FBI reopens civil rights probe of police

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

An FBI investigation into the ASU Police Department's handling of a racial brawl last April was reopened Wednesday, about one week after the U. S. Justice Department cleared the campus police of committing any civil rights violations.

"It was reopened based on some individuals who wanted to give statements," said Special Agent Dave Small, of the FBI's Phoenix field office. He would not identify the individuals with whom agents plan to speak.

The reopening of the probe comes after the FBI's investigation was sharply criticized last week by Robert Rucker and James Liddell, two black ASU students who claim University police handcuffed and bullied them during an April 15 incident on Alpha Drive.

Rucker and Liddell said they wanted the federal investigation reopened because they were never interviewed by the FBI. In addition, the FBI did not interview the ASU police officers who handled the incident but did request copies of their police reports.

"I think it is fair," Rucker said of the FBI's decision to reopen the probe. "In order for an investigation to be complete and fair, you have to talk to the victims."

Rucker, a junior criminal justice major, said he contacted Small on Wednesday morning, and at that time, Small told him the case would be reopened.

"I'm very happy he decided to do that," Rucker said. "Now it (the investigation) will be complete."

Small, who heads all civil rights investigations in Arizona, said agents will send the new information they gather to FBI headquarters in Washington. The information then will be forwarded to the Justice Department's civil rights division.

Meanwhile, Small defended the FBI's investigation.

"Obviously the investigation sent in was complete or a decision wouldn't have been reached," he said.

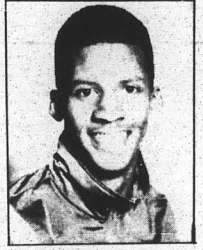

Small said that during civil rights investigations, the FBI acts as a "fact-finding agency," and that if anything was missing or incomplete in their investigation then the Justice Department would have sent the case back and told them what was missing.

"That was not the case," said Small, who added that in every case agents make attempts to interview all victims.

was in California on Wednesday and unavailable to comment on the reopening of the case, but ASU General Counsel Bruce Meyerson said he hopes the renewed investigation has the same outcome.

Phoenix man accidentally shot at party

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

Halloween turned into a nightmare for a group of students when a 20-year-old man accidentally was shot in the head by a close friend at a Tempe apartment complex early Wednesday morning, police said.

Killy Rankin, of the 2500 block of West Corrine Street, Phoenix, was taken to Scottsdale Memorial Hospital-Osborn, where he was listed in extremely critical condition, said Peggy Ackerman, a hospital spokeswoman.

Rankin was transported to Barrow Neurological Institute of St. Joseph's Hospital and Medical Center in Phoenix late Wednesday afternoon, a Scottsdale Memorial nursing supervisor said.

The shooting occurred at The Commons on Apache, 1111 E. Apache Blvd.

Rankin and two other friends were dressed as cowboys from the 1988 motion picture "Young Guns," said Sgt. Al Taylor, of Tempe police, adding that all three men had guns they thought were unloaded.

The men and about 10 others, including ASU students, spent Halloween going to various parties in Tempe and Phoenix at which they had been drinking alcohol, Taylor said.

At about midnight, the group returned to the Tempe apartment, where some of them began cooking breakfast, he said. Shortly after, a few people in the bedroom came into the kitchen and said the eggs were burning.

Acting angered at the remark, Rankin's friend, whose name has not been released, picked up a .38 caliber Smith and Wesson gun from a kitchen counter, pointed it at several friends and pulled the trigger three times, Taylor said.

When his friend pulled the trigger the fourth time, a blank made of cardboard wadding entered Rankin's forehead, knocking him unconscious, he said. Police were called and the friend who pulled the trigger started CPR on Rankin.

Taylor said the incident was an accident and no arrests are expected.

The blank in the gun was left over from a party that the men attended Saturday night.

When the men were getting ready at a friend's house for the party Saturday, a parent commented on how real the guns looked. Rankin acknowledge the guns were real.

Rankin knew students at the apartment complex through friends he works with at Alpine Ski Keller, 2005 E. Camelback Road. He is a student at Paradise Valley Community College.

County declines to charge MCC athletes

The Maricopa County Attorney's Office will not pursue felony assault charges against two Mesa Community College football players who were involved in a fraternity-house brawl Oct. 8 that seriously injured an ASU student.

The charges were sent back to the Tempe Police Department, said Bill Fitzgerald, a spokesman for the office. But he would not specify why the office chose not to file a complaint.

The police department is expected to file misdemeanor trespassing and assault charges against the two players with the Tempe City Attorney's office, Sgt. Al Taylor said.

A misdemeanor carries a maximum one-year jail sentence and a maximum $2,500 fine.

MCC suspended Brent Hatfield, Mark Rotter and Ray Coultrap after they admitted involvement in the brawl at the Delta Chi fraternity house, 1402 S. Jen Tilly Lane. Twelve other athletes admitted to witnessing the incident, but no arrests have been made in the case.

Police would not release the names of the two athletes in the report, saying only that they were two of the three players who were suspended.

The incident occurred when a group of MCC football players allegedly ransacked the fraternity house after a rock thrown during the fight left ASU student Matthew Springer, 19, with a fractured skull.

Police estimate that there were almost 100 people in the fraternity parking lot during the fight.

Springer underwent four hours of surgery at Desert Samaritan Hospital and was released Oct. 13. He will not return to classes this semester.

White House denounces Ortega, holds back talk on Contra aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House on Wednesday denounced Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega's decision to end a truce with the U. S.-backed Contras but brushed off talk about renewing military aid for the rebels, saying "we don't want to give him any excuse" to cancel next year's elections.

President Bush, lashing out at Ortega, said "the man is so out of step with the other democratic countries in this hemisphere and so wildly insensitive to the feelings of others that we shouldn't have been surprised" by his action.

"On the other hand, I don't think he has unleashed a full-scale offensive at this moment," Bush said in a radio interview with ABC News. "He's hedging his bets now."

The administration said Bush was consulting with leaders in Central America to bring diplomatic pressure on Ortega to reverse course.

"It is obvious that he's afraid of the ballot box," White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said, referring to presidential elections set for Feb. 25 in Nicaragua.

Ortega, at a news conference in Managua, suspended the 19-month-old cease-fire with the Contras, citing continued rebels attacks, and hinted he might cancel the elections. He accused Bush of "supporting terrorism in Nicaragua."

Meanwhile, administration and congressional sources said that between 1,000 to 1,500 anti-Sandinista rebels have returned to Nicaragua from base camps in Honduras over the past month, bringing the guerrillas' troop strength to about 4,000.

Under a Central American peace plan, the rebels are supposed to be disarmed and demobilized by Dec. 5.

Iran stirs anti-U. S. passions, passes law to seize Americans

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran on Wednesday approved a law giving it the power to arrest Americans anywhere and put them on trial, and one newspaper suggested that the first target be the former commander of the USS Vincennes.

The action came amid growing anti-U. S. passion being whipped up to mark the 10th anniversary of the storming of the U. S. Embassy in Tehran. Protesters plan to burn 160 American flags outside the compound — now a school — on Saturday.

The official Islamic Republic News Agency said the Majlis, or parliament, unanimously approved a final version of the bill that earlier had been passed by the 12-member Council of Guardians, a constitutional watchdog body. The council acted after the 270-seat Majlis approved a first draft of the measure on Tuesday.

The law will remain on the books "as long as the U. S. president is authorized to commit inhuman practices against the lives and interests of Iranian citizens," the agency reported in a dispatch monitored in Cyprus.

The Iranian move was in response to the Justice Department's authorization of the FBI to arrest suspected terrorists abroad and bring them to trial in the United States without the permission of the countries where they were located.

Leaders differ on how to spend extra rec center funds

By MARK CRISMON
State Press

ASU student leaders are hashing out differences with administrators on how to spend an extra $377,000 raised through the $25 Student Recreation Complex fee.

Gerry Maas, director of the SRC, said that if the $377,000 is not used for operational expenses, the complex will be forced to "cut hours and cut people," possibly by closing during weekends and limiting athletic programs.

"We are one of the biggest student employers on campus and the cut will mean taking money out of students' pockets," he said.

But Associated Students of ASU President

Paul Larson said that when the students originally passed the referendum approving the fee in 1985, "our understanding was that the $25 would only be used for paying off the bond issue (for the facility), additional construction or possibly new equipment."

Lowell Crary, assistant to the vice president in the Student Affairs Office, said: "I'm not sure this was the understanding. There are no restrictions other than some might feel there's a good-faith restriction. There are no legal restrictions."

"I'm sitting here today trying to figure out how to make this building work, and nobody seems certain of how to do it without using those funds."

The 30-year bond issue must be paid off at the rate of $1.5 million a year, which comes from the $25 per semester fee added to each student's tuition.

Projections for the 1990-91 academic year estimate that the total amount raised through the $25 fee will exceed the $1.5 million by $377,000.

Members of the SRC Board, which include Larson, Crary and Maas, thumbed through stacks of old correspondence between past ASU president J. Russell Nelson and ex-ASASU president John Fees on Wednesday in an attempt to determine the original intent for the extra funds.

Crary said he thinks both students and administrators have the same objectives concerning the complex.

Larson said that although he wants to see the funds earmarked for equipment and future expansion of the complex, he wants to avoid cutting student wages or complex hours.

"I'm simply trying to uphold the spirit of the original agreement four years ago," he said.

Crary echoed Larson's sentiment that the situation is a Catch-22.

On-campus child-care center needed, official says

By NICKI CARROLL
State Press

The Office of Student Affairs currently is conducting a survey of 90 classes to gauge students' child-care needs, but student organizations that have pioneered their own child-care programs say more pragmatic action should be taken.

"People come to our office looking for the ASU child-care center," said David Dotts, director of the student-run Office for Off-Campus Student Services. "I think there needs to be one. I don't understand why there isn't an ASU child-care center."

The OOCSS, which was created by Associated Students of ASU to address specific needs of commuter and tenant students, currently publishes a free baby-sitter referral list.

Dotts said his office asked students in residence halls, fraternities and sororities for days and times they were available to babysit. The information was compiled into a list and is given out to some of the 350 people who visit the office each week.

"I see a need out there," Dotts said. "It's frustrating to say all we can do is provide a list of babysitters, but we can't keep kids in our office."

"It seems more should be coming from ASU."

The Office of Student Affairs recently hired a new child-care coordinator, Maureen Duane, who assumed her office on Monday.

Duane, a former child-care center director from Minnesota, said the creation of her position was a positive administrative move.

"I think it's a good step the University's made," Duane said.

Duane will be responsible for compiling the results of the student opinion survey and preparing a report of child-care objectives for student affairs.

She said she hopes to publish a brochure which will inform parents how to look for child care, create a database of child-care options and compile a five-year University child-care plan by June 30.

"I want ASU to become an example to other urban universities on how to handle day-care issues," Duane said.

Former President J. Russell Nelson appropriated funds for Duane's position last April in response to a report by the Child Care Steering Committee, a 14-member panel appointed by Nelson in 1987 to study the need for campus child-care facilities.

The committee based its recommendations on a survey of 664 ASU employees and 250 female students done by the Tucson Association for Child Care.

The report also recommended compiling a referral list of child-care facilities available for ASU faculty, staff and students and listed the option of establishing an on-site facility.

Lee Ellen Brigman, student affairs research director, said the $16,000 survey didn't accurately represent the current University child-care situation.

"The committee felt some things weren't quite together yet in the area of assessing student needs," Brigman said.

The UofA distributed 300 of its own day-care referral lists recently, said Amy Berlin, Associated Students of UofA child-care coordinator.

"They're almost all gone after two weeks," Berlin said. "There are a lot more students who need child care out there than we expected."

Berlin said the student-initiated list cost a total of $300.

Currently, the only full-time campus child-care center at ASU is the Child Development Lab in the department of family resources. It can accommodate 60 children from the ages of 3 to 5 years old. In addition to students, staff and faculty, anyone in the community can utilize the service.

All Maricopa Community Colleges have on-site child-care centers, said Susan MacCleary, child-care assistant at the Scottsdale Community College Child Enrichment Center.

"We help anywhere from 70 to 90 families a semester," she said. The service costs $1.50 an hour plus a $15 registration fee.

Cindy Peterson, peer-adviser at the ASU re-entry center, said child care is the main concern of adults returning to college.

"The comment most often made by re-entry students is 'There is no day care on campus?'" Peterson said. "They find that hard to believe."

"I think if they made a facility for students as well as faculty, it would be a well-used center."

Chapel cross

Court should let tradition stand, leave Danforth alone

Lynn Vavreck
Editorial Assistant

Whether or not the cross should remain atop Danforth Chapel is not a matter for the courts to decide. The choice to display a cross on the chapel has already been made — by Arizona State College in 1946, when Grady Gammage signed an agreement with Mr. Danforth.

The agreement was to take Danforth's money to build the chapel in exchange for displaying a cross, a painting of Jesus and an inscription above the door of the chapel.

The painting is no longer in the chapel; it is in another location for the purposes of historic preservation. The inscription still exists by the door at Danforth. And the cross? Well, the cross is going to court.

Here's a little history: In 1945, students of Arizona State College began to toss around the idea of a religious center on campus. On Feb. 1, 1945, they contacted the Danforth Foundation to seek funding for such a facility. Mr. Danforth himself made an verbal offer of $5,000 to the students. They accepted his offer.

The Danforth Foundation contributed approximately 35 percent of the $12,000 needed to build the chapel. The difference came from various private sources. No state money was used.

The fact that Danforth Chapel was built in the late 1940s — when ASU was not even a University — with money tied to the Danforth Foundation, makes keeping the cross on top of Danforth an issue of historical integrity.

Yes, this is a public University. Yes, it is run with state tax dollars. Yes, there is the division between church and state. But removing the cross is breaking the contract with Mr. Danforth, and going back on your word is not something the fifth largest University in the nation should be doing.

Plus, Danforth Chapel is a historic building, built from an agreement between two organizations. It should not be altered in any way. History and tradition at ASU are rare. Items rich in these areas should be protected, not adjusted to fit the changing times.

'The fact that there is a place on this campus where people can go to worship — to worship whomever and whatever they please — is a gift.'

The building itself is a place for interfaith worship. Does the cross impede that? Viewed as a symbol of religious omnipotence, perhaps it does. Viewed as it should be — as a historic feature of a campus landmark — no, it does not.

A chapel for meditation is meant to be a quiet place where people can go to be alone with their beliefs and values. The building is just a structure; it is not a needed part of religious worship. Many people say the real church is the church of the heart. If what's in your heart is in keeping with your beliefs and values, then why worry about what's outside your heart?

The fact that there is a place on this campus where people can go to worship — to worship whomever and whatever they please — is a gift. It is the zenith of religious freedom. That this place was provided by a man who held certain beliefs and wanted them displayed is not evil; it is natural. That this place was constructed before ASU even existed as we know it today, when only 7,000 students attended one college, makes it one of the few remaining historic buildings on campus.

Students fought to save West Hall, and they should fight to save Danforth Chapel, in its original, historic form.

For a campus that claims to be so rich in cultural diversity, the idea of removing a religious symbol from a historic building is ridiculous.

It is an attempt to create a sterile environment, not a diverse and dynamic one.

Buildings all over campus are modeled after different cultures and religions. The Nelson Center for the Performing Arts is designed to resemble a Sphinx. The Sphinx is an ancient Egyptian and Greek symbol for the worshipping of the god Horus. It represents the guarding of temples and tombs.

The entrance to the Hayden Underground Building is reminiscent of an Asian shrine. Every time a student walks down the stairs, beneath the labyrinth of pillars, he might as well be entering a religious shrine.

When you come down to it, many religions have influenced our culture. Since architecture is a part of our culture, it is only natural that it, too, is influenced by religion.

If ASU can build new buildings with religious symbolism, it can preserve one of the most historic buildings on campus with all of its religious symbols intact.

The cross does not deserve to go to court.

Halloween unsafe

Editor:

Regarding the Oct. 31 article in the State Press, "X-rays unable to detect poison in Halloween trick or treats."

It is appalling that a parent must feel the need to have candy X-rayed at all. If a person has that much fear of candy tampering, why does he even let his kid go out on Halloween?

It's enough to worry about a driver hitting a child, or a child becoming lost or abducted. Incidentally, the chances of one of these events happening is greatly reduced if the child is chaperoned.

Any one of these reasons is enough to stay at home. Personally, my kids won't be going out because I forbid them to beg for 37 pounds of sugar and chocolate. Additionally, I won't give out candy.

Holiday spirits won't be dampened because in the next two months, we have Thanksgiving, Hanukkah or Christmas and New Years.

The term holiday was derived from Holy Day. I don't see how a day representative of paganism and evil, and filled with evil as evidenced by police reports, can be considered a holiday.

The true holiday this season is three weeks away, and I wish a safe and moral one for everyone.

Reagan saw in Gorbachev what others missed

Joseph Sobran
Universal Press Syndicate

WASHINGTON — I owe Ronald Reagan an apology. I was one of those conservatives who thought he'd gone soft in the head when, at the signing of the INF treaty in 1987, he spoke of Mikhail Gorbachev as "a new kind of Soviet leader." It turns out that Mr. Reagan knew something we didn't.

I think conservatives can be pardoned for their skepticism at the time. We'd been hearing about these new, improved Soviet leaders ever since Stalin died, and each time, the euphoria had been dampened with blood — in Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Afghanistan. The silliness peaked when Yuri Andropov, succeeding Leonid Brezhnev, was hailed in the West as a "closet liberal" with a private taste for Western jazz and Scotch whiskey; the former KGB chief coolly continued the crackdown on dissent.

But behold Reagan's vindication! The Soviets have permitted democracy to blossom in Poland and Hungary, have tolerated angry dissent without reprisal in the Baltic states, have admitted cheating on the ABM treaty, have renounced the right to interfere in the affairs of what have hitherto been their satellite nations, have held elections of their own, complete with real opposition candidates, have confessed that they were wrong to invade Afghanistan, have begun publishing Solzhenitsyn's "Gulag Archipelago" and on and on.

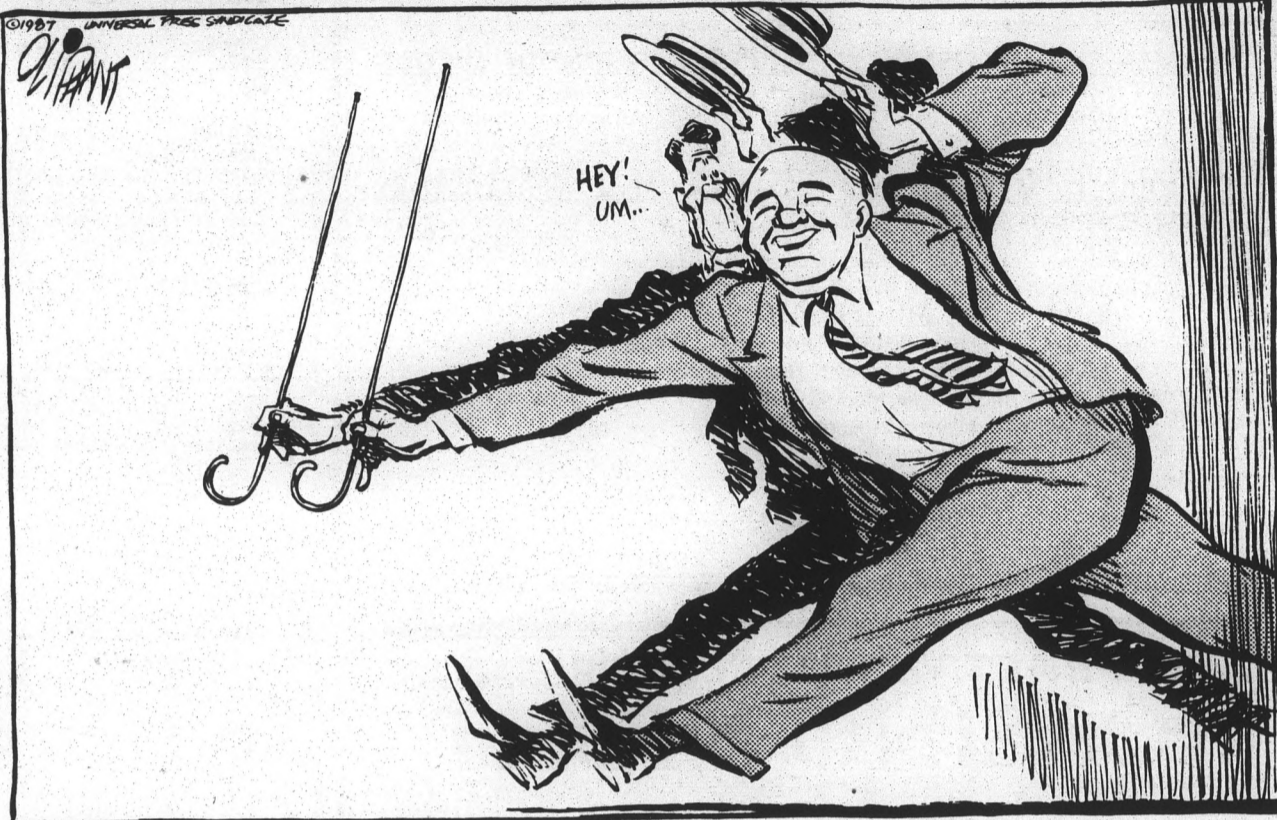

All this reflects the impact and direction of Gorbachev, who, if he succeeds with his reforms (and the experts say his position is fragile), will surely be remembered in Russia as Abraham Lincoln is remembered in this country: as the Great Emancipator.

Of course there is still, shall we say, room for improvement; and it may be that Gorbachev would say, as Lincoln said, that he was more controlled by events than in control of them.

Communism has failed. The system was no longer sustainable. Something had to be done.

But this much, this fast? Give the man some credit. If he has not performed miracles, at least he has attempted them. He has moved far more swiftly than necessity would seem to dictate. He might have acted far more grudgingly and slowly.

Put it this way: You'd have to have been clinically insane to have predicted accurately, two years ago, the changes Gorbachev has already wrought in the communist world.

All this is not to say that the West should abandon caution. It's still possible that Gorbachev will be toppled and that a reaction will set in or that he himself will feel obligated by pressure to reverse his course, a la Deng Xiao-ping. But as of now, he deserves our accolades. He apparently is bringing about what we have hoped and prayed for: the end of the total state, complete with empire.

It's a great beginning, all right, but you have to wonder: How on earth is he going to finish it? Some conservatives are now arguing for putting more pressure on Gorbachev or for giving aid to Poland to assist it in the democratization process. Having no special knowledge of such matters, I can only say that my instinct is that the United States should stand back and leave well enough alone. Any intervention on our part might give Gorbachev's enemies an excuse to force the reversal we don't want.

Besides, it's not as if the United States is the sole proprietor of freedom. The Poles and Gorbachev are doing fine without us. People have, after all, managed to find their way to civilization from time to time without the direct assistance of the U.S.A. We can wish them well without butting in, and we can celebrate without gloating.

I can say without reserve that the events in Eastern Europe give me more joy than any political events in my lifetime. It took me a long time to believe that it's all for real. It will take me longer to believe that it's also permanent, but for once I feel more like writing a song than a column.

When I thought, dismally, that Reagan was being taken in, he was actually seeing something that was invisible to many of us. "He's quite a fellow," Reagan writes of Gorbachev in his new book, "Speaking My Mind." And so is Reagan. Maybe his memoirs will describe their conversations in detail. Let's hope Gorbachev lives to write his own memoirs, too.

Jim Baker

Secretary of state maneuvering for vice president's spot

Cody Shearer
North American Syndicate

WASHINGTON — It is a flexible rule in politics that the unexpected should always be expected for the most unlikely people. Who would have guessed that South Africa's leader F. W. de Klerk would release Walter Sisulu and other African National Congress leaders? Could it be that East Germany's Egon Krenz, former chief of that nation's feared secret police, is the man to bring down the Berlin Wall?

Of late, this bending rule of politics has found life in the way Secretary of State James Baker has given conservative ideologists the cold shoulder in foreign affairs and hugged America's moderate plotting diplomatic corps. Such a game plan, political analysts here suggest, is a long-term plot by the ambitious Mr. Baker to position himself for higher office.

Anyone who doubts Baker's course need only examine two speeches he has given in the past two weeks on our nation's systematic approach to perestroika and arms control. After a period of suspicion about whether Gorbachev was going to survive or not, Baker is now willing to map out U. S. foreign policy in conjunction with the Soviets.

This is a major change in U. S. policy. Only two months ago, Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger delivered a foolish speech in which he declared it was the objective of U. S. foreign policy to act irrespective of what Mr. Gorbachev did, so long as American interests were served.

Part of Baker's conversion is a result of his blossoming friendship with Eduard Shevardnadze. In September, on their way to Wyoming, the two diplomats spent five hours discussing the Soviet economy and possible threat of destabilization. By the time they arrived at Jackson Hole, the gentlemen were sure they could work and trust one another. After decades of dealing with Byzantine Soviet diplomats, Baker, like his predecessor, George Shultz, found himself being invited back to Shevardnadze's apartment in Moscow for a late night family dinner.

Everyone who deals with Jim Baker knows he has maneuvered himself in the near term to topple Vice President Dan Quayle. For starters, it's no secret in Washington that Jim Baker does not respect Dan Quayle. He vigorously opposed his nomination as vice president in private discussions with George Bush. Twice during the controversies surrounding Quayle's avoidance of service in Vietnam, Baker is said to have referred to the then junior senator from Indiana as "a dead man."

It is not only a difference in intellect and personality that separates these two public servants. The two men have a long history of policy clashes: over the sale of the Awacs early-warning system to Saudi Arabia during Reagan's first term, over the Job Training Bill, which was Quayle's chief legislative achievement, and most recently, during the 1988 presidential campaign.

At present, Baker is trying to determine whether it makes more sense to shut Quayle up or let the vice president hang himself with his outspoken conservative views. Baker, the keen political pragmatist, is convinced that his primary Republican obstacle to high office is not moving in the right direction by broadening centrist Republicanism. On the other hand, Quayle supporters think Baker has misjudged public opinion by feeding the natural reluctance of Americans to provide adequately for their defense. Moreover, the Quayle crowd believes that Baker's views are determined by a desire to maintain a bipartisan policy with congressional Democrats.

'Everyone who deals with Jim Baker knows he has maneuvered himself in the near term to topple Vice President Dan Quayle.'

But it is not only the conservative hip-shooter from Indiana that poses a potential problem for Jim Baker. The way in which he runs the State Department begs the question of whether Jim Baker can lead America. Baker operates his department through a small coterie of advisers, mostly younger women, through which the world's largest foreign policy bureaucracy must communicate its memos. What disturbs many foreign policy experts at the State Department is that their material is not being read.

How else would one explain the series of foreign policy reversals that Baker's tenure at the State has encountered? Baker, for example, did not realize until recently that the rest of Latin America was not about to rally around his call to ditch Gen. Noriega. Moreover, what can explain Baker's inaccurate conclusion that Gen. Najibullah would not survive after the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan? Or what about the current deflation of the latest Middle East peace effort?

Given these setbacks, one can readily understand the importance to Mr. Baker of the Soviet Union's gracious new foreign policy. With the assistance of Mr. Shevardnadze, a future summit is in the works to cut troop levels within Europe, as well as halve strategic arsenal. Such accomplishments should make up for any number of Third World setbacks for the rich, Ivy League-educated Texas lawyer. For the moment, this superpower is Jim Baker's ace card.

ASU Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents that occurred between 7 a.m. Tuesday and 7 a.m. Wednesday:

•Two ASU employees were arrested Tuesday in connection with the theft of two NFL goalposts from Sun Devil Stadium last Thursday night, police said.

Joseph Bilducia and Augustine Keeme, Physical Plant workers, allegedly stole the $10,000 unassembled posts from beneath the bleachers and cut them up with intentions to sell the aluminum scrap, Det. David Hayes said.

The men were charged with felony burglary and felony theft, he said, adding that they were released pending a formal complaint to be filed by the Maricopa County Attorney's Office.

•A student's car was hit by a water balloon while he was driving west on University Drive near Manzanita Residence Hall. The balloon, fired from a slingshot from an unknown direction, shattered the car's windshield.

•A vandal damaged an employee's car while it was parked in Lot 63, causing $500 in damages by shattering the passenger side windows and denting the door frame with an unknown object between 5:30 and 7 a.m.

•A minor was arrested and charged with possession of alcohol in the hallway on the 15th floor of Manzanita Residence Hall.

•A minor was arrested and charged with possession of alcohol in the B-wing of Irish Residence Hall.

•A student was arrested after he gave police officers a false name in the B-wing of Irish Residence Hall.

Tempe Police Report

Tempe police reported the following incidents that occurred between 7 a.m. Tuesday and 7 a.m. Wednesday:

•A 41-year-old man was arrested after he asked an off-duty police officer to hide a plastic bag of marijuana that was in his pocket while police were questioning him regarding a probation violation. The man thought the plain-clothed police officer was a citizen rider with one of the other officers.

•A 45-year-old woman was arrested after police found her using false identification to visit inmates at the Madison Street Jail, 225 W. Madison St.

•A 20-year-old female Mesa Community College student was arrested at the Tempe Mission Palms Hotel, 60 E. Fifth St., after she stole two fire extinguishers and sprayed the second floor hall. She also was charged with disorderly conduct after she activated the fire alarm.

•A 21-year-old man was arrested and charged with selling drugs. While police were searching him, they found heroin in the front pocket of his pants.

•A 19-year-old female was arrested after an undercover police officer saw her get into a car while she was walking down Apache Boulevard. The police officer followed the car into a parking lot at 1992 E. First St., and saw sexual activity taking place.

•A 34-year-old man was arrested and charged with indecent exposure after several people, including children, saw him urinating on a palm tree in Kiwanis Park. He was plainly visible from the houses on the east side of Mill Avenue.

ASU police, also said he did not know what effect the FBI investigation would have on the panel's probe. Attorneys for the ASU officers had advised them not to speak with the University panel until the Justice Department concluded its case because they did not want the officers to implicate themselves.

"We'll have to find out how they (the officers) feel at this stage," Meyerson said.

The FBI launched its initial probe of ASU police shortly after the fraternity row incident and sent its findings to the Justice Department in late July. The Justice Department announced last week that the case had been closed and that it was not going to prosecute.

Rucker and Liddell, who is not attending classes at ASU this semester, had accused ASU police of roughing them up and humiliating them when they were handcuffed and taken into what police called "protective custody."

The students and two black friends were attacked by a mob of white fraternity members who had mistaken them for suspects in an earlier assault on a Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity member. Rucker and Liddell were the only people arrested and they said they were humiliated because they were handcuffed in front of a mob of about 500 students, many of whom were chanting racial slurs.

Rucker and Liddell were taken to police headquarters, handcuffed to chairs and were released about a half-hour later.

Although they were never interviewed by the FBI, Rucker and Liddell did meet with an agent during the summer at their attorney's Phoenix office. An agent met first with Liddell and began questioning him, but Liddell terminated the conversation because he felt uncomfortable with the way the agent was asking him questions.

"They will be dealing with a different agent because the agent who conducted the interview is no longer with the FBI," Small said.

Complex

Larson said it would be self-defeating to save the $377,000 for future expansion of the center.

"If we have to start laying off students now and closing on the weekends we won't have the type of facility we hoped for," he said.

The problem stems from the fact that before the referendum was passed, no formal discussion of what to do with surplus SRC fee money took place.

"We still don't know what they originally intended," Crary said at the board meeting. "We're faced with making a budget and I don't see how we can do it with out using the money."

The board discussed several other alternatives for raising money to pay these operating costs.

"Alumni have shown as much interest in the SRC, as they did when ex-Head Football Coach Frank Kush was fired," Maas said.

He said one plan being considered is to let alumni buy limited membership to the SRC allowing early-morning, late-evening and weekend use.

Also being considered is a plan that would let Marriott employees buy memberships. Marriott is the food company servicing the MU food outlets.

A limited membership for spouses of students and alumni is also being considered.

Maas said the board must come to a decision on this issue by its next meeting in two weeks. He said he would prepare a variety of budgets to demonstrate the effect of the different actions that could be taken by the board.

NEW YORK (AP) — The "Sheldon Horowitz" will soon grace the menu of the Stage Delicatessen alongside sandwiches that honor people everyone is supposed to have heard of.

Horowitz, a 57-year-old lawyer from Tuckahoe, won a contest sponsored by the deli, which has restaurants in New York, Boston and Los Angeles.

The "Sheldon Horowitz" sandwich was chosen from among hundreds of entries submitted from across the country and was concocted by his wife.

"Because my husband is renowned for his honesty," wrote Gloria Horowitz, "this sandwich should be open-faced, revealing all the beautiful truth of its contents."

The ingredients: tongue, smoked turkey, lumpfish caviar, red bell peppers, lettuce and mustard on pumpernickel bread.

Sheldon is to take the first bite at a ceremony Wednesday at the Stage in New York.

ASU sophomore Ron Waller dished out a game-high seven assists during Wednesday's intrasquad game at Saguaro High School.

Mack savors moment, emerges in scrimmage

By PAUL CORO
State Press

Bill Frieder, the ASU head basketball coach, is suffering from a big Mack attack after watching the ineligible Sun Devil dominate Wednesday night's intrasquad game.

Junior forward Sam Mack, who must sit out this season because he transferred from Iowa State, showed flashes of brilliance as he racked up 24 points (22 in the final three quarters) in the pre-season scrimmage at Saguaro High School.

"Sam has been our best player," Frieder said. "He has quickness and he knows where to get his shots."

As Frieder juggled lineups at each of the 10-minute quarters, Mack's team cumulatively outscored the opponents, 75-67.

Mack made big plays on defense and exploded offensively on the break and in the half-court set.

"When I let my first shot go, I knew it was going to be a good night for me," Mack said.

Mack opened the third quarter with a breakaway steal and a double-clutch slam. As the ball came up the court, Mack made another pick and went coast-to-coast for a layup.

Wednesday's game may have been Mack's only public performance with the team this season, depending on his undetermined eligibility for exhibition games and whether or not another Maroon and Gold game will be played.

"My approach to the game was just to go in and play hard," Mack said. "I have to make my teammates better. I'm going to score to make their defense better."

This is not the first season Mack has sat out. He was a Proposition 48 victim in his freshman season at ISU, where he was the Cyclones' second leading scorer last year.

Mack said this time will be different because he will concentrate more on schoolwork, be able to practice with team and stay in good physical shape.

"I think he shows we're off to a good start in recruiting for next year's team," Frieder said. "Recruiting is going to be as important as anything this year."

Outside Mack, Frieder was not thrilled with much else.

"We've got a long way to go," Frieder said. "We have trouble scoring. We need to find a way for them to stay in games."

Sophomore Emilio Kovacic, who sat out last season after transferring from Grand Canyon, turned in a performance that Frieder said he was pleased with. He tallied 19 points and seven rebounds.

"Personally, I'm satisfied with my improvement since last year," Kovacic said. "I just want to bang the boards and the points will come."

Sophomore Ron Waller appears to have stepped to the forefront for the Sun Devils at point guard, ASU's most needed area of improvement and depth. Waller dished out a game-high seven assists.

Frieder said he was disappointed in Waller's play in the first quarter because the team "didn't get into much of anything."

Waller said he did a decent job, but is not satisfied.

"I'm not doing what I said I wanted to do at the beginning of the year," Waller said. "I need to be more disciplined and in control. I can never be satisfied."

Senior Mike Redhair ran the point for the majority of the time on the opposing team. Sophomore Adrian Brown and freshman Brian Camper, who struggled badly from the field, also saw time as playmakers.

The Austin brothers also turned in solid performances. Isaac, a junior, scored 16 points and snared 10 rebounds. Alex, a senior, totalled 15 points and nine rebounds.

Although the Sun Devils found some success on offense in reversing the ball for the big men, Frieder said the team dribbled too much and wasn't able to execute under pressure. ASU let time expire before getting a shot off in three of the quarters.

"We need to eliminate the stupid mistakes," Frieder said. "But they're working hard at it. If they work hard, they have a chance of getting better."

Fridrich out-standing hitter, prefers setting inside

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

Noelle Fridrich said there was never a doubt in her mind that she could jump high and hit hard, but she still prefers the setting position on the ASU volleyball team.

"As a setter, you get to control the whole event of the game," Fridrich said. "I get to decide who's doing well and who to give the ball to."

Although she primarily plays at the setting position, Fridrich has worked at the outside hitting positions during the past three ASU matches.

Fridrich, who came to ASU four years ago on a volleyball scholarship, was recruited by then Head Coach Debbie Brown as a defensive specialist, but trained extensively for the setting position.

As a junior, Fridrich started in the setting position for ASU, and remained there for nearly two full years. When Coach Patti Snyder assumed the position left by Brown this season, she experimented with Fridrich's talent, only to find a great leaper inside her 5-foot-7 frame.

Assistant Sun Devil Coach Steve Schlick said Fridrich is a great athlete on any area of the court.

"Noelle is a fine athlete," Schlick said. "She is strong and she hits hard. In any facet of the game, she fills it well."

An important aspect on the court, Fridrich said is keeping a positive attitude. She said, however, her attitude is not always positive, but she manages to at least remain in control.

"Volleyball is such a reaction sport," she said. "It's all in the attitude. If I can get people to get fired up too, then that's all I can do to help the team."

One of the honors that Fridrich has achieved throughout her collegiate career is a nationwide Academic All-America ranking. She has accumulated a 3.4 grade point average and majors in graphic design. She will graduate in May of 1991.

She said although it has been hard at times to maintain the high standing due to the rigorous traveling schedule, she feels education should always take top priority.

"The numbers aren't so important, but applying yourself to school is," she said. "It comes down to knowing your priorities, and that education comes first."

The goals Fridrich said she set for herself when she entered college were actually team goals. She said the largest one, making it to the final four in post-season play, is not entirely out of reach for this season's 12-15 team.

"The season is not over," she said. "We still have a ways to go. Making it to the final four has always been a dream of mine since my freshman year."

When Fridrich's eligibility runs out at the end of this season, she said she would like to possibly become involved in a professional team such as the USVB association.

If she does not decide to pursue volleyball beyond college, she said she will not feel like something is missing in her life.

"It might be hard; I might miss the team, I might miss playing and competing at ASU," Fridrich said, "but there will always be things to fill that space."

Experience may provide ASU edge in rugby tournament

By LARRY NEWELL
State Press

The ASU rugby team has faced some of the most talented teams Arizona has to offer, leading up to the 1989 Michelob Continental Rugby Classic in Tucson, on Friday and Saturday.

"We planned our schedule so that we would have our toughest contests just before the Michelob Tournament, in hopes that our players can learn from some of the best teams in the state," ASU rugby Coach Barry Carter said.

Last Saturday the Sun Devils gained experience as they played the Tempe Old Devils, one of the top teams in the state, getting trounced 47-0.

"This was the best lesson our players could have gotten, as Tempe has a lot of talent, and our players learned a lot," Carter said. "Although the score was not close, I felt that we played very good 15-player rugby."

Tempe scored quickly and frequently, pulling out to a 29-0 halftime lead.

"The criticism I had for our team at this point was that our forwards were not looking for the ball; and because of this, we missed out on some scoring opportunities," Carter said.

ASU played stronger in the second half; and although they yielded 18 points, the intensity level on defense was up.

"We played a spirited second half, and we made some defensive adjustments at halftime that enabled us to slow Tempe down," Carter said.

He said he is optimistic that the Sun Devils' spirited play will carry over to Friday when they face the University of Colorado, a school rich in rugby tradition.

"Colorado will be a tough team to beat, but I am confident that if we play with the intensity of the last two weeks, we will do very well," Carter said.

Later in the day, the Sun Devils are slated to take on Long Beach State.

"If we can win both of our matches on Friday, we will have an excellent chance of making it to the finals on Saturday," Carter said.

The finals at this tournament are not foreign to ASU, as the Sun Devils have captured top honors more times than any other school.

"ASU won this tournament four consecutive years (1979-82) and we were the runner-up in 1979," Carter said. "We are optimistic about our chances to bring the title back to ASU."

UofA shows off 1989-90 team to Phoenix

TUCSON (AP) — At least 2,500 people in Phoenix and 12,000 in Tucson have bought tickets to join Lute Olson in rounds of smiling today or Saturday night.

Olson has 13 reasons to be smiling a lot. He's obviously pleased with his 1989-90 Arizona basketball team, which he'll unveil publicly tonight at Brophy Prep and Saturday at the university's McKale Center in intrasquad scrimmages.

Arizona's season begins next Thursday with an exhibition game against the Australian National Team, with a hiatus until Nov. 25, when the Wildcats play defending national champion Michigan in the Hall of Fame Tipoff Classic in the first of seven network TV appearances.

Suns' Johnson to trade assists for shoes

PHOENIX (AP) — Phoenix Suns guard Kevin Johnson announced Wednesday that a pair of basketball shoes will be donated to a charity for every assist he makes during home games this NBA season.

Johnson, a third-year pro, was the league's Most Improved Player last season and set a club record with 991 assists.

Suns president Jerry Colangelo said Johnson should get about 450 assists in the club's 41 regular-season home games in 1989-90.

"So we're looking at a minimum of 450 pairs of shoes. The value is substantial — about $30,000 plus," Colangelo added.

Under an agreement with the Foot Locker athletic shoe and apparel store, a pair of Fila brand sneakers will be donated to the Suns' Boys and Girls Clubs Basketball League for every Johnson assist at the Coliseum.

Johnson, who wore Nike sneakers his first two seasons in the NBA, said he recently signed a five-year deal with Fila.

"I want to give something back to the community and give an assist to kids," Johnson said at a news conference. "These kids often don't have the money to buy proper shoes for basketball."

Robinson named AL Manager of the Year

NEW YORK (AP) — Frank Robinson, who guided the Baltimore Orioles to one of the greatest turnarounds in baseball history, was selected American League Manager of the Year on Wednesday.

Robinson took the Orioles from last place in the AL East with a 54-107 record in 1988 to second place and an 87-75 mark this year, only two games behind Toronto. It was the third-best one-season turnaround ever.

He got 23 of 28 first-place votes and 125 points on a 5-3-1 basis from a panel chosen by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

Cito Gaston, who managed the Blue Jays to first place in the AL East, finished second with three first-place votes and 62 points.

Tony La Russa, who guided Oakland to the AL pennant and World Series title, was third with two first-place votes and 51 points.

Kansas stars cut; NBA snips rosters

By The Associated Press

It was a bad day for former members of Kansas' 1988 NCAA championship team.

Milt Newton and Scooter Barry, who helped the Jayhawks to a surprising victory in the Final Four, were cut by their NBA teams on Tuesday.

Newton was cut by the Los Angeles Lakers, who also put veteran forward Orlando Woolridge on the injured list to get the team at the roster limit of 12. Newton missed most of training camp due to an ankle injury and averaged 3 points in four exhibition games.

The Boston Celtics reduced their roster to 13 players by waiving Barry and forward Dave Popson. Barry, son of former NBA star Rick Barry, played in five exhibition games, scoring six points.

Allen Leavell, Frank Johnson, John Long and Earl Cureton were among the longtime veterans cut Tuesday as NBA teams pared their rosters before Friday's season openers.

Cureton, a member of the 1983 champion Philadelphia 76ers, was dropped by Charlotte, with whom he played all 82 games last season and averaged 6.5 points. Cureton is a nine-year NBA veteran of five teams.

Leavell, who played 10 years with Houston before being waived last week and picked up by Denver, was waived by the Nuggets along with guard Corey Gaines and forward Winston Crite. Leavell averaged 3.3 points for Houston last season and 9.5 for his career.

Long, an 11-year veteran, was dropped by Dallas, which had signed him as a free agent. He averaged 5.5 points with Indiana and Detroit last season and has a career mark of 14.6.

Johnson, an eight-year veteran, was cut by Orlando, which signed him as a free agent during the offseason. He averaged 4.4 points for Houston last season and 9.5 for his career.

In other roster moves, Tyrone Corbin, expected to start for Minnesota at forward, ended a 25-day holdout that cost him $11,350 in fines. With the addition of Corbin, taken from Phoenix in the expansion draft, the Timberwolves still must try to sign Steve Johnson.

The Timberwolves pared their roster to 14 players by cutting forwards Shelton Jones and Mike Whitmarsh. They need to waive two more players by Wednesday night to avoid having to pay those players for the opener.

The Indiana Pacers waived guards Mark Wade and Everette Stephens and forward Anthony Frederick.

The Miami Heat waived forward Sylvester Gray and center John Shasky, both of whom played for the team last season. The Heat also cut rookie free agent guard Kenny Drummond in reducing their roster to 13 players.

The Chicago Bulls waived three rookies to trim their roster to 13 players. Matt Brust of St. John's, Mike Doktorczyk of California-Irvine and Adrian McKinnon of North Carolina Central were cut.

The Bulls will reach the 12-man limit for their season opener Friday night when they place rookie Jeff Sanders on the disabled list. Sanders has a foot injury and is not expected to play until December.

The Cleveland Cavaliers waived forward Ron Grandison and guard Craig Neal.

The Path From Hate to Love

What do you do when a close friend betrays you or when a person hurts you by an insensitive comment? Most of us would either lash back or silently sever that relationship. To forgive and forget is a virtue which has faded with time.

Contrary to popular belief, all broken relationships can be mended; Although it is one of the most difficult things to do in the world.

At least one of two people must have a strong desire to rebuild their relationship. That person's sincere effort to change can melt the other person's heart to forgive.

Principles for relationship

- 1. Make a ommittment Resolve to love through good and hard times.
- 2. Practice self-control Show inner strength and humility even when you feel completely justified to complain or retaliate.
- 3. Love your enemy Be active and compassionate as a parent for an immature child.
- 4. Overcome negative concepts Give more material gifts than expected. The greater the sacrifice, the greater the value.

How do you stimulate the other person's compassion? Since hate cannot be legislated out of society; Only unconditional sacrificial love can erase hate.

Discrimination and other forms of bigotry are the gross end products of ignorance or small minds. The path to rebuild friendship is parallel to that of establishing harmony among different cultures and races.

The same principles which apply to couples also apply on a broader level to nations and the world. The human heart is induced by the these principles, regardless of color, gender or country of origin.

Mullins' paralysis not connected with 1988 injury

OXFORD, Miss. (AP) — The temporary paralysis sustained by Mississippi's Roy Lee "Chuckie" Mullins in 1988 has no connection with the injury that has paralyzed him from the neck down, a trainer for the football team said.

After the 1988 incident, Mullins was tested and X-rayed by doctors and given clearance to resume practice when there were no signs of serious injury.

On Saturday, Mullins, a 6-foot, 170-pound backup defensive back, was hurt when he tackled a Vanderbilt receiver to break up a pass play. He fractured the third, fourth, fifth and sixth vertebrae of his neck when he took a blow on the top of his head.

"The overall incidence of recovery for this is not good," said Clarence Watridge, one of two surgeons who operated for five hours Monday on the redshirt freshman from Russellville, Ala.

Watridge and fellow surgeon Marvin Leventhal operated on Mullins at Baptist Memorial Hospital in Memphis, Tenn., to realign his twisted spine and fuse the broken vertebrae.

On Tuesday, doctors performed a tracheotomy on the player, which involves creating an opening into the windpipe through the neck. Officials say the surgery will help Mullins' body handle secretions and prevent infection. Hospital officials said Wednesday that Mullins has been on a respirator since the tracheotomy.

Ole Miss has set up a trust fund to help provide lifetime care for Mullins.

"Chuckie will require lifetime care, and neither insurance, state nor federal programs will provide for all of his needs," Mississippi Chancellor Gerald Turner said. "Alumni and friends from throughout the nation have expressed a desire to help this outstanding young man. The Roy Lee 'Chuckie' Mullins Trust Fund has been established to provide such assistance."

NCAA officials say contributors can give as much as they want to the fund. Leventhal, regarding the 1988 incident, said Tuesday he would have advised Mullins to quit football.

"I would tell any athlete that after having such an episode," Leventhal said.

Rebel trainer Leroy Mullins said that in his opinion there is "absolutely no way" the incidents are related.

Carver Phillips, who became the player's guardian after Mullin's parents died when he was 12, said he tried to persuade Mullins to quit after being told of the 1988 injury.

"It scared me," Phillips said. "Chuckie told me he was scared too, when it happened. But he loved football too much. It was his life. He didn't think he could live without it and he loved the physical part of the game."

Leventhal said Mullins told him about the earlier injury during a pre-operation interview.

Leventhal said the information had no bearing on the surgery. He also said he saw nothing during the surgery that would relate the two incidents.

Leroy Mullins said in the 1988 scrimmage that the defensive back got hit "and we got to him on the field in an instant."

"He told us he had numbness in his hands, but he could grip my hand. We were getting ready to transport him (to a hospital), to get him up the same way we did Saturday (on a stretcher) when all of a sudden he regained his feeling.

"We saw no potential risk in his returning to practice, especially after putting him through the tests," the trainer said.

Kimo Ford
Embry-Riddle

The Fords have always driven Volkswagens.

Ask Kimo Ford why he bought a Volkswagen and get ready for some family history.

"Everyone in my family has driven a Volkswagen at one time or another. My dad had a Microbus in the Sixties. My mom and sister both drove Beetles. And my brother, who's also a student, drives an '83 Volkswagen Rabbit.

"So when I saved enough money to buy a car there was only one logical choice. A Volkswagen. My car's a '79 Rabbit. With 145,000 miles on it. Ten years old and all those miles and it's still running great.

"If you ask me, it's the perfect student's car. Good on gas. Fun to drive. And big enough to carry four friends." Even so, Kimo is already thinking about his next car. Another Volkswagen? "Absolutely. A GTI. White. Gotta have white."

It's time to think about Volkswagen again.

If you drive a Volkswagen and would like to be featured in an ad, send your story and a photo to: Volkswagen Testimonials 187 S. Woodward, Suite 200 • Birmingham, MI 48009
