Attorney calls regent appeal 'waste of time'

By TYRONE MEIGHAN
State Press

The legal fees for a court case involving the Arizona Board of Regents and two Valley newspapers continue to mount and are expected to exceed $200,000 as the lawsuit reaches appellate court, said an attorney for the newspapers on Monday.

"It's a waste of time and money," Dan Barr said.

The regents decided Friday to appeal a decision by Maricopa County Superior Court Judge Elizabeth Stover requiring them to release 240 candidates' names and resumes involved in the search for a new ASU president and pay all legal fees associated with the case. The eight-month presidential search culminated May 30 with the nomination of Lattie Coor from the University of Vermont.

The regents filed suit against The Arizona Republic and the Tribune newspapers in an effort to block the release of the names, which the papers claimed had to be released under state public records law.

The regents have been criticized for appealing the decision, because the three state universities must bear the cost of the legal fees. ASU is providing 50 percent of the bill and NAU and UofA will contribute 25 percent each.

The regents said they want Stover's decision clarified.

"The reason the regents want to appeal is that they believe confidentiality is essential to secure the best qualified candidates," said Jacqueline Schneider, legal counsel for the

ASASU safety escort service to begin Monday

By ELISE ELSBERRY
State Press

Students have been without a nighttime safety escort service since school began due to delays in hiring a service director and difficulty in obtaining background checks on the escort volunteers.

Tami Willingham, the Associated Students of ASU campus affairs vice president, said the director of the service is usually hired in the spring, but this year the hiring was pushed back to August.

Sean Mohr/State Press

An unidentified student waits for a tram on Monday evening. The safety escort service, which usually provides an escort for students who have to walk on campus at night, has been out of operation because of delays in hiring a director and escorts.

"At first no one really applied," Willingham said. "I basically had no one with any qualifications to choose from."

David Harber, a sophomore engineering student, was hired as the director of the Safety Escort Service during the first week of August.

Willingham said Harber is "over-qualified" for the position.

The service, which began in 1982, is set to re-start on Monday and will provide evening escorts for any student traveling from point to point on campus. The service will operate 7 p.m. to 12:15 a.m. on Sunday through Thursday.

Willingham said that the late start Harber got in getting the program rolling delayed the beginning of this semester's service.

"The past director is not around," Willingham said.

In order to ensure the credibility and reliability of the escorts, Willingham wants to run background checks on the volunteers to make sure none have prior felony convictions.

Willingham said she would like to have ASU's Department of Public Safety help with the checks.

"We're helping DPS and the students by providing this service," she said. The credibility of the safety escort service is "nowhere" without some means of checking volunteers' backgrounds, Willingham added.

But DPS acting-Director Doug Bartosh said that DPS is forbidden by law to run criminal offense checks on anyone other than their own employees. In order to get escorts checked, the service would have to be under DPS's jurisdiction.

Willingham said she would like to get DPS to feel somewhat responsible for the escort program to help increase its effectiveness but wants to maintain the program as a student-run operation.

"I don't want to move the program to DPS," Willingham said. "We were founded by students, and we're students serving students."

Escort applicants are currently required to submit a letter of recommendation from a member of the community and several "character references" from people who may be called and questioned about the potential escort.

Willingham said the service will benefit this year from some improvements gained from observing NAU's safety escort program.

"Our program is not one of the strongest," Willingham said. "So we contacted NAU, which has an incredible program, and got some ideas on how to strengthen and improve our program."

ASU plans to add bicycle escorts this semester and hopes to expand to weekend escort service and increase the number of dispatch centers in the future, improvements based on the NAU model.

Harber said there are currently 10 volunteer escorts, and the program is hoping to recruit more.

"We're having a big recruitment drive with Interfraternity Council and the Residence Halls," he said. "We're hoping to have a majority of the fraternities have members volunteer. We have been working with IFC to get the houses points for their philanthropies."

Soviets join E. Germans' criticism of exodus to West from Hungary

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union came to the defense of its embattled ally East Germany on Monday by condemning what it called a campaign to spur illegal East German emigration.

The United States, Britain and West Germany welcomed the exodus Monday of thousands of East Germans from Hungary through Austria into West Germany.

In Washington, State Department deputy spokesman Richard Boucher praised Hungary, which boldly opened its borders to the West in defiance of a Warsaw Pact ally.

"We also commend Austria for its help and support, and we admire the efforts of (West Germany) to offer a home to fellow Germans seeking freedom," Boucher said.

The Soviet news agency Tass made the criticism in a commentary on the historic exodus that followed the Hungarian government's decision Sunday to allow all East Germans to leave for West Germany.

Several hundred East Germans who are seeking safe passage to the West are holed up in West Germany's embassy in Prague, Czechoslovakia.

Tass said Western news outlets have been waging a "tendentious campaign" based on the illegal departures of some East Germans.

It was the first comment on the greatest flood of East German refugees since 1961, the year the Berlin Wall halted the flow to the West. State television, in its evening news broadcast "Vremya," showed some of the refugees Monday.

Jury choice begins in Gabor trial; judge imposes gag order in case

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Actress Zsa Zsa Gabor spent the day in court Monday watching jury selection for her trial on a charge of slapping a policeman, with more than 100 reporters hanging on her every word outside court.

"Hello, dahlinks," she said as she breezed into court accompanied by her hairdresser, daughter and eighth husband, Prince Frederick von Anhalt, Germany's Duke of Saxony.

Defense attorney William Graysen estimated a five- to seven-day trial.

Municipal Judge Charles G. Rubin immediately imposed a gag order on the case, silencing the outspoken Gabor.

Student: China's democracy battle will never die

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

The pro-democracy movement in China will never die, said the president of the Chinese Students and Scholars Friendship Association — one of the organizations sponsoring a remembrance rally tonight at ASU.

"We want everyone to know what really happened," Xinjie Zhu said. "This is a new semester. We have a lot of newcomers."

The demonstration will tentatively include speeches from Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., UCLA student Ding Jian, who was placed in jail in Shanghai and Beijing for shipping money back to China during the pro-democracy movement, and Associated Students of ASU President Paul Larson.

One hundred days have passed since thousands of Chinese pro-democracy students were massacred by government troops in Beijing's Tiananmen Square.

A spokeswoman for DeConcini said on Monday that the senator may be unable to fly to the Valley because of obligations, but a representative will be sent in his place.

In addition, the China Support Network will sponsor a China rally at 11:30 a.m. today in front of the Student Services Building.

John Casumi, one of the founders of the organization and a former ASU student, said he expects at least 2,000 people to attend the rally that will focus on getting non-Chinese students involved.

"The democratic movement (in China) is still alive," he said. "There is a place for Americans in the movement."

Casumi said the two rallies are unique. "There is no real competition," the marketing consultant said. "They are dealing with different market segments (because of the different times)."

The evening remembrance rally, which will be held in front of the Student Services Building at 7:30 p.m., will round out China Awareness Week, which is designed to educate ASU Chinese and non-Chinese students in the following:

- How difficult it is to have democracy in a country with 4,000 years of feudalism and 40 years of communism.
- How the new generation of Chinese students will never quit until democracy is reborn in China.

Zhu said Chinese pro-democracy patrons should wait a couple of years until things change in their country's government.

"We have a bunch of old leaders back home," he said. "In three to five years they might die. The next generation won't have that power."

Zhu said he expects more than 300 people to attend the rally, which also will include a videotape demonstration of events in the country.

Stephen MacKinnon, director of ASU's Center for Asian Studies, said there are about 250 mainland Chinese students, 300 to 400 students from Taiwan and 200 Hong Kong students enrolled at ASU.

He added that the students' interests in the current China situation are different. Mainland Chinese are more torn by the events in the communist government, while students from Taiwan are less traumatized and are interested in promoting their country, MacKinnon said.

However, Hong Kong students are caught in the middle, and the country has to worry about being taken over by China in the near future, the professor said.

MacKinnon said the Chinese students are participating in the rally for three reasons.

"They hope to influence politics in the country in the long run," he said. "Also, they have family and friends there."

In addition, he said some of the students might want to influence policy in Washington concerning China.

MacKinnon is in favor of the rally.

"I think the media is beginning to forget about China as it (television) jumps from issue to issue," he said.

Other sponsors of the rally include ASASU, the ASU Chinese Student Association, the ASU Hong Kong Student Association and the Chinese Democracy Movement Fund, Inc.

Kefung Liu stands in front of an open letter to be sent to fellow Chinese who remain in China. The letter has been on display on Cady Mall. In addition to the letter, a support rally and a remembrance rally will be held on campus today in an effort to raise support and donations.

Money

Frieder paid too much

Brian Tassinari
Opinion Editor

The Arizona Republic has reported that new ASU basketball Coach Bill Frieder could earn as much as $700,000 per year, while the athletic department claims the figure is closer to $400,000.

Regardless of which figure is accurate that's still a lot of dough to pay someone whose job is basically to teach five sweaty men how to throw an orange, leather sphere through a metal hoop, while five other sweaty men in different colored jerseys try to stop them.

Of course if it were really that simple, then Frieder wouldn't be making more money than anyone else at this University. ASU officials, after closely observing our sister university in Tucson, have realized that if you get five sweaty men who are proficient at tossing this orange, leather sphere, then about 14,000 sweaty people (most of whom are not very good at orange sphere tossing) will pay money — lots of money — to see our sweaty men ply their trade.

So it was hardly surprising when Lonnie Ostrom, the chair of a committee that is looking into ASU's ticket policy, said in Friday's State Press, "We expect the (basketball) program to change dramatically, and we want to prepare the University for the changes expected with the addition of Bill Frieder."

Translation: We expect Frieder's sweaty men to do well enough so that we can chisel the fans out of enough money to make payment on our expensive new coach. And eventually, we expect this racket to make us quite a bit of dough.

Make no mistake about it, the decision to pay Frieder the big money was a business decision designed to make this University money — lots of money. The bean counters figured out that investing in a big-name coach could pay big dividends a few years down the road.

And on the surface this sounds great. Anything that brings the University money is good for the school, especially now when money is so scarce, right?

Wrong. The problem is that when the inevitable conflict arises between what is right and what will win games, what is right will probably lose.

When Superstar X fails a class or gets caught breaking into a house, it will be in the interest of the entire athletic department that he not be dropped from the team. Jobs and futures come to depend on the abilities of these student athletes, and the athletes come to know this. Better to overlook X's indiscretion than to jeopardize funding for the department, regardless of what is in the best interest of the student athlete.

An excellent example of this occurred here just a few years ago when President Nelson reinstated Stacy Harvey to ASU's football team over the objection of faculty representative Marianne Jennings. Harvey broke the rules, but the team needed him so he played.

The same thing is bound to happen with ASU's basketball team, it's practically written into Frieder's contract. According to the Republic he's set to receive up to $114,000 dollars in bonuses if his team performs well on the court and $10,000 if they perform well in the classroom. The $114,000 is the most Frieder could make from all of the various performance bonuses, which include $20,000 dollars if ASU wins 10 conference games and $30,000 dollars if attendance exceeds 11,000.

What a courageous display of commitment to excellence in education — ASU is willing to fork over a whopping 1.4 percent of Frieder's reported earnings if 75 percent of the eligible basketball players graduate each year (that's 1.4 percent of the possible $700,000.)

It already has been written in black and white what is expected of Frieder — he is expected to win. And if his players graduate, great. But don't worry about it, Bill.

The problems associated with big-time athletics are not unique to ASU, but the University has been particularly blatant in its efforts to elevate the basketball program to national prominence. First it got a big-name coach with a big salary. Then, before the product is even improved, it plans to raise the prices with only token attention (1.4 percent) paid to maintaining the integrity of the program.

The solution, of course, is that the NCAA put a cap on coaches' potential earnings. That way, once a coach reaches a school like ASU, there is no longer an incentive for him to bend the rules to become more successful so he can get a fatter contract.

More likely, though, things will continue as they always have both around the country and here at ASU. Frieder's teams will bend some rules and make some money and win some trophies. No sweat.

Minority lounge good idea

Editor:

In response to Lynn Vavreck's editorial opposing the use of a minority lounge at ASU, I would like to correct the obvious misconceptions in her article.

First of all, Miss Vavreck contends that by creating the lounge, the administration has made it possible for minority students to avoid interaction with non-minorities. Although true as this may be, the lounge's purpose is not for minorities to steer clear of non-minorities, but rather for them to convene in a place where the term "minority" is never heard or used. In this room, the minority become the majority, a situation not often seen in this fine country of ours, let alone ASU.

Secondly, many minority students come from high schools and small towns where Anglos were rarely or never encountered. At a (and I use the word lightly) predominately Anglo university where the non-minority to minority ratio is close to 10 to 1, the minority students' interaction with non-minorities is almost inevitable.

Consequently, the same students may experience culture shock and a deep empty feeling of alienation. To help alleviate such unwanted feelings, a minority lounge was constructed. Here minorities can come together face to face and realize that they indeed do exist.

Although I agree with you that one of the solutions to racism involves a shared understanding between people, I do not think that "it's time to tear down the wall" of the minority lounge. This room was given to minorities for a reason, one that apparently slipped through your mind. However, I must stop short of knocking you for your ignorance. For your lack of knowledge may well be the result of your lack of experience. After all, you cannot see the view unless you climb the mountain.

As for the possibility of a "white students' lounge," you may recall that it was not too long ago that these places actually existed.

Justice system not unfair

Editor:

Carolyn Hofig's Sept. 6 article "When Dealing with Children, Justice System is Criminal," left me with the impression she had little, if any, understanding of the issues at hand.

In the Todd case, Ms. Hofig's assertion that the only reason testimony from the children was dismissed as doubtful was "because the boys could not recite the exact dates of the attacks" is a little hard to swallow. Because J. D. Todd must be found guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, any testimony which sheds doubt on his accusers' stories is relevant in determining his guilt.

In the King case the court made it clear that a parent's responsibility to a child's physical well-being supersedes his right to instill a religious belief in that child. Granted, freedom of religious belief is guaranteed by the First Amendment, but the right to impose a religious belief on your child is another story, especially when it conflicts with the child's physical welfare. I question whether you would have been as sympathetic if the young girl's parents were believers in voodoo and were found covered in chicken blood and war paint chanting "Ooga Booga Boo" as opposed to being Christian Scientists.

From the decisions in these two cases, Ms. Hofig has drawn the inference that the court is more sympathetic to child molesters than to Christian Scientists. This is completely untrue.

Misunderstood

How this country's drug war went to the dogs

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

One of the untold stories in America's drug crisis is how the situation grew to the point where it is now out of control.

To understand it, we must go back several years to the Reagan administration and study official documents I recently obtained under the Freedom of Information Act.

Early in the Reagan administration, a top White House official went into the Oval Office and said:

"Mr. President, we are dealing with a growing national menace, and this administration must launch an all-out war on drugs."

The president nodded and said: "Let me sleep on it."

The next day, he sent a memo to the official. It said:

"In regard to your proposal that we launch an all-out war on bugs."

"I was not aware that bugs had become a national menace. I mentioned it to Nancy, and she asked the White House domestic staff if they had noted any increase in our bug population. They said that except for an occasional ant on the kitchen floor, there was no problem. They just step on them. I told them not to step on ants because I believe that can cause rain."

"Now, when I was a young man back in Illinois, bugs were really bugs. We didn't have any of these newfangled sprays that you can buy today, so we were always getting nipped by mosquitoes, the little rascals."

'Maybe you think that this would appeal to the mailman voting bloc. But do you know how many dog lovers there are in this country?'

"In my opinion, bugs are an individual problem, not something that the federal government should get involved in, especially a conservative administration."

"I'm sure that if the liberals were in office, they'd be setting up big spending programs to give everybody their own free can of bug spray."

"But we can't be checking children's hair for cooties, counting cockroaches in everybody's kitchens or scratching everybody's mosquito bites."

"Therefore, I reject the notion of a war on bugs. I don't want to be remembered by history as the president who ran around with a fly swatter."

A few days later, the same official went to the Oval Office and said: "Mr. President, I think there has been a misunderstanding. I wasn't talking about bugs."

THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES JOINS THE WAR ON DRUGS.

The president cupped his hand over his ear and said: "What did you say?"

"I said we should have an all-out war on drugs."

The president nodded and said: "Let me think about it."

And he soon responded with a memo that said:

"Regarding your proposal that this administration launch an all-out war on dogs."

"Frankly, I don't understand it, and neither does Nancy. Maybe you think that this would appeal to the mailman voting bloc. But do you know how many dog lovers there are in this country? If I started picking on their pooches, I'd be lucky to get 10 percent of the vote."

"If you are talking about stray dogs or dogs that mess on somebody else's lawn, I agree that is a pesky problem. I remember when I lived back in Illinois, there was a fellow who used to let his dog run loose. But when he came near our lawn, we would turn the hose on him and send the little scamp running."

"But the stray dogs are the job of local authorities and always have been. I'm starting to wonder about you and your commitment to conservative values. If we start going after dogs, what's next? Kitties? Parakeets? Gerbils?"

"Nancy says that if I listened to you, I would go down in history as the only dogcatcher president. She thinks I should fire you, but I'm going to give you one more chance to regain your senses."

When the aide received the memo, he was so horrified at being misunderstood that he rushed to the Oval Office to explain. However, the president wasn't there.

Hearing the president's helicopter revving up, he ran to the pad and over the roar of the engine, he shouted: "Mr. President, I was talking about the drug lords. We must go after the drug lords."

The president smiled, waved and boarded the chopper. The next day the aide received this memo:

"I have been patient long enough. I am requesting your immediate resignation. Where in the world did you get the idea that we should pick on drugstores?"

"America has the finest drugstores in the world. In Russia, people are standing in line for toilet paper. Here, you can walk into a drugstore and get everything from medicine to dozens of brands of underarm sprays and mouthwash. That's why Americans smell better than Russians. And what about athlete's foot? When I was a young man in Illinois, all you could do was scratch your toes. Now, one or two squirts, and you have instant relief. The modern drugstore is one of the institutions that makes America great."

"Nancy says you must be crazy if you think I'm going down in history as the president who made Americans smell bad and have itchy feet."

As the aide was being led from the White House grounds, he turned and shouted: "Dope, dope, Mr. President, dope."

The president opened the window and yelled: "Yeah? Well, you're not too bright yourself, fella."

Dilemma

Why democrats win state level, lose presidency

Jeff Greenfield
Universal Press Syndicate

NEW YORK — My breakfast companion was a statewide official from a major industrial state. The conversation was the current condition of the Democratic Party. The conclusion of the conversation was familiar.

Why, he asked, could Democrats — liberal Democrats at that — win statehouses and Senate seats in the same states where their presidential candidates went down to humiliating defeat in election after election? Kent Conrad in North Dakota, Tom Daschle in South Dakota, Bob Kerrey in Nebraska are senators from states that have not given a Democratic presidential candidate one single electoral vote since 1964.

Democrats John Glenn, Howard Metzenbaum and Richard Celeste are the senators and governor from Ohio, which has gone Democratic once — barely — since 1964.

Across the South, which in presidential years almost invariably puts the Republican nominee halfway through the Electoral College, Democrats such as Al Gore, Terry Sanford, Richard Shelby and Bob Graham all win Senate seats.

Some are conservative, some moderate, some liberal, but they wear the Democratic label and win. How?

The key, my companion suggested, was not so much their ideology but their independence from Washington. To the voters, they are all seen as politicians who speak the language of the folks at home and understand what those people want.

It's no accident, this politician said, that the only non-incumbent Democrat to win the White House since 1960 was Jimmy Carter, who explicitly ran against Washington. Even he needed the shadow of the Watergate scandal to squeak by the unelected Gerald Ford.

What has to happen, he suggested, is that the endless intra-party argument about moving to the right or to the left has to be seen as sterile. What the Democrats have to do, he argued, is move the intellectual and emotional center of the party outside of Washington and nominate a candidate who spoke to the nation's capital from the people and not the other way around.

I happen to think there's a lot to this idea. I also happen to think it will take an enormous amount of effort and courage to accomplish this geological shift and not simply because the national Democratic Party has given itself so much weight at the national nominating convention.

'The conversation was the current condition of the Democratic Party. The conclusion of the conversation was familiar.'

For instance, as I've argued here before, there is a huge target of opportunity for Democrats in the manifest incompetencies of Republican presidents. They range from the savings and loan collapse to the HUD scandal to the near criminal neglect of our nuclear weapons plants.

To make this case, however, also requires that a Democratic candidate point some fingers directly at his own party.

Such a candidate would have to assail the ceaseless interference by powerful Democratic congressional figures into the work of savings and loan regulators, at the same time these same Democrats were getting huge campaign contributions from the S & L industry. He would have to condemn Congress' own manipulation of HUD regulations in order to pull strings for the generous folks back home who kept the campaign coffers full.

In fact, he would have to say something very intelligible and very strong about the current state of campaign financing that permits those with funds to rent a congressman's attention, while enabling those in power to stay in power with a reelection rate that the Politburo would envy.

This is no quick process. It requires nothing less than the changing of the party's fundamental outlook, much in the way Ronald Reagan and his allies dragged the Republican Party kicking and screaming into an optimistic, growth-end, opportunity framework.

Clearly, as my breakfast companion argued, there are Democrats at the statewide level who offer hope that the party can find its feet again nationally. But, as Francis Bacon said, "Hope is a good breakfast, but it is a bad supper."

Firebirds, Camaros frequently stolen but recovery rate high

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

Pontiac Firebirds and Chevrolet Camaros are the most frequently stolen cars in the Valley, said a Tempe police official.

"I can't really say why they're so frequently stolen except for the fact that they're hot, fast cars," said Joe Brosius, supervisor of Tempe's auto theft division.

Other frequently stolen cars include Pontiac Grand Ams, Buicks and Oldsmobiles, he added.

"If you know how to steal a Firebird, you're going to know how to steal an Oldsmobile," said Tom Leazotte, a Tempe police detective.

The number of auto thefts during the summer was typical of that time of year, Brosius said. For example, 146 cars were stolen in July.

"(The amount of thefts) comes in spurts, but it is high at the beginning of the year," said ASU police Sgt. Bob Jones. "Around summer it tends to die down a little."

He added that the prime spots for auto theft on campus are Lots 3 and 59.

However, the recovery rate of stolen vehicles is very high, Leazotte said.

"We will recover a stolen car almost all of the time," he said.

Jones said that if the vehicle is not recovered within 30 days, it never will be found.

Some cars have been recovered in good condition in such areas as the river bottom in west Phoenix, and other cars have been destroyed intentionally by fire, Brosius said.

"I don't know why anyone would destroy such pretty cars," he said.

Leazotte agreed.

"Sometimes they're destroyed to get rid of all evidence such as fingerprints," he said. "And other times it's done out of sheer maliciousness."

On the other hand, some cars are stripped or taken into another country, Jones said.

"They'll be taken all together, either into Mexico or a chop shop where they're taken apart and sold in pieces," he said.

But there are preventive measures car owners should take, Leazotte said.

"If you have a garage, use it or buy an alarm," he said. "Another safety device is a lock which fits around the steering wheel.

"Another idea is a kill switch which cuts off the ignition. The car can't be started until this switch is turned back on, and only the driver should know where it (the switch) is."

Activities planned for Mexican Independence Day

By MIKE VAN DYKE
State Press

The Associated Students of ASU Multi-Cultural Awareness Board will sponsor a celebration for Mexican Independence Day Friday — becoming the first group on campus to do this, ASASU officials said.

MCAB programs cultural events and serves as the liaison for students to inform the University community of current minority issues.

J'lein Liese, ASASU activities vice president, said the event will showcase Hispanic culture and emphasize leadership.

Carlos Galindo-Elvira, special assistant to the activities vice president, said ASU will celebrate the holiday Friday because it falls on Saturday.

He added the program will take place between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. at the Student Services courtyard.

Highlights of the event will include

Liese

Galindo-Elvira

speeches from Phoenix city Councilwoman Mary Rose Wilcox and Rep. Armando Ruiz, D-Phoenix.

Galindo-Elvira said Ruiz, a "Fiscal 2000" committee member and a chief opponent of Proposition 106 — which made English Arizona's official language — will present his keynote speech on Hispanics in community affairs.

KPHX, a Valley Hispanic radio station, will broadcast live from the celebration, he added.

In addition, Valley merchants have agreed to donate pastries, chips and salsa for the festivities.

A mariachi band is scheduled to play after the keynote address.

"The event will present an opportunity to showcase Hispanic organizations," Liese said.

Information booths manned with ASU Hispanic organization representatives, which range from engineering to business, will be set up in the courtyard.

"I hope the event will stimulate awareness within the Hispanic community so that the importance of cultural esteem and the responsibilities of civic and student involvement will be recognized," Galindo-Elvira said.

Liese said she also hopes the program will emphasize the importance of fostering campus-wide leadership.

Wilcox

Liese said MCAB is hoping to stress the importance of developing leadership by "bringing in respected speakers that represent strong community leadership."

The Cultural Diversity committee, a part of the ASU Student Life office, has helped ASASU fund the event.

'Last Lecture Series' lets faculty, staff speak about feelings

By MICHELLE HENRY
State Press

What would you say if you knew you were going to die at 7 tonight?

The "Last Lecture Series" is attempting to pose that question to several ASU faculty and staff personnel twice a month throughout the semester.

The idea stems from a series of lectures that have been successful on other university campuses. The Rev. Richard Pike of United Campus Christian Ministry brought the idea to campus when one of his colleagues from the University of New Mexico presented the series there.

Pike said he wants to give faculty and staff the opportunity to address students about such things as what is most important to them, what kind of legacy they would like to leave and how they feel about life, living and values.

Pike explained professors tend to speak on subjects of logic in their classrooms. In the last lecture series, the professors will speak about feelings, senses, morals, spiritual values and other personal experiences.

"I am excited because I have been here 13½ years," he said. "And as far as I know, it has never been done on this campus."

He said students have few opportunities to talk to their professors about personal feelings.

"We want them to talk from the heart," Pike said. "This will be a challenge for some of the speakers to do."

Pike said he has several professors who are interested.

On Sept. 26, G. Lynn Nelson, an assistant English professor, will be the first speaker to do the "last lecture" from noon to 1 p.m. in the MU Mohave Room. His topic will be "I wish they had told me."

Some students say the idea is a good one, although some are unsure whether they would attend.

"If I had time, I would probably go to see what professors are like — if they are really people, too," said Susan Bainter, a junior liberal arts major.

Jim Hudson, a senior electrical engineering major, said he likes the idea of professors sharing with students.

"It would be an eye-opening experience to see another side of a professor," he said. "But I don't think I would go unless I knew the professor."

However, one student does not believe the series is needed on campus.

Melissa Le May, a junior psychology major, said: "I would hope that they speak about a subject close to what they teach. I think it should be done in the classroom because a lot of their students would never be able to hear them speak."

Sales of ASU literary magazine jump; funds increase

By JOIE ANN LaPOLLA
State Press

Hayden's Ferry Review, ASU's 4-year-old literary magazine, has received a $2,500 grant — a five-fold increase from last year's award — and sales have jumped by 300 percent.

"The magazine is taking hold now and is a little more established, and people are noticing us," said Salima Keegan, the magazine's managing editor.

The Arizona Commission on the Arts, comprised of well-known artists and writers in the community, awarded the grant to Hayden's Ferry based on its "quality writing and production," the commission's report stated.

The report further stated, "At last a literary magazine with ambitions at ASU."

Hayden's Ferry, which was established in 1986 by a group of graduate students, began as an annual magazine. But with more than 2000 submissions of poetry, art and fiction from all over the country, the magazine was destined to grow, Keegan said. Currently, the magazine is produced twice a year, in the spring and fall.

John Slook, an employee with Changing Hands Bookstore where the magazine is sold, said Hayden's Ferry "sells consistently."

Submissions for Hayden's Ferry come from all over the nation, Keegan said.

"We call for submissions in national publications," Keegan said. "We get writers from all over the country, but we do accept local and student writing."

Fiction editor Diane Nelson said she reads hundreds of submissions for the magazine. The nine-person, mostly student staff consists of fiction editors, poetry editors, editorial assistants, an art and design editor and an editorial adviser.

"As fiction editor, I read a bunch of manuscripts," Nelson said. "I look for something exciting or disturbing or moving within the first page and a half."

In addition to amateur and famous writers, interviews with literary personalities such as John Updike or Joseph Heller are found in the publication. Nelson said the quality of work in the magazine is improving steadily.

"Hayden's Ferry is going to continue and increase in having a place among important literary journals in the United States," Nelson said.

Issues of Hayden's Ferry sell for $5 and are available at the MU, Changing Hands and bookstores all over the Valley.

board. "There is no case law."

Barr said the regents asked the court's opinion and "now they just don't like it." He said the regents' own witnesses "killed" their case.

"(Stover) ruled against the regents based on their own witnesses," he said.

William Bowen, vice president of Heidrick & Struggles, Inc. — the firm that headed the presidential search — testified that to print the entire list of names would be "innocuous."

In addition, John Corbally, former president of the University of Illinois system, testified that the individual candidates would not be harmed if the board released the full list of names.

"The court has found that none of the persons on the total list would suffer any harm from such disclosure," Stover stated in her decision. "And therefore, the court finds that the publication of the entire list will not reduce the number of qualified candidates which the Board of Regents could initially consider."

"The board did not present the name of one person who has been or would be harmed by being identified publicly as a candidate in the ASU presidential search."

Barr said if the regents lose in appellate court, he expects them to take their case to the state Legislature to have it try to change the public records law. He added that the alumni, faculty and students should be upset about having to pay the legal costs.

ASU law professor Paul Bender testified that he had been nominated for the ASU presidency by an unknown party but was surprised when the search firm sent him a letter June 2 stating that he was still being considered for the job.

Bender said he agreed with Stover's decision.

"I think that they (regents) are probably wrong, and they'll probably lose the appeal," he said, adding that if the board loses the appeal, it could take the case to the Arizona Supreme Court.

"The cost of that could be substantial," he said, adding that the regents could cut their legal costs if they used their own counsel instead of seeking outside help. The regents have retained a private law firm.

Schneider said the regents will continue to seek outside legal advice through the appeal process.

"We're still reviewing all our options," she said, refusing to elaborate.

Asked if the regents would be willing to take the case to the state Supreme Court, if necessary, Schneider said, "I can't answer that question at this time."

Devils among NCAA gridiron elite after rout

By JOEL HORN
State Press

Saturday's thrashing of Kansas State University not only provided the ASU football team with its fifth-straight season-opening victory, it produced superlative team and individual statistics as well.

ASU Head Football Coach Larry Marmie, speaking to the media Monday, said he was pleased with the Sun Devils' overall performance Saturday.

"We floundered much more in the opening ball game last year than we did this year," he said. "I knew more about what to expect, more about what's going to happen on the sidelines."

The Wildcats ventured into ASU territory only twice during the game, following an interception of a Paul Justin pass on the game's first play and late in the fourth quarter on a drive that ended with an interception by Sun Devil left cornerback Eddie Stokes.

Of KSU's 14 possessions, 11 were limited to four downs, three resulted in negative yardage and eight others resulted in four yards or less.

The Sun Devils are currently second in the nation in total defense (107 yards per game) behind No. 1 Auburn University (100 ypg), and No. 10 in the nation in passing defense (80 ypg).

ASU is also second in the nation in rushing defense (27 ypg), behind Auburn (25 ypg).

Quarterback Paul Justin is second in the Pac-10 and fourth nationally in passing efficiency (172.3) and sixth in the Pac-10 in total offense (189 ypg).

In addition, fullback Kelvin Fisher is third in the Pac-10 in rushing (85 ypg), split end Ron Fair is tied for fifth in receiving (5 receptions per game) and sixth in reception yards (101 ypg), and flanker Eric Guliford is second in the conference in punt returns (9 ypg).

Marmie said the execution by the offense was good, but the running game did not meet his satisfaction.

"I'd like to take the ball and just hammer somebody," he said. "There's a message in that."

Marmie expressed dissatisfaction with the Sun Devils' fourth down production.

"Two out of three isn't good enough," he said.

Split end Ron Fair, who led ASU with five catches for 101 yards, made a tremendous impression on the head coach.

"I think he has got big-play potential," Marmie said. "He has got speed and the kind of hands you'd like from a receiver."

Marmie said the Sun Devils performed well defensively, but missed several opportunities for quarterback sacks.

"Our tackling was pretty good," he said, "but we made obvious technique mistakes."

"I would have liked to have seen the defense create more turnovers."

The kicking game was good, Marmie said, and the punt coverage was outstanding.

DeHoff learns rough, far-out Hungarian style

DeHoff

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

Carolyn DeHoff learned a whole new style of basketball this summer — but not one she will apply to her own game.

The senior guard from the women's basketball team spent two weeks of her summer vacation in Budapest, Hungary, playing with a Pac-10 team composed of one player from each school.

The Pac-10 squad was chosen by individual team coaches, and was headed Oregon State's coach.

According to DeHoff, the Hungarian competitors play a fast, rough style of basketball, different from Americans.

Offensively, they run a less organized, outside-shooting game. DeHoff said she noticed a lot of passing, cutting and distant shooting, adding that many of the Hungarian long-shots were taken from beyond the NBA three-point line.

"They would dribble inside, pass the ball out, and shoot," she said. "And they were sinking them."

DeHoff also noticed that the Hungarian defense was physically rough. She said that the referees allowed more pushing for position.

"The physical part of it, they got away with more run-and-gun," DeHoff said. "They did not always give the ball to the referee."

Since the Budapest tournament only lasted two weeks, ASU Assistant Coach Bob Clark said he is not concerned that DeHoff may have lost her American style of play.

"We don't worry about her style changing," Clark said. "We don't worry about her burning out."

If nothing else, Clark said, DeHoff will be in better physical shape when the team's season begins in the fall.

"She's always been conscientious about being in condition and ready to play," he said.

Although DeHoff considers her physical experience gained from Budapest valuable, she said she could never replace the cultural experience.

"It was very memorable," she said. "I had a wonderful time."

Among the tourist sights DeHoff liked best were the Gothic-style buildings and the sculptures of famous people.

She said the most noticeable difference between Hungarians and Americans is in table manners.

"The customs are very different in Hungary," DeHoff said. "At dinner or a meal, they would sit and talk for two to three hours."

DeHoff also said that Hungarians won't drink any beverage out of a bottle, or laugh at the dinner table.

The trip out of the U.S. was not DeHoff's first. Prior to her freshman year, she took a trip to Hong Kong. Because of the food, however, she prefers Budapest.

"If I could, I would do it all over again," she said.

Pac-10 provides Anderson opportunity to consult adversaries

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

For Matt Anderson, this summer marked the first time he shared winning game strategies with familiar Pac-10 foes.

Anderson competed on a squad composed of a player from each Pac-10 basketball team for two weeks this summer in Budapest, Hungary.

The most unusual part of the trip, Anderson said, was definitely the composition of the squad.

"(I enjoyed) the opportunity to play with other opponents in the Pac-10," Anderson said. "It was fun to hear their side of the coin, their stories."

The American team was coached by UCLA Head Coach Jim Harrick, and included UofA guard Harvey Mason, UCLA center Kevin Walker, and Oregon forward Richard Lucas, to name a few.

One week prior to the tournament, the team met with Harrick at UCLA, where they practiced twice a day for two to three hours. Anderson said that Harrick used an easy to learn motion offense.

Among the things that Anderson noticed about the Hungarian style of play was the outer-perimeter shooting and the lack of an organized offense.

Although he prefers the American style, he gives credit to the Hungarian offense.

"It is hard to stop if you've got good shooters," he said.

After a few minutes into the game, however, Anderson realized the flaw to this system.

"Without an inside game, you are forced to shoot more and more three-pointers which makes your percentage go down," he said.

Anderson

As a result, the United States team won all of the games.

Another difference in Hungarian basketball that Anderson noticed was in the officiating. He said the referees were more lenient on defense than on offense.

He also said that goaltending and traveling charges are handled differently than in America. For instance, when a traveling charge is called action continues and is not interrupted by the referees.

The trip overseas was not a first for Anderson who lived in Taiwan for two years. Due to his foreign familiarity, he said he anticipated the change in culture in Hungary.

"I was surprised," Anderson said. "I thought it would be more of a culture shock than it really was."

One thing that Anderson did notice as culturally different, though, was the food in Budapest. Luckily, he said, a local McDonald's was at the rescue.

Anderson said that the overall experience gained from an opportunity such as the one in Budapest is matchless. If he could do it over again, he said he would not hesitate.

"We had a good time," he said. "I liked the chance to work with other people."

Last-second field goal boosts Giants past Redskins

WASHINGTON (AP) — Raul Allegre's 52-yard field goal as time ran out gave the New York Giants a 27-24 victory over the Washington Redskins on Monday night in a shootout between quarterbacks Phil Simms and Mark Rypien.

Allegre's kick was his second field goal in the final 2:40 after Washington had erased a 21-10 fourth-quarter deficit with two touchdowns within 54 seconds.

It was the sixth win in the last seven non-strike games with Washington for the Giants, who also beat the Redskins, 27-20, in last year's Monday-night opener.

The statistics belonged to Rypien, who completed 22 of 32 passes for 349 yards. Ricky Sanders caught six for 143 yards and Gary Clark six for 101.

But Simms was on the money when it counted on the two drives that set up Allegre's field goals.

He completed 11 of 19 for 254 yards, including touchdown passes of 30 yards to Odessa Turner and 62 yards to Dave Meggett plus a 44-yard completion to Turner that set up the game-tying field goal with 2:17 left.

The game started slowly, then turned into a shootout between Simms and Rypien.

Simms' 30-yarder to Turner — who had three catches for 99 yards — in the first quarter and 62-yarder to Meggett in the second gave New York a 14-0 lead.

Rypien, meanwhile, threw TD passes of 48 yards to Sanders and six yards to Art Monk. The pass to Monk came less than a minute before Monte Coleman picked off a Simms pass and returned it 24 yards for a touchdown.

Ottis Anderson, filling in for the injured Joe Morris, carried 23 times for 93 yards for the Giants. Washington's Gerald Riggs carried 24 times for 111 yards.

Washington had to settle for just three points from two trips inside the New York 10 and that cost the Redskins the game.

Washington blew one early chance when Lawrence Taylor knocked the ball loose from Riggs at the Giants' 21 and Mark Collins recovered for New York and returned it to the 28.

From there, the Giants went 72 yards for the game's first touchdown, the 30-yarder to Turner, who took the ball away from Darrell Green at the goal line and carried it into the end zone with 47 seconds left in the first quarter.

The Giants scored again on their next possession, going 91 yards, 62 on the Simms-Meggett connection. It was a simple play, with the 5-foot-7, 180-pound rookie from Towson State catching the ball six yards from the line of scrimmage. He broke tackles by Alvin Walton and Todd Bowles, then raced up the middle for his first NFL score.

Washington threatened twice more in the half but came away with only three points.

First Chip Lohmiller missed a 49-yard field goal, then the Redskins had to settle for a 24-yarder with 1:28 left in the half after moving to a first down on the Giants' 6. Taylor broke up one pass by hitting Rypien's arm and Carl Banks knocked the ball away from Monk on a third-down play.

Washington lost another chance early in the third quarter after Meggett fumbled a punt return and punter Ralf Mojsiejenko recovered at the New York 35. But five plays later, Riggs fumbled at the 8 and Greg Jackson recovered for the Giants.

Washington finally broke through the next time, scoring on the 48-yard pass from Rypien to Sanders at the end of a drive that started at their own 5.

Rypien got the Redskins out of the hole with a 28-yard pass to Clark on third-and-8 from his own 7. Three plays later, Sanders split Collins and Terry Kinard to cut it to 14-10 with 1:56 left in the third quarter.

But the Giants came right back with Simms hitting Zeke Mowatt for 28 yards and Mark Bavaro for 20 before Anderson burst 14 yards up the middle to make it 21-10 with 1:34 gone in the fourth quarter.

The see-saw continued as the Redskins drove 66 yards in eight plays with Rypien hitting Monk to cut it to 21-17 with 8:15 left.

Then came Coleman's interception and the Giants' tying drive.

Football

But Marmie said he is very concerned about the Sun Devils' offensive line.

Three of ASU's top four guards were lost to injuries against KSU. Marmie said strong guard Fedel Underwood (sprained back) is "very questionable" for Saturday and strong guard Bill Doverspike (undetermined knee injury) is definitely out.

improvement in the ball game."

Quick guard Jeff White (strained shoulder) is "not as questionable" and may return to practice later this week.

Marmie said if White is unable to practice, center/guard Paul DeBozo and quick guard Derek Zazueta will move into the starting lineup.

Center Eddie Grant may be moved to guard, although Marmie said that is not likely. Grant received the coaches' highest grade on the offensive line Saturday.

ASU's next opponent will be San Jose State University Saturday at Sun Devil Stadium.

"They're one of those programs that never get the recognition for what they really are," Marmie said of the Spartans. "I don't think there's any question we'll have to go up a notch."

First day of classes nervous time for ASU baseball coaches, teams

By TOMI McELROY
State Press

Frustration ended for the ASU baseball coaches when the Sun Devil recruits attended their first day of classes.

"There are two days in a college baseball recruiter's life that are the toughest," said Head Coach Jim Brock. "The first being letter of intent day because the recruit is ready to make a decision and the second being the first day of classes."

Even after signing a letter of intent, college recruits can sign with professional teams without difficulty until they attend their first class.

"The better the prospect the longer the wait in the summer," Brock said. "Because the professional baseball team that's interested in signing him is generally going to try and continue to make the same offer look better or make a better offer."

Freshman Todd Steverson was drafted in the sixth round by the St. Louis Cardinals but decided to attend ASU.

"It was basically a family decision," Steverson said. "My parents and I felt I should go to college first and enjoy myself and progress there and then go on."

Brock said that Steverson would have been the third pick in the nation and received a $300,000 bonus. But the Cardinals drafted him in a later round because they knew Steverson and knew his family wanted him to go to college.

Brock said when one person — like Steverson's dad — takes a stand, it affects the decision of the prospect.

"People are starting to think it through and decide what it is they want to do," Brock said. "It is certainly a gamble."

Steverson will be preparing his mental skills to join what Brock said has been referred to as the million-dollar outfield with Steverson and sophomores Tommy Adams and Mike Kelly.

"I want to maintain my mental capacity," Steverson said. "Basically staying prepared for every game and every practice."

Adams and Kelly return after gaining summer league experience.

Kelly played in Fairbanks, Alaska, and continued to succeed at the plate as he did during the ASU season.

Fairbanks, where many major leaguers have played over the years, had its third or fourth best year in history with Kelly on the squad, Brock said.

Kelly hit .397 with 10 home runs during the nine-week season.

"It was a lot more low key," Kelly said. "There wasn't the pressure that there is playing in the Pac."

Kelly was named the National Freshman Player of the Year at the end of last season, but said it does not put a lot of pressure on him.

"I try and stay relaxed and not think about things like that," Kelly said. "People probably think there's a lot of pressure on me, but the only pressure I feel I have is the pressure I put on myself."

After a successful first year as a rising Sun Devil star, Kelly's goals are not out of this world for next season.

"I just want to stay healthy and play consistently," Kelly said. "Hopefully, if I do that I'll be successful again."

Adams played half of the summer in Santa Clara, Calif., until he injured his right knee.

Brock said Adams was playing well, and the injury should not affect him in the upcoming season.

The Sun Devils' only returning infielder is shortstop junior Anthony Manahan.

Manahan led the Pac-10 in hitting last season with a .387 batting average and has two years experience under his belt as an infielder.

Sophomore Jim Austin saw action in the outfield last season and will be trying new skills at third base.

"He's the one we're going to start out there," Brock said. "We'll have to wait and see what happens."

The first base position opens playing time for newcomers John Halland and Bill Faysack who are from Mesa Community College, sophomore Dave Robson who has experience behind the plate or Mike Scialo who played with the junior varsity team last year.

Brock

Scialo played in a summer league team coached by ASU recruiting coordinator Kendal Carter. Brock said it was reported that Scialo played very well.

Scialo may also be tried at the second and third base positions.

The second base position was to be filled by junior recruit Fernando Vena of Sacramento City College, Calif., but he might have problems with academic requirements. Vena has been declared ineligible for the fall, but Brock said it is possible his status will be cleared by spring.

In order for Vena to have been eligible for the fall season, he would have had to complete six hours at a community college in California during the summer. Instead, he opted to play on the USA team.

Vena has enrolled in classes to enable him to complete the needed credit hours.

The catching position has the most depth for the Sun Devils.

Sophomore Eric Helfand suffered a mid-season wrist injury causing him to miss six weeks of conference play but returned and finished the season.

While Helfand was injured, Robson and junior Jim Henderson filled in.

Junior Tucker Hammargren also has some catching experience, but Brock said they are thinking of using him more as a designated hitter or a pitcher.

The pitching staff returns two starting sophomores Sean Rees and Kip Yaughn who have been bothered with elbow injuries.

Rees pitched half the summer in Alaska, and Yaughn took the summer off and helped at Brock's summer baseball camp.

Brock said Yaughn's elbow began to bother him after regionals, but both Yaughn and Rees should be ready for the 1990 season.

Newcomers for the pitching staff include freshman Tony Pena of Mater Dei High School, Calif., Jung Hong Pyon of Maryvale High School, juniors Rusty Silcox of McClennan Community College, Texas, and John Tatterson of Glendale Community College.

"They are talented but young and inexperienced," Brock said. "Last year we had the journeymen. They were a much more predictable pitcher type. (Pitching coach) Dub (Kilgo) had his work cut out for him even more."

"We are in the rebuilding stage as far as the pitching goes. Experience is the main area the Sun Devils are lacking this year."

"This is the first time in ASU history that we only have two players (Manahan and Hammargren) returning with more than one year experience," Brock said. "We're in a youthful situation."

Brock said he thinks the team has not adjusted to the situation but two major adjustments have taken place: the freshmen dealing with entering college and the coaches dealing with a lot of freshmen.

Making a decision on which college to choose or to continue their baseball careers with the professionals are the same challenges the sophomores faced last year and what the recruits just went through.

"I don't think we will have the same problems as last year," Brock said. "It's much easier for a player who has just been through it, like Kelly, to talk a player like Steverson."
