Students remember victims of Tiananmen

By JOIE ANN LaPOLLA
State Press

A nine-foot "Goddess of Democracy" and signs stating "Fight for Freedom" highlighted a somber ceremony Tuesday night when the thousands of Chinese students massacred in Tiananmen Square were remembered — 100 days later.

"We offer our condolences to those who died in the massacre, and their deaths should not be in vain," said Xin-Jie Zhu, president of the ASU Student and Scholar Friendship Association, to a crowd of about 200 people in front of the Student Services Building.

Speakers at the rally included a representative from the office of Democratic Sen. Dennis DeConcini; ASU Chinese students; an immigration attorney; Associated Students of ASU President Paul Larson; and a Chinese student from California, who was arrested and imprisoned while living in Beijing.

The student, Ding Jian, was jailed in both Shanghai and Beijing for shipping money back to China during the pro-democracy movement. At the rally, he detailed the importance of the pro-democracy movement in China that led to a governmentally ordered massacre June 4.

"I was standing on the street near Tiananmen Square when (we heard) the noise of convoys coming near us," said Jian, who stood in front of a white, yellow and blue funeral wreath that read, "100 Day Memory of the Nation's Tragedy" in Chinese characters.

"Everyone was shocked it was right in the center of China," he said. "Then we heard shots, and we were so naive we thought they weren't real bullets."

Jian said he saw bloody shirts and dead bodies of the Chinese civilians and students.

ASU's hour-long rally was sponsored by various University student groups drawing a close to Chinese Awareness Week. A similar rally, sponsored by the China Support Network, was held earlier in the day, but only about 15 people attended.

"Today is a beginning," said John Kusumi, one of the founders of the network and organizer of the afternoon rally. "We didn't have a huge crowd, but I'm happy, and it was a good program."

In addition to the dissident's speech and presentations from other Chinese students and supporters, Maureen McGovern, special assistant to DeConcini, read a letter from the senator expressing his concern for the Chinese students both in the United States and China.

Bartosh pulls out of DPS search

Some officers say ASU fails to back department

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Acting ASU Department of Public Safety Director Doug Bartosh removed his name Tuesday from a list of six finalists for the permanent DPS job, citing a desire to return to regular police work.

But some ASU police officers, who say they are reluctant to speak out for fear of job repercussions, said they feel Bartosh's withdrawal may be tied to lack of support given the department by the University.

Bartosh, who also serves as acting University police chief, will remain at the interim positions until the new DPS director is selected in October. He said he then hopes to return to his former job as associate director/deputy police chief, a position that oversees most campus police functions.

He denied that his decision to withdraw was prompted by tensions many DPS employees say exist between the police department and officials in ASU Business Affairs, or by charges that the police mishandled a racially motivated incident on campus last spring.

"It's definitely just an interest in working in the police area for awhile," Bartosh said. "It's a matter of preference."

He said he wants to get back to wearing a uniform and working with officers in the field.

Bartosh, 35, has been with DPS a little more than four years and earns $52,000 as acting director. He submitted his withdrawal Tuesday to Associate Vice President for Business Affairs Lee Overmeyer, who will make the University's recommendation for a new director to the Arizona Board of Regents.

Overmeyer said, "I think Doug Bartosh has done a good job for the University and I am sorry to see him withdraw."

The new DPS director will oversee the campus police, parking and transit and occupational health and safety departments, in addition to a $6 million budget.

Some officers maintain that whoever replaces Bartosh will have to confront major problems, like the poor condition of the DPS headquarters — a converted motel infested with termites — low morale, outdated equipment and a shortage of on-duty officers.

They claim the Business Affairs office has not been responsive to their needs because the police department does not generate the revenue that other campus departments do. It lacks the high visibility that other areas of the University enjoy, they say.

But Overmeyer said she does not believe there are any problems between DPS and her office.

"I think there is a good working relationship and that relationship has improved over time," Overmeyer said.

Officers disagree. "We have no money, no equipment, no nothing," one patrolman said. "We are living in a bug-infested hotel."

The officer said members of the force are wondering "why everyone has a new building and we're in a run-down shack. 'We're supposed to be ASU's finest.'"

One member of the force said the termite problem in the DPS complex, located in the old Campus Inn Motel, which faces Apache Boulevard just east of McAllister, has gotten so bad that the insects have been seen falling into employees coffee cups.

"They were just swimming around in there," one employee said.

In addition, Bartosh said the department is understaffed by eight to 10 officers. The ASU department is at full strength at about 40 officers.

"We've had to ask our officers to go above and beyond," Bartosh said, adding that some officers have had to work extra shifts to take up the slack. But the department has applicants for the positions who are under consideration, he said.

Sgt. Garry Dirks, a 20-year veteran of the force, said the ratio of officers to members of the ASU community on campus is low.

"I'd like to see us get more staffing," Dirks said.

Several officers said they blame the Business Affairs office for not providing adequate patrol cars, radios or working facilities.

Until recently, the campus police were forced to borrow patrol cars from Tempe police and the state Department of Public Safety. ASU's DPS was working with several older vehicles that continually broke down.

One officer was injured in a high-speed chase last year after the brakes in his older-model car failed.

Officers say police radios used by the department are also Acting DPS Director Doug Bartosh withdrew his name from consideration Tuesday for the top ASU law-enforcement position. ASU officers have criticized the University for failing to adequately support the campus police department.

Bush to schoolkids: Saying no to drugs 'won't make you a nerd'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, in a televised appeal to millions of schoolchildren, said Tuesday that refusing drugs "won't make you a nerd" and urged youngsters to help others stay away from narcotics.

"I'm asking you to not look the other way," Bush said in an address beamed live from the White House to thousands of schools across the country.

Saying everyone knows someone who has a problem, Bush added, "I'm asking you to find someone who needs you. And offer to help. I'll say it again: If you're not in trouble, help someone who is."

Bush spoke for 15 minutes to schoolchildren in an address carried live by the four major television networks as well as educational cable systems.

Namibian guerrilla leader shot to death at his home

WINDHOEK, Namibia (AP) — Anton Lubowski, the only white to hold a leadership post in the South-West Africa People's Organization guerrilla movement, was assassinated Tuesday outside his home in suburban Windhoek, police said.

Lt. Kierie du Rand, a police spokesman, said Lubowski was shot in the head at about 8:50 p.m. by an assailant who drove away in a red sedan. Du Rand said an all-out manhunt had been launched.

Dinkins defeats incumbent Koch in mayoral primary in New York

NEW YORK (AP) — Manhattan Borough President David Dinkins toppled three-term Mayor Edward I. Koch in a Democratic primary Tuesday, taking the first step toward becoming the first black mayor of America's largest city.

In the Republican race, former federal prosecutor Rudolph Giuliani overwhelmed cosmetics heir Ronald Lauder.

With 85 percent of 5,244 precincts reporting, Dinkins had 411,853 votes or 47 percent to 394,350 or 45 percent for Koch, who lost his bid for an unprecedented fourth term.

The other two Democratic candidates, former transit chief Richard Ravitch and Comptroller Harrison Goldin, trailed far behind.

Royal court includes 3 ASU students

Three ASU students have earned spots on the 1989 Fiesta Bowl Queen royal court, and one of them could be selected to wear the tiara Nov. 2.

"I already feel like I won," said queen-candidate Kelly Torok, a 20-year-old junior psychology major. "Being chosen queen would be the icing on the cake."

Torok, along with Michelle Henry, a senior broadcast major, and Jolyn Warford, a senior journalism major, are among the seven Fiesta Bowl queen finalists. The winner will appear at more than 60 events year-round.

The Fiesta Bowl Queen will be crowned at the annual Queen's Gala at the Westcourt in the Buttes resort in Tempe.

"It's just an incredible experience," said Henry, who added that she appeared in the Fiesta Bowl parade when she was 7 years old because she won a pinata contest.

"Just based on the things we've done already — the people you meet and the things you do — you can't get (the experience) anywhere else," Henry said.

The seven finalists, including four students from UofA, began in a field of 150 contestants. The field was narrowed to 30 before the seven finalists were selected.

"I screamed so loud, I think all of ASU heard me," said Warford, a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority.

Torok, also a Kappa Kappa Gamma member who said her grandfather worked for the Fiesta Bowl for many years, was chosen Arizona's Junior Miss in 1987.

The women all said they have become friends and despite the underlying competition to become queen, expressed support for the other finalists.

"I think we'll all be very supportive," Warford said. "We've all established lifelong friendships."

The other finalists are Nancy Berg, 21, Michele Evans, 20, Kerwin Krofchik, 20, and Heather Moore, 19.

The queen is chosen based on poise, appearance, personality and Fiesta Bowl awareness. The queen and her court will reign over the 19th annual football classic in Sun Devil Stadium on Jan. 1.

Bowl's new office located in Tempe

By LAURA SCHMIDT
State Press

Officials for the Sunkist Fiesta Bowl and the city of Tempe will begin construction Thursday on the organization's first permanent headquarters in its 19-year history.

The site is located at 20 S. Ash Ave., in downtown Tempe.

The two-story, 15,000 square-foot building will house the Fiesta Bowl's 22-member staff, as well as a museum for Arizona sports memorabilia and the Phoenix Press Box Association's Hall of Fame.

The completion of the building is scheduled for June 1990, and the building costs will be funded by the Fiesta Bowl.

Tempe Mayor Harry Mitchell said he is not sure how much the new building will cost.

"We are providing the land and they (Fiesta Bowl) are building the building," he said.

Tempe City Councilman and Vice Mayor Don Cassano said that in addition to the Fiesta Bowl office space, five historical Tempe homes have been dismantled and will be moved to that site for other offices.

Because the Fiesta Bowl presents 60 events throughout the year, including its annual Football Classic, it is ideal for the headquarters to move to Tempe, Cassano said.

"We were very excited they chose to move to Tempe," he said.

Tom George, the assistant executive director for the Fiesta Bowl, agreed that Tempe is an ideal spot for the Bowl headquarters.

To keep costs down, the Fiesta Bowl — a non-profit organization — has sought donated office space and relocated its offices several times in the past year. The Bowl headquarters are currently at a rented building at the Phoenician Resort.

Cassano said although the Fiesta Bowl will help the Valley's economy, the museum will benefit Tempe's future because of the extra money spent by visitors in the area.

Fiesta Bowl events attracted an estimated 40,000 visitors to Arizona last year and pumped an additional $45 million into the state's economy.

Steve Allen's brightness shines far past Hollywood

Marty Sauerzopf
Managing Editor

LOS ANGELES — ASU alumnus Steve Allen lives in Hollywood, a town that, for all the glitz and glamour, is a real ghetto.

You can't park your car without fear of having it towed and/or stolen. You can't walk alone after dark without fear of being raped and/or pillaged. You can't leave your house without being begged for money and/or drugs.

The streets are crummy, the neighborhoods are destitute and the prices are outrageous.

Yet hidden between the tracts of poverty and garbage are small oases — little bits of extravagance, like diamonds in the rough, providing a playground for the stars and starlets who have escaped the impoverished streets but have just forgotten to move to a new neighborhood.

All of Tinseltown is like little bits of wealth strewn amongst the masses. The famed, tradition-rich Hollywood Bowl is just a short walk down Highland Avenue away from the dangerously run-down and shady Hollywood Bowl Motel.

The "World Famous Hollywood Paladium" near the corner of Sunset and Vine is just a stone's throw away from a neighborhood in such disarray that most of the homes have no doors.

The Los Angeles Music Center is in downtown L.A., which is possibly the most dangerous, gang-infested, drug-polluted area the country has ever had the misfortune of including within its borders. This is the humble home of some of America's most loved and most sought-after personalities.

Those who have spent all of their days working to live the good life live in a town that is probably the most likely to take that life away.

This is the home of Sylvester Stallone, Dennis Quaid, Eddie Murphy, Kim Basinger and Michael Keaton.

Yet none of these people, for all their fame, fortune and idolization by millions of fans, can command the instantaneous respect that Steve Allen commands.

Allen is without a doubt one of the most intelligent men to grace the face of a planet that seems to be forever sinking further into a mire of hatred, separation and sickness.

Steve Allen's resume reads like the wish list of any person who has ever strived to do anything meaningful with his life. He is a television personality, talk-show host, author, lecturer, philosopher, teacher, political satirist, comedian, songwriter, singer — and if that weren't enough — husband to Jayne Meadows.

He has a wit as sharp as a tack and can steal a show just by introducing himself. He has the knowledge of 100 men, and the inner-workings of his mind should be a science project for all of the Ivy League medical schools.

My first meeting with Allen was at a tribute to KCET-TV, Los Angeles' public television affiliate — one of the first in the country — on the occasion of the station's 25th anniversary.

Sponsored by the Museum of Broadcasting, the show was preceded by a special film collage of the great moments of TV history, with everything from "The Honeymooners" to "Star Trek" to "The Flintstones."

But hidden amidst the collage were short clips of "Tonight Show" hosts Johnny Carson and Jack Paar. Allen, the original creator of the "Tonight Show" and the pioneer of the talk-show format, was omitted from the film.

Meadows, when she took the stage, was incensed and insulted at the exclusion of her husband, and she poured an angered and tearful admonishment on the museum for its oversight.

For his part, Allen approached the dias of the Director's Guild of America Theater and simply said, "Hell hath no fury like a woman whose husband has been scorned."

"I'm sure it was just an oversight and not an intentional slight. After all, there had to be room for Fred Flintstone."

Three sentences. It took three sentences to not only generate laughter from an obviously tense audience, but to reduce the Museum of Broadcast from a major irritation to a mere fly that only temporarily disturbed his existence.

Nothing more, nothing less. It most likely required no more thought from him than most of us require to breathe.

Less than a month later, Allen spoke at a luncheon sponsored by Round Table West, a group that invites authors to give insights into the development of their works.

Allen, who was speaking on his latest (approximately his 30th) novel, "Murder on the Glitter Box," sat quietly across the table from me, breaking his concentration only to greet people who wanted to shake his hand or get an autograph.

He sat quietly during the first author's speech. He rarely looked up, but rather stared straight down at the table in front of him. He began to tear a piece of paper into small rectangles, like test-taker's cheat-sheets, and scribble notes on them.

Occasionally, he reached into his pocket and produced a small tape recorder, into which he whispered some unknown thoughts or ideas to use at a later date.

When he finally took the podium, he used no script. He had no text.

He reached into his pocket and pulled out his little notes, and delivered his entire speech based on those alone. His entire monologue was conceived on that table in front of him in a matter of five minutes, waiting for his turn.

He had every major point of the previous speaker's talk committed to memory. He discussed his book. He discussed the "Tonight Show." He discussed talk shows and radio.

And in the middle of his 30-minute speech, throughout which the audience did not stop laughing, he discussed the American people.

He said his next novel would be titled, "Dumbth."

"It's a serious book about 81 things to make Americans smarter. The fact that the American people are getting demonstrably dumber day by day is clear."

And even this brought laughter. His distaste for the American educational system was plain, and his superiority to probably all of us is even plainer.

No one likes to be called dumb. But here is a man who can do it and evoke guffaws.

Steve Allen is a human being. He graduated from ASU. He is no different from you or me than any other human being. He values his education above all else. He is the diamond in the Hollywood rough and a diamond in the rough of life.

If we're not careful, soon we'll be the flies irritating him.

Letters

'Three cheers for Vavreck'

Editor:

Three cheers for Vavreck's article, "Minority lounge, women's center not solutions." Perhaps the administration thought that by building these facilities, they would forever elude the accusation of being insensitive to minorities' needs.

However, the mere fact that the administration could not foresee how building separate facilities would only further alienate these groups reaffirms their insensitivity to minorities and women. As a minority student I am not all flattered by the suggestion that I will be politically, socially, and mentally soothed simply by having a place to "hang out" or congregate with "my kind."

Furthermore, the minority lounge in particular follows the "redneck" theory that "races don't mix." Obviously the key to establishing racial and sexual equality at ASU does not lie in simply building separate buildings for minority groups to congregate. Rather than encouraging minorities and women to have a separate voice on campus, the administration should focus on enabling minority groups to have a stronger, more integrated voice within the political and social realm of ASU's academic system.

Drugs

How will America respond to decriminalization?

Joseph Sobran
Universal Press Syndicate

NEW YORK — A man in whose company I watched the president's speech on drugs made a sharp observation on the oratorical gap between Ronald Reagan and George Bush: "Reagan gave you a theme. Bush gives you a list."

No, it wasn't a very inspiring speech, for which, considering its content, I'm grateful. Bush is always decent and reasonable, and his low-intensity patrician demeanor, with a slight dash of dottiness, is highly suitable to the ruler of a republic. Who needs charisma anyway? It only leads to trouble.

But of course we're supposed to want charismatic leaders rather than fuddy-duddy rulers, even mild-mannered President Bush feels he has to lead us on a crusade against drugs. Drugs are, the only theme on which politicians dare to suggest war, and spending increases, and sometimes even tax hikes, because the public is angry about drugs.

The catch is that Bush has pledged not to raise taxes under any circumstances, so his crusade has to operate within tight budgetary constraints, whereas the whole idea of a crusade is that the goal is so holy you don't count pennies — you just march straight to Jerusalem. Bush wants to keep the cost of this crusade down to $7.9 billion.

"Ridiculous!" cry the democrats. "The president is not serious about ridding our great nation of this terrible scourge! There are no easy answers! We must raise taxes! No pain, no gain, you know!"

And so the war on drugs is being converted into the kind of war the Democrats never lose, namely, a bidding war. Bush has given them their opening. He has stressed the urgency of the problem while offering only a measly solution. Trust the

'Put otherwise, we're fighting a war against an enemy that is sustained only by our own laws against its stock-in-trade. The president seems to think we can achieve victory by wiping out a certain set of cocaine tycoons.'

Democrats to proffer a substitute program matching the implications of the president's martial rhetoric. And the means — gargantuan spending programs — will become an end in itself, which is the way things work in Washington. If the drug problem doesn't go away (and it won't), we'll just keep redoubling the anti-drug bureaucracy, as we receive annual reports with the dual message that we are making "steady progress" (your money isn't being wasted, folks) but that the problem is "far from being solved" (we'll be needing a little more money, folks).

Almost none of our politicians want, or dare, to say what is said plainly by The Economist, the respected British weekly, in its Sept. 2 issue: "Drugs are dangerous. So is the illegality that surrounds them. In legitimate commerce, their scale controlled, taxed and supervised, their dangers proclaimed on every packet, drugs would poison fewer customers, kill fewer dealers, bribe fewer policemen, raise more public revenue."

The magazine concludes: "Legalizing the drugs trade (sic) would be risky. Prohibition is worse than risky. It is a proven failure, a danger in its own right. The Economist advocates its replacement with more effective restrictions on the spread of drugs. In summary, we want to legalize, control and strongly discourage the use of them all."

Put otherwise, we're fighting a war against an enemy that is sustained only by our own laws against its stock-in-trade. The president seems to think we can achieve victory by wiping out a given set of cocaine tycoons. He doesn't grasp that a resilient market would quickly replace them with other suppliers.

There is a lurking fear that decriminalizing drugs would bring on an anarchy of drug abuse. But the great majority would avoid drug abuse for the same reason the great majority doesn't show up for work drunk every morning: the combination of self-respect, self-discipline, social pressure, economic need, prudence and concern for one's health that keeps most of us behaving most of the time. We don't need the police to enforce these informal sanctions. If they depended on police action, they wouldn't work. And even now, the informal deterrents do more than the law to discourage illegal drug abuse.

Legalizing cocaine and heroin, even with no regulations at all, would do nothing like the harm already done by alcohol and tobacco. This is neither an argument for indifference to cocaine nor a reason to ban booze and cigarettes, but a consideration to help keep a sense of proportion. The real dangers of whiskey are much less than the dangers of banning whiskey. If we'd never had the experience of Prohibition, though, the war on drugs would probably include attempt to stamp out liquor.

Some conservatives privately agree that the war on drugs is futile, but argue that America isn't "culturally ready" for decriminalization. They have a point. But wait a year or two. If a magazine as moderate as The Economist has converted, many people of common sense will be following soon.

More to difficult labor than simply muscles

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

A guy from a radio station called and said he was doing a Labor Day feature. He wanted to know the worst job I ever had.

I was busy, so I quickly told him that the worst job I ever had was answering questions from radio stations.

But after we hung up, I started to think about the question. What was the toughest thing I ever did to earn a buck?

When I was a kid, I set pins in bowling alleys, which was hard, tedious labor. But it was good exercise, gave me walking-around money, I met some interesting old winos, and could bowl free, so it wasn't all bad.

Later, I worked for a landscaper, digging holes and planting trees. And I was a part-time mover. I preferred planting trees to wrestling a sofa down three flights of stairs. But at the end of the day, both jobs left me with honest sweat.

The dirtiest job was on the night shift in a small factory, operating a machine that ground rough edges off little pieces of metal.

The machine squirted grease and tiny bits and pieces of metal stuck in my hands. At the time, my day job was a rookie reporter. The city editor said my stories were the only ones covered with thumbprints.

Being a bartender was fun, except when wives phoned to see if their husbands were still there. So was working a lathe in a shop that made custom-made wood lamps. I made the base for a lamp that was shipped to Harry Truman's home. When I met Truman, I mentioned it. He didn't seem to remember the lamp, the ingrate.

I spent one summer as the day manager of a pool hall. It left me with a prison pallor, but it was educational. I learned, at the cost of one week's pay, not to play eight ball for money with an old guy who had one eye, a bent stick, and hands that shook — except when he made his stroke.

So actually, I haven't had many jobs that weren't satisfying in one way or another.

Except one, which I hated. And if I die and go to hell, I'm certain that my punishment will be doing that job for eternity.

For a couple of years, while a night shift reporter, I held a day job because reporter's pay wasn't enough to support a young family.

The day job was selling. Specifically, I was a tombstone salesman. I drove to the homes of the bereaved, toting a suitcase filled with samples of granite and pictures of our line of stones.

The company owner said I was a terrible salesman. Not because I didn't sell the tombstones. I moved more of them than any of his other salesman. But I was on straight commission, and I was so eager to get away from the widows or widowers that I immediately dropped the price to the absolute minimum just to get it over with fast.

'As any salesman with his back to the wall will tell you: "You can't wear work gloves on your stomach."'

It wasn't the product that bothered me. I could have been selling Rolls Royces, stocks and bonds or aluminum siding, and I would have still hated it.

The problem was selling. For me, persuading someone that they had to have a product — my product — was the most agonizing job I've ever had. If it hadn't been for the money, I would preferred setting bowling pins or wrestling a sofa.

Don't misunderstand. I'm not demeaning sales work. Just the opposite. I think selling on commission is the hardest, most nerve-racking way to earn a living there is. To deal with the uncertainty — the deflating "sorry, but no thanks" — takes the hide of a rhino and the nerves of a pilot.

It amazes me that every morning hundreds of thousands of men and women get up and hit the streets or the phones to face that uncertainty. But it doesn't amaze me that at the end of the day, many of them head for the nearest place that pours something with an olive in it.

That's probably why the play "Death of a Salesman" has become an American classic. And why plays and movies such as "Glengarry Glen Ross" and "Tin Man" are so successful. The audience is filled with people who say, "that's me," while their stomachs churn.

So on the next Labor Day weekend, we might keep in mind that lifting something heavy or getting dirty hands isn't the only tough form of labor.

Given a choice between calluses or an ulcer, I'll take the calluses. As any salesman with his back to the wall will tell you: "You can't wear work gloves on your stomach."

Climate is hot problem for athletes

By MICHELLE ALLMAN
State Press

ASU students trying to stay fit could encounter a risk greater than being out of shape: They might be endangering their lives.

"Exercise may cause increased internal body heat," said Chuck McDuffie, a health educator with the ASU Student Health Center. "And when you combine that with high temperatures, you're placing an enormous demand on the body's ability to cool itself."

The American Red Cross reports that the most common dangers of exercising under the Arizona sun are heat stroke, heat exhaustion and heat cramps.

Heat stroke is life-threatening and requires immediate medical attention, according to the Red Cross. The victim's temperature-control system, which produces sweat to cool the body, stops working. Body temperature can rise so high that brain damage and even death can result.

McDuffie said cases of heat stroke are rarely seen at the health center.

"Luckily, people seem to know when they are overdoing it to that extreme," McDuffie said. "Before they reach that point, they usually are smart enough to take it easy."

Symptoms of heat stroke include hot, red skin; unusually small pupils; and a high body temperature — sometimes as high as 105 degrees, according to the Red Cross.

A more common problem associated with high temperatures is heat exhaustion. Because it is a milder disorder, it often goes unreported, McDuffie said.

"A lot of people know they are overheated, so they will stop their workout and cool down," he said, adding that by cooling down, people are unknowingly treating themselves for heat exhaustion.

The symptoms of heat exhaustion are cool, pale and moist skin; heavy sweating; dilated pupils; headache; nausea; dizziness; and vomiting.

McDuffie said that although many people confuse heat exhaustion with heat stroke, they are different problems.

Unlike heat stroke victims, people suffering from heat exhaustion rarely need medical treatment, McDuffie said. Drinking cold water slowly and staying in a cool place should bring improvement within 30 minutes, he said.

The Red Cross defines heat cramps as muscular pains and spasms due to heavy exertion. They usually involve the abdominal muscles or legs. Doctors believe that the loss of water and salt from heavy sweating causes the cramps.

Most likely to fall victim to these three heat-related problems are athletes who work out on a regular basis. Despite popular myth, one cannot fully "get used to the heat."

Scott Troyanos/State Press

Lorenzo Davis runs the track at Sun Devil Stadium. Davis runs two miles during his afternoon workout before doing 100 yard wind sprints.

But the health center advises acclimatization for new Arizona residents who plan to exercise regularly.

Acclimatization refers to the physiological adjustments made by the body to better tolerate high temperatures. It usually takes seven to 10 days of exposure to a hotter climate to become acclimatized.

ASU coaches and athletes have adjusted their workouts to avoid problems with the heat. Some teams try to work out early in the morning or in the evening to avoid the hottest hours of the day, and all keep enough water on hand.

"We don't have much trouble with the heat," said Ken Lehman, assistant track coach in charge of distance runners. "We avoid the heat by training at 6:30 in the morning, and of course we provide plenty of water."

Lehman said he has only had one athlete who had a serious problem with the heat at a meet. Most track and field meet

EARN WHILE YOU LEARN

WHAT IS COOPERATIVE EDUCATION?

Cooperative Education is an academic program that seeks to relate classroom learning to its application in the workplace. At ASU, in the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences, the Co-op student alternates semesters of school with semesters of full-time employer-paid work.

*"...Within Space Systems, I lived the life of a thermal controller, and I also learned the responsibilities held by many of the other groups. I still don't know where I want to go with my career, but I have a much better idea now than before my work experience."
(Aerospace Engineering Co-op Student)*

HOW DO STUDENTS BENEFIT FROM CO-OP?

Co-op adds an invaluable dimension to the educational process by allowing the students to apply academic knowledge in a "real-life" setting. Co-op students are also paid by their employer — thereby helping to defray college expenses. Other benefits: co-op allows students to explore career options before making any long-term commitment. They can also gain valuable experience in their chosen field, which provides an essential edge in the post-graduation job market.

WHO IS ELIGIBLE TO PARTICIPATE IN CO-OP?

Students who are currently involved in the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences who have:

- ...completed 45 semester credit hours
- ...attended ASU as a full-time student the semester preceding the work assignment
- ...earned at least a 2.5 GPA

*"...Theory can best be learned in school, an understanding of man and his mechanism can be learned only where they operate."

*"This work experience has introduced me to industry and their practices. This exposure will allow me to make knowledgeable decisions concerning my professional development."

Lecture series to include debate

By MIKE VAN DYKE
State Press

A tentatively scheduled debate between former Attorney General Edwin Meese and former presidential candidate George McGovern tops the list of lectures offered by Associated Students of ASU this year.

The debate, sponsored by the ASASU Lecture Series, is slated for Oct. 19, but Don Shilliday, director of the series, said the date will be determined by the availability of Gammage Auditorium.

"This debate will present a good opportunity to see the differences between the two political parties and to draw the line between their viewpoints," he said. "They have never formally debated, but this should not be an ugly debate with backstabbing."

The ASASU lecture circuit will begin Sept. 19 with Dale Van Atta, a reporter for the Washington Post, who broke the Iran-contra affair story and has been nominated seven times for a Pulitzer Prize.

Shilliday said he scheduled a number of speakers this summer, but many canceled because of other engagements. He said he is attempting to reschedule the speakers by working around their other commitments.

"We are looking to have 10 events this year — spread out in conjunction with other events," Shilliday said.

The cost of bringing Meese and McGovern and other speakers to ASU has not been determined because ASASU is working with a package deal, Shilliday said.

"Since part of the deal fell through, we are still talking about the particulars of the arrangement," he said.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wisc., had also been scheduled to speak this fall, Shilliday said. Because of time conflicts with Proxmire's schedule, however, the senator has been tentatively rescheduled to lecture in the spring.

Shilliday said his goal is to provide an education for students that they cannot get in the classroom.

"We want to educate students in as many ways as possible," he said. "By bringing in speakers of various interest, students will be able to apply what is spoken about to their different involvements."

ASASU Activities Vice President J'Lien Liese agreed, adding that she would like to see the department bring in speakers who can share real-life experiences with students that will reveal what exists "outside the textbook."

She said the issues presented during the lectures are more important than the speakers' name recognition.

It is important that the lectures provide an environment where students can interact with the speakers by asking questions, Liese added.

old and out-of-date, with transmitting signals that often fail to broadcast a sufficient distance.

The officers also charge that the University purchased bullet-proof vests for officers only after it was revealed that ASU was the only school in the Pac-10 to not equip their personnel with the safety vests.

Overmeyer said the police department "has received a lot of support from this office."

She said administrators currently are dealing with the termite-infested building, and they have plans to tear down the north wing of the complex and put up a temporary building until a new one can be built.

She said the Board of Regents has approved a capital improvements plan that includes the building of a new DPS building after 1994.

DPS is currently competing against other campus departments for the Valley National Bank Building at Apache Boulevard and Rural Road as a temporary headquarters, she said.

Also, ASU police have recently received several new patrol cars and new radios. Officers still are awaiting the bullet-proof vests that the university has purchased for them.

Nevertheless, one officer said the perceived lack of support from Business Affairs makes officers "sad."

"It makes us feel bad," he said. "We're (the administration's) bastard child."

"I think I used that term once or twice myself," said former ASU Police Chief C. Russel Duncan, who now lives in Prescott Valley, where he operates a bed-and-breakfast inn and works for the Yavapai County public works division. "Whoever gets the job (next) has got to have a chance to fix it and make it right."

Duncan, who reportedly resigned from the force last year in frustration over the lack of resources allocated by the University, declined to comment on the problems in the department, saying he is avoiding ASU "like the plague."

schedules take the heat into consideration, he said.

"Like our training, most meets are scheduled early in the day or later in the evening, for the very purpose of avoiding the heat," Lehman said.

But the Sun Devil football team practices from about 4 to 5:30 in the afternoon, and sometimes practice as early as 1 p.m.

George Montgomery, a sophomore outside linebacker for the Sun Devils, said the Arizona climate is much different than that of his native Gary, Ind.

"It is really hard getting used to the heat," he said, adding that although Indiana is hot and humid in the summer, by the time football season rolls around things have usually cooled off. "It's hard to think about it still being 100 degrees in October."

Lovie Smith, who is in charge of coaching Montgomery and about eight other outside linebackers, said so far this season the players have not had any real problems with the heat.

"You would expect there to be a real problem but there hasn't been," he said. "We take a lot of precautions, though. When it's real hot we'll take a break."

Smith also stressed the importance of drinking a lot of water. Smith coached in Tulsa for 10 years before coming to ASU. He said the humidity in Oklahoma caused more heat-related problems than Arizona.

"It was much worse in Tulsa, especially the heat cramps," Smith said.

Frank Freeman, who coaches centers and guards for the Sun Devil football team, agreed that heat problems are minimal.

"When we practice we have the entire training squad there," he said. "They bring water and take care of things like that."

Freeman said because the team is already in shape by football season, there are no real problems with acclimatization.

"In this day and age college football is a year-round proposition," Freeman said. "The players aren't just sitting on their butts when it isn't football season."

But the dry climate in Arizona calls for all athletes, no matter what their sport, to take extra precautions when exercising outside, McDuffie said.

"Just be smart," he added.

ABCO pledges to sell only pesticide-free fruits, vegetables

PHOENIX (AP) — Environmentalists won a limited victory in Arizona when one of the state's larger grocery chains signed an agreement pledging to work to reduce pesticide use on fruits and vegetables.

ABCO President Ed Hill signed the six-point pledge Monday at a news conference with Michael Gregory, conservation chief of the Sierra Club's Grand Canyon chapter, and Elmer Brunsman of the Boston-based National Toxics Campaign Fund.

Hill said he was committing ABCO to refusing to sell any fruits or vegetables with detectable toxic residues. In addition, ABCO will ask growers to fully identify all pesticides used on the chain's produce and to "actively encourage" the phasing out of cancer-causing chemicals on produce by 1995.

ABCO earlier had agreed to a pesticide-reduction program for certain fruits and vegetables through a private food certification company called NutriClean.

The Monday press conference focused on EBDCs, a fungicide which has been used to prevent crop damage and protect product deterioration.

According to the National Toxic Campaign, EBDCs have been registered with the federal government for use for over 30 years and "are routinely used on up to one-third of the fruits and vegetables grown in the U. S."

Last week, manufacturers of the fungicide said they were taking it off the market for use on a number of crops because it showed a higher than acceptable cancer risk.

ABCO, which has 87 stores in Arizona, joined Raley's Supermarkets of California and Nevada, Bread & Circus Supermarkets of Boston, Petrini Supermarkets of northern California and Canadian produce distributor Provigo Distributing in signing the pledge, Brunsman said.

The Food Marketing Institute, an industry group composed of the nation's largest supermarkets, denounced the program and urged members not to sign the pledge.

"We're not going to shoot ourselves in the leg and end up having nothing to sell in the stores," said Donald Beaver, president of the California Growers Association. He said grocers would not pledge against accepting produce with pesticides when there is no assurance that other alternatives will be available.

Hill said he belongs to the institute, adding, "I agree with them on 99 percent of what they do, but on this issue I chose to take a different approach."

He said the traditional response of the grocery industry regarding pesticides has been, "It's not my problem."

But Duncan expressed hope that conditions improve under new ASU President Lattie Coor and that the department becomes a "nicer place."

One group of officers is considering sending a letter and signatures to the administration asking officials to address the department's concerns.

Officers say Bartosh is well-liked in the department because he identifies with the street-level members of the force. They add that problems in the department were there long before Bartosh took over.

One patrolman commented on Bartosh: "The best man for the job is already there."

Bartosh downplayed problems in the relationship between the campus police force and the University.

"There's been a strong effort to improve relations between DPS and the Business Affairs office," he said. "You're always going to have disagreements with your boss."

He also said the problems with the police department are not unique.

"It's a campus-wide issue," he said.

Bartosh tried to resign from the acting director's job last month but later withdrew the resignation. He said he wanted to see if he would be chosen as a finalist before withdrawing.

During his service as acting director, ASU police have come under fire for the handling of a racial incident last April on Alpha Drive. ASU police were investigated by the FBI for possible civil rights violations and have forwarded its case to the U.S. Department of Justice, which is determining whether to prosecute.

An independent University panel is also investigating ASU police in connection with the incident.

Bartosh said that despite the Alpha Drive incident, he would not have done anything differently during his time as acting director.

"Naturally I reflected on that episode quite a bit," he said. "When I look back, I don't think I would do anything differently. I think it was handled properly."

Bartosh came to ASU in 1985 from the University of California-Irvine, where he served as a police lieutenant and assistant director of public safety. He earned a social ecology degree at UC-Irvine and minored in criminal justice.

During his service at ASU, Bartosh has filled in as acting director before. He served about eight months in 1987 while then-Director Duncan worked for former Gov. Evan Mecham's Alliance for a Drug Free Arizona.

As acting director in 1987, Bartosh organized and directed the security for Pope John Paul II's mass at Sun Devil Stadium in addition to other DPS functions.

When he returned to the associate director job, Bartosh helped establish a campus crime prevention program in addition to the development of a confidential witness line used to solve crimes.

Bartosh took over the DPS post again last January when Duncan resigned after 6½ years on the force.

Beginning in October, students and faculty will be able to have their physical fitness level evaluated in the Student Recreation Complex.

The ASU Student Health Center will sponsor the services, which include body-fat measurements and fitness assessments.

The fitness test, which will take about an hour, includes body composition analysis, flexibility endurance tests and cardiovascular evaluations.

The program will be offered free of charge to anyone with an appointment. In addition, health officials will provide participants with a computer printout outlining their physical endurance.

"We highlight areas they need to work on and then give guidelines as to what type of fitness program they could follow," fitness specialist Rob Hughes said.

Also available at the recreation complex will be free 15-minute body-fat measurements. The evaluation allows those participants to monitor their weight and muscle.

Health education officials expect a lot of people to take advantage of the programs because of its convenient location and environment.

"I anticipate us being much busier in both the assessments and body-fat measurements," said Kay Cheesborough, health education specialist. "The high visibility and the people in the Rec Center are interested in the type of information we have to offer."

In previous years, the health evaluations have been held in the health center.

Follow-up consultation and exercise prescriptions will help students and faculty evaluate their physical shape, Cheesborough said.

"Knowing where you stand can help the students pinpoint the specific areas that they need improvement in," she said.

Many students are interested in evaluated diseases such as heart disease, which can be prevented with early health measurements, she added.

A full-time nutritionist will also be located in the recreation complex to offer diet analysis and consultation to faculty and students.

About 200 students gathered in the Student Services Building courtyard to pay tribute to those who died in the massacre at Tiananmen Square in China. Tuesday was the 100-day anniversary of the attack on students. Below, a look at the crowd from the balcony of the Student Services Building. In the foreground is a replica of the Goddess of Liberty, a statue erected by students in the Square. The replica was donated by ASASU.

Many Chinese students are frightened because they may be forced to return to China and a hostile government, said Youmin Huang, an ASU doctoral student from Shanghai.

"I'm afraid my families will be persecuted," he said. "I want to see the (U.S.) Legislature pass laws that will protect us."

DeConcini introduced House Bill 1288 to the Senate judiciary committee in an effort to halt the deportation of Chinese nationals for at least two years, said McGovern at a press conference before the rally. Currently, there are a number of bills introduced in the Senate and House designed to help Chinese students.

Meanwhile, Larson asked American students to take an active role in supporting the democracy movement in China and remembering the events in Tiananmen Square.

"You and I have the responsibility to remember those (students) and never forget what happened in Tiananmen Square," he said. "Never forget the students, the ideals or democracy."

At the end of the rally, a pro-democracy song was played over the loud speaker.

Flag-burning bill expected in House

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House moved Tuesday toward approval of legislation to restore criminal penalties for flag burning, seeking to overcome an unpopular Supreme Court decision.

House action in the form of a statute appeared likely after Speaker Thomas S. Foley promised a vote later on a constitutional amendment, the remedy demanded by President Bush and many congressional Republicans to undo the court's ruling that flag burning could be a protected form of free speech.

"I remain opposed . . . and I think the leadership is opposed to a constitutional amendment," said Foley, D-Wash., calling such action unnecessary.

However, he said he had assured those seeking an amendment they would get their vote, and he denied that that marked a political setback. He suggested he would work to keep the amendment from getting the two-thirds vote needed for passage.

Some seeking an amendment softened their opposition to the statute, once assured that the Democratic leadership would not use it to block their alternative.

Rep. Sonny Montgomery, D-Miss., chairman of the House Veterans Committee and co-sponsor of Bush's amendment, stood up in the House and announced he would vote for the statute.

"I still have doubts that we can do the job by statute, but this is a step in the right direction," he said.

At the White House, spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said,

"We believe that this bill is insufficient to provide the protections that we seek and therefore continue to press for a constitutional amendment."

But he stopped short of any veto threat, thus helping the House Democrats garner support for the statute.

Conservative Republicans, however, continued to accuse the Democrats of trying to sidetrack the constitutional amendment while pushing a statute the GOP lawmakers contend may still be unconstitutional.

The statute, a version of which is expected to come before the Senate in early October, includes criminal penalties of up to a year in jail plus an unspecified fine for flag burning or other mutilation.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell has promised a vote on the constitutional amendment later next month, and Foley said Tuesday House action would follow the Senate's.

Both the statute and the constitutional amendment are attempts to address a Supreme Court ruling in June that threw out the conviction of a man who burned a flag at the 1984 Republican National Convention in Dallas.

The court held that the law was unconstitutional because it was aimed at suppressing the man's right to political expression as guaranteed by the Constitution.

The House bill includes a provision for expedited review of the law by the Supreme Court if its constitutionality is challenged and an exception so that veterans groups could continue their practice of disposal of old, worn-out flags by burning them.

Enormous toads invade Australia

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Toads that grow to the size of dinner plates are invading Brisbane, Australia's third-largest city, and local authorities are planning an elaborate program to get rid of them.

Plans include ringing the city's suburbs with recordings of the rattling call the male toad uses to attract females. When the unsuspecting females arrive, trappers will shove them into plastic bags and freeze them, said Greg Stegman, a city councilman in charge of the eradication plan.

Residents who find toads around their homes are being advised to sprinkle detergent on them because it "does the job quickly," Stegman said.

The Queensland Museum said the toads pose a major threat to Australia's wildlife. Biologists said the toads, when cornered and frightened, squirt a liquid that can asphyxiate a dog the size of a German shepherd.

Since then, they have marched across northern Australia and are heading south. The biggest weigh more than 5 pounds, and children occasionally use them as footballs.

The state of Queensland is holding a contest to find the biggest toad to be entered in the Guinness Book of World Records.

Tempe Police Report

Tempe police reported the following incidents that occurred between 7 a.m. Monday and 7 a.m. Tuesday:

- A Tempe high school English teacher was arrested Tuesday morning in connection with a sexual assault that occurred six years ago.

John Placona, 38, of the 1900 block of East Concorda Drive, was placed on administrative leave Tuesday from Marcos DeNiza High School after a former student, Tricia Winters, 21, was interviewed by police Friday.

Winters, now living in California, called Tempe Detective Marty Cook, school liaison officer at Marcos DeNiza, and said she wanted to report the assault that occurred while she was a student at the high school.

Winters arrived in town Friday and was interviewed by Cook; Thomas Parker, superintendent of Tempe high schools; and William Fitzgerald, principal of Marcos DeNiza.

According to Tempe police, Winters and Placona had several "dates." Winters said during one date, Placona, who was married at the time, took Winters to his home where he made sexual advances toward her and she resisted him.

Placona volunteered to come to the police station where he was arrested at 9 a.m. He was released later pending a review by the Maricopa County Attorney's Office.

•A man was arrested for burglary when he entered a house in the 2000 block of East Lemon Street. He had showered and eaten dinner at the residence by the time police arrived.

•A man was arrested for disorderly conduct when police found him passed out and drunk on the lawn at Seventh Street and Lindon Drive. After police woke the man, he shouted obscenities and tried to strike an officer.

•A man was arrested for drunken driving after he was involved in a one-car accident and failed a sobriety test.

The Usual Suspects

Does Regis know?

TALK-SHOW HOST Kathie Lee Gifford and husband Frank are expected a child in the spring. Ms. Gifford has called the news a "lovely surprise." The pregnancy was first reported by Mr. Gifford's co-hosts on Monday Night Football.

"This is what's called a lovely surprise," said Ms. Gifford. "No child should ever be thought of as a mistake — a surprise, but not a mistake."

Gifford says that the child was conceived during a cruise (Carnival, maybe — 'if they could see you now') off the coast of Italy.

Lessons from the Old World

ACCORDING TO CANDICE BERGEN, American women are more aggressive and not nearly as sexy as European women. "Running corporations doesn't make for the most sensual dinner party conversation," said Bergen in a recent interview.

Bergen, 43, who is married to French film director Louis Malle, has been spending a lot of time in Europe, and she's noticed a difference.

"American women are more aggressive by nature, and the women's movement hasn't helped to stem that tide."

Smoking with Diana

PRINCESS DIANA HELPED to destroy $17 million worth of drugs at a secret customs warehouse in Dover, England, on Tuesday.

The wife of Prince Charles simply dropped two plastic bags containing thousands of dollars worth of marijuana into an incinerator and pressed the button that began the burning process. It is not known exactly how close to the incinerator's exhaust the Princess stood.

Diana was also taught to inspect a car using a fiber-optic endoscope and examine the contents of a surfboard with an X-ray machine.

Marriage and the working actress

'FAMILY TIES' ACTRESS Meredith Baxter Birney says that despite the progress of the women's movement, women are shortchanged in marriage.

"At best," says Birney, 42, "marriage is not an institution that favors women." She says women still are expected to take care of the kids, the house and "making one's husband comfortable."

Birney isn't entirely down on the institution — she said she still loves it — but she's still in the process of divorcing actor David Birney.

"There's a way to do it well, sure. But only exceptional people can make it work."

No alligators in Finnish sewers, but...

THE DRINKING WATER of Orivesi, Finland was contaminated earlier this week when pantyhose clogged the city's sewers. Hundreds or thousands of people became sick.

Dozens of the pantyhose, which don't flush as well as you might think, clogged the sewers and the contaminated water overflowed into the water table.

"It looked like someone had deliberately stuffed a whole year's supply of tights into the pipes," said construction engineer Heikki Seppala.

City officials have ordered a police inquiry.

Criminal Justice major Eddie Bever, 19, says that his "sunglasses are the ultimate."

Hot or Not

Fashion moves pretty fast, faster than a yellow light at a traffic intersection — and Arizona is notorious for longer yellows in traffic as well as fashion. So if you're still wearing what's not so hot, don't fret, it's not what you wear — it's how wear it.

Just because it's a balmy 112 degrees outside, there's no reason to get caught up in the beltless-tent look. It's time to put some pizzazz into your wardrobe (and I'm not talking socks with your Birkenstocks, either).

Sun (Devils) finally rising for Spartans Saturday

By JOEL HORN
State Press

Today's State Press trivia question:
Name the first public institution of higher learning in California, established in 1857 as a small teacher's college in an agricultural community.

Hint: the Sun Devils play its football team Saturday.
Answer: San Jose State University, located at the hub of Santa Clara Valley, which has grown into a large regional university.

The Spartans, seeking to rebound from last year's frustrating 4-8 season, will be the last NCAA Division-I team to begin the 1989 season when they take on ASU at Sun Devil Stadium.

Claude Gilbert, SJSU's head coach, said his team will be ready for its debut after four full weeks of fall practice. "We have liked the additional practice," he said, "but we're anxious to play."

Gilbert said it was not a conscious decision to schedule late. In fact, if he had his way, the Spartans always would begin the season early.

SJSU heavily recruits junior college players annually, and Gilbert said his staff needs the time to pursue the finest transfer student-athletes available.

One junior college transfer who will play a major role for the Spartans in 1989 is quarterback Matt Veatch, who was a teammate of Sun Devil tailback Bruce Perkins at

Canley

Evans

Colar

Johnson

Butler County College in Kansas.

Gilbert had high praise for the junior signal caller. "He's picture-perfect as a drop-back passer," the head coach said. "He's a tall, rangy athlete with a strong, accurate arm."

Joining Veatch in the Spartan backfield will be senior Johnny Johnson, a former tailback who was moved to fullback in the spring.

An honorable-mention All-American in 1988, Johnson rushed for a school-record 1,219 yards and caught 61 passes for 668 yards. He became the first player in NCAA history to rush for over 1,200 yards and catch at least 60 passes in the same season.

Johnson, also a member of the 1989 SJSU basketball team, started 12 games and led the team in rebounding, field goal accuracy, 3-point field goal accuracy and assists.

Gilbert said Johnson played basketball with his blessings. He missed spring practice and lost weight to play basketball, but has had enough time to regain his conditioning.

ASU junior Licurgo Diaz-Sandi performs on the still rings. Diaz-Sandi, who is expected to be one of the top Sun Devil gymnasts, did not compete in the Mexican National Championships this summer because his homeland would not pay for travel arrangements.

Homeland shuns ASU gymnast in national championships

By TOMI McELROY
State Press

ASU gymnast Licurgo Diaz-Sandi was asked to represent Mexico in the Mexican National Championships this summer.

Araujo Delgado, the president of the Mexican Federation for Gymnastics, informed Diaz-Sandi it wanted him to be in Monterey Nuevo Leon in July for the national championships.

However, Diaz-Sandi said problems began when contacting the federation.

"They never had the exact dates when I was going to compete," Diaz-Sandi said. "They changed the dates on me three times. I was calling them all the time."

As the date of the national competition approached, Diaz-Sandi said he began to worry because he was attending summer school and would need to rearrange his final exam schedule.

"I was thinking about finals and working out four hours a day," Diaz-Sandi said. "Then I began to think this just might be a waste of time, and I should be studying. It caused me a lot of stress."

When Diaz-Sandi did get in touch with the federation, three days before competition, it had to make special arrangements for him to compete only on Saturday and Sunday since his final exams were that Friday.

After taking his finals, he went to the ICA building to pick up his airline ticket, but it was not given to him.

Diaz-Sandi said he was told he needed proof, like a letter, stating he was going to compete in a national competition, which he did not have.

"Here I was looking as if I was just trying to get a ticket home," Diaz-Sandi said. "That was the worst."

After hours of conflict Diaz-Sandi reached the Olympic Committee, but it said there was not a national competition, only a gymnastics clinic.

"Then we tried calling Delgado, the President of the federation, but never got in touch with him," Diaz-Sandi said. "I think they were just busy getting everything ready."

Diaz-Sandi said he was told he could go to the competition and bring back proof to be reimbursed. He said he did not have any money; but the ASU gymnastic sponsors were going to help him, and it was legal with NCAA regulations.

However, it was too late to contact the federation when Diaz-Sandi left the ICA building.

"I was disappointed just because of all the time I went through — four hours a day of practice and six credit hours with no money because I just bought a car," Diaz-Sandi said.

The rest of the summer was spent at school, working and practicing new tricks for the upcoming season. Recently, the federation made another attempt to get Diaz-Sandi in Mexico to compete.

Diaz-Sandi said about a week and a half ago there was a phone message from the federation, but he chose not to return the call.

Later that week, during a late-night phone call Diaz-Sandi said he was again asked to participate on the Mexican team. He said he asked if the federation was going to pay for his trip, but the answer was no.

"You want me to compete and represent you, but you don't want to help me?" Diaz-Sandi said. "I'm not that important to you?"

This time Diaz-Sandi said he could not get help from the ASU gymnastic sponsors

ASU must alter priorities, graduate athletes

Joel Horn
Asst. Sports Editor

Dr. George L. Cross, former president of the University of Oklahoma, once told a state senator that the institution could become "a university our football team can be proud of."

What a joke. Schools like Oklahoma, Nebraska, Houston, Georgia, Miami, Clemson and, for that matter, ASU, are better known as athletic factories than academic institutions.

It shouldn't be that way. I love ASU. I am very proud to be a student here, so it hurts me to acknowledge that ASU has a less than sparkling academic reputation.

Being a lifelong sports enthusiast, I find it difficult to admit that ASU has overemphasized athletics.

A recent federal study found that no more than one in five athletes graduated from colleges with major basketball programs, and graduation rates among football players were not much better.

The General Accounting Office report, which has not been released but has been excerpted in The New York Times, indicated that 35 of 97 schools surveyed had graduation rates of 0 to 20 percent among basketball players.

Sports Illustrated recently labeled Kansas State, "Futility U." The fact is, KSU has set a standard many other universities should strive to duplicate.

Last year, the College Football Association found that KSU was one of only 13 Division-I schools with a graduation rate of more than 70 percent for its football players. The national average was only 49.8 percent.

KSU has produced five Rhodes scholars in the past 15 years, putting it in the top

1 percent of all American universities in that regard. In addition, KSU has had 14 Truman scholars since 1979, more than any other state university.

Sure, the Wildcats haven't fared too well on the football field. In fact, they're terrible. They have not won a game since 1986, 27 games ago, and have had only one winning season since 1970.

The University of Oklahoma, on the other hand, has had one of the nation's most successful football programs for decades.

"I look at Oklahoma and I see three major differences — they look bigger, they look faster, and they look better," KSU safety Erick Harper told a writer from Sports Illustrated.

There's one difference Harper failed to mention about Oklahoma — they have had more players arrested.

Sooner quarterback Charles Thompson was recently convicted and sentenced to federal prison for selling cocaine to an FBI agent. Defensive back Jerry Parks was released from jail after shooting a former teammate, and three other Oklahoma players are awaiting trial for allegedly gang-raping an 18-year-old woman in an athletic dormitory.

I am not suggesting that these same types of crimes are being committed by athletes at ASU — quite the contrary. Thanks to the efforts of Athletic Director Charles Harris and former University President J. Russell Nelson, among others, ASU has cleaned up its probation-scarred past.

However, the problem of athletic overemphasis still exists.

The rabid belief by some universities that they should be No. 1, no matter the cost, is creating blatant professionalism and inherent dishonesty in American college athletics.

Priorities need to be changed. Success on the athletic field need not suffer because of increased stress on academics.

We, the media, need to stop calling a university derogatory names because it hasn't won football games.

Maybe then the only "futile" colleges will be those not graduating student-athletes.

Spartans

His father, Johnny Johnson Sr., helped the Spartans to two wins in three tries against the Sun Devils between 1960 and 1962.

ASU Head Football Coach Larry Marmie said the younger Johnson is "one of the top running backs in the country."

Tailback Sheldon Canley, a redshirt junior, gained 335 yards on 40 carries in a preseason scrimmage.

Another weapon in the Spartans' offensive arsenal is slot receiver Kevin Evans. An honorable mention All-American and first-team All-Big West selection in 1988, missed the last two games of the season and had off-season surgery to replace a loose kneecap.

Evans, who had 61 receptions for a team-high 887 yards and four touchdowns last year, has recuperated and will be in the lineup against the Sun Devils.

Marmie said the Spartans have a "diversified offensive attack." They will throw the ball often out of a one-back set and even will run the option.

Defensively, SJSU has little experience. As many as eight players could get their first starting assignment against ASU.

Only noseguard George Muraoka, free safety Hesh Colar and rover Mike Scialabba have started a major college game. Scialabba's starting experience, however, was as a fullback last season.

Muraoka, a senior, was a second-team All-Big West selection in 1988, and Colar, a sophomore, last season became the first true freshman to start on a regular basis for SJSU in 10 years.

Gilbert said he is concerned about the Spartans' ability to handle the Sun Devils up front, both offensively and defensively.

"That's the No. 1 question," he said. "Can we overcome ASU's size and strength?"

SJSU's kicking game is solid. Senior Jim Hughes is the Spartans' career leader in punting average, and senior placekicker Jim Kirk was second on last year's team in scoring with 50 points.

Marmie said the Spartans, who are seeking their seventh winning season in the past 10 years, will not be awed coming into Sun Devil Stadium.

"ASU is a pretty good challenge for us," Gilbert said. "We'll find out in a hurry how good we are."

Licurgo

because it was only a meet and not a national competition.

Diaz-Sandi said he told the Mexican National Coach Luis Villanueva if he was not provided money for the trip he would not go. He said the federation's only response was, "we will wait for you Thursday."

That was last Thursday, and Diaz-Sandi decided not to go because of school and because Mexico has not provided him with money in the past.

Before he had the chance to compete for Mexico in the nationals this summer, Diaz-Sandi represented his country in the Moncada Cup in Cuba but encountered similar problems.

Two days before the Cuba competition, Diaz-Sandi said the federation called him and told him he would have to pay for the trip when previously it had informed him it was sending him a ticket.

"So here I was calling everyone for money, and my sister gave it to me," Diaz-Sandi said. "I made it to Cuba, and it was one of my best meets ever."

Diaz-Sandi finished 10th overall, placed sixth in the floor exercise and fourth in the vault, missing a medal by a 10th of a point.

Diaz-Sandi said he is upset with the federation and wrote it a long, nasty letter.

"I think they just don't know what they want," he said. "They want a good team for Mexico, but they are not willing to give them money."

Diaz-Sandi has not given up all hope on Mexico because he said his personal goal is to get to the 1992 Olympics.

"It's what is important to me," he said. "If I don't represent Mexico, the United States comes second to me. My main goal is to get there."

Diaz-Sandi is the top man for the Sun Devils since junior Jody Newman will redshirt this season to recover from knee surgery.

"I told Jody I was going to need his help to push me," Diaz-Sandi said. "Now for me I'm lacking the competition."

Diaz-Sandi, who is a co-captain along with Kevin Singer, said he had to prepare himself mentally for the upcoming season when he heard Newman was injured.

"I knew they (the coaches) were going to push me," Diaz-Sandi said. "But it's developed a lot of maturity in my gymnastics and I feel very secure now and confident. I want to use that confidence for this year."

Diaz-Sandi is an all-around competitor which includes the rings, pommel horse, vault, parallel bars, high bar and floor exercise. He said he is working on new tricks in his routines for the upcoming season and wants to help push other team members to reach their goals.

"The pressure has to come from me, not anyone else — I feel I know what I want and that gives me enough pressure to work hard everyday," Diaz-Sandi said. "I want to be an example, and I want them (the team) to see that we are good and we have a chance."

Olympic hopefuls lead Sun Devils

By LARRY NEWELL
State Press

The ASU womens track and field team, possessing a number of All-Americans and potential 1992 Olympians, will be feeling the brunt of the probation that has prohibited them from recruiting the past two seasons, said the team's head coach.

"We have a good athlete in every event, but we lack in depth and this could prove to be our downfall," Tom Jones said.

The ASU sprinting corps returns a solid group of athletes for the 1990 campaign.

Junior Maicel Malone, who was the national champion last year in the 100-meter hurdles with a time of 12.75 seconds and finished sixth at the World University Games with a 12.9 time, will lead the Devils' attack.

"Maicel is a potential Pac-10 champion in the 200- and 400-meter events, as well as in the relays," Jones said.

Malone also boasts the best quarter-mile time in the world for juniors and competed on the 1988 Olympic team.

Toinette Holmes, who recorded top times last season in both the Pac-10 and in the NCAA, returns for her senior year. Holmes earned a time of 24.7 in the 200-meters and a 53.96 in the 400.

"Toinette can be as good as she wants to be," Jones said. "She is our best 200-meter runner and number two in the 400-meter."

Junior Charmaine Williams, who ran both the 100- and 200-meter sprints as well as the relay events last season, should add depth to this season's sprinting squad.

"Charmaine could be a surprise this year and if she progresses the way she has," Jones said.

Dana Jones, who ran a 25.25 in the 200 and a 56.54 in the 400 last season, will return for her junior year.

"Dana should make a big impact this year, and she has the potential to run a 53 flat in the 400 meters," Jones said.

The long distance squad will be led by four seniors.

Senior Dawn Arrigoni, who participated in the Pac-10 Championships two years ago, returns this season from an injury that sidelined her last year.

"If Dawn is healthy she can make a big impact, and she can be a big Pac-10 scorer for us," Jones said.

Kathy Jarvis, who ran the 800-meters in 2:18.39, the 1500-meters in 4:38.81 and the 3000-meters in 10:24.32 last season, will return for her senior year.

"Kathy Jarvis and Dawn Arrigoni are the mainstays of our distance corps," Jones said.

Senior Amy Komitzky, who ran a 10:05.35 in the 3000-meters and a 17:27.49 in the 5000-meters last season, will be looked upon to add depth to this year's long-distance squad.

Kim McKay, who last season recorded a 10:57.33 in the 3000, will also add depth to the Sun Devils distance squad.

"I am very confident that our long distance squad will rise to the occasion, as they all have the ability to be Pac-10 scorers," Jones said.

Gea Johnson, who ranks among the top 10 in ASU history in the javelin, shot put, long jump and the high jump, and who two weeks ago finished seventh at the World University Games, will return from a redshirt last season.

Junior Karen O'Conner, who competed in the shot put, discus, and javelin last season, will once again be called upon to contribute in the throwing events.

Senior Lennon Gardner, who finished sixth in the heptathlon at the 1988 Pac-10 Championships, before suffering a broken ankle last fall, returns for her final year.

"I look for Lennon to go over 500 points this season," Jones said.

"Barring injury, I see the 1990 womens track and field team finishing in the top half of the Pac-10 standings. I will have a better feel for our future when the season begins."

Men's track team to return to glory days

By LARRY NEWELL
State Press

The ASU mens track and field team, once a perennial national power, will attempt to retain respectability following the aftermath of probation, Head Coach Tom Jones said.

"Our goal this season is to get through the year and be as competitive as possible with the talent we have," Jones said. The sprinting corps appears to be strong, featuring a tandem of sprinters with exceptional speed.

Senior Ed Lovelace, who excels in the 100- and 200-meter events, should provide similar success in the 400 meters in the upcoming season.

"Lovelace needs to excel in the 400 meters to make an impact in the Pac-10," Jones said.

Senior Lynn James, the fastest receiver on ASU's football team this season and a 1984 Junior Sprint Champion, will return for his senior season.

"Lynn James is a filler guy who will have an impact in the long jump and the relay," Jones said.

The hurdles squad returns a trio of experienced athletes that should make the upcoming Sun Devils competitive this season.

Decathlete Matt Zuber, who last season ran a 14.88 in the 110-meter high hurdles, will return for his senior campaign.

"Matt Zuber has the ability to be an NCAA scorer and an All-America this season," Jones said.

Senior Robert Rucker tallied a fourth place finish in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles during the 1988 Pac-10 championships before redshirting the 1989 season.

"We expect Robert to be fully recovered from the stress fracture in his foot and to run well in the highs this season," Jones said.

Rounding out the trio will be sophomore Dereck Moore, who plays outside linebacker on the ASU football team.

"Dereck Moore is a good technician, has good talent and has the ability to be a very good hurdler and a scorer in the Pac-10 this season," Jones said.

Junior Todd Lewis, who placed ninth at the 1988 Pac-10 Championships in the steeplechase, will headline the distance runners after redshirting last season.

"Todd Lewis is the definite front-runner of the long distance corps," Jones said.

The leader of the middle distance runners is senior Darren Viner, who last season recorded a 1:53.82 in the 800 meters.

"Darren Viner is our best 800-meter runner, and he is a consistent second and third place finisher," Jones said.

Redshirt freshman Troy McKay, who was a standout cross country performer in 1988, will add depth to the long distance squad this season.

Leading the field performers will be shot-putter Shane Collins, who finished second in the 1988 Pac-10 Championships, returning for his junior campaign after redshirting last season.

"Shane Collins is a great athlete, maybe the best athlete at ASU and he definitely has the ability to win the Pac-10 this season," Jones said.

Zuber, who last season had a personal best of 23-foot-10, will handle the long jumping responsibilities.

"Matt has the ability to jump close to 25 feet and is by far our best long jumper," Jones said.

The pole vaulting duties will be shared by decathletes Zuber and Jim Huntton.

"Zuber has flirted with 16-7 and should go 17-0 in the vault this season," Jones said.

"The mens track and field success this season depends a lot on the football players who will contribute to this season's campaign. We have a very thin quantity of quality athletes, and this lack of depth is our main concern going into the season."

M.B. AND J.: New girlfriend list: Non-sorority member, no tattoos, no motorcycles, no pet snakes, eats quietly and in moderation, definitely no drugs, no purple hair, and no other boyfriends. Appearance secondary to character. Car, job, status, and friends unimportant. Doesn't pursue alcohol or the party scene. Accepts us for who we are. The waiting is the hardest part. E.C. and P.D.K.

M.B. AND J. We are gorgeous, intelligent, have a Suzuki Samurai, and are great kissers. We're all you wanted and more. Call us at 784-8849. B. and J.

M.B. AND J., You must be hideous, must rely on public transportation, must think our looks aren't important, must do drugs, must be sleazy, must be a compulsive liar, ambivalent, thrifty, and groovy. Must be a drop-out or professional thief, must have Salvation Army attire, must have no friends, and salivate heavily during kissing. Must also be a Neo-Nazi redheaded step-child. Must hang out at Sun Devil House or Hammerheads. Must be stupid. If you qualify...consider suicide. L.P.J. and C.
