Board gives OK to planned sites for hi-tech firm

By JOIE ANN LaPOLLA
State Press

The Arizona Board of Regents Wednesday night approved two proposed sites that a newly formed computer chip company is considering for its manufacturing plant.

U.S. Memories is looking at a Tempe site, located at 48th Street and Broadway, which is the home of the University of Arizona Cotton Research Center. The second site is located at the abandoned IBM plant in Tucson.

The company is expected to choose a site in mid-October. The regents said the company must compensate the UofA if the Tempe site is selected. After the proposal is sent to U.S. Memories, the board has requested that Gov. Rose Mofford seek legislation in order to obtain this "economic center," said Jacqueline Schneider, legal counsel to the regents.

There are nine states competing for the location of U.S. Memories, but Patrick Burkhart, associate director of development at ASU, said most of that information has been kept confidential.

"We have no way of knowing what our competition is," Burkhart said. "Everyone has been working so not to give the competition any advantages."

Molly Broad, regents' chief executive officer, said the

Assault charge dropped against ASU bicycle cop

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

An ASU police officer has been cleared of allegedly assaulting a student he thought called him "fat" but has been disciplined for verbally abusing the student during an incident last March, police said Wednesday.

Officer Al Campoy, a 19-year-veteran of the force who works the bicycle enforcement detail, received "corrective action" after an internal department investigation into a citizen complaint filed by ASU student Timon Gasowski, acting ASU Police Chief Doug Bartosh said.

Bartosh

But Gasowski, a 21-year-old junior art major, said he is upset about the department's findings and the way ASU police investigated the complaint.

"I don't feel like I got justice," Gasowski said. "Basically they did a big cover-up."

Gasowski filed his complaint April 12. He said ASU police told him that the investigation into his complaint would be completed before the spring semester ended.

But ASU police did not notify Gasowski that the investigation was completed until last week, Bartosh said.

"They dragged it out as long as they could, thinking I wouldn't follow up," Gasowski said, adding that he repeatedly called ASU police to find out what was being done with his complaint.

He said he also is upset because ASU police wanted him to take a polygraph test, which he refused.

Gasowski said his attorney thought Gasowski was the victim in the incident and that it didn't make sense for his client to be the one to take a polygraph test.

"The assault charge was unfounded," Bartosh said. "The officer thought he was going to be hit, and he took action."

Gasowski said he still believes he was assaulted but does not plan to take any further action. Campoy declined to comment about the incident or the department's findings.

Campoy had been accused in a citizen's complaint of assaulting Gasowski because he thought the student called him "fat." Gasowski still contends he did not call the officer "fat."

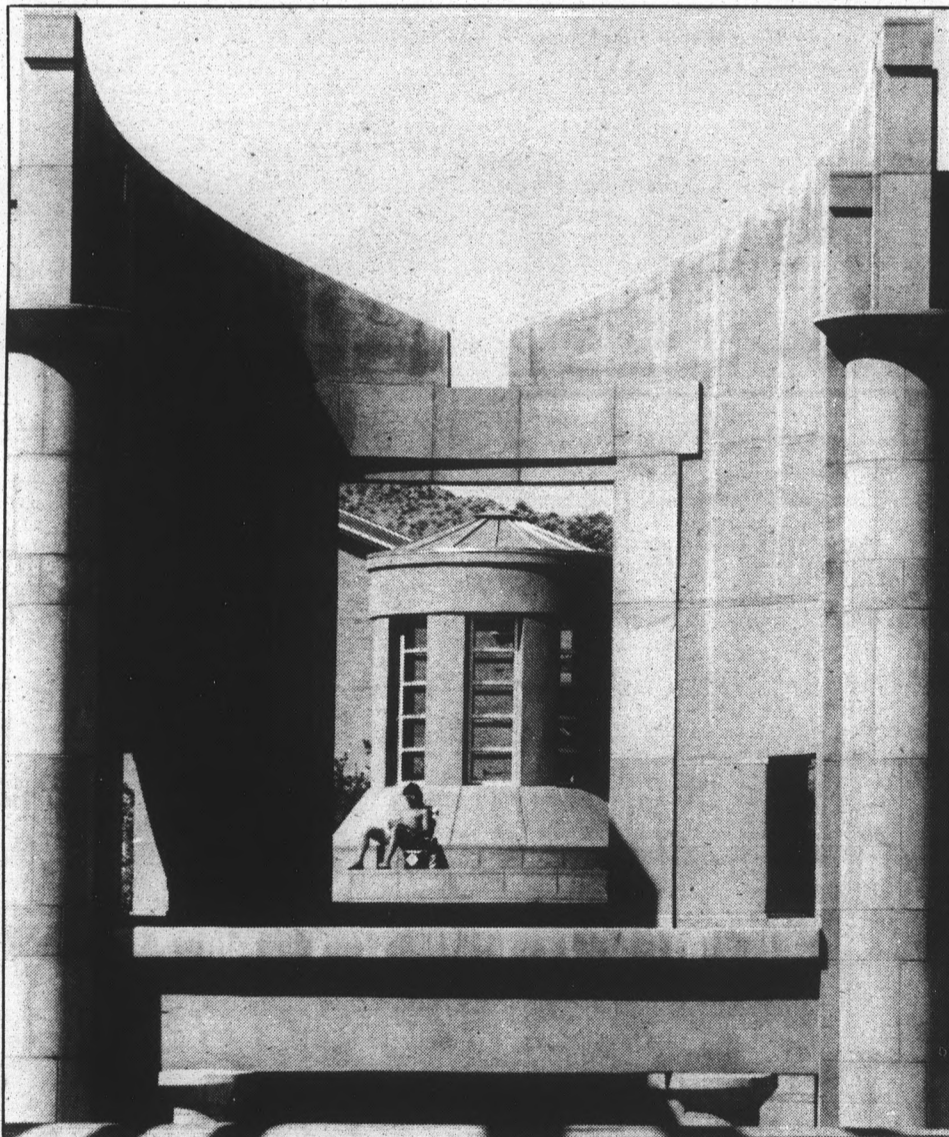

The student said in the complaint that Campoy shoved him against a wall near the Art Building and squeezed his arms.

In the complaint, Gasowski said the assault occurred after he was talking about physical fitness with a friend while Campoy was locking bicycles nearby. Gasowski said after his friend left, Campoy began to yell at him and aggressively approached and asked him if he called him fat.

Gasowski also said in the complaint that Campoy threatened to sue him and take his parents' money.

Bartosh said that although the department determined Campoy did not assault Gasowski, his actions were "unbecoming of an officer."

"I think anytime an officer does something contrary to policy, we're not pleased with that," he said.

World/Nation

Senate falls one vote short of override of Bush FSX veto

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate failed by a single vote Wednesday to override President Bush's veto of congressional restrictions on the coproduction of a jet fighter with Japan.

The 66-34 vote, one vote short of the required two-thirds majority, came after a debate in which both the White House and Congress were accused of trying to monopolize the power to regulate the nation's international trade.

In the debate, Bush supporters said the legislation represented a serious erosion of the powers of the presidency and would force renegotiation of the terms of the FSX production contract between the two nations.

Iranian spiritual leader maintains 'usurper' U.S. cannot be trusted

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Ayatollah Ali Khamenei said Wednesday the United States still resents Iran's 10-year-old Islamic revolution and that any conciliatory gestures by the Bush administration toward his country cannot be trusted.

The Iranian spiritual leader's hourlong speech came during the latest wave of anti-Americanism, which began last week after 186 U.S. legislators called for an economic boycott of Iran to press for a new government.

In his speech, Khamenei described the United States as a "usurper" that treated Iran like a "puppet" before the 1979 revolution.

Speaking before a crowd of Iranians at his Tehran residence, Khamenei said, "Washington has had a deep grudge against Iran since the Islamic revolution" toppled a pro-Western monarchy in 1979.

"Even if it comes and says, 'Now let's be friends and let us come back as friends,' it is obvious that its intention still is enmity, exploitation and domination," he said in the speech.

His address, broadcast live on state Tehran radio and monitored in Nicosia, was frequently interrupted by shouts of "Death to America!"

Officer warns students of tough new drug laws

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

ASU students living in Cholla Apartments were given a lesson in drug and alcohol laws Wednesday night in an effort to inform them of the dangers and repercussions of substance abuse.

ASU police officer Kerry Hogan was asked by two resident assistants to clarify Arizona drug laws for the students.

"I haven't actually seen drugs on campus or in the halls, but I know it's very prevalent (at ASU)," said Joseph Crawford, one of the RAs.

Hogan addressed a group of about 25 students, emphasizing drunken driving offenses and the tough new Hogan also discussed actions he takes on average weekends while he patrols Cholla Apartments.

"I'm not trying to target the guy who's had a couple of beers — I'm after the guy who has had half a keg and doesn't know when to stop," he said.

In addition, Hogan outlined Maricopa County's new anti-drug program — Do Drugs. Do Time. — which targets the casual drug to reduce the demand of drugs.

"When you guys get out there and start looking for jobs, employers are going to ask you if you've ever done drugs," he said. "You have to start thinking about things like this."

The county's demand-reduction program places harsh penalties on occasional drug users.

"(If you do drugs) you're going to find out about the justice system first hand," Hogan said. "You'll spend time in jail, go through a rehab program and possibly be fined $2,000."

Student reaction to the program was unfavorable. "It's harsh — too harsh," said a student in the audience. "If you get caught with a joint they're going to arrest you."

Another student said: "It seems like they're tougher on the casual marijuana smoker than they are on drunk drivers. That doesn't seem right."

Hogan also discussed the penalties for minors who are caught with alcohol.

"I guarantee if you're underage and I find you with a beer, I'll give you a ticket for it."

The maximum fine for a minor with alcohol is $1,000 and up to six months in jail, he added.

penalties for casual drug use.

Arizona has one of the toughest DUI laws in the country, with no opportunity for plea bargains, he said. For first-time offenders there is a $250 fine, and eight points are added to their driver's license, he added.

If arrested, "you won't be able to drive for 90 days," he said.

Can(not)

Custodians banned from collecting recyclables on job

Carolyn Hofig
Asst. Managing Editor

"Frank" has a problem.

Frank, an ASU custodian, collects the empty soda cans he comes across on his rounds. Like many University custodians, he brings the cans to one of the recycling centers in the Valley, keeping the proceeds to augment his income.

He might even consider it a kind of occupational perk.

But the Physical Plant sees things differently. On-the-job can collecting and its evil adjunct, old-newspaper gathering, constitute an abuse of office on the part of custodians, say the folks at the Plant's custodial services wing.

So William Bond, manager of custodial services, circulated a memorandum among ASU's 200-or-so janitors. Dated Sept. 7, the memo strictly forbids the gleaning of cans or newspapers from the garbage, except during "authorized breaks." And would-be recyclers must be out of uniform when they do the deed, the notice continues.

Frank and his colleagues are not to take this memo lightly. "Any Physical Plant custodian found collecting cans/papers during scheduled work time, or while in uniform, will be subject to disciplinary action," Bond writes.

Bond said in a telephone interview that custodians' recycling enterprises had posed a clear problem before the memo. After all, the custodians were collecting cans "on University time" and putting the profits to personal use.

He said he would not know what kind of disciplinary action an offending custodian would face until someone violates the edict.

His memo makes the issue cut and dry: Custodians should either find a new pastime or just wait until their shifts are over, change their shirts and rummage through the dumpsters for the cans. Simple enough, right?

Wrong, says Frank, who asked that his real name not be used because he fears job repercussions. There's more to it than that.

First, he points out, can collecting neither obstructs nor slows down his shift each evening. In fact, his job lends itself well to recycling.

Custodians empty trash from the small, fairly shallow garbage container in each classroom or office into a large, wheeled barrel. Recyclers would hang an extra trash bag on the barrel and pluck the soda cans from the little trash containers as they were emptied.

This was not a time-consuming process. Frank doubts an evening of can collecting cost him even three extra minutes in completing his shift.

On that count, Frank wonders, what might William Bond mean by "University time"? ASU's custodians are not paid by the hour but rather they are contracted for a year at a set salary. That sum is divided by the number of pay periods in that year to arrive at a figure for their semi-monthly checks.

So, qualitatively, as long as Frank completes his duties each evening, it is no skin off the University's wallet if he finishes at midnight or 25 seconds later, cans in hand.

As for "personal gain," Frank says many custodians collect recyclable objects for money to make ends meet.

"Like they use it to buy gas to get to work the next day," he said.

Collecting cans allows a custodian a little more pride than, say, receiving food stamps, which some of Frank's colleagues have to do.

There just isn't a whole lot of income to augment, Frank says.

He cites himself as an example. Frank, like most custodians who have been working at ASU for more than two years, makes about $12,090 a year, gross. According to February figures, a family of four is living below the poverty level in America if its income is less than $12,100.

On an average payday, Frank makes just less than $520, gross. After federal and state taxes, retirement, insurance and parking fees are removed, he has a check for about $350. On the 1st and 15th of every month. The first check more or less pays the rent.

Needless to say, Frank and his can-collecting colleagues are not exactly moonlighting aluminum barons. They're not shirking their custodians' duties in the pursuit of recycling rewards; they're getting by.

They would walk out, Frank says, but many are afraid of losing their jobs.

"There's not much coming in, but at least you know it's coming in," he said.

There is no union for the custodians to turn to, so Frank and the others were content to retrieve cans and newspapers from the trash for recycling. Until William Bond's memo came.

Bond grossed $31,329 last year, according to the 1988-89 operating budget. Most likely, he is not worried about money for gas to get to work tomorrow.

Which may be why his department can afford to worry about can collecting among custodians.

Let addicts build prisons

Editor:

Since President Bush announced his plans on fighting the war on drugs, some of the aspects of his recent speech have come under attack. With stricter enforcement on users/dealers comes the problem of prison over-crowding.

Whether or not we choose to come down hard on these violaters, we are going to continue having the problem of overcrowding in the prisons. Instead of violating health and fire ordinances or releasing prisoners early, why not have the able-bodied prisoners expand or build new penitentiaries?

Statistics show that quite a few convicts, once released, eventually return to prison. Knowing that the cell you are helping to build might one day be used to detain you must be a sobering thought. In addition, many people resort to criminal activities when they have no other marketable skills.

Once rehabilitated, a person with some construction background should have a better chance at finding a job.

In the long run, this plan should be beneficial to everyone involved.

Drug War IV

Watch your neighbor: Drug users, dealers everywhere

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

Slats Grobnik pounded his fist on the bar and began singing: "Over there, over there, send the word, send the word, over there, that the Yanks are coming, the Yanks are coming..."

Excuse me, I interrupted, but why are you singing that old George M. Cohen war song?

"Because we're at war, dummy, and I'm not going to be a slacker."

What war is that?

"Where have you been? The great war on drugs. This will be the drug war to end all drug wars, to make the world's nostrils safe for democracy."

Ah, yes, the Drug War III or is it Drug War IV, I've lost track.

"Well, whatever, this time we're going to win. From the Halls of Montezuma, to the shores of Tripoli, we are..."

Wait a moment. Just what is it that you intend to do besides sit here and sing patriotic tunes?

"Do? I'm going to do everything that I can, whatever the commander in chief asks me. Off we go, into the wild blue yonder, flying high..."

But you don't use illegal drugs, do you?

"Course not. I only use legal stuff like beer."

Well, since you're not a user, you aren't one of the people the president says is causing the problem. Does your wife use drugs?

"Nah, she likes to chew a clove of garlic. She thinks it will help her outlive me so she can dye her hair blue and go to Florida and spend my insurance money running around with a gigolo."

Then excuse me for asking, but do you sell drugs?

"Are you crazy? If I sold drugs, do you think I'd be sitting here drinking beer with you? I'd be in a luxury penthouse, surrounded by gorgeous cokeheads, drinking champagne, wearing gold chains, listening to my $20,000 stereo, phoning out for a new Mercedes, just like the rest of those scumbags."

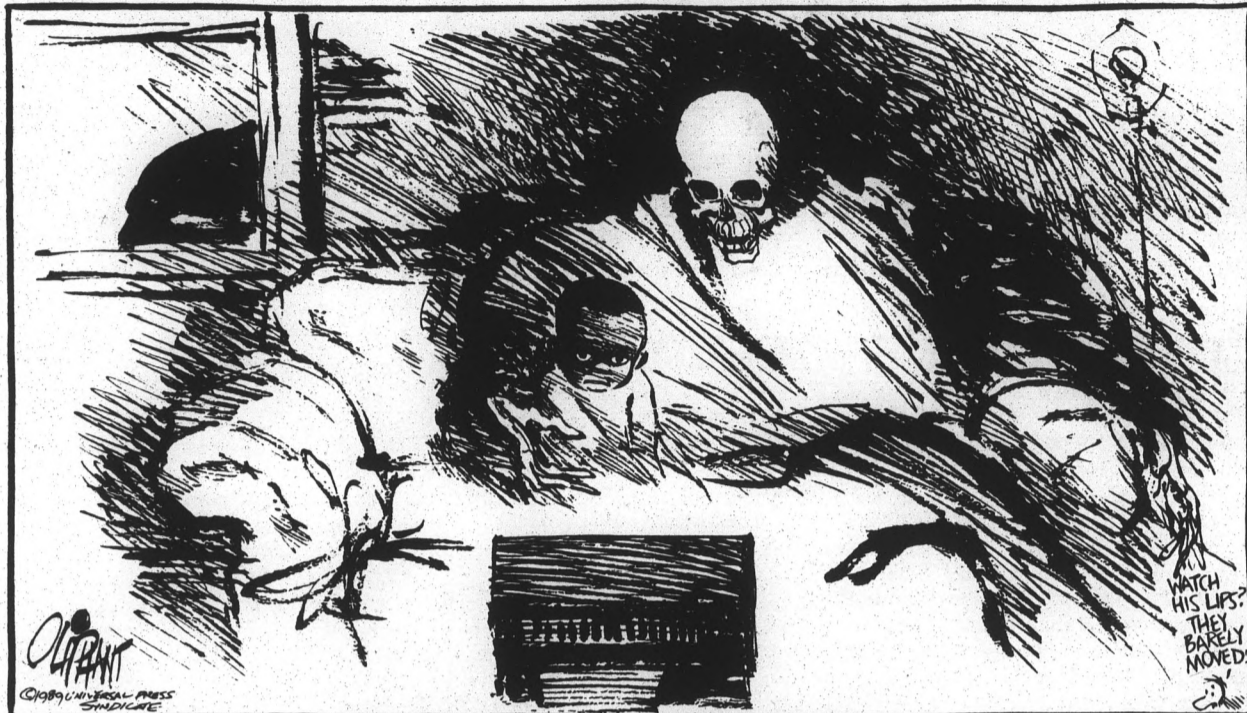

Then if you don't use drugs, and you don't sell drugs, how are you going to take part in Drug War IV? As the president said, the users and the sellers are the problems. Where do you fit in?

"I don't know yet, but I'll think of something."

Well, if you are eager to be a combatant, you could try to discourage others from sniffing or smoking illegal substances.

"Yeah, I could. Except I don't know anybody who does."

What about your neighbors? Aren't any of them users?

'WATCH HIS LIPS— NO MORE TAXES.'

"How would I know?"

Maybe you could find out. Peek in their windows and try to catch them in the act.

"What, and have cops nail me for being a peeping Tom?"

Then you might go beyond your neighborhood.

"Like where?"

Into those parts of the cities where it is known that drug use is rampant. In many poor, minority neighborhoods crack is being sold openly. So you might go into one of these ghettos and find a crack house, walk in, and urge the users to mend their ways, clean up their acts, and become responsible middle-class citizens.

"Yeah, and they'll probably grab my wallet, my watch, my wedding band, and pry out the gold in my teeth to buy some more crack. Forget it."

I suppose that's a possibility. Then you might consider keeping your eye peeled.

"Peeled for what?"

Suspicious-looking characters. For example, you could be walking down the street and suddenly see a Colombian unloading plastic bags filled with white powder from his car. So you rush to the phone and call the police.

"Good idea. Except I've lived in this town all my life and I never saw any Colombians or anybody else unloading plastic bags of white powder. All I ever seen was the neighbor ladies unloading bags of groceries."

Ah, but can you be sure that what those ladies have in those bags are groceries?

"I see what you mean. It could be anybody, right?"

Well, one never knows. You might wander over, engage them in conversation, and furtively poke a finger into the Pillsbury bag to see if it is really flour.

"Not a bad idea. Everybody keep an eye on everybody else."

That's it, we must all be vigilant. This is total war.

"Now that you mention it, I've been watching that guy a couple of stools down."

What about him?

"I notice he's been sniffing a lot. That's a telltale sign for dopers, ain't it?"

Yes, but I know him. He has all kinds of allergies.

"That's what he says. The old allergies trick. But do you see any pollen in the air?"

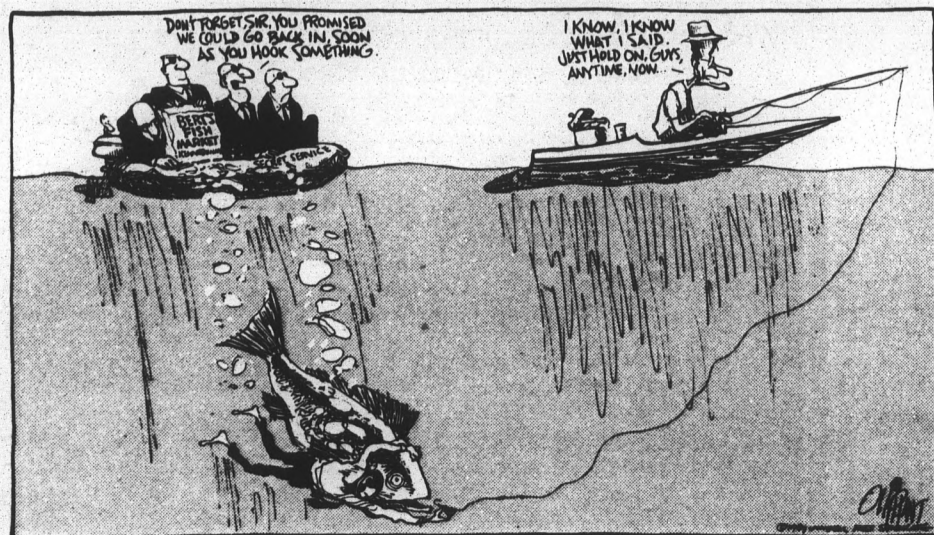

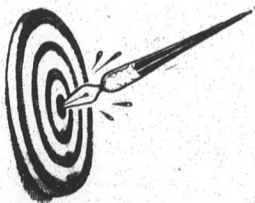

Now that you mention it, no.

"Why don't we take a walk over there and take a peek up his nose."

Are you serious?

"Hey, war is hell."

ASASU develops 'workable plan' to deal with racism

By MIKE VAN DYKE
State Press

The president of ASU's chapter of the NAACP said Wednesday that the Associated Students of ASU executive officers have developed what "appears to be a very receptive and workable plan" in dealing with racial tensions on campus.

Tanya Holmes, who met with ASASU President Paul Larson and activities vice president J'lein Liese Tuesday, said the two student representatives "seemed concerned about developing a program and asked me exactly what I thought needed to be done."

ASASU is placing a greater emphasis on addressing racial problems on campus this year in accordance with a 13-point plan against racism designed by the leaders of Students Against Racism and agreed upon by the ASU administration.

Students Against Racism is a group that formed last spring and held a historic student protest April 21 against incidents of racial violence at ASU, staging a 250-person sit-in at the north entrance to the MU.

Holmes

Larson

Liese said a concept has been considered to make the already existing ASASU Multi-Cultural Awareness Board into a "Senate-like" entity.

"We would like to establish MCAB like the Senate where there will be representatives from each of the different cultures," she said.

Holmes said it was agreed that MCAB will concentrate on programming cultural events and scheduling speakers to address specific cultural issues on campus.

The new arrangement will allow students who are having problems of a racial nature at ASU to address the board and seek advice from its members.

If problems brought to the board have a campus-wide impact, they will be channeled to Larson who will discuss the issues with administrators, Liese said.

The activities vice president said a written purpose statement addressing the additions and changes in philosophy at ASASU would be made available to students within the next two weeks.

Larson said he is "excited" about the new concept for MCAB.

"Specifically I like the changes because now decisions on these issues will be handled by a group of individuals who have lived through similar situations," he said. "As one individual, I don't have the breadth of experience to deal with these issues."

Holmes, who had earlier been concerned about the effectiveness of a restructured MCAB, said she is now "comfortable with the idea" and believes it to be a "workable plan."

Holmes said she is confident that Larson will work as an "effective and responsible mediator" between students and the administration.

She said her immediate goal is to continue working with the University administration and student government on the 13-point plan.

Prosecutor's incompetence led to murder, investigation finds

PHOENIX (AP) — A former Maricopa County prosecutor said he's not to blame, but an internal investigation contends he improperly sought dismissal of charges against a man now accused of murdering a woman a few days later.

"I don't see how it could get much worse than this, where you don't do your job and as a result, a catastrophe like this occurs," said Deputy County Attorney Paul Ahler, who supervises the office's criminal trial unit.

But former Deputy County Attorney James Braden's lawyer argues that Braden is being made a scapegoat by County Attorney Richard Romley and that his client has denied asking for a dismissal.

Braden, a 16-year veteran prosecutor who had received a good review on his 1988 evaluation, could not be reached for comment Wednesday.

His lawyer, Stanley Lubin, said the situation stemmed from an overloaded court system, a court scheduling error, a witness who was unavailable and conflicting statements from Braden's critics.

"What you have is a county attorney who seems to think that if you dump all over one guy, a problem in his (Romley's) office is going to go away," Lubin said.

On May 19, police discovered a burning body in the desert outside Buckeye. The body was identified from dental records as the body of Shandora Johnson-Morrow, 20, of Phoenix.

On May 20, Clinton Lee Spencer, 31, allegedly sold Johnson-Morrow's car to undercover agents, police said.

He since has been charged with first-degree murder, parole violations, robbery, aggravated robbery, trafficking in stolen property, theft of a motor vehicle and possession of drug paraphernalia, authorities said. Spencer has pleaded innocent to the charges.

Events had been set in motion April 17 when Spencer was arrested by Phoenix police on charges of armed robbery, aggravated robbery and two counts of theft. In addition, an allegation of violating probation on an earlier charge was filed.

On May 17, when a court hearing was scheduled on Spencer's probation violation case, Deputy County Attorney Randy Redpath, who was handling the office's cases that day before Superior Court Judge Gloria Ybarra, called Braden because he hadn't been left a file with written instructions.

According to the investigation, Braden went to court to meet with Redpath. After talking with a deputy public defender who wanted to postpone the case, Redpath recommended dismissal. Redpath, who has worked for the county for one year, said he did it at Braden's urging.

During an initial interview with Ahler and James Keppel, chief deputy county attorney, Braden conceded that he had made a few mistakes, according to the investigation.

However, in subsequent interviews and written communications, Braden has blamed the system, complaining about a lack of support staff and a lack of attorneys.

"It's frightening, if you think about it, and we wouldn't be able to get malpractice insurance if we ran a private office like we run that office," said Braden, who resigned Aug. 10.

Ahler, who has been assigned to prosecute Spencer, discovered the mistake that led to Braden's forced resignation when reviewing Spencer's files.

Ahler said he, Romley and others concluded that Braden handled the case improperly.

Ahler said he can't explain why Braden recommended the dismissal of a probation violation charge against Spencer, which freed him.

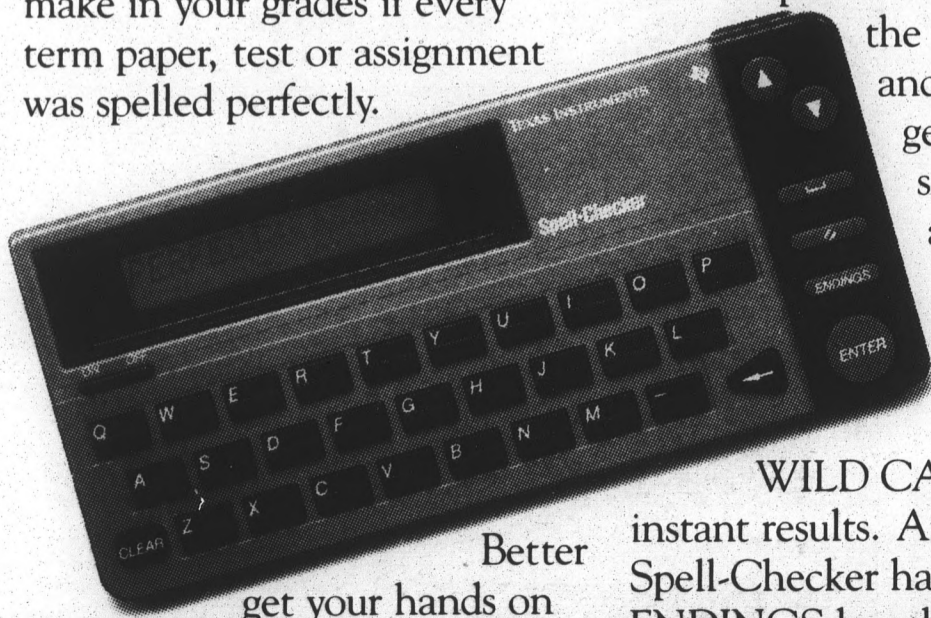

"(Braden) was physically in the court that day and it is our feeling that he definitely should have handled the case," Ahler said.

Lubin said Braden has denied asking for dismissal and said only that he was unprepared because he was involved in another trial and because a witness was unavailable.

FIJI's say they are putting past behind them, looking to future

By ELISE ELSBERRY
State Press

On a typical day, at least 15 Phi Gamma Delta fraternity members can be found gathering around the "FIJI tree."

The ASU fraternity that was thrown out of its campus home in 1987 may not have a house, but they have not disappeared. And new members say they are working hard to revitalize their organization and erase the stigma placed on their fraternity because of hazing violations.

The tree, located at the corner of Cady and Tyler malls, is the fraternity's "designated meeting spot." Before and between classes, FIJI members stop by the tree and catch up on the latest news.

FIJI member Marty Gonzales said most of the students in the fraternity stop by the tree to find out what is going on.

"We're trying to get back into everything," he said. "We're coming back strong."

The ASU chapter was banished from campus for hazing violations in November 1987. A Student Life hearing board ejected the fraternity from its Adelphi Drive home, currently occupied by Delta Tau Delta fraternity, and revoked the group's status as a campus organization, beginning Dec. 19, 1987.

But after a re-evaluation, Student Life agreed to let the FIJIs remain a campus organization.

John Ashton, FIJI member, said most of the fraternity's 45 members have put the past behind them and are concentrating on the future.

"We were guilty of some of the charges," he said. "But not all of the things that were brought up."

Ashton said the chapter is ready to prove themselves and put the violations in the past.

"Any fraternity caught hazing should be reprimanded," he said.

The fraternity is currently filling their calendar with intramural, philanthropic and social events.

The Phoenix Jaycees and the Ronald McDonald House should benefit by being the FIJI's philanthropic charities this year. Ashton said the fraternity is just as involved in the community as the other greek organizations on campus.

Ashton said the men in the house believe staying involved with the University and the greek system is the best way to prove they are serious about remaining an active organization on campus.

"We had a house cleaning of sorts and got rid of the guys giving us a bad name," he said.

Dean of Student Life Leon Shell said the FIJIs' probation will end in December, adding that three weeks ago, Student Life checked members' grades and determined that the fraternity was in compliance with the probation agreement.

"The officers (of the fraternity) have come in on a regular basis and we were impressed with the effort of the officers and the alumni," Shell said.

Ashton added the fraternity has to maintain a 2.50 cumulative house GPA to stay in good standing with the University.

"As with anyone in the University, we're concerned about scholarship," Ashton said.

Kelly Farland, Interfraternity Council vice president for internal affairs, praised the FIJIs for remaining intact as a group.

Scott Troyanos/State Press

"I have to give them a lot of credit," he said. "They have a lot of heart."

However, the IFC has not heard from the FIJIs since the fraternity fulfilled its rush requirements this fall.

"They (the FIJIs) had a tent set up for rush and had activities planned along with being rush counselors and rush marshals," Farland said. "But they haven't been to a (IFC) meeting this year."

As fall fraternity activities begin, Farland said it is difficult to get a fraternity in motion after the summer months — and not having a house makes it even more difficult.

But Aston said the FIJIs have banded together in an attempt to plan events for the year.

"Just because we don't have a house doesn't mean we're gone," he said.

Aston said fraternity members are looking for an off-campus location to accommodate the ASU chapter.

Ashton said all changes in a fraternity must come from within the chapter, adding that the members have to realize that hazing is not needed.

Farland agreed, adding that a house can achieve any goal with the support of the members.

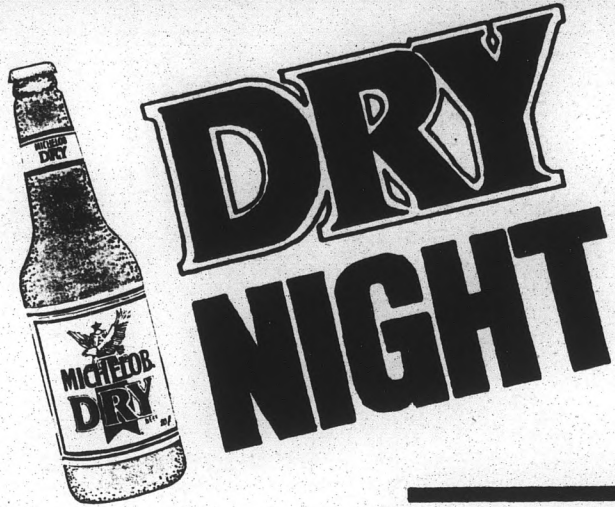

"Concerning chapter situations, the FIJIs are right about change coming from the inside," he said. "It's how you get things done."

Chairman urges Native American tribes to band together

By KELLY JAIN
State Press

Self-sufficiency and education will be the primary Native American issues of the 1990s, the Hopi Indian tribal chairman said Wednesday.

Ivan Sidney told an audience of 35 in the MU that Native American tribes need to stop fighting with each other and band together in order to progress economically and become self-sufficient.

"We need to look out for ourselves and exemplify that we're just as capable as anybody else," he said, adding that Native Americans must prove that the Bureau of Indian Affairs is no longer needed and the U. S. government will not take care of Native Americans forever.

Sidney was first elected Hopi tribal chairman in 1980 and served as Hopi police chief prior to that.

The chairman said education and the return of young people to the reservation also are important means for Hopis to Seventy-five percent of Native Americans that enter a university as freshmen do not return to the reservation, Sidney said, adding that economic opportunities in the cities lure the younger generations away.

However, Sidney said he was glad Young and Hat, a Korean company that produces National Baseball League team hats, decided to bring its business to the Hopi reservation. The chairman said he was amazed that a war-torn country such as Korea could make an economic come-back by capturing the technology.

On the education side, Sidney said he recently received 20 scholarships for Hopi and Navajo tribe members from the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in California.

"Education has been a top priority of Sidney's administration," said Karen Stone, secretary of ASU's American Indian Institute.

Sidney's speech was sponsored by the ASU Associated Students Multi-cultural Awareness Board and the ASU American Indian Institute.

Fund shortage leaves Navajos without assistance checks

WINDOW ROCK (AP) — Navajo general assistance checks have not been issued for September to 7,900 Navajos due to a shortage in the allotment issued by the federal government, officials said.

"We have no money," Albert Long, director of Navajo Social Services, told the Tribal Council on Tuesday as it reconvened their summer session. "We have no dollars at all for general assistance checks."

Long projected that $2.2 million is needed for this month's checks to needy Navajo families. The checks are issued to Navajos who live far below the poverty level.

"People are calling, asking for their general assistance checks," he said.

Long said the Federal Bureau of Indian Affairs is trying to find the money and that the agency was told of a $5.8 million shortage in the allotment as far back as April.

James Stevens, Navajo area director for the BIA, said

Wednesday the agency had shifted money within its social-service account to cover the allotments in July and August and expected to move funds from another account to pay for September's checks.

Stevens said September's checks should go out later this week.

The BIA requested but was not given enough money for its social-service account in the federal fiscal year that ends at month's end, but the agency hopes to change that with the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1, he said.

As the Tribal Council began the process of approving a six-month, $40.9 million budget, Councilman Percy Deal encouraged the council to consider the possibility of establishing a sales tax on the reservation.

"It's not just us; millions of non-Navajos travel, criss-crossing the reservation," Deal said, adding that Navajos think little of paying the sales tax in Gallup, N.M.

Councilman Anderson Tully urged the council to increase funding for emergency services to Navajos living on lands affected by relocation. Tully then questioned interim Chairman Leonard Haskie's recent efforts toward cooperation with Hopi Chairman Ivan Sidney.

Haskie responded that he told the Hopis that the Navajo Nation remains opposed to relocation, but that the tribes have to talk and not antagonize one another.

In his opening address, Haskie called for a balanced budget based on tribal revenues of $46.5 million, minus a mandatory amount placed in permanent trust funds, leaving $40.9 million. Haskie encouraged the council to approve a budget without improprieties.

"As elected leaders, we must ensure that the money of the Navajo people is not spent for private or personal gain and for unauthorized or illegal purposes," Haskie told the council.

plant would employ more than 2,000 people and add at least $1 billion to the state economy.

"It continues to be the goal of the board and the universities to assist the state in this cooperative effort and we look forward to its successful conclusion," Broad stated in a letter to Mofford.

The board has been working with a steering committee to examine sites for the proposed plant during the past six weeks, Broad said. The committee, comprised of representatives from UofA, ASU and state and local legislators, formulated a request that will be given to U.S. Memories this Friday.

Broad said part of the sites' attraction is their close proximity to major universities.

"The (benefits) are that both ASU and UofA have significant programs in engineering, computer science and research," Broad said.

However, Burkhart said the proximity to the universities had little to do with the site selection.

"I think it's an attractive feature but not a principle feature," said Burkhart.

Burkhart, who represented ASU on the site selection committee, declined to comment on the criteria that led the company to consider the sites. Several sites in the state were under consideration, he said.

Broad said that in addition to having research advantages, U.S. Memories will benefit the universities as well.

U.S. Memories, which is currently forming, will manufacture semi-conductor computer chips or D-RAMS. D-RAMS are dynamic random access memories that work in many micro devices.

Broad said the company is attempting to "takehold in the market in the face of the Japanese (technological) takeover."

The proposed sites have been approved by the Council of Presidents, which comprises the presidents of the three state universities.

Study: Books give dull view of history

WASHINGTON (AP) — Commonly used high school textbooks too often give students a picture of American history that is without color, passion, point or interest, a study released by the American Federation of Teachers said Wednesday.

The 158-page critique by historian Paul Gagnon analyzed five books and said they neglect the role of religion in American history, give short shrift to Old World roots and fail to explore deeply the thinking of such major figures as Abraham Lincoln.

"History is, above all, a good story and the truth is always the best story to tell ourselves," Gagnon wrote in the study titled "Democracy's Half-Told Story: What American History Textbooks Should Add."

The writers, he said, "labor too hard to balance affirmation and negation, and the result is a detached neutrality, passionless about both the ugly and the beautiful moments in our history."

"Whatever the case, the picture drawn for students is often colorless, without point or interest."

Gagnon, a professor of history at the University of Massachusetts, wrote the book for the Education for Democracy Project, a joint venture of the federation, an AFL-CIO union representing 710,000 teachers, the Educational Excellence Network and Freedom House.

He wrote that the longest sketch of Lincoln in any of the books is a six-paragraph account in "A History of the United States" by Daniel J. Boorstin and Brooks M. Kelley and even it "does not reach to Lincoln's beliefs or depth of character."

He said Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Hamilton and Franklin "all fail to earn adequate descriptions of their ideas, intellect, character or work" in any of the five books.

Gagnon gave the highest marks to "History of a Free People," by Henry W. Bragdon and Samuel P. McCutchen, published by Macmillan in 1981, saying it is superior to the others in writing style, analysis and "thoughtful remarks on economic, intellectual and world perspectives."

He said the Boorstin and Kelley book, published by Ginn and Company in 1986, "follows closely behind" in style and organization, with a narrative that is "unusually vigorous" and "less cluttered than the other three."

The remaining texts, said Gagnon, "manage to pale down and flatten out even the tragedy of the Civil War."

Battle over zoning for supermarket predicted by city council

By LAURA SCHMIDT
State Press

The Tempe City Council is expected to encounter a heated battle with residents when it decides whether to rezone the old Rural School site to allow construction for one of the largest supermarkets in Tempe.

The Tempe Planning and Zoning Commission voted 6-1 Wednesday evening on a recommendation that the Rural School site be rezoned from a residential to a commercial property. The council will make its final vote in about three weeks.

If the council votes to rezone the land and approves the site plan, a two-story building for district offices and the Utah-based Smith's supermarket will be constructed.

Mario Martinez, an ASU graduate student and co-chairman for the Rural School Site Petition Committee, said the supermarket will be the eighth store in a four-mile radius and will cause traffic congestion.

"I think it's unnecessary," he said. "It's like supermarket city. It's such a big supermarket on such a bad stretch of street."

Martinez added that the intersection of Southern Avenue and Rural Road, one of the busiest crossroads in the city, was the site of 52 accidents last year.

The Tempe Elementary School District owns the land and wants to lease the eight acres at Rural Road and Southern Avenue to Smith's supermarket.

The district also would like to develop the property to raise money for education. A representative in Superintendent Bob Orci's office, said the district would earn about $2 million every year by leasing the property and collecting a percentage of the supermarket's sales.

The northeast corner of Southern Ave. and Rural Road is the proposed site of the disputed supermarket.

A 50-year lease of the site is expected to add as much as $19 million to the district's budget.

City planners have recommended approval of the district plan, which consists of the 37,000-square-foot office building on the north end of the property and the 86,000-square-foot grocery store on the south.

But Tempe City Councilwoman Barbara Sherman said the site is unique because of its close proximity to the cultural services offered in the new Tempe Public Library.

"I just don't feel that the project in that site is in the best interests of the city of Tempe," she said.

Sherman said a "park-like" environment with recreation facilities, fountains and picnic areas would better benefit the city.

Giving is Natural

The American patriot Nathan Hale said "I regret that I have but one life to give my country." This boldly illustrates the universal principle of selfless giving we find everywhere in nature, but rarely practiced among human beings.

We are to live for others and they for us. A person of goodness is habitually giving and serving, motivated by absolute unselfishness. Such a lifestyle results in peace, harmony, and prosperity.

On the contrary, an evil person lives for himself at the expense of others. He violates the natural principle of universal giving and twists it into a principle of selfish taking shown by the breakdown and dissatisfaction of modern society.

Such people look solely for personal gain and desire to be served rather than to serve.

Live your life for others and you will find prosperity

It may seem that total giving would lead to ruin, but it will not. The only reason it may not always bring prosperity to you is because you do not give to the very end. In the middle you suddenly become skeptical.

You change your heart or pity yourself and thus spiritually shrink from the law of total giving. The good result never materializes. Total giving is the way of prosperity.

Many ASU graduates have influential, famous careers

By KIMBERLY HARRIS
State Press

Graduating from ASU could lead to an influential career.

At least it did for some who have become businessmen, politicians, sports figures and comedians.

"Approximately 30 state legislators are ASU graduates," said Don Dotts, executive director of the ASU Alumni Association. He added that alumni and friends pump about $3.3 million into the annual alumni fund.

"The alumni association is a way to keep track of the alumni so they can be proud of ASU and feel good about helping out when they're needed," Dotts said.

Vada Manager, who graduated from ASU in 1983, currently serves as Gov. Rose Mofford's press secretary and said he is proud to be an ASU alumnus.

"When I arrived at ASU in '77, I knew it was a special place," he said. "Coming back 10 years later and seeing the improvements that have been made on campus is very impressive." Manager said he was put in an awkward position at the ASU football game Saturday night.

"I had to sit on the Kansas State side

Manager

because one of my friends from grammar school was on the alumni board at KSU," he said. "I was surrounded by people in purple shirts so I had to cheer to myself."

Phoenix Mayor Terry Goddard, who graduated from ASU in 1976, said, "attending ASU (College of Law) gave me a solid springboard for later involvement in community issues and law, and ultimately was of great benefit as I became active in political areas."

Other local politicians who graduated from the University include Scottsdale Mayor Herb Drinkwater, Tempe Mayor Harry Mitchell and Arizona Congressman Bob Stump.

Mitchell said he received a well-rounded education at ASU.

"Years ago, ASU had a lab elementary school through the College of Education that I attended from first through eighth grade," he said. "After high school, I continued my education at ASU, and I am impressed with the growth and the quality of the beautiful campus."

Other famous University graduates include comedian Steve Allen and Marilyn Coffenger, who was at one time the highest ranking female officer in the U. S. Air Force.

Dotts said ASU alumni who have gone into business careers include the following: Ed Carson, president of First Interstate Bank Corporation (1951); James Loper, executive director of the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences (1953); and Wayne Doran, president of Ford Motor Company Land Development Corporation (1956).

In the world of sports, ASU ranks 3rd in overall NFL draft picks with a total of 35 alumni. Athletes Danny White, quarterback with the Dallas Cowboys; Rick Monday, former outfielder for the Chicago Cubs and Los Angeles Dodgers; and Alvin Davis, first baseman for the Seattle Mariners are all graduates of ASU.

Al Michaels, ABC Monday Night Football broadcaster, also graduated from ASU. Michaels was the sports editor for the State Press during his college years.

Tempe Police Report

Tempe police reported the following incidents which occurred between 7 a.m. Tuesday and 7 a.m. Wednesday:

- A man found a large number of stereo speakers in his son's closet, including large studio floor speakers and new components still in boxes.
- The man contacted police who connected the stolen goods with a recent burglary at Rockford, Inc., a speaker manufacturing company at 613 S. Rockford Drive. The equipment is valued at $5,300.
- Police arrested two suspects and are looking for two more in connection with the burglary.
- A Marcos deNiza High School student was arrested in connection with two burglaries at two Tempe high schools.
- Police believe he obtained a pass key June 22 to gain entry to the school auditorium at Marcos DeNiza and stole stereo equipment belonging to a nearby church.
- Police are also charging him with a burglary at McClintock High School that occurred July 16. They believe he used a pass key to gain entry to the computer room where three McIntosh monitors and a computer mainframe were stolen.

- A Marcos DeNiza student was arrested after he called in a bomb threat to the high school from his home.
  - An ASU student was arrested for driving with a suspended license.
  - A man found explosives in a box when he was helping his parents move. Neither he nor his parents know where the explosives came from. The explosives are being held at the Tempe Police Department bomb squad.
  - A student reported receiving harassing phone calls at his apartment. The caller phoned six times in one evening and threatened his life.
  - In separate incidents, three men were arrested for shoplifting at Smitty's grocery store, 5100 S. McClintock Drive.
- Compiled by State Press reporter Tenny Tatusian.

Sean Mohr/State Press

Sophomore quick guard Jeff White, who strained his shoulder against the Wildcats, has returned to practice and may be able to play Saturday. If not, sophomore Paul DeBono will join senior Tony Sherman in the Sun Devils' starting lineup.

Martz said he is expecting a tremendous clash against the Spartans.

"We're going to be in a dogfight Saturday night."

Sun Devils expect fast-pace game

By JOEL HORN
State Press

Most football coaches will say the name of the game is speed, and the San Jose State University defense has plenty of it.

Mike Martz, ASU's offensive coordinator, said his primary concern in developing a game plan to attack the Spartans Saturday is the speed of their defense, particularly junior cornerbacks Paul Franklin and Eddie Thomas.

"Their corners are as good as we'll face all year long," he said.

SJSU Head Football Coach Claude Gilbert said he is worried about the Spartans' ability to handle the size and strength of ASU's offensive line, but Martz said that's a bunch of hogwash.

"He's just blowing smoke," Martz said. "I think they feel really good about their chances Saturday."

In addition to Franklin and Thomas, Martz said he is impressed with senior noseguard George Muraoka.

He said SJSU will attempt to shake things up in the trenches.

"They'll try to make things miserable for our offensive line with stunts and blitzes," Martz said. "We're a little apprehensive about some of the things they'll do."

The Spartans' schedule annually includes several Pac-10 teams, and this year's calendar is comprised of games against ASU, Stanford and California.

"They can play with a lot of teams in the Pac-10," Martz said. "We will have to play much better than last week to beat San Jose State."

Despite last Saturday's 31-0 blowout of Kansas State University, Martz said "overconfidence does not apply with this group."

Martz said he was pleased with the performance of junior quarterback Paul Justin, who completed 17 of 22 passes for 194 yards and two touchdowns against the Wildcats.

"He finds ways to make plays," he said. "You don't hesitate on anything you call."

Martz said he does not anticipate playing redshirt freshman quarterback Kurt Lasher Saturday.

However, Martz said redshirt freshman fullback Jeff Simoneau is "more comfortable" and will split playing time with sophomore Kelvin Fisher, currently the third leading rusher in the Pac-10.

"Because Jeff is a freshman, you may see him a little more this week," Martz said.

This season, the Sun Devils are using more zone blocking and fewer pulling guards to open holes for running backs — a change Martz said worked well against KSU.

However, at times the offensive line failed to work as a unit.

"It's a consistency thing," he said. "At times we lacked execution by the backs and offensive line."

The line was decimated by injuries against KSU.

Senior strong guard Fedel Underwood sprained his back and is definitely out of Saturday's game. His backup, sophomore Bill Doverspike, damaged his knee and will undergo arthroscopic surgery Friday to determine the extent of his injury.

Swedish talent boosts ASU mens, womens golf teams

By PAUL CORO
State Press

As one scans the 1989-90 rosters for the ASU mens and womens golf teams, they begin to read more like a list of the Swedish National Teams.

The influx of European players on American college teams has placed three Swedish players on the Sun Devils' squads.

Senior Per Johansson and freshmen Lars Herne and Ulrika von Heijne chose to move thousands of miles from home for the opportunity to play college golf in the U. S.

"It is a great opportunity for them to get a quality education," Men's Coach Steve Loy said. "They can improve their game and go back (to Sweden) as professional players."

Johansson was the first of the current group to make the move and a vital link in landing the new recruits.

Johansson met Loy through the reference of his Alexander City Junior College coach, who is a friend of Loy. Loy then went to see him play in the National Junior College Championship.

Johansson said he came to ASU because of the scholarship, the team's talent and how impressed he was when he saw the new course in progress.

"I have been really impressed with the coach (Loy)," Johansson said. "He is a good motivator. I heard good things about him, but I did not know he was that good."

Johansson's biggest problems in adjusting at ASU have been the weather and his time schedule. He is not accustomed to having little or no free time for a social life.

Loy said that because Johansson came to ASU through a junior college, he is more adjusted culturally.

"The people are great here," Johansson said. "When I tell people I am Swedish, they are really friendly. In Sweden, people are not as open."

Loy discovered Herne through references by Johansson and other American coaches who were recruiting him. Like Johansson, Herne is from Kalmar, Sweden.

"Technically, he is well-versed in the game," Loy said. "Like all freshman, he has a lot to learn about shot-making. He will be an outstanding college player."

Herne decided to enroll at ASU because "it is a great way to combine academics and sports."

Herne said the adjustment has been fairly easy outside the radically different climate. The snowy winters in Sweden only allow for about a six-month golf season.

"The course conditions are excellent here all year round," Herne said. "The ASU course is terrific."

The third Swedish player is a member of the womens team. Coach Linda Vollstedt had a lot of help in recruiting von Heijne.

Not only did former Swedish Sun Devils

Pia Nilsson and Charlotte Montgomery act as ambassadors to ASU, but Herne is von Heijne's boyfriend and former high school classmate.

"Everything is new. I have never been in an English-speaking country," von Heijne said. "It is an experience, but I like to do it. I am curious to learn more."

Von Heijne had a difficult time in choosing ASU because of the team's talent and the difficulty in making the traveling team. She considered BYU but she said that their rules are too restrictive.

Another difficult transition for von Heijne has been playing from the mens championship tees rather than the womens tee, which makes a round about 400 yards shorter.

Von Heijne has not had any trouble fitting in with her teammates, though.

"The team is so good and so nice," she said. "They really take care of me."

Vollstedt, like Loy with his Swedish players, just now is beginning to learn about von Heijne's game and demeanor.

"I am very pleased with her game and her work habit," Vollstedt said. "She fits in with the team very well."

Spikers expect challenge from veteran Ducks

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

The Oregon Ducks will bring their fully returned starting lineup to P.E. East tonight for the Sun Devils' Pac-10 home opener starting at 7:30 pm.

Due to the Ducks' highly experienced volleyball squad, ASU Coach Patti Snyder said she is not taking the competition lightly.

"They are a much improved team," Snyder said. "We expect a handful from them."

Among Oregon's offensive threats, Snyder said, are middle blocker Dawn Charroin, who boasted a 1.59 blocking average in 1988, and All-Pac-10 outside hitter Michele Krebsbach, who led the team in attacks, serves and digs last season.

"Krebsbach can be an absolutely dominating hitter," Snyder said.

Snyder also said that although Oregon's offense is not complex, it is efficient. She plans to break the Ducks' tempo by coming on strong defensively.

"I'm more concerned with what we are doing on our side of the net," she said. "Defensively, we should match up as well or better (as Oregon)."

Even though the Sun Devils will have home-court advantage tonight, Snyder said that Oregon should go unimpeded.

"They're gonna be veteran, and they're gonna be hungry," she said, adding that it is essential for the Sun Devils to set the mood of play first.

"We cannot play to Oregon's tempo."

After two previous weekend tournaments, Snyder said the team has settled on a permanent starting lineup consisting of Tina Berg and Sue Nord as middle-blockers, Mindy Gowell, Debbie Penney and Tracie Kisro as outside hitters, and Noelle Fridrich as setter.

Snyder also said that she has been pleased with the overall execution of the offense.

"We have really kicked up our intensity level," she said. Although the starters are secured, Snyder has been moving the whole team in and out of the games.

"Offensively, we're using a lot of people," she said.

Last weekend, ASU competed in a Fullerton tournament, in which they finished fifth, bringing their non-conference record to 5-4.

Snyder said that in spite of some basic fundamental skills which hold room for improvement, she mostly noticed good aspects of her team's play.

"I found out that we were able to bounce back and play hard even when we were down," she said. "And our serving has improved."

ASU netter met her match in pro tennis tournament

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

Winning was not a major concern of Jill Hamilton's when she competed in the Virginia Slims of Arizona tennis tournament Monday.

The senior ASU tennis player was more concerned with gaining experience from the pro-circuit tournament which was held at Chandler's San Marcos Sheraton.

"I will use the experience to help our team," Hamilton said. "You get a lot of experience from working with the pros."

Hamilton got the opportunity to compete in the Virginia Slims pro-tournament because she was from Chandler. In each traveling tournament of this type, a local is chosen to compete.

And although Hamilton is not able to compete as a regular on the pro-circuit, she entered the Virginia Slims as an amateur.

To her surprise, Hamilton said that she and doubles partner Jill Davis from Tucson, were a compatible duo during competition — even though they lost 6-3, 6-4.

"It showed me that I can compete on that level," Hamilton said. "Before, I thought I didn't have a chance."

The team Hamilton and her partner competed against, Kristine Radford and Mary Norwood, were both regulars on the circuit, and fresh college graduates.

"They were college girls I've played before," Hamilton said. "They were of the same caliber, just older and faster."

The purpose of a professional tournament of this type is to enable women on the pro-circuit to gain points for individual competition. The points eventually represent money.

The Virginia Slims was a $10,000 tournament. Part of being an amateur, however, is refusing money for play.

Hamilton met with her pre-chosen partner in Tucson two weeks prior to the tournament. Because it was an individual competition, the partners received no coaching. Most of their practice was with other teammates.

Hamilton said that she learned a lot about her own style by playing against professional competitors.

"The experience just opened my eyes and showed me what I need to do," she said. "Which is work a little harder."

As a senior, Hamilton is contemplating what to do when she graduates. She said after Monday's experience, she is seriously considering going on the pro-circuit.

"I'm interested in trying it," she said.

Mens golf team opens season in Japan

By PAUL CORO
State Press

The top-ranked ASU mens golf team will open its season in grand fashion Tuesday with an international tournament in the land of sushi and 4 a.m. tee times.

The NCAA chose ASU as one of four American universities to play in the 12-team field at the USA-Japan Friendship Tournament.

"It was an honor to be selected," Coach Steve Loy said. "We play every tournament to win, but the emphasis this time is on rewarding players for academics and last year's performances."

The five-veteran team making the trip will be comprised of seniors Dave Cunningham, Per Johansson, Todd Kernaghan, Scott Frisch and sophomore Phil Mickelson, the defending NCAA individual champion.

The seniors won a combined five tournaments this summer while Mickelson played for the U. S. Walker Cup team.

"This should be a fun trip, nobody has ever been there," Mickelson said. "The team could use a nice win to start off the season."

As well as competing in team and medal play, Mickelson will be paired with Texas junior Michiko Hattori, who has been the top-ranked female in Japan for several years. Mickelson and Hattori will play together as the American mixed team representatives.

ASU was last invited to the Japanese tournament in 1984, when the team finished second and Billy Mayfair took medalist honors. The Sun Devils have made three Friendship Tournament appearances in this decade.

"The education and culture that they will experience is invaluable," Loy said.

ASU will have stiff competition in trying to maintain its No. 1 pre-season ranking. Other top 10 teams, Ohio State, Georgia Tech and Fresno State will challenge the Sun Devils. The host country boasts 18 squads in the tourney. The most talented of which is Nihon University, Loy said.

Loy, also in his first trip to Japan, expects humid and rainy conditions will come into play. He said that the Tanagura Golf Course in Susikima, which is three hours from Tokyo, is much like the long, hilly, tree-lined courses of California.

The team will depart for Tokyo on Friday, where it will spend three days. In their spare time, the players plan to take a tour.

"Our main goal is to win the tournament, but we also want to have a good time," said Johansson, who won the Scandinavian Open this summer.

Johansson said he may be able to adjust more easily to the jetlag since he goes home to play in Sweden every summer. Tempe and Tokyo are 10 hours apart.

Swedish

Vollstedt said she would like to stay with American recruits because of the risk involved in bringing in foreign players whose attitude is unknown until arrival.

On the other hand, Vollstedt said it is nice to have international players because they have strong educational backgrounds and are well-disciplined. She also has coached players from Canada and England.

Loy said that he will continue to recruit the best players whether they are American or foreign.

"There is nothing but quality about them (Swedish players)," Loy said. "They are humble, respectful, academically well-fit and have an unbelievable work habit."

Loy said that foreign players need time to adjust to a new country and a higher level of golf.

"They are not used to having so many opportunities," Loy said. "Like all people who get a lot of good things at once, they can be distracted."

The structure of Swedish golf is quite different from the United States. The focus for young players in Sweden is to make the national team.

Golf is a social sport which is not played in high school. Fees are also much less expensive in Sweden. An entire family may play golf at a country club for about $500.

The Swedish Golf Federation is organized so that when the players return to their home, they will be set with corporate sponsors.

In the meantime, the two freshmen will learn from their mentors while Johansson will continue to improve and prepare himself for the pro tour.

"He will have an outstanding year," Loy said. "The sooner he can win, the better he will be. By second semester, he is going to be a dynamic threat to win tournaments."

Former archer targets new role

By KEITH ROSENHAGEN
State Press

Another semester has dawned for the ASU archery program and among the newcomers to the squad is returning All-America archer Mike Bergenheier.

Although Bergenheier's collegiate eligibility ended at the end of last semester, his leadership has not. Through the position of assistant head coach, he maintains himself as an integral part of the squad.

Bergenheier established himself as a leader with first place finishes in the 1988 and 1989 U.S. Intercollegiate Championships.

Prior to the end of the 1989 fall semester, Bergenheier also was honored as the Sun Angel Foundation Male Athlete of the Year. This is an award given on the basis of athletic as well as scholastic achievement.

Following the culmination of the spring semester, Bergenheier said he had hoped to compete in the Olympic Festival in Oklahoma City last summer. However, his hopes were dashed after finishing seventh, one spot below the team's allowable roster, during the tryouts held in Long Beach, Calif.

Bergenheier, who described the festival as a type of intra-national Olympic games, had hoped to compete among the top six archers from the Western and Eastern states.

"After I won the collegiate national the second time in a row, I took some time off and just hadn't practiced," he said. "I'm not trying to make excuses, but . . ."

Bergenheier, lacking only nine hours to complete his bachelor of science degree in chemistry, originally was planning to continue his education at the Life Chiropractic College West in Oakland, Calif.

Instead, he registered at ASU for 12 hours.

"Various things happened: For one, I thought I could get more (aid) money for my graduate degree," he said.

Bergenheier had obtained a grant for $3,000 per year to attend the chiropractic college with the stipulation that he had successfully completed no more than 76 credit hours. Unfortunately, he brought with him 117 hours, he said.

After a long summer of traveling to tournaments and a short stint working construction on a gold mine in Battlemountain, Nev., Bergenheier said he feels prepared to work along side of Sheri Rhodes, head coach of the ASU archery squad.

"It really isn't anything new, we've worked closely before," he said referring to when he coached the team during Rhodes' absence to the 1988 Olympic Games in Seoul, South Korea.

Rhodes, who is optimistic about having Bergenheier as her assistant, said finding someone to replace him as a competitor for the ASU squad will be no easy task.

"We have the potential to replace Mike," she said. "We just need to work on getting those (new) people into the right mode thinking they can replace him."

Bergenheier said the new archers have to go through the personal adjustments associated with merely going to a university.

"Archery is a sport that requires a lot of your own time in a personal effort," he said.

The ASU archery program will begin competition in mid-October. The squad will be forced to make adjustments to their new practice field located west of Rural Road by the softball fields.

Bergenheier said he is a little disappointed in the decision to move their place of practice.

"Before they had an ideal location, you could go shoot between classes," he said. "Now you can't do it. You have to ride your bike over, and then there's no time to shoot."

Whatever adaptations need to be made, the ASU archers have an outstanding record in the field of collegiate archery. No matter what field they're outstanding in.
