ASU cops cleared in probe of race riot

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A U.S. Justice Department investigation has cleared the ASU Police Department of any civil rights violations in its handling of a racial brawl on Alpha Drive last April, University officials said.

"They told me they had closed the investigation and are not intending to take any action," ASU General Counsel Bruce Meyerson said late Monday.

Meyerson said Suzanne Drouet, the assistant U.S. Attorney handling the case, told him Monday afternoon that the investigation had been concluded. Drouet was unavailable for comment and Justice Department spokesman Joe Krovisky said late Monday that he had no way of confirming if the case had been closed.

"I'm happy about the outcome but not surprised," said acting ASU Police Chief Doug Bartosh, who came under fire for his officers' actions in the April 15 incident. "If I had found that the officers had done something wrong, I would have taken action."

Bartosh said he thinks the Justice Department's findings will help his department's image, which he believes was negatively affected by the investigation.

"I think this will provide some relief for the officers," Bartosh said. "I think they are going to feel a little bit vindicated."

But the police department has not been completely exonerated — it still faces an independent ASU investigation that will examine whether the officers violated any University policies or state laws.

Meyerson said the completion of the Justice Department investigation will allow the officers involved in the incident to appear before the University investigative panel. The panel's work has been delayed because the officers — on the advice of their attorneys — would not testify until the conclusion of the Justice Department's investigation to avoid implicating themselves.

The Justice Department probe was launched by the FBI's Phoenix office last spring after two black students claimed

Bess selected as new chief of DPS, police

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

William R. Bess, Bowling Green State University's Department of Public Safety director, has been selected as ASU's new DPS director, officials said Monday.

Bess, 43, who will also serve as campus police chief, beat out four other finalists for the ASU post, which he will assume Dec. 1. He will earn $65,000 a year and replaces C. Russell Duncan, who resigned last January.

"I'm very excited," said Bess, who will be the University's eighth DPS director. "It (the job) represents to me a lot of challenges."

As ASU/DPS director, Bess will oversee the University's 40-member police force in addition to its parking and transit, and occupational health and safety departments. DPS has about a $6 million budget.

Bess, who has worked at Bowling Green for 11 years, will inherit a police department that was the target of an FBI probe and still is being investigated by an independent University panel for officers' handling of a racial brawl on Alpha Drive. DPS employees say other problems include

Auto theft rate up dramatically in Tempe, police say

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

Auto thefts have increased dramatically in Tempe this year and the most targeted area is an apartment complex with a student population of more than 85 percent, police said.

Desert Palm Village apartments, 1215 and 1216 E. Vista Del Cerro Drive, is in the process of restructuring the lighting in its lots. The complex has one security officer on duty during the week and two during the weekend to patrol the area, manager Debra Hill said. The officers work from 9 p.m. to 2 a.m., she added.

In a recent study, police determined that auto thefts occur most often in parking lots, especially apartment complexes, with Chevrolet Camaros and Pontiac Firebirds being most susceptible to theft, Sgt. Al Taylor said.

Police identified the top nine danger zones for car theft and seven were apartment complexes, he said. Two other highly hit areas are the parking lots at University Theaters, 1025 E. Broadway Road, and Smitty's grocery store, 3232 S. Mill Ave, he added.

University Theaters has recently hired off-duty Tempe

Apartment lots top list of most targeted spots police officers to patrol the lot at night to reduce the high number of thefts, manager Chris Towt said.

Police received 796 auto theft reports last year. From January to August of this year, they have received 908 reports — almost 114 a month.

Many car owners do not protect their cars from theft, Taylor said.

Car theft is a "crime of convenience," he said. Thieves will target the most easily accessible cars, such as those with unlocked doors and especially those with the keys left in them, he added.

Camaros and Firebirds are often targeted because they have frameless windows with rubber molding, which makes for easy entry.

Taylor said there are a few safety precautions car owners can take to reduce the risk of theft. For example, a kill switch, which can be installed for about $30, is a hidden lever that must be turned on before the car will start.

A new device, called the club, is made of tungsten steel and fits through the steering wheel, making it impossible to turn.

"If you make it harder on them, you are less likely to be a victim," Taylor said.

Cars are usually stolen by juveniles from Phoenix who are usually out for "joy rides," Taylor said.

The juveniles drive the cars back to Phoenix and show them off to friends or sell them. When the juveniles are finished with the cars they will abandon them or sometimes will burn them to destroy all evidence, Taylor added.

Police report an overall recovery rate of 72 percent, Taylor said.

Other highly targeted parking lots include Coronado Apartments, 1865 E. Broadway Road; El Dorado Village, 1235 W. Baseline Road; Fireside Apartments, 3730 S. Mill Ave.; and Superstition Park, 30 W. Carter Drive.

Within the last 30 days, police have noticed a trend toward thefts of sporty mid-sized cars such as Buick Regals and Pontiac Grand Ams.

Other vehicles targeted for theft include trucks, which are usually taken to Mexico, making the recovery difficult, Taylor said.

Trial opens in police shooting that touched off riot in Miami

MIAMI (AP) — The trial of a police officer who killed a black motorcyclist, sparking three days of racial violence, opened Monday with the defense demanding the case be moved as demonstrators clashed outside.

Colombian-born Miami officer William Lozano faces two manslaughter counts in the Jan. 16 shooting of the motorcyclist Clement Lloyd, 23, as he was being chased by police, and the death of his passenger, Allan Blanchard, 24, who was fatally injured when the motorcycle crashed.

While small groups of black and Hispanic demonstrators faced off outside the Dade County courthouse, attorneys and spectators inside were put through two sets of metal detectors and had bags and briefcases searched.

Attorneys spent Monday selecting potential jurors. They finished midway through the initial screening process and expected to continue jury selection throughout today.

Local police are worried about a violent reaction to the trial. Police have bought 700 gas masks and made arrangements for use of two armored personnel carriers.

Lozano said he fired at Lloyd because the speeding motorcycle headed straight for him. Lloyd died instantly of a bullet to the head, while Blanchard died of head injuries suffered in the crash.

The slaying touched off burning and looting in predominantly black neighborhoods. One person was killed, 11 were wounded by gunfire and 13 structures burned down only days before the Miami area was host to the Super Bowl.

Workers at E. German plant found independent labor union

BERLIN (AP) — Several hundred employees of an East German factory have formed an independent union, a worker spokesman said Monday, stirring memories of Solidarity's challenge a decade ago to an equally stern Polish regime.

Workers at the Wilhelm Pieck electronics factory in Teltow, a suburb of East Berlin, call their union Reform.

It is the first independent labor union in communist East Germany, as Solidarity was the first in the Soviet bloc, and includes the right to strike among its demands. There was no comment from the government.

ZDF television in West Germany quoted a Reform spokesman as saying entire sections of plant workers had resigned from the state-run Freie Deutsche Gewerkschaftsbund labor federation. It said workers had appealed to comrades in other factories to spread the new union.

Opposition activists announced plans later Monday for a march in Leipzig, where more than 120,000 people filled the streets a week ago to demand reform.

Pro-democracy supporters said there would be demonstrations last Tuesday when the parliament elected Egon Krenz head of state. Krenz, 52, took over Wednesday as Communist Party chief, replacing Erich Honecker, his 77-year-old mentor.

Atlantis returns safely to earth as Galileo speeds on to Jupiter

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — Space shuttle Atlantis streaked down through the atmosphere and glided safely home Monday after a five-day mission that sent the long-delayed Galileo spacecraft on a 2.4-billion-mile journey to Jupiter.

Atlantis touched down at 9:32 a.m. in a light breeze, cutting short its mission by two 90-minute orbits to get down before predicted high winds came up on Rogers Dry Lake. Before the landing, dense fog had shrouded the base.

A relatively modest crowd estimated at about 20,000 was on hand to watch Commander Don Williams, pilot Michael J. McCulley and mission specialists Shannon W. Lucid, Ellen S. Baker and Franklin R. Chang-Diaz come home.

The successful deployment of the nuclear-powered Galileo accomplished the mission's main goal about 6½ hours after blastoff Wednesday from Cape Canaveral, Fla.

The $1.5 billion spacecraft was said to be operating flawlessly, passing the million-mile mark at a speed of nearly 9,000 mph, relative to Earth, on a looping, 6-year trip to explore Jupiter.

Hungary proclaims democracy on anniversary of 1956 uprising

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Hungary declared itself a democracy Monday, 33 years after Soviet troops crushed an anti-Stalinist uprising, and chants of "Russians go home!" and "Communism no more!" rose from a crowd of 100,000.

Hungarian flags of red, white and green waved over the throng, which overflowed the Parliament square. People cheered wildly in the torch-lit plaza when participants in the uprising invoked memories of its leaders.

"It took 33 years for those behind the thick walls to hear the cries" for democracy, Jenoe Fonay, a prominent activist who was involved in the uprising, told the rally.

Bomb explodes at Texas school; federal authorities investigating

BENBROOK, Texas (AP) — A bomb in a briefcase-size container exploded in a ball of fire at a high school principal's office as explosives experts were trying to disarm it, fire officials said.

The blast shortly before 1 p.m. caused extensive smoke damage at Western Hills High School and ignited paperwork on Principal Bill Roper's desk, but no one on the Fort Worth Fire Department bomb squad was injured, officials said.

The container, which was described as a small attache case or a cassette tape recorder, was found next to a drinking fountain by a student, said Fire Department spokesman Butch Hall.

The student opened the case, found wires and a battery inside, and turned it over to school administrators. The case was taken to Roper's office, and the school was evacuated.

Authorities were trying to determine the bomb's origin and composition, Tacker said.

Opposition spearheads effort to unseat Bhutto government

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Conservative opponents of Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto called Monday for a no-confidence vote in Parliament against her 10-month-old government.

Leaders of the nine-party Islamic Democratic Alliance claimed they had the votes to bring down the government, but Cabinet ministers said they were confident the effort to force the Pakistan People's Party from power would fail.

Alliance spokesmen said the Pakistan People's Party, which heads the the country's first democratically elected government in more than a decade, was jeopardizing democracy by failing to maintain law and order.

Alliance leaders said they delivered the motion to the secretary of the National Assembly, the powerful lower house of Parliament. The secretary's office did not set a date, but Pakistan's Constitution says such a vote must be held within a week.

Alliance leaders said the notice was signed by all 86 of their members in the 237-seat National Assembly. However, they claimed the support of another 43 members, including independents and legislators from smaller parties.

Bhutto's party has 110 seats in the house plus the support of a shifting number of independents. It needs the vote of only 119 members to survive.

Minority groups feed myth of violent racial conflict

Last week's issue of U.S. News and World Report had a feature article about colleges in the United States. It highlighted six "up and coming" national universities.

ASU was one of them. We should all be proud; this type of national press coverage is refreshing. For a moment, ASU held a national image of prosperity and hope. But back in Tempe, we know differently.

Local press coverage and demonstrations remain centered around the "social conflict," the "social unrest," and that dreaded disease — racism.

Thursday's March of Unity, which was boycotted by several African American student organizations, has brought the topic of racism back to the forefront of ASU controversies. These groups have stated to the press that they are pursuing a peaceful fight for racial, social and educational equality, a vision inspired by the "social conflict and unrest" of April 14, 1989.

Social conflict and unrest? In the Sept. 26 issue of New York's Village Voice, a headline on a story detailing racial events at ASU read: "There's a riot going on: Racism 101 at Arizona State." The story was written as "an anatomy of a campus riot."

Campus riot? This type of press is the kind that makes your high school friends who went to other smaller, more prestigious colleges call you late one night and say: "Hey, haven't talked to you in a while, just been thinkin' about ya', so what's the scoop, I heard there were massive race riots at ASU?"

How do we answer this question? Yes, April 14, 1989 was a tragic night. Yes, students were hurt and may have been mistreated — yes, there were black students . . . and one white student . . . in the truck that was attacked. Yes, racial insults were made. Yet six months after the incident, ASU is still being portrayed by the media as a campus with a problem, the worst kind of problem — a violent racial atmosphere.

Is this fair treatment by the media? Is there really "social conflict and unrest" on our campus, or have we been victims of a sensationalized press?

The student groups who protested the March of Unity said they did so because the march was untimely — because we have not yet defeated the specter of racism on campus and met the challenge of alleviating the "social conflict and unrest" that exists between students of different races.

This type of rhetoric makes non-minority ASU students sound like bigots and white supremacists just waiting to beat up on anybody different.

No wonder we have been victims of bad press. We are using bad language to describe a type of social situation on this campus. Let's examine the semantics of the terms involved.

What is social conflict and unrest? This is an important question, and one with a very significant answer. For those of you who are thinking that these terms require violence and physical activity, think again.

At ASU social conflict and unrest don't necessarily mean violence. On this campus, the social turbulence is instead expressed in peaceful, low-key ways.

We have a communications instructor who makes a flippant comment about Latin Americans and how they shake hands. What prompts an instructor to say something like this? Certainly, in the wake of all the recent racism publicity the instructor was either truly a racist, or ignorant of the climate at ASU. Maybe she was just making a comment — sharing her personality with her class — and didn't think about it twice; maybe she didn't think there was a racial problem at ASU.

I bet she does now. Another example. At ASU we have a photography professor who told his students he chose not to cover in class any significant minority photographers. Why choose such words in explaining the selection of class materials to students? Maybe the professor chose to be honest and didn't think the student would be offended by his explanation of the syllabus.

I bet he would think about it now. This is the type of social disturbance we have at ASU. We have people offending minority students by their words, by the way they think. What we don't have is organized violence, brutality on a daily basis or students propagandizing their race as supreme. And we don't deserve a reputation based on this false violent image.

The social conflict at ASU is reflective of the current social conflict in our nation. In fact, our situation at ASU is actually better than on the national level, because at least we have gotten people to think about race relations. We have an environment here that is ripe for change. Students have reacted to the April 14 incident by challenging each other to think about racism, to feel it. This is more than happens at a lot of other campuses in this nation.

Consider being at UCLA, where student government elections are plagued yearly by racial battles and insults. ASU students are above that type of racism. And as the incidents above illustrate, we have begun to think about race relations and to notice the other, less headline-worthy forms of discrimination and insensitivity.

And from thought comes action. Yes, there is a race relations problem at ASU. But student minority groups who use terms like "conflict" and "unrest" to describe the state of affairs at the University do so at the expense of accuracy and progress.

Indeed, change is slow. We can't expect to change everybody's thoughts about race relations in just six months. But feeding the myth, through the use of misleading and inflammatory terms, that ASU is a bastion of violent racial activity draws the spotlight away from the real, more subtle difficulties we face.

So, for ASU, one of the nation's six up and coming universities, the burden of a sensationalized press must be borne. But in the long run, this up and coming university will be better off for having faced up to the problem.

We musn't forget April 14, 1989 — but we musn't let it stop us from becoming the nation's most integrated college campus. Prosperity and hope are on the horizon.

Standards not lowered

Editor:
In her editorial Oct. 3, 1989, Lynn Vavreck seems to rely on unexamined premises to make her point. Commenting on the problem of capping enrollment by raising admission requirements, Ms. Vavreck states that this is "perhaps the 'typical ASU option,' especially since it violates the extraordinary effort the University is making to recruit and retain minority students."

Ms. Vavreck, have you looked at the entrance grades across the board to see what the scores are for the average non-minority student? Did you know that in 1974, the minimum GPA requirement for new freshmen was a 2.5? In 1974, out of 31,021 students, there were 1516 "Spanish-surnamed" students, 552 Black students and 335 "American Indian" students — that is 8 percent of the total. In 1987, out of 42,968 students at ASU, there were 2101 Hispanics, 872 blacks and 480 Native Americans. (As long as we are talking stereotypes, I won't mention "Asians," because they are "typically" at the top of the class.) Tell me, what standards has ASU lowered for these 3453 students (not quite 8 percent of the total)?

It seems that the effort the University is making has nothing to do with admission requirements. What bias does your article show, Ms. Vavreck, just sloppy journalism?

Martin Luther King no saint, still great man

Joseph Sobran
Universal Press Syndicate

BATON ROUGE — The plaster saints of the '60s have taken quite a shellacking lately. The two Kennedy boys, Jack and Bobby, have already been tarnished by posthumous revelation. Now Martin Luther King's top aide and closest friend, Ralph Abernathy, discloses that King spent his last hours on earth trysting with two women and belting a third across a bed.

It's a sordid story, and Abernathy is meeting the usual fate of messengers who bring unwelcome news. He's being denounced for conflicting reasons: He's lying, or telling tales out of school, or only saying it for the money, or saying it because he's jealous of his master.

King's other apostles have demanded that Abernathy "repudiate" the passage in his book, "And The Walls Came Tumbling Down," in which he lets the tomcat out of the bag. Nobody has explained what "repudiation" of a fact could mean: Apparently Jesse Jackson, Benjamin Hooks and Andrew Young think you can suppress retroactively. Maybe they'd like the rest of us to pretend we never heard the story.

If anything, Abernathy is vulnerable to the opposite charge: Why did he wait so long to tell us? Where was he when we needed him, during the rush-job canonization that made King's birthday a national holiday and King himself an Official Federal Role Model?

In the Catholic Church, every candidate for sainthood has to get past a "devil's advocate," whose job is to make the strongest possible case against canonization. Only those whose lives can meet this stern test qualify for the status of saint.

In the case of Martin Luther King, anyone who referred to some well-known facts about King's habits and associates was treated as evil-minded. Now Abernathy tells us that such people didn't know the half of it. And other King associates are complaining that Abernathy has violated what was supposed to be a never-ending-cover-up.

We can't require sainthood of any man. King's biographers tell us that he knew his insatiable lechery (and two women in one night test the legal limit) was a sin. He hinted to his admirers that he was unworthy of their adulation; it embarrassed him to be taken for a holy man when he knew better. He never asked to be made a plaster saint. He asked not to be.

He resembles the Kennedy brothers only in his vice. It's one of the ironies of the '60s that a pair of politicians as cynical as they were should be posthumously turned into symbols of idealism. King really did have an ideal, and he was brave enough to risk death for it — not once, but constantly. He has a solid claim on our respect as a real human being.

But we can't blame King for not being a saint. We can blame his associates for treating him as one when they knew better — and for attacking Abernathy as a traitor for being more candid than they are. They accused him of doing it for the money, but he is at least telling the truth, and the truth seems to devalue their own investment in the King mythology. They stand to lose if King's stature is diminished.

Abernathy has, in fact, told us only a little of what he must know about King's compulsive adultery. He offers some excuses for it, too. But even the anecdote he tells is too much for those who want to preserve King as a dashboard figurine.

On the other hand, his revelation hardly negates King's accomplishments as a public figure. These have to be judged separately. Martin Luther King was a more complicated man than most of his followers knew, and the issues of his time were more complicated than he knew. We can only evaluate him and his time accurately if we refuse to screen out details that don't suit our wishes.

Fashionable new trend in rock music . . . racism

Cody Shearer
North American Syndicate

WASHINGTON — Shortly before he was assassinated, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. gave a speech honoring W. E. B. DuBois, in which he said, "One idea he insistently taught was that black people have been kept in deprivation by a poisonous fog of lies that depicted them as inferior, born deficient, and deservedly doomed to servitude into the grave."

Twenty years of affirmative action programs later, the notion that blacks have been given their chance and failed because they're inferior is appearing in rock 'n' roll lyrics. It turns out racism and hatred are alive and well in the rock music industry because bigotry is a big seller these days.

A new wave of young musicians, both black and white, are establishing impressive reputations as the coolest groups of their generation, by selling millions of records while espousing utterly racist, sexist and anti-Semitic lyrics. Many psychologists fear that messages of hate that masquerade as popular, artistic entertainment could poison uneducated young minds. Unfortunately, no one is doing anything to counter this trend.

Among the bands causing concern are:

- Guns n' Roses, a white heavy metal group who's album "Appetite for Destruction," is one of the most popular selling LPs of all time. Its song, "One in a Million," includes the following verse: "Immigrants and faggots, They make no sense to me; They come to our country, And think they'll do as they please, Like start some mini-Iran or spread some (expletive) disease."

The group's lead singer, Axl Rose, concludes the song by shouting "Police and niggers, Get outta my way, Don't need to buy none, Of your gold chains today."

- Public Enemy, a militant black group, whose best-selling album, "It Takes a Nation of Millions to Hold Us Back," has a lead singer who calls himself "Professor Griff." This so-called minister of information has stated that "the Jews are wicked and we can prove this."

- Slayer, another heavy metal band, has an album out called "Reign of Blood," which refers to Dr. Joseph Mengele as a "sadist of the noblest blood" and describes the millions who died in the holocaust as "human mice."

Of course, the record companies who endorse such trash are pleased because these groups are controversial, which helps to move their product. When pressed as to how they can tolerate promoting racist and morally contemptuous groups, the record companies are defensive but not overly apologetic. Bryn Bridenthal, director of media relations for Geffen Records, admitted to The New York Times that Guns n' Roses "has a lot of power." But, he added "If you are going to start censoring your artist it's going to damage your relationship."

Axl Rose, in defense of Guns n' Roses, complained to Rolling Stone magazine recently about critics who are upset by his use of the term "nigger." "Why can black people go up to each other and say 'nigger' but when a white guy does it all of a sudden its a big put down? I use the word 'nigger' to describe somebody that is basically a pain in your life . . . 'nigger' doesn't necessarily mean black."

Sean Penn, the actor, also involved himself in the controversy as a result of a letter to The New York Times. Penn advocated that no one should censor great art. He characterized the song "One in a Million," which mentions "niggers," "immigrants," and "faggots," as a "brave song."

One wonders if groups like Guns n' Roses are so unfamiliar with American history that they did not understand the correlation and symbolism between the word "nigger," and their other venomous lyrics, with ugly events from our nation's past?

And yet, where is the moral outrage from civil rights, gay, feminist or adult groups regarding rock bands like Guns n' Roses? Don't people realize that such songs as "One in a Million" only encourage racist and bigoted behavior? Everyone knows they are organizations that lobby against music which promotes sexual promiscuity and violence, but what about songs that highlight racism, sexism and gaybashing?

Everyone should realize that these rock groups are connecting with a hidden resentment among young white men who are upset by the social favors that blacks and women obtain through affirmative action programs and other selective processes. No doubt these men wrongly fear that recent social legislation has jeopardized their chances at economic success.

Nevertheless, the new trend in rock racism is dangerous behavior because it has the potential of persuading impressionable young people into thinking that racism is acceptable. The question is how far one lets young rockers go in using people of different races as scapegoats. So far, the universal silence in tackling the subject symbolizes our unwillingness to accept the social influence of rock music and our reluctance to take controversial steps to curb it.

More Letters

March was untimely

Editor:

We submit this open letter to you as 1) representatives of the African American organizations and other organizations and students who believe and understand our cause, and as 2) students against racism who actively participated in the April 1989 demonstrations against racism on this campus, and are therefore still deeply rooted in the peaceful fight for racial, social and educational equality at the University, not disassociating ourselves from a central vision — a vision which was created by ourselves the students last spring due to the "social unrest" on campus.

First, we must clarify that we had no part in the October 19 "March of Unity."

We realize that unity is the ultimate goal that many of us share; it is a product of the vision that we, as students against racism held last spring and today. This unity can not be obtained until there is racial, social and educational equality at the University. Therefore, we believe that the true task of obtaining unity goes beyond the realm of a "march of unity" but requires willingness and active participation in the matters at hand, spoken and unspoken, which call for enhancement in our educational and social setting from all divisions of this institution.

We make this statement, realizing the present state of our University and knowing that there still lingers the unfinished work on the 13 point plan; knowing that true unity must come from within individuals through acceptance, understanding and education and not from without; and realizing that policy and tradition are worthless to every student and administrator if they do not become living documents in deed as well as word.

We believe that this "march of unity" is untimely.

As a result of it's untimely call, we feel that the ASU student community will lose and not gain or appreciate the challenge of alleviating social conflicts on campus; and that they will fail to grasp the actual meaning of uniting with people of different gender, religious, social and educational values and beliefs.

Fund-raising effort to help survivors of Bay area earthquake

Sundt Kjenstad/State Press

Carlos Pastor, a business major, donates money to help aid the victims of the San Francisco earthquake at the American Marketing Association's booth on Cady Mall. The AMA will be accepting donations at the booth from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. every day until Friday.

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

Members of the ASU American Marketing Association said they would like to raise $4,000 by Friday to donate to the American Red Cross' efforts to help survivors of the Bay area earthquake.

But they said they only expect to raise about $1,000 — an amount they nonetheless consider to be a worthy amount to contribute to the relief effort.

The AMA will be collecting donations at a booth on Cady Mall — manned by volunteers from the club — from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. until Friday. They are accepting cash and checks made out to the organization.

"It's something close to us and in the news and something we thought would help out and do some good," said Drew Bergstrom, marketing major and vice president of fundraising.

Paul Kaponera, Red Cross manager of public support, said that all money will be sent to the National Red Cross to help in providing food, shelter and clothing.

"We send the money as soon as we get it. The money which is donated will be turned over as quickly as possible to families," Kaponera said, adding that the funds will have an immediate impact on aiding the victims.

"There is no money to be spent, only raised. We still need more money."

David Gourley, associate professor of marketing and AMA's adviser, said that as one of the initiators of the club's efforts, he is pleased that the group is following through with its discussion on helping the earthquake survivors.

"I'm very much in favor of the idea. I'm proud to be involved with something like this," Gourley said.

Tony Mickiewicz, a marketing major and the main instigator of the effort to raise money for the Red Cross, said that unlike a lot of clubs that are having fundraisers, AMA is not keeping any of the money.

"A lot of people are doing fundraisers for profit, but we wanted to do something good. No one else (on campus) as far as we know are doing anything and it's just one way to help," Mickiewicz said.

In the meantime, 14 otherwise competitive Valley radio stations on Monday generated at least $46,600 in donations and pledges for victims of the earthquake, project organizers said.

John Machay, morning show producer for Phoenix radio station KZZP-FM, said he had thought it was a great idea when disc jockey Bruce Kelly approached him Thursday with the idea of organizing a joint broadcast to benefit quake victims.

"It's neat. You think some of these people are going to be non-cooperative, but it turns out that everyone was," Machay said.

Machay estimated that about 1,000 people showed up to wander through the broadcast area that had been set up in the Colonnade Mall during the night.

Radio stations planned to go on-air from 6 to 10 a.m., but public response kept the broadcasts going through lunchtime, a mall official said.

Paul Caponera, spokesman for the Central Arizona Chapter of the Red Cross, said: "It was a very, very strong effort by all of the radio stations. They came through with a very warm understanding of the needs of the victims."

Caponera said the Red Cross is trying to raise $18 million nationally for earthquake relief.

Scott Bond, a senior business major and chairman of Disaster Relief at the Central Arizona chapter, is responsible for coordinating most of ASU's work through the Red Cross.

Education week to increase awareness at state schools

By JOIE ANN LaPOLLA
State Press

The Arizona Students Association kicked off its first education week at the three state universities Monday, trying to increase awareness and understanding among students about state and national higher education issues.

The series of programs for the week includes forums, voter registration drives and a booth on Cady Mall for the dispersment of information on education. The events are supporting the United States Students' Association National Education Week, developed to motivate students to act on educational issues.

"The purpose is to (educate) students about how decisions are being made above them and that they can have a direct impact," said Marcia Jones, ASA's assistant executive director.

ASA is a statewide student government organization that represents the interest of students from UofA, ASU and NAU. Nearly 100,000 students are represented by the organization.

"We are hoping that students get a better understanding of the processes that deal with education," said Wayne Lokensky, ASA Task Force Director.

The week's theme is "Education in the '90s: The Student First," and ASA hopes to inform students about their impact on educational issues, Jones said.

"Students need to become involved and are going to make a difference," Jones said. "We show them how they can make a difference."

Associated Students of ASU President Paul Larson said he hopes education week is successful in getting students to become involved in issues.

"It's going to hopefully help students to become more aware of issues we are facing on the national and local (levels)," Larson said. "I think on a campus the size of ASU we have an extremely high percentage of commuter students. (That means) we are going to have people that are not going to be as involved in what's going on."

"I'm hoping this will help turn some of that around."

Last year, ASA, along with other university-related organizations, lobbied heavily to the Legislature to keep tuition hikes low at the three state institutions.

ASA is holding voter registration drives on all three campuses to increase the number of registered student voters, Jones said, adding that student votes are one way that students can create an impact on administration, the Arizona Board of Regents and the Legislature.

"Students ask, 'Can I really make a difference?'" Jones said. "Yes, you can. You are a student and you need to get the message across."

ASA will present a forum on higher education issues with state Sen. Doug Todd, Regent Andy Hurwitz, Dean of Student Life Leon Shell, ASA Executive Director Brad Golich and ASU Vice President of the Student Bar Association David Jordan from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. today on the West Hall Lawn.

"The purpose is to inform students of issues that deal with their education," Lokensky said.

The League of Women Voters will be registering students to vote at ASU from 1:30 to 3 p.m. Monday through Wednesday at an information booth on campus.

Jones said education week will be expanded in the next few years with more programs and forums.

Ream reminisces about past 16 years on City Council

By SCOTT C. SECKEL
State Press

The visitor looking through the glass doors of Tempe City Hall's inverted pyramid was lost, searching for the City Council work/study session. A tall man in rumpled khaki pants motioned toward the garden-level walkway.

"It's quicker to go this way," he said.

In the elevator he introduced himself as Bill Ream.

"I'm on the council," he said. "I don't look like it, but I am."

With a faded tan and an open-necked shirt, Ream looks more like a concerned citizen showing up to listen in on the session than a councilman.

Ream, a Tempe resident for most of his life, is perhaps most remembered by ASU students for proposing to remove the "A" from Tempe Butte in September 1987.

For long-term residents, he is a veteran council member of more than 16 years, a seer who has witnessed the fruition of countless projects.

Ream came out of retirement to pinch-hit until late June for Rowland Oonk, who vacated his seat in mid-September. Oonk resigned over personal reasons involving a divorce from his wife, Sonya.

Ream talks about his affection for art, the city and state, travel, reminiscences on being a student at ASU and what it was like to be in the Tempe of the late 1940s. He's outspoken, not a man about to mince words or make apologies for his strong feelings.

Ream is from the small northern Ohio college town of Ada, also the home of Ohio Northern University. His parents were of German background, but when asked about his heritage, Ream said he would not know the difference.

"I think I'm just about as American as anybody; and I don't know what the hell an American is, but I think that's my heritage," he said.

He came to Arizona in January 1947 primarily because he wanted to learn to fly. He said a friend of his, who worked at Sky Harbor International Airport, told him that Arizona was the greatest place in the world to fly.

"So I thought I'd go to the University of Arizona and get my flying in," he said. "I ended up in Tempe. I didn't know that UofA was in Tucson."

Ream said he was about 26 years old at the time. He had just gotten out of the Army after serving in Europe during World War II.

Tempe had a population of about 5,000 at that time. The residential area was centered around the neighborhood of Ash, Farmer and Maple avenues. Scottsdale/Rural Road was the fledgling city's easternmost point and Apache Boulevard's south side saw the end of the pavement. The vistas of cotton and wheat fields there long since have given way to houses and apartment complexes.

Ream describes the 1940s Mill Avenue as a viable downtown area where people went to do their shopping. He said there were no shopping centers, but it was still a "pretty nice city."

ASU was a comparatively tiny college then.

"My sophomore year, Dr. Gammage had a press conference and announced there were 3,000 students at ASU," he said.

But Ream said overcrowding at the University was a problem then, too.

"The goddamn lines for registration (are) forever and ever more," he said. "I don't think they'll ever go away."

Ream graduated in 1951 with bachelor's degrees in education and accounting.

"It's very easy to stay out here," he said. "You know, you get used to this climate, and you go back to Ohio and the first time you go back it takes about two weeks to get caught up and see all your friends. The next time it's a bit shorter they were handcuffed and bullied by officers, although they had not been arrested. The FBI forwarded its case to the Justice Department in late July.

Police said Robert Rucker and James Liddell were taken into "protective custody" and put in the back of a police car after they were attacked by a mob of white fraternity members who had mistaken them for suspects in an earlier assault on a Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity member. Attempts to contact Rucker and Liddell were unsuccessful Monday night.

The pair had accused ASU police of humiliating them because they said they were the only people arrested and were handcuffed in front of about 500 students.

The two students were later released at police headquarters and the melee on Alpha Drive was finally brought under control after officers from the Tempe and Guadalupe police departments and Maricopa County Sheriff's deputies responded to the incident.

The fraternity row incident sparked three days of protest on campus and a sit-in that led University officials to back a 13-point plan to combat racism on campus.

poor facilities and equipment, low morale and lack of support from the University.

"Obviously you can't ignore the past and past problems," Bess said. "We are going to be starting fresh when I get there."

Bess said he plans on "getting to know what concerns exist" when he meets with DPS employees.

He said he brings to ASU a "global understanding" of the different functions of the University and how they relate to the DPS.

He said he plans to "seek out participation" from the University community because DPS needs to be "proactive instead of reactive."

Bess also said he favors the police department gaining national accreditation, an issue that the Arizona Board of Regents Business Council recently approved.

Bess earns $64,000 at Bowling Green and currently oversees a police department of 20 uniformed officers, campus parking, personnel administration and a student identification service, in addition to the campus post office and management information services.

He is also an associate criminal justice professor at the 17,000-student school, located 20 miles south of Toledo in northwest Ohio. He said he would like to teach at ASU because it provides a way to get input from students.

Bess was selected by Lee Overmeyer, associate vice president for business affairs, after a 10-month search that included 126 applicants for the job.

Overmeyer was unavailable for comment but she issued a prepared statement about Bess's hiring.

"Bill brings to ASU 26 years of administrative management and campus law enforcement experience which will be invaluable in fulfilling his responsibilities as ASU's director of public safety and responsibilities to the needs of the University community," the statement said.

Acting DPS Director Doug Bartosh, who said he plans to stay with the department as associate director, said he believes the University "made a good choice."

"I'm sure he has some good ideas," Bartosh said.

Bartosh was a finalist for the permanent DPS director's job, but withdrew his name because of conflicts with the Business Affairs Office, which oversees DPS.

Bess, who is married and has three children, earned a master's degree in education from Bowling Green and a bachelor's degree in education from Kent State University where he also served as a patrol officer on that school's police force.

He is also a graduate of the FBI National Academy.

Bond said the local Red Cross chapter is not raising as much relief money as it had hoped.

"We've exhausted all our resources on Hurricane Hugo. We have upped are goal (at the Phoenix-based Red Cross) from $250,000 to $400,000," Bond said.

According to Red Cross statistics, about 47,000 families were affected by the earthquake and 155 homes were destroyed. Bond added that the Red Cross has been responsible for setting up 20 shelters which have housed over 500 people.

The numbers hit close to home for some members of the ASU marketing group.

One AMA member, Scott Grodin, a business management major, has family members in the Bay area and although no one was hurt in his family, he says it is important for people to do what they can to help the survivors even though it may be very little.

"My mom says it is really depressing. We (his family) are lucky there were no highrises around," Grodin said. "I can really only do a little bit to help."

period and shorter period, and finally you go back and stay a week and you saw your parents and you get out of there again.

"I guess that was what I did. Finally my parents started coming out here, and there was no need to go back at all.

"I got married out here and bought a home and just stayed out in Arizona." He spent his professional life in the insurance business and working for Motorola and the state.

"It's interesting. Arizona has an effect on you, I can tell you. You stay out here a couple of years, you're going to feel it."

When asked what he'll do with his time after the end of June, Ream said, "I'm keeping (vacation plans) in the back of my mind. I've got already going where I'm going to go when I get off of the council for a while."

He plans to simply "travel. Goof off. Probably continue to work with the city on a lot of these committees and I'm on the board of directors of quite a few organizations, so my time is pretty well taken up."

Among the protean positions he fills are board seats on the Homeless Committee, the Tri-City Service Center in Mesa (Ream represents Tempe), the East Valley Behavioral Health Association and the Maricopa County Animal and Rabies Control Board.

"I'm not going to be without doing something, but I'm mainly going to goof off and travel. I enjoy that."

That's travel with a big T. Ream has "some plans to go back to Italy. I was just there, well, I just got back the day Rowland (Oonk) resigned. I might go back over there, and I want to go up into Denmark and Sweden, those areas. Probably Australia and New Zealand, too, as soon as I get around to it. There are a lot of places to go, and I'm not too unhappy about the thought of going over to South America, Brazil, some of those places."

This man's style does not run to a sedentary retirement in Apache Junction, Scottsdale or other buckles in the Prune Belt.

When asked how he got involved in the governing of Tempe, Ream kicks back in his chair.

"I was a Council watcher for 20 years before I ran for city office. I've probably attended more Council meetings and board of adjustments meetings and zoning meetings than those people that ever served on them." Using the word "interest" to define Ream's involvement doesn't quite cut it . . .

When talking about the city, "unique" is his favorite word. It pops up unexpectedly and constantly.

"I think Tempe is a unique community," he said. "It's got a younger average age, number one, which makes it rather unique. I think its interests are more constructive than in other communities. You know, we voted for the Rio Salado (project); we voted for ValTrans. We'll probably vote for a baseball stadium the minute we get the opportunity to do so."

Ream himself argued against the Martin Luther King Jr. Day in Tempe. He held that the city could not afford to give the holiday. The holiday was approved, and that reflects on the people of Tempe as Ream sees them in spite of his opposition to the decision. Characterizing them, Ream sees Tempe residents as being progressive, dynamic and upscale.

"I think the people in this community are just a little bit, as an average, more visionary, maybe more conscious of the quality of life and the measures that keep it coming in. They're probably on the whole a better educated group, more homogenous as far as income is concerned, mostly white-collar, educated, into the high-tech industry. The quality of life is important to them. They want better things for their children. They want good schools. They want good parks and recreation programs.

"I think that you will see over a period of time (and it won't be too long of a time) there's going to be more interest in the arts — the city has really got its infrastructure in. The cost of infrastructure as you're growing just takes every dime you've got; we've reached our limits. You might say we're still growing, that we've still got growing to do, but the infrastructure is taken care of."

Ream feels that now that the city is solidly working, the Council's plans for growth should flow in the direction of aesthetics and recreational facilities. This is a pet subject of Ream's. He said, "You're going to see in the next few years money used to improve the cultural things in, the community," such as a civic auditorium and more public art.

"We just haven't approached anywhere near the level that a city this type should have as far as sculptures and most of the visual arts," he said. "We've got some committees and some fledgling art groups here, but I think our interest in the arts will probably increase substantially."

Ream's love of art and his city never leave him, even when abroad.

"I never tire of looking at statues of somebody," he said. "I think it gives us a sense of history — a feeling that the past is important, that these people have accomplished something.

"It's not so much of the history, but it's a feeling of richness, the richness of the society they live in."

As a member of the Council on what he said is the 122nd-largest city in the nation, Ream gives a hard sell on the local atmosphere that lines his conversation like the bricks on Mill Avenue.

"There's a unique feeling (that Tempe is a small college town)," he said. "We have the small-town things. Small-town people expect to call up the mayor or the council member and get 'em right on the phone, and they do it and they expect it."

For the past 16 years and the coming eight months, Bill Ream is the man on the other end of the line.

Health center sponsors week of lectures on diet, exercise

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

ASU Student Health Center officials Monday kicked off a week of lectures on proper diet, exercise and nutrition in hopes of informing students about the dangers of eating disorders.

Karen Moses, health center nutritionist, said she hopes the week's events will help students who have eating disorders.

Monday's lecture by Dr. Barbara Palombi, a psychologist at counseling and consultation, titled "Breaking Free from Compulsive Eating," addressed overeating — a disorder that is more common than most think, according to Mary Lou Frank, eating disorder coordinator at the health center.

All lectures will be held at noon in the Grady Gammage Auditorium, Room 108.

Today's lecture is "Dying to Be Thin: Anorexia."

On Wednesday, Frank will discuss bulimia, which involves people who consume large quantities of food and then vomit or take large doses of laxatives afterwards.

Moses, who will host a lecture Thursday called "Feeding the Healthy Body," said students should eat for health reasons as opposed to not eating.

Friday's lecture, "Fitness for Life," will stress the importance of physical fitness and the dangers of overexercising in students' lives.

shopping spree starting Oct. 6 and ending Oct. 9., police said.

The purse was stolen from Kaida's office in the Art Building. Police said the thief resembles Kaida because she has used Kaida's driver's license as identification.

The thief is described as a woman in her mid 30s to early 40s, with brown hair streaked with blond, 5-foot-3 to 5-foot-6 with a medium build.

•A man not affiliated with ASU was warned of trespassing after police found him

Minnesota professor to give impersonations of historical figures

By MICHELLE HENRY
State Press

ASU will play host to two great historical figures today and tomorrow — former President Theodore Roosevelt and humorist and satirist H. L. Mencken.

Charles "Chuck" Chalberg, a history professor from Normandale Community College in Minnesota, will give his impersonations of the historical figures in Murdock Hall, Room 201.

Chalberg will appear as Roosevelt today at 12:30 p.m. and as Mencken at 12:40 p.m. Wednesday.

Both presentations are free and open to the public. James Odenkirk, ASU professor of health and physical education, said he encouraged Chalberg to perform on campus because he thought it would be inspiring to students.

"He is an interesting man," he said. "I have known him for several years now. I contacted him and asked him to speak at ASU."

The lectures are being sponsored by the ASU College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and the departments of communications, English, history, political science, and health and physical education.

Odenkirk said Chalberg will cover the different periods of Roosevelt's career highlights and his philosophical views on life.

"He'll probably talk about his involvement with the Roosevelt Dam, his love for the West and his drive for national preservation of land," Odenkirk said.

Roosevelt, known for his famous quote, "Speak softly and carry a big stick," will justify his presidency and answer questions from the audience that cover the span of his lifetime.

Mencken (whom Odenkirk described as a "connoisseur of the English language") will speak about politics, religion, women and marriage, music, literature and the newspaper business. All of Mencken's dialogue will have a humorous emphasis to it.

Chalberg, who holds a doctorate in history from the University of Minnesota, has given his historical impersonations across the United States. He also mimics "1984" author George Orwell and Populist politician Ignatius Donnelly.

Odenkirk said the presentation is accurate and will be educational and entertaining to students, adding that it will inspire them to be more interested in history and its key figures.

"Students need to be more knowledgeable about history," he said. "The thrust of my direction to have him speak is to stimulate students."

85 percent of motorists polled satisfied with oxygenated fuels

By KELLY JAIN
State Press

Several ASU students agree with a recent poll stating that about 85 percent of Maricopa County motorists are satisfied with oxygenated fuels in terms of engine power, performance and cost.

Drivers in Maricopa County have been using oxygenated fuels, gasohol and methyl-tertiary-butyl-ether for about a month.

State law mandates that only the cleaner-burning, oxygenated fuels can be sold from October to March, when air pollution levels tend to peak.

The ASU students, who drive to campus regularly, said the oxygenated fuels have not caused car problems yet.

Cathy Olson, an education major, drives her 1983 Chevrolet Camaro Z-28 to ASU from Casa Grande three days a week.

"There haven't been any problems that I've noticed," she said.

Jon Helmer, a junior geography major, said his 1989 Chevrolet S-10 Blazer runs "great" with the new gas. He said he bought the car Sept. 30 and has used only oxygenated fuel.

However, he said he was able to compare oxygenated and non-oxygenated fuels in his 1978 Camaro.

"I didn't notice much difference in the older car either," he said.

Even before most Valley gas stations received their first shipment of MTBE last month, motorists were worried about the effects of the oxygenated fuels on their cars.

The Behavior Research Center, which conducted the poll in October, telephoned 409 automobile owners residing in Maricopa County. Motorists were grouped in terms of their automobile's age and the number of tanks used. The poll's margin of error is 4.9 percent.

The poll also found that 83 percent of vehicle owners said the cleaner-burning fuels were better than or equal to non-oxygenated fuels in terms of trouble-free engine performance.

However, it also found that older car owners expressed dissatisfaction with the oxygenated fuels more often than new-car owners.

Weird Wine

LONDON (AP) — If a beer tastes like a wet dog, beer lovers should know it, according to a new guide to British brews.

But if it has "a clean, crystal malt palate with more than a hint of Seville oranges about it," that, too, should be stated out loud without fear of sounding like a wine snob, says the Good Beer Guide.

The guide, published Monday by the Campaign for Real Ale includes such terms as "wet dog," defined as "Light, dry and hoppy, often with an excellent finish, but can suffer from a lack of any particular aroma or smell a little sulphury like a wet dog."

Other terms include marzipan, rancid, spicy and warty.

Then there is "Tom Cat" — any brew with a "pungently urinous, skunky" flavor.

The campaign, which fights for regional brews against the inroads of the lager industry, said it didn't ask its tasters to go so far as to swill their samplings and spit them out, as wine tasters do.

But its tasters attended training sessions to educate their palates and approached the job like wine experts, sniffing first and sometimes nibbling bread to refresh their taste buds when moving from one brew to another.

Brock

Short fall season draws to close

By TOMI McELROY
State Press

ASU's fall baseball season, which was shortened from eight to six weeks this year, ends Saturday with the Sun Devils playing host to Brigham Young.

ASU Head Baseball Coach Jim Brock said the purpose of the shorter fall season is to schedule more games at the end of the year to keep the players in condition for postseason play.

"We are given (by the NCAA) 26 weeks (for coaching)," Brock said. "Our choice was to use six in the fall and 20 for the spring."

The Sun Devils play one game Friday and a doubleheader Saturday.

Last weekend against the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, the Sun Devils (6-1) suffered their first loss in a five-week span.

ASU scored six consecutive runs in the opening inning of Saturday's second game to beat UNLV, 10-5, and win the series, 2-1.

Sophomore Tommy Adams blasted a home run (his second of the series) over the left-center field fence to start the offensive attack against the Running Rebels.

After junior John Halland singled, junior Anthony Manahan was hit on a throw by Rebel starting pitcher Tory Miran. Both Sun Devils scored on sophomore Mike Kelly's double.

Three consecutive outs, including a

Job to be done is worry; job to be had unrelated

By JOEL HORN
State Press

ASU Head Football Coach Larry Marmie said he is not worried about losing his job.

"I don't have any say about that," he said. "I'm worried about our team — getting them ready to play as well as we can play, getting the job done. That's the only control I have over that."

Marmie and his staff have been under increased pressure since the Sun Devils tied Oregon State Oct. 14 and lost to Oregon Saturday.

"We got beat in every phase of the game," he said of the loss to the Ducks. "Offensively, we weren't able to run the ball, nor were we able to pass it."

ASU (0-2-1 Pac-10, 3-3-1 overall) had 24 yards rushing, compared to 267 for Oregon, and only 125 yards passing. Quarterback Paul Justin completed 12 of 25 passes for 93 yards and no touchdowns. He was intercepted once.

Marmie did not single out players for criticism, despite attempts by some members of the local media to place blame.

"I think any time things go bad, it's easy to point fingers," Marmie said. "I don't like it. Sometimes you say some things in the heat of battle, and sometimes you're prodded to say things in the heat of battle."

"I'm disappointed that we're not playing better. I'm disappointed because I don't think our football team has improved the last three weeks (since the 33-14 loss to UCLA)."

Last week, the Sun Devil practices were enthusiastic, featuring several skirmishes among players.

"That stuff doesn't impress me," Marmie said. "I'm impressed by what I see done when the ball is snapped. I didn't see any significant difference in practice last week."

"I didn't say we had bad practices last week. Sometimes our team practices better than we play."

For the first time this season, Marmie said he was disappointed with the players' effort Saturday.

"I didn't like our effort the whole ballgame," he said. "I'm talking about a 60-minute effort. I guess it's the only time that maybe (the lack of effort has) been something that might have jumped out at me as much as it did this time."

Free safety Nathan LaDuke, who had 11 tackles (10 unassisted), was voted defensive player of the game by Sun Devil coaches. In addition, right outside linebacker Darren Woodson was awarded for the game's big hit.

No awards were presented to the offense or special teams.

"I certainly don't think we're playing as well as we're capable of playing," Marmie said. "I like to think I'm a fairly optimistic guy. I think the capabilities of our team are better than we're playing."

Tailback David Winsley suffered a severely sprained left ankle against Oregon and is doubtful for Saturday's game against Washington State.

Although Bruce Perkins and Tom Harkrader are Winsley's backups at tailback, Marmie said he may give fullback Kelvin Fisher some work at the position. The other possibility, Marmie said, is to use a one-back set against the Cougars.

"My morale's not very good," Marmie said. "The morale of our football team isn't very good. There ain't nothing good about getting beat."

The head coach said he is unsure of what changes need to be made in order to improve the team's performance.

"If I had the answer and the solution right in my hand, certainly I'd try to get it applied to our football team," Marmie said. "Our biggest challenge as coaches is to try to put the pieces back together and try to salvage what could be a decent season for us. You try to reach for the things that are still there."

ASU's Burton makes collegiate debut a memorable one

By PAUL CORO
State Press

Last weekend's Ping Tour Tulsa Invitational was supposed to be ASU freshman Brandie Burton's introduction to college golf.

Instead, college golf was introduced to Burton.

In her tournament debut, Burton shot a five-over 221 to capture medalist honors while the third-ranked Sun Devils finished third overall.

"I didn't expect it," Burton said. "I just seemed to put things together. It wasn't very pretty, but I put the ball in the hole."

The last time a female ASU golfer won her debut was 1986 when Missy Farr, a senior, took the Trojan-Bruin Desert Classic title.

Burton is the Sun Devils' first true freshman to medal in a debut since Danielle Ammaccapane, a current LPGA tour player, won the Brigham Young University Invitational in 1983.

"She is such a great player," Head Coach Linda Vollstedt said of Burton. "She just did what she had to do. It was incredible to see it."

Prior to the tourney, Burton had not played and carried her bag for a month due to an injured left knee, which will require arthroscopic surgery in December.

"(The knee injury) was there and it was tiring at times," Burton said. "I've been cheating here and there when the doctors told me not to play."

Burton, a two-time Rolex national junior player of the year, said that one of her personal goals this season was to win her first collegiate tournament.

Entering the final round, Burton held a one-stroke lead over hosting Tulsa's Kelly Robbins. Burton bettered Robbins' last 18 holes by two strokes to secure the victory.

"I certainly knew she was capable of doing that," Vollstedt said. "It didn't surprise me."

The ASU team was not as fortunate in holding its one-stroke lead after two rounds. The Sun Devils shot their highest round of the invitational and finished one stroke back of top-ranked Tulsa, who won after a tie-breaker with No. 5 Texas.

"After leading for two rounds, we should have won it," Vollstedt said. "I am very disappointed that we didn't win it."

Texas and Tulsa played their rounds before ASU on Sunday, leaving the Sun Devils in control of their own destiny. Vollstedt said the winds picked up later in the day, holding back ASU's charge somewhat.

"We knew if we played well, we had a chance to win it on the back side," Vollstedt said.

Not knowing how close the team tourney actually was, Burton said she was somewhat disappointed that she was three-over on the last three holes.

Vollstedt said the Tulsa Country Club course played tougher than she had expected.

"I was shocked by some of the high scores, but the course did play really tough," Burton said.

The Sun Devils did gain revenge on second-ranked San Jose State, who won the season opener in Oregon by 27 strokes. ASU finished ahead of the Spartans as well as No. 6 UCLA, No. 8 Oklahoma State, No. 10 Duke, No. 11 Southern Methodist and No. 12 Florida.

Sophomore Lynne Mikulas recorded her second Top 10 finish in as many tournaments as she tied for 10th, 13 strokes back of Burton. Farr was one stroke behind Mikulas in a tie for 12th place.

Vollstedt said she was pleased with her other outstanding freshman, Tricia Konz, who tied for 24th place at 241.

Sophomore Julie Shephard, who was a late replacement in the lineup for senior Amy Fruhwirth, carded a 44th place score of 268.

The Sun Devils do not rest long. They will travel to Stanford, Calif., this weekend for the Stanford Invitational. Vollstedt finally will be able to send her top five players — Burton, Mikulas, Farr, Konz and Fruhwirth — as a unit.

"Our team really hasn't been at full strength yet," Burton said. "Going into Stanford, it looks like we'll have a good chance to win."

Bears drop third straight as Browns bounce back

CLEVELAND (AP) — When Bud Carson took the job as coach of the Cleveland Browns last winter, he was told he would inherit Bernie Kosar's quarterback coach, Marc Trestman, as his offensive coordinator.

But Carson's often implied criticism of his offense ended with 6:56 to go in the Browns' 27-7 victory over the Chicago Bears Monday night. That's when Trestman called the pass play that resulted in a 97-yard touchdown. The pass from Kosar to Webster Slaughter was the longest play from scrimmage in Cleveland history.

"Marc Trestman called the play," Carson said. "It was a great call."

The long touchdown was set up by the Cleveland defense, the part of the team run by Carson, a defensive specialist throughout his career.

With Chicago trailing 17-0 in the fourth period, Jim Harbaugh replaced Mike Tomczak at quarterback and drove the Bears 59 yards to the Browns' 1-yard line. On third down, Tom Gibson and Thane Gash combined to drop Neal Anderson for a 1-yard loss. On fourth down, Harbaugh's pass for Dennis McKinnon fell incomplete in the end zone.

To account for the length of the ball, the Cleveland offense was scored as taking over on the 3.

Trestman called "Nine-Route," a simple fly pattern by Webster Slaughter down the left sideline. It was an area of the field Kosar had been throwing into all night against Lorenzo Lynch, a little-used third-year defender who had replaced regular right cornerback Vestee Jackson after last week's 33-28 loss to Houston. Jackson walked off the team in protest and returned only late last week.

By this time in the game, Jackson was back at his old position because Kosar and Slaughter had burned Lynch for seven completions.

It was the perfect setup.

"We were getting a lot of underneath stuff," said Slaughter, who finished with eight catches for 186 yards. "We thought we could get behind them and Bernie called the play, and threw the ball on the money for the touchdown."

"A great percentage of our throws were designed to go to our left side," Kosar said. "We had heard what they were saying this week about having problems over there. They were rotating a couple of guys but we just kept on concentrating on that side."

Slaughter caught the ball over Jackson at the Cleveland 37 and headed for the end zone. Jackson caught up with him at about the Chicago 25 and grabbed at his jersey. Slaughter spun away, then tiptoed down the sideline for the score.

"Well, he grabbed me and he was the one who made me spin," Slaughter said. "It was just the way he turned me. I spun around and kept going."

For Jackson, it was just another one of those things that have suddenly begun to happen to the Bears, who have lost three straight for the first time since 1981 and the first time since Mike Ditka has been coach.

"It's just one of those years we can't buy a break," Jackson said. "Everything is going against us. It's not just one play. It's the whole package."

Mac may give way; rookie could step in SAN DIEGO (AP) — Jim McMahon may be replaced as the San Diego Chargers starting quarterback by rookie Billy Joe Tolliver in next Sunday's game at Seattle, coach Dan Henning said Monday.

McMahon was ineffective in the Chargers' 20-13 loss Sunday to the New York Giants. He completed just 12 of 27 passes for 133 yards, with San Diego's only touchdown coming on an 81-yard fumble return by safety Vencie Glenn.

The former Chicago Bears quarterback was hampered by shoulder, ankle and knee injuries before Sunday that are still concerns, Henning said.

McMahon also was criticized after the game by Giants defensive players who said he appeared to be afraid to take a hit.

McMahon, who has started all seven games during San Diego's 2-5 start, left the locker room Sunday without speaking to reporters. The Chargers players had Monday off.

When asked if McMahon may be replaced this week, Henning said "might be."

If McMahon is benched, it will be based on both injury and his lack of performance.

"I think those things go hand-in-hand," Henning said. "Jim is a competitor. He plays hard. He wants to play as long as he's capable of playing."

Henning said McMahon released the ball quicker than normal several times against the Giants.

"A little bit of what happened in the game, as far as him getting out of there early, may be his body speaking to him," Henning said.

Tolliver, a second-round draft choice out of Texas Tech, was activated for the first time this season Sunday but did not play. He had been placed on injured reserve after suffering a broken collarbone in the final preseason game against Phoenix.

"There is a consideration here to find out about Billy Joe Tolliver before the end of the season in regular season play," Henning said. "The question is when do you do that? If I feel we can continue to be efficient and maintain our opportunities to win with Billy Joe in there, I'd probably go in that direction. If I don't feel that way, I'd probably stay with Jim McMahon."

Henning said his concerns offensively go deeper than quarterback. The Chargers, who have been unable to sign holdout running back Gary Anderson, last year's team MVP, rushed 19 times for just 51 yards against New York.

San Diego has scored only 32 points in its last three games. The Chargers recorded 179 yards total offense against the Giants, their lowest output since Nov. 22, 1987.

sacrifice fly by sophomore Dave Robson to score Helfand, sent Sun Devil junior starting pitcher Rusty Silcox to the mound.

Silcox held the Rebels scoreless until a seventh-inning rally in which UNLV scored five runs.

"I thought he was pretty good," pitching Coach Dub Kilgo said. "Although I don't think he was throwing as strong as he has before."

ASU scored a run in the second inning, two in the fourth and one in the sixth for the final 10-5 margin.

Silcox gave up 10 hits, struck out four and walked none in his complete game, seven-inning appearance.

In the first game of Saturday's doubleheader, the Sun Devils committed four errors and lost, 5-4, to the Rebels — ASU's first loss of the fall season.

After four scoreless innings, the Rebels crossed the plate twice in the top of the fifth, while the Sun Devils could only tally four hits and four errors.

In the bottom of the fifth, Manahan brought sophomore Rex McMackin home on a sacrifice fly to right field, putting the Sun Devils on the scoreboard.

UNLV extended its lead, 3-1, on a home run by Steve Cerio in the top of the sixth.

In the top of the seventh, the Rebels scored their final runs off Sun Devil starting pitcher Todd Douma with Rebel Danny Costa's two-run homer.

Adams belted a solo home run in the bottom of the seventh, but the Sun Devils trailed, 5-2.

The Sun Devils began to rally in the bottom of the eighth. Mike Kelly led off with a home run, junior Tucker Hammargren doubled and then scored on McMackin's single, narrowing the Rebel lead, 5-4.

During Friday night's game, Halland and junior Bill Faysack hit two-run homers in the second and eighth innings, respectively, and Manahan hit a solo in the seventh inning to help the Sun Devils defeat the Rebels, 7-3.

ASU starting pitcher Gary Tatterson struck out three, walked five and gave up one hit in his six-inning performance.

Sophomore Sean Rees, one of the two veteran Sun Devil pitchers, relieved Tatterson for two innings and Tony Pena closed the door.

Rees struck out two of the seven Rebels he faced in his first appearance of the fall season.

"Coming off a minor injury, he was throwing as well as we think he's capable of," Kilgo said.

Lewis makes giant strides

By LARRY NEWELL
State Press

For Todd Lewis success in long-distance running has come quickly.

"One of my biggest thrills has been to see my improvement since my high school days," said Lewis, a junior history major. "It has been a big jump from being a mediocre high school runner to competing on a national level."

Lewis, an ASU track and cross-country standout, moved from Flint, Mich., to Mesa at the age of 4, with ambitions in sports other than running.

"When I was in grade school I played football and soccer, and running was just something I did for fun," Lewis said. "I was not really serious about running until high school."

Jamie Scott Lytle/State Press

Todd Lewis, who was the winner of last year's ASU Invitational, has high expectations for this season.

The 1987 Mountain View High School graduate, fueled by a competitive rivalry with his brother and some sound advice from his father, concentrated solely on long-distance running.

"My brother excelled in motocross racing, and his success motivated me to be successful at something," Lewis said. "My father always told me to do it for fun and if it is not fun, then don't do it."

Lewis said he enjoys running, as demonstrated by his steady improvement throughout high school, which culminated with his winning the individual Arizona high school cross-country championship in 1986 and being the state's 3200-meter runner-up.

After graduating from high school, Lewis' decision to enroll at ASU was an easy one.

"I was almost exclusively recruited within Arizona, and I knew most of the coaches in the state through summer sports camps, and (ASU) Coach Lehman impressed me the most," Lewis said. "ASU gave me the opportunity to come in and run right away."

In 1987, Lewis' inaugural season as a Sun Devil, he ranked as ASU's No. 2 runner, behind senior Jeff Smith. His freshman campaign made ASU's competitors serve notice that he would be an athlete to contend with in the future.

"I saw Todd run in high school, and he was running at a very high level," Lehman said. "I felt that Todd had a lot of potential and that he was ready to jump up to the next level (collegiate)."

In 1988, Lewis was ASU's top cross-country runner and fulfilled the high expectations of him.

After placing sixth at the UC-Riverside Invitational, Lewis garnered top honors at the ASU Invitational, the first male Sun Devil runner to win an invitational since Dan Fisher in 1986.

"My greatest performance at ASU was winning our invitational last year, which was my first collegiate victory," Lewis said. "It showed me just how far I have come."

Lewis' position as ASU's top male long-distance runner has not been challenged in all four outings this season and consistently has placed in the top five overall.

"Todd has set personal goals of reaching the NCAA Championship in track and cross country, and I fully expect him to achieve his goals," Lehman said.

After redshirting during the 1989 track season, Lewis has already made a name for himself, with only one season of collegiate track competition under his belt. As the 10th-ranked steeplechase runner in ASU annals, Lewis will be counted on as ASU's top threat in one of tracks most grueling events.

"I enjoy track a little more than cross country because it is a more recognized sport and the glory makes it a little more exciting," Lewis said.

With all of his collegiate success, it would be easy for Lewis to look toward the future, but Lewis said he is concentrating on the present, with only sketchy visions of what might be in store for him.

"My focus right now is competing as well as I can on the national level," Lewis said, adding that he dreams of an opportunity to compete at the Olympic Trials. "I have to take things as they come because the Olympics are a totally different level of competition and I may never reach that level."

Lewis said he does not know specifics about long-term goals, but he is certain that running will remain an integral part of his life.

"When I do graduate from college, I plan to road race and possibly compete in Europe," Lewis said. "After that I hope to coach, first on the high school level, ultimately working my way up to the college level."

Top seed ousts ASU doubles

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

It was unfortunate that the ASU doubles team of Daniel Marting and Brian Gyetko was picked to compete against the No. 1 seeded team of Johnson Stark and Jared Palmer in the quarterfinals of the Volvo Collegiate Tennis Championship.

Gyetko said Stark and Palmer clearly killed any chances of he and Marting proceeding in the tournament because the Stanford duo was extremely laden with talent.

"They were a better team than us," Gyetko said, adding that the 6-2, 6-3 victory by Stanford was well deserved. "They played well, tried different things and eventually came up with the win."

"They hit the ball crisply and took advantage of our soft balls. They put a lot of pressure on us, so we were limited to what we could do on returns."

The Sun Devil partners originally were not ranked in the top 16 of the tournament but jumped into the position after three other teams dropped out prior to competition.

The 16 doubles positions of the Volvo tournament were chosen by coaches, which Gyetko said allowed room for error.

He said he and Marting belonged in the top 16 to begin with and felt they proved themselves worthy of a higher ranking during the competition.

One instance in which Gyetko said they showed consistent, confident playing was in the first match of the tournament against Larry Pearl and Kenny Thome from Rice University, in which ASU won 6-2, 5-7, 7-6.

"We took control of the first set," Gyetko said. "The second match was an easy match because they didn't stay mentally tough."

Among the areas of his personal game that Gyetko said need improvement are strengthening and serving.

"My serving game is not working, and my attacking game is not working," he said. "I was making too many errors."

The most positive outcome of the tournament, Gyetko said, was the opportunity to preview his skills. He said preseason tournaments are great preparation for the spring season.

"Our schedule this season is the best we have ever had," he said. "There are a lot of teams ranked above us that we think we can beat or move closer to."
