University investigating sicknesses in building

By SCOTT SECKEL and TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

University employees and students are experiencing daily cases of nausea, dizziness and headaches in the Classroom Office Building B-wing caused by possible ventilation problems.

"There is something circulating in the air causing physical reactions," said Cheryl Perea, a 23-year-old senior economics major who works in the COB. "The main fear is that the makeup of the building is not good for circulation."

Recently, the building was inspected by various University departments including the Physical Plant and the department of planning and construction, said Jack Shafer, ASU director of academic facilities.

Because these departments were not able to offer solutions to the problem, the University administration decided to bring in private consultants to test the air, said

Eric Guilbeau, assistant chairman of the chemical and bioengineering department.

In addition, Guilbeau said he has experienced some symptoms apparently connected with the building's environment.

He cited complaints by faculty including eye irritation, sleepiness, lack of concentration and disorientation.

"The complaints are from people who are in the building for most of the day and into the night," he said. "This is (where) their base of operation (is)."

Each person is experiencing different symptoms from the conditions, Perea said.

"But we've all had headaches and bad dispositions," she said. "Some people are falling asleep, and I had a dizzy spell. I dread going to work because the whole time I'm in there I have a headache."

Zemrus agreed and said, "We've also been offered the option of transferring right

Student seats for ASU basketball face relocation

The Basketball Ticket Review Committee is considering moving the ASU student section from its current location to one corner of the University Activity Center.

Paul Larson, president of Associated Students of ASU, said the committee is ignoring student interests in order to accommodate premium season ticket holders.

"I think this would be a very bad move for the committee to make," Larson said, after a two and a half-hour meeting with the committee Wednesday afternoon.

"It is simply unfair to students. This is a student facility and proper arrangements have to be made for students."

Vic Cegles, who serves on the 12-member committee that was created to evaluate the current organization of ticket sales and make recommendations to Athletic Director Charles Harris, emphasized the fact that nothing has been finalized.

"It is premature to say anything about the student

Re-entry students mix family, school

By CINDY PETERSON
Contributing Writer

Dolores Hauptman is "thirtysomething," married and has seven children ranging in ages from 3 to 16, but she is facing the biggest challenge of her life.

Hauptman is an ASU junior who has not been a full-time student for more than 15 years.

"I didn't realize the parking lots were so far away," she said. "I just missed the tram from Lot 59 (the other day), and I took off walking. I felt like I'd just done aerobic exercises."

The ASU junior is one of more than 10,000 re-entry students at the University. Like the others, she is older than 25 and has decided to come back to school. She is majoring in communications and is enrolled in 14 credit hours this semester.

"Re-entry students are more the norm than the exception now," said Lois Deeley, program coordinator for ASU's Re-entry Program. She said the average age of ASU students is about 28.

Hauptman, who quit her schooling to rear her family more than 15 years ago, has had to face the same rigors as thousands of other new students — filing for and picking up financial aid, enduring long lines at registration, buying books and so on.

She said being the only student older than 21 in some of her classes made her uncomfortable.

"At first I think the other students kind of wondered what I was doing there," she said. "But after being in classes a week it's different. The kids are real nice and I think it's going to be fine."

Hauptman said traditional-age students are getting used to sharing the classroom.

"After all, we (re-entry students) represent almost one fourth of the student body," she said.

In addition to her student routine, Hauptman faces the chores of managing a household and caring for children. But she has not faced her challenge alone.

Hauptman relies on the help and support of her family. Her husband, Joe, who is regional franchise consultant for Foodmaker, Inc./Jack In The Box, and her three older children all help with cleaning, cooking and babysitting.

"At first my husband didn't take me too seriously," she said. "He would tell the kids, 'Leave your mother alone, she's self-actualizing.'"

"Now he's really good. He sat down with (the kids) and said, 'Your mother needs your help. You need to do this and this, and you've got to be good, and you've got to let her study.' That really made me feel good."

In light of her family's encouragement, Hauptman enjoys her new student status.

"I've been saying for years I'm going to finish (my education), and now I think, why did I wait so long," she said. "I got an ASU brochure in the mail about a workshop for re-entry people."

Hauptman went to the workshop and was inspired by the information available and by the network of people willing to help.

"That's when I said, 'O.K., I'm going to do it now,'" she said.

Hauptman was also selected to represent the Adult Re-entry Center through its STAR Program (Seminar Training for Adult Re-Entry). In addition, she will receive a scholarship and upper-division credit for para-professional counseling experience and professional development classes.

She will also put in volunteer time at the Re-Entry Center. "I hope I can help other people like me make their transition (to ASU) easier," she said.

USAir plane skids into East River on takeoff; 2 passengers killed

NEW YORK (AP) — A USAir 737 carrying 62 people skidded off a runway on takeoff from LaGuardia Airport late Wednesday, landing in the East River near the city jail at Rikers Island, authorities said.

At least two people were killed, said Fire Department Dispatcher Adam Krause. The Port Authority also said it had reports of fatalities.

Officials had no figures on possible injuries. One passenger reported that the aircraft split into two or three pieces.

Some people were trapped in the plane's tail section and were being removed, said Coast Guard Lt. Commander Paul Milligan.

Milligan said the plane skidded off the runway during takeoff and landed in the water, about 2,000 feet from the end of the runway, at 11:35 p.m. EDT.

The Coast Guard said the plane remained afloat and was in relatively shallow water, 25 to 40 feet deep.

East-bloc refugees pour into West, set off worldwide 'emotional wave'

BONN, West Germany — More than 800 East Germans still are flooding to the West every day, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher reported on Wednesday.

The West German government urged East bloc leaders to be pragmatic about the exodus, and an East German politician asked for reforms to stop "children of the revolution" from fleeing.

Genscher said the refugee crisis has set off "an emotional wave affecting the whole world," government spokesman Hans Klein reported.

Klein told reporters the rush of East Germans escaping through Hungary continued, with 416 new arrivals in West Germany in the 24 hours ending noon Wednesday.

He said an additional 400 East Germans with permission to emigrate have been arriving in West Germany daily over the past few days.

More than 17,500 East Germans have come to West Germany through Hungary in the past 10 days, swelling the emigration tide through mid-September to the 100,000 mark earlier predicted for the entire year.

As many as 200,000 are expected to get to West Germany this year, a record of legal emigration and refugees since the Berlin Wall was built in 1961.

Most refugees are young families fleeing economic stagnation and a Stalinist political system that East Berlin's leaders refuse to change despite reforms sweeping the communist world.

Bomb may have felled jetliner, authorities say of Nigerian crash

PARIS (AP) — A Moslem extremist group claimed responsibility Wednesday for the downing of a French DC-10 jetliner in southern Niger that killed all 171 people on board.

U. S., French and UTA airline authorities said they believe the plane, bound Tuesday from Chad to Paris, was blown out of the sky by a bomb. A U. S. team of investigators was to leave later Wednesday for Niger.

Two callers who claimed to represent Islamic Jihad but did not give their own names made claims of responsibility in separate telephone calls to the airline and to a Western news agency.

Islamic Jihad is among several radical fundamentalist groups in Lebanon believed to be part of Hezbollah, or Party of God, the umbrella groups thought to hold 16 Westerners hostage in Lebanon, including eight Americans.

Among the passengers on the French jetliner were seven Americans, including Bonnie Pugh, wife of the U. S. ambassador to Chad, Robert L. Pugh.

Congress swears in 2 members to fill seats of Wright, Coelho

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats from Texas and California were sworn in by House Speaker Thomas S. Foley on Wednesday, filling seats left vacant by the resignations of House leaders Jim Wright and Tony Coelho.

Pete Geren of Fort Worth was elected to the seat vacated by Wright, who served in the House for 34 years and was speaker when he resigned in June in the wake of an ethics committee investigation into his personal finances.

Gary Condit, who represents California's 15th District, replaces Rep. Tony Coelho, the majority whip. Coelho resigned over the summer after questions were raised about his financial dealings.

After the swearing in, Geren introduced his first piece of legislation, was coached on talking to the cameras in the House broadcast press gallery and gave his first news conference as a congressman.

Bomb threat at elementary school reroutes Bennett anti-drug speech

CLEVELAND (AP) — Federal drug czar William Bennett was forced to deliver his anti-drug message to children outside an elementary school Wednesday after a bomb threat forced police to evacuate the school.

"It's a sad thing. This is what drugs have done to this country," Bennett said after the assembly. Anyone who would make such a threat to harm children is "small and petty and wicked."

East Cleveland Police Chief Richard Vaughn said Chambers Elementary School was evacuated after a telephone caller said the school would be bombed at 2:30 p.m. No bomb was found, and Vaughn said he believed the threat was a prank.

Bennett

The elementary school was the last stop in a series of meetings with Ohio mayors, ministers and public officials in which Bennett reviewed a four-pronged, $7.9 billion plan proposed by President Bush to fight drug abuse.

NATO to present new proposals at arms-control talks in Vienna

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — NATO will present new proposals that for the first time foresee limiting the number of troops taking part in military exercises across Europe, diplomatic sources said Wednesday.

The proposals are in a package of conventional arms control cuts that the Western alliance intends to present Thursday to the Warsaw Pact, the sources said on the condition of anonymity.

They would oblige both sides to give advance notice of a major mobilization of reservists and of large troop movements and concentrations, said the sources.

Other proposals they outlined would mandate easy access to specific weapons depots holding up to a fifth of each side's arsenals, and simplify surveillance of equipment in units with a low level of readiness.

The package is little changed from one that was to be offered two weeks ago at the opening fall session of East-West non-nuclear talks, which was delayed by squabbling among NATO members.

Hecht

Non-issue underscores media's poor coverage of ASU

Darrin Hostetler
Editor

Thursday, Sept. 14, 1989. A look at the headlines:

Congress allocates money for Bush's massive "drug war"; Colombian hit squads are rumored to be in the U.S. stalking American politicians; thousands march in South Africa to protest apartheid; and in the worst such accident in five years, 10 Kentucky coal miners die in an explosion that one witness said ripped through the mine "like a flamethrower."

A generous helping of death, destruction and drugs. Certainly not a slow news day.

But wait! There's more! We've forgotten at least one PAGE ONE story, the really interesting and important event of the day — at least according to the Tempe Daily News Tribune and other major Valley news organizations.

The story?

R. David Hecht, ASU student, has a problem with campus women.

Oh my. Stop the presses.

The Tribune did just that on Sept. 14 by splashing the biggest non-event to come out of ASU since J. Russell Nelson bought his wife some new pumps on Page One of its morning issue.

For those of you who haven't heard, Hecht, an ASU broadcasting major, achieved a measure of fame last week when word of a letter he wrote to the State Press on Sept. 6 escaped past the campus boundaries.

Hecht wrote to complain about "rich, conceited, two-faced obnoxious girls who believe that the world owes them something."

It seems that Mr. Hecht, a good ol' boy from Kentucky, had become disgusted over what he saw as a nasty habit unique to ASU women. Hecht charged members of the ASU female population with using their good looks to persuade interested men to buy them drinks at parties and local bars, and then, when their thirst was quenched, heartlessly abandoning the poor guy-on-the-make — without so much as a "thank you."

Hecht bemoaned the fact that women have "the power to say when and where to have sex" on college campuses in the 1980s, and hinted what the women really owed their prospective suitors was a good roll in the hay in exchange for a couple of drinks.

The State Press ran Hecht's letter, and the half dozen or so angry responses.

End of story.

Or so it should have been.

'Almost the entire story consisted of quotes from Hecht's letter and the responses we received.'

But the Tribune made an issue of it — in a story saying the Hecht letter had stired "outrage" among the campus citizenry. Almost the entire story consisted of quotes from Hecht's letter and the responses we received. Nothing new, and nothing that demonstrated that "outrage," or anything like it, had been provoked at ASU.

But Hecht hysteria had hit the Valley. And media outlets scrambled to see who could nail down this important new development at the nation's fifth largest university.

NewsChannel 3 even sent a camera crew to the State Press offices to get "reaction" to the "Hecht incident," and KFYI radio did a special show on Hecht and campus reaction.

For days, Hecht was news. Of a sort.

In the media business, the Hecht story is called "a bright."

You know, those stories about three-headed iguanas born at the zoo or the Hell's Angel who doubles as a Baptist minister — strange but true tales that are fun to read but don't have any real value. They just "brighten up" a newspaper or a broadcast.

Which is fine. We're all interested in the oddities of life.

But it is depressing to note that when this University faces major crises — like a declining quality of undergraduate education, severe overcrowding and a tight budget situation that threatens to compromise the national academic reputation of the institution — all Valley media is interested in is some guy who got turned down by girls once too many times at The Vine.

Through it all, Hecht reveled in the attention. Granting interviews, bragging to classmates and spouting more semi-intelligible theories of modern relationships.

The point is not that Mr. Hecht is a thoroughly disgusting, petty little individual who took to the sudden flash of the spotlight upon him like a pig takes to mud.

He is.

Nor is the point that Mr. Hecht's antiquated concepts of a simple male/female barter system — beer in return for sex — make him either a dangerously regressive neanderthal or a potential date rapist.

They do.

The point is that no one reports to the citizens of Arizona anything more substantial about ASU except football scores — and sometimes considerably less.

And it seems that the taxpayers of this state, who are footing the bill for this University, ought to know more than that.

In a sense, I am committing an equal offense by giving Mr. Hecht even more publicity by writing about him and his behavior now. To this I plead guilty.

But that's OK.

Because while what Mr. Hecht thinks about women isn't newsworthy, the cursory, almost flippant way in which the media covers ASU certainly is.

Letters

Back off, Tempe cops

Editor:

Thursday morning I was lucky enough to converse with one of Tempe's finest. You see, this motorcycle officer handed me a $40 sanction for riding my bicycle to ASU on the wrong side of the sidewalk.

He assured me that it would be much more reasonable if upon leaving my apartment complex, on University Drive, East of Rural Road, that I immediately cross between the heavy commuting traffic (without the aid of a stop light) and correctly ride on the right side of the sidewalk. I would cross University Drive again, after I entered the ASU campus.

Three questions come to mind.

- 1) Would this esoteric statute be enforced elsewhere in Tempe, or is it reserved for fundraising from ASU students?
- 2) Would it be preferable to drive my car and contribute to the traffic and pollution?
- 3) Would Tempe appreciate hundreds of bicycle riders appropriating the right-hand lanes from automobiles?

My suggestion is this: Tempe, use your tax dollars (six motorcycle police officers) in other ways and leave the ASU sidewalk to us.

Can pricey colleges justify high cost of education?

Cody Shearer
North American Syndicate

LOS ANGELES — You don't have to be a rich kid from Beverly Hills to get an education in the United States, but it sure helps. The cost of learning has increased to the point where getting a bachelor's degree at some of the better colleges now costs almost $80,000 and, according to people who track this industry, it could double over the next ten years.

This year the charges will have increased by as much as 9 percent, the Annual College Board survey revealed the other day. This marks the ninth straight year that the rise in costs has outpaced inflation, and it pushes the price of tuition and board within the country's most prestigious ivy-covered walls — Bennington College, Harvard University and Radcliffe College — to over $19,000-plus a year.

This news arrives, embarrassingly enough, at the same time that the Justice Department announced that it was investigating whether some of the nation's most reputable schools had been involved in something more commonly associated with less-lofty enterprises — price fixing. The probe covers such august institutions as Harvard University, Tufts, the University of Chicago and Colby College in Maine. It hones in on the long-standing practice by which colleges agree to offer almost identical financial aid to students accepted at more than one college.

The elite colleges defend this practice on the grounds that it prevents a bidding war among schools competing for desirable students and enables the student to choose a college on academic grounds alone. But agreements to set similar levels of tuition and financial aid could constitute unfair restraint of trade.

Regardless of what the Justice Department decides to do about this, the unfortunate conjunction of headlines about spiraling prices and possible dirty deeds in the virtuous groves of academia is sure to provoke a debate as to whether education costs are being jacked up unnecessarily and how long can they continue to rise. No doubt there is bound to be some backlash on this front in the near future which is going to result in some tough questioning for those suspender boys in the ivory tower.

Indeed, many parents are asking whether the college scene is a total rip-off, especially at some of the higher priced, selective schools. Unfortunately, the issue is that if one college or university were as good as any other, there would be no reason for anyone to get upset about the rising tuitions. Sadly enough, there is evidence that a degree from an elite school is worth the extra money because students get a better education while increasing their chance of making the right social connections and landing a good job. Given the continuous flood of applicants at the pricey schools, these institutions can charge whatever they want.

In their defense, the elite schools say they have had to improve their product, which means more money for student laboratories, computer systems, new books and periodicals, security personnel and upgraded counseling service related to the prevention of alcohol and drug abuse. But at the same time, some college administrators admit in private that their schools are putting a lot of money into new gymnasiums and other high profile buildings, to be more successful in attracting wealthy students.

Arguably, more important than the physical structure of a university, is the kind of personal instruction that students receive for their money. It is in this area that academia often shudders. A national survey of faculty done by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching in 1984 found that at research universities, most faculty members spent fewer than four hours a week in classroom instruction of undergraduates, (at a small liberal arts college, 50 percent of their faculty spend as much as 10 hours a week teaching).

On further examination, many parents are discovering we have an educational system which justifies professorial flight from the classroom on the grounds that professors must belabor tiny slivers of knowledge, with little social value, all in the name of academic research. Of course, none of this makes any sense when one considers that fewer than one in every 10 professors ever make any significant contribution to his or her field. So what are these guys up to?

In spite of what professors get away with, it is deeply woven into the American myth that a college degree means something, even when one is confronted with the class system and its complicity with the veil of higher education. The fact is that completing college at a nonselective institution does not confer additional income on a graduate when compared to the earning power of an individual who only attended a few years of college.

The question then remains, what is a college education worth? Increasingly, college administrators are saying off the record that spending $10,000 a year or more on an education is worth it, provided that one can afford it to begin with. The obstacle is that most middle-income families can not easily afford such an expense, which is why more and more parents are wondering if making a financial sacrifice is worth the hardship. It is up to college administrators to answer this in a direct manner on a one-on-one basis, if they don't want parents and legislators breathing down their backs.

Education should come first

Editor:

Education should be ASU's top priority, but as always sports — mainly football and basketball — have taken top billing. The country has been on a rampage to "Educate the Children of America." I've never heard a television or seen a magazine ad that shows "How to Make your Child a Star Athlete." But somewhere along the line ASU got confused. What the University has done is raise tuition, cut classes and allow too many incoming students into the already overcrowded "community." But what ASU did accomplish was to hire a new basketball coach, Mr. Frieder, from the University of Michigan, pay him an exceedingly high salary, not to mention giving him commission on every winning game so that he could possibly make up to a mere $700,000 or at the very least $300,000! This amount seems a tad ridiculous from a student's perspective, who is stuck paying more money and then finding out half of his/her classes have been canceled! It's actually quite aggravating. But I'm sure it's not as aggravating as when Mr. Frieder loses a basketball game!

Are ASU administrators truly proud of themselves for having one of the highest paid basketball coaches along with one of the highest failure rates among freshmen? If so, then maybe we had better re-check the schooling, if any, of our administrators and see what sports they played as undergraduates.

Computers make ticketing easy

Editor:

Felons and offenders-to-be look out! Now that the Tempe police department has installed computer terminals in 21 of its patrol cars, officers will at last be able to make instantaneous DMV and drivers license checks. No longer will they be sidelined, waiting for up to half an hour for the dispatcher's response, while dozens of violators rush by in either direction. High technology has broken the manacles of police work drudgery and will allow our public servants to rearrange their priorities in the battle against traffic congestion and unsafe drivers. We can at last be assured the police department is utilizing its limited resources more efficiently. Students at ASU have been able to receive the benefits almost immediately! The additional manpower now available has made it possible to place not one, but two motorcycle cops on campus every morning to issue citations to hundreds of students for bicycle infractions. Surely, this will generate the income to pay for the new computers and telecommunication links. What would happen though, if police officers had to go back on campus as students to learn the technology that makes them the modern day Dick Tracy? Could full-time students get part-time jobs as policemen to patrol traffic?

Tassinari, you're free to leave Arizona

Editor:

Once again we have been exposed to someone who doesn't know when to quit attacking. It amazes me how anyone could be so egotistical and self-centered. Let me name what I see as a few faults in Tassinari's article about Mecham.

First, he would love to see Mecham fade into obscurity, never to be heard of again. Well, this isn't going to be the case, at least not until after every student here at ASU is dead and buried. Why? The political ramifications of Mecham's decisions will continue to affect the state and be topics of controversy for that long. Questions will be asked like, "Why did he rescind the Martin Luther King Holiday?" or "To what extent should the people of the state have a say in the Senate impeaching their governor?"

Second, even if the Supreme Court were to reject his appeal, that wouldn't stop him from continuing his bid to regain the governorship. The Arizona Supreme Court isn't the last resort for him.

At the election in which Gov. Mecham became governor, I gladly voted for him. If he were to run again, I would gladly vote for him again. We finally get an honest governor who's willing to step on a few toes, and everyone is upset. We can all look to former Gov. Babbitt for an example of the opposite. He was someone who didn't want to step on anyone's toes, so he did nothing. This kept the peace, and everyone considered that good.

In the election before, I certainly wouldn't have voted for the other two candidates, and I didn't see anyone else step forward with any alternatives. If the people of Arizona are concerned about politics, they would be more actively involved in getting people into office that they want in office. It is sad when people don't prevent a situation before it happens, but will go all out to correct it once it has already happened. Hindsight can be great sometimes, can't it?

The last point I'd like to make is Tassinari's comparison of the Mecham affair with a bad movie, only you can walk out of a bad movie.

Negotiations possible in lawsuit against University, official says

By ADRIANE HOPKINS
State Press

A lawsuit that was filed in April between the University and two women who were injured when they fell down the stairs in the University Activity Center could be settled soon if the insurance company pays the claims, an ASU official said.

Chuck Miller, ASU's risk management senior claim adjuster, said negotiations might be worked out in both claims.

When a concert comes to the UAC, a contract clause called the "Hold Harmless" is signed by the promoter providing a $1 million liability insurance in case of any injuries or lawsuits that arise out of the event, he said.

Rosanne Hornback, 36, is demanding $30,000 for settlement to cover the physical and emotional stress suffered from her injuries. Carol Bounds, 42, is still being treated for injuries but has not yet demanded a sum.

The women, both from Phoenix, were attending an Amy Grant concert in November that featured a laser light show requiring dimmed lights.

Hornback contends that her injuries were caused when she fell down the stairs at the UAC and that the accident was precipitated by the dangerous step construction and poor lighting during the concert.

Bounds claims the usher at the concert turned the flashlight off while she was walking back down to her seat, causing her to fall.

Hornback's attorney, Peter Fisher, said he is hopeful for a settlement.

"Our initial demand is for $30,000, but realistically we might settle for less," he said.

Miller said Hornback arrived late to the concert and fell down the stairs while attempting to locate her seat. Bounds, who had already located her seat, left for intermission and fell down the stairs attempting to get back to her seat.

Bounds is not represented by an attorney and will not make a demand to the University until her lower back treatment is complete.

In a letter to the Arizona Board of Regents and the Arizona Attorney General's office in April, Fisher stated that the claimant arrived shortly after the 8 p.m. concert started.

The letter states that Hornback was led to her seat by an usher and missed one of the "steep, irregular steps in the darkness. These steps had no side or center rail to assist people."

However, Miller contends that the University is not responsible.

"The stairs at the UAC are within the requirements set by the building code," Miller said. "There is nothing wrong with the UAC steps."

Hornback suffered multiple injuries from the fall, including damage to her ribs, hip, neck and face. The most extensive injuries she sustained were dental.

Hornback's upper front teeth were pushed back and up into the roof of her mouth and one of her teeth required a root canal.

Fisher stated in the letter that Dr. James Kramer performed a root canal on the tooth and expects her to lose the tooth. He further stated that a permanent bridge will be required to replace the tooth.

Fisher said the cost of a bridge for one tooth is $1,000 and an annual checkup that includes periodontal treatment and X-rays costs $40.

Hornback's bills have totaled $1,150 so far. Fisher states that Hornback has also suffered significant emotional distress.

"There was some negligence on both claimants," Miller said.

Native Americans urged to adapt

By ELISE ELSBERRY
State Press

Native American students at ASU must adapt the curriculum to meet their needs in order to remove the barriers that keep them from reaching "academic excellence," a high school principal said Wednesday.

John Lincoln, principal of St. Michael's preparatory school, spoke to about 15 students, most of whom were Native American, about minority recruitment and retention at ASU. The lecture was sponsored by the American Indian Institute.

Lincoln said the University makes adjustments to meet the needs of the Native American student.

"After 20 years, you still have Native Americans not graduating," he said. "Out of every 10 Indian students, one-half drop out during their first year (of college) and after four years, seven of the 10 are gone."

Lincoln said the mixing of cultural diversity and academic expectations has been the biggest problem for the Native American student. As soon as the University recognizes the problem and separates the two issues, Native American students will be able to start overcoming the barriers, he said.

Lincoln has dealt with the problems of minority students for several years. He has been the principal of St. Michael's

Lincoln

High School for five years.

Prior to his current position, he dealt with black students in South Chicago.

Lincoln told the audience that ASU would never become Native American in philosophy, and the students would have to adapt to society without giving up their culture.

"The University is aware that there is problem graduating Native Americans out of this school," he said.

Although the University has several programs aimed at recruiting Native American students, it is not spending enough time to keep those students in school, Lincoln said.

As an example, Lincoln said 90 percent of Native American students fail Math 210, a pre-calculus class, the first time through. But with the new math and science honors program at ASU, these same students are being given the opportunity to "pre-take" the class in an environment that Lincoln said is more conducive to their learning skills.

These classes have 15 to 20 students per instructor that allow for more individualized instruction which Native American students need, Lincoln said.

He said ASU should not lower its standards for the Native American student, but rather the University should be more aware of their needs.

"It's a difference in terms of delivering the curriculum not a difference in standards," he said.

Lincoln said the University needs to recognize that not all students learn the same way and adjust the teaching methods for the culturally different student.

Activist: 1960s not 'Mississippi Burning'

By MIKE VAN DYKE
State Press

Bob Zellner was raised in Alabama during the 1960s in a family that had Ku Klux Klan ties.

Now he lectures about how he helped give blacks the right to vote through door-to-door solicitation — making him one of the first non-minorities to take an active role in the civil rights movement.

Zellner, 50, will speak at 7:30 p.m. today in the MU Arizona Room about how the civil rights movement has changed over the years.

Lisa Fedler, director of the Associated Students of ASU Political Union, the sponsor of the lecture, said Zellner is expected to share some interesting personal experiences and insights about his work in the civil rights movement.

Zellner's grandfather, uncles and father were involved in the KKK before his birth. In spite of his upbringing, Zellner chose to join the civil rights movement.

Fedler said the civil rights advocate has a story to tell contrary to the one presented in "Mississippi Burning," a movie detailing a notorious FBI-investigated civil rights case.

traveled to Mississippi during the summer of 1964 to search for two white and one black civil rights advocates who became the subjects of a massive FBI investigation.

But Zellner has said the FBI was not as heroic as the movie has lead people to believe.

When he attended Huntington College in Montgomery, Ala., in the late 1950s, Zellner realized how blacks were being treated.

In a sociology class during his senior year in 1960, he began studying the nature of racial tensions in the South while working on a term paper.

Then, despite objections from his professor, Zellner scheduled a meeting with Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., who four years earlier had helped organize the historic Montgomery bus boycott.

Zellner's meeting with King caused a stir at the college. He was asked to leave the college, and the institution's president called him a "hoodlum" in the Alabama Journal, although Zellner was one of the top graduates in his class.

Also, he was harassed by the KKK, which burned four crosses around Zellner's dormitory.

Despite the pressure to leave, Zellner stayed and graduated the next spring.

Then, while attending his first SNCC meeting Oct. 4, 1961, the activist was arrested.

During one protest march, Zellner, the only non-minority in the demonstration, was beaten by a mob while FBI agents "stood by and took notes."

This will be the first of 10 speeches by Zellner on college campuses around the country. He will be paid $3,100.

ASU police: Some 'survey' calls phony

By MICHELLE HENRY
State Press

Don't believe everything you hear over the phone when a surveyor asks you to answer a few questions — it may be phony.

ASU police Officer Linda Stroh, who works in the crime prevention department, said several people have received obscene phone calls from false surveyors this semester but she could not pinpoint a specific number.

The false phone surveyors tell people at the other end that they are conducting surveys from different departments and organizations on campus.

Reasons why callers conduct fake surveys include achieving personal gratification and finding out what a person owns so that the caller can possibly commit a burglary, she added.

"They start out by doing a regular survey — asking typical questions," Stroh said. "They then begin to ask very personal and sexual questions."

"Usually the people will answer most of the questions. For example, 'What is your address?' 'Do you own a VCR?', 'What type of stereo do you have?' People think the call is legitimate. After a while, the person will realize it is a phony survey."

Stroh recommended that people find out the caller's name and his/her supervisor if they get such a call, adding that most people will only have to deal with such a call once.

"Do not always think because the caller answered all of the questions, it is legitimate," she said.

However, not every survey is phony, said Shapard Wolf, director of the ASU survey research laboratory, adding that the lab conducts telephone surveys that range in topics.

"Any faculty member on ASU's campus can have students conduct surveys from their office desk phone," he said. "Not every phone survey with sexual questions are illegitimate."

Wolf said some surveys may require sensitive questions, but if a call sounds abnormal, then the phone should be hung up.

"We always identify ourselves as calling from the ASU research laboratory and give our name," he said. "If respondents are still reluctant, we say 'Okay, call ASU police if you do not believe us.'"

Wolf said the lab will notify the police dispatcher and send them a notice about each of its surveys, adding that he is not aware of anyone ever doubting the surveys' validity.

Calls are sometimes made to the research lab inquiring into the truthfulness of "psuedo surveys" — ones that induce people to buy a particular product, he said.

"It gives all surveys a bad name when people falsely represent themselves for the purpose of selling," Wolf said.

He said that he hopes people will not regard surveys as a waste of time or a violation of their privacy.

"It is extremely important for every individual to respond to legitimate surveys because they are representing a whole class of people like themselves," he said.

Stroh cautioned people to use common sense when they receive survey calls.

"They (phony surveyors) will try to get all the information from you," she said. "Do not answer questions about your birth date, social security number and if you are home by yourself."

The Purpose of Human Life

No 9a

Life in the Womb
9 months in a world of liquid To prepare a healthy physical foundation.

Every child is the extension of parental love as life comes from love.

The lack of an absolute standard of parental love causes spiritually malnourished and even unwanted babies.

Physical birth defects, for example those which are caused by chemical addiction, are also the result of ignorant or immature parents.

Life in the Spirit World
Eternal realm of love
Like begets like, so spirits congregate according to their maturity of love.

Those who live here on earth with a self-centered way of life, regardless of their positions as noted religious or world leaders, will end up in the lowest realms of hell--the world of regret.

Life on Earth
Air environment ~80 years
The purpose of physical life is to grow a healthy spirit. Its perfection depends on how much you love God over worldly things. Love is the only asset you can take with you to the spirit world.

When the spirit graduates from its physical existence, the physical body is discarded in the same way as the placenta is thrown away upon birth.

Mecham asks court to reverse 1988 impeachment conviction

PHOENIX (AP) — Evan Mecham, the first governor removed by impeachment in nearly 60 years, is asking the state Supreme Court to overturn his conviction, reinstate him and pay him about $500,000.

The maverick Republican conservative, who is running for governor again in 1990, says he expects to win in federal court if the state high court rejects the arguments he'll present today.

But government lawyers defending Mecham's House impeachment and Senate conviction say the Supreme Court should not even take jurisdiction of such a "frivolous" case, much less grant Mecham's motions.

Attorney General Bob Corbin is asking that the case be thrown out and that Mecham be assessed costs of bringing the lawsuit.

Lawyers on both sides know of only one case, a 1919 ruling in Alabama, in which an impeached official was reinstated. Courts generally have held that impeachments are political in nature and that they are not subject to court review in the absence of a major violation of constitutional rights.

Mecham was ousted by the Senate on April 4, 1988, on civil charges that he misused money in a state protocol fund and obstructed justice by trying to thwart an investigation of allegations that one of his aides had threatened another aide.

He had taken office less than 16 months earlier, after a bruising campaign during which he upset several establishment favorites to become governor on his fifth try.

And though he had predicted smooth sailing with the Republican-controlled Legislature, he drew criticism with vetoes, controversial appointments, cancellation of a holiday honoring Martin Luther King Jr., and statements that appeared to insult women, homosexuals, blacks and Orientals.

By the time impeachment proceedings began in earnest, he was telling audiences that Attorney General Bob Corbin, a fellow Republican, had been spying on him with laser beams.

"Mecham was not impeached and convicted for 'high crimes, misdemeanors or malfeasance;' instead, he was impeached and convicted for being Mecham," his attorneys argued in briefs filed before today's hearing. "The sad truth is that, notwithstanding Mecham's election to office by the people of Arizona, Mecham was a political outsider, having few partisans among established legislators, or in the media."

Mecham's lawyers argue the impeachment should be overturned because the senators failed to vote separately on each subcharge within each main charge, leaving it unclear whether lawmakers ever reached the required two-thirds majority on any one accusation.

They also say the protocol fund statute was unconstitutional to begin with because of a drafting flaw and that Mecham was denied his right to due process by irregularities in the Senate trial, including the absence of some of senators at times.

The government's lawyers say it doesn't matter whether the protocol fund statute was constitutional because Mecham's representatives signed a contract agreeing to abide by it and that Mecham committed malfeasance when he violated the contract.

They also say the state constitution clearly gives the Senate the right to make its own rules about such things as attendance and charges.

Furthermore, they say, Mecham waited too long to bring the lawsuit and should have filed it in a lower court.

In addition to reinstatement as governor, Mecham wants about $200,000 for attorneys' fees in the impeachment, about $182,000 to cover his costs in preparing for a recall election that was canceled by his ouster, the $92,000 that was in the protocol fund and back pay as governor.

He also is seeking return of the protocol fund in a Maricopa County Superior Court suit filed earlier. The money came from campaign supporters but, after questions were raised over whether it had been collected legally, campaign aides administering it agreed it would be used as a protocol fund.

Grant allows assistant professor to research, teach out-of-state

By RICHARD LAMPING
State Press

An ASU assistant professor, who received an $86,000 grant to study in New York state, said the experience is "turning out to be everything I expected."

Mary Finn is currently researching and teaching at the University of Rochester, thanks to a grant from the National Science Foundation. Finn will use the money to encourage more women to become active in the fields of science and engineering.

The economics professor is one of 27 women to receive the Visiting Professorship for Women from the foundation. She is spending the academic year teaching international trade and finance theory and conducting research.

Finn said the faculty at Rochester is impressive, and the economics department is conducive to her research.

Ruby Azures, program assistant for the Visiting Professorship for Women, said the foundation receives about 100 applications a year. She said applicants must have a doctorate and be affiliated with a United States educational, governmental or industrial institution.

Professorship recipients conduct research as visiting professors at leading universities throughout the country, Azures added.

She said the foundation has "always been very pleased with the knowledge and expertise of the candidates," adding that each grant recipient must give a presentation in June reviewing the work they have completed during the academic year.

Finn, who received her bachelor's and master's in economics at the University of Ireland and her doctorate in economics from the University of West Ontario in Canada, has taught at ASU for the past three years and will return next fall.

She said she enjoys Rochester because there are "more people to interact with in the subject area that I'm doing research in."

"A good newspaper, I suppose, is a nation talking to itself."

section," Cegles said.

The committee is scheduled to meet again in two weeks to make its final recommendations, which will most likely include charging premiums on season tickets for the general public.

According to the proposed shift of student seats, the section, which is currently opposite the ASU bench, would be moved to the corner behind the opponents' bench.

The current section would become general public seats, and would be subject to premium charges, which could be as high as $200.

The price of student tickets would not be increased, and no premiums will be charged on them.

The proposals would not go into effect until the 1990-91 season.

Earlier this month, Larson said he was assured that the student section would not be affected by a reorganization of ticket distribution and prices.

Harris and committee chairman Lonnie Ostrom could not be reached for comment.

Larson said the committee wanted to direct the noise from the student section at the opposing team. He added that the committee originally wanted to move the band to the seats directly behind the opponents' bench, but abandoned the idea to offer those seats to students.

The proposed shift would add approximately 500 seats to the student section.

ASU police investigation finds harassment charge unfounded

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Three ASU police officers have been cleared by an internal department investigation of a charge that they harassed a student who was arrested last April, the acting ASU police chief said.

"His complaint was unfounded," Doug Bartosh said of a citizen complaint filed by junior business major James W. Hogg. "The charges were all unfounded based on officer statements that were substantiated by other officers."

Hogg, 21, had alleged that he was harassed by officers Stewart Adams and Chris Moore and Sgt. Garry Dirks following his arrest on a criminal trespassing charge. Police said Hogg was arrested and taken to the ASU police station after he failed to listen to Adams, who told him to stop watching a fight in a parking lot south of Alpha Drive.

In the complaint filed in April, Hogg said the three officers harassed him at the police station while he tried to get information about filing a complaint. He also said that an unidentified officer used a night stick to lift him up by his arms, which were handcuffed behind his back.

Hogg was arrested on a second count of criminal trespassing after he refused to leave the station, police said.

"It was a frivolous complaint if you want to know the truth," Bartosh said. "The officers went above and beyond the call of duty in cutting him slack. He just had a bad attitude."

Meanwhile Hogg said he still believes he was harassed.

"It's a student versus a cop — what can you do?" Hogg said. "It seems like ASU cops can do what they want. I'm kind of pissed about it myself."

ASU police cleared the officers in May but the findings were not made public until last week.

Hogg said he learned of the department's findings from a reporter, adding that police never contacted him after he filed his complaint.

"The last I heard was when I turned it in," Hogg said. "They said they were going to get back to me."

Bartosh said the department is supposed to notify complainants about department findings, but he could not explain why police never contacted Hogg.

The acting police chief also said police did not interview Hogg because they had his complaint and interviewed the officers so there "just wasn't any reason to pursue it any further."

now to another building."

According to Guilbeau, bids from outside consultants currently are being reviewed to discover the problem.

He expects a firm to be selected and working in the building by Friday.

J.T. Stanley, professor of chemical/biology and materials engineering, said he has had some physical symptoms that "disappear after I've left the building for a period of time."

He added that his primary problem has been extreme sinus irritation.

Perea said she is irritated with the whole ordeal.

"We seem to be a forgotten department (engineering), and I don't want this to be forgotten," she said, adding that the private consultants are long overdue.

Charlotte Zemrus, who has been a secretary in the building for eight years, agreed.

"Over the last few months we've had different complaints, and we just thought it was Arizona," she said. "Then we put things together and had the place examined (by University personnel). I'd be surprised if they told me nothing is wrong with the building.

"We have been assured things will be taken care of."

But Guilbeau said the engineering department has received complaints only in the last two weeks.

However, ongoing problems with the COB's air that began this summer have spurred numerous investigations by various experts, including an industrial hygienist from the state Risk Management Director's Office, said Andy Anderson of ASU's Department of Public Safety.

One summer investigation found that the strong odors in the air could not be tied to any foreign substances, Shafer said.

Within the last couple of days, graduate students have been forced to cease research in the COB and are not expected to resume it soon, Guilbeau said.

In a mandatory meeting with the graduate assistants Wednesday, he told them that the students can begin their research again within two to six weeks.

Reservoir system to reduce ASU electricity bill

By KIMBERLY HARRIS
State Press

ASU runs up an $8 million electricity bill annually, but it has found a way to help reduce it — an underground reservoir system.

"The thermal energy storage system will save the University approximately $800,000 per year," said Gerry White, manager of mechanical engineering in the planning and construction department, adding that the tank-structure will be one of the largest in the country.

White said the system, which will be located underneath the northwest corner of the intramural fields behind the Student Recreation Center, will cool the campus by storing water and producing energy. Construction on the tank will begin in October.

"The thermal energy storage system will chill water at night and will be transported into the ventilation system throughout the campus to provide air conditioning during the day," he said, adding that the project will be completed by next fall. "The purpose of the system is to save energy and to increase our cooling capability."

Val Peterson, ASU acting assistant vice president of business affairs, said the "water chillers" presently used to cool campus buildings are used the most during the hot hours of the day.

"What APS (Arizona Public Service) offered to us is a 'window in time' to purchase power when it is cheaper during the night time," he said. "The water is then stored in the thermal energy storage tank and distributed throughout the campus during the day."

Peterson added that APS's interest in the reservoir is because the generators will last longer due to the decreased amount of stress.

"The tank will hold four million gallons of water," he said, adding that the reservoir will be relatively easy to maintain. White said the idea to reduce energy has been in the works for 2½ years.

"The concept of the system is relatively new," he said.

White said ASU West has a similar cooling system, but it is smaller than the University's will be.

Alan Carroll, director of the ASU Budget Office, said the University's electricity bill is paid through state appropriations.

White declined to speculate on the total costs of implementing the system, but indicated that it will be a multi-million dollar venture.

"Budgeting will be figured when the contractor reviews the measure next month," he said, adding that funding will come from bonding and APS contributions.

Peterson said, "Anytime we can save dollars, it's always worth it."

Mofford: Arizona has a national reputation as 'a racist state'

PHOENIX (AP) — Arizona has a national reputation as "a racist state" because of its failure to approve a paid holiday honoring slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King, Democratic Gov. Rose Mofford said today.

Republican Senate President Bob Urdane, meanwhile, predicted that there could be enough support in his caucus to approve a King Day, but only if it traded off for Columbus Day rather than for Lincoln's birthday as Mofford would prefer.

Urdane made the announcement at a GOP caucus, and other caucus members immediately demanded a closed session to discuss it further and Urdane said he would abide by the group's wishes.

Mofford, who wants a federal-style King holiday, spoke with reporters an hour earlier.

"Arizona shouldn't be one of the four states that's always backward, always being classified as a racist state," she said, noting that 46 other states honored King.

The House has passed bills to create the holiday, but Republican senators have balked for several years running despite convention and tourism boycotts.

Mofford said she thought they might change their minds.

"I would hope they would because of all the pressure being put on all over the United States," she said. "I encounter this everywhere I go."

Weird Wire

This is a new, daily feature to spotlight less-than-earth-shattering but nonetheless interesting tidbits gleaned from The Associated Press wire service.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Thousands of Asian bees leave their nests together to defecate, producing "yellow rain" that the U. S. government once claimed was a Soviet biological weapon, to cool themselves and their nests, scientists say.

By relieving themselves of hot feces equal to one-fifth of their body weight, the honeybees are able to cool their nests more efficiently and help their offspring grow, the researchers said in Thursday's issue of Nature, a British science journal.

In a 1981 speech and 1982 report, then-Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr. asserted that "yellow rain" was a Soviet biological weapon used to kill thousands of people in Cambodia, Laos and Afghanistan during the previous decade.

The claim later was discredited by scientists who proved the yellow deposits were bee droppings, although the State Department never retracted the claim, said biologist Peter G. Kevan.

Lasher expected to start against Cougars

By JOEL HORN
State Press

Redshirt freshman quarterback Kurt Lasher will probably make his first collegiate start Saturday when the Sun Devils take on the University of Houston.

ASU Head Football Coach Larry Marmie said after Wednesday's practice that Paul Justin has not shown much improvement since Saturday, when he sprained his left shoulder against San Jose State University.

"We are not going to put (Justin) out there Saturday night if there's the slightest chance he's not 100 percent," he said.

Marmie said Bobby Valdez, who has been throwing a little in practice this week after suffering possible nerve damage in his right elbow, will serve as Lasher's backup.

"You worry about (Valdez) being rusty," Marmie said. "He has missed a lot of practice."

Redshirt freshman fullback Jeff Simoneau, who was expected to start Saturday in place of Kelvin Fisher, hurt his back lifting weights Wednesday and was held out of practice. His status will remain day-to-day.

Fisher strained his knee against the Spartans and will be out indefinitely.

Guard Paul DeBono, who started last Saturday's game in place of Fedel Underwood, injured his back in practice this week.

ASU split end Ron Fair, who has seven receptions for 126 yards in two games, is tackled by two San Jose State defenders in last Saturday's game.

Marmie said DeBono was given a shot for muscle spasms Tuesday, and his status is day-to-day.

Underwood, who injured his back a week earlier in the Sun Devils' season opener against Kansas State University, should start against the Cougars.

Quick guard Jeff White still is suffering from a shoulder injury, but strong tackle

Mike Ritter has returned to practice.

Marmie said he has not decided who will start at strong tackle Saturday, Ritter or Tim Kirby.

Tailback David Winsley has a deep bruise in his buttocks and did not practice Wednesday. However, Marmie said he expects Winsley to play Saturday.

ASU offensive coordinator Mike Martz said he expects the Cougars, who are tied for first in the SWC in yards given up per play (3.4), to blitz often because the Sun Devils' offensive line has been decimated by injuries and Lasher possibly will be making his first start.

"A freshman quarterback sends a red flag to the defense," he said.

The offensive coordinator said the key for ASU is whether or not they can run the ball on the Cougars.

The Cougars' SWC opponents rarely use a pro-style offense, resembling ASU's, which Martz said may be to the Sun Devils' advantage.

"I'm not exactly sure how similar we'd be to anyone on their schedule. But if not, it will be to our favor."

Martz said the Sun Devils plan to take advantage of undercoverages by attacking the linebackers and safeties in the shorter areas of the zone with play action-passes

Gymnasts compete for U.S. team

By TOMI McELROY
State Press

Move over Mary Lou Retton, two Tempe gymnasts who strive for the 1992 Olympics are contending in the McDonald's World Championships USA Team Trials at ASU.

Sandy Woolsey, 17, and Juliet Bangerter, 15, compete at 2 p.m. Saturday and Sunday in the University Activity Center, a place close to home.

"I feel good about it," Bangerter said. "It should be to our advantage, we know some of the people that will be yelling for us."

Tempe was chosen to host the meet, winning the bid over three other cities.

"The U. S. Gymnastics Federation likes to have a city that has athletes from that city," said Stormy Eaton, coach of Woolsey and Bangerter at Desert Devils Gymnastics Center. "They feel it draws a better crowd."

Eaton said the Tempe Sports Authority, a local group that promotes sports in the Valley, and the ASU athletic department gave him a lot of support and cooperation in obtaining the trials in Tempe.

"They really like having events like this in town because it kind of supports the all-around attitude of ASU — that's something we really like to hear," Eaton said. "I think it's going to be very positive."

Although neither girl has competed in the UAC before, Eaton said what will help the girls a little more than anything else is being in familiar surroundings.

"I think it will be a real positive experience whether they make the team or not," Eaton said.

Woolsey and Bangerter practice four hours a night to prepare for the event.

"Basically the way we are handling training is we've been going extremely hard for two weeks and at the beginning of this week we began to back off," Eaton said. "We're doing just a little each day and by the time we get to the meet they are going to feel very good physically. Emotionally they're going to be completely ready and training has gone good for them."

Both girls competed in the U. S. Gymnastics National Championships in July and qualified for the trials.

Thirty percent of the nationals score carries over to the trials and 70 percent of the marks at the trials will be combined to determine the World Championship team members.

Woolsey and Bangerter enter the trials ranked third and sixth, respectively, from their national championships scores.

"I felt pretty good about that," Woolsey said. "It helps me a little bit more than if I was going into the meet from scratch."

Woolsey said she has not changed anything in her routines because she tries to be consistent and not be stronger in just one event.

"Everything is pretty even," Woolsey said. "I try to keep everything at the same level."

Eaton said Woolsey is strongest in the uneven bars and vaulting events while Bangerter is more powerful in the uneven bars and balance beam events.

Bangerter has joined Woolsey as a senior level competitor and has incorporated more difficulty in her routines to compete at the higher level.

"My floor routine has more difficulty in it and I do a different dismount off the beam," Bangerter said. "I feel better than I did at U. S. Championships."

Woolsey has been in gymnastics for 10 years and moved from her family and home in Colorado to train with the Desert Devils three years ago.

Her family joined her a year later and Woolsey said it helped her because she really did not know much about the state when she moved to Arizona.

Woolsey, a senior at Marcos de Ninza High School, said she is unsure whether to continue in competitive gymnastics or enter college.

"I want to see how this meet goes," Woolsey said. "Then I have to decide if it (gymnastics) is worth it to me. I'd want to train but it's a lot of hard work."

Bangerter, a sophomore at Corona del Sol High School, said she has not idolized anyone during her gymnastics career.

"You kind of have to be different or you don't stand out," Bangerter said with a smile. "I'm just kind of different in my own ways."

Bangerter said her immediate goal is to make the World Championship team and in the future to be in the 1992 Olympics.

The girls compete in the Olympic compulsory competition Saturday and all-around optional finals Sunday. They will have to place in the top six to earn a spot on the World Championship team.

Woolsey and Bangerter have an advantage over 10 of the 16 competitors because of their U. S. championship rankings.

"They are in a real good position," Eaton said. "I think things will go well for them."

Juliet Bangerter is one of two local gymnasts to participate in the McDonald's World Championships U.S.A. Team Trials.

Sun Devil spikers fight off Lumberjacks, last year's memories

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

ASU's volleyball team experienced a bit of deja-vu when it played NAU's Lumberjacks Tuesday night.

Just as last year, the Sun Devils won the first two matches, only to have NAU blast a surge of strength in the third.

The difference between the two years, however, is that this time, the Sun Devils defeated NAU, 15-4, 15-9, 15-10.

"At one point, they had a 4-1 lead on us. Our kids looked a little nervous — they were going, 'Oh no, here it comes again,'" ASU

Head Coach Patti Snyder said of the reminiscence of last year's 5-15, 10-15, 17-15, 15-9, 15-11 loss.

She also said that she was glad to see her team pull themselves out of the third game deficit.

"We just cranked it up a notch — our intensity," she said.

Lumberjack fans managed to fill the dome for Tuesday's game, and Snyder said the crowd negatively affected her team, and positively affected NAU.

"From the first serve of the game, the crowd was into the match," Snyder said. "It gave them (NAU) an incentive to do well."

With the exception of the third match, Snyder said her team dominated NAU by serving tough and blocking balls.

But NAU was playing without the services of their starting setter and outside blocker, a problem that could have contributed to the Lumberjack loss.

"We basically shut them down," Snyder said. "We definitely beat them at the net."

Although Snyder attributes Tuesday's win to a full team effort, she said that Noelle Fridrich highlighted the game, with an eight-for-11 dump percentage.

On Friday, the Sun Devils travel to California to compete against USC. Snyder said that this week, she has been studying Trojans' middle.

"It's going to be our middle against theirs," she said. "We need to be touching more balls."

On Saturday, ASU will compete against No. 2-ranked UCLA. Although Snyder did not want to make any prediction on the outcome of the game, she said "I would like for us to be the first team to sweep the L.A. schools on the road."

Boxer rolls with punches, becomes trainer to save eyesight

By MIKE AUSTIN
Contributing Writer

ASU student and former boxer Rob Sale, who was born with glaucoma and warned by doctors not to box, has returned to the ring as a trainer.

"I'm really excited with the concept of being able to mold fighters, to take them from scratch and make them want to be the best," Sale said.

The 22-year-old sociology major and former professional boxer, who retired in May after 16 years of boxing, began working Monday as head trainer at Ring Pros, Inc. in Tempe.

The gym is co-owned by Scott Maling, a local boxing manager and real estate entrepreneur, and Wes Wolfe, manager of Greg Haugen, former International Boxing Federation lightweight champion.

"I approached Rob because I respect his boxing knowledge and talent as a fighter," Maling said. "I know a lot of people older than Rob that don't know the business as well. He knows boxing inside out."

Sale is currently training one established professional fighter, Steve Damon, a 7-2 light heavyweight and two who will be making their professional debuts in October. Other professionals have shown interest in the gym, he said.

"We're in the process of negotiating with the World Heavyweight Kickboxing Champion, Dennis Alexio," Sale said. "He feels he's the best athlete in the world."

Alexio told Sale he wanted to vie for a bout against Mike Tyson, the undisputed IBF heavyweight champion.

"He wants to come to our gym because we have the proper facilities and affiliations to bring him Mike Tyson," Sale said. "Alexio would be our No. 1 man."

The gym houses a competition-size ring (18 feet by 18 feet), three heavy bags, two crazy balls and a life cycle.

Sale, a New Jersey native, began boxing when he was 8 years old. By the time he was 18, he was favored to win the welterweight title in the New Jersey Golden Gloves competition.

Although he knew he was risking blindness and even the loss of his eye, he continued to fight.

Pressure had built up behind Sale's eye from boxing and doctors informed him that his optic nerve was being destroyed. His doctor said there was a 30 percent chance he would lose his eye.

In November 1985, after his third surgery, Sale's eye began to heal too quickly. So, for four months, six days a week, Sale's eye was injected with an anti-healing agent to slow down the process.

The surgery was performed by glaucoma specialist Robert Ritch in New York.

"I've had my nose broken, my collarbone broken and nothing has come close to the level of pain I had with those treatments," Sale said. "I've never felt so much pain in my entire life and probably never will again."

Ritch told him he would never fight again, but Sale was determined to battle in the ring again. His eye finally healed properly, and he began fighting again.

Sale came to Tempe in January 1986 and began fighting in the Arizona Golden Gloves competition as a welterweight. Jimmy Montoya, manager of former IBF lightweight champion Hector "Macho" Comacho, had offered Sale a contract.

Sale fought in his professional debut in September 1986 and after three bouts was undefeated with one knockout. After his third fight, he encountered contract disputes with his manager and eventually severed ties.

For three months in 1987, Sale was Nico Perez's No. 1 sparring partner. Perez, the North American Boxing Federation lightweight champion, has fought for the world title in the featherweight division.

In May 1989, when Sale was preparing for a comeback, he went to Maling for financial support. In the meantime, Sale was offered a sparring job with Haugen.

Ultimately, Maling convinced Sale to retire from boxing and become his head trainer at Ring Pros, Inc., 2015 E. Fifth St.

"He called me and said, 'I think you're a great fighter, but we can have more impact on the game with your knowledge,'" Sale said. "The bottom line was, my health was at risk and I was in fear of walking around blind for the rest of my life."

"I had mixed emotions at first, but now that I've seen that Scott stands by his word, I feel much more comfortable with the situation."

"It was difficult to leave boxing."

Sale said the transition from boxer to trainer has come to him easily.

"I'm 99 percent right now," he said, "but there's still 1 percent of me that shoots punches into the air when no one's around."

Lemon builds insurmountable lead, wins tourney

By PAUL CORO
State Press

ASU junior golfer Jim Lemon looked more sweet than sour last weekend as he captured the Arizona Amateur Championship at the Troon Golf Club in Scottsdale.

Lemon, who has recorded three amateur titles in the past 10 months, knocked off underdog Jim Caldwell, a 35-year-old businessman, in Sunday's championship match.

Lemon birdied the 26th hole with a 2-foot putt to close out the match at 11 and 10. Match play ends when a lead is insurmountable because of the number of holes remaining.

"I didn't play well in the beginning of the tournament," Lemon said, adding that improvement began during the semifinal match against Mark Sollenberger. "I played really well the last two matches."

Through the first 18 holes, Lemon compiled a 10-stroke lead on Caldwell, who was bothered by severely blistered feet. "He didn't have that good of a swing that day anyway,"

Lemon said. "No matter what, I think he would have lost."

Lemon reached the final by ousting Sollenberger 7 and 5 in the prior round. Lemon's victory was aided by a 3-under-par 33 on the front nine, including a birdie on the ninth hole after placing himself in a hazard.

Their match was their third such encounter in less than a year. Lemon has now won two of them.

Lemon said he is presently at the top of his game. "I am playing alright now," Lemon said. "I have also been playing good in the practice rounds at ASU."

Lemon attributes his recent rise in success to his mentor Michael LaBauve. The Stone Creek teacher has been giving Lemon lessons and has tutored other amateurs prior to their professional days.

Lemon's other two victories since December are the Arizona Public Links Championship and the Superstition Springs Invitational, in which he nipped Sollenberger on the final hole.

"It's been giving me more tournament experience," Lemon said. "It can never hurt."

Lemon, who transferred from Scottsdale Community College last year, hopes to translate the year's success into something positive for himself and the ASU team.

Lemon will travel with the team on its next trip on Oct. 3-4 to the Louisiana State University Invitational in New Orleans.

"Hopefully, if I play well there, I can go on to the next tournaments," Lemon said. "I know I have to play well. Any player can play well on the team at any time."

In Lemon's two years at SCC, his team took back-to-back national championships. Lemon finished eighth individually in 1988 and fourth in 1989.

Lemon said he has not had much problem so far in making the transition to Division I golf, but he has yet to compete.

"The players are better, and there is more pressure everyday," Lemon said. "I feel I have adjusted pretty well. I am just going to have to play good day in and day out."

Martz said Cougar defensive back Coach Pat Thomas has put together one of the finest secondaries in the nation.

Martz said Thomas, a former Los Angeles Rams all-pro, has used his seven years of NFL experience to teach proper coverage and tackling techniques to Cougar defenders.

Although opponents throw more passes against UH than any other Southwest Conference team in 1988, the Cougars gave up less touchdowns (eight), allowed only a 41 percent completion rate and a SWC low of just 5 yards per attempt.

Johnny Jackson, a second-team All-American and Thorpe Award finalist last season, graduated and plays for the San Francisco 49ers. However, the four defensive backs opening the ASU game have starting experience.

Strong safety Alton Montgomery was named SWC defensive newcomer of the year and earned All-American honorable mention from The Associated Press in 1988.

Martz said, although relatively small (6-foot-1, 266 pounds), the Cougars defensive line is active.

"They've got great team speed," he said. "They may be the best defense we play all year."

Middle linebacker Lamar Lathon (6-foot-3, 240 pounds), who Pardee said has a chance to be one of the top five players in college football this year, has recovered from a fractured sternum and will see his first action of the season Saturday.

"He's a rocket to the ball," Martz said, "and a big one at that."

Martz said Lathon's prediction of an undefeated season for the Cougars has motivated the Sun Devils.

"He's already chalking up those wins," he said. "I like it."

'Field of Dreams' realized in Valley

By KERRI STRAND
State Press

Jude LaCava, host of Sportsline on KTAR radio, will play out Kevin Costner's role in his own version of "Field of Dreams" at 4 p.m. Friday.

LaCava presented the idea of a makeshift baseball game in a vacant lot located at Eighth Avenue and Jefferson Street in Phoenix, the sight of the city's proposed baseball stadium.

LaCava, who recently moved to the Valley from Toledo, Ohio, learned about the controversy surrounding the proposed stadium and wanted to get involved.

When he opened the phone lines for comment last Friday, the station was overwhelmed by the listeners' response.

"We had to bump guests off the show," LaCava said. "The phones rang for four hours."

LaCava and Sportsline producer Todd Walsh are putting the field together themselves.

LaCava said he sees the event as a way to bring people together and hopes the event will be a "rallying point for people to express their enthusiasm for baseball."

The vote on the proposed stadium is on Oct. 3.

An open invitation is extended to everyone, especially baseball fans. Donations in the form of canned goods and clothing will be accepted by St. Vincent De Paul, who owns the lot on which the game will be played.

The invitation list includes several ex-major league baseball players. Catchers Ozzie Virgil and Joe Garagiola, pitchers Bo McLaughlin, Buddy Schultz and Mickey McDermott, and infielders Lou Klimchick and Jack Heidemann are all possible participants.

"We want everyone to feel the spirit of baseball from this experience," LaCava said.
