Student seeks policy for campus epileptics

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

An ASU student wants the University to establish a policy concerning treatment of epileptic seizures that occur on campus, but campus officials said they are unsure of the legality of the proposal.

Jim Rosendaul, a senior who has had epilepsy for 15 years, said time and money could be saved if ambulances were not immediately called each time a student experienced a seizure.

Epilepsy is a disorder affecting the nervous system that is characterized by convulsions and unconsciousness. Victims suffer periodic seizures that may be violent but are often of short duration and have little long-term effect.

Under Rosendaul's plan, a waiver could be signed by each student with the disorder so that the University would not be held liable if injuries were sustained during a seizure.

However, Bruce Meyerson, ASU general counsel, said the waiver would not necessarily clear the University of liability.

He could not comment on the subject further without doing additional research, but said "(even) if the waiver was signed voluntarily, it's possible that it would not hold up."

Rosendaul said he suffers six to eight seizures per week and underwent brain surgery to help alleviate the problem.

Last summer, Rosendaul had a seizure in Hayden Library. The librarian in charge called 911, and an ambulance arrived shortly.

Rosendaul said he gained partial consciousness and was not in serious danger but was transported to a hospital anyway.

"An ambulance shouldn't be called right away unless a person has injured themselves or they are having a prolonged seizure," he said.

Rosendaul said the ambulance trip cost more than $200.

"They (the ambulance drivers) did absolutely nothing except take me to the hospital, where they called me a cab," he said. "Students can't afford to be spending that kind of money."

Rosendaul said the ambulance drivers

Activist plans to make movie about civil rights

By MIKE VAN DYKE
State Press

A former civil rights activist said Thursday that because the movie "Mississippi Burning" does not paint an entirely accurate account of the civil rights movement in that state during 1964, he is planning a movie of his own.

Bob Zellner, a former member of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, a group that spearheaded the civil rights movement in the South, is best remembered for being one of the first whites involved in the civil rights movement.

He told about 75 students during an Associated Students of ASU-sponsored lecture that "Mississippi Burning" is a wonderful cop movie but doesn't bare much resemblance to the truth."

The lecturer, who was paid $3,100 for his appearance, said that with the help of his fiancée he plans to produce a movie that will "reveal the truth about what happened in Neshoba County, Mississippi in 1964."

"Mississippi Burning," a 1989 Alan Parker-produced film, presents an account of the 1964 FBI investigation into the deaths of three civil rights advocates who were murdered by Ku Klux Klan members and Neshoba County sheriff's officers.

He said the efforts of the FBI were "romanticized" in the movie.

"If the so-called 'heroic FBI' had done what we asked of them, three lives would have been saved," he said, adding that he had asked the FBI to call the sheriff's office to find out where the students were.

Student arrested in connection with sex abuse at party

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

An ASU student was arrested Thursday in connection with the sexual abuse of a female student at a fraternity party last week, University police said.

James Robert Lowry, 25, of the 600 block of East Gilbert Drive, Tempe, was booked at the ASU Police Department on a charge of sexual abuse. He was released on his own recognizance pending a formal complaint to be filed by the Maricopa County Attorney's Office, said ASU police Cpl. Bennett Rowe.

The incident occurred Friday night at the Phi Delta Theta fraternity house, 701 Alpha Drive, during a party with an ASU sorority. The victim reported the incident to police on Tuesday, Rowe said.

'We're sorry for what happened, but we haven't gotten down to the bottom of it.'

—Kirby Maus

Rowe declined to provide specifics about the incident. Sexual abuse, a class five felony punishable by up to two years in jail, is defined as intentionally or knowingly engaging in sexual contact with someone without their consent.

The Office of Student Life is investigating the incident, said Lenna Erickson, administrative assistant to the dean of Student Life.

Lowry, a Phi Delt member and a senior in the College of Public Programs, declined to comment about the incident, saying only that he had made a "mistake."

Phi Delt president Kirby Maus said the fraternity is looking into the matter but has not taken any action. "We're sorry for what happened, but we haven't gotten down to the bottom of it," Maus said, adding that Lowry sent a typed apology letter to the sorority Monday.

Maus said Lowry had been drinking and was "harassing some girls" during the party. He added that the president of the visiting sorority asked him to make Lowry leave the party because Lowry had allegedly "sent eight girls home crying."

"At every party guys bother girls," Maus said. "A lot of guys are like that."

Bush, Baker, Shevardnadze open high-level talks on next summit

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush met with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze on Thursday, opening three days of high-level talks expected to narrow a time frame for a superpower summit next year and spur chemical and nuclear weapons cutbacks.

After nearly two hours of discussions, Shevardnadze said the two sides had not set a date for a summit meeting between Bush and Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev but, "We have concluded that a summit is necessary."

Secretary of State James Baker indicated a summit meeting might not occur until next year, but said it would be in the United States.

The high-level meetings began with a White House session attended by Bush, Shevardnadze and Baker. The discussions will continue between Baker and Shevardnadze on Friday and Saturday at a wilderness lodge near Jackson Hole, Wyo.

Shevardnadze spoke with reporters in the White House driveway before getting into a waiting limousine. Using the same language as Baker, Shevardnadze said the talks in Wyoming probably would set "a general time frame" for a Bush-Gorbachev summit.

Vietnamese begin final pullout from Cambodia after 11-year war

SIEM REAP, Cambodia (AP) — Cambodians showered Vietnamese soldiers with flowers Thursday as they began their final withdrawal from a war that started with a Christmas invasion 11 years ago and ended the bloody rule of the Khmer Rouge.

"Our friends go, but the special Cambodian-Vietnamese relationship does not," said a red banner in front of dozens of military vehicles that rumbled out of this northwestern province to the blare of a pop music band in a government-organized ceremony.

Joint Chiefs chairman calls for ban on assault weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Adm. William Crowe Jr., retiring chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, called Thursday for an end to sales of assault weapons and also said the nation "might consider doing unusual things with the military" to win the war against drugs.

"If we want to fight it, and we want to whip it, we want to prevent it, I would suggest that it does require unusual measures," Crowe said in an interview with news service reporters.

President Bush has banned imported assault weapons but has allowed sales of U.S.-made versions to continue.

Saying the nation has never "seen the fiber of our society eaten away by an insidious, uncontrollable threat," Crowe suggested that in the anti-drug fight America might want to use the military in new ways. "That doesn't appall me," he said.

King holiday passes Senate; further support likely

PHOENIX (AP) — The Arizona Senate voted 17-11 Thursday to trade in the state's paid Columbus Day holiday for a paid holiday honoring slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr.

The vote ended years of disappointment for backers of a King holiday because House passage and signature by Democratic Gov. Rose Mofford were considered a virtual certainty.

Four Republicans joined the Senate's 13 Democrats to pass the measure on the floor.

But the key vote came earlier, when nine Republicans agreed to break a deadlock and let the bill get out of caucus and to the floor.

Business executives have been pushing for the holiday and warning that Phoenix's bid for the 1993 Super Bowl could be in jeopardy unless it is approved, but many Republican senators believe the issue should go to the ballot for a vote by all the state's citizens rather than get decided by the Legislature.

Sen. Carolyn Walker, a key backer of the King effort, said the vote was "a victory for the entire state of Arizona, even those of us who have voted no."

"I hope the state of Arizona can come to a real healing and can put this issue behind us," she added.

Republican Sen. Leo Corbet, who threw his weight behind the bill and competed with Senate President Bob Usdane over who could be its chief GOP supporter, cited the Super Bowl as his reason for the vote, saying lawmakers should think of "what we're doing for economic growth."

Walker also referred to the bowl game and convention boycotts, but predicted that "history will not record that it was an economic issue" that moved Arizona to join most of the nation in honoring King.

No one spoke on the floor in opposition to the measure. Some senators who voted to let the bill out of caucus reported receiving angry telephone calls from constituents.

Usdane, R-Scottsdale, had encouraged fellow Republicans at a morning caucus not to demand a show of hands under a self-imposed rule that requires nine Republican votes to get a controversial bill out of caucus.

"Just allow it to the floor," Usdane urged and he adjourned the meeting to give leaders more time to round up the nine votes.

But some members insisted on a show of hands anyway, and, following a closed door session later in the day, nine members raised their hands to indicate they wanted to allow the full Senate to vote.

Republicans had used the nine-vote rule to block a vote on the King holiday during the regular session after the measure had passed the House.

Earlier versions of the King bill often called for a federal-style, King-for-Lincoln Day swap, angering Republicans who see Lincoln as a GOP hero.

But the switch to Columbus Day wasn't the only factor at work this time.

Super Bowl boosters are saying that Arizona has already lost $256 million in convention and tourism business because it has no paid King holiday and that the state could lose a potential $200 million in business if the 1993 Super Bowl goes elsewhere.

Arizona is getting an undeserved reputation as "a backward and bigotted state," Corbet told his caucus. "I hope we can get the nine votes to put this on the floor and put this behind us."

Democratic lawmakers, meanwhile, predicted that failure to pass a King bill could jeopardize bills to let banks charge more for credit cards and to offer an electronics consortium tens of millions of dollars in incentives to move to Arizona.

All 13 Senate Democrats and one Republican, Phoenix's Jacque Steiner, had consistently supported King bills in the past. Usdane, Corbet, and Tempe's Doug Todd joined their ranks Thursday to approve the King-for-Columbus bill.

Steiner, Usdane, Corbet and Todd were also among those voting in caucus to bring the bill to the floor.

They were joined in caucus by Pete Corpstein of Paradise Valley, John Mawhinney of Tucson, Bill De Long of Tucson, Tom Patterson of Phoenix and John Hays of Yarnell.

Basketball

Frieder era to cost students

Once again, it looks like students are going to be rolled over by the great steamroller known as the University department of athletics.

With the advent of the Bill Frieder era of ASU basketball and the University's dream of a winning hoops squad, the higher-ups in the athletic administration are discussing placing premium charges, which could be as high as $200, on tickets beginning in the 1990-91 season.

The main purpose of the exorbitant ticket prices would be to pay Frieder's outrageously exorbitant earnings, which have been reported at anywhere from $400,000 to $700,000 a year.

Naturally, the better the seats, the higher the premiums, so the Basketball Ticket Review Committee has made the logical deduction that it needs all the best seats in the house to sell to the general public.

But alas, the committee found that section "U", which is located in a prime area of the stadium and which would bring the highest premium charges, is already occupied by students who pay only $1 per game.

The solution? Move the students out of the potentially expensive — and therefore profitable — seats and make them sit in the corner of the arena, far away from the prime seats they once occupied.

The committee members claim this could be a beneficial move for students because the section will be increased by about 500 seats.

We are unimpressed. The only other sports team in town that charges premiums on seats is the Phoenix Cardinals — you know, that professional team.

In case Athletic Director Charles Harris and committee chairman Lonnie Ostrom have forgotten, the Sun Devil basketball team is a collegiate organization, not a professional one. This is a sport, gentlemen, and it is not listed on the New York Stock exchange.

If Harris thinks Frieder — a man who left his Michigan squad as it was preparing to make its victory march through the NCAA tournament — is worth a paycheck that could probably build a new stadium, then he can pay for it out of his own pocket.

If the committee thinks students will tolerate being herded into the corner of the stadium so it can generate more dollars by raping the general public for upwards of $300 a ticket, think again.

ASU basketball games have never drawn large amounts of students or members of the public. Don't expect things to get better by offering bad seats to students and back-breaking prices to everyone else.

Even if Frieder can lead the ASU basketball program to the promised land by waving his bankbook and parting the Pac-10, he still isn't worth his income.

Students want to sit in quality seats to see their team play. If we want to occupy bad seats, we'll drive to Tucson to watch the games there — at least Lute Olson wouldn't abandon his team before the NCAA tourney.

The committee will meet again in two weeks to make its final recommendations. The committee members should seriously consider their actions before brushing students aside — or they will find the basketball program heavily dependent on the general public for support.

And at these prices — good luck.

Rec Center ripoff

Editor:

As complaints against the Recreation Center's mandatory fee continue, much is made of the student vote that took place several years ago. However, no one pauses to consider that those who must now pay did not have the opportunity to vote, and those who voted did not face the possibility of paying (unless they intended to remain at ASU a long time).

The election itself was a "special" election. Rather than on the mall like regular elections, polling booths were placed in selected obscure classrooms. Anyone who has studied efficacy theory in voting trends could predict the low and skewed turnout that resulted. Especially since the vote was known to be irrelevant. Most who were opposed had low incentive to take extra time out from classes and/or work under those conditions.

There was also disinformation circulating before the election. Opinion polls which claimed to show a great student demand for such a project turned out to have been taken at a different university. This is important because if enough people actually wanted it, a mandatory fee would not be necessary.

The consequences of the proposal were not fully explained. The distinction was not made clear enough on ballots and questionnaires between the general notion that "I think building a recreation center is a good idea" and "I think all students who come to ASU after me should pay a mandatory tax to build a recreation center, whether they want it or not." There is a big difference between the two.

Explosion

Will East Germany experience popular uprising?

Cody Shearer
North American Syndicate

WASHINGTON — For most of this year, the East German leadership has been anxiously preparing to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the German Democratic Republic (GDR) come Oct. 7. But now that the climax has almost arrived, fear has gripped East Berlin because President Mikhail Gorbachev will attend the festivities.

While the East German government is delighted to have the Soviet leader at the culmination of events celebrating the country's legitimacy, those responsible for security in East Berlin are climbing the infamous wall with anticipation. You see, Mikhail Gorbachev is a hero to so many young East Germans, who are titillated beyond belief by political reforms in the Eastern Bloc, that no one is sure what his visit could trigger.

To date, Gorbachev's visits to East Berlin have not encouraged any popular or massive demonstrations. However, having visited East Germany last month, I can report that the mood today is very different than during previous Gorbachev visits. There is every indication that he will be met with the kind of fanfare that surrounded his reception in West Germany earlier this year.

According to West German intelligence sources, Moscow is as alarmed at what might happen during Gorbachev's upcoming visit as is the East German leadership. But Moscow is also distraught over recent developments in East Germany, from top to bottom.

'To date, Gorbachev's visits to East Berlin have not encouraged any popular or massive demonstrations. However, having visited East Germany last month, I can report that the mood today is very different than during previous Gorbachev visits.'

The old men who rule East Germany are teetering on the brink of self-destruction. With Erich Honecker, 77, seriously ill, tens of thousands of citizens feeling exasperation, and a stagnant economy, who can be optimistic? There is little doubt that East Germany's old men — eight politburo members are over 70 — lack the courage or imagination to prepare for change.

There is also no masking the widespread discontent within East Germany. I saw shops, for example, all over East Berlin advertising signs for workers. Meanwhile, factories are losing employees by the week. Even medical facilities in outlying parts of the country are becoming scarcer as doctors flee.

Unlike some of their Eastern Bloc comrades, East Germans have never had to live in a make-believe world. With East German television and radio beamed into almost every home, and with regular visits by friends and relatives from across the border, a deep-rooted and potentially explosive cynicism has evolved over two generations.

What's clear is the German Democratic Republic is an artificial creation. Only the most die-hard Communist Party members claim patriotism exists in East Germany. Most citizens in East Germany call themselves Germans and speak optimistically about reunification.

Not surprisingly, it is the young who form the nucleus of the exodus. Most of them are skilled workers and professionals between the ages of 20 and 40. But the mass departure that occurred last week from East Germany is different from what took place in 1961. We are not seeing a traditional rejection of material shortages and economic stagnation but a deep alienation from communist ideology. Complaints most often heard in East Germany involve travel restrictions, the police state and the perception that the party treats average citizens like a bunch of idiots.

Who hasn't been moved by the tears of joy that have been shed by all the young East Germans who've escaped the clutches of communism? The full human cost of these departures are only now sinking in. Imagine waking up to the fact that you've exchanged your home, job and parents for a life of uncertainty and a concept called freedom?

Lutz Brinkel, a 38-year-old electrical engineer, pointed to his 8-year-old son, Marko, and wife, Barbel, last week when asked by reporters why he had fled his homeland. "I want them to have a free life in the West," he said.

For the moment, the German Democratic Republic is virtually leaderless as it confronts its worst crisis since the Berlin Wall was erected in 1961. Naturally, it is too much to expect old men like Honecker to understand that he has built a country so silly and gray that its brightest citizens departed quickly when they saw the first green light.

If the East German government cannot create the kind of economic and political outlets its young citizens have seen all around, they will either vote with their feet or explode in anger. After all, the failure of communist dogma has left East Germany without a reason to exist. Now it must bridge its shaky Brezhnev era with serious change. But anyone who understands the leadership in East Berlin well, will bet that it is incapable of creating a politically attractive alternative, free of a popular uprising.

Campaigns

Packaging presidency tricky; Ailes got bum rap

Jeff Greenfield
Universal Press Syndicate

NEW YORK — Warning: I'm about to violate the code of ethics for political writers. I'm coming to the defense of a highly paid political operative who plots television strategy for candidates.

The man in question is none other than Roger Ailes, the Republican strategist who came to fame two decades ago as the shrewd media master of Richard Nixon's comeback.

As portrayed in Joe McGinnis' book "The Selling of the President, 1968," Ailes was the sharp-tongued operative behind the warmer, less frightening "new Nixon."

Ailes' more recent notoriety came as a result of the 1988 Bush campaign, where his commercials were credited — or blamed — with painting Mike Dukakis as a wimpy, effete liberal outside the "mainstream values" of America.

What brings me rising — or at least slouching — to his defense is the notion that seems to accompany every word written about Ailes, that he authored the infamous "Willie Horton" commercial, the TV ad that featured a menacing mug shot of the convicted murderer who, while out of a Massachusetts prison on a furlough program, terrorized a Maryland couple.

Ailes, it has been charged several thousand times, thus appealed to base racial fears by raising the specter of a black hoodlum raping a white woman.

Then why defend Ailes? Simple. Ailes did not do the ad and in fact had nothing to do with it. That commercial was produced and aired by an independent group, Americans for Bush. Under current campaign law, such "independent organizations" have a first amendment right to produce, finance and air whatever political messages they want, as long as they have nothing to do with the official campaign organization.

And that, to the best of my knowledge, is what happened here.

Roger Ailes did produce a commercial about the Massachusetts furlough program that Dukakis supported (the program was in fact created by his liberal Republican predecessor as governor of Massachusetts). It was the "revolving door" commercial, featuring prisoners going in and out of a prison, while a voice-of-doom announcer explained, in somewhat misleading terms, how Dukakis had helped put hardened criminals back on the street.

The ad was worthy of tough criticism. As with most political advertising, it was woefully simplistic, and ignored the fact that Massachusetts had one of the lower serious crime rates for a major industrialized state.

What it did not do was show a picture of Willie Horton or even mention Willie Horton. The faces it did show were overwhelmingly white. In and of itself, that commercial simply did not have a racial component to it.

To be sure, the Bush campaign itself drummed up interest in the Willie Horton case for months before the election. It may even be that, given the inextricable bond between race and crime as a visceral anxiety of many Americans, any discussion of crime has to involve race.

But if Roger Ailes is to be painted as the Darth Vader of the 1988 campaign, he at least deserves to be attacked for what he did or what he can plausibly be charged with doing.

'It may even be that, given the inextricable bond between race and crime as a visceral anxiety of many Americans, any discussion of crime has to involve race.'

Journalists who casually list "the Willie Horton ad" as one of Ailes' achievements are simply proving themselves too lazy to go beyond the handful of press clips and find out the facts. They are, in sum, doing what they accuse Ailes of perfecting: throwing out a cheap shot.

There: I've gone and defended a right-wing media manipulator. How I'll explain this back at the office I'll never know.

ASU animal-rights group wants to educate students

By KIMBERLY HARRIS
State Press

A Phoenix-based animal-rights group that has started a chapter at ASU is eager to educate students and Arizonans about institutional abuses to animals.

Stephanie Nichols-Young, president of Concerned Arizonans for Animal Rights and Ethics, said University student interest spurred the group to expand to ASU.

"People are learning more (about animal mistreatment), and a lot of people have questions about what is and isn't right," she said.

Nichols-Young said the expansion movement is not an effort to keep a closer eye on animal experimenters on campus but rather a way for students to form their own group.

"The biggest problem at ASU that concerns us right now is the students who are not given an alternative to participating in animal studies," she said.

Last spring, a student withdrew from the University because she said she was horrified by the experimental animal studies conducted in her zoology classroom.

Barbara Maxwell, a clinical psychology graduate student, said today she is encouraging students to join the animal-rights group on campus.

"There is an overall feeling of animal issues nationwide," she said. "At ASU, the concern is that the University may not be enforcing its policies of allowing alternatives to experimentation. This is one area of interest for our group."

Maxwell said the purpose of the ASU group is to provide a forum for students who feel pressured into participating in issues against their morals.

Maxwell, who is licensed with Wildlife Rehabilitation, said she is adamantly opposed to the mistreatment of animals.

"I can't believe the minds that put Voyager 2 (a space probe) within 20 miles of their projected target can't come up with a viable, economically feasible method of performing these studies," she said.

Although Maxwell said she owns leather cowhide shoes, she tries to avoid using products containing animal by-products.

"Yes, I do drive a car which uses anti-freeze made from animal by-products," Maxwell said. "But in our society it is extremely difficult to buy products that are 'cruelty-free.'" Maxwell said she has a solution to avoiding the use of animal by-products.

"My plan is to start grass-root movements and set up booths to educate people on humane issues," she said.

'Offensive' words absent from revised English Bible

LONDON (AP) — Jesus rides into Jerusalem on a donkey instead of an ass in a new English-language Bible that is careful not to upset U.S. readers, the editor said Thursday.

"The old usage is a classic example of offense being caused in the United States for obvious reasons," said Roger Coleman, coordinating editor of "The Revised English Bible."

In Britain, the word ass doesn't have as many meanings as it does in American use.

"References to ass have been adjusted to the inoffensive and unambiguous donkey," he said.

The change is one of thousands in the 1,294-page revision of "The New English Bible," which appeared in 1970 and which in Britain has largely replaced the Authorized Version or King James Bible of 1611 and its late 19th-century Revised Version.

Coleman said American viewpoints reached the translators through the New York offices of the Oxford and Cambridge university presses, which are jointly printing the new Bible.

"They came largely from people who want to use the Bible literally, with only the meanings they attribute to the words, although a large number of Americans are used to the Authorized Version where 'ass' is used liberally," Coleman said.

The publishers describe the new Bible as a linguistically updated version, whose style relates less to the vocabulary of a 19th-century clergyman and more to the needs of a 20th-century congregation.

It substitutes "you" for "thee" and "thou," "did" for "didst" and abandons the "O" in references to God such as "O Lord."

God is still referred to as "he" (but without a capital H) in faithfulness to the original writings, Coleman said, but in other references to gender the version grapples with sexism for the first time in a British-produced Bible.

"English is not too well equipped to express gender," Coleman told a news conference.

"We carefully looked at all cases where male-oriented language was used — 'men' or 'brethren' applied to people of both sexes — and we used an inclusive gender term or adjusted the translation to sidestep the problem," he said.

"Brethren" becomes "friends" in some places and "a man" sometimes is changed to "a person."

Elsewhere, "corn" has been changed to

"grain" in many cases because it means wheat in some countries, maize in others and oats in Scotland.

William Duff McHardy, formerly Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford University, the revision's director, was asked why the phrase, "Vanity of vanities . . . all is vanity" from the first chapter of Ecclesiastes was changed to "Futility, utter futility."

"We discussed it for a long time," he said. "Vanity did not represent all that the original Hebrew ought to represent, but futility was the best we could do. We still have slight misgivings."

Morna Hooker, professor of New Testament studies at Cambridge University and the only woman among the revisers, said: "If God was referred to as 'she,' it wouldn't be the Bible, which one must remember is 19 centuries old. You must always stand at a slight distance from it."

Scholars of all Britain's mainstream churches cooperated for the first time in the revision, which took 15 years: Anglicans, Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Quakers, the Salvation Army and the Bible societies.

Literary advisers included the poet Philip Larkin before his death in 1985 and novelist Mary Stewart.

Lord Coggan, former archbishop of Canterbury and a scholar of ancient Hebrew who presided over meetings of the project committee, said they aimed to produce the "first fully ecumenical Bible" in "straightforward language for reading in church that can be immediately understood."

"The Bible is one of the main tools of the Christian church but tools get blunt and the edges need resharpening. Knowledge increases as the years go by, language changes and style alters," he said.

The new Bible, officially published Sept. 28 but already on sale, will be used immediately in Protestant churches but still needs the imprimatur — license to publish — of Catholic authorities before their congregations can use it, Coleman said.

The revisers met in the Jerusalem Chamber of 900-year-old Westminster Abbey where the compilers of the first Revised Version met from 1871 to 1881.

The work is being printed in a first run of 300,000 copies for the English-speaking world, including 200,000 for the United States, said Geoffrey Cass, chief executive of Cambridge University Press.

Tempe Police Report

The Tempe Police Department reported the following incidents that occurred between 7 a.m. Wednesday and 7 a.m. Thursday:

- Three people, including one ASU student, were arrested in connection with an alleged theft after they were seen leaving an apartment complex at 155 W. Third St. with a bicycle. Tenants became suspicious after they allegedly saw the trio peering into apartment patios.
- An ASU student was arrested for disorderly conduct after he allegedly yelled profanities at officers while they were issuing a citation to another student.

- A man was arrested after he allegedly tried choking his son for shooting unripe oranges with a sling shot. One orange hit the roof and upset the man, police said.
- A man was arrested for drunken driving after he allegedly ran a red light and hit a car at Broadway Road and the Interstate 10. He failed a sobriety test.

- A man was arrested for aggravated assault after he allegedly pointed a .25-caliber semi-automatic gun at a person and threatened to kill him.

Man arrested on sex charge, allegedly tries 'score' on cop

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

A 49-year-old Sun City man was arrested Wednesday on a sex charge after police said he allegedly grabbed an undercover officer in the mens restroom at the Farmer Education Building.

Michael Gregory Freer, of the 10000 block of Caron Drive, was arrested on a charge of sexual abuse and released on his own recognizance pending a formal complaint to be filed by the Maricopa County Attorney's Office, ASU police said.

Police said Freer, a substitute high school teacher in Glendale, has a prior record of sex crimes in Maricopa County.

Police said Freer was standing in the halls in the Farmer building attempting to "make contact" with other men. In the past, police said he has gone to the building to "score" homosexual dates.

Undercover officers were sent into the building to investigate the matter after they received complaints from students and faculty about incidents involving other men, police said.

Police said the Farmer building has had a history of problems involving homosexual activity in the mens bathrooms.

The University shut the restrooms down in 1985 because of complaints of homosexual activity but later reopened them.

Faculty, staff and students have complained that the activity in the mens room is embarrassing and prevents others from using the facilities, police said.

Holes have been cut into the restroom dividers to enable the sex acts to occur, police said.

Sexual abuse is considered a class five felony and is punishable with up to two years in jail.

Disabled tackle library's 'obstacle course'

By JOIE ANN LaPOLLA
State Press

ASU doctoral student Mike Waldon said it takes all his strength just to go from the new section of the renovated Hayden Library to the old elevators.

Waldon, who moves his wheelchair manually, is just one of many disabled students at ASU who has a difficult time trekking up the new ramp in the library.

He said the ramp is just too long. "It takes every bit of strength I have to make it," the English major said. "It's a poor plan for a building."

But University officials said they will attempt to fix any items to make the library more accessible for disabled students.

"I don't see anything that we can't fix," said the library's Assistant Dean Jane Conrow, after taking a tour Thursday with Waldon, who pointed out the library's shortcomings.

The library will request the construction of a wheelchair lift to connect the new section and the old elevators, Conrow said. The lift should be in place this year, she added.

Jim Morin, a program coordinator for Disabled Student Resources, said there have been several complaints by students about the new library section.

In addition to the long ramp, disabled students have charged that the Hayden Library expansion makes it difficult to study, find books or use research facilities, Waldon said.

Waldon also said some book stacks are too close together and many study and computer tables are too low for wheelchairs to fit under them.

Conrow said higher desks will be made available and a new computer room with comfortable tables will be added. There is also a Disabled Student Resources Room, located in the basement of the new addition, which is staffed by two assistants who help students use the library's facilities.

"We try to correct problems or offer help (for disabled students)," said Debbe Kast, the room's supervisor. "We help overcome barriers despite what the library has done."

In 1986, when the library was in the planning stages, Conrow, representatives from ASU's planning and construction department and Jim Hemauer, program director for the orthopedically disabled, met to discuss disabled students' needs for the new section of the library. Hemauer, who also uses a wheelchair, said he examined the blueprints and models of the new section and was satisfied with it.

"I've been working with Jane since before they started digging the hole for this place," Hemauer said. "To say that disabled persons have been overlooked is not true."

But Waldon said the library was much easier to use before the renovations and the new entrance has turned it into an "obstacle course."

"It's like they took access away from me that was already there," Waldon said. "They call this art and art won out over practicality."

"But art should always think of the people."

Health value of fast food based on cooking method

By MICHELLE ALLMAN
State Press

Those eating chicken and fish instead of red meat for health reasons may not be doing themselves any favors, a recently released report stated.

In fact, a fast-food chicken or fish sandwich is sometimes worse than a hamburger and fries, the Massachusetts Medical Society said in its report.

In addition, the Simmons Market Research Bureau found that 99 percent of the University population at ASU eat out at least once a week, and 75 percent eat out at least four times a week.

Karen Moses, a nutritionist with the ASU Student Health Center, said people are confused about the advantages of chicken and fish over red meat.

"People are on this 'no red meat' kick," she said. "They aren't realizing that when they take a low-fat meat like chicken or fish, they are making it high-fat by breading and frying it. The difference is in the cooking method."

Many people are surprised to discover that a fish sandwich coated in batter and fried may contain up to 25 grams of fat, while a single hamburger contains 13 grams. A fast-food chicken patty sandwich contains as much fat as 14 pints of ice cream, the report said.

Connie Roberts, a Brigham and Women's Hospital dietician who wrote the report, said fast-food chains should give consumers more information about what they are eating. Her report, published in the New England Journal of Medicine, recommends that the chains:

- Reveal the type and quantity of fat in food, as well as the amount of protein, vitamins and minerals.
- Provide printed menus for people who want to restrict their intake of salt, calories or fat.
- Identify the nutrient content of items on salad bars, especially such selections as potato salad and dressings.
- Offer such alternatives as low-fat or skim milk, margarine, low-fat salad dressings and whole-grain buns.

However, Moses said many students will still choose high-fat foods.

"The guidelines would make things easier for the consumer," Moses said.

"But if people like the taste (of high-fat food), they will still eat it."

Red meat does not deserve the bad wrap it has gotten over the last few years, she said.

"Beef is a great source of iron, zinc and other minerals," Moses said. The American Heart Association recommends adults eat five to seven ounces of beef daily.

"We should be eating beef sometimes — especially women," she said.

Moses said the important thing for students to remember is to make logical choices.

"If you go to a fast-food place just realize you probably aren't going to eat healthy," she said. "If eating healthy is important, go somewhere that you know will offer you a choice."

Moses said the importance of choice is why she supports the MMS recommendations.

"If you are standing in line trying to decide what to get, with angry people behind you, you won't make a thoughtful choice," she said. "But if you can take a menu home you can compare and choose and know what you want."

Patty Parker, a spokeswoman for Carl's Jr. restaurants, said the fast-food chain tries to give customers an option.

"We have grilled chicken and low-fat salads," she said. "We have been offering take-home menus for a long time. We think it is important to offer a wide variety of choices."

Despite the options offered at some fast-food places, many others are "behind the times, health-wise," Moses said.

"McDonald's is one that has very few choices," she said.

McDonald's declined comment on the study.

Moses said until consumers demand a change, most fast-food places will offer a limited menu including very few healthy items.

"It takes the public a long time to catch on," she said. "The problems with cholesterol have been known for years, but it is just now 'hip' to watch cholesterol. People need to be aware — to be informed."

Seizures

knew he did not need medical attention. "I kept arguing with the ambulance crew that they knew better, and I had my (medic alert) bracelet on," he said. "They just wanted to make some money."

Southwest Ambulance, who responded to the Rosendaul incident, would not comment on the matter but said Rosendaul's fee has been dropped.

The Epileptic Society of Arizona agreed with Rosendaul.

"The only time we recommend an ambulance is called is if a person is injured, the seizure lasts longer than four minutes or the person does not regain consciousness after the seizure has stopped," said Luz Rubio, administrative assistant with the society.

In Rosendaul's plan to change the ASU policy, he said he hopes to get the support of the Associated Students of ASU and Disabled Student Resources.

"I'm committed to straightening people out about epilepsy," he said. "I've been making a pest out of myself so people will listen to me."

Tedde Scharf, director of Disabled Student Resources, said she is interested in addressing Rosendaul's individual needs along with those of other epileptic students but said it may be unreasonable to ask University employees to judge whether an ambulance is necessary.

Scharf said she is not sure that a waiver would be practical because seizures can happen anywhere and often may look like the symptoms of a heart attack.

"You can't expect students and faculty to decide what a seizure is or not," she said. "You can't make a policy that 911 would never be called. I don't know if I would be competent to make that kind of decision."

ASASU President Paul Larson agreed.

"He (Rosendaul) is trying to accomplish something that might put other people in unreasonable danger," he said.

Because of the seriousness of his seizures, Rosendaul said he makes sure that his professors are familiar with his disorder and how to treat it.

Vicarious thrills can be found in the State Press Personals.

New ASU planning chairman former 'long-haired radical'

By KELLY JAIN
State Press

In the late 1960s and early 1970s, an ASU department chairman was one of many radical college student activists advocating civil rights and denouncing the Vietnam War.

But he went one step further — Frederick R. Steiner changed the traditional yearbook.

"We (the yearbook staff) were radical, long-haired guys," said the chairman of the ASU planning department housed in the College of Architecture and Environmental Design. "We wanted to put together something that was more reflective of what we were experiencing in the 1970s. It was a rather radical experiment at the time."

Steiner's yearbook, titled The Cincinnati, contained spreads on the important issues of the time: the Vietnam War, civil rights, prison reform, pollution and campus life at the University of Cincinnati in Ohio. The former yearbook editor said he used expressive journalism and photographs to present these issues.

Although he was radical, Steiner said he still went to sporting events and enjoyed the usual college activities. Likewise, the yearbook contained the fraternity and sports team photos, he added.

Steiner does not have long hair anymore, but he said he is still concerned about what is going on around him now that he is in the Valley.

As a new planning authority in the area, Steiner said there are two local problems that need to be solved: reversing the "urban heat-island" effect and creating safer bicycle pathways, especially at ASU.

The "urban heat-island" effect is a highly publicized theory devised by Robert Balling, an ASU assistant professor of geography, which states that Phoenix has warmed 7 degrees Celsius in the last 30 years.

Balling said the effect can be described as artificial warming caused by an abundance of concrete and asphalt that reflects and intensifies heat.

From an urban planning point of view, Steiner said numerous steps can be taken to improve the climate such as planting trees and vegetation along Valley streets.

Another issue Steiner said he is ready to improve is ASU's bike paths, adding that he bikes to school everyday.

In some places the paths end abruptly or they run into telephone poles, Steiner said.

Although Tempe is "bike-friendly," there is still room for improvement including designing more efficient paths along canals.

Steiner became chairman of the University planning department Aug. 1, succeeding acting chairman Richard E. Lai.

The activist came to ASU from the University of Colorado at Denver, where he was a professor of urban and regional planning from 1987 to 1989.

He holds a bachelor's degree in design and master's degrees in community, regional, and city and regional planning. He received his doctorate in planning from the University of Pennsylvania in 1986.

Earlier this year, Steiner won the Researcher of the Year award from the University of Colorado.

Zellner

Deputy sheriff Cecil Price was later one of those convicted of murdering the student activists.

At the time, Zellner said he believed the three students were most likely in jail.

"If the FBI had called the sheriff's office, they probably would have denied having them in custody, but it might have deterred the officers from killing them," Zellner said.

ASU is the first of 10 stops on Zellner's college lecture tour this fall, in which he plans to tell his side of the story.

Zellner has knowledge of the FBI investigation because he was involved in the search for the three missing student civil rights workers.

The civil rights activist said he and the wife of one of the missing students, Mickey Schwerner, traveled to Philadelphia, Miss., the day after the three were thought to be missing. Zellner was a 25-year-old college student at the time.

The speaker said he had been working with missing students Schwerner, James Chaney and Andrew Goodman in an effort to register blacks to vote in the South.

Later in the speech, the civil rights activist described how he became involved in the movement despite being reared by his father, grandfather and uncles — members of the KKK.

He said he first realized that "the situation in the South wasn't quite right" after meeting with Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Zellner interviewed King for a sociology term paper on the racial tension in the South at Huntington College in Montgomery, Ala., and had to deal with resulting KKK harassment.

Bob Zellner, a civil rights activist, spoke to about 75 students and faculty in the MU Thursday evening concerning the inaccuracies in the movie "Mississippi Burning."

Tempe trolleys stay in action

By LAURA SCHMIDT
State Press

The trolley cars "Tessie," "Tillie" and "Teresa" will continue roaming Tempe streets because the city has agreed to extend a monthly subsidy to a firm that obtained rights to the trolley concession in June.

"I don't see us discontinuing a very needed service," Tempe City Councilwoman Barbara Sherman said.

The council's finance committee decided Aug. 31 to continue providing a monthly subsidy of $5,416 to Metro Trolley Inc., the third owner of the trolley system in five years.

Metro Trolley took over Tempe's three trolleys on June 5 from the Tempe Transit Authority, which declared bankruptcy July 11, said Reg Davis, owner of Metro Trolley.

Pat Flinn, Tempe management services director, said the city has sponsored the trolley service since its inauguration in 1984, when Tempe donated $46,000 to boost it "off the ground."

Flinn said the city has given the trolley system $5,416 every month during the past 2½ years.

But Tempe Transit Authority suffered financial and ridership problems. In August 1987, the Tempe Transit Authority pulled the trolleys off the streets while the company tried to solve its difficulties.

Sherman said city officials feel the trolleys add an informal and intimate atmosphere to the downtown Tempe environment.

"I have had people that were concerned there wasn't enough ridership and it costs too much," Sherman said. "But the company is making money rather than losing money."

of $2,137 in its first month of operation, according to an August statement from the company. The trolleys carried 6,798 riders in August.

Flinn said the city is "getting a super deal" with the new trolley ownership and the trolleys' consistently low rates.

"It's encouraging any time you run a profit in the transportation system," Davis said.

Craig Clifford, manager of Tempe's accounting department, said the city's subsidy only covers about 30 percent of the trolleys' estimated $18,000 monthly operating expense. Metro Trolley Inc. pays for the rest of the monthly costs.

The trolley, which costs 75 cents to ride, runs two routes from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday. Davis said during September, about 420 people ride the trolleys every day.

The Mill Avenue/Southern Avenue route is a 6-mile round trip, starting downtown and reaching Southern Avenue and Dobson Road. The route extends to Mesa Community College, dropping passengers off near the campus library.

The University Drive/McClintock Road route covers 7 miles, starting on College Avenue and reaching McClintock Drive and Baseline Road.

During the evenings and weekend hours, all three trolleys are used for chartered services.

When all three trolleys are used for chartered services, they provide rides for football games, weddings and private parties.

Davis said the Tempe trolleys also offer rides to visitors during the biannual Mill Avenue Merchants Association art fair. He said the trolleys may offer rides during the Fiesta Bowl block party on New Year's Eve. He added that it will help police curb the amount of drunken drivers in the community.

Tame lion loses home in dispute

DOUGLAS (AP) — State Game and Fish officials held the door open for J. C., and the mountain lion stepped right into a van that was to take him to his new home in Texas, said the owners of the zoo that housed him since October.

J. C., a neutered and declawed lion who has lived in captivity since his birth in 1981, was turned over to the Douglas Wildlife Park after Christine Aspesi lost a four-year battle with state wildlife authorities over keeping the animal in her Elfrida home.

Aspesi and her family had purchased J. C. in Michigan and only ran into problems keeping him when they moved to Arizona. However, when the Aspesis sought to return with J. C. to Ann Arbor, they found state officials there now prohibited the importation of mountain lions into that state.

Aspesi said she contacted the owners of the non-profit Texas Exotic Feline Foundation in Boyd in an effort to find J. C. a home where he'll have more space and human companionship than at the Douglas park.

"I'm sorry to be separated from him, but at least in Texas he would be back in an environment with people who handle cats. He would be back in a family again," Aspesi said.

J. C. will be the only mountain lion at the facility, which houses animals that were formerly pets. J. C. will share the facility with a snow leopard, an Asian leopard and a number of lions and tigers, said Bruno Fuegiel, who owns the Douglas park.

Fuegiel said J. C. climbed into the back of the van and didn't need to be sedated.

Greenpeace ship protests at base

LA MADDALENA, Sardinia (AP) — Greenpeace activists sailed by a U.S. naval base on this Italian island Thursday to protest the alleged presence of radioactivity from nuclear-powered submarines.

The Greenpeace ship Sirius, flanked by several rubber boats, approached the American naval support vessel Orion and the protesters unfurled a large banner reading "Nuclear Free La Maddalena."

Port authorities sprayed jets of water at the protesters and escorted the Sirius away. No arrests were made.

Joining the protest were parliamentarians from Italy's Greens, Communist and far-left Proletarian Democracy parties.

The Italian government has denied the base presents a radioactive hazard to residents.

Weird Wire

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Glasnost notwithstanding, there are still some unknown details about Soviet leaders. Such as, how big is Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze's head?

Wyoming officials wanted to know that before Shevardnadze's scheduled arrival in Jackson Hole today for two days of talks with Secretary of State James Baker.

"We tried calling the Soviet Embassy in Washington. They said it's just kind of average. We didn't really know what that meant," said Dennis Curran, spokesman for Gov. Mike Sullivan.

So they rang up the State Department.

It took two days of research to find an answer: 60 centimeters.

"We weren't quite sure what that meant," Curran said, adding that officials think it corresponds to a size 7½.

Sun Devils' linebacker overcomes limitations

By JOEL HORN
State Press

Darren Woodson smiles broadly. He is playing football again.

The 6-foot-1, 206-pound right inside linebacker has prevailed over many obstacles during the last few years to become a starter.

His high school grades and college entrance exam scores were not satisfactory, so he did not qualify for a scholarship under the NCAA's Proposition 48 rule.

With his mother footing the bill, Woodson enrolled at ASU in the fall of 1987 and commuted from the West Valley. He was not allowed to practice with the team.

The ASU coaching staff promised him a scholarship if his grades showed improvement, which they did.

Woodson said he thinks Proposition 48 should be explained more thoroughly to high school athletes.

"Coaches and teachers should warn kids that this is going to happen," he said, "so hit the books."

He said he did not like having to sit out a year.

"Mentally, it took a lot out of me," Woodson said. "I didn't hang out with my friends (on the team)."

"I've played football since I was 8 years old — I missed it."

Woodson participated in the first three games of the 1988 season on special teams before suffering an injury to his left hip. The NCAA, however, granted him a medical redshirt year.

He had a phenomenal spring practice and prompted the Sun Devil coaches to move

Woodson

Woodson is often moved to inside linebacker when the Sun Devils utilize the nickel defense (five defensive backs), and he also participates on special teams.

"I'm on the field a lot more than other players," he said. "Special teams are fun. We really excite the crowd."

"A lot of guys on special teams are crazy. They like to hit."

A 1987 graduate of Maryvale High School in Phoenix, Woodson currently is tied with inside linebacker Mark Tingstad for the Sun Devil lead in tackles with 20. He had a team-high nine tackles in ASU's 31-0 shut out against Kansas State and registered another team best, 11 tackles the following week during ASU's 28-21 win against San Jose State.

ASU Head Football Coach Larry Marmie often has said that Woodson rarely gets knocked off his feet by blockers.

"I do get knocked down," Woodson said. "I just get up quicker."

Woodson said he has a dream of playing professional football, but he has other current priorities.

"A lot of players don't make it," he said, "so right now education is my main focus."

The criminal justice major also has aspirations of someday becoming a probation officer.

Woodson said the Houston Cougars, the Devils' opponent Saturday night, are a tough, physical team.

"They really love the game of football," he said.

Andre Ware, the UH quarterback, said this week that the Cougars would go undefeated during the 1989 season.

"His comments got us more excited," he said. "We're ready to get after him now."

ASU Head Coach Larry Marmie said the Sun Devils respect the Cougars, but they have not spent much time watching film from the UNLV debacle.

"You only need to look at the first quarter or quarter and a half and put that one away," he said. "We'll have to play our best to date if we expect to win."

The Sun Devils have won 15 of its last 17 non-conference games, dating back to September 1985 when ASU lost to Michigan State, 12-3. The two losses were to Nebraska.

The San Jose State win gave ASU a 162-43-3 (.787) all-time record in 31 seasons at Sun Devil Stadium.

ASU leads the seven-game, 38-year-old series with Houston 5-2-0. The Sun Devils are 3-1 against Houston in Sun Devil Stadium and 1-0 at the Astrodome. Saturday's game will be the third time the two teams have met in the 1980s, the last time in 1982 when ASU won 24-10.

ASU and Houston are scheduled to meet again Dec. 2, 1990 in the Coca-Cola Bowl in Tokyo.

World gymnastics trials this weekend in Tempe

Two Tempe gymnasts, Juliet Bangerter and Sandy Woolsey, will compete in the McDonald's World Championships USA Team Trials at 2 p.m. Saturday and Sunday at the University Activity Center.

The world team trials will determine the eight-person team that will represent the United States at the World Championships in Stuttgart, West Germany, next month.

Woolsey, 17, and Bangerter, 15, enter the trials ranked No. 3 and 6, respectively, from their scores in the U.S. Gymnastics National Championships in July. Both girls train locally at the Desert Devils Gymnastics Center.

Brandy Johnson, the fourth-ranked woman gymnast in the world, is expected to miss the U.S. world team trials due to illness, the U.S. Gymnastics Federation announced Thursday.

Johnson, the U.S. women's 1989 champion, developed a virus on Monday and is on antibiotics. Her physician has recommended bedrest.

Although she will miss the trials, Johnson may still make the U.S. team.

Her score for the U.S. Championships, in which she finished first, will represent 100 percent of her score for the world team. For other gymnasts, the U.S. Championships represent 70 percent of their score. Thirty percent comes from July's National Championships.

If Johnson's score is in the top four after the world team trials, she will be placed on the World Championships team.

If she is not among the top four, she will be allowed to petition the gymnastics national governing body for inclusion on the world team.

Johnson placed fifth on vault and 10th all-around at the 1988 Olympics.

ASU womens golf team faces rigorous test in Northwest

By PAUL CORO
State Press

The ASU womens golf team will premier its 1989-90 look to an elite eight-team field Monday at the University of Oregon Invitational.

The tournament will feature four of the top six teams in the country. The Sun Devils enter the fall campaign as the nation's No. 3 team.

"We are definitely ready for the competition," ASU Coach Linda Vollstedt said. "The players are strong, they look good and they are ready to compete. They are real anxious about starting."

ASU will face second-ranked San Jose State, the returning NCAA champions, and five Pac-10 foes, including fourth-ranked USC and sixth-ranked UCLA.

"(SJSU) should be really strong with their winning nationals and having such a strong recruiting season," Vollstedt said.

She added that the team's first tournament will give the Sun Devils a chance to travel together and help the new players experience competition.

Vollstedt will travel with six players due to an uncertain injury to one of her new players.

Brandie Burton, who has been billed as the nation's top freshman, injured her knee in a classroom accident and is undergoing treatment.

"She has not played since Monday," Vollstedt said. "It is unsure as to what the final outcome will be."

Junior Mindy Bono is on the bubble for team play, Vollstedt said. Bono, who will be in her first road tourney, will compete individually regardless of Burton's progress.

The remainder of the traveling squad will be freshman Tricia Konz, sophomore Lynne Mikulas and seniors Missy Farr and Amy Fruhwirth, a second-team All-America last year.

"Amy is hitting the ball really well," Vollstedt said. "She has a lot of experience. She needs to have the confidence that she can go out and play with the best."

As a freshman, Mikulas finished with as many top 10 finishes (four) as Fruhwirth but admits her play recently has not been up to par.

"Basically, I am really tired from school and weights," Mikulas said.

Konz and possibly Burton, who has not played since Monday, will be participating in their first ever college tournament.

"I am more excited than nervous," Konz said. "I just want to play the best I can and hopefully the team can do the same."

During the team's qualifying rounds at McCormick Ranch Golf Club last week, Konz posted the low score in two of the three rounds.

"Tricia has been playing well," Vollstedt said. "She can do very well if she can get used to the competition."

Farr, Konz, Burton and Fruhwirth were all within a shot of each other during qualifying.

"I think any of the five has a chance to win the tournament," Vollstedt said.

Portland's Royal Oaks Country Club is a complete opposite to the Karsten Golf Course, ASU's new home. Vollstedt said the tough course features fast greens and lots of trees which will make it play tight.

With such a strong field, the Sun Devils could present a strong case for a top ranking. Vollstedt said she was satisfied with the team's current ranking but maintains that pre-season rankings are questionable.

"The people who judge do not have a lot to go on," Vollstedt said.

The top two finishers from last season's NCAA Championship are ranked No. 1 and 2 in the country. Tulsa is the nation's No. 1 one team, and five Pac-10 teams highlight Golfweek magazine's top 10.

Wolf howling about chance to face Giant

PHOENIX (AP) — While an offensive lineman at Boston College the last four years, Joe Wolf said he used to watch New York Giants linebacker Lawrence Taylor on television and wonder what it would be like to block him.

Wolf, now a rookie with the Phoenix Cardinals, will find out in Sunday's NFL game against the Giants at East Rutherford, N.J.

The 6-foot-5, 279-pound Wolf has been forced into the starting lineup after a knee injury to eight-year pro Tootie Robbins in the Sept. 10 season opener at Detroit.

"I don't think I'm going to be any more nervous before this game than any other," Wolf said with a shrug. "I think it's going to be fun."

New York Coach Bill Parcells said he plans to keep Taylor lined up on the right side, where he'll match up with Cardinals' two-time Pro Bowl offensive tackle Luis Sharpe.

But Phoenix's coaching staff expects Taylor, a perennial All-Pro, to flop often to the left side and try to blitz his way past Wolf.

Taylor, who had 12 tackles last week, leads the NFC with three quarterback sacks. Phoenix has not allowed a sack so far this season.

"If you can get in position to block him, that's half the battle," said Wolf, who is learning the tackle position in the pros after primarily playing guard in college.

"The guy's going to be a good football player for a long time. I think if a guy's good enough, he can play anywhere as a rookie," Cardinals Coach Gene Stallings said. "He made some mistakes (in his first career NFL start last Sunday at Seattle), but that's what playing is all about. The only way for him to get better is to play."

Sharpe, an eight-year pro who has had more success against Taylor than anyone in the NFC, said he has given Wolf some tips in practices this week.

"He's got to understand the nature of the beast he's going against. L. T. is a great player. But he can be blocked, and you can't get psyched to the point where you think he's Superman," Sharpe said. "He anticipates the snap count so well. Before you set up, he's on you. The more athlete you are, the better chance you have."

"There's no doubt in my mind that Joe will block him," said Cardinals offensive line Coach Mike Solari. "I think he'll do a good job and the main reason why is because Joe Wolf is an athlete. If you're slow-footed, you'll have trouble. But Joe Wolf is not slow-footed."

Meanwhile, Parcells is worried about two old but still fleet-footed Cardinal wide receivers — Roy Green and J. T. Smith.

Green, 32, has caught 47 passes for 771 yards and seven touchdowns in 14 career games against the Giants.

"He's been a pain in the butt for me for nine years," Parcells said in a telephone conference call. "I'm just going to take him across the Mexican border and try to let him get back over on his own."

Green has 200 yards and four touchdowns on just 10 catches in the season's first two games while Smith, 33, has a team-leading 225 yards on 17 catches with one TD.

"J. T. is very crafty. He can take young defensive backs and make them look bad," Parcells said. "It doesn't make any difference how old J. T. and Roy are. They don't ask for your birth certificate when you get in the huddle."

Runners tune up in San Diego

By LARRY NEWELL
State Press

The ASU cross country team will try to duplicate its feats at the UTEP Invitational, when it competes Saturday in the Aztec Invitational in San Diego.

"I feel that the UTEP meet was more of a tune-up for the tougher meets," ASU cross country Coach Ken Lehman said. "I expect that the better competition will bring out better performances from our athletes."

"With powerhouses UCLA and Arizona competing, this meet will be a good test for us. This meet will show us how good we really are."

UofA cross country Coach Dave Murray said he is confident of the Wildcats' chances.

"We expect to win on Saturday, as we have the talent to win and if we perform up to our capabilities we will win," Murray said.

Leading the Wildcat attack will be Mark Davis, who holds many individual accolades.

"Mark holds the fastest time ever for an American teenager in the 5000 meters, as well as being the District 8, Pac-10 and the NCAA 5000 meter champion," Murray said. "He will definitely be the athlete to beat on Saturday."

Fifth-year senior Gary Cobb and freshman Brian Grosso will also showcase their talents in San Diego.

"Gary Cobb was a member of a nationally ranked Virginia Tech team two years ago and Brian Grosso was the top high school long distance runner in 1988," Murray said.

UCLA, who in the past has been both a Pac-10 and national power, will try to be competitive early in the season.

"We are a little behind right now because, for us, school has not started and because of this our athletes are not in top shape," UCLA cross country Coach Bob Larson said. "However, we did manage a second place finish at the Fullerton Invitational two weeks ago, and I believe that we will be competitive on Saturday."

ASU's best threat to derail its Pac-10 foes will center around junior Todd Lewis, who last week recorded a second place finish at the UTEP Invitational.

"My strategy at the Aztec Invitational will be to go out with the leaders, stay conservative and go with the flow of the race," Lewis said. "I feel that I can finish in the top five and stay in contention to win the race."

Seniors Mike Frick and Paul Boudreaux, who also will compete for top honors, finished sixth and eighth respectively last week.

Freshman Dave Harkins, who tallied an 11th place finish and was the fourth best Sun Devil finisher, will be looked upon to contribute to overall team scoring.

Other top Sun Devil performers will be senior Rob Dorf, sophomore Troy McKay and freshman Chris Guinnip.

Trojans learn Love's tractics for Devil match

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

It should be an interesting volleyball match tonight when the Sun Devils compete in an away game against USC, a team in the same boat as ASU.

Like ASU, which this season hired new Head Coach Patti Snyder, USC is starting the year fresh with a new Pac-10 coach.

The Trojans' coach is newcomer Lisa Love, who this year took over the reins of 12-year Coach Chuck Erbe. Love coached for seven years at Texas Arlington, where in 1988 her team finished 30-4.

"Lisa Love is an extremely intelligent coach," Snyder said. "I have a lot of respect for her technique. If anything, her team will get better and better and she will complement them."

The Trojans are led by middle-blocker Jenny Hatchett, whose blocking average in 1988 was 1.42, and setter Christine Brigman, who set an average of 13.44 last season.

Although Brigman sat out a few games earlier this season due to an injury, Snyder said she will be back on the court tonight.

"We are going to have to hop on USC early and be aggressive," Snyder said. "We can't allow them to get any offensive flow."

Snyder said that USC is superior to ASU in strength, jumping ability and quickness, but said the Sun Devils' offense is comparable to USC's in effectiveness.

"We are going to have to run a quicker attack against them and use a lot of middle plays," she said. "If it came down to it, I think our middle could outplay theirs."

"Just because you are more physical doesn't mean you win games."

The Sun Devils will remain in California after tonight's match and compete against UCLA on Saturday.

Snyder said that the Bruins are definitely as talented as their No. 2 ranking proves them to be.

"They receive the top recruits each year — the best players in the country," she said. "If you continue to do that, over time you will have a great team."

Snyder said that the number of top recruits also contributes to the Bruins' success, in that each day of practice is like a highly competitive game.

"They probably have two starting line-ups that could win the national title," she said.

UCLA is coached by Andy Banachowski who is the winningest coach in Division-1 history, with a 19-year record of 582-136.

Last year, he coached the Bruins to a 34-1 overall record, and an unprecedented, undefeated 18-0 conference record.

"There is no doubt that Andy knows his stuff," Snyder said. "He is very consistent."

The Bruins are led by first-team All-America and 1988 Player of the Year, Daiva Tomkus. Tomkus finished last season with a 3.96 kill average, a .58 serve average and a 1.44 blocking average.

Snyder said that Tomkus' diversified talents on the court will pose a threat to the Sun Devils.

"Daiva is an outstanding player," Snyder said. "She is quick, strong and enthusiastic. She really deserves her All-America status."

In addition to Tomkus, Snyder said that middle-blocker Elaine Youngs should be a tough competitor. Youngs followed closely behind Tomkus in offense and defense statistics.

"Elaine is one of the most physical players in the country," Snyder said. "But she is a real hothead and loses her temper quickly. She can really dominate a match."

After several moves, Berg finally returns home

At last, Tina Berg can concentrate on the more important aspects of volleyball — like blocking.

For two years, the 1987 Moon Valley High School graduate was played in the right and left positions, as well as the middle.

With the incoming of Head Coach Patti Snyder, Berg has had the opportunity to play in the middle only.

"When I got here, my middle was not that strong," Berg said. "I didn't have a whole lot of experience. They made me more of a utility player."

Berg, a junior, said she is glad to finally be back in the spot she has been playing since high school.

"I like to concentrate on one position at a time," she said. "The techniques are different."

Berg contends, however, that she has picked up one positive aspect from the switching around of positions. Now, in the case of a team injury, she will be able to fill in without a problem.

Snyder said that Berg's experience in the three spots was essential to her finding the perfect position.

"She was a high swinger on the left side," Snyder said. "They were trying to find her best position, and her biggest strength was blocking."

Although Berg likes the middle position much better, she said that the other positions she played are the same in a lot of ways.

"The positions are similar, but the middle is much quicker," she said. "My timing was off quite a bit."

Berg said she has built up confidence in her playing since she has come to ASU, but contends that there are many things she needs to work on.

"I really want to improve my blocking, and become more consistent," she said. "If I can, I would like to close the block quicker."

Snyder, on the other hand, has been pleased with Berg's performance so far this season.

"She has gained more confidence," Snyder said. "She has a lot of determination, and has become more focused."

Berg (6-foot-3), who is the tallest member of the Sun Devil squad, said her height helps her game tremendously.

"I have an advantage to get bigger blocks," she said. "And I can cover a lot more ground without jumping so high."

Her goals for the season are to make it to at least the first round of the NCAA Championships and to play consistently. Her personal goals include working on her confidence.

"I just want to feel like I belong out there," she said.

Devils host Cougars; Pac-10 smells roses

By The Associated Press

Two undefeated football teams go head to head Saturday when ASU, 2-0, plays host to 17th-ranked Houston, 1-0, at 7:07 p.m. at Sun Devil Stadium.

In other Pac-10 games, Rose Bowl matchups of the past — and possibly future — are being played out a few months early this year.

In a slate more reminiscent of New Year's Day than September, fifth-ranked Michigan meets 24th-ranked UCLA at the Rose Bowl, while No. 25 Ohio State visits 12th-ranked Southern Cal in a pair of nationally televised games Saturday.

The Buckeyes and Wolverines of the Big 10 Conference have made 11 Rose Bowl appearances each since 1950.

Michigan and UCLA haven't met since the Bruins won a 24-14 Rose Bowl decision, and the Trojans play the Buckeyes for the first time since Southern Cal won 20-17 in the 1985 Rose Bowl.

UCLA and Southern Cal are perennial contenders in the Pac-10 Conference.

After its 24-19 loss to top-ranked Notre Dame, the Wolverines will try to regroup in a setting almost as familiar as home. Michigan defeated Southern Cal 22-14 last January and has appeared in more Rose Bowl games than any other team besides the Trojans.

A crowd of more than 70,000 is expected for what both the Wolverines, 0-1, and the Bruins, 1-1, would gladly accept as the first of two games between the teams at the Rose Bowl this season.

But for the moment, both teams have gotten off to slow starts.

"We're both struggling, so it should be interesting," Michigan Coach Bo Schembechler said.

Southern Cal's Rose Bowl rivalry with the Buckeyes goes back three decades with the Trojans holding a 4-2 edge. But USC Coach Larry Smith is looking for his first win against a Big 10 team in four outings, including losses to Michigan State and Michigan in the two most recent Rose Bowls.

Southern Cal is 1-1 after a 66-10 thrashing of Utah State last weekend, while the Buckeyes beat Oklahoma State 37-13 in the its only game so far this year.

The significance of the game, which like Michigan-UCLA could be a bowl game preview, isn't lost on Smith.

"It seems like it's always an important game whenever USC and Ohio State play," Smith said. "This week is no different. It'll be a very emotional game with a big-game atmosphere around it."

The Ohio State-Southern Cal game starts at 12:30 p.m. while the Michigan-UCLA game begins 4½ hours later.

The season's first significant Pac-10 matchup pits No. 11 Washington, 2-0 overall, against No. 23 Arizona, 1-0 in conference play and 2-1 overall.

No. 22 Oregon, 1-0 in the Pac-10 and 2-0 overall, plays at Stanford, 0-2 in the conference and overall, in the weekend's other league game.

Last year, the Wildcats won for the first time ever against the Huskies, earning a rain-soaked 16-13 victory. Arizona took an early lead in the Pac-10 with a season-opening win over Stanford, fell to Texas Tech and then defeated Oklahoma 6-3 last week.

Seeking to open its conference schedule with a road win, the Huskies come off a 38-9 rout of Purdue.

The Cardinal will try to stop the pass-oriented Oregon offense as it goes after its first Pac-10 victory. Ducks quarterback Bill Musgrave has passed for an average of more than 240 yards per game. Stanford has limited its opponents to 148 yards per game in the air.

In non-conference games, Wisconsin travels to California, which is winless in two starts. Also, undefeated, 19th-ranked Washington State visits Wyoming, 1-2, and Oregon State, 1-1, plays at Boise State.

Runners

Leading the womens squad, who last week garnered top honors at UTEP Invitational, will be last week's top Sun Devil finisher, sophomore Kelly Cordell.

"I feel that I will run a lot better this week, as this meet is a lot bigger and the better quality of athletes and will make me bring my running to a higher level," Cordell said.

Amy Komitzky, who last week recorded a sixth-place finish overall, will push Cordell for the top Sun Devil finisher.

"My strategy is to concentrate on myself and the course and to be aware of my opportunities to pass the competition," Komitzky said. "My goal is to finish in the top 15."

Juniors Jill Sienicki and Kathy Jarvis, who last week placed seventh and eighth, respectively, will be expected to contribute highly because of the absence of ASU's top runner, senior Teresa Barrios.

"Teresa has a virus, and she will be unable to compete at the Aztec Invitational," Lehman said. "The rest of the girls will have to take up the slack."

Cordell said the closeness of this year's squad will result in both higher team and individual results.

"The weeklong conditioning camp at Pinetop brought the team closer together," Cordell said. "Last season we all did our own thing, but now we do things together outside of cross country."

"We help each other out and we push each other, which makes us stronger individual runners and a stronger team."

ADVERTISING MAJORS

We need:

- creative
 - dedicated
 - motivated
 - outgoing
 - organized
 - persuasive
- Advertising Sales Reps . . .

The State Press is looking for several new advertising sales reps to begin training now to work next semester. The rewards are many . . . you'll gain valuable experience in sales, layout, design, production and communications. This job is not for everyone, however. It's highly demanding and requires every spare moment of your time . . . 25 to 35 hours per week. And you must be an advertising or marketing major with an incredibly strong desire to learn about advertising and the insight to understand the benefits of this pre-professional opportunity. If you have a demanding class schedule or lots of extra-curriculars, this job's not for you.

BUT . . . if you have a sense of pride in doing a good job; are creatively inclined; feel you can handle 30-40 local accounts, as well as your classes and a not too wild social life; don't need anyone to get you going every morning and above all, operate well under the pressure of a daily deadline . . . WE NEED YOU!!!

IS THIS YOU? CALL 965-7572 TODAY. ASK FOR JACKIE ELDRIDGE

BUY IT. SELL IT. FIND IT.
