A lengthy line at the registrar site in the basement of Payne Hall kept some students waiting for more than an hour Monday. Some students said that after reaching the front of the line, the classes they wanted were closed.

Students endure lines to begin fall semester

By JOIE ANN LaPOLLA
State Press

Long lines on the first day of class are as much a part of the ASU campus as Sparky, the Sun Devils and the UofA rivalry — and this year hasn't been any different.

Registration sites, the Student Services Building, the MU and the bookstores were loaded on Monday with students trying to get ready at the last minute for the upcoming semester. But some students said they expected the long wait.

"I feel it's a part of ASU," said Doug Burkett, a graduate student majoring in chemistry. "If you wait until the first day, you're going to have to pay the price by waiting in line."

Associate Registrar LouAnn Denny said this year's lines for registration are typical for the beginning of the semester. At this time last year, more than 7,100 students were processed at all registration sites, including ASU West.

"It's fairly normal for this time of year," Denny said.

Registration lines are expected to shorten today and will almost dissipate by Wednesday afternoon, she added.

Some students at the Payne Hall registrar site had to wait for nearly an hour.

However, the engineering site was considered even worse.

"I was waiting at the (engineering) site, and the line was too long so I didn't stay," said Mike Shelby, a mechanical engineering junior.

In addition to the long lines at the registration sites, students waited in long lines at Physical Education West and the Student Services Building for financial aid disbursement.

But Paul Barberini, director of student financial assistance, said that Saturday's disbursement eased the lines expected Monday.

"We started a day earlier for financial aid disbursement and because so many showed up on Saturday, it took the pressure off of today," Barberini said.

Missy Lurtsema, a senior broadcasting major, said the wait to pick up her scholarship check at Student Services was too long.

"I can't even get my books until I get that check," she said. "I looked at the line and it was winding, so I decided to come back later."

But many decided to brave the line and wait for their check.

"I've been waiting in lines since 8:30 a.m.," said sophomore liberal arts major Julie Proudfoot as she waited to pick up her check at 1 p.m. "Pepsi is now breakfast, lunch and probably dinner."

Lines for financial aid disbursement at PE West were gone by about 2 p.m., said Sara Wilson, assistant site supervisor.

"We had spurts between classes, but there is no wait now," she said.

But there was a substantial wait at the ASU Bookstore Monday, with a line at least 20 people long, according to Suzy Schneider, a bookstore employee. The longest wait was about 30 minutes, with approximately 34 people in line, she added.

The MU, site of parking decal pick up, fee payment, ID photo taking and disbursement, was packed with students, but some of the lines were shortened because the services were in different parts of the building.

Chris Fioto, a sophomore business major, said he only had to wait for about five minutes to pick up his student ID.

Probe of police delayed by loss of investigator

By MIKE BURGESS

A member of an independent University panel investigating the actions of ASU police during a racial incident on Alpha Drive in April has resigned because of a possible conflict of interest, officials said.

In addition, panel chairman Gerald Richard said the resignation of Assistant Phoenix Police Chief Jerry Oliver could cause a one-month delay in the panel presenting its findings to interim ASU President Richard Peck. The panel was expected to report its findings and recommendations by Oct. 13.

Peck said he is not upset by the possible delay or the fact that the panel has not interviewed anyone involved in the incident. But a student leader

Golf course: Will linksters drink & drive?

By TYRONE MEIGHAN
State Press

An Arizona Board of Regents decision to allow the sale of alcohol in the clubhouse of the new ASU golf course has created enough confusion among University officials to drive most of them to drink.

The policy, narrowly approved 4-3 by the regents at their July meeting in Flagstaff, allows alcohol only if it is not sold on the course itself and is confined to the clubhouse.

Yet most people drove away from the meeting with a different interpretation of the ruling, and trying to figure them all out can be, well, intoxicating.

Henry DeLozier, manager of the course, said, "It can be consumed on the course but not sold (on the course)."

Bruce Meyerson, University legal counsel, interprets the policy to mean alcohol would be consumed "in the clubhouse" and allowed outside "only in special events."

Duff Lawrence, director of golf at the course, said if linksters want to purchase a beer, "they can consume that beer on the golf course."

Confused? Well, the only thing that everyone can agree on is that alcohol will not be sold out on the course itself — only in the clubhouse.

Victor Zafra, ASU's vice president for business affairs, said the regents were only considering whether alcohol could be sold on the course — not if people could drink while they were on the course driving.

Paul Larson, Associated Students of ASU president, said, "They (the regents) did not want alcohol outside the clubhouse."

French, Soviet diplomats meet to negotiate peace in Lebanon

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — French and Soviet envoys held talks Monday with Iraqi and Syrian officials amid renewed international efforts to stop the bloodshed in Lebanon, where nearly 800 people have been killed in five months.

Francois Scheer, secretary-general of the French Foreign Ministry, met for four hours with Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa. Syrian soldiers are battling Christian troops in Lebanon.

"Any solution in Lebanon must be a political one and no political solution in Lebanon is possible without an effective Syrian contribution," Scheer said after the meeting. "The French position on Lebanon has not changed and our action is absolutely an action of peace."

Later, the Frenchman met with Syrian President Hafez Assad at his summer residence in the Mediterranean port of Lattakis and gave him a message from French President Francois Mitterrand.

Assad asked Scheer to deliver a reply to the French president, said a Syrian official who refused to give details.

Syrian-backed Moslem groups accuse France of supporting Lebanese Christians and have threatened retaliation if a French naval task force in the eastern Mediterranean intervenes in Lebanon, which France governed until 1943.

France says the flotilla is on a "humanitarian" mission, to evacuate the 7,000 French citizens in Lebanon if necessary.

At least 790 people have been killed and more than 2,000 wounded in the fighting. All but 150,000 of Beirut's 1.5 million residents have fled the city.

Bakker accused of fleecing flock as TV minister's fraud trial opens

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Jim Bakker's fraud and conspiracy trial opened Monday with a federal prosecutor accusing the TV evangelist of fleecing followers he considered "tacky" so that he could live in high style.

A former aide testified that the founder of the PTL television ministry said he "wanted to be paid like Johnny Carson" and told him how top ministry executives took a cut from the money they raised.

But Bakker's lawyer said in his opening argument that the founder of the PTL television ministry was "a creative, religious genius" who is unfairly accused.

Prosecutors say Bakker and other executives at the evangelical empire diverted for their own benefit at least $4 million of the $158 million they raised by selling "lifetime partnerships" at the ministry's resort hotels.

If convicted of all 28 counts of fraud and conspiracy, Bakker could be sentenced to 120 years in prison and fined $5 million.

"Have a nice day" was all the 49-year-old evangelist said as he entered the courthouse.

Bakker quit PTL amid revelations about his 1980 sexual encounter with church secretary Jessica Hahn and a $265,000 payoff to her.

Colombian minister will not quit, discusses drug policy with U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Colombia's justice minister and U.S. Attorney General Dick Thornburgh on Monday discussed extradition of Colombian drug traffickers wanted here and tighter security for judges in that embattled nation.

Monica de Greiff, accompanied by top Colombian law enforcement and military officials, discussed the implementation of U.S. aid to stem the wave of assassinations of Colombian judges by the drug lords, the Justice Department said in a statement issued after an hour-long meeting.

Besides the extradition of some 80 Colombian drug traffickers wanted by U.S. authorities, de Greiff and Thornburgh also discussed training and equipping Colombian police and armed forces for the war against the Medellin cocaine cartel, the department said.

The meeting came just hours after Colombian President Virgilio Barco, in Bogota, put to rest rumors that his 32-year-old justice minister had decided to resign in the face of death threats from drug cartel leaders worried about possible extradition to the United States.

Thornburgh has said he expects that Colombian authorities will deliver to U.S. officials this week Eduardo Martinez Romero, who was arrested recently as part of a government crackdown against the cartel. Martinez has been under U.S. indictment since March.

Chinese students plan rally

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

Although the massacre at Beijing's Tiananmen Square has faded into memory for some Americans, it is still very much alive for ASU Chinese students who will remember the incident Sept. 12 — 100 days later.

"We are trying to commemorate those students' efforts," said Chi-Lyang Shing, ASU assistant professor of construction. The rally will take place in front of the MU.

Xin-Jie Zhu, president of the ASU Chinese Student and Scholar Friendship Association who is sponsoring the event, said the remembrance will last Sept. 6 through Sept. 12, ending with the rally.

"The purpose of this is to try to promote community and understanding," he said, adding that the group will set up an information table outside of the MU displaying articles and pictures illustrating the events in China over the summer.

Possible speakers include ASU Chinese students and someone who was arrested in the square June 4 and now resides in California.

More details about the rally will be released later this week.

This is not the first time ASU Chinese students have risen up in favor of the pro-democracy movement in China, which led to thousands of student arrests and deaths.

The day after the massacre, more than 250 mourners gathered in front of the MU chanting their outrage at the Chinese communist government and admiration for the students who lost their lives.

Since then, numerous University Chinese students have taken their cause to Associated Students of ASU, Valley media, and state and national government.

During an emergency ASASU executive committee meeting July 11, the committee unanimously supported two Congressional bills allowing Chinese nationals to change their visa status within non-immigrant categories and apply for permanent residence in the United States if they qualify.

House Bill 2712, introduced by Rep. Nancy Pelosi of California, recently passed the House.

In addition, Senate Bill 1209, introduced by Sen. Slade Gorton, passed the Senate. This bill would allow foreign student and exchange visitors the immediate right to apply for permanent residence.

Shing said this sort of legislation would give the students a safeguard.

ASASU President Paul Larson said he is pleased with the passage of the bills.

"Everyone was really excited with the outcome," he said. "As far as any official lobbying goes, we are satisfied."

ASASU Executive Vice President Mike Pressendo agreed: "I couldn't see any real reason why it wouldn't pass. I'm glad we jumped behind it."

In addition to bringing their pleas to ASASU, numerous Chinese students held press conferences to ensure that the public was aware of the devastation in their native country. But in doing so they became targets of threatening phone calls by the Chinese government.

According to Zhu, those calls have died down, and the Chinese government has been silent.

At the end of July, Zhu said he attended the inaugural meeting of the First Chinese American Students and Scholars Congress in Chicago.

"I learned that in order to fight for democracy, you need to learn what it is yourself," he said. "Now we are trying to put it into practice."

Zhu said his organization recently passed a constitution and is promoting democracy.

Although China has not been smeared across the front pages of American newspapers as much in the last month, Shing said the pro-democracy faction is still alive.

"It is very quiet above ground but the movement is still alive underground," he said, adding that the country's communist regime is on its way out.

"We believe it's not very stable," Shing said.

Rec Center

Tuition money well spent

So little joy ever comes from paying tuition.

But, although that expenditure is still a burden on bank accounts, it is a pleasure this semester actually to be able to reap the rewards of a portion of that money.

In a time when college students can rarely be happy about having to spend a little extra money, ASU has paid back students with the new Student Recreation Complex.

A haven for everyone from sun worshipers to iron pumpers, the Rec Center is, without a doubt, one of the most worthwhile and welcomed additions that has been made to this campus since the MU was born.

Even though the building tacked another $25 onto tuition costs, that minimal amount is funding a building that is destined to become one of the most heavily utilized and most often visited structures in Tempe.

For students, the building is — to steal a popular phrase — an oasis in the desert. It is a fully operational health club, with olympic-sized swimming pools, racquetball courts and a state-of-the-art weight room.

The center should quickly earn the adoration of sports and fitness enthusiasts, who for too long have been forced to either settle for subpar facilities on campus or pay exorbitant health club costs off-campus.

Three full-sized gyms offer ample space for basketball, volleyball and badminton, while the swimming pools will provide relief from the sometimes-overflow crowds at Mona Plummer Aquatic Center.

The old weight room, which was frequented by average, non-athletes (since athletes have a beautiful facility in the Intercollegiate Athletic Building), was a constant source of complaints and irritation due to its size and lack of ventilation.

But the new weight facility in the Rec Center should satisfy all those who have been frustrated in their quest to work out.

But one of the best — and best-planned — features of the center is the exercise room for the physically challenged.

Disabled students at this University often are plagued by a lack of parking spaces and inaccessible buildings and classrooms. But the expansion of the special program for these students makes ASU more agreeable to the physically handicapped.

We can only hope that students who have complained about paying the $25 fee with their tuition will take an opportunity to explore this built-in health club and re-evaluate their opinions.

A membership to the YMCA costs more than $25, and some health clubs can cost upward of $200.

Some students may clamor for waivers because they never intend to use the center, however, those students should at least take the time to see what they are missing in this structure.

Even with the ever-increasing costs of education, it is nice actually to see the benefits of a tuition expenditure.

And after so many months of enduring construction on campus, it is a joy to see something useful, and aesthetically pleasing, grow from one of those holes.

Drug war's over

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

There are 135 cops assigned to full-time narcotics duty. That's one for every 22,222 Chicagoans. So if every dealer AND cokehead did his or her selling and sniffing on a street corner in broad daylight, the local narcs couldn't keep up with them. And if they did — well, that leads us to the next problem.

Reason four: Where would we put them? The local jails, the state prisons, the federal prisons — just about every slammer in the country is overcrowded. Build more, you say? We are, and the taxpayers are already screaming that they pay too much. Hire more cops? That costs money. Build rehab centers? Drug detention camps? More money. We want it both ways — solve the problem, but don't send the bill to me.

Reason five: The local authorities say they can't cope with the drug industry, that the flow has to be stopped at the borders or at the sources. The problem is that there are thousands of ways and thousands of places to bring drugs in. And there aren't enough border patrols, Coast Guard boats and planes, federal narcs or anything else to stop the flow. And, we're not going to send troops into Columbia, Peru, Mexico or any of the other big exporting nations to shoot it out with the armies of the drug cartels. Those governments don't want us there. Even if they did, we'd have to become a permanent occupying military force, which is impossible. And once we left, they'd be back in business. Meanwhile, our importers would find other sources.

So what is the solution? Well, Mr. Bennett can keep making speeches and pleading for more federal bucks, while knowing he won't get them. And we can keep telling our children to "just say no," while a certain percentage of them will be saying yes.

Or we can say: Let's call off the war and make the best of the peace. We can view drugs the way we view liquor. If you want it, and are of legal age and have the price, you can have booze. If you want to become a lush, that's a problem for you, your liver and your family. Liquor can be a terrible curse for some people, but for most it isn't.

Yes, I'm saying that we might as well legalize the junk. Put taxes on it, license the distributors, establish age limits and treat it like hooch. If someone wants to sniff away their nose or addle their brain, so be it. They're doing it now, anyway, and at least we'd be rid of the gun battles, the corruption, and the wasted noses and effort trying to save brains and noses of those who don't want them saved.

It is this society's position that if you choose to be a falling-down drunken bum and wind up in the gutter, that is your right.

So if you want to sniff or snort or puff your way into the gutter, that should be your right, too.

Look at it this way: It's a lot easier to sweep up gutters than to fight a hopeless war.

Poor William Bennett, the nation's chief drug warrior. He's outgunned, outnumbered, underfinanced and overwhelmed. In other words, he can't win.

The other side — those who use drugs, make drugs, sell drugs and profit from drugs — has become too big and too powerful.

As we've just seen in Columbia, one of the world's biggest drug suppliers, if a presidential candidate displeases the drug kings, they just kill him.

Sure the Columbian authorities are putting on a big show rounding up the usual suspects and all that. But for what? The judges there are afraid that if they send any of the biggies to jail, they'll be murdered, too. Which they will.

And as we've just seen in this country, if the price is right, almost anyone can be corrupted. One of the top federal agents in the famous "French Connection" case was just nailed for being a part of a big drug deal. Once he was a hero chasing the bad guys. Now he's one of the bad guys.

There really isn't any "drug war" because the war has long been lost for a number of reasons.

Reason one: Popular demand. Many Americans choose to use drugs. Some are back alley crackheads who will eventually die. Others are outwardly respectable coke sniffers who will slowly screw up their lives. And still others are pot smokers who won't hurt themselves anymore than the guy who has two or three martinis after work. Drugs are used at every level of society from the ghetto to the penthouse.

Reason two: The profits are staggering. The street pusher makes big money. His supplier makes bigger bucks. The smugglers make even more. The foreign suppliers make billions. Entire governments are corrupted or intimidated. Law enforcement people, from the patrol cop up to and beyond judges, are bought off. And when bribe money doesn't talk, automatic weapons do.

Reason three: There just aren't enough cops to make a tiny dent in the drug industry. Chicago has about 3 million people, give or take a few hundred thousand illegal aliens.

That gives us one cop for every 265 people. But not really. At any given moment, some are on vacation, some on sick leave, some shuffling papers. And they're working three shifts and on weekends. So realistically, we probably don't have one working cop for every 1,500 people.

Long Overdue

Time to decriminalize this country's drug habit

Joseph Sobran
Universal Press Syndicate

WASHINGTON — A few days before our "drug czar," William Bennett, announced his new strategy to fight the drug trade, police in Lebanon, Pa., found two children, ages 7 and 9, playing drug dealer. They were selling little packets of sugar as cocaine and of grass (the lawn kind) as grass (the other kind). One officer moaned, "We just lost the war on drugs."

I agree. And it's high time we surrendered. We can surrender on reasonable terms now, or we can wait until many more people have died, and surrender unconditionally.

When our leaders talk of "war," they mean to inspire us with declarations of resolve. A real war is fought against a specific enemy whose defeat is the object. But war on impersonal things, forces and abstractions — such as poverty, terrorism and drugs — veers close to meaninglessness. How do you know when you've won?

Even in a real war, success may be hard to measure. Generals don't like to admit they're losing. They call for more troops, more money, more authority to widen the conflict.

If this is the case against flesh-and-blood foes, how much truer it's likely to be against more elusive realities. The "war on poverty" was supposed to end poverty. It didn't. It may have worsened it. All we really know is that this "war" has given us expensive and sometimes corrupt bureaucracies, like HUD. The staggering amounts of illegal drug money sloshing around would make bribery an even greater temptation to the anti-drug troops than is already the case in other government agencies.

Two items have clinched the argument for me. One is the estimate of Llewellyn Rockwell of Ludwig von Mises Institute that decriminalizing drugs would cut street crime 75 percent. If that figure is anywhere near accurate, it's hard to imagine any consideration on the other side that could contravene it.

The other decisive fact is that drugs are out of control even in our prisons. If that's the case, turning the entire nation into a prison would not solve the problem.

The word "problem" reminds me again of James Burnham's dictum: "When there's no solution, there's no problem." In that sense a certain range of drug use and abuse is not so much a problem that can be banished as a condition that has to be coped with.

We have reached the point where what we mean by the "drug problem" is less the consumption of drugs than the violence associated with their distribution. The gang warfare of the Prohibition era never constituted a daily menace to ordinary citizens remotely approaching the nationwide terror that prevails in our cities now.

Prohibition was not a total failure; few things are. But it was a net failure. We still have alcohol abuse, but distributing whiskey doesn't get people killed anymore. Decriminalizing drugs would probably bring a marginal increase in drug consumption (though commercial drugs could be made safer than the uncontrolled substances in the streets, such as crack). But the main thing is that a criminal industry would be destroyed, and the sale of drugs would become nonviolent.

Notice I say "decriminalizing," not anything goes, laissez-faire legalizing. Drugs would still be banned from minors. The restricted adult market would be less profitable, and the risk of penalties for giving drugs to kids would hardly be worth the little money to be gained from it. Decriminalizing drugs for adults might actually reduce consumption by minors.

Americans are a moralistic people, and they tend to think that whatever is immoral should be illegal. By the same token, they tend to assume that whatever is legal must be a "right." But permitting drugs need not imply social approval. Legal liability (as for driving under the influence) would impose other constraints. Partial legalization would make drug abuse more legally reachable.

I have come to this position slowly and reluctantly, knowing how serious an irreversible mistake can be. But we are already making the mistake, and it's reversible. In an act of impressive political courage Baltimore's Mayor Kurt Schmoke has made a similar proposal.

Like so many things in life, decriminalizing drugs would be a sad compromise, an admission of defeat. But defeat is what you court when you attempt the impossible.

For decades we've been decapitating drug dealers. That may work in Iran, but in America the heads grow back, and the beast has more heads now than when we started. We can't kill it. Let's domesticate it.

Golf

Considering the discussion we had, everyone came to a consensus that that (allowing alcohol outside the clubhouse) would not be an ideal situation."

Regent Andy Hurwitz, meanwhile, said it was his "recollection" that alcohol would not be consumed outside the clubhouse.

"I know that we agreed that they couldn't sell it," he said, adding that "it wouldn't trouble me" if golfers drank alcohol on the course.

Lawrence said: "They can only buy it at the clubhouse. They cannot bring it on the premises.

"Maybe this needs to be reviewed further."

If alcohol is permitted on the course, the policy could leave many students tee-d off, or at least green with envy, since University policy forbids alcohol on campus except in dormitories, at tailgate parties or in the luxurious new skyboxes during Phoenix Cardinals games.

Amending the golf course policy would mark the second time the regents have amended the alcohol policy in the last 15 months, since the board, by a 6-2 vote last June, decided to permit drinking in the skyboxes.

The golf course is funded by contributions solicited by a Sun Angel Foundation campaign, which has netted more than $6 million of the $7.3 million goal. The Sun Angels are expecting alcohol sales to contribute about $100,000 a year.

After the vote in July, Bob Davies, the executive director of the Sun Angels, said he had no problem with the policy and that it would not be difficult to confine alcohol to the clubhouse.

ASU officials have agreed that alcohol will not be sold during college events at the course, which will be used primarily by the golf teams, students, faculty, staff and alumni.

All of the 92 golf courses in Maricopa County that serve refreshments also sell alcoholic beverages.

Meanwhile, the next phase of the Sun Angels' money-raising campaign will be to fund a clubhouse. A temporary modular building will function as the clubhouse for the course, which is slated to open Friday.

The permanent clubhouse will house cart storage, locker rooms, equipment storage, a spacious patio and a meeting room.

New plan rids frats of pledging system

By KIMBERLY HARRIS
State Press

In an attempt to alleviate the traditional "Animal House" reputation of the Greek System, the national leadership of two of the country's largest fraternities have announced a plan to rid the system of pledging, the ASU Greek Life coordinator said.

However, other fraternities on campus do not agree with the plan.

Tau Kappa Epsilon, which has a local chapter on campus, and Zeta Beta Tau, which has a chapter at the UofA, are the first fraternities to alter the process of new member enrollment.

The decision by the two national fraternities to end traditional pledging programs, which are often blamed for encouraging the physical or mental abuse of initiates by older members, was prompted by recent attention focused on negative aspects of fraternity life.

Although few incidents of hazing have been reported recently at ASU, the Phi Gamma Delta (FIJI) fraternity was placed on probation and forced to vacate their campus house in 1988 because of hazing charges filed by several pledges.

Kevin Scott, president of TKE at ASU, said that new members will no longer be called "pledges," but will be known as associate members, and will become active members after a six-week period.

"We see it as a way to reaffirm the good things about us, and we need to redirect our energies to do the things we were intended for," said Vicky Hersh, Greek Life coordinator.

Honors plan adds business classes

By RICHARD LAMPING
State Press

ASU's College of Business has expanded its honors program to offer upper-division classes starting in the fall of 1990 in an effort to recruit more qualified high school and junior-college students.

Stephen Happel, an associate professor of economics and acting director of the new program, said, "through the honors program we will be able to provide an enriched education for our best students."

"All of the (Business) College's students will benefit indirectly, as the program will enhance the reputation of the College of Business overall," he said.

The program's expansion will provide more honors courses, bring more top business leaders to speak at the college and establish increased job-placement assistance. In addition, the program will provide more opportunities for students and faculty to socialize.

Sandy Dahlberg, honors adviser for the college, said the program will be an extension of the ASU Honors College.

Dahlberg said honors classes have been available for lower-division classes, but the main difference is "now (the College of Business) is going to make available upper-division courses."

The program was developed by a committee of the college's faculty and approved by faculty members last spring.

Every year about 10 to 20 juniors in the various business majors will be chosen from the most academically qualified lower-division students as well as incoming transfer students.

Coincidence started White on path to leadership

By JOIE ANN LaPOLLA
State Press

Faculty Senate President Harold "Hal" White dropped out of college during his sophomore year because he was "sick of school."

But White recovered from his "illness" after an encounter in a gas station that led to a teaching career spanning 23 years and ultimately to the position of Senate president.

"I dropped out and had a family business and picked out the girl of my dreams," White said. "I was working at a service station when this fella came in and wanted his car greased. It turned out that he was a faculty member at CalTech and after 45 minutes of talking, he thought I was skilled to go into university teaching."

So White went back to school, received his bachelor's and master's degrees in business from the University of Oregon and began teaching business courses at the University of Idaho and the University of Florida.

He also received his doctorate in management from the University of Florida. In 1966, White came to teach at ASU. Since then he has served on numerous committees and boards.

Now he is head of the Senate, which represents more than 1,600 faculty members and is considered one of the most influential bodies on campus.

"I need to know people where I work, and I need to know the organization where I am," White said. "I like to influence what's going on."

One of the ways White wants to influence the ASU community is to initiate an increase in faculty salaries. The salary base for state employees has not increased in accordance with the cost of living, and Arizona is far behind the national average, White said.

"I don't know what we can do because it is a complex situation," White said. "The problem is the rough economic situation in Arizona. We are losing relative to the rest of the nation."

In addition to pushing for pay raises, White aims to limit class size. He said large classes "limit the amount of learning."

Currently, there is a committee within the Senate that is studying class size and will release a report this year.

Although White said the faculty is not looking at all classes, the problem is a University-wide issue.

"(We are concerned) about the quality of instruction," White said. "It is a concern to faculty and students."

Many of the president's duties involve attending ASU administrative meetings and various organizations on campus, he said.

Last year, White served as the vice chair of the College of Business Faculty Council, which serves an equivalent function of the Faculty Senate but for the College of Business.

"I think highly of him and think he's going to do an excellent job," said Council Chair Andrew Haried, who has worked with White for the past 19 years. "He'll provide strong leadership, energetic leadership, and he is perceptive and sensitive to the issues the faculty are facing."

Also during last year, White was Senate president-elect and shadowed then-Senate President Kristin Valentine.

"She was very good in keeping me posted about what was going on," White said. "It was a real internship for me."

White, who began his term June 1, chose not to teach courses this semester in order to devote his time to the Senate, he said. He is also involved with diverse committees and boards and has been asked to chair ASU President Lattie Coor's inauguration.

"I guess you get asked so you do it," White said. "I feel a lot of loyalty to ASU or I wouldn't spend so much time or service with activities."

A cross-country skier and amateur artist, White recently finished his term as president of the executive board of the East Valley Catholic Social Services program. The service provides support for underprivileged people. White handled budgeting, public relations and policy making.

Aside from the boards, committees, meetings and classes, White said he is "just a simple guy." And he clearly remembers the day when he decided to go back to school.

"It captured my imagination," White said. "I like teaching. The fun thing is that there is seldom a Wall Street Journal issue that there isn't something quotable for class."

"It's an ongoing type of thing which is exactly the type of thing for me."

But White said his political career will probably end when his presidency is up at the end of the academic year.

Scott Troyanoa/State Press

Faculty Senate President Harold "Hal" White says he wants to initiate an increase in faculty salaries and a decrease in class sizes during his yearlong term.

"I'll be back in the classroom for at least seven more years and be on some more committees," White said. "I don't know how I could just keep coming back (if it was not) for the interaction with students. Man, I like the students."

Returning to pimples, puberty and problem parents

72-year-old lends a hand to teens, parents as liaison

By ADRIANE HOPKINS
State Press

A 72-year-old ASU liaison is long past pimples and puberty but his current job involves giving advice to teen-agers on how to cope with nagging parents, sibling rivalry, acne and dating.

William Abraham also offers advice to parents on how to discuss sex with their teens and how to react when the kids talk too long on the phone.

Abraham works part-time as a University liaison to help place students trained in elementary, secondary and special education into student teaching positions in six schools in Scottsdale.

In addition, Abraham writes two columns for the syndicated Copley News Service based in San Diego to help parents and teen-agers better understand each other.

Abraham said writing columns for parents and teen-agers is fulfilling and a learning experience.

The columnist, who has helped raise three children, said he knows what parents worry about when raising their teen-agers.

"In my own experience of raising three children, I know about dealing with discipline issues, sibling rivalry and other teen-ager issues that arise," he said.

Abraham has been writing a weekly question-and-answer column called "Our Children," aimed at parents, for the news service since 1972. Last April, the news service asked him to write a daily column for teen-agers called "For Teens."

His advice columns are published in more than 250 newspapers across the country.

His "Our Children" column previously ran in the Phoenix Gazette Tempo section before it was discontinued. The Gazette would not say why they decided not to use it any longer.

Nanette Wisner, editorial director for Copley News Service, praised Abraham's style of writing and ability to convey advice.

"Dr. Abraham has the ability to speak to parents, teen-agers in small cities, rural areas and large cities (because of syndication)," she said. "He is the easiest writer to work with and never misses a deadline."

"He believes in the craft of writing, where the writer shares the information instead of telling it. Family advice columns are the most in demand these days."

In addition, Abraham currently writes a monthly community column for the Scottsdale Progress on issues that are important to today's society.

His column topics include preventing pool drownings and teenage suicides.

Steve Wilson, editor of the Scottsdale Progress, said the monthly column adds insight to the paper.

"It's nice to have people in the community like Dr. Abraham that add to the newspaper," he said.

Because of his teaching experience, Abraham said too many people in the field write for popularity reasons.

"In the education field, it seems people write to be published," he said. "People who are in the writing field seem to write for each other."

Abraham received a bachelor's of art degree in education from the Illinois

Institute of Technology and his master's degree in education from the Chicago Teachers School also in Illinois.

He graduated from Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill. with a doctorate degree in education, psychology and sociology.

Each week Abraham receives between 20 to 30 letters for his "Our Children" column.

He said he offers direct advice to parents and sometimes refers the parents to counselors if necessary.

"Most parents write in with questions on how to handle discipline problems, alcohol and drug problems and how to discuss sex with their children," Abraham said. "Parents are concerned about their teen-agers, but some parents don't realize that their teen-agers need independence, which is a gradual process."

"(On the other hand) teens write in looking for advice on how to get more time on the telephone and how to deal with their brothers and sisters. I also have a lot of questions dealing with relationships and dating."

Abraham said he hopes the advice he offers helps parents and teen-agers understand themselves and each other.

"In most cases, the background for advice is just plain common sense," he said.

"I think they should speed things up," said Tanya Holmes, president of the ASU chapter of the NAACP. "It's the University's responsibility to give an answer, and they haven't done that."

Oliver resigned from the three-member panel last week because Richard joined the Phoenix Police Department last week as a legal adviser.

"He didn't want to give the perception that it (the investigation) was one-sided," said Richard, a former deputy Maricopa County attorney.

William O. Smith, senior minister of Shadow Rock Congregational Church, in determining if ASU police broke any department policies, law enforcement standards or state laws when they took two black ASU students into "protective custody" on April 15 in front of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity house.

The students were the only people arrested in a brawl that began when they were attacked by white fraternity members who mistook them for suspects in an earlier assault on an SAE member. The students said ASU police roughed them up and humiliated them in front of a mob of white fraternity members.

Meanwhile, the U.S. Department of Justice is still deciding whether to prosecute the ASU officers involved in the incident for any civil rights violations, said Deborah Burstion-Wade, a Justice Department spokeswoman.

The case was forwarded to the Justice Department in late July following an investigation by the FBI's Phoenix office.

Fraternity

But Scott Streitfeld, president of ASU's Sigma Chi fraternity, does not think the banning of pledgship is practical for the system.

"I don't agree with the associate member program because there is no trial period to see whether or not the person can make grades, is loyal or will even get along with the other members," he said. "The word 'pledge' does't necessarily mean hazing is involved. At Sigma Chi, the word pledgship is a time to cultivate and maintain the high ideals of friendship, justice and learning."

On the other hand, Scott said the associate member idea will work.

"We wanted this change to be a gradual one, and as each semester approaches, we will decrease the number of weeks down to four, then two, etcetera," he said. "I think it's a definite step in the right direction for us and the Greek System. Our goal is to eliminate words such as hazing and pledges."

Hersh said that other houses on campus will adapt similar measures in the future.

For example, ASU's Phi Sigma Kappa secretary Jesse Filayson said: "Our program is a semester-long program to help keep the structure sound so the new members can learn about the house. We feel that a guy doesn't have to be hazed to learn about the house."

Other fraternities that have adapted simliar programs are ASU's Alpha Epsilon Pi and Lambda Chi Alpha.

However, Tim Miller, pledge trainer of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, said each fraternity has a different program and pledgship may work for some houses.

"The SAE pledgship program gives the new member a better sense of belonging," he said. "The more time and effort that is put into pledgship the more satisfying activation will be."

Steve Orrick, an SAE pledge, gave a firsthand perspective.

"It's necessary to be a pledge because it's a way to get to know the history and brotherhood," he said. "I would rather work into it gradually than rush into activation after such a short period of time."

Jack W. Beasley Jr./State Press

The Phi Gamma Delta fraternity was placed on probation and forced to vacate their campus house in 1988 because of hazing charges filed by several pledges. In response to negative national attention some fraternities have begun to review their pledgship programs.

ASU's 13th dorm will house 2,000 students when finished

By KIMBERLY HARRIS
State Press

After more than two decades of a residence hall construction standstill, ASU's 13th dorm is taking shape on the south end of campus and will accommodate more than 2,000 students, the director of residence life said.

Cliff Osborne said that after the new residence hall's five phases are completed, the entire dorm system on campus will house about 15 percent of ASU's population.

The new South Campus Residence Hall Complex will be bounded by the railroad tracks on the south, McAllister Avenue on the west, Rural Road and Sunset Road on the east and by Apache Boulevard and Spence Road on the north. An official name has not yet been determined.

The $10 million first phase of the project — expected to be ready for the 1990 fall semester — will house 404 students and the resident building staff.

In a prepared statement, Cliff Osborne, director of the office of Residence Life, stated: "One of the goals of the University is to increase the number of students who live on campus."

In the new hall, students will be housed in four-person suites, sharing a space that includes two bedrooms, a living room and a bathroom, Osborne said. The suites will also include the utilities and plumbing to add kitchenettes.

Also included in the first phase is the construction of a pool; the expansion of Sahuaro Hall cafeteria, a central plant/warehouse building for the office of Residence Life and a Residential Education Center, he added.

Osborne said the center will serve as a community meeting place for all occupants of resident halls on campus. Activities will include educational programs for campus residents, workshops, information sessions and recreational activities such as movies and dances.

The entire project is designed with a Southwestern flair, with block and stucco buildings using earthtones, he said. The hall will be built around a courtyard designed for recreational use by the residents, and it will rise to a height of five stories.

In a prepared statement, Osborne explained: "The idea is to reflect the structure of some of the mountains in this area. The concept of the shape will resemble 'A' Mountain and will use earthtone colors found in the Grand Canyon."

Although no existing buildings will be torn down for the first phase, the completed complex will require the disposal of Adelphi Drive, Mariposa Hall and Sahuaro Hall.

To help fund the dorm, ASU room and board fees have been increased by 5 percent and an auxiliary bond has been established.

Judge narrows conspiracy charges against Poindexter

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge Monday granted a government request to narrow a conspiracy charge in the Iran-Contra indictment against former National Security Adviser John Poindexter.

U. S. District Court Judge Harold Greene agreed to drop allegations of a conspiracy by Poindexter and others to illegally divert funds to the Contras from the Reagan administration's secret arms sales to Iran.

Remaining in the indictment are allegations that Poindexter conspired to obstruct Congress, make false statements and destroy official documents in the Iran-Contra scandal. His alleged co-conspirators were former White House aide Oliver North and businessmen Richard Secord and Albert Hakim. North enlisted Secord's help in running arms to the Contras during a congressional ban in military aid to the Nicaraguan rebel force.

Poindexter also is accused of two counts of obstruction of Congress and two counts of making false statements to Congress. Those counts relate to denials that North was assisting the Contras and denials that Poindexter knew that Hawk missiles were aboard a November 1985 shipment to Iran.

Independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, whose office is prosecuting Poindexter, had sought to abandon portions of the conspiracy charge to avoid problems relating to the disclosure of classified information.

U. S. intelligence agencies in the North trial were concerned that too much material relating to sensitive national security matters would come out in court in a trial of the conspiracy charge relating to the diversion of funds.

The Justice Department has the power to file an affidavit prohibiting disclosure of such sensitive information, an action which could lead to dismissal of some or all of the criminal charges in a case.

Architecture school seeks qualified chief

By KELLY JAIN
State Press

The new director of the ASU School of Architecture should be able to cope with the expanding interests of the architectural world, the dean of the College of Architecture and Environmental Design said.

John Meunier said the search for a new director of the school, housed within the College of Architecture, will begin Friday, and candidates should have a knowledge of what the school offers, including scientific research and electronic studios.

"The ideal candidate should have a breadth of interest so that all of the concerns the school has developed will get attention," he said. "We want someone who will grow in stature nationally and internationally."

The search for the School of Architecture director actually began last year, but three candidates withdrew their names for personal reasons, Meunier said.

Associate Dean Richard Eribes, chairman of the nine-member search committee, said applications are now being accepted and the new director is expected to be named by January.

John "Jack" Peterson, the acting director of the School of Architecture, said he is not a candidate for the permanent position because of his commitment to teaching and his own consulting practice. Those duties would make it almost impossible for him to "wear the permanent hat," he said.

Eribes said the committee will begin reviewing applications in October and start inviting candidates for interviews in November.

Meunier said students will take part in the interviewing process, and their comments are important in picking a new director. Ethan Hine is the student committee member.

In December, the committee will recommend a list of potential candidates to Meunier's office, Eribes said. At that time Meunier will review and evaluate the recommendations and make his choice, he added.

Although the search is on for a permanent director, the school is progressing with its goals, Peterson said.

For example, the school's first urban design studio opens this fall in downtown Phoenix. The studio is a joint project with ASU and the city, which allocated a $60,000 grant.

Oprah, Ann-Margret meet on TV Guide

LOS ANGELES (AP) — People who think Oprah Winfrey looks impossibly slim on the cover of this week's TV Guide are right — the talk show queen's face was superimposed on actress Ann-Margret's hourglass figure.

Appearing under the headline "Oprah! The Richest Woman on TV/" the illustration of Miss Winfrey in a gauzy dress atop a pile of money is not identified as a composite.

And TV Guide acknowledged Monday that unsuspecting readers might think it's a real photograph.

The lean body upon which Oprah's head rests is from a publicity shot of Ann-Margret, according to the actress' publicist, George Kirvay. The photo comes from a "Rockette" special Ann-Margret did about 10 years ago, Kirvay said.

"I think she was shocked," Kirvay said of Ann-Margret's reaction to TV Guide's cover for the Aug. 26-Sept. 1 issue. "If you look at the two pictures, they're identical. It's even her ring on Oprah's hand."

The formerly overweight Miss Winfrey, who lost 67 pounds on a diet in 1988, had no part whatsoever in the cover's making, said Christine Tardio, a spokeswoman for Miss Winfrey's Harpo production company.

"Oprah would not pose on a pile of money like that nor would she pose in that revealing a dress. It's not something she would ever do," Ms. Tardio said.

David Sendler, TV Guide's national section editor, acknowledged the illustration could be mistaken for a photograph. He said an artist had used the Ann-Margret shot for creative inspiration.

"Ann-Margret should be thrilled because she's got another TV Guide cover," Sendler said. "And Oprah should be thrilled because she looks terrific."

But Sendler said TV Guide had instructed the artist "not to use photographs so literally" in the future.

City Council plans 2nd bridge for Rio Salado

By LAURA SCHMIDT
State Press

The Tempe City Council plans to vote next year on a design and exact location for a second bridge across the Rio Salado riverbed next to the historic Mill Avenue bridge.

The proposal to build the second bridge, which could be open by 1992, is part of a development effort to make traffic flow smoother and phase out the riverbed crossing north of Mill Avenue.

At a hearing on the proposal Monday night, Bill Kersbergen, an ASU architecture graduate student, said he would like to see a modern bridge built in contrast to the existing bridge because the two opposite styles would be more visually appealing.

"At the same time it doesn't rip off the old bridge," he said. Kersbergen added that he would like to see traffic flowing into Tempe on the existing bridge because, historically, that is the way it has always been done.

Councilwoman Judy Greenberg said it is difficult to tell if the council will vote on a bridge design that resembles the existing bridge or a more modern style.

"I think partly it will depend on location," she said.

Jim Jones, Tempe public works director, said the cost of the new bridge is estimated at $4 million and will be funded by the Arizona Department of Transportation. The cost may change depending on the chosen design.

The city has hired Parsons Brinckerhoff Inc., a Tempe engineering firm, to study potential locations and designs for the second bridge.

Tempe Mayor Harry Mitchell said the purpose of the study is to find out the impact the bridge will have on the existing bridge in terms of placement and design.

Because of periodic flooding in the past 10 years, Dennis Davis, environmental and planning manager with the Parsons firm, said it is important to keep traffic out of the riverbed.

Currently, northbound traffic on Mill Avenue is normally routed down through the riverbed, while southbound traffic flows over the bridge.

City officials want the second bridge completed by 1992, when the East Papago freeway is expected to open in that area. The new bridge will be similar in length to the existing Mill Avenue bridge and is projected to help serve a traffic volume of 39,000 vehicles daily, Davis said.

He said the East Papago freeway will rise over the new Mill Avenue bridge between Curry Road and the riverbank, and the bridge will need to pass underneath the piers supporting the freeway.

"The process we are going through is to identify constraints and alternatives," he said.

Davis presented five possible bridge alignment plans to the council during the Monday hearing in the city council chambers.

Depending on what the council decides in terms of the bridge's site later this year, Davis said a slight curve may be necessary to connect to Mill Avenue on both sides of the riverbed.

Although the 59-year-old Mill Avenue bridge is structurally sound, there will be about $500,000 worth of repairs needed in the next 10 to 15 years to keep it operative, Davis said.

The Tempe City Council will vote on the design and the location of the new bridge next year, after a public hearing in December.

Owls in danger

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — A U.S. Forest Service biologist Monday questioned his agency's commitment to the northern spotted owl, saying logging has been allowed near two of the bird's 11 nests in the Siuslaw National Forest.

Norm Barrett testified at the last in a series of four U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service hearings on whether to list the spotted owl as a threatened species, a move being vehemently resisted by the timber industry.

Barrett said officials in the Siuslaw National Forest in western Oregon recently allowed logging within 100 yards of two of the 11 breeding pairs known to exist on the forest.

"It worries me that on a forest with only 11 breeding pairs of owls, they can endanger two of their pairs," Barrett said.

Willamette National Forest supervisor Mike Kerrick said 70 percent of the remaining spotted owl habitat in the Northwest is in national forests and the U.S. Forest Service had a mandate to provide for the "long-term viability of the spotted owl."

The timber industry maintains that if the owl is listed as threatened, thousands of jobs will be lost to preserve old-growth forests as its habitat. Such forests are where the biggest and most valuable timber is found.

Mourners remember Black Panther co-founder

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Mourners filled a church Monday to remember Huey P. Newton as he lived, not as he died.

All 1,200 seats of the Allen Temple Baptist Church were taken for the funeral of the Black Panther Party co-founder, who was shot to death in what police allege was a dispute over crack cocaine. Hundreds more people milled about outside the building.

"We're here to celebrate his life, not to discuss his death," said Elaine Brown, head of the Panthers from 1974 to 1977 and now a writer living in Southern California. "We don't need counter-revolutionary fratricide. He'll be remembered as a hero."

"I just think it is very important for me to be here," said the Rev. Y. Stevens of the Third Baptist Church in San Francisco. "He has been an inspiration to the young black people. Somewhere along the line he may have fallen, but in the early days I admired his mission."

Church officials said the service would feature a lengthy list of speakers, including H. Rap Brown, leader of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, and Bobby Seale, who joined with Newton to establish the Panthers in 1966.

'(Newton) will be remembered as a hero.'
— Elaine Brown

On Sunday, a wake for Newton drew 6,000 mourners in a rare public show of support for the "black power" politics he espoused in the 1960s.

"This here is for those who really meant a lot to Huey: the people who needed him the most, the everyday people from the streets," said Hillary Jones, standing in line Sunday as people filed through a mortuary two at a time to view his body.

"This kind of turnout for what Huey once stood for hasn't been seen in a long time around here," added Jones, 48, who described herself as a sympathizer with politics of the Black Panther Party, which dissolved in the mid-seventies.

Also today, a self-proclaimed prison gang member and drug dealer who police say admitted killing Newton faced arraignment on a homicide charge in Alameda County Municipal Court.

"This is a terrible tragedy for blacks. He stood for black pride in the sixties, and now he stands for the decimation of blacks by crack," said LeRoy Johnson, 44, as he waited to attend the daylong wake.

Newton, 47, was shot to death Tuesday in what police said was a dispute over crack cocaine in the drug-ridden west Oakland neighborhood where he began organizing blacks more than 20 years ago.

He founded the Black Panther Party with Bobby Seale in 1966, and as its minister of defense became one of the most articulate leaders of the black militancy movement. The party dissolved in the mid-seventies.

However, many in line at the funeral home said they didn't believe the police account of Newton's death and blamed it on authorities.

"The police were always after Huey," said Jeffrey de Leong, 28. "The Man got him."

Police said Tyrone Robinson, a 25-year-old member of the Black Guerrilla Family, admitted shooting Newton in self-defense after Newton brandished a gun and demanded crack shortly before dawn Tuesday. Newton had a history of drug and alcohol abuse.

Robber was armed —with a hairbrush

BOSTON (AP) — A jury acted correctly when it convicted a man of armed assault with intent to rob for trying to hold up a restaurant while armed with a hairbrush, the state Court of Appeals ruled Monday.

Christopher Johnson's previous five tries at robbing Boston's Dragon Inn Restaurant, four of them while brandishing a firearm, made it reasonable for employees to assume he was armed when he made a sixth attempt, the court said.

"To the cashier and night cook of the Dragon Inn Restaurant . . . the defendant Johnson had become a familiar face," Appeals Court Justice Rudolph Kass wrote in a unanimous opinion.

Johnson was shot and apprehended on the sixth attempt, Kass said. Police found no gun on him, only a hairbrush.

Johnson was convicted on five grand jury indictments of armed robbery and one indictment of armed assault with intent to commit robbery.

Cops launch crackdown on 'mall rats'

BOSTON (AP) — A minor crackdown on "mall rats" at a few Massachusetts shopping centers runs counter to the thinking at most retail arcades, where free-spending kids are given a lot of space.

"Teens have a large retail impact at the malls, so to lose them would be to lose a lot," said Peter Zollo, president of Teenage Research Unlimited, a Chicago-based firm that compiles spending statistics.

Even though their video displays and junk food havens act as magnets for bored youngsters on hot summer afternoons, some mall managers said Monday that loiterers aren't welcome.

And in several cases, kids have been arrested for trespassing.

Last month, a 14-year-old was picked up while waiting for his mother at Shoppers' World in Framingham, Mass. police said. At least four other such arrests have been made at the same mall this summer and similar incidents have been reported elsewhere.

Jamie LeBlanc, 15, said he and his pals frequent The Watertown Mall and regularly spend money on the latest tapes and newest fashions. Lately, he said, they've repeatedly run into trouble.

"I was sitting in Dunkin' Donuts with my friends, and a cop tapped his billy club on my shoulder and told me to get out," said LeBlanc, who had bought a cup of coffee. "I was just sitting there smoking a cigarette, not bothering anyone."

Zollo said taking a hard line on teen-age conduct could be instant death for shopkeepers and cinema owners who rent space in malls expressly because of the ready audience.

Every year, youngsters between the ages of 12 and 19 spend $31.3 billion of their own money at shops nationwide and account for $79 billion in retail business when the money their parents gives them is factored in, Zollo's research found.

Last week alone, 13 million teen-agers bought movie tickets and during the summer nearly 65 percent of the nation's 27 million teen-agers saw at least one feature, he said.

"Obviously malls hold two functions for teens," Zollo said. "One is of a social nature and the other is shopping. They do both there, and the more time they spend, the more money they spend."

Mall owners agreed they don't want to discourage teens from coming, but said they have to draw the line somewhere.

Institute helps Native Americans

By MICHELLE HENRY
State Press

Native American students have a resourceful companion to turn to at ASU.

The American Indian Institute, whose primary purpose is to work with Native American students and to combat the problems of recruitment and retention of minority students, is located in the lower level of the Anthropology Building.

The AII has been established on campus through Arizona Legislature bill HB 2108, which was signed by Gov. Rose Mofford. The bill appropriated funds to ASU through fiscal year 1994 to address the needs of Native American students.

'The American Indian population has by and large been underrepresented.'

— Cal Seciwa

Director Cal Seciwa said the AII, which began in January 1989, will focus its attention on several objectives this year.

"We hope to emphasize retention services and concentrate our resources and staff on programs such as tutorial services, academic advisement and student support," he said.

Seciwa said seminars will be offered during the first two weeks of school. Subjects scheduled include student budgets, assertiveness, study skills and early research methods.

"Many of our students do not participate in ASU's orientation because of financial reasons," Seciwa said. "We are trying to give them basic survival skills."

"A good percentage of ASU's Indian population comes from Arizona. Of the 500 students we have, 60 to 70 percent come from rural areas and reservations. We want to interact with them as a family and share our support."

Seciwa said the AII will participate with the American Indian Alumnae Association to develop a mentor program.

"We are trying to work with special sections of ASU to encourage our students," he said.

The ASU English department will be offering a section of ENG101 to Native American students with a supportive, encouraging and non-threatening atmosphere.

"The American Indian population has by and large been underrepresented," Seciwa said. "In Arizona, there are 8 to 9 percent of Native Americans. ASU has less than 5 percent."

"Our efforts here are to address reasons for sound retention and be able to work and complement ASU's efforts. We will cover recruitment areas that ASU is not currently covering, such as areas outside of Arizona."

Seciwa added that the AII's seven-member staff also will serve as a liaison to tribal communities, governments and organizations.

"We want to serve in ways of technical assistants, educators and researchers in economic development," he said.

Bilingual program given $1.9 million

By RICHARD LAMPING
State Press

Mountain States Multifunctional Resource Center, which is located at the ASU College of Education, has received a $1.9 million contract to finance its bilingual programs.

The U.S. Department of Education's office of Bilingual Education and Minority Language Affairs allocated the funds to the center. It is one of 16 bilingual development programs in the country.

The contract the center received is given out every three years, and each institution must reapply. ASU has received the contract since 1983.

The center assists 75 school districts, grades K through 12 in a five-state area, in implementing Title VII, which gives federal funding for bilingual programs.

Rodolfo Chavez, the center's director, said the program is important because it teaches students English as a second language. In addition, it allows them to keep up with other students while using their native language for classwork.

Chavez directed a similar center at the University of Colorado and is currently president of the National Association for Bilingual Education.

"There are still a number of children who speak (only) a native language, and they must be taught in the language they know best," Chavez said. He added that it is federal law for students to be taught in the language they most easily learn.

The center also coordinates bilingual teaching efforts with state departments of education and works with universities and colleges on teacher training programs.

"(The center's) relationship with the College of Education is advantageous," Chavez said, "because of the college's extensive experience and research in bilingual education."

College costs soar, leave students scrambling for funds

By College Press Service

For the ninth year in a row, the price students pay to attend college has risen faster than the inflation rate, the National College Board says.

Educators and other adult observers bemoaned the increases, yet generally thought the price of college remained affordable. Students, on the other hand, seemed to greet the news with more alarm.

"I keep seeing it increase, but there's no (financial aid) help and not a lot of improvements," said Southwestern Oklahoma State University junior Ronda Mills. "Several of my friends are unable to be here because of it."

Mills and her classmates registered at Southwestern Oklahoma Aug. 22 to find their tuition had risen 17 percent, to $1,160.

"If they hike tuition again next year I'm not coming back," declared Melissa Lopez, a University of New Mexico junior. Despite an eight-day student occupation of President Gerald May's office last spring, UNM officials raised the annual in-state tuition $100 to $1,372.

Nationwide, collegians will pay an average of 5 to 9 percent more for tuition and fees this academic year, the College Board reported in its just-released annual tuition survey. The general inflation rate for the 12 months ending in June was 5.2 percent.

At public four-year schools, average tuition and fees is up 7 percent, to $1,694. Students at private schools will pay an average of $8,737, 9 percent more than in 1988-89.

Two-year public schools raised their tuition 5 percent to $842. Two-year private schools hiked their prices an average of 7 percent, to $4,713.

In addition to higher tuition, the College Board said students can expect to pay 6 to 7 percent more for on-campus room and board.

About the only official who expressed much worry about the jumps was U. S. Department of Education Sec. Lauro Cavazos.

"I am increasingly concerned about the growing gap between the price of higher education and what students can afford," Cavazos said. "Every leader in higher education must make holding costs down a priority."

In fact, colleges are doing an "extraordinary" job of holding down their costs, maintained Richard Rosser of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, based in Washington, D.C.

As a result, higher education remains "within the reach of virtually every qualified student," asserted College Board President Donald Stewart in releasing the report.

He said students who don't have the money themselves can get it from some $26 billion worth of financial aid available to collegians this year.

Kent Halstead of Research Associates, also of Washington, added that his 1988 study of college prices concluded tuition rates remain about the same percentage of average American incomes as they were two decades ago.

Consequently, Halstead believed college is still "a good buy."

College will continue to be a bargain until "people say they can't afford as much education as they want," he said. "If a student says he can't go because of financial problems, then it's too high."

Some students argue tuition has reached that point. "If it were any higher, I'd have to drop out," said UNM student Lisa Rivas, who supports herself through federal loans and a work-study job at the school's financial aid office. "I see a lot of students in here who are breaking down over the increase."

Not all schools raised tuition, though. Southern Arkansas University cut money from equipment, travel and other budgets to avoid raising its rates. "This is a trade-off between getting as much quality as we can afford and keeping students here who might drop out," said President Harold Brinson in announcing the decision.

New York Gov. Mario Cuomo vetoed a proposed $220 a year tuition hike for the City University of New York system May 2, but only after students at 16 of the system's 18 campuses took over administration buildings in protest.

More typically, Fairleigh Dickinson University in New Jersey raised tuition about 9 percent to $7,534. At the University of Miami, students will shell out $11,880 for tuition this year, $1,079 more than a year ago.

Western Michigan University students will pay $1,866 this year, 15 percent more than last year. Portland Community College enrollees will pay $705 this year, $30 more than last year.

Some schools are opting to charge new students more than current ones.

The University of Chicago and Duke, Johns Hopkins, Seton Hall and George Washington universities all have announced two-tiered plans in which new students will be hit with bigger increases than those imposed on upperclass students.

At Duke, new Arts and Sciences students will pay $12,800 per year, $1,450 more than returning students.

For all the complaining, students do seem willing to pay. "It's incredibly high," senior Delia Reid said of her tuition at Bennington College in Vermont, which at $16,495, is the highest in the country. "But it's worth it. If you don't have a penny and they want you to come here, they'll make sure you can."

Coor grew up with ASU athletics

By JOEL HORN
State Press

ASU President Lattie Coor, who takes office in January, said he is a staunch supporter of college athletics, calling it "the best competition in the country."

"When it's done right, it fits into the University and its values," he said.

Coor said ASU's membership in the Pac-10 Conference is one of "the most appealing and promising" aspects of its athletic program. The "high quality of competition" in the conference and its "absolutely clean programs" contribute to its respectability, he added.

"A conference more than anything shapes what a university does," he said.

Coor said his father, Lattie Coor Sr., lettered in football at ASU in 1928, and his parents have been Sun Devil season ticket holders for many years.

"I grew up in the presence of ASU athletics," he said.

Coor said he is encouraged by conversations he has had with ASU Athletic Director Charles Harris, Head Football Coach Larry Marmie and other athletic department officials.

"ASU has an athletically successful program," he said. "It is solid in terms of past NCAA infractions."

Another reason for optimism, Coor said, is support of ASU by the Sun Angel Foundation and other private sources.

"I believe all public universities need private funding," he said. Such funding will play "an important part in ASU's future."

Coor, who has been a charter member of the NCAA President's Commission since 1983 and is currently the chairman for Division I, said he supports tightened restrictions on student athletes.

"The standards of all other students must be expected of athletes," he said. "An athlete should be a student who functions like a student."

As a member of the President's Commission, Coor said he actively supported Proposition 48, which denies freshman eligibility to student athletes who fail to meet certain requirements (700 SAT, 15 ACT) on college entrance exams.

However, he said he does not support Proposition 42, which prohibits student athletes who do not qualify academically from accepting athletic scholarships. Proposition 48 must be given a chance to be evaluated, Coor added.

In addition, Coor said he does not support paying college athletes.

Although his President's Commission term is non-renewable and expires in January, Coor said he plans to remain active in the NCAA. He said he is expecting to be invited to serve on other committees and will participate if time permits.

Coor said he has regularly attended athletic events at the University of Vermont, where he is currently president. UV does not have a football team but has been successful in other athletics, such as intercollegiate hockey, skiing, basketball and soccer.

Coor is no stranger to athletics, having played football and baseball in high school. In addition, he played football at NAU for one week.

"It was a wise decision (to quit)," he said.

He said he played handball when he first arrived in Vermont and has recently switched to squash, a sport he plays about four mornings a week.

New volleyball coach digs training Sun Devils squad

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

New Sun Devil Volleyball Coach Patty Snyder is not hanging her head because she lost first-team All-America Christy Nore to ineligibility.

Instead, she is busy training this year's team to be among the best in the Pac-10.

Sophomore Mindy Gowell, who was out last season due to major knee surgery, will be playing at the outside hitter spot that Nore occupied as a starter for four seasons.

Snyder said that Gowell has fully rehabilitated herself and is ready for play.

"She is awesome picking up where Christy left off," Snyder said. "She is really strong, quick and fluent."

Also this season, Snyder lost starters Dawn Meidinger and Debbie Lynch. But she returns starting seniors and tri-team captains Noelle Fridrich, Sue Nord and Tracie Kisro.

"They're real solid, and I feel good about that," Snyder said.

Moving up in positions this season will be sophomores Jennifer Rogers and Debbie Penney. Incoming freshman recruits include Jennifer Helfrich and Michelle Monson.

"Our freshmen are very emotionally mature," Snyder said. "They should be able to help the team a lot."

Although ASU was picked to finish eighth in the conference, Snyder envisions her team as being the underdogs of the season. The midranking, she feels, was due to the setbacks the team encountered, including a change in coach and the loss of an All-America player.

"There are a lot of unknowns, and I love it that they (the rankers) don't know," she said.

The volleyball team has been practicing since mid-August for six hours a day, five days a week. Beginning this week, practices will be reduced to three hours a day.

Snyder said she is making phenomenal progress with her team because each player came to practice in good preseason condition.

"I was extremely pleased with their work ethic," she said. "At a high energy level, you get more out of it physically."

Snyder came to ASU this season from California-Berkeley where she was assistant head coach for five years. Although she recognized many familiar Sun Devil faces from the Pac-10, she said she was glad to work individually with them.

"The faces are familiar, the talent is familiar, but it is nice to get them in the gym," she said.

As for the season schedule, Snyder is concerned with the amount of road trips in the first month, which will allow the Sun Devils only two home matches in September.

"It should be a positive test to make us road-ready for the Pac-10," Snyder said. "We will be challenged which will give us a good jump on the season."

Among the top competitors in the conference, Snyder feels are ASU, Washington, Arizona, California and Oregon, adding that, as usual, Stanford and UCLA should physically dominate every team in the league.

Snyder was hired as head volleyball coach in May. Since moving to the Valley, she said she has been pleasantly surprised by a number of things, including the Arizona weather and the facilities in the new ICA building.

She considers the study facilities in the building particularly important to uphold the volleyball team's academic tradition.

Last season, the team won the award for the highest team GPA of the University (3.2). Snyder expects to maintain that standing with recruits such as Helfrich who was high school valedictorian with a perfect GPA.

Snyder played collegiate volleyball at Portland State for four years as a setter/hitter. She helped lead the Vikings to the national championships in 1981, where PSU finished second to Texas.

Upon ending her collegiate career, she coached as an assistant for Portland for one year until she was offered the position at California.

She has also coached and played on the national women's volleyball team New York Liberties over the past two seasons. In addition, she is the assistant director of the Volleyball Festival in Davis, California.

But her main concern right now is getting the team off to a good start in the season opener against New Mexico state next Friday.

"I am really pleased with the team," Snyder said. "It looks very encouraging."

Alma Mater recognizes Robinson's accomplishments

By GARY JACKSON
State Press

Years after graduating from college, not many people expect to be recognized by their alma mater for their accomplishments.

Don Robinson, ASU men's gymnastics coach, was one of the 100 initial selections to the University of Northern Colorado Alumni Hall of Fame. As part of UNC's Centennial Celebration, the school is commending its most distinguished alumni.

"The effect it had on me was I didn't believe it — I was overwhelmed by it," Robinson said.

Robinson, who is in his 22nd year as coach at ASU, said he wanted to share the honor with a large supporting cast. Scott Barclay, the men's assistant gymnastics coach, was among those at the top of his list, as were numerous athletes.

The criteria to be included for the distinction puzzled Robinson, he said.

"I'm sure the national championship in 1986 had a lot to do with it," Robinson said.

Carolyn Cody, professor of physical education at UNC, who nominated Robinson, said various coaches and athletes were considered for the honor.

Cody said Robinson's consistent success was a greater measure than the national title alone.

"We were looking for people who have made significant contributions in their field," Cody said. "I always thought he represented the high ideals of coaching."

"He has a reputation of doing more than just coach an athlete. He's a very inspirational person ... committed, dynamic."

Robinson often brings his gymnasts to various schools, hospitals and churches for speaking engagements to convince children to "just say no to drugs."

He and Tim McClellan, the ASU strength and conditioning coach, each received a letter this summer from the city of Tempe commending their involvement in the community.

"It's probably one of the most overwhelming letters I've ever received," said Robinson, adding that the letter expressed more appreciation than some awards.

McClellan said Robinson is an extremely upbeat person.

"He shares his beliefs about living a happy and healthy life," he said. "He is just a fantastic individual."

An example of Robinson's generosity, McClellan said, is his annual Thanksgiving tradition of inviting about 100 people over to his home for dinner.

"He starts off by saying, 'we all have something to give thanks for,'" McClellan said. "That's Don Robinson for you."

Saints beat Bengals despite fan penalties

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Bobby Hebert threw for 142 yards and a touchdown in two quarters to lead the New Orleans Saints to a 27-10 victory over the Cincinnati Bengals on Monday night in a game marred by two protracted booing incidents and the enforcement of a new rule against crowd noise.

Hebert's touchdown pass went for 30 yards to Eric Martin. He also set up a 3-yard touchdown run by Dalton Hilliard with a 42-yard pass to Brett Perriman.

Morten Andersen kicked a 35-yard field goal in the third quarter to cap a Saints' drive with John Fourcade at quarterback. He kicked a 44-yarder in the fourth quarter with Dave Wilson directing the offense.

Paul Frazier ran five yards for a Saints touchdown with 4:01 left in the game.

Cincinnati's touchdown came on a 1-yard pass from Boomer Esiason to tackle Anthony Munoz after a defensive holding call and four penalties against the crowd.

The holding call against second-round draft choice Robert Massey put the ball at the 2-yard line, and the first three noise penalties ate up all of the Saints' timeouts.

The fourth penalty moved the ball to the 1-yard line, and Esiason hit Munoz with the touchdown pass on the next play.

The 11-minute interruption began when Esiason stepped away from center when the crowd noise was moderate for the Superdome crowd of 61,150. But the fans accepted his complaint as a challenge and got louder, forcing one of the first enforcements of the new rule against excessive crowd noise.

Esiason completed eight of 17 passes for 94 yards.

A shanked punt put Cincinnati in position for a 48-yard field goal by James Gallery in the third quarter.

As that quarter drew to a close, the Bengals were at the 3-yard line and quarterback Eric Wilhelm also complained about the noise.

Referee Gene Barth again warned the partisan crowd that any further noise could draw a penalty. But this time, line judge

Ray Dodez spotted Esiason and offensive lineman Brian Blados laughing on the Bengals' bench and signalling the crowd for more noise.

Dodez talked to the Cincinnati bench and signalled for the game to continue.

After a delay of nine minutes, Wilhelm threw an incomplete pass and sent Ickey Woods into the line three times for two yards.

The lost timeouts cost the Saints a chance at another field goal in the second quarter when Fourcade completed a pass to the Cincinnati 21-yard line with 13 seconds left, but time ran out before New Orleans could get off another play.

ASU defensive coordinator likes aggressive football

By JOEL HORN
State Press

Dennis Brown has a simple philosophy about defensive football: attack! Don't defend, attack!

Beginning his second season as ASU's defensive coordinator, Brown said his philosophy is much the same as Head Coach Larry Marmie's was when he held the same position for the Sun Devils under John Cooper.

"If there's one thing we differ on," Brown said, "it's that I like to blitz."

Brown said, like Marmie, he believes in fundamentals such as getting off the block and going to the football.

"We've got to control the big play," he said. "We can't allow the offense the either/or. First down is important."

The either/or, Brown said, is a pass/run option after gaining good yardage on a first down.

Brown said he expects to see "marked improvement" from the defense as a result of the players' commitment to the weight room during the summer under the guidance of ASU Strength Coach Tim McClellan.

"You have to be strong to play major college football," he said.

The front four, Brown said, is pretty much set for the season opener Sept. 9 against Kansas State.

Sophomore Shane Collins and either sophomore Bryan Hooks or sophomore Tim Landers will start at defensive tackle, backed up by junior college transfer Pat Mason.

Senior Richard Davis, who hasn't played in a game since he was at the University of Oklahoma in 1985, has recovered from his recurring elbow injuries and will start at nose guard.

Brown said, although Davis was held out of last Saturday's intrasquad scrimmage, he has participated in all of the team's individual work and much of the group work.

"Hopefully, he'll remain sound, and we'll have him for 12 football games," Brown said.

Davis will be backed up by redshirt freshman Michael Thompson.

Junior Terrence Johnson is currently listed as ASU's starting left outside linebacker. Depth will be provided by sophomore Israel Stanley, who played nose guard last season, redshirt freshman Bob Brasher and another redshirt freshman, Ivory Irvin.

"Irvin has come a long way athletically," Brown said. "He has gotten bigger, and he'll play a lot of football for us on special teams."

At the right outside linebacker, sophomore Darren Woodson is expected to start and will be backed up by sophomore Eric Berry and junior Michael Williams.

Brown said Berry, who suffered a serious knee injury in the UofA game last fall, "is playing and not supposed to be. He has worked extremely hard in rehabilitation and is way ahead of schedule."

Junior Drew Metcalf returns at one inside linebacker position after suffering multiple "stingers" in his neck in 1988, and senior Mark Tingstad will start alongside him.

Tingstad, who was examined by doctors this summer and told not to play because of a congenital narrowing of the spinal canal, recently suffered another setback when he hurt a back muscle lifting weights.

"It almost crushed him," Brown said about the doctors' career-threatening diagnosis for Tingstad, "but he never gave up."

Brown said Tingstad's recent back injury was not serious, and he was expected back at practice Monday.

Senior Eddie Stokes or redshirt freshman Kevin

Minnifield, who Brown said was "going great guns" in spring practice until he hurt his shoulder, will start at left cornerback.

Senior Lawrence Hubley or junior Eric Crawford will get the nod at right cornerback. Brown said Crawford "came with great pedigree" to ASU.

The strong safety position will be manned by junior Floyd Fields or junior college transfer Phillip Sparks.

Brown said Sparks has responded well to major college football but must stop "double-associating" — confusing the terminology he learned in junior college with what he is being taught at ASU.

The starting free safety is junior Nathan LaDuke who has been nominated for the Thorpe Award which is presented annually to the country's finest defensive back.

LaDuke has "got the potential to be a great player," Brown said. "He's smart, and he runs well."

In addition to his duties in the defensive backfield, LaDuke holds on extra points and field goals.

Backing LaDuke will be redshirt freshman Adam Brass who, Brown said, has "a lot of potential" and redshirt freshman Arnold Laws.

Marmie concerned about current status of team readiness

By JOEL HORN
State Press

ASU Head Football Coach Larry Marmie told sportswriters Monday morning that although he is pleased with the Sun Devils progress thus far in fall practice, the team is not ready to open the season.

Speaking at the annual Pac-10 Skywriters breakfast, Marmie said the team's rain-induced early return from Camp Tontozona to Tempe "went smooth for us.

"The players adjusted well and did what we asked them to do," he said."

Marmie said the Sun Devils' opportunity to be in camp nine days this year — longer than in the past — contributed to what he hopes will be an improved squad.

"We have an opportunity to be a good offensive team," Marmie said.

He also said the Sun Devils "have a chance to be much stronger on the defensive line," and said sophomore defensive tackle

Shane Collins is one of the team's "anchor points" on defense.

Although Marmie said "from a selfish standpoint" he would rather see Collins concentrate on football in the spring rather than participate in track and field, "he's talented enough and a hard enough worker that he'll be lining up for us this fall."

Marmie said one of his major concerns is the kicking game.

"We're hopeful (senior placekicker Alan Zendejas) will return to the form he had as a sophomore," he said.

Entering his second season as a head coach, Marmie said he has had some trouble adjusting to his new role.

"Delegation is one of my problems," he said. "I don't like standing around watching practice."

"My favorite time of the day is when we're on the field practicing."

Golfers hope improvement continues

By PAUL CORO
State Press

If the bare facts are any indication, this year's ASU men's golf team appears to be improving once again under fourth-year Head Coach Steve Loy.

Loy has guided the Sun Devils' rise from a 16th place NCAA finish in 1987 to 10th in 1988 to fifth last year.

"I have said this the last three years, but this may be the best group of players I have ever had," Loy said. "If they continue to improve at this pace, it won't be long before we have a national championship."

ASU loses a key player from last year's conference champions in captain Jim Strickland, but returns eight players who won tournaments over the summer.

"We (the seniors) can kind of share the leadership," senior Scott Frisch said. "All the talent makes it easy."

For only the second time in school history, the Sun Devils boast the NCAA's individual champion. Sophomore Phil Mickelson is one of three freshmen and the only southpaw ever to capture the NCAA title.

"He will find ways to get better," Loy said. "With the experience and maturity he now has, he will be able to establish the makeup of a different player."

Mickelson has an opportunity to join the elite company of four-time All-America Gary Hallberg and three-time NCAA champion Ben Crenshaw.

"He can be the record writer of college golf, dating back to the days of Crenshaw and (Jack) Nicklaus," Loy said.

This summer, Mickelson competed on the Walker Cup team, which is composed of the top 10 college players.

"I am more adapted to college life this year so I can now concentrate more on golf," Mickelson said. "Hopefully, I can take the things I have learned and reach a new level."

Also heading the returnees is senior Per Johansson, a 1989 second team All-America selection. Senior Scott Frisch is the third link to what Loy calls a solid trio.

Frisch, who has an unprecedented three Southwest Amateur Championship titles, said that one of his goals is to win his first college tournament, "but a (team) NCAA Championship would be the icing on the cake."

Loy welcomes three newcomers to this year's team. Freshman Cade Stone, the Texas-Oklahoma junior champion, is the only American other than Ben Crenshaw to win the Doug Sanders International. Freshman Lars Herne joins the team from Sweden.

Jim Lemon comes to ASU as a transfer from Scottsdale Community College. Lemon, along with Mickelson and senior Dave Cunningham, qualified for match-play at the U.S. Amateur Championship last weekend. Six Sun Devils qualified for the tournament.

ASU should profit from their new home, Karsten Golf Course, as well. The team will have a kickoff practice at 7 a.m. on opening day (Sep. 1). Loy said that the course adds another dimension to practice.

"We now have the opportunity and resources to practice whenever and however we want," Loy said.

Loy also appreciates the addition in leadership and teaching assistance that he is receiving from Duff

Mickelson

Lawrence, the new golf director, and Jay Lumpkin, the new director of golf instruction.

The Sun Devils' first event will be the USA-Japan Friendship Tournament Sept. 16-23 in Tokyo.

"I'm very excited about the team's possibilities to win major championships," Loy said.

"I think we are the most well-rounded team that you will find in the country," Mickelson said.

Preseason rankings have yet to come out, but Loy expects ASU to be among the top five.

"I see ASU as being a favorable team to contend with," Loy said. "We are better prepared to win the championship than last year."

Big return provides coach high season expectations

ASU cross country runners shape up for better season

By LARRY NEWELL
State Press

Returning from a week-long conditioning camp in Pinetop, ASU's cross country coach Ken Lehman said he is optimistic about the Devils' chances of improving upon last year's Pac-10 showing.

"This year's athletes came into camp already in pretty good shape — better shape than any team since I've been here," Lehman said. "If the women stay healthy, I look for them to finish high in the Pac-10. The men's squad could finish in the top half of the Pac-10."

Heading the men's squad will be junior Todd Lewis, who last season won the ASU Invitational.

"Todd should be one of the top runners in the Pac-10 this season," Lehman said.

The women's team will be lead by seniors Teresa Barrios and Amy Komitzky. Last year Barrios placed second at the Riverside Invitational in California and fourth at the Pac-10 meet, on her way to qualifying for the NCAA championships.

lineup will be senior Len Gyetko, juniors Brian Gyetko, Dave Lomicky and Joel Finnigan and sophomore Craig Purcell. Brad Williams, who will be punting for the Devils' football team this season, will also play.

"We gained a lot of experience last season," said Belken, who enters his eighth year as coach. "I am anxious to get going and have a really good season."

In addition to the number of starters returning, Belken said there are three new recruits who are strong collegiate competitors.

The team newcomers are Trond Faeroebik, who was a top player in Norway, Greg Prudome, who was the Arizona State Champion of the Junior Colleges, and Chris Gambino, a transfer from the University of Indiana who was ranked sixth in the country.

Although Gambino must redshirt this season due to earlier release problems with Indiana, Belken is excited about keeping him in training for next season.

With this squad, Belken hopes to improve his 1988-89 record of 10-14. Team practice begins Sept. 4.

"I expect it to be a strong program," he said. "We were very young last year."

Over the course of the summer, many of Belken's players toured the country and Canada participating in various tournaments. The doubles team of Lomicky and Finnigan won the U. S. Amateur title, while Lomicky and Gyetko earned points among the Association of Tennis Professionals.

Belken said it is nice to see that his players are always working to improve their skills.

"It's the type of desire to be as good a tennis player as they can be," he said.

"Teresa is definitely a top runner and has a good chance to win the Pac-10 individual title," Lehman said.

Komitzky placed fourth at the ASU Invitational and had a strong showing at the District VII meet in 1988.

"Amy should move up this season, as she is one of our most improved athletes," Lehman said.

The two freshmen who will vie to make the men's traveling squad, which is made up of the top seven runners, are Dave Harkins and Chris Guinnip. Lehman said both athletes "are working very hard and will undoubtedly make contributions in the future."

Lehman characterized the 1989 cross country team as a "closer unit than previous years."

"This year's team should improve as we have everyone returning with a year's more experience," Lehman said.

The Sun Devils begin their 1989 season at the Sept. 16 UC-Riverside Invitational.

Money, staff help rebuild Ice Devils program

By TOMI McELROY
State Press

University funding has broken the ice for the problems the ASU hockey club encountered last year.

Manager Mike Hoffarth played three years with the Ice Devils and saw a need for improvement.

"Two years ago I played on the team and found out they were having some problems as far as the program being organized," Hoffarth said. "And then last year I took the responsibility to actually manage, because it (the team) was going to fold. Last year was kind of a rebuilding year."

The Ice Devils rebuilt their coaching staff for the 1989-90 season with experience and knowledge.

Jim Manguso takes over the head coaching position after coaching 11 years for the Arizona Sharks, a junior team for 17- to 19-year-olds.

Gary Cornelson, who worked with Manguso and the Sharks for nine years, will be the assistant coach.

Last year Hoffarth said his goal was to try and get more recognition by the University because hockey expenses were so high.

Hoffarth gained monetary support from three corporate sponsors and received help from Gerry Maas, the director of recreational sports and student activities.

"They (Ice Devils) got such minimal support in prior years," Hoffarth said. "Having a school input and a school program, such as Club Sports, and having a director is really going to help the team a lot."

Because the team now receives money from the University, eligibility requirements have changed, and players must be full-time students.

Hoffarth said a player may be an undergraduate or graduate with a full-time class load.

The Ice Devils hockey club is open to anyone who wants to participate whether they play hockey or not.

"The University wanted to make sure the students had some type of input, and we elected a president, vice president, secretary and treasurer," Hoffarth said. "Just because they don't play doesn't mean they can't participate. There are a lot of openings we have on the team."

The Ice Devils schedule consists of 15 home games at Tower Plaza and 15 away games.

The Ice Devils have two six-game series against UCLA and rival UofA and will also face clubs from Stanford, USC, Ohio University, Colorado, University of S. Colorado-Pueblo, Wisconsin and the Air Force junior varsity.

Funding for road trips will be the responsibility of the players, but they will be given different opportunities to raise money to reduce their traveling expenses.

"We're trying to make it easy," Hoffarth said. "If there's a guy out there who says he can't afford it, that's wrong... you can... you have to work at it... it's all a part of being a club member."

The Ice Devils will be holding an informational meeting at 6 p.m. Thursday in the conference room of the Student Recreation Complex.
