Judge orders regents to reveal candidates

By TYRONE MEIGHAN
State Press

A Maricopa County Superior Court judge Tuesday ordered the Arizona Board of Regents to release the names of all candidates involved in the eight-month search for ASU's new president and to pay up to $100,000 in legal fees.

The decision is seen as a victory for two Valley newspapers, who have been embroiled in a lawsuit since May with the regents over disclosure of the candidates' names.

Attorney Dan Barr, who represented The Arizona Republic and Tribune Newspapers in the suit, said the regents will be required to publicly release the names of the more than 240 candidates in the search. In addition, the regents must pay all legal fees involved with the case.

"This will cost the state of Arizona over $100,000," he said. "All the regents could do was present conclusions that were not based on any fact."

Barr said Judge Elizabeth Stover focused her decision on the testimony of many witnesses who testified that no harm would be done to candidates if their names were disclosed.

"The board did not present the name of one person who has been or would be harmed by being identified publicly by the ASU presidential search," Stover stated in her 15-page decision. "The court has found that none of the persons would suffer any harm."

When asked if the regents planned to appeal, former Regent President Herman Chanen said, "I would suspect that that might be a subject of discussion."

The battle between the regents and the newspapers has been ongoing since November 1988 when reporters asked for a list of finalists in the presidential search.

The board agreed to release a "short list" of presidential finalists if the papers would not pursue a lawsuit.

The regents had contended that the names should not be made public because the board promised the candidates that their names would remain private. The newspapers argued that the names are public record and should be subject to review.

The regents subsequently released heavily edited copies of the 14 finalist candidate applications but insisted throughout the process that the board had no obligation to release the names unedited.

"It is the view of the board that the release of these names is not required under Arizona Public Records statute," a June 30 regents press release stated. The heavily edited resumes were released because "recent case law calls for the release of whatever information can be revealed without breaching confidentiality."

On May 25, the regents announced that University of Vermont President Lattie Coor was the only candidate for the presidency. Two other candidates had dropped out for personal reasons a few weeks earlier.

As the papers threatened a lawsuit, the regents filed suit in Maricopa County Superior Court May 30 seeking a judgment to declare that state public records laws do not require the disclosure of unedited resumes. The newspapers subsequently sued the regents asking the court to dismiss the suit.

Former student regent Pat McWhortor said he is "not surprised" the regents lost the suit but disagrees with the judge's decision that candidates at other institutions would not be harmed by having their name publicly disclosed.

Bartosh reaches DPS search finals

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Acting ASU Department of Public Safety Director/Police Chief Doug Bartosh, whose department is being investigated for possible civil rights violations, is one of six finalists for the permanent ASU/DPS job, officials said Tuesday.

The other candidates for the post, which was vacated last January by the now-retired C. Russell Duncan, include: William R. Bess, Bowling Green State University director of management support services and public safety; Arthur J. Sanders, George Mason University director of public safety; John R. Schwartz, State University of New York at Binghamton director of public safety; Juan Martin Jr., City of Phoenix deputy director of public works; and Maralin K. Coffinger, former U. S. Air Force director of personnel plans.

The new director, who is expected to be chosen in October, will oversee the campus police, parking and transit and occupational health and safety departments in addition to a $6 million budget. A salary has not been set, but Duncan made $54,334 as director.

"I think we have absolutely excellent candidates," said Susan Malaga, ASU personnel director and chairwoman of the search committee. "We've attracted some of the finest candidates from across the country."

Peck plans faculty salary hike

By JOIE ANN LaPOLLA
State Press

A three-year budget plan designed to boost ASU's below-average faculty salaries above national levels is in the works, ASU Interim President Richard Peck said Tuesday.

The budget plan, scheduled to go before the Arizona Board of Regents in October, will provide a scaled increase in both faculty and classified staff salary requirements over the next three years. Currently, the University is below the national average in pay.

"I can't imagine anyone who wants to become just average," Peck said at the Faculty Senate breakfast in the MU Arizona Room attended by about 120 faculty members and administrators.

Under the 1989-90, $3.2 billion state budget, University employees received a 1.25 percent increase in pay, which was lower than the cost of living. Entry-level professors at the universities make a minimum $29,366, while assistant professors earn $21,917.

Peck said that his plan will add to the salary increases that the Legislature awards to state employees each budget year. Meanwhile, a study is being conducted to determine how far below average state university faculty salaries really are. After it is concluded, the plan will be placed before the regents.

Peck said he will use the study's figures to determine how much will be added to annual regular state-awarded salary increases.

The interim president said he decided to spread the increase over a period of three years because the regents probably would not approve such a high request for one year.

"We will ask for additional (money) over what salary is awarded to state employees," Peck said. "If we asked for (a big) increase the same year as a budget cut, we would be laughed out of the hearing room."

Peck's plan involves spreading the additional money over the next three years with the first year starting at a 6 percent increase. The rest of the money, which will be determined when the study is complete, will be divided equally among the next two years' budgets.

Peck said he is "confident" that state faculty salaries are at least 10 percent below the national average.

The budget request for the next fiscal year will be submitted to the regents for approval in October. If approved, it will go to the state Legislature in May.

Paul Larson, Associated Students of ASU president, also emphasized the need to increase faculty salaries during the breakfast.

"There is a concern that if we don't take care of the faculty, we'll start losing them," Larson said. "Faculty salaries are a

Soviet rocket launch successful; Mir space station to be re-opened

BAIKONUR COSMODROME, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Two cosmonauts riding an advertising-emblazoned rocket blasted off early yesterday in search of a Soviet space success following a series of failures and bitter public disputes over costs.

As the countdown progressed toward the launch time of 2:38 p.m. Tuesday in Arizona, soldiers had gathered around bonfires under crystal clear skies to watch the launch.

The blastoff was televised live on CNN in the United States. Mission commander Alexander Viktorenko and engineer Alexander Serebrov have a busy schedule of space construction and science laid out for them during their six-month mission aboard the now-vacant orbital station Mir. But from the way their mission has been promoted, the public relations aspects are also important.

Soviet officials have stressed repeatedly that such spaceflights can yield practical dividends sorely needed in a country now struggling with economic and environmental woes, and pounded home the theme in the final hours before the cosmonauts' liftoff.

To help their country's space program pay more of its own way, the Soviets have even allowed commercial advertising on the flight.

One of three stages of the 150-foot booster rocket, painted orange, carried an ad for the Italian insurance company Generali. Others, for a Soviet electronics company and "New Dawn" perfume, were displayed on a side of the launch pad and in a room where the cosmonauts met reporters Monday night.

Beached whale 'holding own' at marine park in Texas

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Marine experts were making an artificial nurser Tuesday to feed a baby whale that washed up on a beach over the weekend.

The 900-pound sperm whale was "not getting any worse but not getting any better," said Cheryl Snyder, senior trainer at Sea-Arama Marineworld. "He's holding his own."

The whale, estimated to be no more than 2 weeks old, was found ashore Saturday on the Bolivar Peninsula. When volunteers from the Texas Mammal Stranding Network couldn't find his mother, the 12-foot whale was hoisted onto a flatbed truck, smeared with zinc oxide sunscreen, wet down and brought to the marine park.

Park personnel, after consulting experts from other marine parks around the country, were devising an artificial nurser to feed the whale. The plastic device is modeled after an apparatus used at Marineland of California.

Israel finds no backing for plan to rehabilitate Palestinian camps

JERUSALEM (AP) — The United States and other foreign nations have rejected Israel's appeal for aid to improve conditions at Palestinian refugee camps, calling first for progress in the Middle East peace process, officials said Tuesday.

In a letter this week to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, President Bush turned down Israel's request for help to rehabilitate camps in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, according to Yossi Ahimeir, Shamir's spokesman.

He said Japan, Canada and European nations also rejected the request.

Today

The Today section is a daily calendar of events happening at ASU that is presented as a service to the University community. Any campus club or organization can submit entries for publication to the State Press, located in the basement of Matthews Center, Room 15. Entries must be legible, are subject to editing for content, space and clarity, and will not be taken over the phone. Due to space restrictions, the State Press cannot guarantee publication. Deadline for the entries is 1 p.m. the previous business day.

Meetings

- Alpha Lambda Delta will be having a general meeting at 4:30 p.m. today on the second floor of the MU, Room 222.
- American Marketing Association will meet at 7 tonight in the Business Administration Building, Room 101 to discuss the nuts and bolts of AMA. The association also has a booth on the Dean's Patio today through Friday. All majors welcome.

•BACCHUS: Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students will have an introductory meeting to plan for the semester at 3 p.m. today at the Student Health Center, Room 158.

Lectures

•Experiencing Life Off Campus The office of Student Life presents ASU administrators from Student Financial Assistance, Counseling and Consultation, the Department of Public Safety, the Office of the Registrar and Legal Services to describe on-campus services and community support services available for students. The lecture will run from 11:30 a.m. until 1 p.m. today in the Student Services Building Amphitheater, and admission is free.

Corrections

In a story about the ASU Student Health Center that ran in the Aug. 30 issue, it was incorrectly reported that one-sixth of the University's population utilizes the facility. The correct figure is one-third. In addition, there is no current search for a permanent director of the center. Dr. Pamela Tom, the center's interim director, was appointed by Christine Wilkinson, vice president for student affairs — not by the health center administration.

In a story that ran in the Sept. 1 edition, William Cabianca's name was misspelled. He is a psychology education professor.

Medical firm lured to research park

By RICHARD LAMPING
State Press

A medical technologies company responsible for the Jarvik-7 artificial heart will relocate to the ASU Research Park in October because of the positive business climate in Arizona, company officials said.

Symbion, previously based in Salt Lake City, announced its plans to move Thursday.

'Symbion's move . . . illustrates what the Board of Regents had in mind for the ASU Research Park all along.'

— Richard Peck

In addition, company officials said the potential for attracting and retaining competent employees and a University affiliation enticed the company to make its home in Tempe.

Richard Alder, president and chief executive officer of Symbion, said Thursday his company has received concessions for relocating in the ASU Research Park but that "it would not be appropriate for him to comment."

Beverly Caron, property manager for TransAmerica, the company that will house Symbion, said Tuesday the concessions are simply part of the lease, and the terms are confidential.

"It was a good deal for everybody," she said. Alder said the move to ASU was decided after a two-year search for a new corporate home and an investigation of six other research facilities.

He said the move was prompted by major company changes, which include selling the rights to a major hearing aid product and focusing only on cardiovascular products.

Severed ties with the University of Utah freed the company of its obligations to stay there, Alder added.

John Kraft, dean of the College of Business and president of the board of directors for the ASU Research Park, said the board votes on whether to allow a business to locate in the research park but does not offer concessions.

He said, however, that businesses located in the park receive property tax incentives.

The research park is a private, non-profit organization, separate from the University.

Alder said the Valley would provide the 25 current employees affordable housing, good school systems and an equitable tax base.

Richard Peck, ASU's interim president, said, "Symbion's move to the Valley illustrates what the (Arizona) Board of Regents had in mind for the ASU Research Park all along."

Peck, who said the park was one of the best of its kind in the world, said he is "pleased to see another company choose the ASU Research Park."

Law to deter scalpers may help Tempe become Superbowl site

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

Those attempting to scalp tickets at Sun Devil Stadium beginning Sept. 15 will have to contend with ASU police — armed with a new law.

Gov. Rose Mofford signed a bill June 15 that prohibits selling tickets for more than the face value within 200 feet of a parking lot where an event is taking place.

"Deterring scalpers has always been enforced in the past," said Sgt. Larry Angel of the ASU police department. "Now we have more teeth to deal with the problem."

Police will give those caught scalping a chance to leave the area before taking formal action, he said.

"Our goal is to educate with a warning," Angel said. "After that we'll take any tickets."

Scalping is considered a petty offense, and the maximum fine is $300 for an individual and $1000 for an enterprise, he said. Selling anything on ASU property without a contract issued by the Arizona Board of Regents is illegal, Angel added.

Police do not plan any undercover operations unless they receive complaints.

The bill was backed by Phoenix 93, a group whose membership includes Bill Bidwill, owner of the Phoenix Cardinals. Phoenix 93 and Bidwill urged the passing of the bill to entice the NFL to bring a Super Bowl to the Valley.

The NFL will not consider the Valley as a possible superbowl site unless an antiscalping law is passed.

Scott Roderick, co-owner of the Ticket Connection in Tempe, said: "Many people tried to fight it including major corporations such as hotels and travel agencies. My perception of the laws is that they should better the public welfare. This law is taking the public's right away."

"But if this is the difference between a Superbowl and scalping, I'll take the Superbowl — who wouldn't?"

Child abuse

When dealing with children, justice system is criminal

Carolyn Hofig
Asst. Managing Editor

"Stranger Danger" isn't enough any more.

If parents want to ensure that their children, in the devastating case that they are molested, find some kind of comfort in the justice system, they will have to teach the little ones some basic bookkeeping.

But grown-ups would be advised to stick with explicitly state-approved teaching methods, lest they be brought up on charges of child abuse themselves.

At least if two child abuse judgments from last week become precedents, that is.

In the first case, the Ninth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the conviction of a former Bureau of Indian Affairs teacher. In September 1988, the teacher, J. D. Todd, was found guilty on 13 felony charges of sexual offenses against seven boys at a school on the Navajo reservation.

The Court of Appeals dismissed as "doubtful" the testimony of the victims, all under 15 years old, because the boys could not recite the exact dates of the attacks.

Imagine the youngsters not taking scrupulous notes after — or maybe during? — the incidents.

The Ninth Circuit couldn't. Todd is, in those terms, no longer a convicted felon, which may well make him eligible to stand in front of a classroom again, as far as the law is concerned.

But, under other circumstances, the law is very concerned.

Consider the second case:

On Friday, John and Catherine King pleaded no contest to a charge of reckless endangerment, which in this instance will be designated a misdemeanor offense. Their lawyer deemed the agreement that lead to the plea "too good to turn down"; it certainly marks a step down from the child-abuse charge that the Paradise Valley couple faced before.

What transgression did the Kings commit that, under the earlier charge, could have netted them each up to 10 years in prison?

Practicing Christian Scientists, the Kings failed to put their 12-year-old daughter Elizabeth Ashley in doctors' care after the girl was diagnosed as having a malignant tumor on her right leg. As their religion dictates, they sought to heal their only child through faith and prayer.

Elizabeth Ashley King died June 5, 1988, of bone cancer.

Charges of child abuse followed almost immediately, including Maricopa County Grand Jury indictments.

This is interesting, as the Kings did not deny their daughter treatment; they simply did not subject her to medical treatment, which in cancer cases — particularly the inevitably fatal ones such as bone cancer — generally amounts to an extended exercise in vivisection.

'Prayer can claim as many total cures as the medical community when it comes to terminal cancer.'

In fact, an article in Saturday's Arizona Republic points out accusingly that the girl's leg was never amputated, as if that somehow attests to her parents' inhumanity.

But the Kings believed they were doing their best for their daughter. (Prayer can claim as many total cures as the medical community when it comes to terminal cancer.) They believed they were helping.

The state, on the other hand, didn't believe in the Kings' faith. So, despite the fact that the Christian Scientist Church is legally recognized in this country and ostensibly protected under the freedom of religion clause of the First Amendment, the couple found themselves pleading no contest to charges of reckless endangerment, barely escaping the child abuse allegations.

The case is expected to "send a message" to other parental practitioners of faith healing. It will. But what message does it send regarding child abuse?

It suggests that if the Kings had spent their evenings luring youngsters into their home to molest them — instead of praying for their daughter's health — they would have fared better, legally speaking.

Unless, of course, the hypothetical victims were to write extensive essays on the would-be ordeal for the perusal of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Get those kid-sized pencils out, little ones. Your future peace of mind may well depend on it.

At least you can write to Mom in jail, should she turn to her faith, rather than a pharmacist, to see you through your chicken pox. Or worse.

"Stranger Danger," with all its safety admonitions, just doesn't fill the child protection order of the day.

Particularly these days, when child abuse justice is stranger than fiction.

Can't live with em . . .

Editor:

Problems face the University every day which are debated by appointed committees and resolved. However, there is one problem which faces this University which goes unnoticed by the administration and is only discussed at a party or with the guys over a beer at a local bar. The problem is an overflow of rich, conceited, two-faced obnoxious girls who believe that the world owes them something.

A vast majority of people would limit that description to the typical sorority girl. However, your standard GDI women are just as guilty if not more so. The GDI woman says: "I hate sorority girls because of the way they act towards other people." Yet, that night, honey, you're just like Ms. Alpha Alpha Alpha, only going to some guy's party because he has beer and you can use your looks to drink for free. Once the beer's run out, so do you. And, without a thank you.

But what about Ms. Alpha Alpha Alpha. She's the girl who, if there isn't a fraternity party going on, she'll GRACE the non-greek public with her presence; always placing herself on a pedestal above the rest not wearing dockers or decksters.

Many of these women are extremely ugly. Once at a bar, I saw a girl so ugly she could eat corn on the cob through a picket fence. I've seen girls at parties who are so fat that if they wore high heels they would strike oil. However, despite their horrifying appearance they have one thing in common. They had "the attitude" for they held the power. The power granted by God to women which allows them to act like rich, conceited, two-faced, obnoxious girls. The power to say when and where to have sex; a very influential voice in college life in the 1980s.

Universal Press Syndicate

WASHINGTON — I've denied myself the malicious pleasure of following the details of Leona Helmsley's downfall. I'll bet you have, too — or am I being misled by my faith in human nature.

I've only overheard bits and pieces of the case, which suggest, I don't know how fairly or accurately, that Mrs. Helmsley is a rapacious witch. I'm much less inclined to get upset about her having cheated the government out of millions (odd how we call it "cheating" to deprive the government of your own wealth) than about her having cheated small-businessmen, who gave her some of their property in the trust that she'd pay for it, out of a few hundred. I don't know what the government ever did for her to entitle it to millions of her dollars, and somehow I doubt I'd ever know even if I'd read all the news stories about her trial.

Among the many things I can't work up a good fury about is the rich man keeping and spending his own money. If I had Malcolm Forbes' millions (or is it billions), I can think of lots of things I'd rather do with them than throw a gigantic bash in Morocco. But I've cheerfully resigned myself to the fact that Mr. Forbes' money is his own, a fact that some of my colleagues in the opinion biz seem to find a bitter pill to swallow.

One of these colleagues wrote the other day that he doesn't mind Mr. Forbes having a party (hah!), but that he, by gum, doesn't want the rest of us to have to pay for it. Neither do I. But don't worry: Mr. Forbes is picking up the tab, right?

Well, my colleague (I don't want to pick on him by naming him) feared, groundlessly it turns out, that Mr. Forbes was going to write off the two million in dancing girls and party hats as a business expense, so that the rest of us would be deprived of the amount that would have gone into the federal kitty.

Yes, I'm sure we all would have missed it. The amount of tax money generated by the Forbes orgy might have fueled a federal spending program for 45 seconds or so.

Bashing the rich is a favorite pastime of the liberal and envious, categories that seem to have a good deal of overlap. It's a pastime I take no pleasure in and, in fact, recoil from, out of both practice and self-interest.

First, envy is the ugliest of sins. Resenting others' good fortune is the spiritual equivalent of cutting off your nose to spite your face. None of us is immune to feeling envy, but we ought to be ashamed to show it.

Second, I don't see the point of the mean and paltry satisfaction of seeing a millionaire bilked of his million by the same agency that bilks you of your thousand. I'd rather keep my little thousand and pass up the vindictive spectacle of a rich witch being led away in manacles.

Third, when you create a power to confiscate, it may be turned against you. This is the lesson bracket creep: Tax rates originally intended to soak the rich have now, thanks to inflation, come down hard on middle-income people.

The 16th Amendment gives the federal government an unlimited power to take our wealth, and that power has grown insidiously. Want a good laugh? At the time the amendment was ratified, some people argued for a top rate of 10 percent. But the proposal was voted down on grounds that naming so astronomical a figure might encourage the government to raise taxes that high. Today anyone who favors cutting the top rate to 10 percent is regarded as a crank.

The late, great libertarian Frank Chodorov observed that the income tax was passed in part because schools and churches were to be exempt from it. This promise won it the support of churchmen and educators, a pair of valuable constituencies for propaganda purposes.

I sense another demoralizing lesson latent here: namely, that there is no solid constituency for property rights. If some forms of property enjoy a privileged status, the beneficiaries may be content, if not downright glad, to see other forms of property heavily taxed. Old money notoriously resents new money, for example, and the income tax helps freeze the status quo in a way that suits some rich people very nicely.

So contrary to what Marxists think, "the rich" don't constitute a single class with a single interest. Rich people have no inherent tendency to favor limited government, a fact of life that has brought disappointment to conservatives who once hoped that capitalists would rally to defend the free market. Many of the rich have learned to use big government to argument their wealth. Life is so discouraging.

Auschwitz

Both sides share blame in dispute over site of convent

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

It's difficult to decide who is playing the bigger fool — the Poles or the Jews, the priests or the rabbis. Right now, I'd make it a toss-up.

I'm talking about the seething dispute over the existence of a Catholic convent of Carmelite nuns on the edge of the Auschwitz death camp in Poland.

The convent was established in 1984. The nuns said they wanted to pray for the souls of those who were murdered by the Nazis.

My instinctive reaction to that would be, fine, if they want to live there and pray, it can't do any harm and maybe it will do some good.

But it turns out that the existence of the convent is offensive to many Jews. Because Auschwitz was the most terrible of the Nazi death camps, and the majority of those murdered there were Jews, it has special significance to them. So, in their view, a Catholic convent is out of place.

To me, that doesn't make a lot of sense. If someone wants to send up prayers for the dead, does it really make any difference who they are? Does God have a Rolodex or a computer that he flips through to check on the source of prayers? And would he say: "Aha, prayers for Jews from Carmelite nuns? Sorry, that is unacceptable."

And, as the Poles have pointed out, tens of thousand of those killed at Auschwitz were not Jews. Some were Polish priests and nuns. When Hitler got rolling, just about anyone who didn't have blond hair and blue eyes was fair game.

'As if there isn't enough madness in the world, these people are waging an international war of words over . . . over what'

On the other hand, is it necessary for the convent to be located where it is? It seems to me that if the nuns want to pray for the millions of Nazi victims, they could do it from just about anywhere.

Once again, I wonder if God has a map that He checks. And if He says: "Oops, these prayers originated several miles from Auschwitz. Sorry, but these prayers are rejected for reasons of improper location."

So if the Jewish groups feel that strongly about the convent being at Auschwitz, why not move it?

That was the position originally taken by the Catholic Church in Poland. In 1987, the church made an agreement to move the nuns to a location near the camp, but not on its perimeter. The Jewish groups were satisfied with the agreement. I don't know if God had an opinion.

However, the move was supposed to have been made by last February. But February came and went, and the move wasn't made.

So it appeared that the Polish church was breaking the deal.

This understandably angered the Jewish groups. They protested and demonstrations were held.

And recently, a New York rabbi and several other New Yorkers climbed over the convent fence, which was a silly thing to do.

Unfortunately, some Polish workmen beat them and made anti-Semitic remarks while tossing them out, which was an even sillier thing to do.

TV cameras recorded the ugly event, and suddenly the pierogi and blintz hit the fan.

Out came a statement from Cardinal Jozef Glemp, the Roman Catholic primate of Poland, lecturing the Jews about not getting too uppity.

It struck many Jews, as well as many Poles, as being stupid and insensitive.

Now the only rabbi in Poland is boycotting a gathering of religious leaders in Poland who are going to pray for peace on the 50th anniversary of the beginning of World War II. In fact, there will be no Jews at the gathering.

And Cardinal Glemp, who ought to hire a good speechwriter, has made a few other dippy remarks, prompting some Jews to respond with dippy anti-Polish comments.

As if there isn't enough madness in the world, these people are waging an international war of words over . . . over what? Where a few nuns live in seclusion and offer up prayers for the dead.

So once again I have to question whether man was really made in God's image.

I just can't imagine God wearing a straitjacket.

Time for ASU to stop subsidizing Pro Football

Editor:

Congratulations on your Aug. 29, 1989 editorial, "Tuition Money Well Spent." Your editorial brings to mind an interesting issue which should be of concern to ASU students.

We all enjoy professional football and baseball, but we seldom stop to consider the fact that ASU, as well as most other colleges and universities in the country, spend significant amounts of money on training and facilities (from your tuition) to prepare athletes to the eventual benefit of the professional sports teams who hire them. Well, here in Tempe, a team has an opportunity to repay ASU student for the benefits it receives.

Mayor Mitchell and the Tempe City Council decided to spend approximately $15 million to build a training facility for the Phoenix Cardinals in order to try to deceive Tempe voters into thinking that the Council had some part in bringing the Cardinals to Tempe (after they were already here).

Also, in a contract Tempe entered into with the Cardinals, the Council invited the Cardinals to leave Tempe if Phoenix decided to build a football stadium of their own.

The money could have been spent to increase parking facilities near campus and around the stadium to the benefit of both ASU students and Tempe taxpayers.

Revenues derived from leasing ASU's stadium to the Cardinals could and should be used to defray tuition costs to ASU students. It's time professional sports began paying back students and our education system for the benefits they receive. And with the help of ASU students they will.

Malaga said the search committee chose the finalists from 126 applicants. She said committee members were looking for candidates with college degrees and management experience in law enforcement and public safety.

"I'm flattered," Bartosh said of being named a finalist. "I'm in great company of well-qualified people, and I'm looking forward to the continuance of the process and final selection."

Bartosh was named a finalist even though police department sources said he posted a memorandum in the department three weeks ago announcing that he had resigned as acting director, but the resignation never materialized.

Bartosh would not comment on the memo. Bartosh came to ASU in 1985 from the University of California-Irvine where he served as a police lieutenant and assistant director of public safety. He earned a social ecology degree at UC-Irvine and minored in criminal justice.

During his service as acting director, ASU police have come under fire for the handling of a racial incident last April on Alpha Drive. ASU police were investigated by the FBI, which has forwarded its case to the U. S. Department of Justice.

An independent University panel is also investigating ASU police in connection with the incident.

Other finalists included two ASU graduates: Coffinger and Martin.

Coffinger, the only female finalist, earned a bachelor's degree and a master's degree in education from ASU. She served 26 years in the U. S. Air Force and reached the rank of brigadier general.

She most recently served at the Air Force headquarters in Washington as the director of personnel plans. She also has served as command director of the North American Air Defense in addition to base commander at the Norton Air Force Base in California and Elmendorf Air Force Base in Alaska.

Martin, the only minority finalist, earned a criminal justice degree from ASU and served 17 years with the Arizona Department of Public Safety where he reached the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Before going to work for the City of Phoenix in 1987, Martin spent six years as an assistant director with the Arizona

Department of Transportation heading the motor vehicle division.

The three other finalists all have police experience.

Bess, Bowling Green State University's public safety director, worked as a patrol officer and supervisor at Kent State University. He earned a master's degree in career and technology education from Bowling Green and was an assistant criminal justice professor there.

Sanders, George Mason University public safety director since 1977, served 20 years with the Indiana State Police. He earned sociology and criminology degrees and master's degree in criminal justice from Ball State University. He is also a graduate of the FBI National Academy.

Schwartz, State University of New York at Binghamton public safety director since 1977, served as security and traffic director at the University of Rochester in addition to serving as a police lieutenant.

He also served with the FBI's fingerprint identification unit. He earned a criminal justice degree from the Rochester Institute of Technology in addition to graduating from the FBI National Academy.

priority issue for all three universities."

The results of an Employee Attitude Survey, published in ASU's Report of the President, revealed that most "areas of employee dissatisfaction include salaries and promotions."

Peck said that the lagging Arizona economy may also lead to cuts in next year's state budget unless Fiscal 2000, a plan to restructure the state tax system allowing more money for education, passes. But he will push for salary increases even if Fiscal 2000 fails.

"We have on our agenda addressing the shortfalls and lags in the faculty salaries," he said.

Harold "Hal" White, Faculty Senate president, said salary increases will be on the Senate agenda for next year.

"The faculty needs to work together on these issues (concerning salaries)," he said.

White also stressed the need for faculty members at ASU, NAU and the UofA to work together to achieve university goals.

For example, he praised the revitalization of the Arizona Faculties Council, which sends three representatives from each university to regents meetings.

Larson said that both students and faculty from the three state universities should work together to lobby for important issues and inform the student populations.

Currently, the Arizona Student Association is the "united voice" of the state's institutions, he said.

"I suggest that you have the opportunity to foster relationships with other universities to address issues on a statewide basis," Larson said.

Peck, Larson and White all emphasized the problem of oversized and closed classes, adding that ASU must do something to ease the problem in the near future.

"Enrollment management is a challenge," said Peck.

Bush: Drugs 'are the gravest domestic threat'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, calling drugs "the gravest domestic threat facing our nation," Tuesday night proposed a $7.9 billion war on narcotics emphasizing harsher penalties for users and more money for prisons, treatment programs and education.

Bush warned Latin American drug lords that "the rules have changed" and for the first time pledged U. S. military help to any government that requests it.

"Drugs are sapping our strength as a nation," the president said in his first nationally televised address from the Oval Office. He punctuated his address by displaying a plastic bag of crack cocaine seized across the street from the White House.

To attack cocaine at its source, Bush proposed a four-fold increase in the amount of military and law enforcement aid for Colombia, Bolivia and Peru, to $261.2

million in 1990. He called it the down payment on a $2 billion, five-year program for the Andean region, with allocations earmarked on the basis of progress in eradicating drugs.

To help offset the cost of his program, Bush proposed diverting $751 million from other areas, including juvenile justice, housing, immigration and economic development programs.

"We can pay for this fight against drugs without raising taxes or adding to the budget deficit," he said.

He singled out for praise President Virgilio Barco of Colombia, where drug barons have declared war on the government. "We have a responsibility not to leave our brave friends in Colombia to fight alone," Bush said.

With cocaine and crack dealing creating violence and record homicide rates across the country, Americans appear ready for a new assault against drugs.

A Gallup Poll released at the White House last month said a record 27 percent of Americans consider drugs the most important problem facing the nation above poverty, the economy, the environment and fear of war.

"All of us agree that the gravest domestic threat facing our nation today is drugs," Bush said.

Bush held up the bag of cocaine and said it was as "innocent-looking as candy." But the president added, "If we fight this war as a divided nation, then the war is lost. But if we face this evil as a nation united, this will be nothing but a handful of useless chemicals."

Although overall cocaine use is down, frequent use has almost doubled in recent years. "Roughly 8 million people have used cocaine in the last year," the president said. Almost 1 million of them used the drug at least once a week.

Even before the speech, Bush's program was praised by the head of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, Charles Reynolds, who said in a statement that "the criminal justice recommendations of this report are responsive to critical needs."

Bush

However, Rep. Don Edwards, the Democratic chairman of the House Judiciary Committee's civil rights subcommittee, said the plan "proposes more of almost everything that hasn't worked — more arrests, more prisons, tougher sentences." He said a proposal to expand drug testing and step up arrests of users "poses serious threats to civil liberties."

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said Bush was not seeking enough money to mount a long term assault and said the program will increase pressure for an eventual tax increase.

Key elements of Bush's plan:
 • Authorization of $1.6 billion for corrections, $250 million to beef up the court system, $3.1 billion for law enforcement, $1.2 billion for prevention and education and $925 million for treatment.

• Funds for local law enforcement efforts would more than double, to about $350 million, to finance a street-level attack on drugs.

Reaction to Bush's speech mixed

By STACY HAYMES
 State Press

While Bush gave his proposal to end the war on drugs, ASU students and faculty formed mixed reactions on whether or not the president's plan will be effective.

John Geer, an ASU political science professor, said in order to fight the drug problem, Bush must either raise taxes or cut military spending, and "he won't do either."

"The program is a start, but he won't take steps to really fight it," Geer said.

The money Bush proposed to spend is just a drop in the bucket, he said, adding that it is not enough.

Keith Nicholls, also a University political science professor, agreed.

"I was not particularly impressed with what we are going to do to end the war on drugs," he said.

Nicholls said people today use drugs in order to fight depression and feel better.

"My real feeling is that it is really a symptom of a much deeper problem in society, and I'm not sure we can do anything with the real problem," Nicholls said. "People have been using drugs for a long time and they will continue to do that. The whole war on drugs is kind of a farce."

Tom Lewis, a 25-year-old finance major, said Bush hit the drug problem from all angles, including putting offenders in prison and educating younger students on the hazards of drug use.

However, Lewis said there is a bigger problem that needs to be addressed.

"In business, you learn about supply and demand and there is a huge demand for drugs, and I don't think he'll be able to stop that demand," the student said.

However, Lewis said he likes the idea of more prisons because many of the existing ones are overcrowded.

Georgiana Manoy, an art history major, said the president's speech was well presented.

"I'm happy about the proposals he's made," she said. "Everything he said made sense to me. It depends on congress and the legislature to enforce the laws. If they fail to enforce the laws, it's a lost battle."

However, Dale Hoff, a 23-year-old graphic design major, said the president is directing his resources in the wrong direction.

"If people want to do something they will do it — legal or not," he said. "I think they should educate kids about it with more facts instead of telling them just not to do it."

•States were urged to adopt stiffer fines for casual drug users, from seizing users' cars and suspending drivers' licenses to sending some offenders to military-style camps.

•As a condition for receiving federal funds, schools, colleges and universities would be required to adopt drug prevention programs.

•States and local governments, as well as private institutions and companies, were urged to adopt drug testing programs for employees. Drug testing would be mandatory for federal arrestees, prisoners and parolees for illegal drug use.

•The nation's insurance companies were urged to cover drug treatment programs in their policies but he stopped short of proposing mandatory standards.

He also called for studying ways that drug users could be committed to hospitals and other facilities for treatment without being charged with crimes.

Bush said the war on drugs would be fought "neighborhood by neighborhood, block by block, child by child," and he emphasized the toll in the nation's poorest communities by targeting $50 million to "fight crime in public housing projects."

"Drugs are sapping our strength as a nation," President Bush said in his first nationally televised address from the Oval Office Tuesday night.

"You know," Bush said, "the poor have never had it easy in this world. But in the past, they weren't mugged on the way home from work by crack gangs. And their children didn't have to dodge bullets on the way to school."

To pay for his plan, Bush proposed diverting $751 million from other areas, including juvenile justice, housing, immigration and economic development programs.

In a report to Congress, Bush called for "full swift funding and implementation of the many proposals and initiatives" in his plan.

On Capitol Hill, Foley questioned whether the White House financial commitment was enough.

"It's very difficult to assume we can, at least over the long term, meet the cost of the drug war without some additional revenue coming into the government," Foley said.

"There's no question but that drugs are (the) quicksand of our entire society," Bush said in an afternoon meeting with his Cabinet. "They're suffocating individuals and families and institutions as well."

"And all Americans must pull together to solve this problem," the president said. Bush said his program, mandated by Congress, amounted to "the first time we really have had such a strategy."

Bush's program would authorize spending $2.2 billion in 1990 above the current anti-drug war chest of $5.7 billion. More than half of the increase — $1.2 billion — is earmarked for a previously announced expansion of federal prison cells.

Actual outlays to carry out the program in 1990 would be $6.4 billion, an increase of $1.5 billion over the amount already earmarked. The higher figure of $7.9 billion also includes budget authority for additional spending on multi-year programs.

The 1989 funds for the Andean region are separate from the $65 million worth of military equipment and aid that Bush authorized this month for Colombia to combat a new, bloody offensive by the country's drug barons.

Democrats are considering their own proposals to offer debt relief to Latin American nations to subsidize withdrawal of farm land from production of coca crops that are refined to produce cocaine.

Bush's strategy was largely developed by Bennett, who proposed a goal of a 10 percent reduction in drug use in the next two years and a 50 percent reduction over 10 years.

To sell his drug strategy, Bush will deliberately keep the issue on the front burner.

Next Tuesday, Bush will speak on drugs again in a noontime speech that the White House will make available for live broadcast to schools and libraries.

'Serious' drug cases rose at ASU last year

By KIMBERLY HARRIS
State Press

The number of drug-related arrests is on the rise at ASU, but Gov. Rose Mofford's office is ready to spearhead the problem before it gets worse, officials said.

"At least 100 drug-related arrests have been made since the fall semester of 1988," said Bennett Rowe, ASU detective of narcotics. "Approximately 75 percent of those were possession cases and 25 percent dealt with trafficking or sales of drugs."

"Although the numbers of possession of marijuana arrests are down, the numbers for more serious charges such as possession of methamphetamine and crack are up."

To combat these rising numbers at ASU and around the Valley, the Governor's Alliance Against Drugs was created in the spring of 1987.

Jack Moortel, director of the alliance, said state and county agencies, including law enforcement units, will plan a strategy against drugs.

"The basis of the alliance is to provide a central data-base for all state and county agencies so our efforts are not doubled-up and money is not wasted," he said.

The governor's alliance hired three consultants, including Alan Brown, an ASU psychology in education professor, to develop the first of two phases of recommendations to the alliance.

Brown said the three consultants will lay the preliminary work and after the recommendations have been made, the state drug plan should be implemented by the alliance in about a year.

Recommendations to the alliance will include an analysis of present drug programs throughout Arizona and whether or not they are working, Brown said. The preliminary suggestions will address the substance of the state plan, he added.

"The state plan over a year's time (after its release next year) should include a mission statement, specific goals and objectives, performance of agencies, a 'gap' analysis to determine what's missing in their efforts, the manpower needed, a budget and an overall evaluation," Brown said.

The list of recommendations will be released Sept. 19.

There's a new name to contend with coming out of Beaujolais: Regnie. Growers in this area have just won the right to a separate "cru" ranking for the 1988 vintage; before that, the wine was included in the lesser Beaujolais-Villages.

The ruling came from the National Institute of Wine Appellations, a government regulatory body that jealously guards the names that French winemakers may put on their products.

Regnie now joins nine other cru Beaujolais: Brouilly, Côte-de-Brouilly, Fleurie, Chenas, Juliéna, Chiroubles, Morgon, Saint-Amour and Moulin-à-Vent.

The Regnie commune is next to Morgon and a little north of Brouilly and the Côte-de-Brouilly. The wine is similar in style to the Morgon. It's priced a little higher than a Beaujolais-Villages.

The Beaujolais nouveau coming up soon (usually around Thanksgiving) is only plain Beaujolais or Beaujolais-Villages, rather than cru wines.

Beaujolais is a favorite of many of our wine-oriented customers at The Liquor Barn, 930 East Broadway, Tempe. 894-1067. Try some soon.

With temperatures in the Valley hovering near 100 degrees each day, some residents in Palo Verde Main are without air conditioning — a situation they have endured since the beginning of school last week.

"You can't study, you can't sleep, you can't do anything," said Jennifer Guerrero, a freshman undeclared major. As a new resident in PV Main, Guerrero said she was surprised the University opened a dorm that did not have air conditioning.

Out of the four wings at PV Main, two of them have little to no air conditioning. And students say the fans Residence Life has given out to help ease the hot conditions have not helped.

"Some guy came in from the Physical Plant and took the temperature," Guerrero said. "It was 88 degrees with three fans."

Guerrero's roommate, Molly Gorsuch, a freshman undeclared major, said she is sick about the way they (the residents) have been treated.

"I spent an hour on the phone getting my calls shuffled around," she said. "I called the maintenance supervisor and they told me to call someone else."

Gorsuch said she tried to talk to the director of Residence Life.

"I tried to call Cliff Osborne but I couldn't get past his secretary," she said.

However, Osborne said he is aware of the problem and it is not an easy one to solve.

"The problem is with some fan coil units not working efficiently," he said. "Only select rooms are affected — not the whole building."

Osborne said he will meet with air conditioning officials in the next two days to "set a plan" in an effort to fix the broken units.

"We're trying to get through this period without shutting down all the units at once," he said, adding that Residence Life does not want to inconvenience the 600-plus residents of PV Main.

Osborne's plan calls for turning off the air for at least four-hour periods.

The reasoning for doing the repairs in stages is to keep the entire building from heating up to "undesirable" temperatures, he added.

Osborne said he sees no reason to shut the whole unit down for three or four days and inconvenience all the residents at once when only "select" rooms are being affected.

But many of the students want to be compensated for the inconvenience they have already endured.

Sandy Bryant, a freshman undeclared major, wants the air conditioning fixed and she wants the University to compensate for it.

"They should make it up to us," she said. "We paid for air conditioned rooms. The fans aren't enough."

Sean Mohr/State Press

Since the air conditioning system in Palo Verde Main is down for repairs, residents have to find other ways to beat the heat. Dena Northrup (seated), Heather Carter (far left), Molly Gorsuch (center), and Jennifer Guerrero keep cool with electric fans.

Relaxation room will help students alleviate stress

By SONJA LEWIS

State Press

Stressed?

Most students feel the pangs of frustration at the beginning of the semester, but soon there could be a way to alleviate those feelings.

The Student Health Center and Counseling and Consultation at ASU currently are looking for a building to house the relaxation room — a place students could go to forget about the stress in their lives, said Chuck McDuffie, coordinator for the health education program.

"We really need a space in the health center," he said. "Stress seems to be a real issue for students, and we're lacking in stress-related help programs and facilities."

If a room in the health center cannot be set aside for the relaxation environment, the new Student Recreation Complex might be able to accommodate it, McDuffie said.

The relaxation room had some success on campus about three years ago but closed due to lack of space.

"It's a service that students really did enjoy, and it worked on a drop-in basis and their time was limited to 40 minutes," said Danae Brownell, a health educator at the health center.

ASU Counseling and Consultation also hopes to set up a similar relaxation room in its office to better accommodate students.

"We believe that it's important to have a room on campus," said counselor Robert Zubia.

"Stress is a universal problem on campus," he said. "(Students) try to relax at the MU, but it's not possible with all of those people."

Audio tapes will be available to help students picture a more relaxing and meditative atmosphere. There will also be handouts available on various subjects including time management, relaxation techniques and the importance of humor.

In addition to the room, the health center will offer a stress management program that will include yoga training.

McDuffie, who instructed a similar course for two years at the University of Florida before coming to ASU in 1987, will conduct the program.

The class will begin with a 15 minute discussion on different ways to deal with stress, and then participants will practice respiratory control.

By teaching yoga relaxation techniques on campus, McDuffie said he hopes that people will take the knowledge home with them.

The stress management program will be held from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. Sept. 18 and 20 on the second floor of the Student Recreation Complex.

College campuses take steps to prevent terrorism

College Press Service

Although college campuses have thus far avoided any actual terrorist acts, a nationwide campaign to prevent them from occurring seems to be gaining momentum.

So far, "more than 50" students and campus groups have requested a "Stop Terrorism" kit from the group, called Restore A More Benevolent Order Coalition, said field representative James Bieber.

Bieber said RAMBOC aims to protest "pro-terrorist" speakers — especially Maki Mandela, the daughter of imprisoned South African anti-apartheid leader Nelson Mandela — on the national campus lecture circuit.

Mandela spoke at ASU on April 6 as part of the Associated Students of ASU lecture series, in conjunction with the ASASU Political Union.

Mandela's appearance sparked protests in front of the MU and she was occasionally heckled while speaking.

RAMBOC founder David Balsiger credited his organization for sparking the demonstration. He also claims responsibility for protests of Mandela at Central State University on May 2.

RAMBOC's kit includes ideas for what students can do to counteract the speakers and a flyer to be posted that warns "Terrorist supporter to speak on campus."

Although a "number" of speakers have terrorist agendas, "there are none with more notoriety than Maki Mandela," said Bieber, whose California-based group is associated with Young Americans for Freedom and Family Protection Scoreboard, a conservative magazine that monitors public policy.

Mandela, Bieber charged, improperly promotes the African National Congress, the banned South African party that her father helped lead and that the U. S. Department of Defense officially labels as a terrorist group.

"She's not a terrorist, but she speaks in support of terrorism and she gets paid $5,000 of taxpayers' money to do it," said Balsiger.

Terrorism, the DOD says, is any premeditated, politically motivated violence against noncombatant targets to coerce a government or its people to further political or social goals.

Balsiger acknowledged that terrorist acts haven't actually occurred on campuses, but, he said, "you just never know."

The DOD and Federal Bureau of Investigation officials could not recall any incidents either.

"I am not aware of any terrorist groups circulating speakers on campus," said Chip Berlet of Political Research Associates in Cambridge, Mass., a liberal watchdog group.

Nevertheless, RAMBOC literature claims the ANC, the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Forces have been "found operating on U.S. college campuses."

Balsiger could not name and specify campus chapters of the ANC, PLO or FMLN, but claimed numerous terrorism supporters are active at colleges and universities.

Suspect in killings used class schedule

Staff and Wire Reports

University of Washington police say that a man who shot his ex-girlfriend and her companion earlier this year may have located his victim by illegally obtaining a copy of her class schedule.

Police said that Azizollah Mazooni, who is being held in connection with the shooting, convinced clerks at the UW registrar's office to give him a copy of Marjan Mohseninia's schedule.

The 18-year-old Mohseninia and her friend, 27-year-old Abraham Sharif-Kashani, were both killed as they were leaving class on July 25.

Police said Mazooni obtained the schedule by giving clerks Mohseninia's name and social security number. The clerks complied because they were uncertain whether "Marjan Mohseninia" was a male or female name.

"It's impossible to walk in and ask for someone's schedule without having very specific information," said Melanie Bell, UW associate director of admissions and records. "We have no idea how it happened."

ASU Associate Registrar Louise Denny said that ASU follows specific regulations to prevent confidential records from being released.

"We follow the Family Education Rights and Privacy Act, and because of that act we would not give access to another person's schedule," Denny said.

Denny said the Rights and Privacy Act divided personal information into two categories: directory information and educational information.

"Directory information is releasable unless the student has asked us not to release that information," she said.

"Directory information includes things such as student name, local address, phone number and place of birth.

"The educational part of record includes personally identifiable information, which class schedules fall under."

Denny said students who want to release educational information to another student can show proper identification and fill out a card authorizing the information's release.

The 1974 Buckley Amendment restricts the release of "personally identifiable records or files" to anyone other than appropriate school officials without student consent.

Sex courses get rise out of schools' governing boards

College Press Service

Nassau Community College students won't be going to gay bars or chatting with prostitutes any more in their human sexuality course.

The Nassau County (N.Y.) Board of Supervisors threatened to reject the school's budget, and thereby delay the start of the fall semester, unless the homework was modified.

Also nixed from the class were assignments such as masturbating, taking a bubble bath and viewing slides of male and female genitalia. Students will get to see a film that explicitly portrays sexual intercourse.

This isn't the first time that such sex courses have gotten a rise out of schools' governing boards.

Last year at Villanova University, a Catholic school in Pennsylvania, a religious studies professor was criticized for allowing a student to show a sexually explicit video in a "Christian Marriage in the Modern World" class.

In 1986, Cerritos College in California dropped two sex-relationship courses after a debate about whether the course material was "appropriate."

San Francisco State University students this fall will be able to take a course titled "Homelessness and Public Policy," in which they can live on the streets for awhile.

Famous pocket billiard player to hold classes, tournament

By MICHELLE HENRY
State Press

Equipped with a pool cue and a keen sense of humor, the internationally famous pocket billiard and trick-shot artist had the full attention of those in attendance.

Jack White is a wise-cracker who loves the felt-green tables and enjoys traveling to ASU each year for his billiard tournament.

The 58-year-old native New Yorker is holding billiard clinic classes and a tournament for ASU students in the MU basement from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. today and Thursday. A trick-shot exhibition is scheduled for noon Friday in the MU Rendezvous Lounge.

"This is something we (ASU) have been doing every year since about 1977," he said. "It has become one of the most popular single events where all students can get involved."

White said the tournament is a good way to get students involved who would not normally play together, adding that he places an emphasis on getting players to participate with someone of a different background.

White said a few years ago he was conducting a tournament at the University of Georgia when Hershel Walker, who currently is a Dallas Cowboys running back, took a few racial slurs during the tournament.

"That is something I absolutely do not tolerate," he said. "The kids know how I feel about it and they respect me for it."

"I'm here for the students. They all know that I get on everyone's case. The number one priority is for the students to have a good time."

White, who constantly jokes and banters with the students around him, is in high demand on college campuses across

Bike Co-op wants more space, tools for repairs

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

In order to meet the University's demand for bicycle repairs, the ASU Bike Co-op needs additional space and tools, said its director.

"We could help twice as many people if we had more space and more tools," said Kevin Kienast, adding that the co-op has been busier this year than in previous ones.

Morgan Reed, a student worker at the co-op, said service is given to over 100 people a day, adding that many students do not even know the co-op exists.

"We get at least five to 10 people a day that have been on campus for years and didn't even know we were here," he said.

The bike co-op is located behind ASU Purchasing next to Murdock Hall.

Kienast said although he would like more space to conduct the bike service, he does not want to lose his existing space, adding that neighboring offices would like to utilize the co-op garage.

"Purchasing wants to expand and so does (ASU) Office Machines," he said. "We're getting to the point that we're cramped for space."

The co-op is a non-profit organization, and all labor is free.

"There are some students who have more time than money and need the service," Kienast said, adding that students only have to pay for new parts.

If the co-op has used parts in stock, the parts are free.

"If we have the part you need, it is the cheapest part in town," he said.

Ken Whitley, the co-op's associate director, said that the service is vital to students with bicycles.

"We're more a revenue center than a profit center, and we're really here to benefit the students," he said.

The bicycle co-op's purpose on campus is to fix the bikes and educate people so that they can repair their own bikes later.

"We're a tool box. We have tools, we have parts and we know how to do anything on a bike; and if someone comes in, they're going to learn how to do it too," Kienast said.

The co-op is open from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday and from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Friday.

Jason Meininger, an assistant at the bike co-op, checks a rim for warps.

New Tempe library to offer individual, group study rooms

By LAURA SCHMIDT
State Press

The new $12 million Tempe Public Library scheduled to open on Sept. 30 will offer students individual and group study rooms, which are lacking in the current library.

Teri Metros, public services supervisor at the library, said the student center will have 120 individual study carrels and four group study rooms.

Also, there will be about 500 periodicals available in a newspaper section and nine new microfilm viewers near the student study area, she said.

The new building will be located next to the current library at Rural Road and Southern Avenue.

Metros said the additions in the new building are a benefit to the library system because currently there is a lot of noise and very little space for book collections and seating.

She said the three-story, 120,000-square-foot library is needed because the existing 32,000-square-foot building is too small.

"Right now we are terribly overcrowded," she said.

Will Manley, Tempe's assistant community services director, said the library's increased space has quadrupled the parking and seating areas.

The new library project began in July of 1988 with money from a bond issue approved by Tempe voters in November 1985.

Metros said the building will have oak furniture and gray tweed carpet that will be installed this week.

Manley said that besides having bookstacks, restrooms and on-line catalogues designed for handicap access, there are also 12 handicapped parking spaces.

Students living in the East Valley will find the central location of the library more accessible than ASU's Hayden Library, Manley added.

"The parking is adjacent to the building," he said. "We already get a good number of ASU students."

However, Connie Corey, ASU associate dean for management services, said that with more than 43,000 students at the University, she doubts there will be fewer students visiting Hayden Library.

"Our mission (at Hayden Library) is to provide the books and journals that are most needed by faculty and students," she said. "Any library that is brand-new tends to attract new users."

The old library building will house the Tempe Historical Society, scheduled to open to the public in January.

Sean Mohr/State Press

The new Tempe Public Library, set to open later this month, will triple the city's current library space.

Billiard

the country. He is already booked solid until March 1992.

White is booked at ASU for life.

The billiard master said he has seen some talented players at universities around the country.

"The players here at ASU are much more better than those at UofA," White said.

Judy Knox, coordinator for the MU game facilities, said White has been conducting clinics for years at the University.

"We decided to book him (White) for a clinic because of the positive reception he gets from students," she said. "As soon as school starts, the students all want to know when he's coming. This is a great way to get students interested and playing billiards down here."

Knox would not say how much White is paid for his services at ASU, but said "as long as he keeps coming and the students enjoy him, we'll keep inviting him back."

Knox said she would like to see more girls play billiards and hopes White's instructions will lessen the intimidation some might feel in the billiard recreation center filled with male players.

"He really cares about the students," she said. "He is an antagonist and will (jokingly) insult the students by giving them pet names."

White holds an honorary degree from the University of Notre Dame and is known as a Doctor of Poolology. In addition, he earned a master's degree in billiard science from the University of Alabama.

White said his greatest honor was when he entertained returning prisoners of war.

"I'm glad I had a chance to do that because I really cared about what happened to them," he said.

Aitor Inda, a junior aerospace engineering major, said he enjoys White's visits.

"This is my second time playing in the tournament," he said. "Jack is great to watch. He gives everyone a hard time but it is fun."

Gary Caballes, a senior finance major, said this is his second year in the tournament.

"It is good to see him (White) come back," he said. "All these people gear themselves up to get better so they can play Jack."

The winner of the tournament will get the chance to play White on Friday.

Caballes said participants have different forms of games.

"When winning is on the line, a lot of guys get intense," he said. "He (White) tries to relax you. He gives everyone a warm feeling about playing the game. I guess he's just that type of guy."

More fines leveled against Palo Verde nuclear plant

WINTERSBURG (AP) — A $250,000 fine proposed by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission against the Palo Verde nuclear plant has boosted to more than $800,000 the amount of fines levied by regulators against the facility since 1983, officials said Tuesday.

NRC staff proposed the fine alleging 13 violations discovered during an inspection of Palo Verde following the March 3 shutdown of Unit Three, commission and Arizona Nuclear Power Project officials announced Tuesday.

Palo Verde officials, who were notified of the proposed fines on Friday, announced them Tuesday and said they won't contest the commission's enforcement action.

"We acknowledge the violations and will pay the civil penalty," said William Conway, ANPP executive vice president.

"The signal is, 'You didn't do your job right, and you'll have to start doing it better,'" Conway said.

ANPP operates the three-reactor plant located approximately 50 miles west of downtown Phoenix for its owners, a consortium of Arizona, California, New Mexico and Texas utilities.

Included in this most recent fine is a proposed $100,000 penalty for inadequate preventative and corrective actions on equipment in the steam system. Six violations were cited which were related to the maintenance and operations of the atmospheric dump valves and the steam bypass control system valves, officials said.

The commission noted that Palo Verde identified in 1985, "a number of corrective actions to increase (dump valve) reliability, but as of March 3, 1989, failed to implement those corrective actions."

The staff also proposed a $100,000 fine for four violations involving the plant's emergency lighting system, and a $50,000 penalty was proposed for operator and training issues, officials said.

Again, the staff noted that known flaws in the emergency lighting system were long standing. "(In December 1986), it was noted that the engineering organization knew of the potential problem following a Unit Two test in 1985; but due to internal administrative problems, the issue was not addressed."

The NRC rated the violations at Level Three on a scale of one to five, with one being the most serious.

"The length of time that identified deficiencies were allowed to go uncorrected is an indicator of unacceptable past management performance," the agency said in its notice to ANPP.

Conway said Palo Verde officials met with the commission on June 5 to discuss the March 3 shutdown of Unit Three, and corrective measures have been initiated.

The NRC said it increased the fine because of the violation's duration and because it wasn't reported by the plant but lessened the fine because of extensive corrective actions on Palo Verde's part.

Unit Three was shut down when the failure of a transmission line in California triggered a safety reaction cutting Palo Verde off its regional power grid. Several of Unit Three's eight steam bypass valves began to open and close rapidly, venting more steam than needed and lowering pressure in the primary cooling system. Cooling off was complicated by malfunctioning of the four atmospheric dump valves, designed to emit huge amounts of steam generated by latent reactor heat during shutdowns.

Two days later, Unit One was taken off-line after equipment signaled a pressure loss. Unit Two was voluntarily shut down March 15 after an inspection revealed valve problems.

Conway said Unit Three is expected to be brought back on-line in about a month and Unit One a few weeks later. Unit Two was brought on-line again in June but has experienced several shutdowns since then. It was operating Tuesday.

Aside from the $250,000 to be paid by the ANPP, the commission also has issued the following fines: $250,000 in December 1988 for inadequacies in operations and radiation, paid by ANPP; $100,000 in April 1988, for deficiencies in engineering and operations, paid by ANPP; $100,000 in May 1986 for inadequacies in the security system, paid by ANPP; $50,000 in October 1985, for deficiencies in the Post Accident Sampling System, paid by ANPP; $20,000 in December 1983 for deficiencies in the Quality Assurance program, paid by ANPP; $40,000 in December 1983, for inadequate electrical construction records, paid by Bechtel Power Corp., which was responsible for documentation.

5000 East Germans stranded in Budapest refugee camps

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — East Germans, who had hoped to go to the West legally, said Tuesday they may risk an illegal dash across the border unless the red tape that has stranded them in makeshift refugee camps is unraveled soon.

The mood in the five camps housing about 5,000 East Germans in Budapest and on the shores of Lake Balaton grew somber, even desperate, after Hungarian officials said it might be weeks before they can move legally to West Germany.

"When are you going back to Austria?" an East German woman in her 30s asked a reporter near the Csilleberc refugee camp in Budapest. "I haven't tried crossing over on my own; but if the standoff continues much longer, I might just ask you to take me with you and drop me off near the border." She added, "I'm serious."

Those who are caught could end up with a stamp on their papers showing they tried an illegal escape, exposing them to punishment on return to their hard-line Communist homeland.

About 30 East Germans in one Budapest camp announced they would start a hunger strike Friday if not given permission to cross the border.

"The situation is desperate," a 23-year-old identifying himself only as Rene told reporters outside Budapest's Zugliget refugee camp.

"We wanted to start fasting two weeks ago, but we didn't because we didn't want to hurt the Hungarians," he said, adding that now some East Germans feel they have no choice but to protest.

Last week, West German and Austrian officials suggested Hungarian authorities would allow the East Germans to leave by the end of that week. They would have been received at the Hungarian-Austrian border and transported to West Germany.

However, disillusionment flooded the camps Monday when Interior Minister Istvan Horvath was quoted by the West German weekly Stern as saying it might be weeks before Bonn and East Berlin resolved the refugee crisis.

On Tuesday, senior Foreign Ministry official Ferenc Somogy of Hungary reiterated that "a final solution could take days, even weeks."

Hungary and East Germany are allies in the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact alliance. However, reform-minded Communist authorities in Hungary began removing barriers on their border with Austria in May and created a crush of East German refugees trying to cross to the West.

About 6,000 East Germans have rushed across the border since then. The wave of escapes peaked in late August, but it has dwindled to a trickle since Hungary stepped up border patrols.

East Germans by the hundreds also gathered this summer to demand asylum at West German diplomatic buildings in Budapest; East Berlin; and Prague, Czechoslovakia.

Under a 1969 agreement with East Berlin, Hungary is obliged to send home any East Germans who try to escape. However, Budapest's reformist government seems willing to break that accord in a new commitment to human rights.

The Hungarian attempt to win at least grudging acceptance from East Germany seems to have delayed, if not blocked, the exodus.

East Germany wants to win back some of the thousands of mostly young, skilled workers who are turning their back on their homeland.

Despite the delays, most of the East Germans seemed determined Tuesday to wait it out.

Officials will not cite reason for USS Iowa explosion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy's long-awaited report into the USS Iowa explosion that claimed 47 lives will point to the "probability" that human intervention may have touched off the explosion, but will not cite a specific reason for the blast, Defense officials said Tuesday.

Top Navy officials plan to formally release their report Thursday at the Pentagon. It culminates a more than four-month investigation into the April 19 tragedy, when powder exploded in the battleship's No. 2 gun turret during open seas gunnery practice near Puerto Rico.

Defense Department officials, speaking privately, say the report is not expected to pinpoint a singular cause of the blast. Investigators were hampered by the fact that no witnesses survived the explosion.

"There is no specific cause cited," said one official, who spoke on condition his name not be used.

"It's very complicated, and the report goes into a considerable amount of detail," said the official. "It's very complex."

Another official said the report "cites a probability" that human action, calculated or otherwise, could have caused the explosion.

"When they can't find a mechanical reason in an investigation, they look to see whether there was a human factor involved," the second official said.

The second defense official stressed that investigators sought to look at all the circumstances that may have led to the explosion, but that none appears to have been the overriding reason for the disaster.

The Naval Investigative Service launched a criminal investigation into the allegations of murder and sabotage, but failed to come up with any solid conclusions, and will instead provide a summary of the evidence compiled through interviews, statements and other research, the official said.

The official said he was told the report will show a number of "lapses in procedures," about such problems as the maintenance of the gun turret, or that some of the sailors had not been properly certified to operate the ship's complex firing mechanism.

But such problems were discounted as the primary causes of the explosion, both officials said.

At his daily briefing, Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams said the report is 1,100 pages in length, and will be discussed by the Vice Chief of Naval Operations Adm. Leon Edney and the investigating officer, Rear Adm. Richard Milligan, at a formal Pentagon briefing.

"It will be a very thorough briefing," Williams said. The spokesman declined to discuss any details of the report in advance.

Milligan, who has conducted the investigation, was chosen because he formerly commanded the battleship New Jersey and was familiar with the ship's powerful 16-inch guns.

He will be joined at the briefing by the head of the NIS, Rear Adm. William Schachte.

The long-awaited study has been the subject of much speculation, including numerous television and newspaper reports, over the past several months.

Officially, the Navy has withheld comment on the investigation, as reports contended investigators were looking into the possibility that suicide or murder was involved in the explosion.

In the latest twist, Seaman David Smith said in an interview carried by ABC Radio on Monday that Navy investigators browbeat him into implicating shipmate Clayton Hartwig in the explosion. Hartwig, a 25-year-old gunner's mate, died in the blast with the other sailors.

ASU Veterans lobby for benefits

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

ASU Veterans are fighting for a bill in the U. S. Congress allowing veterans nationwide educational benefits that were lost in the passage of legislation last May.

The University Veterans Outreach is encouraging students who have served in the military to write letters to congressmen in order to pass Senate Bill 945, introduced by Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz.

The benefits were lost in the termination of the Old Chapter 34 G.I. Bill, which took the educational monies away from veterans who had been out of the service for more than 10 years, said Jim Cobb, an aide to McCain who is working on military and veterans affairs.

"A lot of people will lose out on their rights," he said. "It's really kind of a blow to veterans — something they've lost along the way."

"The whole intent of our bill is to ensure that all veterans have 10 years (to attend a university) after they leave."

Cornelius Huhn, ASU program coordinator of the Veterans Outreach, said he wants to make sure that University veterans know about the legislation.

"We're trying to wake people up so they can contact Congress and other students so something can be done," he said.

Huhn said he knows of at least one ASU student whose benefits were cut, forcing him to drop out of school.

"It doesn't affect my benefits but most of the affected are Vietnam veterans and they've been screwed over since the Vietnam war and this is just another example," said Robert Beckvall, communications major and veterans student worker.

The introduction of the new GI bill in January and the termination of the old one creates a gap and some veterans benefits will be lost or shortened. Those enlisted in the military prior to January 1977 and discharged between 1980 and June 30, 1988 will be denied the chance to use their educational benefits 10 years after discharge.

Huhn said the termination of Chapter 34 is a governmental breach of contract.

"Basically all we're asking for is that each veteran get his 10-year benefits," said Huhn, who is also president of the Arizona Veterans Program Association. "We don't want to extend the old GI Bill. The government says what we're getting is a benefit, not a right."

Huhn said veterans do not use their benefits while they are in the service because they are too busy transferring or doing their job. When they leave the service, many veterans get an education, Huhn added.

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents that occurred between 7 a.m. Friday and 7 a.m. Tuesday:

•Someone threw a small explosive device into the back yard of the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity house, 414 Adelphi Drive, at 12:55 a.m. Monday, the fraternity reported.

Fraternity President Tim Hughes said he thought the object was probably a cherry bomb or firecracker.

There were no injuries or damages reported and the identity of the vandal is unknown.

•Vandals caused $200 worth of damage Friday to the first floor of Sahuaro Residence Hall. Security lights at the east and west ends of the B-wing were torn down, plastic light covers were damaged, door vents to four rooms were kicked in and the cover to the building's breaker box was damaged.

•A student reported that someone entered his unlocked car parked in Lot 46 and stole his green and yellow 15-speed bicycle between 7:30 and 11:30 Thursday morning. The loss is estimated at $400.

•A student reported that someone stole the handlebars from his Aero bicycle, which was parked at the east side of Palo Verde West Residence Hall between 10:30 p.m. Friday and 7:45 a.m. Saturday. The brake cable was cut to remove the handlebars. The loss is estimated at $115.

•A student reported that someone stole his 27-inch gray Galaxi mountain bicycle from the east side of the Engineering Building between 9 and 9:45 Sunday night. The bicycle was left unsecured. The loss is estimated at $100.

•A student reported that someone stole his wallet and its contents from his tray while the student was in the cafeteria at Sahuaro Residence Hall at 12:40 p.m. Friday. The loss is estimated at $7.

•A student reported that someone stole his wallet and its contents from his backpack somewhere between the MU and Manzanita Residence Hall between 11 p.m. Friday and 1 p.m. Saturday.

•Four students were warned of trespassing after hours at the ASU golf course.

•A student dislocated his knee while sitting on his bed in his room at Ocotillo Residence Hall. He was taken to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital by friends.

•A man was arrested in Hayden Library on an outstanding warrant from the Maricopa County Sheriff's Office. He was found sleeping after the library closed. He was booked into jail in Mesa.

•A student was involved in a fist fight at the Palo Verde Residence Hall beach area. He refused to tell what the fight was about and with whom he was fighting. Tempe Fire Department paramedics responded and treated him for facial cuts. He refused to be taken to the hospital and did not file charges.

•Several students were involved in a brawl at 2:06 a.m. Saturday on the south side of Sahuaro Residence Hall. None of the students would admit to being assaulted and none would press charges. Those with injuries refused medical treatment.

•Tempe police responded to a fire alarm Friday at Cholla Apartments. The fire started at 8:06 p.m. in the boiler section of an oven in room C307. The C-wing and D-wing were evacuated. The fire was extinguished by the time firefighters arrived. No monetary damage was reported.

•A student was found semi-conscious and apparently hallucinating north of Best Residence Hall. He stated he had "dropped acid" in his dorm room. He was taken to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital for treatment.

•A burglar stole $26 Friday from a coin-operated copy machine located on the third floor of the Student Services Building. Police said a key may have been used.

•A student was arrested in Lot 49 for possessing a false license. He attempted to flee but was apprehended at the corner of Apache Boulevard and Rural Road.

•A student was arrested for underage possession of alcohol and failure to obey lawful order in Lot 27.

The Usual Suspects

Investigating Charo

Charo, of "cuchi-cuchi" and "Love Boat" fame, is currently being investigated by the Immigration and Naturalization Service for allegedly importing and employing illegal aliens. Charo, of course, has denied the allegations and seems surprised at all the ruckus. Two Mexican nationals who worked at Charo's Restaurant on Kauai and lived in a house adjacent to the eatery are apparently the focus of the investigation. Charo is also accused of employing a female alien to work at both her home and the restaurant. "I think the immigration department is using my name just for publicity," says Charo.

Gonzo on drugs

Gregory Harrison, 39, who played Dr. Gonzo Gates on "Trapper John, M.D." says that he feels more "intelligent, more handsome, more creative, witty and charming" since he kicked his nasty cocaine habit. According to the actor, it was like "sitting in the backseat of my addiction, and the devil was driving." Harrison is now working as the Celebrity Spokesman for the Entertainment Industry Referral for Assistance Center which has helped about 3,000 workers, including Harrison, in only 5 years.

Love and tennis

Swedish tennis great Bjorn Borg, 32, and Italian pop star Loredana Berté, 38, liked getting married so much that they did it twice in one day. The first ceremony was a simple and legal affair at the Milan, Italy, City Hall. Then the couple and 20 of their closest friends went to a tiny church downtown and spoke their vows in front of an imported Swiss Lutheran minister. Both Borg and Berté are formerly married — not to each other.

You must be joking . . .

Despite modern notions of freedom in the western world, speaking against monarchy can cost you your job. Actor James Lovell, 24, was suspended from his job when he started telling jokes about Prince Charles speaking to sunflowers and making fun of the recent Princess Anne/Mark Phillips breakup. Of course, now, Lovell is a professional court jester at the Royal Britain Exhibition, and he probably should know to bite his tongue rather than the hand that feeds him, as it were. Kim Keble-White, a spokeswoman for the exhibition, says that Lovell was doing fine until just recently, when the lad apparently couldn't help himself. Lovell responds "but Lord fool him for being thus inflamed, for I am the fool, and therefore for him to get inflamed by my foolery makes him a fool, for sure." For sure.

"What is small, silent and lonely, and lives in a stable? Captain Phillips." —

Court Jester James Lovell, remarking on the horse-loving husband of Princess Anne. The couple announced their separation last week.

The end of cinerama?

After 27 years of movie thrills, the Kachina in Scottsdale is being torn down.

By FRANCINE STAHL
State Press

The building of a new mall in Scottsdale has recently sparked some controversy. The design for this new mall, it seems, requires that the Kachina Theatre, considered by many a Valley landmark, be torn down. The Kachina theater, at 4305 N. Scottsdale Rd., was built in 1962 by the Harry Nace Company. "The Brothers Grimm" was its first feature presentation and the adult tickets sold at a very reasonable $2.50. In 1983, Blair Theaters began a three-year attempt to run the theater before turning over the lease to the present owner, Harkins Theaters, in May of 1986. Dan Harkins, owner of Harkins Theaters said when he took over the Kachina he knew it was only a matter of time before the landlords would decide to tear it down. Public outcry was spurred when the groundbreaking was held in July for the new Scottsdale Galleria and Harkins was informed that the Kachina was to be closed by Sept. 28. The 1200-square-foot, 700-seat theater is one of two remaining one-house, 70-millimeter theaters in the Valley. The other, Cine Capri at 2323 E. Camelback Rd. in Phoenix, is also owned by Harkins and is in danger of being destroyed. Harkins said he was not happy about the decision to close the theater.

The Scottsdale Galleria is expected to accommodate 245 shops and services.

"Believe me," he said, "if I was in control of that property, I would have made a plan that would allow the Kachina to remain."

'The Package' isn't worth unwrapping

By FRANCINE STAHL
State Press

If a messenger comes to your door, don't answer it. He may be trying to bring you "The Package." Gene Hackman stars as Johnny Gallagher, an army sergeant who, after messing up a routine maneuver in Berlin, is assigned to deliver a package back to the United States. His package turns out to be a soldier (Tommy Lee Jones) whom Gallagher believes is due for a court-martial. The two are soon entangled in a web of international intrigue. Gallagher finds that the President and the Soviet Premier, who are on the verge of signing a nuclear disarmament agreement, are in danger of assassination. So Gallagher and his ex-wife (Joanna Cassidy) take it upon themselves to prevent the double killing.

Tommy Lee Jones and Gene Hackman star in the action-thriller "The Package."

The Scottsdale Galleria will be 1.35 million square feet of high-class specialty stores. This is intended to include 245 shops, a performing arts center that is supposed to become the new home of Actors Lab Arizona, and a seven-screen movie theater designed by Cineplex Odeon.

Carol Walden, director of public relations for the Galleria, said she felt that the mall would be a good addition to the area, and that the nostalgic reaction to the removal of the theater is being overplayed.

"I love the idea of the Kachina," Walden said, "But the time has come to replace it with something that is better for the area."

Some Valley residents disagree. Tim Hudson, a pharmacy technician from Phoenix, said, "Scottsdale had kind of a unique charm to it, and if they are going to destroy that, it may as well be Palm Springs."

An anonymous letter, tacked to the sign for the new mall, said, "They (presumably the Kachina and Cine Capri) are the only remaining theaters that can make going to the movies an event, the way it should be."

Harkins said there is no hope for the Kachina Theatre, but that Cine Capri can still be saved with enough public support.

Sean Mohr/State Press

Valley residents and patrons of the Kachina aren't too happy about the theater's eminent demise.

'Package'

There are as many holes in this movie as there are people shot. The first hour is entirely unintelligible, and the second hour is just plain stupid. The script-writers don't really seem to know what's going on, let alone the audience.

The answers seem to come to the characters just a bit too easily. It takes nothing for them to figure out a complicated, supposedly top-secret government plan. It seems a like a sure bet that if these people can concoct a plan to kill the head of the Soviet Union, they would be able get rid of this troublesome sergeant. There are enough opportunities — in one scene Gallagher is handcuffed to a pole — but he always seems to get away. The film lacks suspense because early on it becomes clear that this man is invincible.

And, although there is nothing wrong with a little social conscience in a movie, when it overtakes the story, it can destroy the entire film.

"The Package" is mostly a very long, boring sermon for nuclear disarmament and peace on earth. One of the more pathetic exchanges takes place when Gallagher and military-man-gone-bad Colonel Glen Whitacre (John Heard) are face to face.

Whitacre says, "If it wasn't for nuclear weapons, you would be fighting the Russians on the streets of Washington right now". Gallagher, ever brilliant, responds with, "I'll take my chances." No wonder he's still a sergeant at his age.

John Heard and Gene Hackman face off in "The Package."

"The Package" delivers a confusing plot in an anti-climactic manner that will make you want to return it unopened.

Johnson unhappy after pre-Olympic festival

Brian O'Mahoney/State Press

ASU's Gea Johnson, who was the top American heptathlon finisher in the World University Games in Duisberg, West Germany, leaps over the high bar during a recent competition.

By JOEL HORN
State Press

The great ones are never satisfied. ASU heptathlete Gea Johnson, competing in the World University Games in Duisberg, West Germany, last week, set four personal bests and finished seventh overall, but said she was not pleased with her performance.

"Not by any means," she said. Johnson, who qualified for the meet by finishing second at the Athletics Congress championships earlier this year and has aspirations of making the 1992 U. S. Olympic team, set personal bests in the 100-meter hurdles (13.95 seconds), shot put (43 feet 5 1/4 inches), high jump (5 feet 8 3/4 inches) and long jump (19 feet 9 inches).

"I'm really not satisfied with any of my personal records," she said.

Johnson also completed the 200 meters in a time of 25.33 seconds and the 800 meters in 2:19, for a total of 5,932 points.

"I was really trying to get over 6,000," she said. "It's just one of those things."

Johnson was the top U. S. finisher in the heptathlon. Jolanda Jones of the University of Houston, the other American competitor, did not finish the event.

Johnson said she was somewhat pleased with her time in the 100-meter hurdles, although she stumbled over the last hurdle.

"It's always nice to break a barrier, which for me would be 14 seconds (in the hurdles)," she said.

Johnson, who said she was in great shape after training all summer with ASU Head Track and Field Coach Tom Jones, had never competed against the world's greatest athletes.

"The most important thing for me was to go to the meet and not fold under the pressure," she said. "It was a great experience."

Johnson said it was exciting to compete in a huge stadium in West Germany.

"It was jam-packed, totally unlike the U. S.," she said. "I had goosebumps all over me, and I hadn't even done anything yet."

The weather in Duisberg, Johnson said, was rainy, cold and windy. Although she was in West Germany more than a week, she said she was not able to see much of the country.

"I didn't like it when I first got there," she said, "but I got a chance to meet people and make new friends."

Johnson, a junior with a 4.0 GPA in communications, said she was invited to an upcoming international competition in France. However, she will skip the event to rest and train for the indoor season.

Johnson said the ASU track and field team, coming off probation, will "turn some heads" this season. After a limited fall schedule, the squad will begin the indoor season in early January.

"We have a chance to be one of the top teams," she said. "We're ready to roll."

Anderson develops mental approach to winning

By MICHELLE ALLMAN
State Press

Mark Anderson is ASU's solution for every athlete who has heard the words "get your mind in the game."

Anderson is a sports psychologist, a new breed of coach brought in to take Sun Devil athletics to a higher level of fitness.

Mental fitness, Anderson says, can ultimately determine victory.

"At the elite level of competition, performance is mental," he said. "Mental skills will determine the winner."

With the hiring of Anderson, ASU has become one of only two universities in the country with a sports psychologist on staff. Despite this distinction, Anderson sees his job as just one area of an athlete's workout.

"It is just one part of the total training package," he said. "It is for the physically fit athlete who is motivated to get his mental game in shape."

And Anderson is quick to point out that his contribution to the training package is really nothing new.

Agreed Men's Gymnastics Coach Don Robinson, "I've been using (sports psychology) all my life. All coaches use the techniques, but most aren't aware of it."

Sports psychology uses imagery to relax and focus athletes. The primary benefit, most coaches agree, is to remove as much stress as possible so that the athlete can concentrate only on his sport.

"The athletes who use the techniques have more control; the fear is removed," said Robinson, who played a part in the selection process for the new spot. "As a coach, I've been pushing for this (position of sports psychologist) for a long time. I really think he (Anderson) will do a great job."

"He will be an asset to our athletes; (sports psychology) is a valuable tool, and we'll be much better off than the guys that don't use it."

Anderson, a graduate of California-Davis, San Diego State University and UofA, was an assistant professor of psychology at Beloit College in Wisconsin when he was hired by ASU and also worked as a private sports psychology consultant during this period. He has served as a psychologist for various programs at UofA, the Arizona prison system and the Alcoholism Council of Tucson.

Anderson spent his first few weeks at ASU in a whirlwind of meetings with coaches and administrators. He said he hopes to have his programs in full swing within the month.

"Initially we will work on a team-wide basis on education about basic techniques," he said. "On a more personal level, I will work with small groups of two or three."

ASU Baseball Coach Jim Brock is looking forward to the small group sessions being planned by Anderson.

"This really is a giant step forward in modern day athletics," Brock said.

When asked about the importance of an athlete's mental state, Brock echoed the sentiments of Anderson and other coaches.

"It is totally critical — every bit as important as the physical part," Brock said. "On this higher skill level, it comes down to who is mentally ready to compete."

Stallings stacks Cards lineup for Detroit opener

PHOENIX (AP) — The Phoenix Cardinals lowered their NFL roster to the league limit of 47 players Tuesday by placing linebacker Reggie McKenzie and wide receiver Andy Schillinger on the injured list and claiming defensive back Kevin Guidry off waivers.

In addition, the Cardinals re-signed three rookies waived Monday — running back John Burch, tight end Tim Jorden and defensive end David Edeen — and put them on the team's six-man developmental squad.

Edeen is a fifth-round draft pick this year from Wyoming while Burch is an eighth-rounder from Tennessee-Martin, and Jorden is a free-agent signee from Indiana.

The three were back practicing with the Cardinals on Tuesday, and Coach Gene Stallings said three more rookies may be signed to complete the developmental squad today.

Schillinger and McKenzie will be sidelined a minimum of six weeks. If they had been put on injured-reserve Monday, they would be out for the entire season under a new league rule.

McKenzie, a fifth-year pro signed as an unrestricted free agent on March 8, suffered a hyperextended left knee in the Aug. 21 preseason game against the Los Angeles Rams and hasn't played or practiced since.

Schillinger suffered a sprained right knee Aug. 4 in training camp at Flagstaff and has been limited by the injury in practice drills since then. He was Phoenix's 10th-round draft pick in 1988 but dressed for only three games.

The 6-foot, 176-pound Guidry was Denver's third-round draft pick last year out of Louisiana State. He played primarily on the Broncos' special teams unit and had six tackles in 14 games last season.

Guidry arrived here late Tuesday afternoon to undergo a physical and will practice with the Cardinals today, according to Stallings.

Ricky Hunley, projected to be the Cardinals' starting middle linebacker this season, was cut Monday instead.

Linebackers Tyrone Jones and Richard Tardits, defensive end Sean McNanie, fullback Jessie Clark, running back Tony Jeffery, wide receiver Mark Bellini, defensive lineman Mike Dwyer and cornerback Michael Brim were also placed on waivers Monday.

Hunley's release was the biggest surprise since the sixth-year pro from UofA was being counted on to regain the form that saw him notch 164 tackles for Denver in 1986 and 104 the following year.

However, he missed the first 12 days of training camp in a contract dispute and played poorly in the preseason with just five tackles in two games.

"He wasn't performing at the level he did last year," Cardinals Coach Gene Stallings said of the 6-foot-2-inch, 250-pound Hunley, who had 49 tackles in 16 games. "The main thing is production. We need better production out of the middle. I was hoping he'd solidify the middle."

Now, the starter heading into Sunday's season opener at Detroit appears to be third-year pro Ilia Jarostchuk, who was among Phoenix's final cuts last year.

The 6-foot-3-inch, 236-pound Jarostchuk played for San Francisco and Miami in 1988 before being re-signed as a free agent by the Cardinals last summer. He had six preseason tackles.

"He had better production than Hunley," said Stallings. "I expected a little more out of Ricky than I did Jarostchuk."

"If I can do the same job for about a quarter of the money, I guess I'm a bargain," said Jarostchuk, referring to Hunley's reported $350,000 salary.

Hunley, obtained in a July 1988 trade with the Broncos, declined comment on his release Monday.

He might have become expendable when Phoenix signed rookie linebacker Eric Hill to a four-year, $2.45 million contract on Aug. 18.

Jeffery was the Cardinals' second-round draft pick in 1988 but was one of last season's biggest busts with just eight yards on three carries. He had 26 yards on 19 carries this preseason.

"The production just wasn't there,"

Stallings said. "The guy has great speed. But when he had to use his athletic ability, I just didn't see it."

Brim, a fourth-round selection last year, spent all but four games last season on injured-reserve with broken ribs and played sparingly this preseason.

Tardits was trying to become the first native Frenchman ever to play in the NFL, but blocking a punt in last Friday night's preseason finale at San Diego still could not earn him a roster spot.

"I'm really not ready to play in the NFL," Tardits said. "I still feel like I can do it, though. I'd like to give it another shot."

Jones, a free-agent signee last year, who spent all but one game on injured-reserve with ankle injuries, said he may return to the Canadian Football League where he was all-CFL from 1984-87.

McNanie, a seven-year pro, was acquired in a September 1988 trade with the Buffalo Bills.

Clark, an eight-year pro, was signed by Phoenix as a free agent last Nov. 22 and used mainly on special teams. He had 29 yards on 10 carries in the preseason.

Bellini, a third-year pro signed as an unrestricted free agent in the off-season, missed most of training camp with a sprained right arch and finished the preseason with two catches for 20 yards.

NEW YORK (AP) — Chicago Cubs sportscaster Harry Caray has been named to the American Sportscasters Association's Hall of Fame, the organization said Tuesday.

Caray, an announcer for 45 years, is the voice of the Cubs on WGN-TV and radio station WGN. Previously, he broadcast games of the Chicago White Sox, Oakland Athletics and St. Louis Cardinals.

Caray will be inducted Dec. 13 at the organization's annual dinner.

A STATE OF PRIDE

1989 ASU Football Student Season Tickets

Purchase Details: Full-time ASU students with seven or more hours may purchase student discount season tickets for the 1989 Sun Devil football season. Students participating in the season sale must fill out an order form (one ticket per student) and bring it to the Sun Devil Ticket Office along with appropriate payment. Ticket orders will be processed as they are received without regard to class standing. The ticket office is located at the south end of Sun Devil Stadium. Students must pick up tickets in person and present a valid student photo I.D. in order to claim tickets.

Spouse Cards: Married ASU students registered for seven or more hours, may purchase a spouse card. The spouse card is good for the Fall 1989 semester. This card allows spouse to purchase a season ticket at the Student discount rate. The student applicant must present his/her valid I.D. card and proof of marriage.

Group Seating: Sections 246 and 247 have been designated group seating areas for students. Student organizations wishing to be seated together may do so in these designated areas.

I.D. Cards: Student photo I.D. can be validated at the Gammage or Sun Devil box offices. Students will be asked to present a validated student photo I.D. when purchasing tickets or when gaining admission to student discounted events.

Cancellation Policy: A season ticket may be cancelled and refunded if the request is made in writing prior to the first home game. A $1.00 handling charge will be forfeited. A refund check will be issued (4-6 weeks processing time).

General Information: Student tickets will not be upgraded to general public tickets. All student tickets are general admission. Students must enter the stadium through designated student gates. Seating will be on a first-come, first-serve basis. Under no circumstances will saving seats be permitted. No one is allowed to exit and re-enter the stadium until the start of the second quarter. No refunds or exchanges. Lost, stolen or destroyed tickets cannot be replaced.

1989 Home Schedule: Sept. 9 vs. Kansas State, Sept. 16 vs. San Jose State, Sept. 23 vs. Houston, Sept. 30 vs. Missouri, Oct. 21 vs. Oregon, Oct. 28 vs. Washington State, Nov. 11 vs. Stanford (Homecoming), Nov. 25 vs. Arizona.

Sun Devil spikers split Red Raider tourney

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

During the Red Raider Classic Tournament held in New Mexico and Texas over the weekend, the ASU women's volleyball team came home with an opening record of 2-2 — a score that Coach Patti Snyder is neither ashamed nor proud of.

"I was happy to come back 2-2, but I wanted to come back 4-0," Snyder said.

In the first match of the weekend, ASU lost to New Mexico State 15-12, 15-9, 18-16. Snyder attributes part of the loss to pre-game jitters, and the rest to weak offensive play.

"We were not sure about our starting lineup, and we did not execute our offense at all," she said.

ASU lost its second game of the tournament, against Louisiana State, as well. After the Sun Devils won the first two matches, the Tigers pulled off the next three to win 6-15, 13-15, 15-9, 15-7, 15-9.

Snyder called the five-game thriller a "heartbreaker." "LSU is a big, leaping athletic team," Snyder said, adding that her team's ball control was not up to par.

The Sun Devils' two wins came against Wichita State and Texas Tech, 15-5, 15-5, 15-13 and 15-8, 15-11, 16-18, 15-9, respectively.

Snyder was satisfied with the way her team executed the offense in these two games, but was particularly pleased with the overall defensive play.

"We looked pretty good by Sunday morning," she said. "We got a lot better throughout the tournament."

ASU's Noel Fridrich and Mindy Gowell, were two of six named all-tournament players.

"They are so physically talented that they stand out,"

Snyder said.

Snyder was also impressed by Tina Berg's defense in the last game. Berg came in, after sitting out the first two matches of the fourth game, and had a one block solo and eight block assists.

"She shows a lot of potential in the middle position," Snyder said.

The Sun Devils leave today to play in a four-day tournament at Cal State-Fullerton beginning Thursday. Snyder said she learned a lot about the team after this weekend.

"We got to see a number of different (starting) line-ups, and have a good idea who the strongest five or six players are," she said. "Now we'll know what to work on in practice."

Badminton no longer backyard sport

By KEITH ROSENHAGEN
State Press

A sold-out performance opened the 1988 Olympic Games in Seoul, South Korea. More than 12,000 people of various nationalities crammed the stadium, straining from the edge of their seats to catch a glimpse of the intense rallies taking place on the court below.

In this game, the dividing lines between male and female make no difference. Each athlete is driven by a single purpose — do not let it hit the ground.

In this case, the it is a shuttlecock, better known as a birdie and the game is badminton.

"The thing about badminton is it's hugh in the rest of the world," said Guy Chadwick, head coach of the ASU badminton team. "It's said to be the No. 2 sport behind soccer in the rest of the world."

"It's thought of very differently in the Asian and European countries. It's not thought of as a backyard sport."

In foreign countries, it would not be uncommon to see badminton celebrities on television receiving as much, if not more, attention than those in tennis.

Chadwick said that other countries interested in the growth of the commercial aspect of the game look to the United States to develop badminton into a more high-profile sport through the use of its media centers.

"That's just one more reason why ASU (badminton) is that much more important," he said. "We won every event last year in the collegiate nationals."

"We won the men's singles, the men's doubles, the lady's singles, the lady's doubles, the mixed doubles events individually and as a team."

Sun Devil badminton players have earned All-America honors 61 times over the last 10 years, elevating ASU to a dominating position above all other collegiate badminton programs across the country.

These accomplishments give Chadwick the confidence to view ASU's program as a breeding ground for future badminton Olympians.

"It (ASU) is probably the best year-round Olympic training center the United States currently has to offer," he said. "There is no other location that can offer full-time coaching year-round with U.S. national team players and participation."

Chadwick said he anticipates several ASU players to compete in the 1992 Olympics.

"About half the team," he said. "A lot of it depends on what they finally decide is the number of qualifying openings for Americans and North Americans."

One of these Olympic hopefuls, sophomore Tom Reidy, won the gold medal in singles and doubles events during the July Olympic Festival in Oklahoma.

Expect some Olympic quality badminton at the Oct. 13 exhibition game between the

Chadwick

Sun Devils and a U.S. team at ASU, Chadwick said.

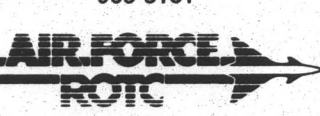

"It's an opportunity for us to show what our team is all about and to give those people who don't know much about badminton, which is just about everybody, an opportunity to see it at a much higher level — Really, the Olympic level," he said.

Newman to sit out season after injuring knee

By TOMI McELROY
State Press

National gymnastics champion Jody Newman will redshirt the 1989-90 season after injuring the cruciate ligament of his right knee in July.

Seven weeks ago, the junior had a ligament transplant and doctors have told him it should take approximately nine months to recover.

Newman has been working out, avoiding dismounts and landings, and going through rehabilitation.

"I still can't do all the things I want to," Newman said, "but I'm not going to take any chances. I want to get 110 percent better."

Newman won the NCAA floor exercise title last April with a 9.85 score.

"We'll miss Jody," Head Coach Don Robinson said. "With him we're a threat to the top teams in the country — we can give them a run for their money. Without him we don't have the strength we want."

Robinson said the team appears very competitive but their success will depend on how hard the team works and progresses. Five returning juniors will be counted on to fill Newman's vacancy, he said.

Licurgo Diaz-Sandi will step in as the top man.

"Licurgo sets big goals," Robinson said. "He's pretty valuable in the all-around."

Diaz-Sandi has been voted team co-captain, along with Kevin Singer, and has begun setting goals for himself and the team.

"I want to win the Pac-10 and Nationals all-around and for the team to go to nationals and be in the top five," Diaz-Sandi said. "I want us to have fun, but the most important thing is to enjoy it."

Robinson said other juniors include Singer as an all-arounder, Christian Rohde is working toward being an all-arounder, Mike Alwicker is strong in the pommel horse event, and Keith Suzuki will be a good back-up in the all-around event.

"Sophomores Eric Brown and J.J. Sanchez have a little more experience for this season and Thord Kamakaala has potential," Robinson said. "Chris Miller has talent and gives a lot of concentration effort."

Newcomers include recruit Paul Bedewi and junior walk-on transfer Christopher Smith.

"We have a lot of high hopes for Paul," Robinson said. "He's a freshman with a lot of talent."

Smith has represented the Virgin Islands in the Pan American and the Central American games.

Robinson said strength is the No. 1 requirement for preparing each Sun Devil gymnast for the upcoming season.

"Every kid who walks in here is weak," he said. "He doesn't think so, but pound per pound he will need to be able to handle the weight and go."

Practice time is not a problem for the Sun Devils because the gym is open all but three weeks during the year, but Robinson said some time off is good for the team.

"I think they should be forced to take a month off," Robinson said. "They need some variety and need to get away from the pressure."

Robinson said mental strength, in addition to physical strength, is important to the team's success. He said he wants his team to be aware of action choices, goal setting and ways to reduce stress this season.

Newman

Diaz-Sandi

The Sun Devils will have the opportunity to work with Mark Anderson, who has been hired as ASU's first full-time sports psychologist.

"He will be teaching what we've been teaching for a long time," Robinson said. "Now we want to bring in the expert."

Robinson said he hopes the Sun Devils will be among the top four teams to go to the NCAA Championships this season, even though last year's national champion will be watching from the bench.

"This year will be tough for me — watching everyone else will be frustrating," Newman said. "I hope they do great. I'll give them my support."

Williams brings style from down under

By VICKI CULVER

State Press

Brad Williams would like to revolutionize the art of punting.

The Sun Devil football newcomer said he feels very confident with his Australian-Rules style of punting, which has several advantages over the traditional American way — consistency, accuracy and a potential to kick the ball on the run.

"If things go as they have been going in practice, punting will take a turn," Williams said.

But Williams, who is not overconfident before the first game of the season Saturday, said he only knows how the punting style works in practice, not in a game situation.

However, he said he hopes that his kick-on-the-run trick may deter teams from an intense rush on the punter.

"We want to have other teams thinking we're not going to just go out and kick the ball (instantly) like most teams,"

Williams said.

Williams migrated to the United States in 1986 after receiving a tennis scholarship from the University of Arkansas. On a stroke of luck, Williams tried out and made the football team as well.

Five football games into the season, he left the team for eligibility reasons — his native country only requires students to complete the 10th grade.

He enrolled at the University of Oklahoma and attended school for one year. Amidst the corruption of the Sooners' football program, Williams left that state as well.

"I didn't like the way they ran things," Williams said. "The players would get away with anything."

This summer, Williams was recruited by ASU Football Coach Larry Marmie as well as Tennis Coach Lou Belken. He accepted a position on both teams.

"I wanted to go somewhere that had a good tennis and football program," Williams said, adding that Arizona's weather also helped persuade him.

Before coming to the United States, Williams said he had never seen an American football game. Although he said he loves American football now, he cannot decide which he likes better.

"My first game I ever saw (of American Football), I played in," Williams said. "American football is much more professionalized, but Australian football is more action-packed."

As a new player, Williams said he has developed friends on the team quite easily.

"All of the guys on the team are really cool; I like them a lot," Williams said. "I couldn't end up anywhere better."

Later this fall, Williams will begin practicing for the spring tennis season. Although he will miss some fall preseason matches, he said he plans to work extra hard conditioning himself.

ASU rugby club expects to regain top standing

By LARRY NEWELL

State Press

In the early 1980s, ASU fielded one of the top rugby clubs in the nation, a status that the 1989-90 Sun Devils will work to restore.

"With most of our first team returning and a strong summer conditioning program, this year's team is more experienced and is spearheading in the right direction," said Gary Lane, president of the ASU Rugby Club.

Lane said a returning trio of juniors, K. C. Jacobson, Norm Hall and Mike Slazas, will lead the Sun Devil attack.

"These three players have worked very hard, and we will be looking to them for leadership in the upcoming season," Lane said.

In addition to the large number of returning players, Lane said the rugby club has several new players who have previous rugby experience and should be able to make immediate contributions to the team.

Along with improvements in player personnel, the Sun Devils have also increased the size of their coaching staff.

"Our coaching staff, our team camaraderie and our commitment to the sport has created more of an atmosphere of a team, rather than a club," Lane said. "We are looking forward to a good season as we have a strong knit group of athletes and an excellent coaching staff.

"Any athlete who has played football in the past or enjoys any physical outside activity should consider joining the rugby club."

Lane said he is hoping to create more exposure for the club this season through fund-raising activities, with the first of such events being the Oct. 14 Intrafraternity Rugby Tournament. Proceeds will be donated to the Spinal Cord Foundation.

Mandarich signs with Packers, forgets Tyson

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Tony Mandarich, who wanted to fight Mike Tyson, decided it might be safer on the football field and agreed to tentative contract terms with the Green Bay Packers on Tuesday.

Mandarich, the No. 2 pick overall in the NFL draft, arrived at the Packers' headquarters about 10 a.m., took a physical and then met with offensive line coach Charlie Davis.

Mandarich missed all of the Packers' training camp. He spent the time in weight training and doing a little boxing. The boxing was just for fun.

"We have agreed on the numbers but we have not agreed on the terminology and how the money will be paid," said Tom Braatz, the Packers vice president of football operations.

Braatz said Mandarich's agent, Vern Sharbaugh, was traveling to Green Bay to complete the contract, which is expected to be signed by Wednesday. The agreement would end Mandarich's 45-day holdout.

"It was just a compromise on both sides," Braatz said when asked about the terms of the contract.

The Green Bay Press-Gazette reported Tuesday in a copyright story that Mandarich had agreed to sign a four-year deal worth about $4.3 million. The newspaper quoted an unidentified source that said the contract contained considerable amounts of deferred money.

The 6-foot-5, 310-pound offensive lineman from Michigan State had been seeking nearly $2 million a year, but recently said he was reducing his demand to between $1.4 million and $1.5 million.

The latest offer by the Packers was reported to be a four-year deal worth about $3.85 million, for an annual salary of $962,500.

At nearly $1.1 million a year, Mandarich would become one of the highest paid offensive linemen in the NFL.

Paul Gruber, an offensive tackle drafted in the first round in 1988 by Tampa Bay, signed a five-year deal worth $3.8 million.

Before the new offer, the Packers had refused to budge from their original offer of $4.1 million over five years, though they had repackaged the same offer in a four-year deal.

The Packers may have been spurred to raise the ante for Mandarich after offensive tackles Keith Uecker and Mike Arie were suspended for 30 days under the NFL's new anabolic steroids policy.

Packers coach Lindy Infante had said the team might not have drafted Mandarich if they had known he would miss all of training camp.

Former Phoenix Sun, now Cleveland Cavalier

PHOENIX (AP) — The Phoenix Suns traded reserve guard Steve Kerr to the Cleveland Cavaliers for a second-round pick in the 1993 draft, the NBA team announced Tuesday.

Kerr, a second-round draft pick out of Arizona in 1988, played in just 26 games as a rookie last season and averaged 2.1 points. He spent most of the season on injured-reserve with tendinitis in his right ankle.

Rumors of Kerr's trade to the Cavaliers, who were looking for a backup point guard for Mark Price, have been swirling since last last month, but the Suns had denied all the speculation.

"No deal was agreed to before this afternoon," said Suns president Jerry Colangelo. "Right now, we are faced with an overload situation at guard because of the fine play of (1989 second-round draft picks) Mike Morrison and Greg Grant this summer. The trade affords Steve a great opportunity to go to an excellent basketball team and continue his NBA career."

Kerr, a member of the 1987-88 Arizona squad that went to the Final Four, recently turned down a $100,000 contract to play this year in West Germany.

He was paid the rookie minimum salary of $100,000 this season and wanted to stay in the NBA.

Phoenix re-signed the 6-foot-3, 170-pound Kerr to a one-year contract on Aug. 24 when reports of his impending trade to Cleveland first surfaced.

Cavaliers spokesman Bob Price said Cleveland has assumed Kerr's contract with the Suns. The amount of the contract has not been disclosed.

"I've followed Steve Kerr throughout his college career and I watched him play against international competition," said Cavaliers general manager Wayne Embry. "He has a good knowledge of the game, and I especially like his shooting ability. At the end of last season we knew that we wanted to add outside shooting to our team. And Steve has an excellent chance in helping out in that area."

An All-America his senior year at Arizona, Kerr set a Pac-10 Conference record with 114 3-point goals in 199 attempts. Last year in the NBA, however, he was just 8-of-17 in 3-pointers.

Donahue uncertain of No. 6 Bruins debut

LOS ANGELES (AP) — His team is ranked sixth in the country, but UCLA Coach Terry Donahue has very little idea of what to expect Saturday night when the Bruins open its season against Tennessee at the Rose Bowl.

"No one knows what our team is going to be like," Donahue said Tuesday at his weekly meeting with reporters. "Probably the most poorly judged poll of all is the preseason poll. They're for interest, in my mind."

The results of last weekend, when a handful of teams opened their seasons, support Donahue. USC, Florida State and Louisiana State, ranked fifth, sixth and seventh, respectively, were all upset.

So the Bruins, ranked ninth previously, moved up the ladder.

"I don't really know about our football team," Donahue said. "I'll know a lot more Sunday. I have certain things I think right now, but they haven't been verified, one way or another. This is a harder team to have a pulse of than some of the (more experienced) teams in the past."

"I expect us to play well Saturday night. You just have to go out and play, you don't know."

For the first time since 1965, UCLA will open the season with a quarterback who has had no experience beyond high school. Redshirt freshman Bret Johnson was named last Saturday by Donahue as the Bruins' first-string quarterback over third-year sophomore Jimmy Bonds.

"Bret Johnson will start the game and hopefully do well," Donahue said. "I've said all along I really think we have two young players at the quarterback position who are very nice players."

"I think both will be very successful UCLA quarterbacks. I think Bret will do very well Saturday night. If Jimmy gets an opportunity, I think he'll do very well."

Donahue said that from a philosophical standpoint, his team hasn't deviated from its basic offensive philosophy, which is one of balance.

"This year until we grow and until we experience some games, we will try to turn the volume up on our tailbacks and offensive line," he said. "That certainly doesn't mean that we won't throw."

"If you play quarterback at UCLA, you're going to be involved in the offense, you're going to be a featured performer."

Donahue listed three starters + tightend Charles Arbuckle, linebacker Stacy Argo and cornerback Randy Beverly + as "extremely doubtful" for Saturday night's game because of injuries.

Donahue had said a couple of weeks ago that his team would be in trouble if it suffered any injuries to defensive starters because of a lack of depth.

"I don't think we'll be precluded from winning the game because of our situation," he said. "The situation is the situation. I'm hopeful some of the players who are hurt will be able to return soon."

"This is the shortest we've ever been as far as defensive personnel is concerned entering the season. I think the players who will play in the game will do an awfully good job."

Because of injuries and a lack of depth, Donahue said several true freshmen might play against Tennessee, a rare occurrence for UCLA.

"Our football team is certainly not going into the game overconfident. That will not be a concern," Donahue said. "I think psychologically we'll be ready to play. I hope we're not going to get dominated Saturday night. I'm not expecting to. I wouldn't expect us to dominate Tennessee, either."

If Beverly can't play, he'll be replaced by redshirt freshman Michael Williams, a walk-on who's listed as a 5-foot-9½-inch, 159-pounder.

"That's not true, he's 160," Donahue said with a smile. "Michael's not very big, but he's fast. He's got nice backpedal, nice feet. He came to our program last year out of the blue. The moment we saw him, we thought he had potential to be a player."

Robo-quarterback blows fuse against Illini

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Todd Marinovich could turn out to be the college quarterback of the early 1990s, but he was the second-best passer at the Coliseum on Sept. 4, 1989.

Marinovich, who set a national high school record by throwing for 9,194 yards, was respectable but not sensational in his college debut for Southern Cal.

His major failure was that he was unable to get the Trojans into the end zone, as Illinois, ranked 22nd going into the Labor Day game, beat No. 5 Southern Cal 14-13 on a pair of late touchdown passes by Jeff George.

Marinovich, a redshirt freshman who got the starting call when junior Pat O'Hara went down with a knee injury during an

Aug. 25 scrimmage, completed 14 of 27 for 120 yards and was intercepted once.

He wasn't happy. "I'm angry. I hate to lose," said Marinovich, who played his high school football in Mission Viejo, south of Los Angeles.

"We didn't win; that's a sign of how well I played. We didn't put the ball in the end zone.

"This team hates to lose. We'll watch the film and be a lot better in two weeks."

Marinovich, assured the starting job since O'Hara is out for the season, and the Trojans also should have things a little easier two weeks from now — they will be hosting Utah State on Sept. 16.

Against Illinois, Southern Cal coach Larry Smith opted to play it close to the vest offensively, with his inexperienced quarterback rarely throwing deep. Marinovich's longest completion was for 20 yards.

Marinovich, under considerably more pressure from the rush than was his Illini counterpart, was sacked four times to once for George.

George, no more impressive than Marinovich until the final six minutes of the game, completed 27 of 43 for 248 yards.

He rallied the Illini from a 13-0 fourth-quarter deficit by hooking up with Shawn Wax on a tipped 53-yard scoring pass with six minutes to play, then marched his team 80 yards for the winning score, a 20-yard strike to Steve Williams with 2:09 remaining.

Doug Higgins provided the difference when he kicked the conversion.

Southern Cal coach Smith placed no blame on Marinovich for the Trojans' season-opening loss.

"Illinois controlled the line of scrimmage with their defensive line; that was the key," Smith said. "We didn't block well and we didn't run well. I thought Todd did well. He didn't do anything to hurt us."

"We just couldn't move those chains," Marinovich said. "We would get so close on third down, then just come up short."

invites you to get involved!

The Memorial Union Activities Board. We're not just another student organization. We're the most active student group on campus. We sponsor a program or event almost every day. Each semester MUAB sets goals and accomplishes them.

A part of these goals is to develop valuable real-world skills as well as strong and lasting friendships. Out-of-classroom activities enhance students' knowledge of campus resources, involvement in the larger community, and pride in individual and group achievements.

Recruitment Reception Thursday, September 7th 1:00-3:00 p.m. Memorial Union Fine Arts Lounge

SPECIAL EVENTS

Casino Night, Rock & Reggae, Red Eye Special, Homecoming Float, and Halloween Ball are among the events planned annually by this dynamic committee. ASU Orientation Week and Homecoming Bonfires & Pep Rallies also provide an opportunity to be involved. The most diverse committee, Special Events has something for everyone. Meets Monday at 3:15.

CULTURE & ARTS

This committee provides opportunities for both the novice and the expert alike to experience culture through programs ranging from the classics (A Little Music, Maestro Series), poetry, and dance, through Pop Culture and Jazz. Bach to Basie, Shakespeare, Warhol... creativity in live performance and video presentations. Meets Monday at 3:15.

GALLERY

Monthly art exhibitions in the Memorial Union Fine Arts Lounge are selected through the annual national competition organized by this committee, bringing the work of emerging and well-established artists to campus. Members create the presentation of each show, host artists' receptions and lectures. Tours of local galleries and museums often spark ideas. Meets Wednesday at 3:30.

HOST & HOSTESS

The students of this service-oriented committee participate in a variety of campus activities from ushering in Gammage Center to working at concerts in the University Activities Center to sponsoring the popular semi-annual Serendipity Arts and Crafts Fair. Planning social events is an important component of Host and Hostess. Meets Wednesday at 1:30.

PROMOTIONS

This committee differs from the other committees in that it does not plan programs. Instead, this creative group provides promotion for the board's events. This includes designing flyers, posters, and banners, writing copy for ads, and many other methods of publicizing MUAB activities. Meets Tuesday at 1:30.

ENTERTAINMENT

Find out what it would be like being a booking agent, concert promoter, or a producer in the entertainment world. Learn the "behind the scenes" part of the business through programming noon-hour "Pop-Ups," all-day Rock & Reggae Fest, and other quality entertainment in the Union and around campus. Meets Wednesday at 8:00.

FILM

A committee that schedules a collage of movies from current releases to classics to cartoons. The showplace is the Union Cinema located on the lower level of the M.U. The committee also promotes sneak previews, film festivals, and midnight movies in addition to its regular schedule. Meets Monday at 3:30.

COMEDY

Do you enjoy Saturday Night Live? The Farce Side performs a free variety comedy show each week. If you are a budding comedian/comedienne, here's your chance to hone your skills (in front of a forgiving audience!). Join the Comedy Committee. A joke is a terrible thing to waste!! Meets Monday at 12:30.
