anxiously awaiting our entrees, I came across a copy of a magazine, an Italian restaurant industry periodical called "PIZZA & PASTA," that tells of new innovations in the business. Just another clue to prove that this restaurant is genuinely interested in the quality of its menu.

Our three plates were brought up shortly — three rather large plates. The calzone was about the size of a woman's shoe, size six, which when you think about it is pretty big for a calzone. This is not meant to be a negative comparison, because the calzone was nothing short of mmmmmGOOD! The crust was crispy on the outside, soft on the inside and filled with a zesty combination of pepperoni, sausage, mushrooms and meatballs. All this was topped with a tangy meat sauce. At a cost of $4.25, it was by far the monumental event of the meal.

The Combo Platter included stuffed shells, lasagna and manicotti. Served piping hot, this three-dish meal displayed generous amounts of mozzarella cheese on top as well as a flavorful tomato sauce. Filled with ricotta cheese, the Stuffed Shells were the least exciting of the three, which isn't saying they were bad in any way, just that the competition was tough. Besides that, ricotta cheese isn't my favorite. My Italian friend loved it, and therefore, in her opinion, the stuffed shells were great. The Platter was the special of the evening and was offered at $5.45 instead of $6.45. Quite a bargain for so much pasta.

The Spaghetti with Meat Sauce was nothing to tell Mama about. It takes something earth-shattering to get excited over Spaghetti, and this couldn't shatter a glass. The sauce was a tad runny, and there wasn't enough of it. There was a hint of flavor in the meat sauce which indicated that with a little doctoring up, it had the makings of a real treat. Then again, for $4.95, the serving in itself was nothing to complain about.

Our total tab was approximately $15, which included three entrees, salad and a basket of scrumptious garlic bread that oozed butter and garlic. This restaurant is by far one of the best values for your money, and for your palate.

"That's Italian" is true to its name.

That's Italian restaurant, located at 1819 N. Scottsdale Road, serves up delicious Italian food at comparable prices.

'Moonlighting' returns to screen with new shows

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It's just the kind of hopeless case David Addison and Maddie Hayes would take on at the Blue Moon Detective Agency: Find the missing audience for ABC's "Moonlighting."

Once the critics' darling, the show has taken its lumps in recent months and has been overtaken in the ratings by NBC's "In the Heat of the Night." Then came the announcement this past week — ABC is pulling "Moonlighting" off the air until April.

Bruce Willis

"I'm optimistic that we'll do well when we come back, but I have to be," said executive producer Jay Daniel. "Our fans are very vocal and we've been chastised severely."

"When we come back, people will see those old elements that made them love 'Moonlighting.' David and Maddie will be back with an interesting relationship, and we have some stories with some very hot stuff emotionally and sexually. We'll get back to having some surprises."

Daniel said a major reason for taking the show off the air was to catch up with script writing. Otherwise, the show would have gone into reruns, which he said would have been "disastrous." "Moonlighting" made its bow in 1985 as a spring tryout series and wowed the audience with its sexual electricity and daring stories that defied television conventions.

Bruce Willis as David and Cybill Shepherd as Maddie, aided and abetted by creator-producer Glenn Gordon Caron, turned Tuesday night into the sassiest, fastest-paced battle of the sexes since Spencer Tracy sparred with Katherine Hepburn and William Powell and Myrna Loy traded quips.

It was great for a while. The stories were inventive, innovative and provocative. The rapid repartee between the mismatched couple left the audience breathless with laughter. David regularly stopped action to talk to the audience. On occasion, they knocked down the walls and stepped off the set onto the soundstage.

Willis came from nowhere to a stardom that put him in demand for motion pictures. It was a comeback for Shepherd, whose career had taken a nose dive. Not only was she in a hot series, but she proved she could do comedy.

Working conditions on "Moonlighting" were at best chaotic. Caron often didn't have a script completed when filming began on an episode. The show fell behind in production and resorted to reruns so often that the audience first became confused, then alienated.

By then, both the audience and the critics were starting to turn thumbs down on the show. In the first episode of the season Maddie had a miscarriage. Willis played the embryo. This was one bad script the long writers' strike failed to stop.

Caron, who brought a special chaotic genius to the show, is gone. He left after repeated clashes with Shepherd. Daniel said he is in regular contact with Caron, who is now working on feature films.

"Moonlighting" is continuing in production and will return with eight new episodes. Daniel said the working conditions on the set are now harmonious, but said he would not attribute that to Caron's absence.

Improved comedy series connected with producer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If television gave awards for the most improved show of the season, this year's would have to go to NBC's "A Different World" and to producer Debbie Allen.

In its debut season last year, "A Different World" was ballyhooed as a spinoff of "The Cosby Show," and was slotted right behind that hit comedy. It produced huge ratings, frequently landing in first or second place in the Nielsens. Critically, though, it was a big yawn.

The show was a vehicle for Lisa Bonet, one of the "Cosby" kids packed off to college. The show was designed to appeal to younger audiences.

"I was brought in to turn it around," said Allen, who previously helped make "Fame" a hit in syndication. "I was also to help with the morale problem on the set. People were unhappy. It wasn't a company that had a central binding force. One of my main assignments was to make the show about something that was relevant."

The most interesting character on the college campus was Whitley Gilbert, a spoiled debutante played by Jasmine Guy. This season, Whitley got the limelight when Bonet became pregnant and left the show.

Allen said she was sorry that Bonet had to leave and would welcome her back. "I don't think she'll be back," she said. "She's had her baby and is getting used to being a mama."

Allen said she was happy the show had become good enough that the Rev. Jesse Jackson had agreed that morning to appear on the show. His episode is to be taped in March for airing in April.

Allen also has a special on ABC this Sunday and her first album, "Special Look," is due out in April from MCA.

"So many exciting things are happening I'm getting on the Princess Di level," said Allen, who talked in her office at the CBS-MTM Studios where the show is filmed. "Everything I've been working on for a long time is coming to fruition. My real forte is that I've been able to keep up with my own growth pattern. I have been consistently able to keep up with my ambitions, my talents and my abilities."

When she was hired as producer-director of "A Different World" the first thing she did was review the physical look of the show and talk to the writers about the stories.

"I looked at the tape of every show," she said. "I wanted to know what I was getting into. I took notes on everything. Then I came up with my own ideas. I felt the show needed to be upgraded to a more mature level of talking and thinking. We couldn't have a show about young people that didn't deal with the things going on in this country. Teen-age pregnancy, student uprisings, voting and other issues.

"We also added some new students. I wanted Whitley to have a roommate so she would have to share. I also changed the makeup and hairstyles. I wanted the women students to look fresh. They looked too much like starlets in Hollywood. I wanted them to be more like real people."

ASU baseball catches top honor in Six-Pac

By DEAN GYORGY
State Press

After sweeping UCLA for a 3-0 conference start, the ASU baseball team is in sole possession of first place in the Six-Pac.

That slight mathematical edge may come in handy when the Sun Devils (14-5) begin an eight-game, 11-day road trip at Stanford (9-5) this weekend.

This weekend will be the first time the two teams have met since the Cardinal defeated ASU for the National Championship last June.

The Devils continue their spring break trip with single mid-week games at San Jose and Santa Clara, before a second conference series at California.

ASU plays 17 of its next 22 games on the road.

Notes:

•Freshman Mike Kelly was named Six-Pac Player of the Week for his heroic efforts against UCLA. Saturday's game was settled by Kelly with a two-out, three-run homer in the bottom of the 12th inning to give ASU a 10-9 win. And on Sunday, he hit a 10th inning, 390-foot single to bring across the deciding run in the Sun Devils' 4-3 victory. For the week, Kelly hit .381, with two home runs and 10 RBI.

•For the past week, second baseman Kevin Higgins has been bothered by abdominal pain that has now been diagnosed as a parasitic virus. Higgins said he contracted the virus in Taiwan when the team visited there in late December/early January. He will be able to play this weekend, although his practice time has been cut significantly.

•The nationally syndicated television program, This Week In Baseball, is visiting Sun Devil practice this week to interview selected players and coaches. The show is planning to air a segment on college baseball in June, coinciding with the College World Series. ASU and the University of Miami have been chosen to represent and illustrate current trends in college baseball.

The Wrist Watch:

•Catcher Eric Helfand had the cast removed from his wrist on Tuesday and replaced with a brace. Team doctors are pleased with the healing process, and Helfand will begin rehabilitative exercises. No time frame has been set for his return.

•First baseman Steve Willis, out of his cast for a week, took batting practice again on Tuesday with his wrist heavily taped. He is expected to play in a JV game tonight, and depending on his progress this week, could see action against Stanford on the weekend.

ASU freshman Krista Amend defeated fourth-ranked Karen Shin of California Saturday.

Devils swing into indoor matches

By KRISTI HOWELL
State Press

The ASU women's tennis team suffered two Pac-10 losses last weekend against top-ranked Stanford and fourth-ranked California, but hopes for better results when it competes in Madison, Wis.

The seventh-ranked Sun Devils will participate in the USTA/ITCA National Indoor Championship, consisting of teams ranked in the top 16.

"Without question, the best teams in the nation will be there," McInerney said. "It is going to be tough, but it is important for us to go in and win. We need to beat a team ranked ahead of us."

ASU will begin competition at 8 a.m. Thursday against 11th-ranked University of Miami.

"We're looking for a win, but it is going to be a close match," McInerney said. "We beat them last year so we know a little bit about them."

The Hurricanes will enter the match with three players ranked in the nation's top 50, but ASU has the advantage of a 5-4 win against Miami last year in the first round of the NCAA Championship.

"We match up well with Miami," McInerney said. "They've got a tough lineup and a veteran squad. Last year's match was a big win for us. I think it will be another quality contest."

After Miami, ASU will face either California or Georgia on Friday.

Although the Sun Devils do not usually play indoor tennis, McInerney said she believes that they can handle the change because it is easier to go from outdoors to indoors.

Last Friday, ASU played host to Stanford, the three-time defending NCAA Champion, and were shut out for the first time since 1987.

"We were blown out by Stanford — they were pretty tough," ASU coach Shiela McInerney said. "We played so-so. We are 7-4, not quite there, but we've beaten three teams in the top 20 and lost close ones to UCLA, USC, and California."

Stanford captured eight of its nine wins in straight sets and handed the Sun Devils their third successive conference defeat this season.

On Saturday, California defeated ASU 6-3 leaving the women's team with an overall record of 7-4 and 0-4 in the Pac-10 record.

ASU's No. 1 player, Krista Amend, who is ranked 30th in the nation took on 4th-ranked and three-time All-American Karen Shin of California. Amend emerged victorious with a 7-6, 6-3 win.

"Krista is handling the top singles spot with tremendous poise," McInerney said. "She's such a thorough competitor. She will fight for every point and will never quit."

In the No. 6 match, Sun Devil Paola Conte contributed the other singles win, defeating California's Sharon Fletcher 0-6, 6-4, 6-4.

Jill Hamilton and Luann Klimchok scored the only ASU win in doubles competition.

ASU returns to Pac-10 play March 11 at Stanford and March 12 at California.

"It is real important to come back with some victories," McInerney said. "We've got a real tough stretch."

Despite ASU's losses, McInerney said she believes her team is playing solid tennis.

"People must remember that we're a very young team," she said. "I think it's a tribute to our players that we're ranked seventh in the country."

Injury-stricken track squad heads into first meet

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

Injuries have hurdled themselves upon the track and field team as it heads into its first home meet at 1 p.m. Saturday against Texas Tech and UC-Irvine.

"Almost the whole team has had some sort of flu bug in the last couple of weeks," said ASU head coach Tom Jones. "We're hurting in terms of number and depth because we weren't able to recruit this year."

The coach attributed the sicknesses to the change in weather.

"The body starts adjusting to temperature," he said. "With weather changes, people get sick."

But Jones, who took over the probation-stricken program last year after former coach Clyde Duncan was ousted, said he will not let these obstacles get him or his team down.

"We will do the best we can to get through the season," he said. "I have a pragmatic point of view — I'm looking to the future. I can't expect a whole heck of a lot right now."

Even though the team is small in number, Jones said the meet this weekend will be close.

"Texas Tech is a very sprint- and field-oriented team in both men's and women's," the coach said. "UCI is more of a distance-oriented team both men's and women's."

The Sun Devils' list of redshirts, injuries and sicknesses is long and will deplete the squad, Jones said.

ASU will be without four competitors who are redshirting this season: heptathlete Gea Johnson, sprinter Maicel Malone, sprinter Robert Rucker and shotputter Shane Collins.

Saturday, Jones said there will not be any horizontal jumpers representing ASU.

Seniors Jacinta Bartholomew and Andrew Wood are suffering from "jumper's knee," or tendonitis, and will only compete in the sprint events.

Junior Matt Zuber will be the only possibility in the jumping events.

Sophomore Todd Lewis will not compete in the steeplechase because of a low-grade virus.

Junior Lynda Tolbert strained her hamstring, and Jones said he will have to find out how she feels Saturday to determine if she will participate in the hurdles.

Senior Lennon Gardner suffered a stress fracture and will not compete in the heptathlon.

Despite the injuries and sickness, Jones said he is confident about the women's team.

"The women's program is fairly balanced except for field events," he said. "The women have a chance to be competitive."

Distance runners Laura LeMena, Teresa Barrios and Amy Komitzky will turn in good performances, Jones said.

On the men's side, Ed Lovelace, Sean Greene and Darrin Viner will be strong contenders in the 100-meter, 200-meter, 400-meter and 800-meter.

"But the men are in trouble," Jones said.

The head coach learned last week that his former track team at University of Texas-El Paso captured the indoor championship. Jones, who nurtured the team through a probation, left in September after four years at the helm.

"I feel I had a big part (in the championship)," he said.

Jones said this will give him confidence as he

De Hoff optimistic about ending year on winning note

By KYLE D. ENG
State Press

Carolyn DeHoff is an optimistic person. The ASU junior guard is hoping the ASU women's basketball team will win its last four games, which would close out the Devils' season on a winning note.

"I think we owe it to our fans, our coaches and ourselves to win at least our next three games," DeHoff said. "No, why settle for that we should win our next four games."

DeHoff, a native of Cheyenne, Wyoming, is averaging 9.6 points and 6.7 rebounds a game this season, but said she hopes to do more.

"I've got to do more scoring from the outside," DeHoff said. "I need to take the pressure off down low."

Although DeHoff is one of three juniors who starts on this year's squad, she doesn't see herself as the leader.

"I let my play do the leading," DeHoff said. "I guess you could call my style of play as scrappy."

"I like diving for those loose balls, or making those steals. It gets me pumped up, and ready to play even harder. That gut-wrenching style of play fits me best."

On Friday the Devils will play host to California at 7:30 p.m. in the University Activity Center.

Last Friday ASU lost its second game to rival Arizona this season in a battle to stay out of last place in the Pac-10.

The Devils dropped an 87-74 decision to the Wildcats in front of a UAC crowd of 895.

ASU (9-15, 3-11 Pac-10) held Arizona (9-15, 4-10) in check in the first half. The Devils trailed by one with 3:41 left in the half, 29-28.

From that point until halftime, the Devils could only score two points. Arizona, meanwhile, went on to score 15 points in that span and took a 45-30 lead into the locker room.

Jack W. Beasley Jr./State Press

Sun Devil guard Carolyn DeHoff is optimistic that the squad can win its final games of the season.

Hoops

The Devils could not convert their free throws in the first half hitting only one of eight attempts. ASU also missed on three front ends of one-and-one attempts.

"They (the Wildcats) came out and shot well, and we came out and were flat," said ASU assistant coach Debra Stephens. "We turned over the ball too many times."

The second half began with a rejuvenated ASU squad. The Devils went on a 10-2 run in the first 3:33 of the second half and trailed by only five points, 47-42.

But that was as close as ASU would get in the game.

Arizona went on a streak of its own as it outscored ASU 20-8 in the next 5:27. The Wildcats extended the lead to as much as 18 points at one point, and led by double figures until the 4:12 mark when the Devils pulled within eight.

With time running out, ASU reverted to fouling Arizona in hopes the Wildcats would not hit their free throws.

As usual, the Devils were led in scoring by guard Karen O'Connor, who paced the team with a game-high 25 points, boosting the sophomore into 10th place on the ASU career-scoring list with 719 points.

Although the Devils did not win their game on the court, they were treated as heroes after the game. The ASU players were hounded by autograph seekers by the more 500 girl scouts who were in attendance Friday night.

"That was a real downer, losing to Arizona," DeHoff said. "When you lose to Arizona it hurts you in the worst place possible."

But DeHoff said she is not going to let the loss bring her down.

"I don't see how you can let it bother you," DeHoff said. "The way I see it is that we have four games left, and it's time to show ourselves that we can really play out there."

"All we need to do is put together 40 minutes of solid ball to win, and there no reason why we shouldn't be able to put something out."

faces two probationary years at ASU.

"I wouldn't have come here if I didn't think I could do something," he said.

Next year will be even tougher than this year in terms of quality performers, Jones said.

Once the track team emerges from the probation, there will only be about four student-athletes on scholarship. This number is about 20 to 25 during a normal season at most colleges.

Because the team lacks depth this season, Jones said he will be astonished if 1,000 fans come to Sun Angel Stadium Saturday.

"The support is relative to the success they (the fans) anticipate the team having," he said. "They come to see ASU, and if we aren't in the races, then why come?"

Harris expects to fix hoop dilemma

Associated Press — Arizona State athletic director Charles Harris says he intends to have a list of finalists by the end of this week as the Sun Devils move closer to hiring a new men's head basketball coach.

Harris declined to say how many candidates will be on the school's final list, but remained confident that a hiring will be made by the end of March.

"We're right on schedule," Harris said Monday. "I feel we'll be able to do it in the time frame we want."

Arizona State is looking to hire its third head coach since Ned Wulk was fired in 1982 after 25 years. Bob Weinbauer was dismissed in 1985 after three seasons and Steve Patterson resigned under pressure Feb. 4 in the middle of his fourth season.

Second-year assistant Bob Schermerhorn was named interim head coach for the rest of this season as the Sun Devils, currently 12-13 overall, try to avoid their third straight losing record and sixth in the last eight years.

Harris formed a search committee two days after Patterson's resignation and he said the committee will be meeting over the next two days to determine the coaching finalists.

"This is something I'm not going to do by myself," he said. "I'm relying on the help of other people, even though the final decision is up to me."

Harris said he has a "short list" of finalists.

Purdue's Gene Keady and Ohio State's Gary Williams have both been rumored to be the top candidates for the Arizona State job. However, both have denied being contacted or showing interest in the position.

Other possible finalists, according to The Phoenix Gazette, may be Oklahoma's Billy Tubbs, Cal-Santa Barbara's Jerry Pimm, Wichita State's Eddie Fogler, Pittsburgh's Paul Evans, and Pete Gillen of Xavier (Ohio).

The Sun Devils reportedly are also looking at two college assistant coaches — California's Gary Colson and Iowa's Rudy Washington.

Harris said four candidates — Missouri's Norm Stewart, Georgia Tech's Bobby Cremins, Minnesota's Clem Haskins and Kansas State's Lon Kruger — have been eliminated from consideration by the on-campus search committee for undisclosed reasons.

"On the advice of some people we've been talking to, we decided not to pursue those four," Harris said. "It's no secret who's out there for us to talk with. We've got a fair amount of interest in this job."

The STATE PRESS Production Department will make your group's flyer stand out in a crowd.

Howard to pitch fork for graduation

By KRISTI HOWELL
State Press

Next week at the men's Pac-10 basketball tournament, Chad Howard will end his four and a half year reign as Sparky, the ASU mascot.

For the past four football and five basketball seasons, Howard has excited the crowd with his tumbling and push-ups, brought countless smiles to children's faces, and given unending support to the ASU athletic program.

Not only did Howard play the role of Sparky, he made the character of Sparky what it is today. He started the tradition of tumbling and molded Sparky's personality out of his own.

Howard knows the character behind the mask better than anyone and he thinks of Sparky as a real person that is an extension of himself.

"Sparky is definitely a person — he exists just as much as Superman or Batman, as long as we have an imagination," Howard said. "Sparky is part of me, but people see Sparky, not me, and they can't see him unhappy. I have to take on that personality — it intensifies mine."

How would you describe Sparky? Howard said he is fun-loving and energetic.

"His personality is definitely that of continuously making people smile," Howard said. "It also has to have a touch of childishness to be able to look kids square in the eye and without talking, convince them you won't hurt them."

Howard also said Sparky's character has an attitude of "never-say-die."

"I'm always saying never quit — just one more basket every three seconds and you can win or just two more touchdowns," he said. "It helps me remember there is always hope."

Sparky's character has also taught Howard to "always look at life through a smile, for it makes life easier."

Howard said that the best gift of knowledge Sparky has given him is that of experiencing life.

"You meet people of all different ages, especially little kids, and you see the joy in their faces," Howard said. "That's the most satisfying thing. You see no responsibilities or worries and it rubs off."

"It keeps you going, and keeps you smiling because there's always tomorrow."

Howard's four and a half years as Sparky has brought him not only many insights about life, but it has given him numerous exciting experiences that he might not have otherwise enjoyed.

With his mask in place and pitchfork in hand, Howard has traveled practically from one corner of the earth to the other.

He has visited all the Pac-10 and many other universities for games. He has traveled twice to Japan, and has been to Florida for the National Collegiate Cheerleading Championships.

Howard has backflipped in numerous stadiums, marched along the streets of Japan and taken home first-place trophies for racing down ski slopes at the Annual Winter Park Mascot Ski Race.

Of all the unique experiences, Howard said his favorite was at the 1987 Rose Bowl.

"It was at the end of the game after we won and I had the ASU flag in one hand and my pitchfork in the other," he said. "I was standing on the Rose Bowl emblem in the middle of the field waving those things until my arms felt like rubber."

"It was the best, most responsive crowd we've ever had."

Howard, who utilizes his athlete skills into routines, has an amazing rapport with the spectators often bringing them to their feet. But the athletic abilities are secondary, he said.

"My tumbling adds to the character," Howard said. "It makes it more exciting and interesting, but it wouldn't be the same if I didn't like the job. My talents are just the icing on the cake."

Howard's dedication to ASU and the athletic program also add to his ability to motivate the crowd.

"You can't be good unless you want to be there," he said. "I would do everything to help the team win and give them support."

Howard is leaving ASU, but he selected the new Sparky himself and is giving him special training.

"You've got to take it one year at a time. If your not doing the best job possible, giving 100 percent, or having fun, take a hike — it's better for the fans, the school, and the team."

Howard said the hardest thing for him to give up will be being in front of a crowd.

"I'll miss being a part of it all and making people happy," he said. "Very few people get the opportunity to give so many people so much enjoyment."

Howard may not wear the horned mask or act devilish after tonight, but he will always be a Sun Devil.

"As long as I live I will always consider a part of myself as Sparky — he will always be inside of me," Howard said. "When I'm 90 and I come to an ASU game, I want to see part of me in that Sparky on the field."

"Sparky is not retiring, I am. Sparky is forever."
