Michael Garrett, a representative of the religious group C.A.R.P., removed this cardboard symbol from the cross on Danforth Chapel shortly after it appeared about 8 Thursday morning.

Group protests cross, puts symbol on chapel

A red cardboard circle with a slash through it was placed over the Danforth Chapel cross Thursday morning by a group calling itself the Knights of Intellectual Freedom.

The group claimed the action was a demonstration for freedom.

In a statement released a few hours after the incident, the group said the cross is "not conducive to the intellectual freedom necessary for the survival of our democracy and freedom of the world."

Rabbi Barton Lee of the Hillel Jewish Student Center said the stunt was a unique statement on the controversy surrounding the cross.

"I think it's kind of tongue-in-cheek," Lee said. "But it's probably not the right way to do things."

The Danforth Chapel cross is currently the object of a lawsuit filed by the Arizona Civil Liberties Union against the University. The case is expected to be heard in Arizona Superior Court within six weeks.

The ACLU is asking for the removal of the cross from the chapel, which is maintained with University funds. The group claims this is tantamount to state government support of a specific religious symbol and violates the U. S. Constitution.

A representative from Campus Crusade for Christ, one of the two dissenting student religious groups in the ASU Interfaith Council's recent resolution supporting the removal of the cross, said she was disturbed by the incident.

"If I would have seen it up there this morning, I would have been angered," junior Stacey Cannon said. "I would have felt they were attacking Christianity, but no one can stop that. I'm disappointed."

Michael Garrett, a member of the C.A.R.P. religious group, said he removed the sign around 8 a.m. when he first noticed it on the cross.

"I thought it was very disrespectful," Garrett said. "I felt moved to remove it."

"I jumped from the (stairway) rail to the roof. It's quite simple; anyone could do it."

A spokesperson for Knights of Intellectual Freedom who refused to give his name said the group was opposed to Garrett's actions.

"We do not have the right to remove the cross, and he did not have the right to remove our symbol," the spokesman said.

David Blase, a junior computer science major who was on Cady Mall Thursday, agreed with the disgruntled group.

"I think people should have been allowed to see it," Blase said. "He (Garrett) didn't have the right to make that decision for everyone."

Leon Shell, acting associate vice president for Student Affairs, said opposing factions have the right to express different opinions.

"We're a free-speech campus; people have very strong ideas," Shell said. "We're a marketplace for the expression of ideas. That's their option."

Report shows increase in minority enrollment at Arizona universities

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

The total number of minorities in the Arizona university system is 13.25 percent of the student population — a 2.5 percent increase from 1984 — according to an annual report presented to the Arizona Board of Regents Program Committee meeting Thursday.

The committee met in the MU Mohave Room, where it forwarded the minority recruitment and retention report to the full Board.

"There has been a sustained, steady growth," said Porfirio Diaz, the regents' assistant director for student services who presented the report to the committee.

The graduation rate for minorities was 8.3 percent of the total university system population in 1984, and it rose to 9.9 percent in 1989. The percentage dipped to 8.1 percent in 1986, down from 8.8 percent in 1985.

Regent Doug Wall asked the presenters for more details about how minority programs are helping to spur recruitment and retention.

"It is awfully hard to determine what is working and what is not," he said.

Officials: Minority plan progressing

But problems still exist at ASU, some campus leaders charge

By JOIE ANN LaPOLLA
State Press

A recently released Action Now report boasts achievements for minorities on campus, including $1 million for scholarships and the appointment of a faculty recruitment coordinator, but some ASU officials said Thursday that problems still exist.

"The University is doing this, but they need to do more," said V. P. Franklin, chairman of ASU's Black Caucus, a panel of three black University faculty members. "They are not as far along as they should be."

The quarterly report, which highlights accomplishments from July 1 to Sept. 30, outlined the progress made in Phase Two of the Action Now program. The plan is in its second year at the University.

Barbara Mawhiney, ASU's affirmative action director, said she is pleased with the progress of Action Now.

"I think that the University has made excellent progress," she said. "If we keep moving at this speed, we will accomplish all goals."

There are 32 goals of the second phase of Action Now, including an increase in minority and women faculty members, internal grant awards for minority faculty and the publication of a magazine on minority issues on campus.

The University already has reached goals of designating a coordinator of minority faculty recruitment, awarding minority students graduate research assistantships, racial sensitivity training workshops and scholarships for black and Native American students.

Franklin said there are problems with Action Now because most recruitment programs target women as well as minorities, and there is a potential that more women than minorities will apply to the University.

"The pool of women graduating is much larger than for minorities," Franklin said. "Under the plan as it is, it is possible no minorities would be hired, just women."

But Mawhiney said that is not a concern.

"We have no way to know who is going to be hired until after we see what the applicant pools are like," she said.

Tim Tong, ASU professor of mechanical and aerospace engineering, said there are no scholarships for Asian students in the program. A scholarship drive is in progress to assist Asian students, said Tong, who is also president of the Asian-American Faculty/Staff Association.

Tong said he will ask the University in December to allocate matching funds for Asian scholarships.

One of Action Now's goals is to increase cultural diversity and multicultural awareness on campus.

However, Franklin said the program has never defined "cultural diversity."

"They have just made general statements. They need to be more specific," Franklin said. "They have not defined what their objectives are."

But Mawhiney said a subcommittee of the Action Now group is studying the issue and will have a complete definition of the objectives in the near future.

Correction

In Thursday's edition, the increase in out-of-state tuition for 1989-90 was incorrectly reported. The tuition hike is 12.7 percent for ASU and UofA. The increase in the cost of education is 9.5 percent. In addition, the figures for past out-of-state tuition increases are actually jumps in the cost of education.

Pay raise, outside income limits zip through House; Senate next

WASHINGTON (AP) — House members voted Thursday to raise their pay by more than $30,000 a year over the next 13 months — to above $120,000 a year — while revising ethics rules to put new limits on outside earnings.

The bill was passed 252 to 174, just 10 months after intense public criticism forced the House to reject a larger pay increase.

The new proposal sped through the House with strong support from the leaders of both parties and an endorsement from President Bush. A slight majority of Republicans voting opposed the bill despite Bush's stance.

The Senate is expected to consider it today.

The complex 100-page pay and ethics package was announced by Democratic and Republican leaders Wednesday, but copies were not made available to the public until debate was well under way Thursday.

Public criticism, some of it galvanized by broadcast talk-show hosts, helped lead the defeat of a proposed 51 percent congressional pay raise earlier this year.

The bill would increase salaries in the House for federal judges and for top executive branch officials by at least 35 percent and often by closer to 40 percent.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said the Senate would consider the bill today. However, it was not clear what raises or honoraria limits the Senate might include for itself.

Bulgarian Central Committee holds 1st meeting since Zhivkov

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — The Communist Party overhauled its ruling Politburo on Thursday, sweeping out three members of the old guard and installing four more liberal men likely to support Petar Mladenov, the new leader.

The one-day session of the party's policy-setting Central Committee was called less than a week after the removal of Todor Zhivkov, 78, who led the nation with rigid orthodoxy for 35 years.

BTA, the official news agency, said speakers at the Central Committee meeting described the remaking of the Politburo as a step "without which onward progress is hardly possible."

They expressed the party's resolve to "pursue the watershed policy of renewal of socialism . . . on the basis of democratization, openness and responsibility of everyone," the agency said.

Zhivkov resigned Nov. 10 and was replaced by Mladenov, 53, who was foreign minister and is considered more open to reform.

American, 2 W. Germans safe; report of kidnapping a hoax

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — An American woman and two West German friends were reported safe Thursday, the day after a previously unknown group claimed to have kidnapped them. Police said they had not been abducted.

Deborah Fahrend, 54, of San Francisco; Mounir Shamseddin Sami, 39, a naturalized West German born in Lebanon; and Sami's 7-year-old son, Danjel, born in Berlin, were in Jounieh, a Christian port north of Beirut.

A police spokesman, whose name cannot be revealed because of regulations, said the case "involved a robbery report."

"We are investigating to find out whether they were robbed or their passports were just stolen," he said, and refused to elaborate.

A statement Wednesday claimed a group called The Organization of Just Revenge kidnapped the three "because of their activities in Lebanon." The 30-word typewritten statement in Arabic was put in the mailbox of a Western news agency along with photocopies of their passports and visas.

Both the police spokesman and Wolfgang Gottelmann, the West German ambassador, said Fahrend and the Samis were in good health and planned to leave by sea for Larnaca, Cyprus, when weather permitted. They would not say where the three were staying in Jounieh.

The U. S. Embassy in Beirut has been closed since Sept. 22.

Salvadoran jets blast rebel posts; troops try to put down offensive

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Fighter jets bombed rebel positions in parts of San Salvador and troops battled guerrillas block by block Thursday in efforts to break the largest offensive of the decade-old civil war.

Meanwhile, armed men entered the grounds of Jose Simeon Canas Central American University before dawn and killed and mutilated six Jesuit priests, their housekeeper and her 15-year-old daughter.

Reports on fighting in the countryside were sketchy, but at least 800 people have died and 1,600 have been wounded since the offensive in all 14 provinces began Saturday night.

Guerrilla leaders have acknowledged they cannot win the 10-year-old war militarily but launched the offensive to prove the army also could not win and that rightist President Alfredo Cristiani would be unable to govern without a role in government for their Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front.

South, Northeast pick up pieces one day after storms, tornadoes

(AP) — A violent storm that spun tornadoes across the South and Midwest blew north Thursday, knocking a cafeteria wall down on top of lunching schoolchildren in upstate New York. The two-day toll was at least 27 dead and hundreds injured. The cafeteria cave-in claimed the lives of seven children near Newburgh, N.Y., and deaths also were reported in New York City and New Jersey. Seventeen people died Wednesday in Huntsville, Ala., when a tornado packing 250 mph winds struck virtually without warning, laying waste to a wide swath of the city.

The storm churned around a collision of record warm air and extremely cold air. The result was tornadoes and unusually severe thunderstorms.

By far the worst damage was in Huntsville, where an estimated 1,000 people were left homeless and National Guardsmen stood watch against looting Thursday.

No bodies were believed left in the rubble, but portions of the city resembled a bombing target. A shopping center and clusters of apartment buildings were leveled. Cars were piled atop each other. Utility poles had been snapped like twigs.

The National Weather Service said the tornado path had covered between eight and 10 miles and that its wind speeds were as high as 250 mph.

As the storm moved north on Thursday, it knocked over trees and ripped the roofs off houses in West Virginia, injuring four members of one family, two seriously. The storm also caused flooding in Washington, blew the windows out of skyscrapers in Philadelphia and destroyed a house in Piscataway, N.J.

A truck driver died when his tractor-trailer overturned in high winds on a bridge connecting Elizabeth, N.J., and New York City. A New York City woman died after being hit by a steel beam blown off a water tower.

In Wyckoff, N.J., high winds knocked a power line onto a gas line, sparking a fire that forced the evacuation of 20 homes, according to police. No houses were burned.

ASU athletic department improving graduation rate

By Jill W. DeMichele

Jill W. DeMichele is the assistant athletic director at ASU.

ASU's Intercollegiate Athletic Department has taken a strong proactive and intrusive approach to academics since Charles Harris became the athletic director in the spring of 1985. Standards for student-athletes are higher than they are for students, and actions to improve the graduation rate of student-athletes are very evident to the knowledgeable observer.

Coaches, academic counselors and administrators tell recruits and their families that graduation is to be their first priority at ASU.

Proof of our commitment to improving graduation rates is in the following programs:

- The summer school enrichment program to encourage student-athletes to make progress toward a degree during the summer and to graduate early.
- The fifth-year post-eligibility program that pays for a final year of NCAA-permitted athletic scholarship for student-athletes who have finished their competitive career at ASU.
- The NCAA grants program which sponsors student-athletes who are not eligible for further athletic aid per NCAA rules to finish their degrees. Fifty percent of the ASU student-athletes in summer school are enrolled in the enrichment program. The 1988-89 post-eligibility program graduation rate was 95 percent. The post-eligibility program is sponsored by the Arizona Board of Regents.

ASU has also adopted an aggressive approach in identifying former student-athletes to bring them back to finish their degrees. ASU has had 12 former student-athletes approved for this program, which is the best representation of any university in the country.

ASU also has made a tremendous investment in staff and resources through the establishment of the Academic and Student Services Office in the Intercollegiate Athletic Department. Academic counselors work closely with the colleges to guide and monitor the progress of student-athletes. Tutorial assistance, orientations and study hall opportunities are available to support the needs of student-athletes. Faculty are asked to report on the progress of student-athletes. The role of the Academic and Student Services staff is to assist student-athletes in realizing their potential through academic success.

It is much more difficult procedurally and academically to be a student-athlete than it is to be a student at ASU. This is not because the student-athlete spends time practicing and competing in a sport. This is because the student-athlete must comply with numerous procedures and restrictions placed on advising, registration, GPA and progress toward a degree. However, even the additional steps are of benefit because the student-athlete will have a more realistic opportunity to graduate on time.

Student-athletes have a plan of study requirement which is in addition to the program of study requirement for all students. Student-athletes must file a plan of study during their first semester of the freshman year.

ASU students on the other hand, are not required to file such a form until they reach 60 hours. If student-athletes haven't filed the plan of study by the early registration period, they cannot register early. ASU students don't have any penalty until they have reached their 87th hour of enrollment. The University is planning some intrusive mandatory advising strategies for all students in the near future. These are already in place for the student-athlete.

An undecided major in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences is permitted to enroll in over 20 hours of electives while selecting a major. A student-athlete is only permitted to enroll in 11 elective hours over a two-year period, so that he or she will fill a course schedule with core courses and make quicker progress towards a degree. This restriction was put in place by the University to set a higher standard for the student-athlete.

If student-athletes want to withdraw from a course, they must first receive permission from their academic counselor, their coach and the assistant athletic director. Progress towards a degree, admission competency requirements, graduation requirements, minimum enrollment in 12 hours and reasons for the withdrawal are checked before permission is granted.

The Board of Regents has set a higher cumulative GPA for student-athletes, as a commitment to academic progress. Student-athletes may continue to attend classes on probationary status but may not compete in athletics if their GPA falls below 2.0 after they have earned 96 hours. In the fall of 1988, 85.9 percent of all students and 86 percent of all student-athletes had a cumulative average above 2.0.

If a student-athlete competes at ASU, he or she is simultaneously making a successful effort in the classroom. NCAA rules require student-athletes to earn a minimum of 24 hours towards a degree per academic year. In August 1990, the 1985-86 class, which is the first one to have started on the plan of study will have had five years to graduate. If they continued to compete in their sport, all should be able to graduate. How can we say this with conviction? Multiplying five years times 24 hours equals 120 hours. ASU requires 126 hours for graduation. Most student-athletes earn in excess of the 24 hour minimum requirement. Thus, of those competing, all should be in a position to graduate.

The most recent graduation data available is for the student-athletes in ASU's freshman football class of 1983-84. Forty-one percent of them have either graduated and/or currently are playing professional football. The professional athletes have an average of 21 hours left to finish their degrees. These hours could be completed in a semester and one summer session.

Of the 1989-90 football seniors, 53 percent will have graduated in five years. Of the remaining 47 percent, four will finish their degrees in the 1990-91 post-eligibility fifth year program, and ASU plans to nominate the remaining eight for NCAA grants to finish their degrees.

A student-athlete is first and foremost a student at ASU. Student-athletes know that the expectations for them are high. They function every day in a fish-bowl atmosphere due to their responsibility as student-athletes. The pressure to perform in the classroom, in the athletic arena and as good citizens never leaves them. Academics and athletics belong together.

The true test of this emphasis on progress towards a degree will be when the class of 1985-86 graduates in August 1990. This class will have enrolled with the plan of study and will have made continual progress towards a degree. The five-year graduation rate goal for student-athletes is 70 percent. The 1985-86 class, including football, will illustrate to all of today's doubters that we know we are investing in the right methods today to guarantee higher graduation rates for student-athletes in the future.

Insensitive reporting

Editor:

As I sit here and read this story about Tracy Gold, I feel shaky, numb and cold all over again, not only because of the tragic loss I feel, but also because of the agonizing way the story was presented. We told the State Press that the reason we wanted it printed was to inform anyone who loved her and knew her of the funeral. We wanted the world to know that our most precious ray of sunshine who lit up any room is now just a cherished memory that we can only hold dear in our hearts.

She wasn't supposed to be a cold fistful of twisted unimportant facts that sounded like a gossip news story. She was a warm, affectionate, adored young woman who should have a warm, loving goodbye written about her from someone who adored her more than words could say. So I apologize to all of Tracy's friends and family who had to see the story, and I apologize to you, too, Tracy. I just hope the whole world will remember what you gave to it instead of how you left.

Virtues of aggression may be fewer than we think

Cody Shearer
North American Syndicate

WASHINGTON — Back in high school, one of my win-at-any-price coaches used to turn red in ecstasy whenever he emphasized the virtues of aggression. I can't recall how many times he repeated the cliché, "The most effective defense is a strong offense."

But what I always thought was an unseemly disposition in sports — do what's necessary to screw your opponent, and never acknowledge your own weaknesses — has become a way of life in America. This fall, politicians in New York and Virginia have adopted this attitude by distorting their opponent's records without any respect for facts. Meanwhile, newspapers are full of stories about corporate crime and athletes on steroids who spend more time learning to deceive drug testers than mastering their sports. It's no wonder that 66 percent of U. S. high schoolers told the Pinnacle Group recently they would have no qualms about telling lies to achieve business objectives.

Is there no limit to such immorality?

Recently the Exxon Company adopted an aggressive stance in its defense against a lawsuit brought by the state of Alaska. Exxon had the nerve to file a counterclaim in an Alaskan Superior Court charging the state with negligently interfering in its efforts to contain and treat the 11-million gallon spill of crude oil from the Exxon Valdez last March. Specifically, Exxon claimed that the Alaskan government prevented the "timely use" of chemical dispersants to contain the spill, thus allowing "much more oil to wash onto beaches, shorelines and islands . . . Exxon is now asking for unspecified reimbursement to cover cleanup cost and damage caused by the state's conduct.

In related news, Exxon has been similarly bold in resigning from the National Wildlife Federation (NWF). Exxon quit the NWF's Corporate Conservation Council after charging that the federation had "not met our expectations" and had "failed to demonstrate any sense of objectivity or fairness" with respect to the Valdez disaster. Exxon had been a charter member of the council that was formed to foster dialog between industry and environmentalists.

NWF President Jay Hair responded to the Exxon pullout with a blistering letter. "I regret that we did not meet your 'expectations,'" Hair wrote. "But did you really think your membership on our Corporate Conservation Council could buy Exxon immunity from the National Wildlife Federation's response to such a massive and poorly managed environmental disaster? The fact that Exxon has been judged a corporate pariah in the court of public opinion has little or nothing to do with the National Wildlife Federation. That distinction has been clearly earned by Exxon's leadership."

Unspeakable things, like Exxon's behavior in the Valdez case, occur daily in our world, and terrible events break the surface of news and stir around for a few days and then disappear as if they were a dream. Our nation's ability to respond to images of immorality — the gap between understanding and action — can only be bridged by leaders who reconcile what we know with what we can do about it. When it comes to morality, we seem to be in short supply of public officials and others who are willing to speak truth and seek justice.

Hundreds of millions of pounds of toxic chemicals are being discharged into U. S. rivers, lakes, coastal waters and public sewers every year, according to a lawsuit filed last week by the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC). The lawsuit is intended to force the Environmental Protection Agency to comply with its duties under the Clean Water Act to control toxic pollutants.

"Over two-thirds of the industrial facilities that release toxics into our waterways are not covered by nationwide EPA regulations but by a weak system of site-specific permits," said Robert Adler, senior attorney at NRDC. "Our lawsuit will compel EPA to develop national standards for both direct emissions into waterways and indirect emissions into the sewage treatment system."

Six years ago Congress directed the EPA to identify industrial discharges of hazardous wastes into public sewers and to recommend solutions and regulations implementing its suggestions. In 1987, EPA was told to identify, by no later than February 1988, all remaining sources of toxic pollutants and review all existing toxic water pollution controls to see if they were complete.

"Despite this congressional mandate, the agency is almost two years late in publishing a comprehensive plan," Adler said. "Today, only a fraction of industrial discharges are covered by EPA regulations."

There has been no public reaction to the informed opinion of Gary Sick, former President Carter's National Security adviser. Appearing on "Nightline" on the 10th anniversary of the seizure of American hostages in Iran, Sick said in researching the question of whether there had been some kind of deal struck between the Reagan/Bush campaign and the Iranians, he had been struck by the "magnitude of arms shipments to Iran that began from Israel immediately after the Reagan administration came in. The quantities were really very substantial and what I've now learned from several very reliable sources is that it was not just a wink and a nod on the part of the American government, but in fact the Israelis provided lists of weapons to the United States for approval at each stage along the way."

Vavreck's column OK

Editor:

Responding to Kevin Connell's letter of Nov. 16, I would ask Kevin if he really read Lynn's column? It seems Kevin is quick to defend homecoming as an event, when Lynn's column did not insult the existence of homecoming at all. Lynn merely illustrated the discrepancies between J'Lein's campaign promises and her actual performance.

The fact that Lynn was the last homecoming princess gives her insight to the possibilities that homecoming can achieve. As a member of the Student Alumni Association, I can attest that ASASU's cooperation and participation in homecoming was less than anticipated, and the attendance at the individual events did not exceed the thousands, as Kevin claims.

Finally, the fact that Lynn is the President of Devils' Advocates has no relevance to her opinion about homecoming. And, as a member of that group, I resent the implication Kevin is making. Devils' Advocates has served this University for 25 years and would have played a bigger role in homecoming if asked. The truth is that no homecoming representative ever asked the group to participate in the parade, as Kevin asserts they did. The purpose of Devils' Advocates is not to promote school spirit — the purpose is to help students become oriented with college life and our large campus. Kevin should not assert facts about things he knows nothing of.

Gun control laws should favor those in danger

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

It was just a short news story, tucked away in the back pages, but it caused me to slightly alter my views on gun control laws.

The story was about a young woman who lives in the South Side of Chicago.

A few nights ago, she was waiting for a bus. She had been visiting a friend, and it was after midnight.

Although it's not smart for a young woman to be outside at that hour in that neighborhood, anyone should be able to use the streets anytime they choose.

Instead of a bus, a car pulled up. A man got out. He was holding a knife. He told the woman to get into the car or he would cut her.

She got into the car. The man drove a couple of blocks to an alley and spent the next two hours raping her.

Then he drove her a few blocks from her home and dumped her out of the car.

She began walking home, intending to call the police. But before she got home, another man walked up to her. He, too, had a knife.

And his intentions were just as dishonorable.

He walked her to an abandoned building, where he raped her.

After he finally let her go, she made it to a friend's house, the police were called and she was hospitalized.

The hospital said her condition was "good." That is hospital talk. It means she will live and was not seriously injured. But I doubt that "good" accurately describes her mental condition.

Now, we've all heard of gang rapes and of women being held prisoner and raped by whichever two-legged animal happens to wander up the stairs or down the hallway.

But this is the first case I've come across of a woman being yanked off the street and raped by two different men within a matter of hours.

So what does this have to do with my views on gun control?

If that woman had a pistol in her purse or coat pocket, knew how to use it and was alert to danger, it's doubtful that the first rapist would have been able to get her into his car.

As soon as he got out of his car and approached her with his knife, she could have had the gun out, pointed it at his chest, and said something like: "Go away or die." My guess is that his libido would have quickly cooled and he would have been on his way. But if it didn't, he would have had a new hole in his anatomy that would have discouraged further advances.

Of course, if the woman had a gun in her purse, she would have been violating the law that forbids carrying a concealed weapon.

And that's a part of the gun laws that I think should be changed.

I still believe all guns should be registered. I'm against the selling of the mini-machine guns that allow deranged people to blow away kids in schoolyards or their former co-workers.

I also believe in cooling-off periods before guns are sold and thorough background checks of those who want to buy guns.

But I think the law concerning carrying a concealed weapon should be amended so that a woman who has no serious criminal background or history of mental disorders and lives or works in or near a high crime area of a city should be able to legally tote a pistol in her purse or pocket.

As long as gun ownership is legal in our society, it doesn't make much sense that I should be able to keep a couple of fully loaded pump-action shotguns in my home, where I'm reasonably safe, especially since I also have a hound that likes to chew on strangers; but a woman on a dark street in a dangerous neighborhood is forbidden by law to carry a pistol in her purse.

Who is in greater danger? Me, with my doors double locked, my dog ready to chomp and my shotguns handy? Or a woman in a neighborhood where rape and other assaults are almost as common as church pancake parties in small towns.

Every night in Chicago and other cities, nurses finish night shifts and go out into the dark. So do waitresses and other workers. Or a woman leaves a dinner or a party and walks from her car to her hallway. And almost every night, one or more of them are assaulted. The more fortunate of them come out of it alive. Others don't.

I'm not saying that a gun in a purse would put an end to all of it. But I don't doubt that after a few mugs suddenly find they have an extra navel, those of similar inclinations might ponder what that lady coming down the street might have in her purse.

Of course, I don't really expect gun laws in Chicago or any other city to be changed to permit women to protect themselves.

So I have another suggestion for females. Get a gun and carry it in your purse anyway. To hell with the concealed weapon law. If you put a hole in some thug who pops out of a doorway or a car with a knife in his hand, I doubt if a judge will do more than deliver a lecture.

These days, there's always a good chance that the same judge put the guy with the knife back out on the streets in the first place.

Much has changed at the Normal School in 104 years

Costs, campus different than in Territory day

By MICHELLE ALLMAN
State Press

How would you like to pay $4 a month for tuition?

That was the amount paid by the Class of 1886 at the Territorial Normal School at Tempe — known nowadays as ASU.

For that price, students got uniform instruction in the basics (Methods, Natural Philosophy, Physiology and Latin), and some additional required classes: Caesar, Political Economy, Cicero and Rhetoric.

Room and board cost about $5 per week, and a "limited number" of students lived with the University president. The accommodations, however, weren't quite what they are today.

When Alfred Thomas began his studies in 1934 at what was by then Tempe State Teachers College, some things had changed.

There were three business classes offered (shorthand, accounting and typewriting), and the campus had grown from the original 12 acres to 38 acres. Tuition had skyrocketed to $12.

But much was still the same.

The moral code of 1912 was still enforced.

"Applicants must be of good morals and industrious habits," it began. "... Young ladies and gentlemen who are not disposed to cheerfully submit to all the wholesome restraints found necessary for the good reputation of the school will be promptly dismissed."

Thomas said that wasn't as difficult to abide by as it sounds.

"The distractions for today's students are much greater," said Thomas, who attended ASU from 1934 to 1939 and received his bachelor's and master's degrees here.

"There was one movie house and an Olympic-size pool, and no one ever had any spending money."

Thomas said he spent 40 hours each week studying, in addition to working in the office of University President Grady Gammage.

He said there wasn't a lot of partying going on, partly because of the University's strict policy against alcohol: "... As the sale of liquor is prohibited in Tempe and the surrounding districts the undesirable influence of the saloon is entirely absent."

No one dared break the rules, Thomas said.

"They wouldn't have been here for very long."

Prior to World War II, colleges and universities had the responsibility to

"parent" the students enrolled, he said.

Thomas went on to join the faculty and taught business administration from 1946 to 1972. He said that despite what parents and grandparents might tell students today, things are not any easier than in "their day."

"Each generation thinks theirs was a little more difficult than the one after it," he said. "You can't judge yesterday's standards on the basis of today's standards. You have to keep it in perspective." Margaret Herriman, a senior sociology major, agreed.

"My dad says he walked 15 miles in the snow and all of that," she said. "He says he studied more and had no social time. We just kind of laugh at him and say 'sure, Dad.'"

Gone are the days when Herriman and her classmates — the females, anyway — could sign up for Clothing Selection I, available during the 1930-31 school year for "ladies who aspire to run a household."

The catalog promised the class would "offer training in the selection of clothing with consideration of materials, of cost, of style and design..." The class has been updated, eighties-style, by TXC 423: Apparel Analysis.

Tuition, as well as enrollment, has climbed steadily over the years. In the fall of 1885 there were 33 students enrolled. At last count there were 43,546 students enrolled at ASU, 9,677 of which pay $2,472 per semester in out-of-state tuition.

Herriman, who studies "about five to seven hours each week," said she is glad she came to ASU when she did.

"It sounds like it was pretty nutty back then. I don't think I could have handled it."

Herriman admits she will probably say the same things to her kids that her parents said to her.

"I'll brag about it and make it sound hard," she said. "The right to do that is handed down. Like a tradition or something."

Survey: Minorities lack information on AIDS transmission

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

A survey about minorities and their understanding of AIDS, which was conducted by UofA researchers and presented Thursday at ASU, found that Hispanics, blacks and Native Americans have many misconceptions about the risk and transmission of the disease.

Members of the panel agreed that community minority leaders should join together to dispel the myths about AIDS.

Antonio Estrada, associate director of the UofA Southwest Border Rural Health Research Center, said the studies indicate the need for more education among minorities.

"Clearly, there is a lot that needs to be done in terms of increasing the knowledge of Hispanics, blacks and Native Americans," Estrada said.

One finding of the study was that blacks had the most information about AIDS among the minority groups, followed by Hispanics and then Native Americans.

One panel member, Sylvester White, a member of the Black Coalition on AIDS, said people need to work together to educate minorities.

"We need to know about one another, we need to know what's going on in our culture, and we need to know that there are differences," White said.

The ASU Task force on AIDS currently does not have programs that specifically target minorities.

"Our education is geared toward the general population," said task member Lenna Erickson, assistant to the dean of Student Life. "It has not come up as an issue here."

However, Erickson said the task force mentions statistics about particular groups, including minorities, at various workshops it conduct.

The majority of all groups surveyed knew the basic modes of transmission, which include having sex without proper protection, engaging in sex with many partners and sharing needles.

However, more than 30 percent of all respondents think AIDS can be transmitted by mosquitoes, and 40 percent believe that donating blood puts them at risk.

In general, all groups indicated that people should be more responsible in their sexual practices, but Estrada said the focus of AIDS prevention lies in self responsibility.

More than 60 percent of the minorities said they had changed their sexual behavior after hearing about AIDS, and one third of the respondents said they use a condom every time they have sex.

"One third say they use a condom all the time, but chances are it's probably lower than that," Estrada said. "Although people are saying they use precautions, when you come down to it, what precautions are they taking?"

The survey also found that the most information about AIDS was derived from television, and the majority of respondents thought there was insufficient information about AIDS in their community.

Minority

Regent Esther Capin said the report was "excellent," but she wished the tables of information were more concise and provided "a quick snapshot" of the entire minority picture.

Regent Donald Shropshire said the universities do not get enough credit for their efforts in promoting minority recruitment and retention.

"No one is going to say they are doing a good job," he said. "This (recruitment and retention) is a long-haul problem we have to work on."

"I believe the efforts of our universities are underrated by people who don't understand (the figures)."

Susan Clouse, ASU associate director for undergraduate admissions, presented the regent committee with information about successful minority programs at the University and said they have been "embraced by the campus."

As an example of a successful minority program, Clouse cited the summer math program, which attracted 19 high school students in 1986 and 183 in 1989. The five-week program exemplifies the importance of early outreach programs for minorities, she added.

Currently, there are 200 minority programs at ASU, and officials are trying to establish a master plan to incorporate all of the programs, Clouse said.

The regents have requested annual minority recruitment and retention reports from each university since 1984.

The current report states that Hispanic enrollment at the state universities has increased more than 10 percent, along with increased Hispanic graduation rates at ASU.

Although ASU enrolls 52 percent of the total university black enrollment in Arizona, there was a 1 percent decline from fall 1988 to fall 1989 in ASU's black student enrollment.

In addition, Asian enrollment at ASU and UofA is almost triple the state proportion; at NAU, Asian enrollment is almost equal to the state proportion.

Also, Native American representation at UofA and ASU is a lower proportion than the Arizona Native American population.

The report stated that "the state universities will place additional emphasis in their continued aggressive recruitment of Hispanic, black and Native American students."

Before the Board committee recommended the annual minority report, it listened to officials from the three state universities respond to the Ad Hoc Committee on University Access and Retention 41-point plan for minority recruitment and retention.

Students get chance to complain about ASU, but few show up

By KELLY JAIN
State Press

ASU students, who often complain of the University's bureaucratic structure, had the opportunity to address their concerns to University administrators Thursday, but only 10 people showed up.

Karl Kuo, vice president of finance for the council, cited possible reasons for the low turnout.

"Most of the clubs are having elections at this time," he said, adding that more people may have showed if some controversial figures like ASU's Head basketball Coach Bill Frieder were invited.

The "59 minutes" forum, which drew 100 students last fall, was sponsored by the Business College Council.

The panel members included John Kraft, dean of the College of Business; Gerald Maas, director of the Student Recreation Complex; Jo Ann Hennington, associate dean of the business college; Jean Eisel, director of career services; and Mike Pressendo, executive vice president of Associated Students of ASU.

Kraft fielded a question about the high turnover rate of business professors.

Nationally, business professors receive an average raise of 10 percent annually, Kraft said. However, he said professors of Arizona's three state universities have been receiving an annual raise of 1.5 percent.

Business schools around the country are tempting ASU professors with higher salaries, and the problem is compounded by the fact that ASU must enter the bidding war to replace the professors, he added.

Another topic discussed was the Student Recreation Complex.

"Why are you nickeling and diming students for equipment?" a student asked Maas, referring to a 50 cent equipment rental fee.

Maas said the complex needs to maintain a revenue level of $100 per week, some of which goes toward maintaining equipment.

One student asked why the UofA was better than ASU both academically and athletically.

Kraft said he did not agree that the Tucson university is better than ASU. The UofA emphasizes different programs than ASU, he added.

Jamie Scott Lytle/State Press

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents that occurred between 7 a.m. Wednesday and 7 a.m. Thursday:

- An ASU employee was injured when a drawer in her desk suddenly opened and struck her leg in her office in Armstrong Hall. The drawer cut her leg, but she did not require medical attention.
- Two minors were arrested and charged with possessing alcohol in the hallway of Manzanita Residence Hall.
- A minor was arrested and charged with possessing alcohol in the parking lot on the south side of Sahuaro Residence Hall.
- A vandal with a pellet gun broke a window to a room on the eighth floor of Manzanita Residence Hall.
- A thief stole $40 in cash and a radio from a student's room at Hayden Residence Hall by entering through an unlocked window.
- A thief stole a welding torch and a 25-foot hose from the MU loading dock.
- A thief stole a student's wallet from an unlocked locker in the men's locker room at the Student Recreation Complex.
- A thief stole a wallet from a padlocked locker at the University Activity Center.

• A thief stole a student's bicycle, valued at $100, from the northwest side of Manzanita Residence Hall where it was locked to the bicycle racks with a U-lock.

• A thief stole a student's bicycle, valued at $400, from the north side of the MU where it was locked to the bicycle racks with a cable and lock.

Tempe police reported the following incidents that occurred between 7 a.m. Wednesday and 7 a.m. Thursday:

- An ASU employee was arrested after he allegedly borrowed a friend's car without permission. The car was filled with $100 worth of flowers. When he returned the car the flowers were missing, police said.
 - A man was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct after his two barking dogs woke up the many people in the neighborhood.
 - Two people were arrested after they flooded their apartment with water from their waterbed, causing $400 in damage. Police said they were upset after receiving an eviction notice.

3 NAU athletes arrested

FLAGSTAFF (AP) — Three Northern Arizona basketball players have been arrested and accused of taking part in a scheme to use stolen checks and a stolen credit card, police said Thursday.

Arrested Wednesday were David Truell, 21, a 6-foot-4 junior guard from New York City; Edward Scott, 19, a 6-foot-5 freshman forward from Inglewood, Calif.; and Corey Rogers, 18, a 6-foot-3 freshman from La Puente, Calif., said Sgt. Pascual Macias.

Macias said Truell was released after being booked for investigation of attempted theft and possession of stolen property, and Rogers was released after being booked for investigation of fraudulent schemes.

Scott was booked for investigation of fraudulent schemes and burglary and remained jailed Thursday, Macias said.

Lumberjacks Coach Pat Rafferty said Scott "has been suspended indefinitely" from the team while Rogers "is under investigative suspension."

Rafferty said Truell "was cited by local police on related charges but was released" and was not suspended from the squad.

Scott and Rogers are sitting out this season as redshirts while Truell is being redshirted under medical provisions while he recovers from knee surgery, according to Rafferty.

Paper recycling targeted for campus

By MICHELLE HENRY
State Press

A major paper recycling program is being implemented on campus, but details of how it will benefit the University are sketchy.

"I've put together a plan to start a pilot program of trials and errors," said David Webb, ASU's manager of grounds in the Physical Plant department. "Over a two-month period, we will look at what the costs are and what our savings could be."

The first buildings to be involved in the program are Academic Services, Social Sciences, Business Administration and Agriculture.

Webb said other buildings gradually will be added to the program.

"There is going to be some glitches that will have to be corrected," he said. "We hope the program will work successfully."

But the program has yet to be approved.

Webb said a letter is being drafted and will be sent to Victor Zafra, vice president of Business Affairs, next week for approval.

Joan Card, a senior geography major and president of Students for Environmental Awareness, said her group is trying to figure out how recycling can benefit the campus.

"We started last spring to see if students could recycle the State Press," she said. "For seven or eight months, we were told a program was in the works but not much was being done."

Card said SEA conducted a letter drive to show support for the recycling effort and sent them to Zafra and Paul Larson, Associated Students of ASU president. She said many students are interested in recycling.

Webb said recycling is difficult at ASU because there are many different kinds of wastes involved.

"With 50 types (of paper), each grade of paper might generate a specific amount of revenue," he said. "Computer paper gets top dollar, while newspapers and colored paper receive the least."

Bob Rodriguez of BIRP, whose firm recycles paper, said there are "big bucks" in recycling.

"We pay 5 to 10 cents a pound for computer paper, 1 cent a pound for cardboard and about a half cent a pound for newspapers," he said.

Although ASU does not use this particular firm, Webb said the price per pound is comparable.

"Currently, we take out 6000 tons (of trash) per year," he said. "Of course, not all of that is recyclable; but if it were, it would be equal to $1.2 million in savings for the University."

Webb said the proposal calls for paper to be recycled into two categories — computer printout and all other.

"Otherwise, too many different containers are involved," he said.

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. (AP) — Dorothy Bartlebaugh always wanted to walk down the aisle with the man of her dreams, but she never imagined she would do it in a supermarket — in the generic section.

Bartlebaugh, 38, and Russell Marshall, 46, were married Thursday night in Aisle 3 at the County Market store, where they met in July 1988.

"It's romantic," she said. "We fell in love with each other on first sight in the generic section."

Bartlebaugh said she was looking for bargains, not love, when she met Marshall in the supermarket in a small town 70 miles northeast of Pittsburgh.

"I was comparing the prices, and he turned around and started talking to me," she said. "He said, 'Don't I know you from somewhere?'" and I said, 'Not really.' I was going to buy some soap powder and then he started talking to me."

SAY NO! TO DRUGS

ASU hopes season's finish resembles start

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

ASU volleyball Coach Patti Snyder cited two reasons why she wants the Sun Devils, who are suffering from a nine-match Pac-10 losing streak, to sweep this weekend's season-ending matches.

Snyder said it will not only look good for the University, but it also will provide the players a feeling of confidence.

"It's important for them (the players) to go out with some pride so they will have that confirmation that they're OK," Snyder said. "Plus, it's important for ASU volleyball that we end on a winning note."

"All of the other Pac-10 teams that go to the NCAAs, except the champions, will obviously have to lose, but we are in a position where we can easily end on a winning note. Our kids want to go out in style."

The Sun Devils (3-13 Pac-10, 12-20 overall) begin this weekend's action at 7:30 tonight and Saturday against hosts Oregon State and Oregon. ASU defeated both teams earlier this season in its first set of Pac-10 matches.

Snyder said the fact that her team already has defeated the Beavers, 15-12, 15-7, 15-6, sheds a positive light on the possibility of winning today.

"We feel really confident that we can beat OSU because we're not dealing with a Top 20 team," she said. "But they've had some good wins, and it's not going to be as easy this time."

Among those wins was an upset against seventh-ranked California that the Beavers won in four games. Snyder said OSU's inconsistency scares her.

"OSU is a smaller team, but they are very scrappy," she said. "They do not make very many errors and just keep the ball in play."

"They are hungry for a win so we are expecting a handful from them. We may be more powerful, but OSU is more athletic and scrappy."

Against Oregon Saturday, Snyder said the level of competition will be much higher than the previous night. The Ducks are ranked fifth in the Pac-10 and have defeated such teams as USC and Stanford.

The Ducks' high-horse confidence coupled with an intensity for revenge on ASU should warrant an extremely competitive match, Snyder said.

"They were 9-0 when we beat them so they are definitely going to want some revenge," she said. "They are a senior-laden team and are really playing well right now."

Last season, Oregon suffered a 13-match losing streak. Snyder said although the Ducks might empathize with ASU's similar season, they will most likely use it to their advantage.

"They understand how we're feeling so they are going to jump on us early," she said. "But our kids feel good about themselves and they are going to go out and play volleyball and let winning take care of itself."

Sun Devil swim teams play host to talented Trojans

Womens swimming to face some of nation's best teams in Pac-10, meets Trojan swimmers at home

By LARRY NEWELL
State Press

The Pac-10 conference traditionally has been a national power in collegiate swimming, a status that is likely to be upheld in the 1989-90 season.

"If you're going to compete on a national level, you will have to be successful in the Pac-10, as these are some of the best teams in the nation," ASU womens swimming Coach Tim Hill said.

The eighth-ranked Sun Devils will get a glimpse of the talent the conference has to offer when they take on 16th-ranked Southern Cal at 3 p.m. today at the Mona Plummer Aquatic Center.

Last Saturday, ASU downed UNLV and Purdue, 89-60 and 94-45, respectively. Despite the Sun Devils seemingly easy victory, Hill said he still sees room for improvement.

"We should beat teams like UNLV and Purdue, and mentally our team did not really have to get up for this meet," Hill said. "Our main weakness right now is our 'that's not my event' attitude toward 'off' events that contribute to the team."

But Hill also noted positive results from the meet. "Overall, we swam very well," he said. "I have seen a great amount of improvement over previous meets, and we had a chance to put people in different events, which gave us a new look."

Individual winners were freshman Betsi Hugh in the 1000-meter freestyle and the 200-meter backstroke, sophomore Heidi Hendricks in the 100- and 200-meter breaststroke and the 50-meter freestyle, sophomore Therese Lundin in the 200-meter butterfly, junior Nancy Osborne in the 500-meter freestyle and senior Bente Rist in the 100-meter butterfly.

"Heidi Hendricks had a very good meet, as did the team as a whole," Hill said.

In the 200-meter medley relay, the Sun Devil team of Hendricks, Lundin, Susie Mortenson and Osborne earned the winning 1:47.61 time.

Mens swimming confronts difficult challenge in second-ranked USC

By LARRY NEWELL
State Press

The 13th-ranked ASU mens swimming team may have its hands full today against last year's NCAA championship runners-up and this season's No. 2 ranked team: Southern Cal.

"This Friday we may be a little undermanned, with Paul Howe, Troy Dalbey and Keith Dennison unable to compete," ASU swimming Coach Ron Johnson said.

Johnson said that Howe currently is attempting to make England's Commonwealth team, while Dalbey and Dennison are expected to join the team in the spring.

"USC is a potential NCAA champion and will probably challenge Texas and Stanford for the title," Johnson said.

The Sun Devils will concentrate on individual efforts and hope for the best on a team basis.

"Our goal this weekend will be to turn in good individual performances, which will hopefully carry us into the Grand Prix meet the 1st, 2nd and 3rd of December," Johnson said.

Last Saturday ASU displayed some of its world class talent when the Sun Devils defeated UNLV, 86-54.

"With only a few exceptions, the team as a whole is coming around really well," Johnson said.

In the individual performances, ASU earned top honors in eight of the 14 events and placed second in five of the remaining six.

Top Sun Devil performances were turned in by sophomore Richard Tapper in the 1000-meter freestyle, sophomore Terry Flock in the 100-meter backstroke, junior Scott Benesch in the 100-meter freestyle, freshman Fort Guerin in the 200-meter backstroke, sophomore David LeBlanc in the 200-meter breaststroke, freshman Willy Landmark in the 500-meter freestyle and senior David Fix in the 200-meter individual medley.

"Willy Landmark's performance in the 500 freestyle was exceptional, and his time of 4:35.11 was close to his lifetime best," Johnson said.

The 200-meter medley relay team of Fix, LeBlanc, Flock and Benesch also turned in a winning performance.

ASU gymnastics duo not going to toy around at pairs meet

By GARY JACKSON
State Press

With Thanksgiving just around the corner and consumers preparing for the Christmas rush, the ASU mens and womens gymnastics teams have put together a hot-selling item.

The product, which can be compared to a Coleco toy, will be introduced Saturday when Colette Anderson and Licurgo (Lico) Diaz-Sandi represent ASU in the Northern Illinois Mixed Pairs Invitational.

Diaz-Sandi and Anderson, who represent ASU as the top male and female gymnasts from ASU, combine to take on the talented tandems of Northern Illinois, Houston Baptist, Oklahoma, Cal-Berkeley and Cal State-Fullerton.

"I've never been in a mixed-pairs meet," said Anderson, a senior. "I've heard they're a lot of fun."

"Lico is very good. If we hit, I think we have a good chance (of winning)."

Similarly, Diaz-Sandi said he was optimistic the pair will be successful at the meet.

"I'm sure Colette is ready," the junior said. "I have confidence in her performance and that gives me confidence to do better."

ASU womens gymnastics Coach John Spini said he gave Anderson the nod to represent the women because she has demonstrated her talents during practice.

"I looked at the seniors first," Spini said. "Colette has been doing well in the gym. She was the most ready on the team. I wanted to send someone who would have success and have a good experience."

Spini said the ASU tandem boasts two of the most talented gymnasts in the nation and should provide a good showing at the meet.

"I think Colette and Lico have a good chance to finish in the top three, and at this point in the season, anybody can win," he said.

Because this meet does not have any bearing on the Sun Devils' ranking, Anderson said she will take more risks during her performances in hopes of receiving higher scores for more difficult routines.

"I don't want to hold back anything because it's not regular season," Anderson said. "I'd like to try everything and see how it goes."

Because the ASU womens team will not begin competition until January, Anderson said this meet will give her an early start.

"It'll be nice to get a meet under my belt before the season starts," she said. "This is my last year. I want to make the best of it and end on a good note."

ASU mens gymnastics Coach Don Robinson said the decision to send Diaz-Sandi was made easily.

"He's probably ahead of everyone else on the team," Robinson said. "Who can beat him in here?"

Robinson said the odds of winning are good for two Sun Devils and Diaz-Sandi should be a favorite to win in floor exercise.

"I can see him and (Colette) winning the competition," Robinson said. "Lico can win floor because he's one of the strongest floor men in the country."

For this meet, the male competitors choose four of the usual six events. Diaz-Sandi said he is most confident with his performances in floor exercise, high bar, rings and vault.

"I've been working on making my routines more consistent," he said. "I've also been working on a lot of new tricks so I can get a better place at the NCAAs, but you have to put them aside for this competition so you can have a more consistent routine."

"The season doesn't start until January," he said. "This is going to give me some exposure. The judges already know me, but this will give me the opportunity to show I'm the best all-rounder (in the country)."

Diaz-Sandi

Bowl execs leave ASU to do or die

Paul Coro
Asst. Sports Editor

The handling of the college football bowls has been about as annoying as the red and blue appearance of the "A" on Tempe Butte earlier this week.

One minute, Peach Bowl representatives have everyone connected with ASU football, from Elvis to the higher athletic echelon, excited about the possibility of playing in Atlanta.

Suddenly, the Sun Devils are putty in the hands of a power- and money-grubbing bowl committee.

ASU, unlike the other schools under consideration for the Dec. 30 bowl, has absolutely no control over its own postseason destiny because it's idle this week.

Georgia is a lock-in, while the vacant slot will be claimed by either Virginia, Syracuse or the Sun Devils.

UVA is guaranteed the bid if it loses to Maryland Saturday. A Cavalier win would give them the ACC title and a Florida Citrus Bowl invitation.

But if Virginia wins, the Peach Bowl may wait until the Thanksgiving Day Syracuse-West Virginia match-up before filling the gap. If the Orangemen beat the Mountaineers, they could bring in the new year in Atlanta.

Oh, and then there's ASU, the team whose Peach Bowl appearance seemed to be etched in stone just three days ago. Now the Peach picture has turned fuzzy.

The bowl authorities said they will not wait until the Nov. 25 "Big Game", which is two days after the SU-WVU game. Bogus attitude!

The big crock of the bowls is UofA's situation. The inaugural Copper Bowl in Tuscum, the derriere of college football, decided (solely for financial reasons) to invite the hometown Wildcats to this illustrious bowl.

The bowl has walked into a situation in which they will be stuck with the nation's worst bowl team; UofA will sport an unimpressive 6-5 record after a Sun Devil win.

Hoping for a slice of the Peach pie, ASU Athletic Director Charles Harris may have turned down a Copper Bowl invitation, which the Wildcats jumped all over. Bowl officials wanted an early commitment, which is unfair to a school with options.

Regardless, Harris was unable to get in touch with the Penny Bowl hierarchy when he got wind of UofA being invited to stay home for the holidays. Having the "Big Game" winner was about as pleasing to bowl officials as a trip to Tuscum is for Sun Devil fans.

To further exemplify the priority of bowl pictures, the major reason the Sun Devils may have an upper hand over Syracuse is because of their Pac-10 affiliation. ABC, who televises the Peach Bowl, has four more years left on its Pac-10 TV contract. ASU's national exposure would be more beneficial for ABC than to telecast any CFA school.

It would be unethical for the Peach Bowl to wait past Monday to make a decision. If they do not procrastinate, the Sun Devils are at an advantage because they have just one game remaining to the 6-3 Orangemen's two. Plus, ASU may be attractive as the Pac-10 runner-up.

The disarray of the bowls extends to the big-time games. National championship games are heralded because of their decisiveness. The problem enters when undefeated teams do not have an opportunity for No. 1 billing because a group of coaches and writers have judged them to be a third-rate team.

Such is the case for Alabama this season. The Crimson Tide will be undefeated in all likelihood at season's end but so will Notre Dame and Colorado. Despite how impressive 'Bama may be in the Sugar Bowl, they will not receive any consideration for national championship honors. The Orange Bowl winner is a shoe-in for such accolades.

A bowl mess similar to this year's occurred in 1968 when UofA placed an ultimatum on Sun Bowl officials. The Wildcats told the Sun Bowl committee to give them a bid prior to their game with ASU or they would go elsewhere. The Sun gave in.

ASU won but stayed in Tempe. UofA went to El Paso — and lost.

This year, a 7-3-1 Sun Devil team may stay home while a 6-5 Wildcat team pulls in $500,000.

But ASU will take that chance given the possibilities. A trip to the East Coast is surely more attractive to players than a cruise down I-10 to a stadium that is rarely full. The Peach Bowl pays $900,000 and is on network TV rather than the Copper's cable.

Three weeks ago, a bowl bid seemed about as likely as the Cardinals winning the Super Bowl. Now, the thought of a real bowl game (as opposed to the Copper Dull Bowl) has the Sun Devil faithful humming "Dixieland."

Ice Devils' trip will feel like home

By TOMI McELROY
State Press

ASU ice hockey Head Coach Jim Manguso said the Ice Devils' matches tonight and Saturday night at Southern Cal should not be as difficult as the team's first weekend road trip at UofA.

"It won't be as hard as it was in Tucson," Manguso said. "The arena isn't that big, and the crowd probably won't be very big. We should feel right at home."

However, ASU (4-2) and USC (3-0-1) will play on an Olympic size rink which is 15 feet wider than the standard 200 by 85 foot rinks.

"We're hoping it (the rink size) will open up the game for us," Manguso said. "We have the speed for it."

A new player, Brett Boyke, has been added to the Ice Devil offensive lineup after waiting for his equipment to arrive from Wisconsin.

USC first-year Head Coach Larry Bruyere said the rink may cause some problems for the Trojans because the team has a tendency to play around with the puck.

"They are coming together real well," Bruyere said. "Since it's a club sport they pay to play, and I can only expect so much. But they have a good attitude and are improving with every game."

Bruyere said rookie defenseman Todd Lyonnais and Chad Adams, both from Alaska, should contribute a lot of talent to the team.

The USC roster consists of 20 players, and Bruyere said the depth is of some concern.

"We have seven or eight players that are really competitive, but after that it really drops off considerably," Bruyere said. "They all try hard. Those who don't have as much talent make up for it with effort."
