

Financial aid plan approved by Senate

By RICHARD A. VIGIL
State Press

The Arizona Financial Aid Trust Fund moved one step closer to becoming the first state-sponsored financial aid plan of its kind in the United States Monday when the Arizona Senate approved it 25-4.

The Arizona House of Representatives, which passed the bill 43-16, now must concur on two amendments that were added by the Senate. Brad Golich, executive director of the Arizona Students Association, said he is confident the House will approve the amended version of the bill.

"I don't foresee any problems," Golich said. "There are no changes in the purpose of the bill."

"I can't see 13 people changing their minds."

Under the provisions of the bill, full-time students will be assessed a $6-per semester surcharge and part-time students will pay $3. The funds will be matched by an appropriation from the state, creating a $2 million pool for financial aid.

Half of the funds will be used immediately and the other half will be placed in an endowment fund for future use. The financial aid grants will target minorities and middle-class students who need help paying for school but do not qualify for need-based financial aid.

Golich said overwhelming student support for the measure convinced lawmakers to approve the bill.

"I think that's what made the difference," Golich said. "Students got involved in the process, and not just student leaders."

Golich said students from NAU sent 9,000 postcards to the Legislature and students from UofA and ASU made hundreds of phone calls from phone banks set up at the two universities by ASA.

Student Regent Pat McWhortor said the bill was the most important legislation for students this year.

"I knew all along we could do it," he said. "Even in a difficult budget year, it's time to be bold and create a program that will address the needs for the future."

But Sen. Pete Corpstein, R-Paradise Valley and one of the four senators to oppose the bill, said he did not get a large number of calls in support of the bill.

Corpstein said he voted against the bill because he feels it is irresponsible to begin new programs when there are tight constraints on the state's budget.

"Once you start a program, it stays around forever," Corpstein said, adding that he feels the number of scholarships available to students at the state universities is "staggering."

Sen. James Sossaman, R-Higley, said he voted against the bill because he thinks it will only hurt middle-income students who have to shoulder another tuition increase.

"I want to do everything I can to help the middle-income students," said Sossaman, whose son attends ASU.

Sossaman said he also voted against the bill because of a commitment he made to his constituents not to raise taxes for new programs.

"If I had been the 16th (no) vote, I would have considered it more," he said.

Nelson, Chanen expected to sign new racism plan

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

ASU President J. Russell Nelson and Arizona Board of Regents President Herman Chanen are expected to sign a revised 12-point anti-racism plan today that includes making racial harassment and violence grounds for expulsion under the University's Code of Conduct.

The revised plan to combat racism at ASU came after a four-hour closed-door meeting between members of Students Against Racism at ASU and Vice President for Student Affairs Betty Turner Asher. Both sides were accompanied by attorneys.

"I think (this) says we have met with a public issue in an exceptionally constructive manner," Asher said of the revised plan. "I am impressed with the students."

Tanya Holmes, a spokeswoman for Students Against Racism, said her organization was pleased with the negotiation results.

"It was not a watered-down version (of the plan)," she said. "It was very much what we wanted."

Asher said the revised plan maintains the same principles of the original demands of Students Against Racism but accounts for due process in certain demands and allows certain University organizations to handle points that pertain to them.

She said ASU officials expect to have a complete form of the revised plan by today.

Many of the points in Monday's revision were combined from items in the original 12-point plan because some of the demands related to each other.

Asher said that the revised plan includes:

- A revision of the ASU Code of Conduct that makes racial harassment and violence grounds for expulsion after an incident is investigated completely, and that students involved are guaranteed due process rights.

- The ASU Faculty Senate looking into making an ethnic studies class a requirement for graduation.
- The ASU police chief forming a review body to investigate the alleged misconduct of officers involved in the treatment of two black students who were allegedly attacked by members of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity April 15.
- The University considering the formation of a board that would review and investigate any future incidents.
- Training for ASU police officers in handling racial incidents.
- A review board that includes minorities to screen police officers that the University is considering for employment. •Associated Students of ASU to have a committee to work with the investigation by ASU police and the Office of Student Life.

The University has already begun implementing the 21-point "Action Now" program and its goals of successful minority faculty recruitment, retention and graduation of minority students. Also the revised plan asks for more funds to be made available to minority programs.

Officials said they hope to check the progress of implementing the plan in January 1990. The different points in the demands have different time frames for implementation and completion, the officials said.

ASU allocates funding for police vests

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

ASU officials have allocated $10,050 to purchase 31 bullet-proof vests for the ASU Police Department, officials said Monday.

"They ought to have that protection," Vice President for Business Affairs Victor Zafra said of the University's decision to purchase the equipment.

Acting ASU Police Chief Doug Bartosh had requested the funds for the bullet-proof vests because University police officers say they are facing more weapon-related incidents and because of an increase in violent crime on campus.

An ASU officer has never been shot in the line of duty. ASU is currently the only Pac-10 school that does not provide bullet-proof vests to its police officers.

Law enforcement officials at the other Pac-10 schools have said that bullet-proof vests are as necessary these days as guns for officer protection because campus police officers now face the same types of crime as city police officers, but on a less frequent basis.

The University funds will purchase 31 bullet-proof vests for the police department's 45 uniformed officers. The department currently has six vests, and about half are SWAT-type vests that can't be worn on daily patrol.

Many ASU officers have said they would wear the vests if the University paid for them. Those who currently do not wear bullet-proof vests say they do not because they are too expensive.

Bullet-proof vests cost between $250 to $400 each. The vests are made of Kevlar, a synthetic material, and ceramic. The vests are worn under an officer's uniform.

The vests can prevent serious injury from knives and blunt instruments as well as guns. They are most effective in saving the lives of officers involved in car accidents because they protect vital body organs from serious injury.

The request for money to purchase the vests was criticized by Associated Students of ASU President-elect Paul Larson, who said money should not be spent for them because the University faces a budget crunch. He also said that ASU police have a negative image on campus and that the vests would worsen that image.

WEATHER

Cooler temperatures and a light breeze are expected today with the high expected to reach 80 degrees. Overnight lows should be in the low 60s.

Bush comforts grief-stricken relatives of USS Iowa sailors

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — In a chilly airplane hangar, President Bush choked back tears Monday as he comforted grief-stricken relatives of the 47 sailors killed on the battleship Iowa and offered "the sympathy and appreciation of all the American people."

Greeting relatives one by one, the president wore a nervous smile as he shook hands, moving briskly from person to person waiting along rows of folding-back chairs.

Some of the relatives showed him a picture of their lost ones. "This was our only son, this was our only boy," Bush recalled one couple as saying. Several women stopped him for a comforting hug.

It was an emotional beginning to the president's four-day swing across the country as he nears the 100-day milestone of his administration.

Later, addressing the annual luncheon of The Associated Press, Bush spoke of the loneliness of the office when it comes to dealing with situations like the deaths of U. S. military personnel or the holding of American hostages abroad.

"I vowed, when I came into the presidency, not to talk about the burden of the presidency, the loneliness of the job or the great toughness that nobody understands," Bush said. "I learned that from my immediate predecessor."

But, said Bush, "when you do take that oath of office, you do feel perhaps a disproportionate concern for a fallen sailor or an individual held hostage against his or her will anywhere in the world."

On Air Force One, en route to Chicago, Bush told reporters that the Norfolk ceremony had been one of those difficult moments.

"Tough day down there, it was so moving," Bush said, explaining that his smile had belied the emotions he felt.

Vietnam withdrawal could help improve international relations

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — When it withdraws from Cambodia, Vietnam will be at peace for the first time since its war for independence began half a century ago against the French, Japanese and eventually the Americans.

Reformers now in control hope ending nearly 11 years of occupation will bring better relations with the outside world, including the United States. They believe Vietnam risks economic disaster without expanded trade and assistance from abroad.

Orders for Vietnam's invasion of neighboring Cambodia in December 1978 came from founders of the Communist Party made inflexible by the long struggle. Several have resigned or died since, and the reformers pledge to withdraw the remaining occupation forces by Sept. 30.

Vietnam says 50,000 of its soldiers remain in Cambodia, but foreign intelligence estimates put the number as high as 70,000.

Supreme Court refuses to grant Marcos access to assets

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court on Monday refused to grant deposed Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos and his wife, Imelda, access to most of their alleged vast wealth.

The justices, without comment, rejected the Marcoses appeal to overturn a court order freezing their assets.

Left intact is a ruling that also requires the couple to defend themselves in a lawsuit filed by the Philippine government.

The suit is one of several legal battles — civil and criminal — facing the ailing Marcos, 71, and his wife, 59.

Marcos is being treated in a Honolulu hospital for heart and respiratory ailments. U. S. prosecutors have conceded he is too ill to stand trial on criminal charges but are proceeding with a criminal case against Mrs. Marcos.

A federal grand jury last year indicted the couple and six others on racketeering charges, saying that they looted more than $100 million from the Philippines to buy art and real estate in New York City.

The appeal turned down Monday by the Supreme Court is in a case separate from the criminal charges. It stems from a suit filed by the Philippine government of Corazon Aquino in federal court in California after the Marcoses were exiled to Hawaii in 1986, ending Marcos' 20-year rule.

The Aquino government's suit against the Marcoses and an aide, Ramon Azurin, seeks $50 billion in punitive damages.

Power-plant workers exposed to asbestos for 20 years

Power-plant workers at the Maricopa Medical Center apparently have been exposed to asbestos for 20 years, but health officials told them not to worry and failed to check for the airborne carcinogen, The Arizona Republic reported Sunday.

The newspaper reported in its Sunday editions that four power-plant workers said superiors, including the chairman of the hospital's safety committee, for two years or more have ignored their concerns about the dull tan fireproofing that coats ceilings.

RPTA director bad loser, will take buses and go home

Carolyn Höfig
Columnist

Larry Miller is sure going to show you, Phoenix.

If Maricopa County won't play the mass-transit game his way, well, the director of the Regional Public Transit Authority will just take his buses and go home.

Or he'll at least crop back bus service in the Valley significantly enough that Phoenix feels it.

That's not the official reasoning, of course, but that's what it looks — and feels — like.

Miller saw his agency's $8.4 billion ValTrans proposal overwhelmingly voted down last month.

That must have come as a great shock to Miller, who was so sure the initiative would pass that he didn't bother to set aside any funds for the March 28 election.

Instead, the RPTA simply paid for the campaign with money that had been budgeted for buses. With the proposal's 2-1 defeat, the agency found itself out $1.2 million.

That may prompt a 30 percent cutback in Valley bus service for a year, according to a report from Miller, disclosed in Saturday's Arizona Republic.

The RPTA has appealed to the state Legislature for reimbursement, but, as the Republic article points out, it seems unlikely that lawmakers, facing budget cuts on nearly every front, will approve the funding.

So, there's nothing else for Phoenix to do but resign itself to pay the consequences of Larry Miller's unwise spending.

It's not exactly fair.

But it's not even half of the truth.

"What they (RPTA) want is more money," said Sen. Pete Corpstein, R-Paradise Valley, chairman of the Senate Transportation Committee.

Corpstein cited figures from the national American Public Transit Association that show the RPTA's expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1987, standing at nearly $35 million.

To be exact, $34,750,507.

"If you tell me the RPTA has to cut $1.2 million and that's going to cut back 30 percent of the service, then I'm a go-go dancer," Corpstein said.

Indeed, if RPTA's total outlays this year are the same as in 1987, the costs of the ValTrans election comprise less than 3.5 percent of that sum.

It seems Miller has transposed a zero or two in arriving at his verdict of 30 percent cuts — and he has omitted a couple of pesky fiscal details.

Corpstein said that in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1986, the Legislature gave RPTA $2 million to create a mass-transit plan for the Valley of the Sun.

The agency received another $2 million from state lawmakers in July 1987, and $2 million more in July 1988, all in accordance with Proposition 300, the 1985 transit initiative that approved the building of new freeways in Phoenix and the creation of the RPTA.

In July 1989, the RPTA will receive $1 million from the Legislature, with another $1 million coming in July 1990, Corpstein said.

Additionally, the authority receives about $5 million annually from the half-cent sales-tax increase called for by the 1985 bill, Corpstein said.

And there's always the lottery, which generates about $21 million to $23 million each year for the state "transportation assistance" fund, which provides monies for projects like roads, airports and public transit, according to the senator.

Phoenix mayor Terry Goddard has designated his city's whole share of the lottery profits — some $11 million, Corpstein said — to mass transit.

Read: to the RPTA.

In other words, mass-transit funds have not dried up and blown away — before March 28 or since. Even Miller's overconfidence shouldn't slash RPTA bus service by a third.

The RPTA chief certainly wouldn't be trying to cover his agency's perpetual losses with his cuts, would he?

True, Corpstein's APTA statistics show the transit authority posting a loss of about $7 million in fiscal 1987. But when this fact was summoned by ValTrans opponents before the election, RPTA dismissed it as "to be expected."

After all, the agency was brand new, and the system wasn't complete.

That was the campaign-time rhetoric, anyway. Surely Miller wouldn't be changing his tune now, right?

Actually, that's almost more palatable than the other option — tantamount to corporate pouting.

But it still gives mass transit a sour after-taste to Valley voters.

One wonders if they'll be willing to bite when a new transit plan rolls into town.

Birds of pray

Editor:

In reference to the April 18 front-page picture in the State Press of a lone bird perched atop the Danforth Chapel cross:

Amid the controversy surrounding the proposed removal of the cross it should be noted that, as the photograph clearly demonstrates, if the cross is removed campus birds will have one less perch site.

Removal of the cross will "birden" the delicate ecological system. We urge the Faculty Senate to help protect our wildlife.

Therefore, this additional information — for which the Senate expressed a need — should navigate them in the right direction of keeping the cross. You would be "robin" them of a perch site.

Please "sparrow" the cross!

Editorial on Danforth Chapel cross 'insensitive,' 'audacious'

Editor:

I read your editorial of April 17 ("Cross must come down") with frustration and regret for the audacious manner with which you treated this sensitive issue and your lack of information.

First, you based your whole editorial on comments from Debra Ortiz, a spokeswoman from the Women Aglow Organization — only one of the 23 religious groups in the Campus Interfaith Council.

The majority of us in the Interfaith Council agree with the Faculty Senate proposal to remove the cross to ensure equal representation for all religious groups using the chapel.

Secondly, over the past years (I've been here 13 years), The Campus Interfaith Council has invited a number of religious groups, including the Moslems, to be part of the council. So far they have refused. But the offer is still open and encouraged by us.

By the tenor of your editorial you have collectively bunched all "Christian" groups together. There is never an attempt on your part to distinguish who is for or against the cross and how they were dealing with this issue.

Thirdly, I take exception to your comments about what you think the cross says to people of other faiths: "You're certainly welcome to use this place for your heathen rituals, but just remember who's Boss around here." Another insensitive assumption on your part. Again, if you had bothered to inquire of we who make up the council, you would have found 23 religious groups whose theology, approach and styles differ distinctly from each other.

Yet our purpose as an Interfaith Council are the same.

Finally, "the cross must come down" — of course it must! We did not put it there. But most of us understand taking it down will lend more credibility to the purpose and use of the chapel. We only ask that before you editorialize about an issue, please get your facts straight and be more accurate in your reporting. Shalom.

'News Junkies'

Addicts must learn what to read and what to skip

Jeff Greenfield
Universal Press Syndicate

NEW YORK — You won't see their plight featured on "Oprah" or "Donahue" and it will never make "60 minutes" or "20/20," but there is a disease abroad in this land that afflicts countless numbers of Americans. They are news addicts, and this column's for them.

The extent of this condition may surprise you, given the drumbeat of stories about apathetic Americans who think Nicaragua borders Senegal, and who identify Third World Debt as a salsa band.

But I can testify to the breadth of news addiction. I meet these victims just about everywhere I go. They follow the news the way my childhood friends and I used to follow major league baseball. They know who produces the evening news programs and the details of the anchors' contracts, and they seem to know the names of the more creative hate crews. They follow public policy debates in the print press and watch forums and speeches on C-SPAN.

And they feel utterly overwhelmed by the flood of information that pours out of their TV sets, newspapers and news magazines. "How," they ask, "can you possibly keep up?"

For me, "keeping up" is easy — it's what people like me do for a living. It isn't much of a trick to read half a dozen papers and a few magazines each day if that is an integral part of your job. It's a lot harder if you're coming home from eight or 10 hours in an office or on a factory line.

Since I can't hand out jobs in the news business to all of America's news junkies, I can offer this piece of advice: The best way to absorb genuinely useful information is to know what not to read, what not to watch, what news can almost always be ignored.

For instance, you can save hours of valuable time every

'Are you beginning to get the key to a more peaceful life as a news junkie? If you start to read a story, and you have the unsettling sensation that you have read it all before, you almost certainly have.'

week by simply ignoring every story about the secretary of state's meeting with world leaders. "Baker Wary on Europe Troop Accord" is a story that will pop up a dozen times or more in the next year. It is about absolutely nothing, because nothing that is said, proposed or reacted to in this story will ever result in a significant policy change.

How do I know this? Because this story has been appearing for decades. "Shultz Cautious on Troop Accord," "Haig Guarded on Policy Shifts," "Vance Hesitant on Deployment," "Dulles Mulls Tactical Force Deal" are all stories that have absorbed the time and energy of innocent victims of news addiction. They are not, never have been, and will not ever be about anything at all. Skip them.

Similarly, any report about a White House-congressional budget conference can be ignored with perfect confidence. Tempting as it is to wade through column inches of type about Gramm-Rudman agreements, these stories don't mean anything.

In the latest instance, agreement was apparently reached to keep the 1990 budget deficit under $100 billion. If the 1990 budget deficit in fact dips below $100 billion without massive new revenues, it will happen only if the skies part and a figure with a halo around his head drafts the document. So unless you are one of those poor souls who must show up at a Washington TV studio every week to chew over such materials, forget it.

Are you beginning to get the key to a more peaceful life as a news junkie? If you start to read a story, and you have the unsettling sensation that you have read it all before, you almost certainly have. As Yogi Berra (or one of his PR people) put it, it is deja vu all over again.

So leave the guilt behind. The next time you see a story headline "Democrats Examine Rules Changes," "60s Veterans Recall Times of Turbulence" or "Feds Declare New War on Drugs," turn the page, change the channel, go for a walk, read a book or play with your kids.

Just one thing: Always read the columns on the op-ed page. Some things are just too important to miss.

Animal researchers respond to protests, defend work

WASHINGTON (AP) — Animal rights activists on Monday began a week of demonstrations nationwide against biomedical experiments on laboratory animals. Medical and scientific researchers defended their work as life-saving.

The last week in April traditionally has been a week of activism by groups that oppose the use of animals in research experiments, and "civil disobedience is definitely on the ticket across the country" this week, said Ingrid Newkirk, national director of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.

The groups, who have billed this as "World Laboratory Animal Liberation Week," are calling on the federal government and universities to stop animal experiments and use research money instead on other medical needs, including developing preventive medicine strategies.

"At a time when there are so many human needs, to be playing around with animals in the basements of universities seems not only cruel to the animals, but wasteful of dollars," Newkirk said.

She estimated the federal government spends as much as $6 billion a year on research using animals and said the results of this research could be derived in ways that don't harm or kill animals.

Animal research advocates said other methods, such as computer models, can supplement animal experimentation but will not replace it any time soon.

In defense of animal research, advocates say that most experiments are not painful and that about 90 percent of the animals used in such research are rodents bred specifically for lab experimentation.

Monday's protests focused on the National Institutes of Health in the Washington suburb of Bethesda, Md. Protesters said NIH is the world's largest source of financing for animal experimentation.

Police arrested 50 or so of the 200 demonstrators after they blocked traffic for about 30 minutes. Officers dragged many across the road. Ginger Redmon, who said she had been arrested in two other animal rights protests, said the civil disobedience "shows we have a strong commitment."

Although their ultimate goal is to stop all research experimentation on animals, animal rights activists say that for the immediate future they are seeking an end to the most blatant cruelties, such as amputation of an animal's toe for the purpose of identification.

To defend their research, medical and scientific experimenters are using this week as an opportunity to speak out in support of the use of animals in medical research, pointing to the medical breakthroughs such research has brought — from coronary bypass surgery to cataract removal, from vaccines to antibiotics.

"There's no such thing as anybody not having received some benefit from animal research," said Frankie Trull, president of the Foundation for Biomedical Research, a nonprofit group that supports animal research.

In a letter to President Bush and members of Congress, Dr. David H. Hubel, president of the Society for Neuroscience, called for researchers to "make our case heard by the mass of sensible people in this country."

Hubel said that while he and his fellow researchers "strongly condemn any unnecessary suffering of experimental animals," research on monkeys, cats and other animals in labs has produced many medical advances that have cured diseases and saved lives.

"With tuberculosis, polio, diphtheria and a host of other diseases largely solved, can we risk losing the opportunity to discover cures for heart disease, cancer and AIDS?" Hubel asked in the letter.

Dr. Louis Sullivan, the secretary of the health and human services, said in a speech last week that he would "do everything possible" to ensure the humane treatment of animals in the lab.

"But I will not let the integrity of our public health research efforts be compromised by well-organized efforts" run by animal rights activists, he said.

McWhortor rates his year as student regent a '10'

By TYRONE MEIGHAN
State Press

His student political career is almost over, but Student Regent Pat McWhortor said not to count him out of politics yet.

"I have an interest in serving in an elected office in the future," he said. "But in the future could be in a year or 30 years."

"There is no question I'll work in the public sector. I have a great desire to serve."

McWhortor, 24, whose one-year term as the student member of the Arizona Board of Regents ends in June, also has served as Associated Students' of ASU elections director, ASASU senator from the College of Liberal Arts and as an intern at the State Legislature.

"It's hard to imagine that I'm leaving the life of a student leader," he said.

McWhortor said he feels his year as student regent has been productive in increasing the visibility of the position.

"A lot of students, faculty, staff and even the general public have heard of the student regent position," he said. "That gives the student regent more credibility."

It is important that students know about the student regent position because "that position is there for them," he said.

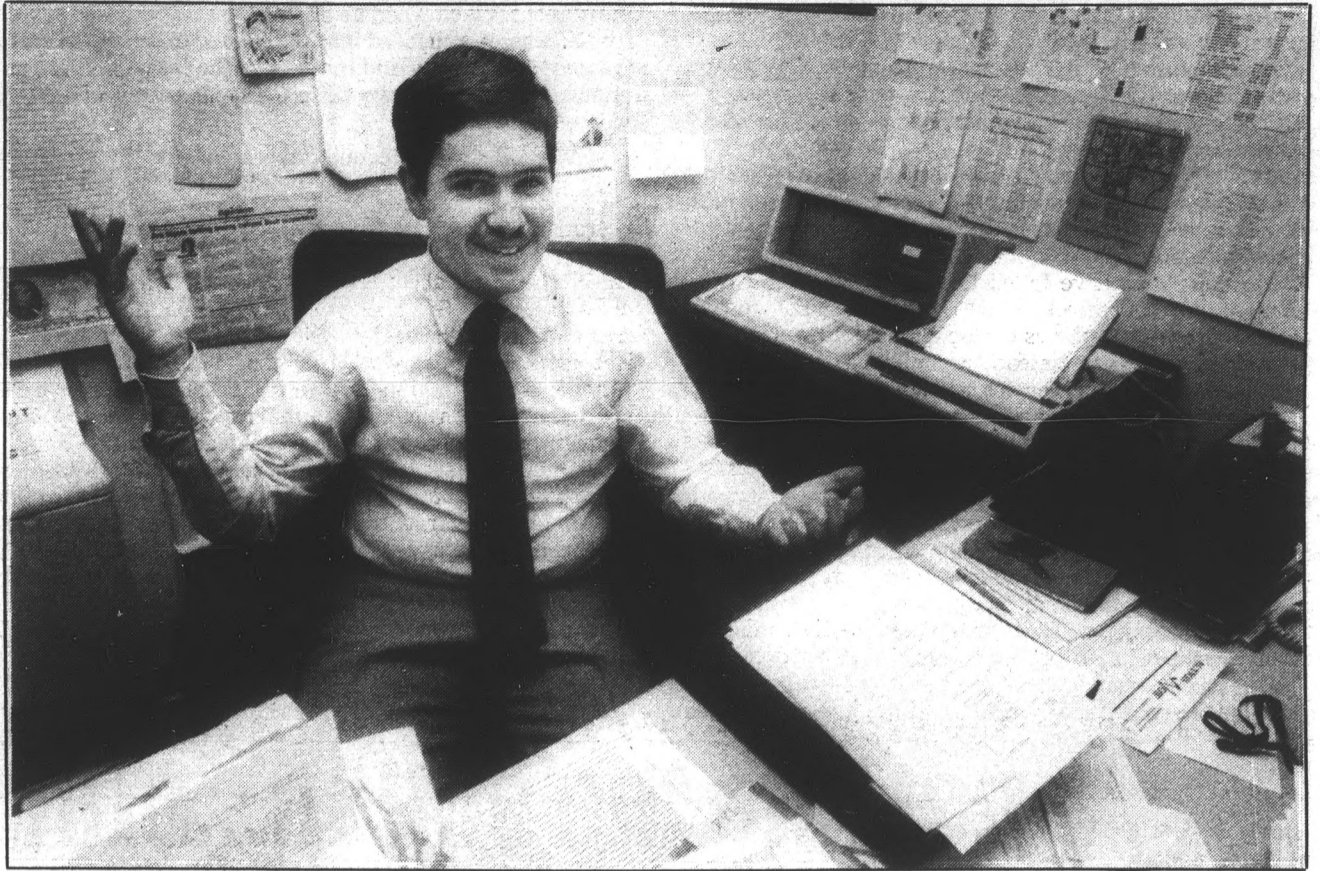

Regent President Herman Chanen said McWhortor took the job of student regent seriously.

"Pat McWhortor has been one of the hardest-working student regents that I can remember," he said. He added that McWhortor was the main reason the student regent vote bill passed the Legislature and was signed by Gov. Rose Mofford.

McWhortor said his year on the board has passed quickly, but he has mixed feelings about allowing the student regent to serve a two-year term. Currently, the student regent is nominated by the governor and serves a one-year term.

"I feel like I'm hitting my prime as far as what I do on the board," he said.

Board of Regents," he said. "On the other hand, I'm looking forward to a break."

Other members of the board are elected by the governor for eight-year terms.

"Eight years of this would just be incredible," he said. "I cannot imagine it."

Members of the board have been enjoyable to work with, McWhortor said, even during last year's tumultuous tuition hearings in which hundreds of students protested a recommended $156 tuition increase.

"When the students were adversarial, I was able to remain on very good terms with all of the regents," he said. "Members of the board are very, very good about including the student regents as an equal member."

He said the meeting in which tuition was set for 1989-90 was "one of the more incredible things I have witnessed."

"I will never forget that meeting," he said. "More important than that experience is what the outcome was."

The tuition fight ultimately resulted in the regents voting for an $84 increase for the 1989-90 academic year.

McWhortor said the publicity he has received has increased since the tuition hearings.

"When you are a public figure, people know you and you don't know them," he said. "People pay more attention to what you are doing."

McWhortor, who has been married to his wife Ronda for three years, said she was at first skeptical about him being the student regent when he applied last year.

"She wasn't convinced that she wanted to see me do that," he said. "She was afraid that it was the first step toward a political career, and she wasn't sure she wanted to be the wife of a politician."

McWhortor said he cannot take credit for the successful year students have had in getting bills passed by the Legislature.

"So much that I have done has been a cooperative effort," he said. He added that the students' success stemmed from the three university student body presidents, Brad Golich, executive director of the Arizona Students' Association and university students who became involved in important student issues.

"If I rate the whole effort that we made all year long cooperatively, it has got to be a 10," he said.

It was a year that included the passage and subsequent signing of a bill allowing the student regent to have full voting powers on the board. Student leaders had been trying to get similar bills passed for 15 years.

McWhortor said he would have been "thrilled" to become the first voting student regent.

"On the other hand, I get the distinction of being the last one not to cast a vote," he said. "I'm just thrilled to death we got the bill through."

Golich said he has enjoyed working with McWhortor.

"From all that I could tell, Pat has been, if not the best, one of the best student regents," he said. "He has done just a fantastic job."

McWhortor graduated from McClintock High School in Tempe in 1983. He attended Mesa Community College during his senior year of high school and nearly finished his freshman year of college before he graduated.

After his high school graduation, McWhortor went to the UofA.

"I probably would have stayed there, but I got very burned out," he said. "I decided to take a semester off, which turned into three years off."

McWhortor attended the Bailey School of Broadcasting in September 1983 and in July 1984 got his certificate in radio and broadcasting. After several jobs at radio stations, McWhortor started his own business of producing videos in the spring of 1986.

But in the fall of 1986, McWhortor decided to get his degree and attended Mesa Community College and ultimately ASU in the spring of 1987. Currently, he is a public administration graduate student at ASU.

McWhortor graduated with a 4.0 grade point average in 1988 with a bachelor's degree in political science from the College of Liberal Arts.

"What has made this whole year worth it is seeing how we could get students motivated," he said.

Labor leader urges students to assert consumer power

By VICKIE CHACHERE
State Press

United Farm Workers leader Cesar Chavez brought his boycott of California table grapes to ASU Monday, urging students to assert their power as consumers against growers who use pesticides that have been linked to cancer and birth defects.

"We believe that our greatest court, our court of last resort, is you, the American consumer," he said.

"We want consumers to make the demand. It's your good money. If you make the demand, the industry will give you good food."

Chavez, 61, has been boycotting California table grapes for more than two decades. He said he first became aware of the chemicals' effects shortly after World War II when he worked in an apricot orchard.

Chavez spent Sunday and Monday in Arizona calling for a ban on agricultural pesticides, and protesting an Arizona law that forbids secondary boycotts against those grocery stores that sell the fruit treated with pesticides.

The United Farm Workers first staged a successful drive to ban the use of DDT, a known carcinogen, in 1965.

Chavez's latest effort, against five pesticides used by grape growers, began in 1985. His strongest criticism is reserved for the fungicide Captan, which he claims

Chavez: Racists need harsh punishment

Hispanic activist Cesar Chavez said Monday that students responsible for perpetrating recent incidents of racial violence at ASU should be "dealt with very severely so it doesn't happen again."

"It's bad for everyone — for the University, for the state," said Chavez, who is regarded as the nation's leading advocate of Hispanics.

"Our rights as human beings can't be broken at a whim."

He said minority students on campus have done as much as they can to bring the incident to light.

"The white student has to react, to say, 'that's something we don't want to be associated with, something we don't want to deal with and something we don't support," he said. "Then the blacks and the Hispanics will have the support that they need."

"A lot is up to the University authorities. They must act decisively so that a message is sent out that the University in no way condones what happened. If there is any wavering, then the message is not strong enough and people can misinterpret it."

Chavez

causes cancer and birth defects among farm workers and a variety of diseases among the workers' children who play in the vineyards.

The use of Captan has been banned by the Environmental Protection Agency on most fruits and vegetables, Chavez said, but the chemical can still be used on grapes because the EPA ruled that it would be too expensive for grape growers to use anything else.

Grape harvests account for about half the Captan used.

The EPA has listed pesticide contamination as the top environmental concern, but Chavez criticized the agency for setting the allowable levels of Captan at 50 parts per million, 10 times higher than the acceptable level in Western European nations.

Chavez said the best way to limit the use of pesticides on crops is for the consumers to say: "Enough!"

"Enough of this nonsense. We are not going to buy these grapes, we are not going to buy these apples until you give us apples and grapes that are good to eat," he said.

Chavez, recounting a number of stories about children who suffered severe birth defects because their mothers worked in the vineyards or who died at an early age because of cancer, said that in some areas of central California the cancer rate is four times higher than the rest of the nation.

Chavez, whose 36-day water-only fast this summer drew national attention when he was hospitalized, points to the declining sales of grapes as proof that his boycott is working.

He said when the boycott began in 1985, the average American consumed more than 5 1/4 pounds of grapes each year. In 1988, consumption had dropped to about 4 pounds per person.

Furthermore, the boycott has driven down the price of grapes as growers try to unload huge stockpiles of the fruit. In 1987, a 23-pound lug of seedless grapes sold for about $14. In 1988, the same amount sold for $5.25, Chavez said.

"The deadly plague of pesticides will not be eradicated by more studies and more legislative hearings, not even by executive power. Politically, it's not happening. The only way to get rid of pesticides is to set an example."

Rifle-toting Tempean arrested on suspicion of disorderly conduct

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A Tempe man was arrested on suspicion of disorderly conduct after he allegedly ran through a field toting a rifle shouting, "I'm going to kill someone," police said Monday.

Gary L. King, age unknown, of the 1200 block of South Smith Road was arrested about 11:30 p.m., Saturday after officers on foot patrol spotted a man running through a vacant field in the 2000 block of East Apache Boulevard, said Tempe police spokesman Sgt. Al Taylor.

Taylor said officers then chased the man for about a block before catching and disarming him.

He said the man had been involved in a fight and was returning to the scene.

Tempe police also reported Monday:

- A 31-year-old Tempe man was arrested after narcotics officers served a search warrant at his home and seized a quantity of crystal methamphetamine (speed) and marijuana in addition to $1,000 in cash.

- John Patrick Baldwin, of the 2000 block of East Howe Street, was arrested on a charge of illegal possession of a dangerous drug.

- A Tempe woman who is six months

police report

pregnant was punched in the stomach by her boyfriend who then fetched a shotgun and threatened another woman.

There have been no arrests in connection with the incident and the pregnant woman was treated at Tempe St. Luke's Hospital and released. There was no injury to the baby.

- An ASU custodian reported that while driving in the 1700 block of West First Street a shot fired by a man struck his car. The custodian and the gunman had been in an argument about a traffic altercation.

ASU police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A thief stole a rear-view mirror and some gold chains, valued at $250, from a vehicle parked in Lot 51.

- A vandal caused $100 damage to a door at Sahuaro Hall by kicking it.

- Officers recovered a student's $2,000 car that had been stolen Sunday from the southeast side of 717 Alpha Drive.

- A thief stole a $700 bicycle from the MU.

Survey: Mecham stands 'good chance' of winning GOP race

By MICHAEL LEWIS
State Press

Even though 72 percent of Arizona voters said they "definitely will not" support impeached Gov. Evan Mecham in his bid for re-election, the former governor may have a good chance of winning the Republican primary, according to a recent survey of Arizona voters.

The survey was conducted earlier this month by the Behavior Research Center, an independent and non-partisan research group based in Phoenix. The findings cited overwhelming voter opposition to Mecham's candidacy except for a small group (8 percent) of hard-core Mecham supporters consisting almost entirely of white voters over the age of 55.

Bruce Merrill, ASU professor of communication in the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Telecommunication, said the ASU Media Research Program conducted similar surveys and came to the same conclusions.

"The only group I have ever found supporting Mecham is the over-55 group," said Merrill, the program's founder.

The findings from this new study, which are based on responses from 752 Arizona residents, said this small group of dedicated Mecham supporters could become a significant factor if two or more other Republicans decide to run against him.

With Mecham and J. Fife Symington already in the Republican gubernatorial race, and other prominent Republicans such as Jack Londen and Don Meyers, rumored to be setting up committees for candidacy, Mecham could theoretically be very competitive and perhaps even win the Republican primary, the survey concluded.

Earl de Berge, director of research at the Behavior Research Center, said that in a three-way race a candidate would need at least 34 percent to win, and the center's survey shows Mecham could conceivably have between 22 to 37 percent support from the actual voting public.

Mecham

"Our conclusion is he is a very serious player," de Berge said.

Merrill said the key to Mecham's chances lies in the amount of voter turnout. In the upcoming 1990 elections, turnout can be expected to be less than in years when U. S. Senate or Presidential offices are decided, he added.

"Turnout could conceivably be very low," he said.

Merrill added that Mecham has benefited in the past from low turnout elections in which his loyal followers went to the polls in proportionately greater numbers than the followers of other candidates.

Survey results show that even if Mecham were to win the primary, he would have a tough time convincing enough voters that he is the right choice. Not only are voters generally satisfied with incumbent Gov. Rose Mofford, but two-thirds of Republicans, 80 percent of Democrats and nearly 70 percent of non-partisan voters "definitely" oppose Mecham's candidacy, the report said.

The survey results are based on 726 interviews in April of adult heads of household throughout Arizona.

Cronkite spared from link to CBS in news conference

WASHINGTON (AP) — Organizers of a news conference said Monday they had deferred to Walter Cronkite and would not show a film he narrated, as they had planned to do, because CBS, Cronkite's employer for 35 years, would be attacked at the same news conference.

As a result of the objections by Cronkite and the film's producer, a conservative consumer group, Consumer Alert, showed only snippets of interviews with scientists from the 30-minute film "Big Fears, Little Risks" produced for the American Council on Science and Health.

The council is a New York-based group frequently supported by industry. The film argues that most chemical carcinogens in food pose small or trivial risks when compared with natural food substances and life-style causes of cancer like smoking.

According to the producer, Frank Powers, Consumer Alert last week distributed a news release implying "you're going to see a free-for-all over Alar," the apple growth-regulator that was the subject of a "60 Minutes" segment on CBS in February, with Reed Irvine, chairman of Accuracy in Media, using the film to attack the television program.

Cronkite worked for CBS for 35 years before his retirement in 1981. He is a CBS director.

Betty Furness, an NBC reporter, sent a copy of the release by facsimile to Cronkite traveling in Europe. According to Furness, who attended the Consumer Alert news conference as a reporter, "Mr. Cronkite does not have any problem with the film. The problem was the juxtaposition of the two events," the film and a criticism of CBS' handling of the Alar story, she said.

"He said he was asking that the film be withdrawn" from the news conference, she said.

Irvine showed the film to a reporter in his office. It does not mention Alar, contains only a brief reference to pesticides in apple sauce and says nothing about "60 Minutes."

The press release was withdrawn after objections by Cronkite's attorney and a version was issued that said Irvine, after the film, "will discuss how the media, particularly '60 Minutes,' was a willing partner" in transmitting erroneous information about Alar. A copy of the original release was not available Monday.

In New York, "60 Minutes" spokesman Ray Brunett said the program was "putting together another report which will address questions raised since the first broadcast."

Irvine said Powers told him "it was his objective to preserve his relationship with Mr. Cronkite." Powers said that was true, but not the only reason he refused to permit the film to be shown at the news conference.

"The purpose of the film was not to get into this controversy or that controversy. It would be counterproductive. We have an important public health message here," he said by telephone from New York.

"As the copyright holder, we were within our rights," he said.

Barbara Keating-Edh, president of Consumer Alert, said "great pressure" was brought on her not to show the film, and she believed she had to defer to Elizabeth Whelan, president of the American Council on Science and Health, not to show it.

secretary, said the governor favors the legislation.

Sen. Jerry Gillespie, R-Mesa, who voted for the bill Monday after failing in an attempt to amend the measure and make the program voluntary for students, said he had been in favor of the legislation all along, but thought it was unfair to expect students to be required to contribute.

"The bill is important because of the help it will give minority students," he said.

Gillespie's amendment was defeated in the Senate Appropriations Committee 14-1. He also had proposed levying a 1 percent surcharge for university employees who make more than $80,000 per year.

"I wanted professors to contribute," Gillespie said. "After all, it's students who give them jobs."

Father of murdered infant arrested

SIERRA VISTA (AP) — A 21-year-old civilian living at Fort Huachuca with his soldier wife has been arrested and accused of murdering his infant daughter, the FBI said Monday.

John Anthony Davis faces a hearing in federal court in Tucson later this week, FBI spokesman Larry Bagley said in Tucson.

Bagley said 5-month-old Shamara

Davis was taken to the base's Raymond W. Bliss Army Hospital Wednesday after one of her parents reported the infant was having trouble breathing.

She was transported to Tucson Medical Center on Thursday where died the same day after being declared brain-dead and taken off a respirator.

Bagley said an autopsy indicates the baby died of a blow or blows to the head.

Low run production leads to 3 losses for ASU

Todd Green/State Press

Freshman Terri Carnicelli leads the ASU softball team in games won, ERA, appearances, games started, complete games, innings pitched and strikeouts.

By KYLE D. ENG
State Press

Terri Carnicelli is not just your normal freshman pitcher.

The graduate of Phoenix's Greenway High School is displaying talent that will make her a pitcher of the future.

Carnicelli leads the No. 16 Devils in most pitching categories: games won (14), in ERA (1.28), in appearances (29), in games started (22), in complete games (16), innings pitched 164.3 and strikeouts with 58.

But Carnicelli is not letting the inexperience of being a freshman get to her.

"I really don't feel any pressure being a freshman pitcher," Carnicelli said. "I just take one game at a time and I hope to keep my opponents to one or two runs and hope that our offense can put together some runs."

A point worth noting is during Carnicelli's 10 losses she has given up an average of two runs per a game. She has not received a single run for support during her losses.

"We've had a lot of injuries this year a that has attributed the loss in run production," Carnicelli said. "When you've had as many injuries as we've had, then that's going to happen."

Head coach Mary Littlewood agrees.

"Terri held UCLA the No. 2 team in the nation to one run and she lost," Littlewood said. "You really can't ask a pitcher to do more for you than that."

During this weekend's action, the Devils could only notch one win in four games. ASU was swept in a doubleheader against No. 2 UCLA Friday night, but split with Cal-Berkeley in a twinbill Saturday afternoon.

In the series against UCLA, the Devils could only manage six hits. Both Bruin pitchers, Samantha Ford and Tiffany Boyd, gave up three hits while shutting out ASU by the scores of 4-0 and 1-0, respectively.

The first game of the twinbill on Friday resulted in a UCLA blowout. Although the Bruins only scored four runs, they had nine hits, three went for doubles.

ASU managed only one hit through the first four innings on a first-inning single by shortstop Ann Rowan. Its only rally came in the fifth inning, Melinda Cook was on third base and Yvette Baltazar was aboard on second base with two outs, but the next batter third baseman Sherry Curry flied out to end ASU's only real scoring threat.

Bruin pitcher Samatha Ford went the distance, striking out seven to pick up her fifth win without a loss.

Senior Donna Stewart suffered the loss, also going the distance giving up nine hits, striking out two and walking three. Her record moves to 4-2.

The second game of the double-header against the Bruins turned to be a much closer affair, but only as far in the scoring department.

Again ASU could only muster three hits, this time against freshman sensation Tiffany Boyd. Boyd record moves to 12-1 while her nation-leading ERA goes to 0.08.

Although the Bruins edged the Sun Devils by one run, ASU only got one hit in the first four innings and did not advance a runner past second base all game.

Carnicelli picked up the loss in the second game her record moved to 13-10. She gave up nine hits and walked two.

Saturday proved to be a brighter one for the Devils as they faced Cal-Berkeley in a twinbill.

In the first game, the Bears scored one run in both the third and sixth innings, as they carried a 2-0 lead into the bottom of the seventh.

With one out, Melinda Cook singled and advanced to second on a throwing error. The next batter, first baseman Donna Stewart, then got aboard on a error, and Cook took third on the play. Cook scored on a sacrifice by Sherry Curry to bring the Devils within one, 2-1.

Natalie King was next up to the plate as she reached on an error charged to the third baseman, and Stewart took third on the throw.

But ASU failed to capitalize and notched the defeat.

Robyn Burgess picked up the win for Cal-Berkeley as Cook suffered the loss for the Devils.

The second game pitted Carnicelli against Erin Cassidy on the mound as ASU tried to avert a sweep of the series and the weekend.

The Devils scored early in the game as they opened up the scoring in the first inning. Shortstop Ann Rowan singled and advanced to second on an errant throw by the centerfielder. Rowan then scored on the State Press reports

Senior All-American Pearl Sinn remained in first place Monday, despite shooting an eight-over 80, and ASU slipped to fourth place after two rounds of the Pac-10 Conference Championships at Pasadena, Calif.

The third-ranked Sun Devils shot a 321 Monday for a two-round total of 624. They trail top-ranked Southern California, which recorded a 310, by 15 strokes at Annandale Golf Course.

Arizona is second at 621 and Stanford is third at 623.

Sinn, the nation's top-ranked collegiate golfer, leads Arizona's Martina Cook by one stroke at the tournament, which concludes today.

Sun Devil freshman Lynne Mikulas had one of the day's best rounds at three-over 75. Mikulas has a two-round total of 152 and is in fifth place, four strokes behind Sinn.

The Sun Devils are trying to win their third consecutive Pac-10 championship. ASU won by a record 57 strokes last year.

TEMPE (AP) — Herb Brown, a guard from Riverdale High School in Fort Myers, Fla., has signed a national letter of intent to play basketball at ASU, school officials announced Monday.

The 6-foot-5, 190-pound Brown becomes the second signee for new Sun Devil coach Bill Frieder, who was hired from Michigan March 15.

Brown averaged 28 points and 17 rebounds his senior season and his 2,235 career points is 11th-best in Florida high school history. He came in fourth place in the voting this year for the "Mr. Florida" basketball award.

ASU student develops strengthening device

By MICHELE McDONALD
State Press

A 69-year-old ASU student has invented a therapy device that can be used by recuperating patients, athletes or couch potatoes to strengthen the wrists, hands, fingers and arms.

Ruth Roehlk, who studies Chinese, developed the idea of the Omni-Flexor when her husband, George, was recovering from a heart bypass operation in 1985. The exerciser was given a U.S. patent after an extensive search of 10,000 other devices, and it will be available in June.

"It was so simple," she said. "I just sat there and got the idea."

Roehlk said the device resembles a canister with handles on either end. The user twists the handles in opposite directions.

The Omni-Flexor would benefit athletes, such as boxers, baseball players, archers, wrestlers, golfers, tennis players, rock climbers and "anything you need a grip for," she said.

John Kalagidis, an athletic trainer at ASU's sports medicine department, said sports medicine does not have equipment resembling the Omni-Flexor and currently uses items, such as rubber balls and tennis balls to strengthen grips.

He does not know if Roehlk's invention could be used by ASU's athletic department.

"We go off of (published) research and mostly off of physician's (research)," Kalagidis said. "We look for things that mainly go on rehabilitation."

Kalagidis said sports medicine requires that an exerciser is progressive and the rehabilitating does not stop when the user reaches a certain level.

Also, an exerciser needs to build endurance, strength and have a range of motions, he said.

Roehlk said separate models with different tensions will be developed so that recovering patients or athletes can use the device.

Roehlk said an old-time saw handle was the inspiration for the handles so there would not be any sore spots on the hands.

Also, the spring system in the Omni-Flexor goes against the principles of spring tension because one spring coils while another uncoils, but it works, she said.

"Once I proved it could work, then it could go further," Roehlk said.

Roehlk said the exerciser is simple to use and does not strain the body. Also, tests have been run on it for durability. After 250,000 cycles, which translates into 15 years of daily use, the device did not show any wear or tension loss.

"The Omni-Flexor is built to hand down to your children," Roehlk said.

Cardinals draft players to fill key positions

TEMPE (AP) — The Phoenix Cardinals filled some needs at cornerback, running back, the line and the kicking game in Monday's second and final day of the NFL draft.

Phoenix, ranked near the bottom of the league in pass defense the past two seasons, took San Jose State cornerback Jay Taylor in the sixth round and Sam Houston State cornerback Rickey Royal in the seventh.

In the eighth round, the Cardinals drafted Tennessee-Martin running back John Burch and then took Arkansas placekicker Kendall Trainor in the ninth and Texas Christian punter Chris Becker in the 10th round.

They closed out their selections with Albany (Ga.) State defensive end Jeff Hunter in the 11th round and Wisconsin offensive lineman Todd Nelson in the 12th and final round.

"I'm really happy with the people we got," said Cardinals general manager Larry Wilson. "It was a smooth draft. When you get into the lower rounds, you are trying to find a guy who someone might have overlooked who someday may become a starter and an All-Pro. It has happened."

Trainor was considered one of the top kickers in the country last season, kicking 24 consecutive field goals in one stretch.

He finished his career with 111 of 116 extra-points and 51 field goals in 69 tries. Last season, Trainor kicked 30 of 32 conversions and 24 of 27 field goals, including a 58-yarder.

Phoenix, which has had placekicking problems for years, has four other kickers already on the roster — free-agents Teddy Garcia, David Treadwell, Mark Prindle and incumbent Al Del Greco.

"We want to find a damn good kicker," Wilson said. "That's what we want. But we're not going to take five kickers to training camp. We have eight if you count the punters."

Becker averaged 38.8-yards per punt in his four years and will be trying to replace two-year Cardinal starter Greg Horne, who signed as a free agent with Washington in February.

Trainor had a 39.4-yard average as a punter in 1987 and said he "would like to back up and save a roster spot for a position player" with the Cardinals.

"I've heard they have a lot of problems with their kicking," he said. "Hopefully, I'm the answer. I don't feel there was a better kicker in the country this year than me." Cardinals player personnel director George Boone is high on Taylor and Royal although both are considered small at 5-foot-9.

Taylor had 88 tackles and returned two of his six interceptions for touchdowns his last two seasons while Royal had 170 career tackles, four fumble recoveries and seven interceptions.

"Taylor can run like hell (4.51 seconds in the 40-yard dash). Now, he just has to learn to cover," said Wilson, a Hall of Fame safety. "Both of these guys have the qualities the defensive coaches look for. They just have to work on the techniques."

Burch rushed for 1,033 yards and six touchdowns last season and caught 45 next play as cleanup hitter Michele Gravatt singled in Rowan.

That would be all the scoring ASU would do, as it turns out that would be all the scoring they would need to do.

In her 29th appearance of the season Carnicelli breezed. She scattered six hits over seven innings while striking out one and upped her record to 14-10 overall. The Bears never really made a real scoring threat as no runners reached third base, and only two batters got as far as second base.

Coming to Carnicelli's aid was her defense. Second baseman Yvette Baltazar made an outstanding play in sixth inning. With a runner on second and one out, Baltazar leaped to her right to stab a line drive and then tag second to doubled up the runner and end the inning.

Shortstop Ann Rowan made outstanding plays left and right as she was credited with a team-high five assists and three putouts.

"You've really got to give the defense a lot of credit," Carnicelli said. "They helped me get out of situations where they could of scored."

Also deserving of credit is pitcher-turned-catcher Michele Gravatt.

"Michele helps a lot," Carnicelli said. "Being a former pitcher helps because she knows just what kind of pitches to call in certain situations."

With the one win, Littlewood's career total for win's upped to 497. The Devils have six games remaining, two on the road this weekend against Oregon and Oregon State and two against Florida Southern at home May 3.

If the Devils were to a least split all three series, Littlewood would become the first coach in NCAA Division I history to reach the plateau.

Baseball has new No. 1 team; Devils hold down fourth

TUCSON (AP) — It's been a long climb for Mississippi State, but the Bulldogs have displaced Texas A & M as the top team in the latest Collegiate Baseball-ESPN poll.

Mississippi State, 38-7, the Southeastern Conference leader at 17-2, has won eight in a row and 21 of its last 23.

During the unbeaten streak, Mississippi State has outscored foes 58-17, and Bulldog pitchers have held opponents to a .171 batting average.

The Aggies, 46-3, won four of five games last week — their eighth straight as No. 1 — but dropped from first to third behind Arizona, another team on a tear.

The Wildcats, 36-12-1, have won 11 straight, including nine in the Pac-10 Conference's Southern Division, and outscored opponents 109-38.

Arizona's 19-5 conference record marks its most Pac-10 wins ever.

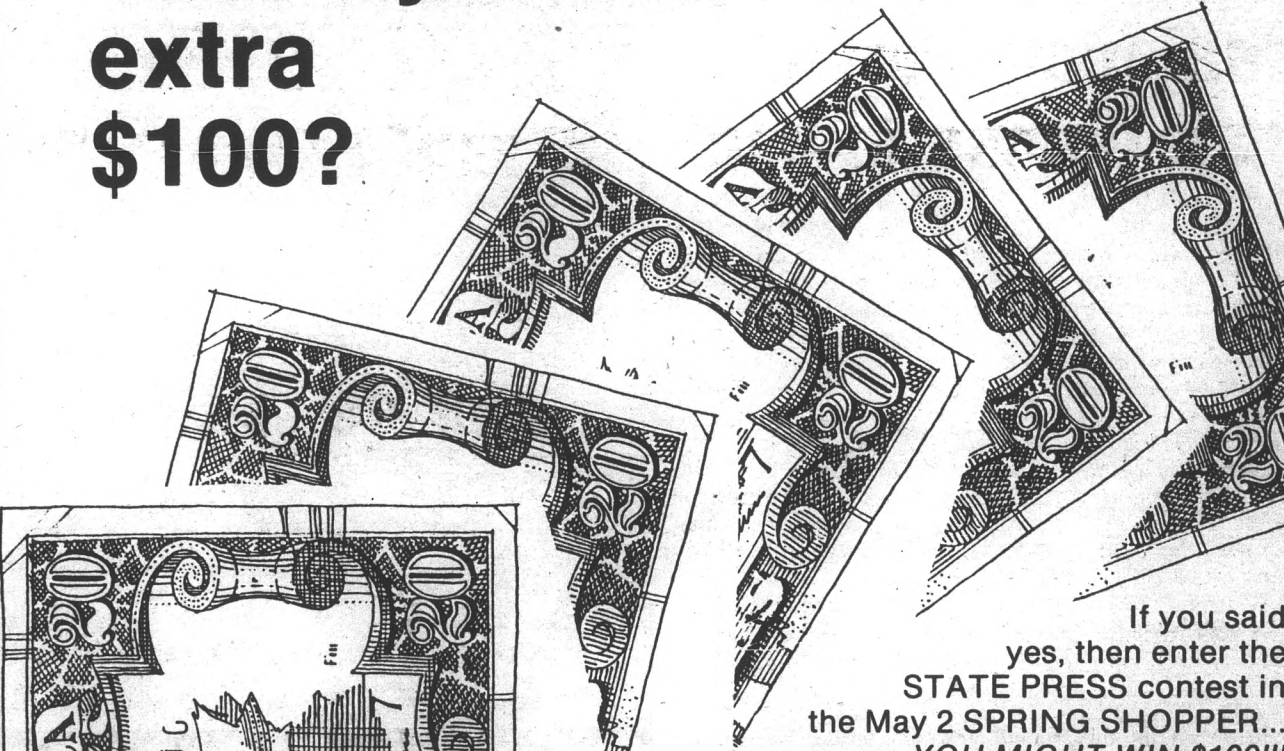

ASU, which swept California last weekend and remains one game behind UofA in the Six-Pac, went 5-0 during the week, improving to 39-12 and moving up a notch to fourth.

Arkansas, 40-6, dropped from third to fifth while winning three of four contests.

Louisiana State, 39-9, held onto sixth; Oklahoma State, 35-10 after five consecutive wins, vaulted from 13th to seventh; Wichita State, 41-8, remained in eighth; Texas 42-12, moved up one notch to ninth; and Florida State, 38-12, climbed from 12th to 10th.

The big losers were Fresno State, 31-15, which went 1-2 last week and fell from seventh to 13th, and Clemson, which was 2-4 and sank from ninth to 15th with a 35-9 record.

Peete's patience pays off; Lions' sixth-round pick

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rodney Peete's first taste of life in pro football was like having the entire Chicago Bears defense hit him from the blind side. Welcome to the NFL, Rodney Peete, albeit a day late.

"A day that was supposed to be one of the most exciting days of my life turned out to be the most devastating," Peete said.

The Southern Cal quarterback, who was No. 2 in last fall's Heisman Trophy voting, had to wait — in shock at being overlooked — until the sixth round of the NFL draft of college seniors. He was the second player picked in the 2nd day of the draft, but the 141st player chosen overall.

Peete was chosen by the Detroit Lions, one pick after the Los Angeles Raiders had taken another quarterback, Jeff Francis of Tennessee.

That made Peete, the 141st player overall, the ninth quarterback to go although some scouting books had him rated second behind Troy Aikman, the top overall pick.

Described by his friends Sunday night as devastated, Peete had to wait nearly 24 agonizing hours before the Detroit called his name Monday.

"I went from devastated to disappointed," said Peete, who may have lost $800,000 over four years by going from the second round to the sixth, one agent estimated. "It's still a big disappointment, but I'm excited about going to the Lions."

Peete carried impressive credentials into the draft, several Southern Cal and Pacific-10 Conference career passing record and victories over UCLA and Bruins quarterback Aikman to get to the Rose Bowl the past two years.

His spirit picked up with a phone call from Lions' Coach Wayne Fonce to talk about his immediate future. "He said he was excited I was still available when it came time for them to pick in the sixth round," Peete said.

The main rap against Peete was his lack of arm strength and the fact that he seemed to fall off at the end of the season, notably in Southern Cal's game against Notre Dame and in the post-season all-star games.

But Peete's agent, Leonard Armato, said judging him by those games was a mistake.

"The teams that passed him up made a big mistake," Armato said. "He's always been a winner and I'm sure he will be again. His true talent will show out in the end."

In fact, his quickness and his ability to see the field should be an asset in the run-and-shoot offense being installed in Detroit by Mouse Davis, the new offensive coordinator and the man who originated the concept. He is certainly quicker than the Lions' three quarterbacks — Chuck Long, Eric Hipple and Rusty Hilger — and the run-and-shoot doesn't require quarterbacks to throw deep very often.

"Their style of offense is going to suit me well," Peete said. "I couldn't be going to a better team or a better situation," Peete said.

Peete said he talked with his father, Willie Peete, a running backs coach for the Green Bay Packers, "and he said it was just as much a mystery to him why I wasn't taken in the first or second round."

Green Bay was among the teams which bypassed Peete for relatively unknown quarterback candidates. The Packers took Duke's Anthony Dilweg in the third round and Long Beach State's Jeff Graham in the fourth round.

Peete is black, as is Terrence Jones of Tulane, who became the 11th quarterback taken when he went to San Diego with the final pick of the seventh round. Both were rated above many of the quarterbacks taken above them and there was some suggestion that race had played a factor.

David Cornwell, the NFL's director of minority relations, said he didn't think it was a factor in view of the success in the past few years of such black quarterbacks as Doug Williams, Randall Cunningham and Warren Moon.

"I talked to a lot of black personnel people and the feeling was that he wasn't rated as highly as a lot of people thought he was," Cornwell said. "A decade ago, I think you could say it, but I don't think it's the case now."

The elder Peete called his son the best quarterback in college football and suggested bias and the fact that he was a coach's son might have been a reason.

"I have some questions, I have some real hard questions that I don't know if anyone can answer," the senior Peete said. "For some mysterious reason, many NFL teams hesitate to draft a coach's son. Maybe because coaches have a problem keeping things secret."

Final pick chosen; draft comes to end

NEW YORK (AP) — Rodney Peete expected to go in the first two rounds of the NFL draft on Sunday. Instead, when the draft resumed Monday, he was the second player taken in the sixth round, chosen by the Detroit Lions.

Peete's selection came on a day when teams began their annual search for sleepers after taking most of the blue-chip players in the first few rounds.

In other words, it was a day for question marks and kickers, like Chris Jacke of Texas-El Paso, taken by Green Bay on the sixth round; Pete Stoyanovich, a one-time All-America soccer player from Indiana, taken by Miami on the seventh, and Kendall Trainor of Arkansas, on the ninth by the Cardinals, who have spent a decade looking for someone reliable to put the ball through the uprights.

Also among those chosen was Byron Sanders of Northwestern, who was taken by Chicago on the ninth round. He is older brother of Barry Sanders, the Heisman Trophy winner from Oklahoma State who was the third player taken — by Detroit — in the first round.

Seattle used its 10th round pick on Derrick Fenner, a former North Carolina running back who led the Atlantic Coast Conference in rushing in 1986 but was charged with murder in Maryland a year later in what police said was a drug-related shooting death of a 19-year-old man.

In November 1987, murder charges were dropped for insufficient evidence and he eventually pleaded guilty to one count of cocaine possession.

And Detroit took Jason Phillips of Houston, leading receiver in college football last season, with the second pick of the 10th round.

Denver, meanwhile, took Melvin Bratton, former University of Miami fullback who suffered a severe knee injury two years ago.

Considered before the injury a possible first-round choice, Bratton was taken by the Miami Dolphins on the sixth round a year ago. But he failed to sign and went back into this year's draft, going to the Broncos on the seventh round.

passes for 419 yards and two scores.

"He basically played in a run-and-shoot offense and he runs hard and has fine hands," Boone said. "The natural stuff is there and he's made some big runs. We feel he has a decent chance."

Phoenix took Hunter and Nelson as flyers. The 6-foot-4, 263-pound Hunter is coming off a knee injury while the 6-5, 289-pound Nelson had a poor season in 1988.

"Hunter had knee surgery but our doctors examined him and we feel good that he'll be OK. He has size and speed," Boone said. "Nelson has a big body and can run. We're not going to let a bad game or a bad season rule these people out. If we have positive feelings for a guy, he really has to play bad for us to lose interest."

With Boone making all the picks since 1973, the Cardinals had a history of ill-fated draft choices with the players seldom panning out.

This year, Boone shared the responsibility with Wilson and head coach Gene Stallings.

"I feel better about this one than I've felt in a while," Boone said. "Before, it was a clumsy, uncomfortable feeling. This time, things just kind of fit and fell into place. One thing that helped is we had two firsts."

On Sunday, Phoenix picked both Louisiana State linebacker Eric Hill and Boston College offensive lineman Joe Wolf in the first round, Auburn tight end Walter Reeves in the second, Washington offensive lineman Mike Zandofsky in the third, UCLA defensive lineman Jim Wahler in the fourth and Georgia linebacker Richard Tardits and Wyoming defensive end David Edeen both in the fifth round.

Bookmaker claims Rose placed more than $1 million in bets

NEW YORK (AP) — An Ohio bookmaker told prosecutors that he took as much as $1 million in bets from Pete Rose, according to a federal transcript obtained Monday by The Associated Press, and a letter from A. Bartlett Giamatti states the commissioner believes the bookmaker's testimony was truthful.

During a pre-sentencing conference at Cincinnati last Friday in the case of the bookmaker, Ronald Peters, assistant U. S. attorney Robert C. Brichler said: "Mr. Peters has indicated to us that he took bets over a period of two years that could very well amount to in excess of a million dollars."

Giamatti's letter, which was released Monday by the commissioner's office, said Peters "provided critical sworn testimony about Mr. Rose and his associates."

"Mr. Peters has provided probative documentary evidence to support his testimony and the testimony of others,"

Giamatti wrote in an April 18 letter to Judge Carl B. Rubin, who will sentence Peters on felonies of cocaine trafficking and tax evasion. Peters could receive up to 23 years in prison and $1.25 million in fines.

"Based upon other information in our possession, I am satisfied Mr. Peters has been candid, forthright and truthful with my special counsel," Giamatti wrote.

Nothing in the 13-page transcript indicates that Rose bet on baseball games. However Alan J. Statman, a lawyer representing Peters, has said in the past that his client had information linking the Cincinnati Reds manager to baseball betting. Statman declined comment Monday.

According to the Cincinnati Post, a federal grand jury is investigating Rose on tax matters. In the transcript, Rubin says that he doesn't want to get into the Rose case now because of the possibility of an indictment.

"I don't want to get into imbroglia involving Pete Rose," the judge said. "Now, it is conceivable — I guess the odds are one in three — that if you indict him, that I may draw that indictment. . . ."

Rubin, according to the transcript, was surprised and disturbed by Giamatti's unsolicited letter.

"There is evidence here, in my opinion, of a vendetta against Pete Rose," the judge said. "Again, I don't care, but it seems to me that whatever cooperation Mr. Peters gave them on their investigation is totally and thoroughly irrelevant to any charges against Peters, and the idea of confusing the two of them I just find very offensive."

John M. Dowd, a Washington lawyer, is heading baseball's investigation of allegations that Rose bet on baseball games. Dowd did not return telephone calls Monday but issued a statement saying that Giamatti's letter "is customary and was intended to be helpful to the Court."

The judge did not deem the letter helpful. "I'm offended by this," he said during the conference, "and I don't believe that it is of any concern to me, zilch, what this man may have done with the commissioner of baseball in terms of his commission of a federal offense."

Giamatti, who will decide whether Rose will be suspended, did not wish to make any comment, spokesman Rich Levin said. If Giamatti determines Rose bet on baseball games, he would be suspended for one year. If Giamatti determines Rose bet on Reds games, he would be banned for life.

Rueven J. Katz, Rose's lawyer, said last weekend that Giamatti should consider disqualifying himself from the case because of the letter.

"Commissioner Giamatti is the judge, jury and the appellate court," Katz was quoted as saying by the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Johnson hearing reveals nobody tampered with urine test

TORONTO (AP) — A Canadian inquiry has all but rejected the theory that someone tampered with Ben Johnson's drink in the testing room at the Seoul Olympics, thus causing the sprinter to fail a drug test and lose his gold medal and world record in the 100 meters.

In a surprise twist to a bizarre day of testimony Monday, the commission's senior counsel interrupted proceedings to tell the commissioner that lawyers — including Johnson's — had agreed with the decision.

"In light of the public statements made following the disqualification in Seoul, we as counsel and our investigators considered it our obligation to make a thorough investigation of the sabotage theory," Robert Armstrong read from a prepared statement. "That investigation has led us . . . to conclude at this stage that it would not advance your work to pursue that theory."

The theory that Johnson's urine test was somehow sabotaged was rejected last September by Olympic officials, who subsequently stripped the Jamaica-born sprinter of his medal and record. He was suspended from international competition for two years.

But Johnson's coach, Charlie Francis, raised it again when he appeared last month before the national probe into drug abuse in sport. Francis acknowledged Johnson had used banned steroids since 1981, but claimed he was not on the steroid found in his urine at Seoul.

Francis blamed the test result on a mysterious black man who was hanging around the testing facility, saying he must have tampered with Johnson's drink.

Armstrong's statement came in the midst of testimony by Johnson's physiotherapist, Waldemar Matuszewski, who was in the testing room with the sprinter after the race.

Matuszewski acknowledged the man was in the room, but he was not concerned about him. The physiotherapist said he later signed a form approving the testing procedure, a copy of which was submitted to the inquiry as evidence.

Gretzky scores playoff record

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Wayne Gretzky of the Los Angeles Kings scored his NHL playoff record 86th goal Monday night in the Smythe Division finals against the Calgary Flames, giving him all three major scoring records.

Gretzky had been tied with Mike Bossy of the New York Islanders for the goal-scoring mark.

Gretzky also holds the career playoff records with 187 assists and 272 points.

Gretzky scored on a power play with 8:40 left in the first period to tie Game 4 2-2.

The goal was one of his patented moves from behind the net.

Gretzky skated out from behind the net, faked a pass and sent in a wrist shot from 15 feet, beating Flames goalie Mike Vernon on the glove side.

It was Gretzky's first goal of this series. He scored two goals in the seventh game of the Smythe semifinals against the Edmonton Oilers to tie Bossy.

The Kings were trying to remain alive after falling behind 3-0 in the best-of-seven series.

Gretzky, who assisted on the Kings' first goal of the game, has scored five playoff goals with the Kings. He scored the other 81 in nine playoff seasons with the Oilers.

state press sports

A real knockout.

Get ready for the final round on May 2! It's the last issue of the State Press for Spring 1989. We call it our Spring Shopper. It's full of great values on everything from food to bikes to housing . . . and then some. With the Shopper, you'll be able to take a study break to complete a crossword puzzle or read some of your favorite comics.

It's fun, a little entertaining and full of great values.

Read it on May 2.

"Coffee falls into the stomach, and there is a general commotion. Ideas begin to move like the battalion of the Grand Army... Things remembered arrive at full gallop... The artillery of logic burries up with trains and ammunition, the shafts of wit start up like sbarpsbooters." Honore de Balzac (1799-1850)
Author of more than 100 novels, attributing his success to coffee.
