Earthquake rocks Northern California

200 dead in collapse of Oakland interstate

Staff and wire reports

A catastrophic earthquake rocked Northern California on Tuesday, killing more than 200 people and injuring 400, caving in bridges and freeways, igniting fires and causing widespread damage to buildings.

The quake, which struck during the evening rush hour, registered 6.9 on the Richter scale and was on the notorious San Andreas Fault. It was the second deadliest in the nation's history, exceeded only by the 1906 San Francisco earthquake that destroyed much of that city and killed more than 700 people.

At least 200 people were crushed to death in their cars when a mile-long section of the upper level of Interstate 880 in Oakland collapsed onto the lower level, according to Marty Boyer, public information officer for Alameda County.

"This is just a devastating, terrible, terrible situation beyond everybody's imagination," she said.

The earthquake forced the evacuation of 60,000 fans from Candlestick Park, where they were waiting for Game 3 of the World Series to begin. There were no major injuries reported at the stadium.

A 30-foot section of the upper level of the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge collapsed onto the lower level, trapping three cars in the wreckage.

Electricity was cut off throughout much of the area, and ASU geology professor Jim Tyburczy indicates the beginning point of the seismograph reading, recorded at the Physical Sciences Building, of Tuesday's San Francisco earthquake, which measured 6.9 on the Richter scale and killed more than 200 people. Tyburczy said the readings went so high that the pen on the seismograph could not measure the full force of the quake (inset). The quake also resulted in the cancellation of Game 3 of the World Series at Candlestick Park. See related story, page 20.

ASU could be site of pro baseball park

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

ASU could become home to a professional baseball stadium as discussions about its impact on the institution continue in Tempe and at the University.

Dick Neuheisel, president of the Tempe Sports Authority, said Tuesday that a baseball stadium at ASU would boost the University's economy and give the institution national acclaim for fostering a "spectacular sports facility."

He said there is a 60 to 70 percent chance that such a stadium will take form north of Sun Devil Stadium as a part of the Rio Salado development. This project includes rechanneling the Salt River and creating a series of parks.

However, Neuheisel said the failure of the Phoenix initiative Oct. 3, in which 59 percent of the voters rejected a proposal to build a downtown stadium, was detrimental to the Valley's chance of acquiring a major league baseball team.

"That impression has to be altered," he said. "We have some repair work to do."

Any decision to build a stadium on campus must be approved by the Arizona Board of Regents.

A committee appointed by the state Legislature has been formed and includes Brent Brown, ASU's vice president for University Relations, ASU Athletic Director Charles Harris and Phoenix Cardinals owner Bill Bidwill. It is co-chaired by Tempe lawmakers Rep. Bev Hermon and Sen. Doug Todd.

Brown did not return phone calls Tuesday.

Todd said the committee, which will meet tonight, is taking a statistical look at the feasibility of a stadium.

McGovern, Meese square off at ASU

By JOIE ANN LaPOLLA
State Press

Former Democratic presidential candidate George McGovern and Edwin Meese III, former attorney general, debated a myriad of national issues — including the Iran arms scandal and flag burning — Tuesday in front of more than 900 people in the MU.

The crowd in the Arizona Room hooted and hollered as Meese spoke on the Iran arms deal and the role of Oliver North. A few people cheered as McGovern accused the Reagan administration of not acting in America's best interest.

"The so-called Irangate scandal did more damage to this country than Nixon's (Watergate)," McGovern said. "The Reagan administration was caught selling arms to the worst terrorist government in the world."

However, Meese said North made some "serious mistakes" but the Iran arms deal was not a "scandal." He also stated that only two or three people in the administration knew about it.

"Certain people made mistakes," Meese said. "The leadership of the president put things right."

The discussion frequently turned to the issue of corruption in government.

Meese is currently under fire for his involvement in a scandal involving Wedtech, a small machine shop that experienced explosive growth after it received a $100 million government contract through a program that set aside contracts without competitive bidding.

A key figure in the scandal, E. Robert Wallach, a close associate of Meese's, was sentenced to six years in prison Monday for racketeering.

Meese was questioned by a special prosecutor in the case but was never charged. He refused to comment on the case before Tuesday's debate, saying it is in the appeal process.

Meese, a former top Reagan aide, is a distinguished fellow at the Heritage Foundation, a neo-conservative think tank, and is the author of a nationally syndicated column. The former head of the Justice Department, Meese developed drug enforcement and anti-child pornography programs.

McGovern, a senator for 18 years, served on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and is a former United Nations delegate. He also founded the Americans for Common Sense.

The two figures, representing the extremes of the political spectrum, answered about three prepared questions then responded to queries by the audience regarding national policy.

Patrick McGowan, an ASU political science professor, moderated the debate, which lasted more than 90 minutes.

McGovern and Meese discussed the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court to allow flag burning as a form of constitutionally protected symbolic speech.

"The judges felt it was protected by the first amendment," Meese said. "It's impressive that the court follows the Constitution."

Bush wants to ease curbs on U. S. involvement in coups

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration said Tuesday it is seeking an understanding with Congress to ease restrictions on American involvement in foreign coups that might result in the death of a country's leader.

White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater said the proposed changes would not alter a longstanding executive order banning U. S. involvement in assassinations but would allow the CIA to have contact with plotters of a coup in which a foreign leader might be killed.

The issue took on new urgency in the wake of the failed coup attempt against Panamanian ruler Manuel Noriega on Oct. 3.

Administration officials complained that CIA officers in Panama essentially were prevented from advising the coup plotters because of the possibility that Noriega might be killed.

President Bush, at a news conference last week, signaled he wanted to see the restrictions relaxed.

U. S. officials are extremely reluctant to publicly discuss intelligence matters, particularly subjects such as coups and assassinations. However, CIA Director William H. Webster, in an interview with The New York Times, openly said he would like to see the restrictions eased.

Romanian leader rejects reforms in Poland, Hungary as 'slavery'

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Romanian leader Nicolae Ceausescu made his first direct attack on reforms in Poland and Hungary, saying Romanians "do not want to become slaves again" under similar reforms, a news agency reported Tuesday.

Speaking at a rally Monday in the northern city of Bistrita, Ceausescu made clear that under his hard-line policies, Romania would never change its Stalinist economic and political system.

For the first time in a public speech, Ceausescu mentioned Hungary and Poland by name when criticizing their efforts at market-oriented economic reforms that grant private business some role in the overall national economy.

Ceausescu's attack marked an escalation in Romanian criticism of Soviet bloc reforms following a reported attempt by Bucharest in August to organize joint Warsaw Pact action to "defend socialism" in Poland after the creation of a non-communist government in that country.

Gandhi calls for new elections following political setbacks

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi on Tuesday called new parliamentary elections for next month following charges of corruption against his government and the defeat of two constitutional amendments.

Voting will be conducted Nov. 22 and Nov. 24 in all but one of India's 25 states, said Chief Election Commissioner R. V. S. Peri Sastri. New elections had been due by mid-January.

Because of the vastness of this country of 880 million people, elections normally are conducted over several days.

At stake are 542 seats in the Lok Sabha, or house of the people, the law-making lower house of Parliament. Gandhi's Congress Party won 415 seats in the last elections, held in December 1984 two months after Sikh bodyguards assassinated Gandhi's mother and predecessor, Indira Gandhi.

Gandhi's decision to call elections early came on the heels of new charges of high-level corruption and his failure to push the two amendments through Parliament last week.

Rain postpones shuttle launch with much-delayed Jupiter probe

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Rain offshore, not demonstrators or mechanical problems, stopped the launch of the space shuttle Atlantis and its nuclear-fueled cargo Tuesday.

"It looks like the local weather is not going to cooperate; we're going to call it a day," launch Director Bob Sieck told the five astronauts who had been lying on their backs in Atlantis' cabin for three hours.

The scrub cost NASA $624,000 — more than half of that for the liquid oxygen and liquid hydrogen that had been pumped into the shuttle's external fuel tank overnight.

Atlantis's mission — already delayed for seven years by budget and other problems — is to carry the 6,700-pound Galileo space probe into orbit, the start of its 2.4 billion-mile, six-year trip to Jupiter.

Senate approves $9 million boost for opposition in Nicaraguan vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — Under heavy White House pressure, the Senate Tuesday approved President Bush's proposal to spend $9 million to boost the chances of Nicaragua's struggling political opposition in next February's national elections.

The legislative package, which Bush said would give opponents of the leftist Sandinista government "a fighting chance," was approved on a vote of 64-35 after the Senate fended off a series of weakening amendments. The House had passed the measure 263-156 on Oct. 4, and it now goes to the president for his signature.

Bush has sought the money as a way to "level the playing field" for the coalition of parties opposing leftist President Daniel Ortega's re-election bid. He met earlier Tuesday at the White House with GOP senators to drum up support, and sent Secretary of State James A. Baker III and White House Chief of Staff John Sununu to Capitol Hill to lobby senators.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater called the Feb. 25 elections "the last crucial shot at getting representative democracy in Nicaragua."

Amnesty report notes changes in Soviet stance on human rights

LONDON (AP) — The Soviet Union's attitude toward human rights has improved dramatically and most political prisoners have been freed, although abuses persist and the picture is "deeply confusing," Amnesty International said.

In a report published last week, the worldwide human rights movement said its list of Soviet citizens imprisoned for non-violent exercise of their human rights shrank from 600 three years ago to about 90 in July and would have been lower but for further arrests.

For the first time, human rights issues are being freely discussed and acknowledged by the authorities to be an international issue, not an internal matter immune from outside scrutiny, the report said.

The Soviet Union hopes to hold the Helsinki Conference on Human Rights in Moscow in 1991.

Amnesty International said that of the 600 prisoners, 337 were released early and another 79 were freed from psychiatric hospitals where some had spent 15 years or more against their will.

But "despite this clear trend toward reform," the report said, "the human rights picture in the U.S.S.R. is deeply confusing."

Farmer men lonely

Editor:

I'll be the first to admit that public places are an improper and unethical spot for sexual acts, be they homosexual or heterosexual. But before you pass judgment on these men, consider the loneliness.

Imagine the difficulty in trying to find a meaningful relationship with another human being. A relationship that is socially and politically susceptible to hate. The resulting paranoia, rejection and low self-esteem reduces one's emotional needs to sexual needs (which are easier to satisfy).

In the name of dignity I could ask the State Press to stop printing names, but it would be a waste of time. State Press readers enjoy "getting the dirt". They like to give names to their scapegoats.

I'm not asking anyone to condone this behavior. Instead, I ask you to remember that there are human beings behind the printed name. They look like you. They have the same feelings, needs and ambitions as you. And, unlike you, they've probably lost friends, family and respect.

What I Did Last Summer

Printing names reveals prejudices

Editor:

I have noticed a severe bias (one of many) that the State Press has and I would like to point it out to the editorial staff and the readers of the State Press. I read the police reports Monday and Wednesday of last week and noticed a sick, borderline tabloid, trend.

Why is it that the names of students arrested for marijuana and cocaine possession are withheld from readers? Why are the names of the women advocating prostitution withheld from readers? Why are all the acts of violence and theft performed by anonymous "thieves" and "assailants"? I would assume withholding names is done to protect people from exploitation and humiliation among friends, family and co-workers. I have no problem with this professional approach to journalism except when certain names of certain "criminals" (assuming all persons arrested have committed crimes) are publicized. Why is it that the men caught in the Farmer Building restroom not only get their names and ages printed, but their majors as well?

Is public sexual indecency so much worse than drugs, prostitution, theft, and assault? Are individuals any worse than those who remain anonymous to the readers? Or is the State Press exploiting the sexual preference of these men? I do not condone the activities in the restroom; however, the people involved deserve the same treatment as other public offenders. The State Press has a decision to make: publicize the names of all people arrested (as a warning to readers who may wish to avoid social deviants), or protect the names for the sake of the individuals involved (to avoid the social repercussions of their publicized arrest). Please choose one policy and put away your personal prejudices.

Tassinari's column shows he's a bigot

Editor:

Thank you for printing the opinion of Brian Tassinari on Friday, Oct. 13. It made me aware of the rationalization of a bigot. Please don't get me wrong, I agree with the point Tassinari was trying to make — there shouldn't be any sex in the bathrooms by anyone. However, if it were not for the sentence or two that he actually stated this, I would have thought the article was about how sick the idea of homosexuality made him.

It disturbed me very much to know that while Brian Tassinari was implying that only ASU students are being arrested, the real story is that, along with these students, Sun City residents and University professors also are being arrested. It seems odd that he says the police are not entrapping people when the undercover officer is lurking in the education building for his next victim, while other suspected students are being followed by the state police.

I found it amusing that Brian thinks that "walking around a bathroom" also includes making a pass at a suspected homosexual. He says "If the police hadn't acted, the perpetrators and their friends would no doubt have expanded their turf — sending the message to sexual deviants all over the Valley, both hetero- and homosexual, that ASU is the place to come for anonymous sex." First of all, the police still are acting, at a rate of about one arrest a day. When will it stop? Secondly, I am surprised Brian hasn't taken a look around lately. Everyone else knows that ASU is a party college and sex is as frequent as a can of beer, so don't give me some crap about ASU not being the place for anonymous sex. And although we don't want any kinds of "sexual deviants" here at ASU, the "problem is not that of homosexuality," the problem is one of a bigoted columnist and a bigoted state. Once again, I thank you.

Beasley 'masquerades as moderate' but shows he's not

Editor:

I write in response to Jack Beasley's Oct. 10 editorial.

I opened the paper to the editorial page intrigued by the idea of pro- and anti-abortion proponents "switching sides" and moving toward the "middle of the road" as mentioned in the opening of Beasley's editorial.

I read on, only to run across the statement that we "staunch liberals" are howling because we have lost, quote, "the God-given right to kill our own offspring."

Whoa. Right there, Beasley has blown his cover. It seems ridiculous to me that a self-described "moderate conservative" could make such a statement. But since he has, I feel obligated to answer it.

The issue of abortion is a complex one, as we all know. When it comes down to the wire — actually having to choose whether to end a pregnancy or not — I think there are very few women who would not find the decision a painful and complicated one.

For me, and for many like me, the issue is one of quality of life. We feel that our lives and the lives of the children we already have are more important than that of a two-month-old fetus.

We feel it is better to raise three children well than four children badly because there is not enough mommy to go around. We know that anti-abortion hit hardest the women who need safe abortions most — college-age women, poor women who cannot afford to raise a child or fly out of the country for a safe abortion.

It makes me tired to run into this attitude I so often do, that legal abortion is favored by women who can't be bothered to raise children, or by people who are afflicted by a strange desire to murder children. (Do you really believe that Beasley?)

The human race loves its children. We cannot help it, it is bred into us. People of Beasley's viewpoint want to protect the unborn, fetuses who one day will be children.

People of my viewpoint want to protect the children born already, and the young women who bear them. We're important too. Our lives matter.

One final comment. I don't appreciate Beasley's lumping "staunch liberals" into a body who, according to him, are universally agreed on capital punishment, seal-hunting, defense spending and everything in between. That would be like me equating conservatives with the Ku Klux Klan and the John Birch Society. And by the way — don't masquerade as a moderate, Beasley. You aren't and it shows.

College seniors prove they don't know much

Cody Shearer
North American Syndicate

WASHINGTON — Who cares who wrote "The Sound and the Fury"? Does it make any difference when President Kennedy was shot? Was Franklin Roosevelt president during the Depression or around 1900?

Hold on, America, a significant portion of your college seniors do not know the answers to these questions, even though some of their parents are paying $20,000 a year to educate them. Worse yet, no one seems too concerned or is willing to accept responsibility for the fact that unless the quality of education in our country is reversed, America's ability to compete in the world and defend its national interests will be severely weakened.

In a study released the other day, the National Endowment for the Humanities found that many college students are ignorant of major events in history and famous literary works. Perhaps ignorant is too polite a word. How about unconscious?

About 55 percent of the 696 college seniors surveyed by the Gallup Organization failed to answer 60 percent of the questions correctly. The poll found that:

- 42 percent could not place the Civil War in the correct half-century;
- 58 percent did not know that Harry Truman was president when the Korean War began;
- 24 percent did not know that Franklin D. Roosevelt was president during the Depression;
- 29 percent did not know the plot of the novel "1984";
- 55 percent could not identify "Magna Carta" and
- 24 percent thought Columbus landed in the Western Hemisphere after 1500.

The 87-question Gallup survey was conducted last April at 67 four-year colleges and universities, both public and private. Roughly half of the questions were extracted from another examination of 17-year-olds that was given by the National Endowment for the Humanities in 1987. If one considers the college seniors' performance on the teenagers' portion of the survey, half would have failed.

'If one considers the college seniors' performance on the teenagers' portion of the survey, half would have failed.'

Stunned to learn of these results, some acquaintances of mine at the Philadelphia Daily News dispatched a few reporters with samples of these questions to local university hangouts to see if American college students were really so dumb.

When copies of the Daily News version of the same questionnaire were distributed at the University of Pennsylvania, which is hardly a matchbox night school, few students were upset that they didn't know, for example, when President Kennedy was shot.

"I'm going to get out of here and start at $50,000 anyway," said a Wharton Business School senior majoring in finance, who claimed Kennedy was assassinated in 1962.

A number of other students complained that the questions were unfair and "about a far too distant past," hoping, I suspect, that the newspaper wouldn't be too critical of them. Well, I'm sorry, college seniors, if you think you can slide by without some foundation in history and literature, you're wrong. Your shortcuts to academic success are eventually going to catch up with you. It's about time you woke up to the fact that you're shortchanging yourselves and being ripped off by higher education at the same time.

Following the release of the National Endowment of Humanities study last week, college educators were quick to put forward their best spin doctors, emphasizing that they were not to blame for college seniors' limited knowledge of history and literature.

"Of course, it's disturbing to find out that a large number of students don't know history and literature," said David Merkwowitz, director of public affairs for the American Council on Education (ACE), in an interview with Education Daily. "But the blame for that can hardly be placed on higher education. Those are concepts that students should have gotten in elementary and secondary education.

"One should be able to assume that when someone teaches college, they have a certain basis of knowledge," added Merkwowitz. In the discipline's defense, he concluded that he'd have been "more interested in whether they (students) mastered their own subject areas."

Withstanding such a lame position takes courage. But it does not conceal the fact, as a recent survey by the Council for Advancement and Support of Education (CASE) reveals, that a majority of Americans feel higher education is not doing the best job it can. According to the CASE study, most Americans give our colleges and universities a grade of "C" or worse for their efforts in preparing workers and training new teachers.

The study's director says higher education officials have to judge whether poor programs or inadequate publicity has influenced the public's attitude in this regard. I hope, out of desperation, that America's colleges don't retreat toward Madison Avenue for their temporary salvation. Our country has enough cosmetic tricks coming out of the White House for its own good.

Thin golfers, bowlers ruin Fat Harry's dream

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

Everybody at the bar was staring at the TV set. Somebody on the screen was lining up a putt. An announcer with a British accent was explaining the great importance of the ball rolling in the hole.

Just then a gravelly voice from the end of the bar said:

"Why don't you switch channels? Let's see what else is on."

It was Fat Harry.

"What are you talking about, Harry?" somebody protested. "That's the U. S. Open."

"I know it's the Open," Harry said. "But I'd still rather watch something else. OK?"

A debate broke out, and the bartender stood near the TV waiting for a consensus.

Then someone said: "Wait a minute, Harry. You're a golfer aren't you?"

"Yeah," Harry rasped. "So what?"

"Well, if you're a golfer, why don't you watch the Open? I don't even play the game and I'm watching. But you're always out on a golf course."

"Doesn't matter," said Harry. "Put on a ballgame or something."

"But if you're a golfer, you ought to be interested. I don't get it."

Harry stood up and said: "Look at me."

We all looked at him.

"What do you see? Describe me. Describe my physique."

We all looked some more. Then somebody said: "Well, you're kind of chunky."

"Yeah," somebody else said, "stocky."

Harry grimaced and shook his head. "Don't try to be kind. Be honest. I'm short, right? And I'm fat."

Everybody nodded. "That's right. You're short and fat."

Harry slid back on the stool and said:

"OK, now you understand."

We thought about that statement for a while. Then somebody said: "Understand what?"

Harry pointed at the TV screen. "Look at those guys. Are any of them short and fat?"

We looked at the screen, and somebody said: "No, they're not short and fat. They're all lean and in good shape. But so what? They're professional athletes. They're not suppose to be short and fat."

"Oh, yeah!" said Harry. "That just shows how much you don't know. Well, I'll tell you something. There used to be great golfers who were short and fat."

"That's why I stood up the game. I've been short and fat all my life. I was a short, fat baby. I was a short, fat kid. I was a short, fat young man. I think it was my glands. I had short fat glands."

"I was never any good at sports so I didn't even try. Nobody wanted a short, fat shortstop or a short, fat quarterback.

"Then one day I looked in the sports pages and I saw a picture of a golfer who won a championship. It was Porky Oliver. Imagine that. A professional athlete they called Porky, because he was short and fat."

"So I started following golf and you know

'Well, I'll tell you something. There used to be great golfers who were short and fat.'

what I found out? There were other short, fat pro golfers. And I found out that there were other kinds, too. Skinny guys who looked like they had TB. There was one who was a hillbilly and had only three front teeth. There were guys with tattoos on their arms, and bald heads and little potbellies.

"In other words, the professional golfers didn't look any different than the guys who play it on Sundays for fun."

"That's when I knew I had my sports heroes and my game, so I bought a set of clubs and started playing."

"I'd go watch the tournaments, and I'd see Billy Casper, who was short and fat, and Julius Boros, who almost was fat. And Nicklaus came along, and he looked like a baby whale."

"Then something happened. Maybe TV caused it. Or the youth culture. But the fat golfers either disappeared or they became skinny.

"Now you look at them and they all look the same. They're all lean. They all have the same hairstyle. There's not one short, fat guy out there. Not one guy with missing front teeth. Not one who looks like he's coughing himself to death. They're just a bunch of clones. They make me sick. Give me another bag of potato chips."

Somebody said: "But there are other sports, Harry. Maybe you can find other heroes."

"Where?" Harry said. "You ever see a short, fat basketball player? Or a hockey player? Or football player? No; professional golf was the last of the games that had real people playing it. Porky Oliver. What a guy. He looked like he ate five bags of chips with every beer."

"Harry, what about bowling?" somebody said.

Harry shook his head. "You haven't seen bowling on TV lately. Same as golf except the bowlers look like they're wearing the $10 polyester version of the golfers' $30 shirts. They have hairstyles that are sort of truck-driver chic, with their hairspray on their sideburns. But they're all lean, too. They're just imitation clones of the golf clones."

Harry resumed munching on his potato chips. And somebody said: "Harry, maybe you ought to go along with the times."

"What do you mean?"

"Go on a diet."

"What? And lose my identity?"

Hungarian economist will begin month-long lecture tour at ASU

By MARK CRISMON
State Press

Hungarian economist Istvan Gether isn't worrying about where he will be staying during his month-long lecture tour of the United States.

As an enthusiastic Esperantist, he has more than two million peers in more than 100 countries that will be willing to assist him.

Esperanto is promoted by its members as the international second language. Those who speak it say it is easy to comprehend because there are only 16 rules of grammar, with no exceptions, no irregularities and no masculine and feminine nouns to learn.

"When you travel to another country, you look up the official contact and ask them to dinner, and they will put you up," said Jay Kamchi, president of the ASU Esperanto Club. "It's a natural thing for Dr. Gether as he travels the United States."

Gether, who has worked for the Hungarian Ministry of Environment Protection and Water Management for the last 10 years, will be giving back-to-back speeches at ASU on "International Travel with Esperanto" and "Economic Reform in Hungary."

The lectures will be at 3:05 p.m., Thursday in the Business Administration Building, Room 258.

"Esperanto is a linguistic handshake across lands and across countries," Kamchi said.

Gether learned Esperanto 11 years ago and actively has been promoting the language worldwide for five years.

Gether

Gether, who speaks Russian, English, Hungarian, German and Esperanto, supported his view of the language by describing his experience at a special meeting of the Commission of Environmental Problems in Geneva.

He said he was listening to a Russian speaker with one ear and through a headset to the English translator in the other ear. Much of the content and meaning was lost in the translation because of the excessive use of "um" and "uh," he added.

"I am convinced that Esperanto would be very useful in international communication," Gether said.

Quake

phone service was disrupted.

Three hours after the 5:04 p.m. PDT quake, the magnitude of the disaster began to emerge as reports came in of widespread death and destruction.

Lt. Gov. Leo McCarthy said he expected states of emergency would be declared in Santa Clara, Alameda and Contra Costa counties.

Six people were crushed to death in their cars when part of an old four-story brick building toppled onto the vehicles on Bluxome Street in San Francisco, said Police Lt. Jerry Kilroy.

The California Highway Patrol said six were killed in the collapse of part of the City Garden Mall in Santa Cruz.

One person died of a heart attack and four people were injured in San Jose, 50 miles south of San Francisco, according to Willis Jacobs of the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo.

Tom Mullins, spokesman for the California Office of Emergency Services, said preliminary figures indicated at least 400 injuries throughout the area. David Hammons at Kaiser Hospital in Santa Clara, just north of San Jose, said about 100 patients were treated there, most injured by falling or being hit by debris.

Mayor Art Agnos' said eight deaths had been reported in San Francisco, five from a building collapsing on cars, and three in a fire in the Marina section that blazed spectacularly through much of the evening before being brought under control. He said 12 buildings, all smaller residential dwellings, were destroyed but there were no reports of major damage in high-rise buildings.

Agnos' press secretary, Eileen Mahoney, said as many as 20 people had been injured at a fire in the Marina section. Another fire damaged a section of downtown Berkeley.

The Marina fire was blamed on a broken gas main, and authorities said breaks in a water main made it harder to extinguish.

At City Hall in San Francisco, a radio reporter told listeners, "The entire building started to shake . . . you could hear people yelling and screaming all over the building."

Citizens of Marin, north of San Francisco, were warned to shut off their gas because the smell of gas was all over town.

The quake apparently was centered about 10 miles north of Santa Cruz and about 65 miles south of San Francisco.

"You could see dozens of huge booms of smoke going into the air," said Greg Higgins, who was driving north in Watsonville near Santa Cruz when the quake struck. "It looked like bombs going off into the city . . . It was complete pandemonium. There were three major fires near us. There was no power in the city at all."

ASU geology professor Jim Tyburczy classified it as a major earthquake, but said it was far less powerful than the great San Francisco quake of 1906.

"In recent years, in 1987, there were two 6.0 to 6.2 magnitude quakes in Southern California," Tyburczy said. "This quake is five or more times bigger than those. It is a factor of 10 smaller than the big quake of 1906. So this isn't the big one."

Tyburczy said the quake began to register on the ASU seismographic equipment, anchored beneath the Physical Sciences Building, at approximately 5:10 or 5:12 p.m., six to eight minutes after it hit the Bay area.

The seismograph still was registering ground movements two hours after the quake. Tyburczy said tremors could continue for as long as a week.

The quake was felt as far away as Reno, Nev., 225 miles to the northeast.

Tyburczy said there were unconfirmed reports of "sloshing water" in Valley swimming pools around 5:15 p.m., but the distance from the quake made it unlikely that anyone in the Phoenix area was able to feel the tremors.

Tyburczy, who is from the San Francisco area, has experienced earthquakes firsthand.

"This is bigger than any quake I ever felt in that area," he said.

While he could not say whether the quake was a precursor to a larger one, he said, "It's a warning and premonition of things to come really."

Fans at Candlestick screamed as the stadium swayed shortly before the San Francisco Giants and Oakland Athletics were to have begun the third game of the World Series.

"This upper deck was absolutely shaking, the light stanchions were blowing back and forth, phones have gone out," Suzyn Waldman, a reporter covering the World Series for WFAN-AM in New York told listeners shortly after the quake hit. "Everyone is standing around here, people in the upper deck absolutely terrified to move not knowing what to do."

Tom Mullins, a spokesman for the California Office of Emergency Services in Sacramento, said county emergency agencies were sending in reports via an emergency microwave radio system.

"The thing struck just as everyone was going home," Mullins said. "We've got reports coming in from San Benito and Santa Clara counties of heavy damage."

Hollister, about 80 miles southeast of San Francisco in San Benito County, was believed to be the nearest town to the quake's epicenter. Mullins said he was getting reports of heavy damage in the rural county.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus, a reading of 7.5 reflects an earthquake 10 times stronger than one of 6.5.

An earthquake of 6 on the scale can cause severe damage. A 7 reading is a "major" earthquake, capable of widespread heavy damage. The San Francisco earthquake of 1906, which occurred before the Richter scale was devised, has been estimated at 8.3 on the Richter scale.

Debate

Jack Beasley Jr./State Press

Former presidential candidate George McGovern (left) and former attorney general Ed Meese debate in front of 900 people Tuesday night in the MU Arizona Room.

The audience tittered as McGovern called the issue "silly and superficial" and charged that it is a "political charade" perpetrated by President George Bush.

"How many flag burners are in the U. S.? How many flag burners do you know?" McGovern asked jokingly. "I think it is an obnoxious thing to do. But it will not topple the republic."

Meese frequently praised the Reagan administration for making America an economic leader in the world. But McGovern claimed that the Reagan administration has left the United States with the largest deficit in history.

"The national debt increased more than the combined total of all past presidents," McGovern said. "To slash taxes while increasing military spending, put the two together and that spells deficit and debt disaster."

Meese retaliated, claiming that "the deficit is not due to military spending or tax cuts but rather to an increase in domestic spending."

Meese brought groans from the audience for his views on the deficit, but received support from the audience when he spoke out against the issue of abortion. Students clapped as he explained that "no one knows when life begins and to give the benefit of the doubt to the life of that child."

But people also applauded when McGovern stated he was "pro-choice."

"I don't see how a conservative or liberal would want a moral and personal decision to be made by politicians," McGovern said. "I am on the side of personal liberty."

The lively and controversial debate, which brought a standing ovation from the crowd, was considered a "success" by Don Schilliday, director of the Associated Students of ASU Lecture Series, a co-sponsor of the event along with the ASASU Political Union.

David Jordan, an ASU law student, asked about the Senate's treatment of Robert Bork's unsuccessful appointment to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Meese likened the Bork nomination, in which television advertisements were utilized, to a "circus."

"It was demeaning to the Senate as well as (to the) Constitution," Meese said.

Itzhak Perlman to discuss his triumph over polio with disabled

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

Disabled ASU students will get the rare opportunity to meet with Itzhak Perlman before the world-acclaimed violinist's concert in Gammage Auditorium tonight.

Perlman, who suffers from polio, which he contracted when he was 4 years old, will lead a personal discussion and answer any questions the disabled students may have.

Perlman has been called one of the greatest virtuosos in musical history. Because of the stature Perlman has achieved despite his disability, Jim Hemauer, program coordinator for orthopedic disabilities of Disabled Student Resources, said the violinist is an inspiration to many ASU students.

"I've talked to several students who are really excited," Hemauer said.

Disabled Student Resources obtained permission from both Gammage and Perlman to set up additional seats on stage for students, since all the designated handicapped seats for the 8 p.m. concert were already filled.

"It's not only the music, but also the fact of being able to meet someone of that caliber who has overcome a disability," said Hamauer, a quadriplegic. "Being disabled myself I admire him for what he has accomplished.

Cindy Millikin, director of programming at Gammage, has seen Perlman perform before and agrees that his talent is something special.

"He's arguably one of the most outstanding violinists today," Millikin said. "And his disability makes his presence even more compelling.

"He is such an asset to our season and it's really one of the most thrilling events of the year for us."

Organization, bishop to 'project positive image of Lebanon'

By MICHELLE HENRY
State Press

The ASU Lebanese Student Association and Phoenix Bishop Thomas O'Brien are teaming up to bring more awareness of war-torn Lebanon to the campus and Valley.

Jihane Khawam, public relations coordinator for LSA, said too many people are not interested or misinformed about Lebanon.

"College students have to be aware of what's going on," she said. "Human rights are being violated in Lebanon right this minute. We can't change the political unrest, but we can educate the public and project a positive image of Lebanon."

Pope John Paul II has declared Nov. 22 a day of prayer for Lebanon. To commemorate the day, O'Brien will hold a special mass tentatively scheduled for Sunday, Nov. 12 at St. Mary Basilica in Phoenix.

An LSA delegation recently spoke to O'Brien about the situation in Lebanon.

Edouard Baaklini, president of LSA, said the group talked to O'Brien because of his concern and compassion for the Lebanese.

"We sent a letter to him thanking him for his monetary support and increasing public awareness of Lebanon," Baaklini said. "We discussed a possible mass (open to everyone) for Lebanese people here and the possibilities of distributing fliers to churches and parishes around Arizona."

O'Brien, who could not be reached for comment, told the group that he supports a free and peaceful Lebanon and favors creating awareness about the situation in the country.

Baaklini said heavy shelling has hit Lebanon since March. But the civil war between Christian Lebanese troops and an alliance of Syrian soldiers and Moslem militiamen has been going on for 15 years.

"We believe there are too many foreign forces in Lebanon," he said, adding that armed Syrians occupy 65 percent of the land, while the Israelis occupy about 15 percent. "We want all foreigners out so we can solve our own problems."

Accreditation will make ASU police 'top-notch' agency, chief says

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

The three state university police departments are seeking accreditation in an effort to upgrade their current facilities to meet the standards of other law enforcement agencies.

The departments must meet 80 percent of the 900 standards set by a commission of law enforcement agencies to receive a seal of excellence. The group was established in 1979 to create standards for the nation's police agencies.

Accreditation will bring the ASU police "respectability," acting Police Chief Doug Bartosh said.

"What we're looking for is national recognition as a top-notch law enforcement agency," he said.

The decision to pursue accreditation was approved by the Arizona Board of Regents Business Affairs Council and is set to be reviewed by the presidents of the three state universities Oct. 31. If the presidents approve the measure it will be brought to the full board for final approval in November.

Bartosh said if the department receives accreditation, it could change the negative attitude that many in the University community have about the campus police.

"This is a tremendous step towards building credibility in the community," he said.

ASU police often have complained of a shortage of officers and being forced to work in the DPS headquarters, which is a converted motel infested with termites. In addition, the University police are under investigation by the FBI for possible civil rights violations in the handling of a racial incident last April on Alpha Drive.

"The program should resolve a lot of issues," said Bob Williams, regents' associate director for capital development and human resources. Those issues include training, lack of equipment, low pay scales and poor facilities, he added.

"The program offers a high level of consistency," he said.

The three-year program will cost ASU between $30,000 and $100,000, Williams said.

The program will affect "every potential phase of law enforcement," Bartosh said.

If the plan is approved, Bartosh hopes to see improvements in areas such as policy, procedure and management training.

"We have a lot of work ahead of us," Bartosh said. "We're anxious to get started."

The Tempe Police Department recently became the 100th accredited law enforcement agency in the country. The accreditation took almost four years and cost $500,000.

ASU Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents that occurred between 7 a.m. Monday and 7 a.m. Tuesday:

- A student was arrested after providing false information to a police officer at the intersection of Tyler Avenue and McAllister Drive.

- A student was arrested for failure to provide information to a police officer at the intersection of Normal Avenue and Lemon Street.

- A student was arrested and charged for drunken driving after police pulled him over for driving without headlights in the 600 block of East University Drive.

- A thief stole a student's mens brown 18-speed Diamond Back bicycle, valued at $250, from the east side of the Engineering Building where it was locked to a stairwell with a U-lock.

- A thief stole a student's mens gray 18-speed Miyata bicycle, valued at $500, from the B-wing of Sahuaro Residence Hall where it was locked to itself.

- A thief stole a student's mens yellow 26-inch 18-speed Giant bicycle, valued at $300, from the Sigma Chi fraternity house, 606 Alpha Drive.

Tempe Police Report

Tempe police reported the following incidents that occurred between 7 a.m. Monday and 7 a.m. Tuesday:

- A 26-year-old transient was arrested after she solicited an undercover male police officer for prostitution when he picked her up while she was walking down the 2100 block of East Apache Boulevard.

- A thief stole a six-pack of Diet Coke, four cans of Pepsi, and a carton of milk from a residence in the 5800 block of South College Street.

- A 22-year-old man was punched five times while crossing a street in the 900 block of East Apache Boulevard, causing a six-inch cut near his right eye. When police questioned him he stated that he was "not involved in any kind of fight."

- A 44-year-old man punched a 1983 Nissan causing a one-inch dent in the right front fender while the car was parked at 600 E. 5th St.

- A man assaulted his mother by throwing a paperback book at her and hitting the side of her head at their house on the 1100 block of North Frances Drive.

Health Education Center purchases film; presentations will involve AIDS victims

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

The ASU Health Education Center has purchased a new film called "Imagine This" and is offering presentations involving people infected with the disease in an effort to further AIDS education.

A recent study conducted by the American College Health Association showed that of 17,000 students tested for the presence of the HIV virus (a virus that could cause AIDS) 30 tested positive. The study concludes that approximately two out of every 1,000 students carry the HIV virus.

But Danae Brownell, health educator at the ASU Student Health Center, said according to the film "Imagine This," the number of students afflicted with the virus could reach nine out of every 1,000 at some universities.

"These kind of statistics are surprising to think they are that high — and a little scary," Brownell said.

The health center will not release information on the number of students at ASU who have been diagnosed as having the disease.

"Imagine This," which can be checked out from the health center by students and faculty, may shock some people, Brownell said, because it shows six students who have AIDS. But for that reason, she added, it also serves as a good educational tool.

Richard Keeling, chairman of the ACHA task force, said most universities still are not doing enough to educate students about the epidemic of the HIV virus.

Keeling was quoted by Glamour magazine as saying, "Most administrators still feel this isn't a college problem."

Brownell said, "I think most students know the basics, but what is difficult is to make behavior changes based on this info. We need to teach more about communicating with your partner and about abstinence as an option or practicing safe sex."

Brownell also is involved in giving on- and off-campus lectures on AIDS and often recruits people infected with the disease from county and state AIDS education services to speak jointly with her.

"Roy", who said he prefers to go by his first name to keep his confidentiality, accompanied Brownell on a lecture given to an ASU human sexuality class. The title of Brownell's presentation is "Living with AIDS."

Roy has had the AIDS virus for four years and is what Brownell calls a long-time survivor.

"I think it is very important that people become educated about AIDS," Roy said. "We know enough about the AIDS virus that no one should have to be afflicted with it anymore."

Andy Hogg, professor of the human sexuality class, said the presentation was very well received.

"We had students evaluate the presentation, and it received very high ratings," Hogg said.

He added that AIDS is a very important topic that should often be discussed in classrooms such as his, since he is training graduate students in counseling people on how to deal with the disease.

The Health Education Center also is offering passes for free AIDS counseling and testing at the Maricopa County STD Clinic. Brownell also is available for confidential counseling on receiving an AIDS test.

Cholesterol test helps prevent heart disease

The College of Nursing Community Health Services Clinic is recommending that anyone over the age of 20 take a step to prevent heart disease, America's leading cause of death, by taking a cholesterol-level test.

Linda Holland, coordinator of cholesterol screening, said when people are younger they need to get into a preventative lifestyle and start to reduce the amount of cholesterol in their diet.

"People should be living a preventative lifestyle now," Holland said. "They should start making substitutions while it is easier to do it."

The clinic will be offering cholesterol screenings to all students and faculty today from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the MU Graham Room. The cost will be $7. No fasting is required before the test.

The readings are obtained from finger-stick blood samples, and the results are available in five minutes.

Karen Moses, a nutritionist with the ASU Student Health Center, agreed that it is better for a young person to alter his or her lifestyle now.

"It is hard to change habits when you get older," Moses said.

Moses advised that high cholesterol foods, such as egg yolks, should be limited.

"My advice is to limit the number of visible eggs to two or three eggs a week and remember that things like muffins and pancakes also contain eggs," Moses said.

The National Institute of Health reports that less than 10 percent of Americans know their cholesterol levels and 55 percent of the population is estimated to have higher levels than desirable.

Stadium

"We are looking at some of the possibilities," he said. "I think the approach will be to present to our community one of the best and most reasonable approaches to getting professional baseball.

"I think there is more interest (in building a stadium) now that the citizens in Phoenix said 'We don't want it'."

Hermon said nothing is "locked in," and the committee is concentrating on determining things like how many game-days will conflict with school days. In addition, possible site drawings will be presented to the committee tonight by the City of Tempe.

"(If the stadium is built), it could be a new substantial revenue source for the University," she said. "Our main goal is to see that the academic mission and state value in ASU are not jeopardized."

But Harris, also a member of the Tempe Sports Authority, said it is "premature" to say if a baseball stadium will be constructed on University property, and that ASU and Tempe officials are merely in the discussion stages.

However, a decision must be made by Dec. 31 if the city is to take advantage of tax-exempt bonds available for the construction of a stadium.

"I think it's premature to have any sort of judgmental comment to make," Harris said, "because there is no one who really has done the kind of staff work that leads to gathering information that people need to make informed decisions. I think there's been discussion about a number of sites in the East Valley and certainly one of them is here."

He compared the baseball issue with the use of Sun Devil Stadium for the NFL's Phoenix Cardinals.

"What we had was a pre-existing facility in Sun Devil Stadium that was not in use on Sundays," Harris said. "In that context, it was a natural fit. The kind of research that needs to go into making a similar set of decisions regarding baseball realistically did not get started until two weeks ago."

Another possibility for a baseball stadium has been ASU's Packard Stadium. However, Harris said this is not entirely feasible.

If this occurs, another collegiate stadium would have to be built so that the Sun Devil baseball team had a place to compete.

"However this process works out, we need a college baseball facility like or equivalent to Packard Stadium," Harris said.

Neuheisel agreed.

"I don't think the University's Sun Devils should be playing in the same stadium as a professional team," he said, adding

Scott Troyanos/State Press

Packard Stadium, on Rural Road and First Street, is one of several possible sites for a proposed professional baseball stadium.

that he has not ruled out using Packard Stadium as a professional stadium.

Neuheisel said a stadium built on ASU property would cost between $60 million and $70 million — less than if a stadium had been built in Phoenix because of land value.

Todd said a stadium at ASU would create 5,000 additional parking spaces.

"This is not to be sneezed at," he said.

Neuheisel, who has been a Tempe resident for 25 years and a member of the Tempe City Council in the 1960s and 1970s, said the decision to host a stadium at ASU must be made soon.

Major League Baseball is expected to announce expansion into two cities this spring. Neuheisel said he hopes Tempe is one of the cities chosen.

"Having the stadium at ASU would be good for the state," Neuheisel said.

ASU postmaster to retire following 17 years of service

By THOMAS PREISS
Contributing Writer

ASU postmaster Joseph Barnett, 60, who will retire from the University Oct. 31, has led anything but a plain life.

"I have had a very well-rounded life," Barnett said. "I've come a long way from the Georgia farm I was raised on."

Barnett, who was awarded the University's 1988 Affirmative Action Award for attracting minorities and women to work at ASU, has enjoyed two careers.

The first was a 26-year stint in the U. S. Army that made him a veteran of World War II, the Korean War and the Vietnam War.

"I ended my military career in Vietnam as first sergeant in 1972," Barnett said.

He won the Purple Heart, the Flying Cross, the President's Award and numerous Gold and Silver stars.

Barnett

In 1972, Barnett was hired at ASU Mail Services. He has since earned a national reputation as a hard-working postmaster at the post office, which is Arizona's fifth-largest. Last May, he was invited to speak at the National Postal Forum in Washington, D.C., on efficiency and organization in the mail room.

John F. Riley, ASU's assistant director of purchasing for business services and Barnett's boss, said the invitation was a credit to Barnett and his work.

"He is the kind of guy who does not need a boss," Riley said. "His employees are the same way, which is a credit to his managing skills."

Patty Noderer, Barnett's secretary, said he calls her "Radar."

"I know what he expects of me and he knows what I expect of him," she said. "He is the ideal boss to work for."

During Barnett's tenure, he has helped Mail Services grow from an arm of Tempe's downtown post office to one that handles more than 25 million pieces of mail a year, doubling the volume handled just two years ago.

Barnett initiated a "Zipfour" program at ASU, which enables new employees of the mail services to know precisely where a piece of mail goes.

"This greatly increased the productivity of my staff," he said.

Barnett also computerized the "look-up-and-locate" process of delivering mail, where every faculty, staff and student's correct address can be found if it cannot be read off the package.

Barnett has also been instrumental in establishing ASU's own post office, located in the lower level of the MU.

Barnett said the biggest change at ASU, besides the number of students and the amount of mail, are the pedestrian-only malls.

Barnett has been married to his wife Minnie for 38 years and has four children, two of whom work and attend school at ASU. He also is involved in community volunteer programs such as "dial-a-ride" for the elderly in Tolleson, where he resides and is a member of the Shriners and Masons service clubs.

The Usual Suspects

Brando acts again

IT LOOKS AS THOUGH actor Marlon Brando is going to postpone his retirement again — for at least one more film. Sir David Lean, the 81-year-old English director, said he thinks he's talked Brando into acting in his next film.

"Nostromo," based on the novel by Joseph Conrad, is about silver trade in a fictional South American nation. Lean wants Brando to play a tough-guy general.

"I'm terribly excited because it looks very much as if we'll have Marlon Brando in one of the parts," Lean said. "I think he's probably the greatest film actor ever. I wanted him for 'Lawrence (of Arabia)' and for 'Ryan's Daughter.'"

Lean says the character in "Nostromo" is a "villain called Montero, which he can do off the back of his hand and make it very interesting and rather funny, too."

Jane, don't leave

THE PLEA CAME FROM the heart. Joan Rivers said Tuesday that she really doesn't want Jane Pauley to leave NBC's "Today" show. There have been reports that Pauley plans to leave the show after 13 years.

"Jane, you fool," Rivers said during a taping of her syndicated show, "I beg you from my heart. Think of me as an older sister — think about it."

Rivers suggested that funds could be raised for Pauley, who reportedly pulls down $1.2 million a year.

"Give and give generously," Rivers said. "I don't want her to end up hostessing 'Dance Fever.'"

Peres falls ill

ISRAELI VICE PREMIER and Labor Party leader Shimon Peres was rushed to a hospital with an apparent urinary tract infection after he fell ill Tuesday while touring in northern Israel.

Peres, 66, was tested and admitted to Haemek Hospital in Afula, about 12 miles south of an Arab village where Peres fell ill.

Peres could be released as soon as Wednesday. He is reportedly in a "good mood." He is currently being treated with antibiotics.

Peres was planning to visit the Soviet Union later this month, and it is not clear how his condition will affect those plans.

The Schultz memoirs

FORMER SECRETARY OF STATE George Schultz isn't too concerned with how people react to his memoirs.

"I have to tell it the way I see it, as I felt it at the time," Shultz said. When asked if he thought some people might be offended, he replied, "I've found that people are very sensitive, so probably."

"I may even ruffle my own feathers," he said. "I don't claim to have done everything right."

The memoir is expected to be out in 1991. Shultz now teaches at Stanford University.

Paisley quits

THE DAUGHTER OF the fiery Rev. Ian Paisley has quit her father's Free Presbyterian Church.

Rhonda Paisley, 30, represents the Democratic Unionist Party on the Belfast City Council and wrote a flattering biography of her father last year.

She has not, though, disclosed her reasons for resigning from the church.

"I am no longer a communicant member of the Free Presbyterian Church, although I have not cut off my links entirely," Paisley said.

She'll still go to church when at home, she said, because "I enjoy listening to my father preach."

Rev. Paisley, a Northern Ireland protestant leader and member of the European parliament, said his daughter's decision left him "with great regret."

'Experencia'

Serious theater for a serious cause

By SHARON KANEY
State Press

It is slated to be an experience in experimental theater. Hence the name "Experencia."

The show, presented by the ASU Players, opens tomorrow night in Studio A in the Fine Arts Complex.

It's an experimental project for the theater department in a number of ways — one of the more exciting being its goal to raise $3,000 to $5,000 for the Arizona AIDS Project (AAP).

"What we want to do is raise three to five grand, but more than an initial figure we want to leave the audience entertained and with a sense of responsibility and awareness," said John Wilson, president of the ASU Players, in a recent phone interview.

Wilson is quick to add that "Experencia" is not geared toward AIDS education. "Everything we're trying to do isn't about AIDS. We are still there as a theater organization, still there to entertain although the material is heavy," he said.

The evening's fare will include three distinctly different sections. A reading of original poetry, titled "Moondrool" — by Wilson and Sharon Lamberth, both theater students — set to improvisational music and accompanied by dancers, will kick off the evening.

The second section, which is comprised of a series of one-act dramatic pieces by some of the premiere contemporary playwrights, is titled "Bits of the Cosmos." The section takes its title in part from an unpublished piece, "Poster of the Cosmos," by Lanford Wilson (who also wrote "The 5th of July"). Other contributing playwrights include ASU faculty members Jim Leonard, Gus Edwards and Dennis Britten. Britten also serves as the ASU Players' advisor, and is directing "Experencia."

The final section, "The Art Glass," is described by Wilson as classical Cabaret. It will include a number of vocal selections.

According to Wilson the concept for "Experencia" came from Britten. "He had a section of his poetry done to improvisational music and dance. This is where the idea of having an experimental work sprang from," Wilson said.

According to Britten much of the material is strong and deals with the ills of society, and "antidotes we all know about but need to be reminded of," Britten said. "That's what makes it so entirely appropriate for an AIDS benefit," he added. Britten said that "Experencia" ends with a very touching, loving moment that has had cast members crying during rehearsals.

"I myself feel it's a very heavy show that deals with adult themes," Wilson said. "I think the audience reception is going to be mixed. It has the potential to fail, and that's what makes it exciting. I'm glad it is peppered with some humorous things that make you feel good. I just hope it's enough," he added.

Experimental and original works, a philanthropic angle, heavy themes — it's all a part of ASU Players attempt to make a mark.

"The whole idea behind ASU Players was to be a small-scale, on-campus production company, to involve in all aspects as many students as we could," Wilson said. He described ASU Players as "a new outlet for actors and designers who don't get a chance to work on mainstage series."

Britten calls ASU Players the campus' community theater. "Somehow we haven't been able to get the word out across campus that this is open to everybody," he said.

Aside from promoting new works and fund-raising activities, ASU Players tour Arizona high schools each spring with shows and workshops in an attempt to spark an interest in the ASU theater department.

Ticket prices for "Experencia" are $5 for students and $15 for AAP patrons. Donations for any amount above the ticket price will be accepted. All proceeds will go to AAP.

'Breaking In' lacks suspense and plot

By FRANCINE STAHL
State Press

Sometimes it is just amazing how a really bad film can sneak into wide release. What's even more amazing is that people will pay to see it. Such is the case with "Breaking In."

The film begins when the characters meet when they both try to break into the same house. Ernie (Burt Reynolds, "Smokey and the Bandit") sneaks in for the money in the safe on the wall, and Mike (Casey Siemaszko, "Three O'Clock High") for voyeuristic purposes (he has a fetish for reading other people's mail). So far so good.

Ernie then decides to take Mike on as his junior partner and teach him how to be a real criminal. No problem yet. He shows his new mate everything there is to know about breaking into houses and safes and how to avoid the law. Look out — this is where it goes bad. Then they run around all over town and steal things.

They make incredibly intelligent statements to each other like "Are we doing the right thing?" "No we are doing the wrong thing. We are thieves, remember." That's it, there is no more to it than that. No fear, no suspense, no plot. The end is worse still — it has no point to it at all. It just stops at an awkward moment.

Burt Reynolds adopts a new, more understanding look for his role in "Breaking In."

Mike (Casey Siemaszko) and Ernie (Burt Reynolds) make new plans to crack safes in "Breaking In."

You may be wondering, at this point, where the conflict is. The producers are probably still wondering too. There is none! They just do their thing and pretend like it is interesting. It is in the beginning, up until the point that you realize that nothing more is going to happen. The rest of the film can only be viewed in a state of shock, not believing that it can be this stupid. But it is.

They talk a lot about a man named Red, Ernie's old partner. They make inferences to what happened to him and you think that they intend to let you know later on in the film. Guess what? They never tell you what happened to him or why they ever even mention him in the first place. This story has more holes in it than the safes they break into.

John Sayles' credit as screenwriter should have been the first clue about this picture. He is known for such films as "Eight Men Out" and "Baby It's You," two of the most boring films in the history of motion pictures. With this understanding, the calibre of "Breaking In" should not have been a surprise.

Unfortunately for the actors, somewhere along the line the story just gets lost. It was probably the day Sayles decided to pick up his pen and write it. "Breaking In" breaks down and never gets fixed.

Has-been stars, second-drawer ads

Former journalist Linda Ellerbee has been getting a lot of press about the ersatz news reports-cum-TV commercials she did for Maxwell House coffee, in which she introduced colorful videotaped field reports from Willard Scott. But Ellerbee wasn't the first to sell out in this particularly misleading fashion. In fact, she's in rather distinguished company.

They come out late at night, when the sane are asleep and when more expensive celebrities have left the airwaves. They hawk curiously second- and third-drawer products on curiously long and cheaply produced TV commercials designed to look like talk shows or news programs.

They are the "stars" who pitch anything from hair restorers to sex seminars, under voice-over disclaimers to the effect that nothing they say is necessarily the truth.

Star: Kaye Ballard

Product: "Look at Me Now!" self-hypnosis diet plan
Format: Ballard makes guest appearance on "Look at Me Now!," fake "Donahue"-style show. Host Dr. Judy Kuriansky interviews a doctor, dieters and audience members, and shows before-and-after videos

Persuasive reason for buying product: Mike Ovitz chum Dr. Bruce Hensel says, "(Hypnosis is) a personal power plan to focus on yourself!"

Reason given by star for demeaning himself in this fashion: Formerly obese, now only somewhat overfed, Ballard lost 16 pounds. "Bread and pasta is my life. Thank God I found this," she said

Most exciting claim: With this plan "when you bend over to touch your toes, there's, like, things not in the way anymore," said actress Karin Gustafsen

Cost: $39.95 for relaxation tape, diet book and "nutritional supplements"

Star: Judy Collins

Product: Harmonics Liposome Eye Gel. Liposomes "match your own skin cells and cause wrinkles to plump up and simply fade away"

Format: On ersatz "Good Morning America," Collins introduces "Amazing Eyes" show by singing "Amazing Grace" near a dozen mascara-shellacked Liposome Eye Gel users. Signing off, she says, "We've had a wonderful sharing afternoon"

Persuasive reason for buying product: NASA developed liposomes to counteract dryness that occurs in planes, said Collins

Reason given by star for demeaning himself in this fashion: "She didn't just sign her name to something," Collins beefy consultant-fiance, Louis Nelson, insists. "She really wanted a superior product that she . . . developed, really, and she did it working very closely with the chemists"

Cost: $59.95 for gel, moisturizer, cleanser and mirror in vinyl case, an "instant collector's item you'll use over and over"

Star: Dick Clark

Product: Gary Smalley's "Hidden Keys to Loving Relationships" intimacy seminar on audio- and videocassettes
Format: Clark interviews Smalley on "Is There Love After Marriage?," ersatz "Donahue," and takes questions from audience

Persuasive reason for buying product: Smalley's technique will teach you "how to energize your mate in 60 seconds"

Reason given by star for demeaning himself in this fashion: Clark, who has been divorced twice, may have been intrigued by Smalley's claim the technique teaches men "how to value your wife"

Most exciting claim: Smalley claims he interviewed more than 30,000 women and another 10,000 couples over a three-year period

Cost: $69.95, video; $39.95, audio

Star: John Ritter

Product: Tapes of Professor Claude Olney's "Where There's a Will, There's an 'A'" school grade-boosting seminar

Format: On ersatz "Today"-like talk show, Ritter interviews Olney, "a professor at one of America's major universities"; cuts to taped students and parent testimonials

Persuasive reason for buying product: Student Chuck Pangrazi says, "Before Professor Olney's seminar, I flunked out of school. After Professor Olney's seminar, I've had 19 straight As and not one B"

Reason given by star for demeaning himself in this fashion: "The results are incredible," said Ritter. (Also, he signed with Olney before "Hooperman")

Cost: $69.95, video; $39.95, audio

Star: Robert Vaughn

Product: Helsinki Formula baldness remedy; "cleanses the cells and tissues around the follicles that are sometimes clogged"

Format: Very tan Vaughn, sporting a comb-over, anchors "Robert Vaughn Discovers," ersatz "Nightline," including pseudo-live news reports from Helsinki Formula's global network of correspondents. On anchor desk is U.N.C.L.E.-like symbol — the Helsinki baldness-remedy logo

Persuasive reason for buying product: Statisticians asked balding men if they thought they had less sex appeal. "An overwhelming 97 percent said no . . . But when we asked the women if balding men are sexier, an incredible 85 percent said no"

Reason given by star for demeaning himself in this fashion: British royal family rumored to use Helsinki Formula

Cost: $49.95 for three-month supply

Weird Wire

UNDERWOOD, Iowa (AP) — A deer hunter pleading self defense was cited today for killing a moose that had wandered hundreds of miles from its natural range and startled farmers by ambling through Iowa's cornfields.

Michael Scott Wiggins was charged with shooting an animal out of season — Iowa has no moose season — and having a center-fire rifle in his possession while deer hunting during a muzzle-loading season.

The bull moose was first seen Sept. 22 near Sheldon, in the state's northwestern corner.

Wiggins, who turned himself in Sunday, said he encountered the moose in a soybean field earlier in the day near Underwood, about 10 miles from Council Bluffs, while hunting coyotes, said Conservation Officer Doug Clayton.

Wiggins said he shot the animal when it threatened to charge him, Clayton said.

The nearest natural habitat of moose is about 400 miles north of Iowa, in the woods and lakes of northern Minnesota.

Duck hunting season begins for Sun Devils

By JOEL HORN
State Press

Head Coach Rich Brooks said the University of Oregon football team is near the point of no return in its quest for a post-season bowl invitation.

The Ducks have lost three of their last four games and face the Sun Devils — who they have never defeated — at 3:30 p.m. Saturday in Sun Devil Stadium.

ASU (3-2-1 overall, 0-1-1 Pac-10) leads the 24-year-old series with Oregon 9-0 and is 4-0 against the Ducks in Tempe.

After opening the season with victories over California and Iowa, Oregon (3-3, 2-3) lost to Stanford. Following a win over UofA, the Ducks were shot down by Washington State and Washington.

"If we are to win some football games down the stretch, which we have the opportunity to do, we have to correct the things we've been doing badly and get more aggressive," Brooks said. "Five games are all that are left, and we had better take advantage of it."

The Ducks have committed numerous turnovers and have been ineffective at running and blocking.

Oregon turned the ball over seven times last week in its 20-14 defeat at Washington, including four interceptions by quarterback Bill Musgrave. Two of the turnovers came after Oregon had reached Husky territory in the fourth quarter.

"I think any time you turn the ball over, it obviously is not totally luck," Brooks said. "Some of it is luck, but Musgrave is forcing the ball."

Musgrave, who suffered a broken collarbone against ASU in Eugene last season, has passed for more than 200 yards in a game 12 times. In three seasons, he has connected for 4,195 yards and 34 touchdowns.

The junior has thrown at least 40 passes in the last three games but has been picked off 10 times this year.

"He's done a lot of good things, but he's made a lot of critical errors," Brooks said. "Bill has gotten to the point where he's thinking he has to make a big play every day. Therefore, he's forcing some passes that in the past he used better judgment not to throw."

"We haven't helped him with the running game."

The Ducks' leading rusher the past three seasons has been senior tailback Derek Loville, the school rushing record holder. He ran for 1,202 yards (second in the Pac-10) and 13 touchdowns in 1988.

This season, Loville has carried the ball 101 times for 277 yards — a paltry 2.7-yard average. He has three touchdowns and his longest run is 14 yards.

"Loville is having a hard time getting to the line of scrimmage," Brooks said, "let alone getting past it."

Senior fullback Latin Berry, Oregon's second leading rusher for three years, has 220 yards on 35 carries — an impressive 6.3-yard average. He and Loville both have missed time because of injuries.

"They're fine," Brooks said. "There are just no holes for them."

Expected to be a strength in 1989, Oregon's offensive line has been hampered by junior center Scot Boatright's knee injury.

"We're not blocking people, we're not sustaining blocks and we're not helping the passing game enough with the running game," Brooks said.

Junior split end Tony Hargain, who started at quarterback against ASU two years ago, is Oregon's leading receiver with 26 catches for 426 yards and three touchdowns. He caught eight passes for 145 yards last week against Washington.

"He's having his best year," Brooks said. "He made up his mind last year to rededicate himself. He stayed (in Eugene) all summer and worked in the weight room. He's really making some plays."

Senior split end Terry Obee, who led the Ducks the last two seasons in receiving, is second on the team with 23 catches for 398 yards and two touchdowns.

Obee broke the Pac-10 record for career punt returns against Washington, increasing his total to 103 all-time returns for 1,004 yards (9.7 yards per return). He ranks third in the conference this season with an 8.2-yard average.

The Ducks' defensive strength, its secondary, is led by left cornerback Chris Oldham and free safety Derek Horton. The two seniors have combined for seven interceptions in 1989.

"We've been doing some good things in the secondary, but I don't think we're playing to our potential in that area," Brooks said. "We've given up more yards than I'd like."

Senior middle linebacker Mark Kearns leads the Ducks in tackles with 58, 42 unassisted, and redshirt freshman weakside linebacker Joe Farwell has contributed 46 stops.

Senior nose tackle David Cusano, who blocked two extra points against Washington and intercepted a deflected pass, is Oregon's No. 2 tackler with 51. He also has a quarterback sack and four tackles for 20 yards in losses.

Brooks said he is concerned about his team's mental approach for Saturday's game in the wake of the disappointing loss to Washington.

"If anybody's got any great motivational techniques," he said, "I'd appreciate it if they'd send them up."

Norris gives up pro circuit to assist ASU tennis

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

For Sheri Norris, it was the chance of a lifetime — a position as ASU assistant womens tennis coach at her alma mater and an opportunity to work with one of the most respected coaches in the Pac-10.

There was one flaw to this otherwise prime offer — it meant giving up a position on an international pro-circuit tour.

After some soul searching, however, the ex-Sun Devil tennis standout decided that going back to school to work on her M.B.A., assisting Head Coach Sheila McInerney and leaving the hustle and bustle of the pro circuit was exactly the opportunity she was looking for.

"Sheila is one of the best coaches in the nation and that is not an overstatement," Norris said. "I accepted the offer because I believe in the program."

"Sheila has built a great foundation."

Norris said she realizes she may not find the time to be competitive in the professional leagues this fall but hopes to continue her tour in the summer.

She said the thought of her talent dwindling down has never crossed her mind. In fact, she said she is getting as much conditioning from practicing with ASU's eighth-ranked team as she did on the circuit.

"I am staying in great shape by getting worked out by the girls," she said. "Although being an assistant coach is a part-time job, it seems more like full-time."

During Norris' three-year tour of the world, she said she gained knowledge of various tennis techniques, world culture and history. Among the tournaments she competed in were the French Open, the Australian Open and Wimbledon.

ASU tennis coach Sheila McInerney works with Sheri Norris during practice in 1985.

"I got to travel, see the world and meet lots of people," she said. "I played in some top tournaments and hopefully I can share some of my experience with the girls on the (Sun Devil) team."

Norris played four years (1983-86) on the ASU tennis team, two of which she was coached by McInerney. Among her accomplishments during that time was holding a No. 1 seed and reaching the semi-finals of the NCAAs.

"All four years, I enjoyed going out and doing well, being ranked in the top of the league," she said. "I have Sheila to credit for the successes I had in the last two years."

Norris said she plans to put her collegiate experience to use this season by helping the Sun Devil women develop their style and confidence.

"It's fun being back in the realm of college tennis," she said. "Hopefully, I can give (the team members) confidence in knowing that their games will develop. Through ASU, I was able to move into the professional ranks of tennis."

"When I came to ASU, I was just 'a girl from Kansas.' After four successful years, I got better and better. I want the girls to know they can do it. I like motivating people to go further."

In the immediate future, Norris wants to finish her education. Though she is taking only two classes towards her M.B.A. this semester, she said she is quite busy.

In the future, she said she hopes to land a job as head coach for a Pac-10 school.

"Sheila has had a lot of influence on me," she said. "Now, I won't be eager to take just any job."

Carbajal's third-round KO preserves perfect record

PHOENIX (AP) — Former Olympic boxers Michael Carbajal and Ray Mercer, still unbeaten as professionals, now are turning their attention to title fights while heavyweight Tommy Morrison is thinking about his movie career.

Mercer, a gold medalist at the 1988 Summer Olympics, improved his record to 10-0 by stopping Eddie Richardson in the first round of their scheduled eight-round heavyweight fight Tuesday night.

Carbajal, a Phoenix native who was an Olympic silver medalist last year, is now 9-0 after scoring a third-round KO of Jose Manuel Diaz in their scheduled eight-round light-flyweight bout.

Carbajal notched his seventh KO as he stopped Jose Manuel Diaz, of Calexico, Calif., at 1:38 of the third round.

Referee Al Munoz stopped the bout after Carbajal put Diaz down with a right uppercut to the stomach. Diaz, 24-19, was counted out as he rolled on the canvas.

Top Rank promoter Bob Arum said Carbajal will get a North American Boxing Federation title shot in February.

"When it comes, I'll be ready," said the 21-year-old Carbajal. "That's what I've been hoping for all along."

The 28-year-old Mercer of Essex County, N.J., said he wants a shot at undisputed world heavyweight champion Mike Tyson as soon as possible. Promoters said it could take place sometime next year.

"I think I'm ready," said Mercer, who was 85-6 as an amateur after taking up boxing in 1983 while in the Army. "I have dreams. I want to be the heavyweight champion of the world."

Mercer decked Richardson with a short right hook to the chin midway through the first round. Richardson of Fort Worth, Texas, got up at the count of eight but was knocked to one knee by Mercer moments later, and referee Roger Yanez stopped the fight at the 2:16 mark of the first round by TKO.

Mercer now has nine KOs, seven coming in the opening round. Richardson had his record fall to 16-16.

The 20-year-old Morrison, who is nicknamed "The Duke" and is the great-grandnephew of the late actor John Wayne, is scheduled to have a part in the upcoming "Rocky 5" movie.

He improved his record to 18-0 with 16 KOs after his first-round knockout of Harry Terrell (16-13-1) of Cleveland.

Morrison of Kansas City, Mo., floored Terrell midway through the opening round with a left hook, then nearly knocked his opponent through the ropes with an overhand right.

Munoz stopped the fight at the 3:19 mark, giving Morrison his 11th first-round knockout.

A near-capacity crowd of 14,000 at the Arizona Veterans Memorial Coliseum watched the fights, which were televised live by ESPN cable.

'Stick hit with quake; bay fans don't shake

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — There was no rioting, no panics at Candlestick Park when an earthquake rocked the stadium and forced postponement of Tuesday night's third game of the World Series.

"I was sitting on the bench and at first I thought it was the fans stamping (their feet)," Oakland manager Tony La Russa said. "Then . . . I realized what was happening."

A decision on when and where Game 3 of the first-ever Bay Bridge series between the Oakland Athletics and the San Francisco Giants will be played will not be made until today.

Oakland slugger Jose Canseco was standing with his wife when the tremor hit. He said he looked up at fans yelling at him and thought, "Jeez, look at that. They still want us to play."

Baseball commissioner Fay Vincent said there were cracks in the stadium, and the extent of damage would not be known until later in the night. No major injuries were reported.

"You can't stop concrete," Oakland outfielder Dave Henderson said. "Forget the World Series."

Fans in the sellout crowd of about 60,000 remained calm when the tremors struck. Nor was there any booing or complaining from fans when the game was postponed.

Giants star first baseman Will Clark went through a similar situation last year in Los Angeles.

"We had one in LA last year, but this was more scary because we have a packed house here," Clark said. "It could have been a catastrophe."

Ken Oberkfell was sitting on the Giants bench when "I felt everything shaking, so I made a mad dash for the middle of the field."

Umpire Al Clark was still in the umpires' dressing room when the earthquake hit.

"It was one of the scariest situations I've ever been in," he said. "As soon as it started, my legs went numb. I looked up, and the walls were waving. I became frightened, and I realized it was an earthquake."

Athletics pitcher Todd Burns was not thinking about himself. He was carrying a baby girl on his shoulder as he left the park.

"I just want to find out if the kids are OK," he said.

Teammate Rickey Henderson knew what was happening immediately.

"I've been through these before," said Henderson, who grew up in Oakland. "I knew immediately that it was an earthquake, but I thought it was just a little one."

The quake registered 6.5 to 7.0 on the Richter scale 10 miles north of Santa Cruz. It shook buildings in Sacramento, 95 miles to the northeast, and was felt as far away as Reno, Nev., 225 miles to the east.

Aftershocks continued at least 45 minutes after the quake struck at 5:05 p.m. Players stayed on the field for 30 minutes before the game was postponed. Many of them left hand-in-hand with their families.

Mark Dandridge, 26, of San Francisco, a Giants' security guard, was standing in the upper deck behind home plate looking at one of the light towers "and I saw it shake. And then I looked down to the luxury boxes and I saw all that starting to shake, and I said 'Oh God help us.'"

"I guess it lasted only 20 seconds, but it seemed like 20 minutes," said David Sanderford of Long Beach, Calif., who added he felt only one more powerful earthquake in a lifetime in California. "It happened just as the players ran on the field, and I thought people were stomping in the upper deck. But then as it got a little stronger, I knew it was a quake. People jumped up and gave each other some high fives. They thought it was an omen for a good game."

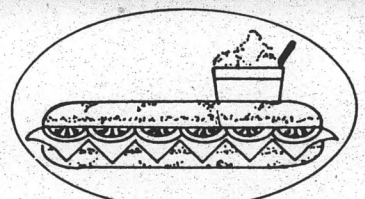

Gay Callan of San Andreas, who was dressed in the Giants' colors, black and orange, said as she was leaving, "If it's true that it was a 6.9 (on the Richter scale), you don't hang around for an aftershock."

Carl and Bernie Epolite of San Jose decided to leave as soon as they felt the first aftershock, about 35 minutes after the earthquake. They were sitting in the upper deck under a concrete overhang.

"We saw the overhang starting to ripple," Carl said. "It rippled all around the stadium, but we kind of took it in stride, and people started cheering. Some people took it as a good sign for the Giants, that it was a sign from God that the Giants would start winning."

Twitty picks course, swings into pro golf

By PAUL CORO
State Press

Former ASU golf standout Howard Twitty always entertained the thought of professional golf career, but never believed it could become a reality.

Now, 17 years after his successful college golf campaign, he is one of two former Sun Devils (along with Dan Forsman) to have earned over $1 million on the PGA tour.

Twitty said he was so unsure that professional golf was not his niche in life that he started selling insurance out of college.

"After being in the insurance business for about a year, I found that it wasn't all it was cracked up to be either," Twitty said. "If I was going to ever play pro golf, I decided that was the time."

Twitty enjoyed some success overseas and in little U. S. tournaments until he joined the PGA tour in 1974, when he was 24 years old.

"I was fortunate in that I was more settled down than the other guys who had just got out of college," Twitty said. "I had my feet more on the ground."

His prosperous career has garnered him several victories, including two on the PGA tour. In the early 1980s, Twitty placed 14th and 15th on the PGA money list in back-to-back seasons.

"No one does it just for the money, though," Twitty said. "If you did, that's all you'd think about. I always played because I love the game."

Twitty said mental attitude and desire were the keys to his prime years.

"After that, I went into a valley," Twitty said. "I began to improve again until my back started hurting (two years ago), but I'm back on my way up."

His back injury has caused him to stay away from golf for the longest time since he was at ASU. He recently sat out the Sun Devil/Thunderbird Pro-Am, the golf team's primary fundraiser.

"To play on the tour, you need to be 100 percent," Twitty said. "If you're at 95 percent, it's really tough because they all run pretty fast."

Twitty said pro golf has changed in that 10 times as many people can win any tournament. He said courses are harder and scores are lower.

"Years ago, you could shoot 71 or 72," Twitty said. "But now if you do that, it seems like the whole world flies by you."

McInerney pleased by results

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

ASU tennis Coach Sheila McInerney was hoping her team would fare a bit better than it did at the ITCA Rolex tournament last weekend.

But in no way was she disappointed with the overall results, which included two ASU doubles teams qualifying for the semi-finals.

The doubles teams of Jennifer Rojohn/Karen Bergan and Jill Hamilton/Kristi Jonkosky both lost to teams from UCLA in two games, 6-3, 6-4 and 6-2, 6-2, respectively.

McInerney said she was particularly pleased with Rojohn and Bergan's match, which led them to the semi-finals against No. 3 seeds Banni Redhair and Betsy Sumerville from UofA.

"Our doubles was a positive, but our singles need to get better," McInerney said. "At this point in the season, it's usually the opposite."

In singles competition, Pam Chioffi, Luann Klimchock, Karen Bergan and Kristi Jonkosky each won their first rounds. None of the players succeeded in winning further matches.

"Overall, the girls played all right," McInerney said. "It wasn't great, but it wasn't a disappointment. We accomplished what we were supposed to, which is to see what we need to work on."

Among those aspects of play that could use improvement, McInerney said, is court movement. She said footwork and running drills should help to solve the problem.

"From a stroke standpoint, we have no technical problems, but our movement could be better," she said. "If you're not confident in your movement, you're not much confident in your overall game."

McInerney also said her team could use improvement in the area of aggressiveness.

Overall, however, McInerney said the Rolex tournament served as a huge motivational booster for the Sun Devils. She feels it will encourage them to try extra hard in practice.

"I expected to do a little bit better and so did the girls," she said. "They needed to expect that because now they will regroup and determine how to get to where they want to be."

This week in practice, McInerney said she will be preparing her team for the All-America tournament next weekend.

"It's going to be a more difficult tournament, but I am looking forward to it and I think the kids are too," she said. "They should buckle down this week, and we should have a good week of practice."

Twitty

Twitty said his ASU golf career was a "great stepping stone" for him — and with good reason. Twitty was an All-America selection in each of his three seasons as a Sun Devil (1970-72). Twitty, a Phoenix native, transferred from the University of Redlands in California because he said he was homesick.

Twitty said he recalls ASU fondly. He said although he had a lot of fun competing here, he wishes he had taken schoolwork more seriously.

"I should have known I wanted to be a golf pro because golf was the one thing I did take seriously," he said.

Twitty and his teammates were part of a good program but a different one from what current Sun Devils are accustomed to. They used to hit their own practice balls where the Lot 59 parking lot is now. Twitty said the ASU golf program has improved, especially in the last few years.

The 40-year-old Twitty began playing golf at the age of 10. Twitty said he and some neighbors just toyed with the game in the front yard. Then balls began going over the fence and someone came over to take them to a course.

"I always pictured myself putting for the U. S. Open win," Twitty said. "But in the back of my mind, I always felt like those are stars out there. I never thought I could be that good."

Twitty still resides in north central Phoenix with his wife Sheree and three children. Twitty, in his second marriage, has a 13-year-old boy (Kevin), a 8-year-old girl (Jossie) and a three-month-old boy (Chip).

"I don't think my life is that much different from anybody else," Twitty said.

Looking back, Twitty said he never has regretted his decision to put woods and irons ahead of claims and adjustments.

"Selling insurance is a lot tougher than making 3-foot putts."
