Regents to discuss appealing decision

By TYRONE MEIGHAN
State Press

The Arizona Board of Regents will meet in executive session this week to decide whether or not to appeal a decision by a Maricopa County Superior Court judge requiring the regents to release the names of candidates in the search for the ASU presidency.

In addition, regents Executive Director Molly Broad said the board will dip into monies from the three state universities to pay for all legal fees accumulated during the lawsuit.

But Broad said it was too early to tell if the regents will appeal the decision.

"We don't even have the official documents from the court at this time," she said Wednesday. "I just really would not feel it appropriate to speculate."

Broad said the regents do not regret taking the case to court.

"We thought the court was the right place for us to get guidance," she said.

Judge Elizabeth Stover ruled Tuesday that the regents must release the 240 names involved in the search. In addition, the board will be required to pay the legal fees for both sides — an amount that could exceed $100,000.

Broad said the legal fees will be paid by the three state universities, with ASU taking the brunt of the cost. ASU will pay 50 percent of the fees with UofA and NAU providing 25 percent each.

David Bodney, an attorney representing The Arizona Republic and Tribune Newspapers, said making the universities pay is "bizarre."

"Why make the university pay?" he asked. "They (the regents) ought to take it out of the Board of Regents

Board likely to develop committee on minorities

By JOIE ANN LaPOLLA
State Press

The Arizona Board of Regents will likely approve an ad hoc committee's recommendations to improve minority recruitment and retention at the three state universities at Friday's meeting in Flagstaff, a regent said Wednesday.

Esther Capin, who chairs the Ad Hoc Committee on Access, said the suggestions include early outreach programs, a coalition with community colleges, accessible financial aid programs and linkages with community groups.

The committee, comprised of representatives from the community, regents, faculty, the Arizona Legislature and students, began examining the minority issue last fall.

"The Board of Regents is committed to minority retention and graduation," Capin said. "Increasing culture is necessary to benefit all universities."

The regents also will monitor each university's minority programs once they are in place, and the institutions will be held accountable for their actions involving recruitment and retention.

In addition, the universities will be responsible for reporting their progress to the regents if the recommendations are accepted.

But methods of reporting the information will be up to the universities.

"We will ask the universities to come back to us with plans for accountability," Capin said, adding that the regents will hold each university accountable for the implementation of the minority programs.

The ad hoc committee recommended the formation of a Technical Task Force to track students in their progress through high school and university systems to discover where students are losing interest in school.

This will expand the newly created Arizona Minority Education Access and Achievement Cooperative, which offers an informational exchange about minority high school students.

Funding for the committee's programs will come from the Legislature and grants, Capin said.

Although ASU's College of Education is facing overcrowding, another goal of the retention program is to increase the number of minorities becoming teachers, Capin said.

But it is up to the universities to decide where to fit minority students into overpopulated programs, she said.

"This is going to be difficult," Capin said. "They're going to have to do some soul searching on how they can increase minority student enrollment."

She also stressed the need for faculty to take an active role in recruitment and retention.

"We know the faculty are key in creating an atmosphere," Capin said.

Along with voting on the recommendations Friday at their monthly meeting, the regents are expected to approve an agreement with South Mountain High School to conduct a study on the impact of educational and administrative changes in Phoenix Union high schools.

The Board will vote on plans to furnish the public areas of the University House, the private residence of ASU's president and a gathering place for University activities and social events.

In addition, the Board is expected to approve Lattie Coor's consumption monies, such as an automobile allowance, medical benefits and the use of the University House.

'Big kid' killed in Labor Day weekend accident in Mexico

By MIKE BURGESS

Michael J. Nett was just a "big kid," his friends say.

The 21-year-old ASU student filled his room with all sorts of toys. He even enjoyed being with children — so much so that he coached a Little League baseball team in Tempe last spring.

"You know (the cartoon) Calvin and Hobbes? He was Calvin, 13 years later," said Colleen Cronin, an ASU student and one of Nett's friends.

Nett, a senior aeronautical engineering major, was killed early Sunday after he suffered head injuries during an All-Terrain Vehicle accident in Rocky Point, Mexico.

Memorial services for Nett will be held at 7 tonight at Our Lady of Mt. Carmel Church, 2121 S. Rural Road. Funeral services will be held today in Chicago as well.

Nett, who was staying in Mexico with a group of friends from ASU, was riding a friend's ATV alone about 3:30 a.m. on Sandy Beach when he apparently struck another vehicle and was thrown from his cycle, his friends said.

He was rushed to Lukeville, Ariz., just across the U.S.-Mexican border, but died before he could be flown by medical helicopter to Phoenix.

Friends with Nett in Mexico said they did not know about the accident until about noon Sunday when they discovered he was

Judge rules Bakker mentally fit to stand trial on fraud counts

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A federal judge ruled Jim Bakker competent to stand trial on fraud charges Wednesday after a government psychiatrist testified the PTL founder was not going crazy when he broke down last week.

Bakker's trial was recessed, and he was sent to a federal prison in Butner for psychiatric evaluation last week after he was found in his lawyer's office hallucinating and hiding under a couch.

U. S. District Court Judge Robert Potter also denied defense lawyers' motions for a continuance and for a dismissal of the indictment against Bakker after meeting in his chambers with attorneys. He did not rule on a motion for a mistrial.

Bakker, who resigned from the PTL ministry in 1987 during a sex-and-money scandal, went on trial Aug. 28 on conspiracy and fraud charges. Prosecutors said he used nearly $4 million in ministry funds to live in high style.

Governing party bears deep losses in protested South African election

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The governing party headed toward its worst election setback in 41 years of power Wednesday, losing many seats to a surprisingly strong anti-apartheid party and others to the far right.

Police with whips, tear gas and shotguns dispersed blacks protesting their exclusion from the balloting. They broke up stone-throwing crowds in more than 20 black, Indian and mixed-race townships.

Anti-apartheid leaders, who called a general strike, said 3 million people stayed away from jobs and classes, shutting down factories and schools in "the biggest-ever mass action" against the government.

Police said more than 50 people were arrested, and there were unofficial reports of numerous injuries.

With results in from 85 of 166 white districts, the Conservative Party picked up 11 seats and the anti-apartheid Democratic Party 10 seats from the governing National Party.

Television projections predicted the National Party would lose 30 of its 123 seats, with the Conservatives strengthening from 22 to 40 seats and Democrats going from 22 to 33 seats.

If the projections hold, the National Party would retain a majority in Parliament but suffer its worst defeat since coming to power in 1948.

Foreign Minister Pik Botha and Defense Minister Magnus Malan were re-elected by margins sharply lower than in the white election of 1987. The Conservatives, who favor stricter racial segregation, won their first-ever seats in Pretoria, the capital, and in Cape Province and the Orange Free State.

The election widely was viewed as among the most important in history for the whites who control South Africa.

Raging British soccer hooligans arrested in Sweden before match

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Police arrested about 100 British soccer fans who rampaged through downtown Stockholm on Wednesday before a World Cup qualifying match, the national TT news agency reported.

The hooligans, many drunk, ran through Stockholm's shopping district shouting, slapping passers-by and ripping clothing off sales racks outside stores. Police with riot shields gave chase and scuffled with them.

The news agency quoted a police duty officer as saying busloads of young Britons were taken into custody, but she did not know the exact number.

Security was unprecedented for a Swedish sporting event. Police assigned 600 officers to the Rasunda soccer pitch in suburban Stockholm, and Swedish Radio said authorities were ready to stop the match if trouble broke out.

U. S. evacuates last of staff from embassy in Lebanon

Two helicopters landed at the compound about 7:30 a.m. and a third hovered overhead, apparently providing cover, while the 30 Americans were evacuated, a witness said.

It is the first time an American ambassador has been pulled from Lebanon since the sectarian civil war began 14 years ago, and the move at least temporarily ended American diplomatic presence in the country.

State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler angrily blamed the Christian army commander, Gen. Michel Aoun, for the move, saying he threatened to expose U. S. Ambassador John McCarthy and his staff to a "good dose of Christian terrorism."

Bush: Critics should quit 'carping' about drug plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush said Wednesday that skeptics of his $7.9 billion drug war were just "carping" and should "stop criticizing for partisan reasons."

Democrats, meanwhile, said the government would have to raise more revenue to mount an all-out fight against illegal drugs but conceded it would be impossible to enact a tax increase for that purpose as long as Bush opposes it.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said, "Unless the president supports the tax increases that will be necessary to fight this war, the drug dealers are going to win."

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said, "Without the administration's support, the idea of raising taxes is futile."

Bush emphatically rejected the notion of higher taxes. "Every time you make a proposal," he said, "you have somebody jump up and say, 'Raise taxes.' I am not in a mode to raise taxes."

The president's program emphasizes a crackdown on drug users and proposes more money for treatment centers, law enforcement and prison cells, as well as funds to attack drugs at their source in Colombia, Peru and Bolivia. It would require a $716 million increase in 1990 above the programs already in the budget.

Asked about Democrats' criticism that his plan is inadequately funded and doesn't go far enough, Bush said, "My response is, they're wrong."

Walesa told reporters he understood West German caution, but he renewed his appeal for more German investment.

Walesa met in Duesseldorf with the members of Eastern Committee, an influential industry organization that coordinates West German business dealings in the East bloc.

Shoving Board of Regents from back room into light

Darrin Hostetler
Editor

The members of the Arizona Board of Regents ought to be ashamed.

No doubt a few of them are. Those that have any shame or conscience left, that is.

Maricopa County Superior Court Judge Elizabeth Stover, in her decision Tuesday ordering the regents to hand over the long-concealed names of the finalists in the ASU presidential search, administered a public whipping to board members — and specifically to Regent Herman Chanen, who, true to form, isn't acting ashamed at all.

In fact, Chanen, the architect of this mess, seems to be a glutton for punishment — masochistically suggesting that the regents may appeal the decision, thus clearing the way for yet another judge, after another series of lengthy delays, to bluntly tell him what the rest of us know already.

The ASU presidential search was a sleazy back-room blunder, ineptly handled by a few influential regents and government officials — who placed their desire to privately pick the leader of the nation's fifth largest university over the public's right to know.

Not only did Stover order the regents to cough up the names to the Arizona Republic and the east-Valley Tribune newspapers, who pursued them tirelessly during a summer-long lawsuit, but she also rejected the board's argument that applicants for the ASU job could somehow be harmed by the release of their identities and directed the regents to pay all legal fees for the case — which could run to $100,000.

The problem with that last twist, of course, is that the money will come directly out of the coffers at the three state universities — and taxpayers pockets. Which means that we have $100,000 less to spend on students and education.

And if the regents decide during their meeting this weekend in Flagstaff to actually appeal the case, then they would incur even more fees. And we end up holding the bag. All because Mr. Chanen wanted to play kingmaker.

The presidential selection process wasn't about ASU and what it could become, or even about choosing the best applicant for president.

It was about power.

More to the point, it was about what happens when a man who never stopped being a child gets power — and desperately protects it like his favorite bag of marbles.

A great many scary things were revealed during the presidential search and the ensuing lawsuit debacle — like the revelation that the current regent president, Edith Auslander, didn't even bother to read the applications for ASU president. Auslander sat on the stand during the lawsuit and confessed to this dereliction of duty with a casual manner that suggested she accorded the presidential applications the same attention she gives the Sunday comics. Maybe less.

In some states, that admission would be enough to have legislators clamoring for her resignation. But not in Arizona. We've got more important things to worry about.

Like Herman Chanen, regent president during the presidential selection process and one of Arizona's most powerful men. A man who emerges from the lawsuit as the primary villain — a domineering soul whose concern for universities and students stops cold at the line where anyone begins to criticize his autocratic control of regent affairs.

Chanen controlled the selection process almost single-handedly, kept the public and even other regents in the dark about who was up for the job and, some say, selected Coor as ASU's new president over a leisurely dinner with Gov. Rose Mofford.

When I dared suggest in a column this past June that Chanen was deliberately concealing the names of presidential candidates, misleading the press, cutting other regents out of the decision-making process and in general running the regents the way Dick Daley used to run Chicago — charges supported by regent staffers and even board members — it got under Chanen's skin.

So much so that while reading the column during a regents meeting at ASU, Chanen turned to a fellow regent, blushing with anger, and said: "I'm going to carry this (column) in my pocket always, and whenever anyone asks me to give money to ASU, I'm going to pull it out and say, 'No. And here's why.'"

I wonder if Chanen threatens to hold his breath until he turns blue in order to get extra dessert, too.

Here is a man who is firmly rooted in the Phoenix-40 power-broker mold, a man who is used to wanting and getting his own way, a man who, along with a select group of a few others, has run Arizona from behind the scenes for decades.

A man who, when finally called on the carpet by Valley newspapers for dealing state business in a smoke-filled room, plunged the regents into costly litigation aimed at protecting his power and control. Litigation that will be paid for by the universities he supposed to be working for, not against.

A man who, when chastised by a college journalist during summer vacation, vowed to deprive 43,000 other students and a major university of his power, money and influence.

A man?
No. A child.

Certainly if Herman Chanen cares for this University no more than that, if he will work for education interests only as long as his activities can remain unexamined and uncriticized, he should not be a regent.

And under no circumstances should the state universities pick up the tab for the regent lawsuit. It's not our bill — it's the regents' — and they ought to pay it, one way or another. Especially if they have the gall to appeal the decision further.

But it seems, like so many other things concerning the regents during the past year, that issue has already been decided. And there is damn little we can do.

But we must make sure that when Gov. Mofford gets around to appointing two new regents to the board next year that they understand the Herman Chanen way of doing business is dead.

And that the courts have decided that the regents are done doing business in the dark.

Don't stereotype women

Editor:

After reading R. David Hecht's letter to you, I felt it necessary to respond. I am probably a typical "GDI" woman. However, I do not "hate sorority girls" as Mr. Hecht so broadly assumed I would. On the other hand, I have no respect for any woman who willingly denigrates herself before a man to the point of disgracing all females. Nor do I have any respect for the man who, like Mr. Hecht, feels that my attitude is incorrect and who would actually rather have the women of ASU prostituting themselves to him for beer.

Mr. Hecht also seems to think that whether or not a woman has the right to say "no" to a man regarding sex depends on her physical appearance. By hurling insults at girls whom he calls "extremely ugly," Hecht makes it clear that he feels that these women should freely be willing to have sex with someone because she's "obligated" to him.

By using sweeping generalizations, Mr. Hecht has shown that he would rather be living in an age when women were nothing more than handy playthings for their "all-powerful" men to drag around. Unfortunately for him, this is 1989, and most of the women at ASU will agree that simply giving away cheap thrills to a casual acquaintance like Mr. Hecht is not an appropriate way to say "thank you" in any situation.

Solution to drug problem: 'Every brain for itself'

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

"I think you're wasting your time," said Slat Grobnik. In what regard?

"Worrying about drugs. Forget it. Concentrate on the pennant races."

How can I forget it when it is, in the words of many a pundit, a national scourge?

"Sure it is, but what's the sense of worrying about it when nothing is going to happen?"

That's a negative attitude. We must seek solutions.

"That's what I mean. You can look for solutions, but you won't find any solutions because nobody can agree on what the solutions are."

For every problem, there must be a solution.

"No, there ain't. That's why I'm bald."

It's not the same thing. This is a man-made problem, so man can solve it.

"Then why haven't we solved it? It didn't start the day before yesterday, you know. The grass and the coke have been pouring into this country for years. There ain't enough rehab joints to take care of all the dopeheads. The judges can't send the dealers to jail because there ain't enough cells to hold them. The narcs say they can't keep the dope out of this country. So what's new?"

What's new is that the public recognizes the crisis and wants something done.

'The grass and the coke have been pouring into this country for years. There ain't enough rehab joints to take care of all the dopeheads.'

"Sure, that's what people say, but what do they want done?"

Well, there are those who say that certain drugs should be legalized, controlled and taxed. That way the criminal middlemen would be taken out of it. Street crime would go down. The money we spend trying to catch the drug smugglers would be saved. And everybody in the Colombian government wouldn't have to wear bulletproof underwear.

"Yeah, but there are just as many people who say that they don't want to legalize stuff that turns someone into an addict and scrambles brains. You'd have the parents of every kid who died of an overdose screaming at their congressmen. You got all kinds of religious fundamentalists who are against everything they don't do. And, who knows, the dope dealers might put together one of those political action committees and start making campaign contributions. So you can forget about legalizing it."

You're probably right. But what about harsher penalties? Why not a federal death penalty for clear-cut cases of major dope dealing?

"Because first Congress would have to pass a law. And they'd argue about it for so long that most of the dope dealers would die of old age before it got passed. And if it ever got passed, which I doubt because of a lot of do-gooders wouldn't even want to execute Hitler, it would have to get by the Supreme Court. Then if it got by the Supreme Court, every dope dealer who got sentenced would put in so many appeals it would be like a pingpong game with the courts, and it would be the 21st century before any of them was fried. So you can forget that, too."

Possible. But then we must strike at the sources, stop the flow even if we must use the military.

"Sure, but the only way we can do that is to send our troops into countries like Colombia. But Colombia says they don't want us there. And, even if they did, and we went in there, they'd start shipping the stuff from Peru. So then what do we do, go to Peru? Take over Mexico? We don't have a big enough army to go into all the countries that are in the drug business. And the drug bosses would have their private armies shooting at us, and there would be dead American troops, and their families would ask what their kids are getting killed for. So what's George Bush going to tell them — that their sons died to protect the life of some crackhead in Manhattan? So you can forget that, too."

There must be a solution.

"Sure there is. Everybody stop using dope, OK? Problem solved. Now let's talk about if the Cubs can win it."

That's unrealistic. We both know that there are many people who will use drugs regardless of the consequences. So talking to them won't change their self-destructive, addictive personalities.

"Right. So why don't we get a new motto. Instead of 'Just say no,' let's say, 'It's every brain for itself.'"

What does that mean?

"It means that if you want to scramble your noodle, it's your noodle, so go ahead and scramble it."

That is a rather unfeeling attitude.

"Maybe. But have you ever read about any Nobel Prize winners or Rhodes scholars croaking from crack overdose?"

No, but what does that have to do with it?

"What it has to do with it is that people with sense either don't do it or know when to stop. But you can't protect some dummies from themselves. So if they want to turn their heads into Jello, that's their lookout."

In other words, you want to ignore the problem.

"Hey, Ronald Reagan ignored it for eight years, and they want to put him on Mount Rushmore."

The people who came up with that idea must be smoking something strange.

"See? It's everywhere."

Happy New Year

Let's move the year-end holiday to September

Jeff Greenfield
Universal Press Syndicate

NEW YORK — Since the United States has borrowed so much from other cultures — British law, Italian cooking, Latin language, Martian tax laws — it is high time we turned to Jewish tradition and changed the calendar to make the new year begin in September.

Look around you right now (well, wait until you finish the column and then look around). What's going on? The whole country is turbo-charged; summer indolence is being shaken off, there's an almost tangible sense of time's winged chariot in full flight. The coming of autumn is nature's annual reminder of our own mortality, and when nature talks, we mortals listen.

Here is the president of the United States suddenly shucking off his tennis togs, softball jerseys, nauticals and other casual attire to deliver his stern sermon on the drug menace.

Here are bright-eyed, bushy-tailed students putting appetites and hormones in check to sweep through the aisles of the stationery stores, stocking up on multicolored pencils, loose-leaf reinforcing stickers, cross-referenced indexers, staplers, desk organizers and the hundred other items that will make this year the year that schoolwork is managed efficiently — for the first six days.

'The whole country is turbo-charged; summer indolence is being shaken off, there's an almost tangible sense of time's winged chariot in full flight.'

Here are all the symbols of the contemporary new year: the millions of dollars in promotional advertisements from the television networks, promising all-new diversions featuring sensitive single father detectives, single mother brain surgeons and endearing single parent alien life forms; the audible pounding hearts of the political press corps, realizing that yes, yes, there are actual elections to overcover and oversimplify for our readers, listeners and viewers.

Here comes the new Broadway theater season, which may actually offer as many as three original plays featuring living human beings (as opposed to animals, talking automobiles or material cobbled from shows that first debuted half a century ago).

Here come the new automobiles, the new clothes, the new movies, the new books; here comes, in sum, our real season of renewal.

Once upon a time, we got this sense from our link to the land, when harvest time approached. It was a time to reap what we had sown back in the spring; to take stock — literally; to figure out what needed repairing around the spread.

Now there is, for most of us, no link to the land beyond the state of the lawns. But we have these other reminders of the new year: the return of the real anchors to the evening newscasts, for example, and the re-emergence of Johnny Carson.

The fact is that we already treat the fall as if it were New Year's season. How else explain a time when, on a single weekend, the dedicated celebrant can witness half a dozen baseball games, four "preseason" college and professional football games and eight hours of tennis? How else explain the fact that spokesmen for the Democratic Party have actually been sighted in Washington?

There are clear advantages to changing New Year's Day to the first Monday in September and moving Labor Day to January. First, we could then officially recognize August as pre-New Year's month and stop the pretense that anyone does any work at all that month.

Second, we could throw our New Year's parties in a time of generally good weather, cutting down on the automobile accidents that occur when snow and ice outside our vehicles combine with food and alcohol inside the driver.

Most important, if we adopted the Jewish New Year as our own, we could also adopt that culture's tradition of a day of atonement right on its heels — a day when we examine our shortcomings and express our own sense of personal responsibility for our failures.

And if there's anything our culture needs right now, it's that kind of humility — even outside of Washington.

NAACP president awaiting action on racism

By MIKE VAN DYKE
State Press

The president of ASU's chapter of the NAACP said Wednesday that she is "patiently waiting" for a sign from Associated Students of ASU executive officers that they are working to take a stand against racism on campus.

"We haven't seen anything actively pursued at this time and we haven't seen that ASASU has taken an active stand," Tanya Holmes said.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People president said she did not want to discredit ASASU leaders because the two groups have not yet established a dialogue on the problem but added, "students are looking to see something happen and they have not."

But J'Lein Liese, ASASU activities vice president, said she is working through her department to develop an effective and sensitive way to channel racial problems through ASASU.

Liese said she is working to establish the Multi-Cultural Awareness Board as a liaison for students to inform the University community of current minority issues.

She said she would like to see MCAB take a more active role in serving as an advocate for minorities at the University.

"My goal is to set up the board in such a way that problems on campus of a racial nature can be channeled through MCAB," Liese said.

She said students will be able to discuss problems they are having with the 12-member board, which will advise the student and direct the problem to ASASU President Paul Larson if it is a campus-wide issue.

Larson in turn can call on the attention of administrators to look into the matter.

"The new plan for MCAB sounds like a great idea," Holmes said. "But I'm concerned with how effective the group will be."

Holmes said that often committees are set up, but little is done by them after they are established because they are so limited in power.

Liese said the board will consist entirely of students: three Asian-Americans, three Hispanics, three blacks and three Native Americans.

"At this point we are actively interviewing and looking for applicants for the board," Liese said. "We would like to have the board completely set up in the next two weeks."

MCAB will also continue to serve as a body to program cultural events and coordinate programming with campus minority organizations.

Under a 13-point plan against racism designed by leaders of Students Against Racism and agreed upon by the ASU administration, ASASU was required to "take an active stand against racism, including the forming of an independent body to oversee the investigations of the Office of Student Life, the Office of Residence Life and the ASU Police Department to see that they are handled properly."

Students Against Racism is a group that formed last spring and held a historic student protest April 21 against incidents of racial violence at ASU, staging a 250 person sit-in in front of the Memorial Union.

Holmes said she is confident that ASASU will keep in mind its responsibility to represent the entire student population and will seek opinions from minorities about campus issues so that her organization will not have to act to present the issues to them.

Campus Christian organization resigns from Interfaith Council

By TYRONE MEIGHAN
State Press

An ASU religious organization has withdrawn its membership from the Campus Interfaith Council because of differences over whether the cross atop Danforth Chapel should be removed.

"The majority of them (members of the council) voted to allow the cross to come down," said Jaynee Teagardin, director of Campus Aglow — a fundamental Christian group that has been most opposed to the removal of the cross. "That is totally against what we believe. To stay with the Interfaith Council would be a compromise of our faiths."

Teagardin said her group will remain on good terms with the council.

"We care tremendously for all the people in that group," she said. "We all left as friends."

A majority of the Interfaith Council, which includes several different religious groups at ASU, voted for the removal of the cross last semester.

However, Teagardin said Campus Aglow was not represented when the council voted this year to support the removal of the cross.

"Whether you liked it or not, you were represented as one voice," she said. "To remain with Interfaith (would) become a loss of our identity and religious freedom."

The cross became an issue last spring when Randel Helms, an ASU English professor and former chairman of the Faculty Senate physical plant committee, introduced a resolution calling for the removal of the symbol and a chapel name change to make it a multi-faith center.

The resolution was approved by the Faculty Senate May 8, but the measure was stalled when former ASU President J. Russell Nelson said that many in the University community wanted the cross to remain.

Nelson suggested that those who opposed his decision could challenge it in the courts.

But the cross was taken off the chapel either by the wind or vandals on July 23. ASU police conducted a two-week investigation but could not determine how the cross was removed.

The cross was eventually reattached by ASU's Physical Plant but the Arizona Civil Liberties Union is preparing to file a lawsuit asking Maricopa County Superior Court to force the University to remove the cross.

Rabbi Barton Lee of the Hillel Jewish Center in Tempe said he respects Campus Aglow's decision to withdraw from the council.

"They have a right to be where they need to be," said Barton, who has been a member of the interfaith council for 17 years and is currently serving as its president.

In addition, Teagardin said her group left the council because of differences in opinion over a planned religious week at ASU in November.

Lee said the religious week will be called "Unity and Diversity: A celebration of religious life at ASU" and will include music and the discussion of religious issues.

discretionary fund."

But Broad said the board has no fund for professional services, such as lawyers.

"It probably will come from the local (university) funds," Broad said. UofA and NAU have agreed to pay a portion of the legal fees because the lawsuit will affect future searches, she added.

"The impact of the litigation extends beyond ASU," she said. "The presidents at UofA and NAU agreed they ought to contribute. This is an efficient way for us to deal with these services. We don't have the resources to pay for it."

Victor Zafra, ASU's vice president for business affairs, said the money will come from the University's investment income, which is interest earned off auxiliary funds, including parking and bookstore revenues.

Zafra said he "recognizes the need for the University to pay for" the lawsuit.

"The regents don't have the funds," he said.

At issue is a lawsuit between the board and Valley newspapers. The regents filed suit against the papers May 30 seeking a judgment that state public records laws do not require the disclosure of unedited resumes of candidates for the ASU presidency. The papers subsequently sued the board asking the court to dismiss the suit.

The newspapers had contended that the names of the candidates should be made public.

The eight-month selection process ended in May with the nomination of Lattie Coor from the University of Vermont. The regents approved Coor as ASU's 15th president June 6.

The regents have argued that disclosure of the candidates' names would result in job repercussions from the institutions where the candidates are currently serving.

But Stover disagreed with the regents' argument.

"The court finds that the selection process in the future for presidents of any of the institutions of higher education in the state of Arizona would not be harmed but would be benefited from the publication of the names and identifying information of persons considered by the Board of Regents," Stover stated in her 15-page decision.

"The public interest is served by proving that a university presidential search was not rigged or discriminatory, was authentic, was an open and wide search and was designed to get the best possible person."

missing. About that time they heard about an ATV accident and the victim, who was not carrying identification, matched Nett's description.

Nett, who was a competitive motorcycle rider, was identified about 11 p.m. Sunday at a morgue in Ajo, Ariz. Friends who last saw Nett alive said he had not been drinking.

Meanwhile, Nett's friends are taking his death hard.

"I never met anyone like him — he's a one of a kind," Cronin said. "I'm going to miss him so much.

"I still don't believe it."

Nett, known to friends as "M.J." or "Nitch," was an airplane pilot who was intent on getting his aeronautics degree, friends said. He was the youngest of three boys and came to ASU because one of his brothers graduated from the University.

But while he took school seriously, Nett is best remembered for enjoying life.

"He loved to have fun," said friend Donna

Fritschen, an ASU student. "He couldn't sit still."

Fritschen said he especially liked toys. "He had toy airplanes, yo-yos, sunglasses with the nose and other little gadgets — kind of like the movie 'Big'," she said. "He was a big kid."

She said Nett always talked about making the most of each day because he felt life was uncertain.

"He did everything he wanted to do," Fritschen said. "He was a special guy."

ASU Native Americans establish social, cultural organization

By MICHELLE HENRY
State Press

The sound of a Native American flute resounded through the Anthropology Building Wednesday, signifying the establishment of a new organization on campus.

"We are kicking off our open house with the help of some people from the Gila River Indian community and the Arizona Department of Indian Education," said Cal Seciwa, director of ASU's Native American Institute. "We are basically just opening our doors so people can come in and get to know us."

The NAI held the open house for American Indian students, faculty, and staff. Josiah Moore, a specialist with the state Department of Indian Education, said he has high hopes for the institute.

"It is located on campus," he said. "This is a good location for students to have access to the information we can provide."

Moore said his organization has received a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities and plans to establish an American Indian language, history and cultural institution on campus.

Brenda Morgan, a junior political science major who is part Navajo Indian and Kiowa Indian, said it is only a matter of time before she uses the NAI.

"I'm still meeting people because I just came here," she said. "The NAI keeps me informed about what is going on (in the Native American community). In the long run, it will be useful, but right now I'm still getting to know the program."

John Sandoval, a senior electrical engineering major, said the NAI is a vital necessity at ASU.

"Now there is actually a space where we can meet," he said. "I have been involved on campus as the president of the Native American Student Association. The NAI provides a lot more contacts with the faculty, students and administration."

Sandoval said he has always had a difficult time getting people motivated in NASA, adding that NAI will be able to set students up with mentors in their areas of study and provide connections in their fields.

Marlene Cody, a freshman nursing student, said she has met many people through the institute.

"Right now I'm just trying to familiarize myself with the things they have available," she said. "Of the services they do provide, the one that I will use most is the tutoring program."

Karen Stone, NAI secretary, said the institute will offer tutoring in math and science to help bring down the number of Native American students who drop out of ASU.

"We have had an attrition rate of about 54 percent," she said. "We want that number down 10 percent."

Stone said tutoring will be held from 4 to 8 p.m. daily, and a group study session will follow at 10 p.m.

New patrol gives Tempe police an excuse to horse around

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

Tempe police are patrolling bars and apartment complexes on horseback in an effort to control the ASU weekend party scene.

"We're just trying to improve the quality of life," said Sgt. Loren Wunderle of the Tempe Police Department horse patrol.

The equestrian program, which began in 1974, is successful in curbing rowdy college incidents, he added.

Wunderle said that because of high visibility, the horses are more effective in breaking up unruly crowds than patrol cars or officers on foot.

"They may not see a patrol car drive by or an officer approaching on foot but they will see horses," he said. "It's not the same impact as seeing a 1,200-pound animal."

"And besides, most people love horses. I've never met anyone who doesn't like them."

Tempe police decided to patrol "bar row" on horseback, the area surrounding Rural Road and Apache Boulevard, after a large parking lot fight occurred two weeks ago at the nightclub Max's 919.

"Nobody gives the officer any static," said Wunderle about police atop the animals.

In addition, officers on horseback are patrolling apartment complexes around the Broadway and Rural roads area due to the high ratio of parties there.

"They become out of control for regular officers on foot," Wunderle said. "With about 500 intoxicated people, they're extremely difficult to break up."

During the Labor Day weekend, the horseback patrol asserted its authority.

"We started early in the evening," Wunderle said. "We made contact with the residents and gave them a few ground rules."

Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity, 1403 E. 8th St., threw a charity party with several thousand guests in attendance, he added.

"When it was time to break up the party, two officers went in and told everybody the party was over," Wunderle said. "Nobody said anything and there was no fighting. Everybody left in an orderly manner."

"In the past, parties of this size were almost impossible to control without injuries or arrests."

Riding supervisor Sgt. Loren Wunderle of the Tempe Police Department takes a few minutes to groom Echo, a 5-year-old member of the Mounted Patrol Division of the department. The Mounted Unit is used for crowd control during such events as Sun Devil football games.

Decision to ban greek hazing is strongly supported

By KIMBERLY HARRIS
State Press

In the wake of the National Interfraternity Council's decision to ban greek hazing, ASU's coordinator said she strongly agrees with the plan.

Vicki Hersh, Greek Life coordinator, said hazing goes against the ideals of fraternity and sorority life at ASU.

"The optimum would be that we offer all new members the opportunity to participate in a program free from doubt or question of a good positive experience," she said. "The changes that are being made right now with pledgship programs (including the banning of pledgship by the national chapters of Tau Kappa Epsilon and Zeta Beta Tau) is a measure that other fraternities will follow in terms of making new-member programs positive experiences."

The NIC launched the "no hazing" plan Friday at a news conference.

Johnathan Brant, executive director of NIC said, "We are today launching an anti-hazing campaign that declares in unequivocal terms fraternities' outright condemnation of all forms of hazing."

Brant said the anti-hazing program will include the distribution of printed materials on campuses, the organization of discussion groups at fraternity chapters and the publication of articles in alumni magazines.

Leon Shell, ASU dean of Student Life, said hazing is still somewhat of a problem at the University.

"Hazing is something that the Intrafraternity Council, Panhellenic and the University needs to take a look into," he said. "Together, we need to work to review the status each year. I think most fraternities have taken a closer look at hazing, and the NIC is taking the lead in dealing with the problem."

Shell said hazing has lessened over the years, and many houses have always had positive, reinforcing rush programs without hazing.

"The unofficial instances of hazing balances out to about one or two complaints per year, which is relatively low," he said. "However, any reports that we do get is too many. These types of complaints usually come from parents who are unwilling to give any names, therefore an investigation cannot be launched," he said.

Shell said the last official complaint dates back to the summer of 1987, adding that an official complaint is one in which the name of the fraternity is reported and an investigation follows.

Mike Hendrix, president of ASU's Sigma Nu fraternity, said hazing has become less of a problem over the years.

"I'm sure that hazing still occurs, but I don't think it's to the same degree as it used to be," he said.

Dave Rook, president of ASU's Alpha Tau Omega fraternity, agreed.

"I think hazing exists on a small scale, but the cases that come up are not a fair representation of all 24 fraternities at ASU," he said.

ASU gymnasts' work ethic supplements talent, ability

By TOMI McELROY
State Press

Experience and talent are present on the ASU women's gymnastics team as four seniors and a handful of others return for the 1989-90 season.

"I think we have an experienced team," Head Coach John Spini said. "We don't have the super talents that UCLA, Alabama or Georgia have, but we have kids that have to work hard to get there."

Suzu Baldock, Colette Anderson, Molly Carpenter and Marika LeSieur are returning as seniors for the Sun Devils this season.

"Baldock will be very strong in three events for us," Spini said. "She is one of the best uneven bar workers in the country."

Last season Baldock competed in the vault, uneven bars and balance beam events and did a "super job," Spini said.

Although Baldock had the interior cruciate ligament tightened on her right knee during her sophomore year, she competed the entire season.

"If she can keep her body healthy she will be an outstanding performer for us," Spini said.

Baldock earned All-America honors as a freshman with a sixth place finish in the vaulting event.

All four seniors have been appointed captains by Spini.

"I would like my senior team to have a lot of input and I didn't want to pick one over the other," Spini said. "They are all good students — they care about the team — they always give 100 percent and I think we will get a lot of good leadership from them."

Spini said that the experience junior Michelle Colavin and sophomore Tracy Butler gained last year will benefit the team.

"I look for Michelle to be an outstanding athlete for us this year," Spini said. "I think Colette and Molly will give her a lot of support."

Butler earned All-American accolades in the balance beam last season. The beam and uneven bars events are the strongest events for the Sun Devils.

"I think we have depth in those areas and we have kids that have the skill level and experience to help us compete with anybody — we are five deep," Spini said. "I think we have a lot of experience and good beam workers. That will make or break you in most of the meets you are in."

Sophomore Jessica Tudos, a former member of ASU's diving team, will spring into action as a Sun Devil gymnast.

"We would like for her to help us out," Spini said. "We have to get her a lot stronger because she has been out of gymnastics about one and a half years."

Spini, who enters his 10th season, has set two personal goals for himself.

"First of all to get to nationals," Spini said. "Second, to get in that last late rotation so we have the chance to win."

But Spini said he does not worry about the win-loss season.

"That doesn't get you into nationals," Spini said. "It's your two best away and two best home scores that will get you into nationals."

As for Pac-10 rankings, Spini said he would like to see his team finish in the top three.

Spini said he would like to see more consistent judging throughout the Pac-10 program because the scores escalate and you don't get the best teams at nationals. The Pac-10 made a new proposal to the National Champions to change the seeding process and eliminate scores after regionals, he said.

"Scores will count in the regionals, but afterwards you will be seeded in the different rotations," he said. "So, even if you are the best team and you are in the early rotation you still have a chance to win."

"We've made the proposal but it won't be voted on until October and won't come through this year. If it does come through, it will be next year."

The Sun Devils spent their summer vacations in summer school, vacationing at home, working in summer camps and preparing for the upcoming season.

"I just gave them a weight program and a flexibility program and tell them to try and do other things," Spini said. "I think from looking how they reported, they are in good shape and we're hoping to break into the top five (in the country)."

Wildcats hope to start new era, win against Sun Devils

Snyder

By JOEL HORN
State Press

Sports Illustrated recently described Kansas State University as "Futility U."

Why, you ask?

- The Wildcats have not won a football game since 1986, 27 games ago — the longest losing streak in Division I college football.

- In its 93-year football history, KSU has lost 509 games and are holding at 299 victories.

- They have had only one winning season since 1970 and have played in only one bowl game, the Independence Bowl in 1982. They lost, of course.

- The Wildcats have averaged only 20,000 fans at KSU Stadium the past three seasons and have only 65 scholarship players.

- Half of its 113-man roster consists of freshmen or redshirt freshmen.

With a new head coach, new uniforms and even a new logo for the football team, the Wildcats hope to start anew Saturday at Sun Devil Stadium.

Bill Snyder, who spent the past 10 years as offensive coordinator at the University of Iowa, said he hopes to solidify player relationships and build a strong foundation.

"The players are coming together and beginning to believe in each other," he said. "They're learning to practice harder and I hope that carries over to the game."

KSU is expected to put the ball in the air Saturday against ASU. Last year, the Wildcat offense broke the school record for passing yards in a season with 2,578 and averaged 11.4 yards per pass.

Junior Carl Straw, who had the third-best season ever by a Big Eight sophomore and the third-best single-season total in KSU history when he threw for 1,947 yards in 1988, will lead the offense against the Sun Devils.

Straw's backup, senior Gary Swim, suffered a career-ending knee injury in practice.

The biggest KSU offensive question mark is the running game. Wildcats running backs lost 15 fumbles in 1988.

Tailback Richard Boyd, a 5-foot-6, 190-pound redshirt junior, stole the show in KSU's spring game with 11 carries for 122 yards and two touchdowns.

The wide receiver position was expected to be a bright spot, but Greg Washington, who set KSU standards last season in yards receiving (928), touchdown receptions in a season (nine) and receptions in a season (69), was recently declared academically ineligible.

Defensively, the Wildcats are full of holes.

Opposing rushers gained nearly six yards a carry last season and each enemy pass completion went for an average of 16.3 yards. The Wildcats surrendered 511.7 yards and 40.7 points per game in 1988.

Senior defensive end Maurice Henry was one of just seven Big Eight players to log 100 or more tackles last season and senior Marcus Miller, who ranks seventh at KSU in interceptions with seven and led the team in tackles in 1988 with 102, returns at free safety.

Snyder said he is unhappy about opening the season on the road.

"My preference was for this opening game to be (in Manhattan, Kansas)," he said. "It's not that I dislike playing a team like Arizona State. It's an excellent team and an excellent program. I just wanted to play the first game at home."

Snyder said he is particularly impressed with the Sun Devils' starting quarterback and free safety.

"Paul Justin is probably as fine a quarterback as has been projected in the Pac-10 this year," he said. "Nathan LaDuke is touted as perhaps one of the finest defensive backs in the country and I wouldn't disagree with that. He's extremely intelligent and he doesn't make a lot of mistakes."

Snyder said being the underdog in Saturday's game does not bother him.

"Obviously, there's a tremendous difference between the program at Arizona State and the one at Kansas State, so they have something to go on. But that's just another number that I can't concern myself with."

"I hope the players won't concern themselves with it either."

Jones dealt bad hand by officials in World Cup

By JOEL HORN

State Press

He was robbed. ASU wrestler Zeke Jones, who finished seventh in the World Cup Championship last week in Martigny, Switzerland, said bad calls by Eastern European referees cost him a shot at the title — a sentiment echoed by his coach.

"He got robbed in two matches," said ASU Head Wrestling Coach Bobby Douglas, who also directed the U. S. freestyle team in the World Championships. "It was as bad as Korea."

Douglas, now in his 16th season at ASU, was referring to matches officiated by referees from Greece and Bulgaria.

"I think they've got a real clique going," Douglas said. "It's been happening for a long time."

"The Bulgarian was a real weak official who was dominated by the mat chairman."

A protest was filed after one match in which Jones, who was wrestling a Turk in the 114½-pound division, grabbed his opponent by the leg and threw him down with about 15 seconds remaining in the match.

The referee said Jones took the Turkish wrestler out of bounds, but a later look at videotapes showed conclusively that he was in bounds.

With about eight seconds left, Jones moved behind his competitor and took him down. The referee said the Turk's knees were off the mat, but again the videos indicated otherwise.

Jones lost, 4-3, and the protest was filed approximately two hours following the match. As a result, Jones was awarded a point and the match was tied.

However, since the protest was filed so late, there was no opportunity for overtime, which would be the case under normal tie-breaking circumstances.

Jones was not awarded a second point and since the match was still tied and considering the timing of the protest, the Turk was declared the winner.

The referee was demoted as a result of his mistakes, but Jones had no recourse.

"I learned that you've got to take control of the match and not let it get into the referee's hands," he said. "I can't wrestle the officials as well. A lot of politics are involved."

Jones emerged victorious in the other contested match.

Douglas said Jones, who is the youngest Sun Devil wrestler to ever make the national team, is on target for the 1992 Olympics.

"He finished a legitimate sixth in the world and should have been in the top four," Douglas said.

Jones earned All-American honors at the 1989 NCAA Championship and gained a spot on the World Cup team after winning the gold medal at the U. S. Olympic Festival. He said the U. S. team was disappointed after finishing runner-up in the World Championships, behind the Soviet Union.

Douglas said the U. S. team sat in an airport for 15 hours after competing in an earlier tournament in Prague, Czechoslovakia, which did not help the Americans' performance in Switzerland.

Jones said he was happy for American teammates John Smith and Kenny Monday, who won world championship titles in the 136½- and 163-pound classes, respectively.

Monday defeated Arsen Fadzaev of the Soviet Union, who previously had never lost in international competition.

"These American wrestlers will eventually become No. 1 in the world," Douglas said. "The final pieces of the wrestling puzzle will come together."

One of the "final pieces," Douglas explained, is finances.

"We need to play the financial card, and we need to change the rules (in America) so they're more compatible with freestyle," he said. "Winning will take care of those things."

ASU plays an important role in the Sun Devil Zeke Jones, who finished seventh in the World Cup Championship in Martigny, Switzerland, has his sights set on the 1992 Olympics.

development of the American wrestling program, Douglas said, and the proposed multi-sport facility on campus would go a long way to promoting that goal.

The facility, he said, would help increase attendance and aid in recruiting.

"I think it's quite possible," Douglas said. "I know the administration is eager to see (ASU's Olympic sports) move toward excellence."

Jones said the multi-sport complex is vital for the development of the Sun Devil wrestling program.

"(The team's current) facility is just too small for a national championship team," he said. "It's the No. 1 reason why we haven't gotten some recruits at ASU."

The team must wrestle in two shifts, Jones said, "which is not a productive environment."

However, Douglas said he is optimistic about the future of ASU and U. S. national wrestling.

"The eagle almost landed."

The ASU baseball team will have a walk-on tryout meeting at 3 p.m. today in room 3541 of the University Activity Center. Information will be provided about tryout times. Walk-ons make up about 80 percent of the junior varsity team, which plays 10 games in the fall and approximately 40 in the spring. Interested students are requested to bring a copy of their class schedule to the meeting.

The ASU Ice Devils are holding a pre-conditioning mini-camp today and will continue next Tuesday and Thursday from 5:15 to 6:45 p.m. at the Tower Plaza Ice Arena at 38th Street and Thomas Road. Participants will practice stick handling and shooting to prepare for team tryouts beginning Sept. 19. The mini-camp costs $25, and full equipment is required.

PHOENIX (AP) - The Phoenix Cardinals completed their six-man NFL developmental squad Wednesday by re-signing two rookies - linebacker Richard Tardits and wide receiver Andre Langley - and claiming cornerback Marcus Turner off waivers.

Tardits, a fifth-round draft pick from Georgia, is trying to become the first native of France to play in the NFL.

The 6-foot-2, 218-pound Tardits had two tackles and blocked one punt in four preseason games but was among 13 players cut Monday when Phoenix lowered its roster from 60 to the league limit of 47.

The 5-foot-6, 160-pound Langley, a free agent from Tennessee-Martin who grew up in Phoenix, was released by the Cardinals on Aug. 29 when the squad was trimmed from 80 to 60 players.

He had two catches for 20 yards and one touchdown - a 10-yard reception in the Aug. 11 preseason opener against Seattle.

Turner, an 11th-round draft pick of Kansas City this year, was released Monday by the Chiefs. The 6-foot, 190-pound Turner is out of UCLA.

Preseason allows lacrosse club opportunity to fill open positions

By PAUL CORO
State Press

ASU men's lacrosse Coach Clark Mercer has put out the welcome mat for some new players.

Mercer will need to fill many holes because half of the team will not return this year. Those players, who Mercer lost in the off-season, include his leading scorer and goalie.

Mercer will use the fall semester as a preseason for the lacrosse club to incorporate both new and experienced players during a light schedule.

Because fall games are non-league, all ASU students are welcome to join the team. Players are not required to supply their own equipment, which normally runs around $200, in the fall.

"It gives them an opportunity to see what the game is like and what it will entail," Mercer said.

The team's first meeting for prospective players will be Sept. 12 at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Recreation Center classroom.

"The fall is an important part of the season," Mercer said. "It gets guys out playing who need to learn and the guys who are new meet people with the same activity."

The fall schedule tentatively includes two tournaments, slated for Oct. 28-29 in San Diego. A tournament to be hosted by ASU, which is still on drawing board, should include teams from NAU, Ft. Lewis College (Colo.) and the University of New Mexico.

The "Top Gun" of this year's team could be third-year midfielder Pete Mitchell, a senior. Matt Welhaf, also in his third year on the team, is expected to lead the defense.

Returning at the attack positions, Paul Inhoff and Dave Pavin add more experience to a potentially talented team.

"We will have a lot of new people who will have to fill in," Mercer said. "That will make it exciting."

Last year, Mercer guided the Sun Devils to an 8-7 record and a Final Eight appearance at the Western Collegiate Lacrosse League playoffs. Mercer has taken his teams to the playoffs in each of his three years as coach.

This season, Mercer hopes to reach the WCLL's Final Four for the first time.

Their spring schedule includes match-ups with NCAA Division I Stanford and Division III Whittier College.

Spring team members must be full-time students and pay dues, which are initially $175.

The team will sell T-shirts on campus and clean Sun Devil Stadium after a football game in order to subsidize some of the player costs. Last year, the money raised reduced each of the player's dues by $75.

Mercer said many players without experience adapt easily because of athletic abilities. The hand-eye coordination is much like baseball, and ice hockey is the most prominent background found among new players.

Students who want further information may contact Mercer at 926-4865.
