Regents to discuss planned tuition hike

By NICOLE CARROLL
State Press

Out-of-state tuition for ASU and UofA may go up by as much as $1,720 next fall if the Arizona Board of Regents votes Feb. 16 to alter its tuition policy.

In addition, in-state tuition will be raised by at least $116, in accordance with Board policy.

The Board is planning to hold public hearings on Jan. 25 in the ASU College of Law's Great Hall to discuss the proposed increases.

The process of increasing tuition is always controversial; however, this round could produce substantial setbacks for some non-resident students.

All students must split the cost of their education with the state. The regents calculate the cost of education for 1989-90 to be $6,828.

Currently, resident students pay 20.5 percent of the cost, or $1,362. Out-of-state students pay for 82.5 percent of their education, or $5,484.

The Board is considering having out-of-state students pay up to 100 percent of the cost of their education, which the regents calculate will reach $7,204 in 1990-91.

Associated Students of ASU President Paul Larson said he is not concerned about the percentages, but is skeptical of the regents' total cost of education calculation.

"The (tuition) numbers are based upon calculating the cost of education," Larson said. "That whole method is being questioned — not only by the students, but by the regents."

Larson said the Arizona Students Association will present a new cost of education formula to the regents at the Jan. 25 hearing.

"The students will be suggesting an alternative method of calculating the cost of education," Larson said. "That would make the increase lower."

Odus Elliot, regents associate director of academic affairs, said the Board is considering the non-resident increase in response to community concern about state support for non-tax-paying students.

"I think there is a growing concern about the state subsidizing individuals who are not tax-paying citizens in our state system," Elliot said. "The Board is being responsive to the preference."

Regent Donald Pitt said he approves of this increase for students who have not yet entered the university system, because they would arrive knowing the full cost of their education. But he said something should be done to buffer the impact of this increase on non-resident students who are already established here.

He said the Board should "grandfather," or exempt, current out-of-state students and instead raise the percentage of the cost of

Former trailer tenants file claim

Allege ASU permitted raw sewage in park

By HOBART ROWLAND
State Press

Former tenants of a mobile home park purchased by ASU in 1984 say the University failed to maintain the property's sewer and water systems, making conditions at the park unlivable.

"I had a pool of sewage in my yard 15 feet by 15 feet, and there was sewage coming in my sink and toilet," former resident Ashley Wagner said during an interview with 12 other angry mobile home owners, who have filed a claim seeking $200,000 in compensation from the state of Arizona.

But ASU officials contend that the park was properly maintained.

"The sewer system at the park was old," said John Riley, assistant director of purchasing at ASU. "But its maintenance was never neglected."

ASU acquired the Apache Trailer Park, a 2 3/4-acre property in the 700 block of Apache Boulevard, six years ago as part of the South Campus expansion project, with plans to build student dormitories on the site.

Immediately after obtaining the land, the University notified park residents that they had to move off the property by Aug. 31, 1989. Problems arose last year, when four residents failed to make rental payments, claiming that park conditions had deteriorated.

David May, an ASU alumnus who lived at the park until 1987, said that the whole sewer system needed to be replaced. "What happened there affected a lot of people," May said. Theresa Freeman, another tenant, said her children used

Peck named finalist for UNM presidency

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

Richard Peck, ASU vice president for academic affairs, is visiting the University of New Mexico today as one of two finalists for UNM's presidency.

Peck was one of 100 nominees for the top UNM position after the search began in July, a member of the New Mexico Board of Regents said. The two finalists were announced Jan. 9, and the final decision will be announced Friday.

"We were looking for an outstanding academic at a major research university," said Roberta Cooper Ramo, chair of the search committee. "We wanted someone who demonstrated a real commitment to making significant contributions and had a track record in diversification."

Peck returned to his position of provost and vice president for academic affairs Jan. 2, after serving as ASU interim president from June 1989 to Jan. 1.

He said he was pleased to be nominated for the UNM presidency but was not confident that the position was his.

"It's flattering, of course, to be nominated, but we have not reached the end of the road," said Peck, who plans to accept the position if it is offered to him. "The people who are celebrating my leaving should stop, and those planning my wake should stop."

King holiday battle takes shape

ASU sponsors week of memorial events

By MICHELLE HENRY
State Press

While ASU celebrates this week in memory of Martin Luther King Jr., the battle lines are being drawn in a fight to preserve a paid state holiday in honor of the slain civil rights leader.

Julian Sanders, a Phoenix architect, has teamed up with the Arizona American Italian Club to gather 80,000 signatures to put the question of a King holiday on the November 1990 ballot.

The AAIT is upset that the King holiday replaced Columbus Day as a paid state holiday.

This year's King holiday was canceled Friday after the referendum qualified for the November ballot.

Controversy over the King holiday began in 1986, when then-Gov. Evan Mecham rescinded it, drawing angry criticism from holiday supporters.

During a special session in September 1989, Gov. Rose Mofford and the state Legislature approved the King bill for the third Monday in January. Lawmakers canceled the October Columbus Day to eliminate an additional state paid holiday.

But the rollercoaster ride continued when Sanders, a conservative activist and Mecham supporter, spearheaded a petition drive to repeal the holiday.

Sanders, a Phoenix architect, is convinced the majority of Arizonans do not want a King holiday. He predicted the King vote will go down by a 2-to-1 margin.

"People should look behind the scenes instead of the very superficial side (of King)," Sanders said. "Anyone can write nice (speeches)."

The Rev. Warren H. Stewart, pastor of First Institutional Baptist Church, criticized Arizona residents who want the King holiday nullified.

"If we have to choose who to honor with a holiday, we need to choose an American," Stewart said.

"Martin was born, lived and died in America," he said. "Columbus was from Spain and never made it to the continent. Martin fought for the rights of all people; Columbus was part of the slave trade that stole black people and brought them here. If we need to make a choice, I think we need to choose Martin."

Stewart, who recently ended his term as the chairman of the Arizona Martin Luther King Committee, declared that the fight for a holiday is not over, adding that the most important concern now is for people to register and vote in the November election.

Soviets send reinforcements into Azerbaijan

56 people killed in 'civil war'

MOSCOW (AP) — The Kremlin sent more than 11,000 reinforcements, including Red Army units, to the Caucasus on Tuesday to halt a civil war between Armenians and Azerbaijanis that has killed 56 people.

New clashes were reported, and Tass said 2,000 people armed with anti-aircraft guns and other artillery were massing on hills around Nagorno-Karabakh, a disputed district that has become a flashpoint for the

"We can't bring ourselves to pronounce it out loud, but what is happening now in Karabakh, in northern Azerbaijan, can unambiguously be termed a civil war," correspondent O. Shapovalov wrote in the newspaper Komsomolskaya Pravda.

"The madness is continuing," an editor at Armenia's official Armenpress news agency said from Yerevan, the republic's capital.

Gorbachev and the Soviet Presidium declared a state of emergency in the strife-torn mountain area Monday night, empowering the government to deploy units of the Soviet army, navy and KGB to protect lives and guard vital installations such as railroads.

Internal security troops already in the region have been incapable of halting the most protracted ethnic conflict in Gorbachev's nearly five-year tenure as Kremlin leader, said Izvestia Tuesday to threaten his entire campaign for "perestroika," or economic and social reform.

More than 6,000 additional internal security troops were sent Tuesday to reinforce existing Interior Ministry detachments, Tass said. To assist them, more than 5,000 Red army soldiers, who traditionally carry heavier weaponry, also were dispatched, Tass said.

Soviet media did not say how many total troops were in the region.

Residents of Yerevan and Baku, Azerbaijan's capital, said by phone they had seen no sign Tuesday night of the reinforcements' arrival.

The Bush administration supported Gorbachev's use of troops in the Caucasus and criticized feuding Azerbaijanis and Armenians for "revisiting old ethnic hatreds."

"We recognize the right of any state to ensure the safety of its citizens and it looks like that's the primary concern at the moment," said White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

The flareup is the most violent between mainly Moslem Azerbaijanis and mostly Christian Armenians since their decades-old feud over Nagorno-Karabakh erupted in bloody clashes two years ago.

The region, though predominantly Armenian, has been attached to Azerbaijan since 1923, and the current troubles were sparked by its demand in February 1988 to be annexed by Armenia.

The Kremlin emergency decree empowers local officials to ban demonstrations and strikes, impose curfews, censor the media, confiscate weapons, disband unofficial organizations and detain people for up to 30 days. Interior Ministry officials said they could not recall such measures being taken in the country since World War II.

neighboring groups' ethnic hatreds.

Combatants in the region 1,250 miles southeast of Moscow had seized stores of hand grenades, the Interior Ministry said. In Armenia, "demands are being made to arm citizens and send them to Nagorno-Karabakh," according to the official Soviet news agency, and the government newspaper Izvestia reported 16 attacks on weapons depots in 24 hours by Armenians hunting for guns.

In one raid, 3,000 people stormed a police station in Armenia's Artash region and seized 106 automatic weapons, 30 carbines, 27 rifles, more than 3,000 cartridges and a grenade-launcher, the newspaper said.

Bill would set drug test rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate bill setting federal drug-testing standards for private companies would provide consistency and eliminate lawsuits, supporters including former Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said Tuesday, but critics contend it would erode workers' rights.

The bill, sponsored by Sens. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and David Boren, D-Okla., does not require businesses to test employees but gives them the clear right to do so — a provision supporters said would prevent unwarranted court challenges to drug-testing policies.

Hatch said the measure protects the privacy rights by establishing guidelines for circumstances under which businesses can test their workers.

But Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on civil and constitutional rights, called the measure "a horrible invasion of Americans' rights without probable cause."

The bill might have support when Congress returns next week, Edwards said.

Bank forfeits $14 million

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — An international bank pleaded guilty Tuesday to cocaine-related money-laundering charges, agreed to forfeit a record $14 million and to help prosecutors, who say the case has ties to Manuel Noriega.

U.S. District Judge W. Terrell Hodges accepted pleas from two divisions of the Luxembourg-based Bank of Credit and Commerce International and found them guilty, but has not set a date for formally imposing the sentence.

The plea did not affect co-defendants in the $32 million money-laundering case, including six top BCCI banking officers and two Colombians whom the government claims were part of the Medellin cocaine cartel. Their cases opened with pretrial motions Tuesday in a trial expected to last five months.

Under the agreement signed Tuesday, BCCI, S.A. and BCCI Overseas Ltd. are to forfeit $14 million in assets frozen earlier by the government. Prosecutors claim that represents profits made from the sale of cocaine in American cities and laundered in a series of complicated worldwide banking transactions.

AT&T outage blamed on computer 'bug'

BEDMINSTER, N.J. (AP) — AT&T blamed its largest service outage ever on a computer glitch in a new system designed to bolster its long-distance network, and moved quickly Tuesday to make amends with customers.

"It was certainly the most far-reaching service problem we've ever experienced," AT&T Chairman Robert E. Allen said.

American Telephone & Telegraph Co. discovered the problem about 2:30 p.m. EST Monday, and did not correct it until nine hours later. More than half the long-distance calls placed on its nationwide network during the trouble did not go through, the company said.

AT&T said it traced the glitch to a computer in New York City that helps direct calls through the vast telephone network. Allen said it was not caused by a computer virus or sabotage.

The company said the problem stemmed from a bug, or "logic" problem, inadvertently written into the software, or computer program. The problem spread to more than 100 switching centers.

"It was almost like a nightmare waiting to be dreamed," said AT&T spokesman Burke Stinson. "It was there all the time but the conditions were not right."

In a briefing at the company's sprawling Network Operations Center in this New York City suburb, Allen announced plans to offer a discount day when all of AT&T's approximately 80 million customers can make calls at reduced rates.

Allen called the plan a small compensation to customers who couldn't do business or reach friends and relatives during the outage. The company had not decided the discount and date, but Allen said AT&T is filing an emergency petition with the Federal Communications Commission to approve the measure.

Other options for compensation are being reviewed, said Herb Linnen, another company spokesman, but details were not yet available.

Allen said he could not estimate losses to AT&T or its customers from the trouble. Airline reservation centers,

First lady backs women on battlefield

WASHINGTON (AP) — Barbara Bush said Tuesday that women should be able to serve in combat as long as they have the physical strength to match their abilities to shoot and fly as well as men.

"Certainly, emotionally and mentally they are more than able to compete with a man," she said in a wide-ranging interview with three reporters. She also said:

•Her eyes haven't improved from the just-completed radiation treatment to combat symptoms of Graves disease, but she is cautiously optimistic. "I'm so eager to be better that I think I'm better," she said, acknowledging she still has double vision, especially in the morning.

•She doesn't know why her soaring popularity consistently surpasses President Bush's own high ratings. "I don't threaten anyone. I'm just a nice, fat grandmother," she offered as an explanation.

•Her son, Neil Bush, "hasn't done anything wrong" in his onetime role as a board member of Silverado Savings and Loan. Neil Bush has been questioned by federal regulators about the failed S&L.

Asked whether women should serve in combat, as they did in Panama, Mrs. Bush gave a "qualified yes."

Bush

"If I thought a woman physically could pick up someone who was wounded and carry them to safety, if I thought they could throw a hand grenade as far as a man, then I would say fine. . . They can shoot as well. They can fly as well. The only problem I would have is if it risks somebody else's life because they couldn't throw a hand grenade as far or carry (someone)."

President Bush has said he would be willing to hear recommendations from the Pentagon about women in combat. The Pentagon's official policy is that women do not serve in combat roles. Women unexpectedly became involved in combat in Panama.

Mrs. Bush said "George doesn't hide" secrets from her, including the Panama invasion, and that he discusses ideas with her about world affairs. But Mrs. Bush said she knew something was afoot even before the president told her the specifics of the invasion.

"It was very clear to me that we were having an awful lot of people in the house," she said. "I knew pretty clearly that something was happening."

Mrs. Bush said she was surprised at how much she enjoys being first lady.

"I thought I'd like it but I never dreamed that I would love it," she said.

She said her most difficult duty was to attend a memorial

Challenges ahead for Coor

Lattie Coor began his first semester as ASU's president on Jan. 1, and before the semester is over, he may wish that he'd never left Vermont. Our University is faced with a myriad of problems which, if handled improperly, could relegate ASU to a permanent place in the backwaters of higher education.

This means that now is a crucial time in the life of ASU as an institution of higher learning, a time when decisions will be made that will shape the University's future well into the 21st century.

First and foremost, ASU is faced with a dilemma very familiar to most students here — too many expenses and not enough income.

ASU is now struggling to adapt to the tremendous growth that began in the 1960s and accelerated sharply in the '70s and early '80s — in retrospect, more growth than was prudent.

The challenge for Coor in the '90s is to find a way to manage this legacy of growth in the face of a tightened state budget. Unfortunately, the easiest solution to ASU's growth problems is to spend more money — money that, as Gov. Mofford has already made quite clear, isn't going to materialize.

Everyone knows that the giddy go-go days of unrestrained growth must not return. But what has yet to be decided is how the University is going to manage the growth that has already occurred. Should the University build another branch campus? Should it raise admission standards — excluding marginal students to limit enrollment? ASU has wrestled with these questions for many years, and to date, no solution has been reached — but time for stalling is running out.

Coor will need all of his reputed skill as a manager and university advocate to get ASU through the coming tough budgetary times.

But his difficulties won't stop there. . .
 • Tuition: Always a point of contention, tuition will be an even more volatile issue this year. The proposal now on the table would provide for a fair-sized tuition hike for in-state students, and a massive increase for out-of-state students.

Obviously the point of increasing tuition is to generate revenue for the University, but the huge increases in out-of-state tuition that the Board of Regents is proposing violates an unwritten contract the University has with its out-of-state students. Luring students here with promises of low tuition and then increasing fees by as much as $1,700 — with no provision for "grandfathering" in the increase — is like a con man running a bait and switch.

• Accreditation problems: Part of the fallout from the unrestrained growth of the past is that some colleges at the University have run into accreditation problems. In the case of the business college, the student-to-teacher ratio was cited as a major problem. The solution: Have fewer students. These students didn't leave ASU; they just enrolled in other colleges at the University. This influx of students into other programs is likely to cause a domino effect of accreditation problems University-wide.

• Minority issues: The racial incident on Alpha Drive in April 1989 opened wounds within the University community that will take years to heal. Coor's challenge will be to reach out to minorities and prove to them that he is committed to recruitment and retention — at a time when funding for such efforts is limited. He also must ensure that the minority students who are already here will find an atmosphere that nurtures learning — not racial intolerance and hatred.

It is encouraging to note that Coor has a reputation as someone who enjoys pressing the flesh. This is good because it is important that the leader of ASU present an effective defense of educational spending to the Legislature — a fact that was lost on his predecessor, J. Russell Nelson.

ASU holds a great deal of promise as it enters the last decade of the 20th century. But if this University is to continue to be an "up-and-coming university," Lattie Coor will have to deal quickly and effectively with the above problems. Otherwise, ASU will become nothing more than a huge community college — with a good football team.

Welcome Dr. Coor. And good luck.

Education reforms costly

Cody Shearer
 North American Syndicate

WASHINGTON — You know the nation's education system is on the rocks when the secretary of education calls for a revolution throughout the entire educational establishment.

What prompted Secretary of Education Cavazos' plea for help last week was the release of another of those national report cards on schools which showed more pathetic results. Since 1980, for example, the percentage of nine-year-olds with basic skills dropped from 68 percent to 63 percent. Among 13-year-olds, almost half lacked the skills needed to read at the eighth-grade level. And for 11th graders, a third could not even complete a job application correctly.

As for keener cerebral skills, the report card found that a majority of America's students were "dreadfully inadequate" in expressing and conceiving their own ideas. While some may know how to read and write a simple sentence, few can summarize from materials they've read or concoct fresh thoughts.

'What Cavazos didn't have the guts to say, for obvious reasons, is that he's part of a team that has only paid lip service to education.'

"As a nation," Cavazos declared, "we should be appalled that we have placed our children in such jeopardy."

What Cavazos didn't have the guts to say, for obvious reasons, is that he's part of a team that has only paid lip service to education. Despite all George Bush's vows about wanting to be "the education president," Bush has not demonstrated a genuine commitment to education.

Though state and local governments have the foremost responsibility in setting educational policy and administering educational programs, it is up to the president and the Congress to use their resources to equalize access to schooling and to improve the quality of American education. But during his first year in office, Bush revealed his cautious proposal, just a small amount more than what President Reagan asked for in his last budget. Yet this wasn't Bush's only deficiency. As of September, the President had left seven top level education department slots unfilled. All but two positions have recently been announced.

The President's approach to education reforms is anything but deep and there is some history to prove it. During the eight years of the Reagan-Bush Administration, education funding fell from 2.3 percent to 1.7 percent of the total federal budget. Furthermore, the number of poor students receiving federally supported basic skills training slid from 7 million in 1980-81 to 5.7 million in 1988-89, even though the number of children requiring assistance increased to 8.5 million. Is it any wonder that the average reading proficiency of African-American and Hispanic 17-year-olds is roughly the same as that of an average white student of four years younger?

Funding questions aside, Cavazos is particularly freaked by the dramatic growth projections in the student population during this decade. Secondary and elementary school enrollment will increase by 9 percent. This means our country will need at least a 15 percent increase in classroom teachers. If we can't teach a smaller school population today, how is the country going to cope in the 1990s? Where will we find the teachers to handle the new instructional load?

Of course, none of this will be easy since the average school teacher makes $28,584 a year. Moreover, being a teacher involves personal risks. Nearly 3 million students, teachers and others were victims of criminal acts on school campuses in 1987, according to the National School Safety Center (NSSC). And, 6.5 million boys and 3.5 million girls participated in fights on school grounds during the previous year.

If this news isn't depressing enough, one must wonder how our nation's youth will compete in the new world order, specifically when it comes to filling high-tech jobs. Beginning next year, U.S. colleges and universities will have to graduate twice as many women, five times as many blacks and seven times as many Hispanics into science and engineering careers to fill the shortages in these careers.

Naturally, the education crisis can be solved if President Bush has the foresight to devote a significant percentage of the so-called peace dividend to education programs. Without such a commitment, one can forget about schools goading the public conscience, fueling aspirations or inspiring commonality.

The burden lies with the federal government to provide the funds for hard-pressed school districts to meet the educational requirements of their communities. Without a surge in spending, our national security will be seriously imperiled.

At some point, Lauro Cavazos is going to have to do more than call for a rhetorical revolution. Someone, after all, has to lead it. And at this point in his administration, it sure isn't going to be George Bush. Perhaps some young Democrat will challenge the president on this issue in 1992. It's one area in which the president is extremely vulnerable.

Ostrom, Zafra collude with regents for funding of club

Darrin Hostetler
Editor

Look who's coming to dinner.

After years of plotting, dealing and outright lying by backers of ASU's faculty club, a select group of professors and administrators are finally going to get their elite campus bar/dining hall, to be housed in the historic ASU Fine Arts Annex.

At the last meeting of the Arizona Board of Regents on Jan. 5, the Board approved a University request for $1.7 million to get the faculty eatery off the ground.

For club supporters, it is indeed a tasty package. Their main course will not only include the club, provided by a "loan" from the University, but also a complete selection of savory trimmings — featuring elegant marble floors, decorative ceramic tiles and detailed wood accents.

This delicious deal was arranged by ASU's Director of Development Lonnie Ostrom, Business Affairs Vice President Victor Zafra and their gang of bottom-line junior executives in the ASU business affairs office, who proclaim that the luxurious club is going to be the greatest boon to ASU faculty since computer-graded testing, and that it will easily support itself financially.

But in fact, when you total up the cost of various club feasibility studies conducted by ASU and the total cost of constructing and operating the club, what you've got isn't a boon, but a nearly $2 million boondoggle.

"Boondoggle," though, makes it sound more like a well-intentioned accident. And the faculty club was anything but an accident.

The club was artfully handled by Ostrom and Zafra, two of the University's most powerful administrators, who slowly and deliberately steered the club project through the proper channels, pushing all the right buttons, playing all the right games with all the right officials and lying when necessary to get their little club.

And now the taxpayers will get to pick up the check.

For Ostrom and Zafra the taste of their successful manipulation must be sweet.

For the rest of us, however, the whole thing is unappetizing and leaves a bitter aftertaste.

I, for one, am just a little sick to the stomach.

ASU officials estimate that the budget cuts proposed by Gov. Mofford in her State of the State address last week will require the University to tighten its belt by about $9 million.

So while the University braces for a nearly $9 million budget cut — which is going to directly affect the quality of our education — and while students get set to face potentially the largest tuition increase in state history to offset that deficit, ASU is planning to drop nearly $2 million on a bar and grill for a few well-heeled faculty and administrators.

And what is worse, the $2 million is only the beginning.

All signs indicate that the club will never show a dime of profit. The club will not have enough members to be financially independent and will never repay the money "loaned" to it by ASU, as Ostrom and Zafra claim it will.

A quick look at similar clubs in the Pac-10 and around the country reveals only one — UCLA — had a money-making year in 1988. And the Bruin club has been around for 30 years, has 2,500 members and relied on substantial university help until very recently.

The rest of the clubs regularly run in the red and require their respective schools fully to support their operations.

Why? Because the cost of providing food services for a small group of faculty and staff is usually prohibitive.

Providing complete meal and bar service for an exclusive group of a few hundred, or even a few thousand, is incredibly expensive, and the high prices that the food-service industry must charge club members for that service tends to keep other members away. Anyone involved in food-service or catering recognizes this as a basic rule of business.

And it will be proven true at ASU, where the university club has fewer members (600) and higher initiation dues ($300) than any other Pac-10 club, all of which will make it the most exclusive — and most expensive — of all.

A feasibility study conducted by a consultant for the University predicted that the club would be self-supporting — based on a prediction that the club will grow by at least 100 new members annually. A figure which, in light of membership costs, is optimistic to the extreme.

In addition to high initiation fees and monthly dues, the club will require members to fork over between $10 and $20-plus for dinner. Few faculty members will be able to afford this, much less the poorly paid masses of staff members, many of whom are officially below the poverty level.

If the consultant is counting on those janitors who have been denied the right by ASU to pick up and redeem aluminum cans on campus — in order to earn a few extra bucks a week — to run out and snatch up a pricey University Club membership, they are sadly mistaken. Although technically open to classified staff members, the club will exclude them by simple economics.

In addition, the consultant based the membership projections on the record of the Phoenix University Club, a ritzy downtown club open to pretty much anyone who has ever attended college anywhere. This is obviously a much larger pool of potential members to draw on than the limited numbers at ASU — and was a ridiculous choice for comparison.

Of course, the consultant, on Zafra's orders, never bothered to look at disastrous record of other clubs around the country.

Because Zafra knew what the record would show.

And that wasn't part of the plan.

Indeed, there are few people bold or stupid enough to look you in the eye and say that the faculty club even has a chance of being self-supporting, much less of paying back ASU's investment in the club. And now that the club is a done deal, ASU will be forced to forever subsidize the facility — to the tune of several hundred thousand dollars a year — long after Ostrom and Zafra move on to whatever dark corner of hell is reserved for administrators.

But what really is upsetting is not what they did, it's the way they did it.

After years of indifference from ASU administrators and the state Legislature, who have saddled instructors with huge, unwieldy classes and stiffed them with miniscule pay raises, professors at this University deserve a few perks.

At first glance, one such perk — the University Club — sounds like a good idea.

Give professors and administrators a place to eat together, fraternize, have a drink and talk. Let it be a place to build a sense of community, to discuss University matters — and a place to have fun. They deserve it.

Good, except that the club costs too much money — with no guarantee that it won't cost a lot more money — and comes along at exactly the wrong time.

Ostrom and Zafra understood this. As the state faces a massive budgetary crisis, they knew that the idea of a state-subsidized faculty playpen would never wash with legislators or members of the University community.

So they had a ludicrous, superficial study done by a highly paid consultant and portrayed the $1.7 million as a "loan," to be paid back by the club — which was "proven" to be a safe financial risk based on the virtually meaningless study.

And to top it off, they snuck the $1.7 million club proposal through the Board of Regents while the student body, student government officers and the State Press were conveniently on winter vacation, instead of holding the measure until February or March, as the business affairs office had promised.

Thus they effectively completed an end run around students and the rest of the University community that clings to the irrational belief that there just might be better uses for taxpayers' money than the construction of a faculty dining club. A high-priced one, at that, and one that deliberately excludes the largest section of the University community — students.

We could conclude from all this that Lonnie Ostrom and Victor Zafra care much more about getting what they want for themselves and their friends than about achieving the University's mission — to provide an education for students.

Or, on a more vulgar level, we could simply conclude that they are selfish, deceitful little weasels.

At the very least, we can conclude that their behavior, in a time of statewide financial crisis, invites close scrutiny.

It was interesting, and not a little disheartening, to see that no one at the regents meeting when the faculty club was approved voiced any concern about the plan. Not even the student regent, Peggy Stephens, spoke out.

But it is doubtful that state legislators, constantly alert to waste at Arizona universities, will also wink at the expenditure.

I hope that, as consideration of the University budget approaches this spring, and ASU administrators begin their annual plea for leniency from the budget-cutting axe, legislators take a look at how some of the money they are allocating is being spent.

They might be interested to know about the ASU faculty bar and grill.

With a little luck, they might even point out to Ostrom and Zafra that it is indiscreet to feast while the rest of the state suffers though financial famine.

Student finishes studies 3 days before her death

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Beverly McKerracher jotted down the note to herself in a spiral notebook:

Keep going.

It was late November and McKerracher, a 29-year-old ASU student, was losing a 2½ year battle with brain cancer. But she wanted to earn her bachelor's degree in marketing — a goal so important she even deferred undergoing further medical treatment until the semester ended.

On Dec. 7, about two weeks after McKerracher scribed the motivational note, she neared her goal when she handed in her final assignment.

Three days later, she was admitted to the Barrow's Neurological Institute at St. Joseph's Hospital in Phoenix, where she lapsed into a coma.

McKerracher died on Dec. 15, one week before graduation.

"She thought it (her degree) was a very important goal," McKerracher's father, Alvin, said in a recent telephone interview from Belleville, Ill. "I think it was her last will and testament."

University officials will award McKerracher her degree posthumously, said Lenna Erickson, an assistant to the dean of student life.

"It's pretty heroic," Erickson said of McKerracher's efforts. "She was a real determined young woman."

Alvin McKerracher said his daughter began her education at ASU in 1982 and attended classes part time while she worked as an advertising supervisor for a local J. C. Penney catalog outlet. She recently left the job so she could concentrate on school, he said.

After the Illinois native was diagnosed with cancer in 1987, she underwent surgery and had routine checkups and radiation treatment, her father said. But last summer the cancer reappeared.

Toward the middle of last semester, when her condition worsened, McKerracher's mother and one of her two sisters traveled to the Valley to help her make sure she was meeting her graduation requirements.

"They (McKerracher's family) impressed upon me that this was a very important thing in her life," said Jan Partin, a College of Business academic adviser who worked with McKerracher's family.

Partin and others at ASU said they were inspired by McKerracher's tenacity.

"I think this is a very amazing accomplishment," Partin said. "As an adviser, you hear 95 percent of the students you deal with complain (about ASU)."

"It's sort of encouraging — here is a person who went out of her way and did it (got her degree) with incredible odds against her," she said. "I never saw anyone go after (a degree) that badly. She sure is a role model."

Gary Brunswick, a doctoral student who taught McKerracher's retail management class, said he will always remember her accomplishment.

"It'll stick in my mind for quite some time," Brunswick said. "It makes me think, others too, who have the privilege to meet someone like Beverly, that they have a lot to be thankful for."

"It took a lot of guts," he said.

Those who knew McKerracher said that despite her illness, she did not want sympathy and told very few people about the cancer.

"She tolerated it so well and tried so hard not to let it show," McKerracher's sister, Priscilla, said. "Not even many of her friends had any idea she had it."

Priscilla McKerracher described her sister, who enjoyed oil painting and charcoal drawing in addition to outdoor sports, as a person who always tried to keep a positive attitude.

As her sister's condition worsened, Priscilla McKerracher said going to class became McKerracher's "one focus that kept her going."

She said her sister wanted a degree because "she knew you just couldn't function in society and be appreciated without a degree."

Priscilla McKerracher said that although her sister died before graduation, she believes McKerracher knew she had accomplished her goal.

"She knew in her heart and mind she had made it."

Officials re-evaluate use of lobbyists for University

By KELLY JAIN
State Press

With a new president on board, ASU officials decided not to renew the University's yearly contract with a Washington, D.C., lobbying firm.

University officials allowed the contract to expire Dec. 31, 1989, because "the timing was appropriate to re-evaluate it, especially with a new president," said Brent Brown, vice president for University relations.

Associated Students of ASU President Paul Larson agreed. "It doesn't surprise me, especially with a new president."

Brown said the decision was not connected with the firm's lobbying ability.

He said Cassidy & Associates, the lobbying firm, was instrumental in obtaining funds for the Goldwater Center for Science and Engineering, adding that ASU generally has been satisfied with the firm's performance.

The ASU Foundation, the main fundraising arm of the University, payed the firm $20,000 a month from the time it was hired in 1986 until it secured $25 million in funding for the new science and engineering center a year later from the federal Department of Energy.

Most major universities in the country hire lobbyists in Washington to compete for research dollars.

ASU falls behind other universities in federal funding, according to the Department of Education. ASU did not make the list of the top 100 colleges receiving federal funding for fiscal year 1986, the most recent year for which data are available.

The California Institute of Technology, which received nearly $1 billion, topped the list. The UofA ranked 36th.

Brown said he is not sure when new ASU President Lattie Coor will evaluate the lobbyist's efforts and decide whether or not to renew the contract. However, "it won't take long to complete the evaluation," he said.

Meanwhile, the University is waiting for a summary report from Cassidy regarding its lobbying efforts. Brown said it will take at least a few weeks to receive the summary.

Even if Coor decides not to renew the contract with Cassidy, Brown said he believes ASU should have a lobbyist in the nation's capital.

"We need some kind of a presence in Washington, D.C.," he said.

Both UofA and NAU have lobbyists, he said, adding that a university as large as ASU needs a lobbyist.

University Club funding approved by Board

By NICOLE CARROLL
State Press

The Arizona Board of Regents voted unanimously at its January board meeting for initial approval of $1.7 million in ASU investment income to fund the University Club, an on-campus dining facility for faculty and staff members.

The Board delayed voting on the controversial proposal in October, claiming the club funding needed more research.

Victor Zafra, vice president for business affairs, said the same consultant who did the initial club research, Pannell Kerr Forster, provided the Board with the new numbers.

"They kind of updated their survey," Zafra said. "We gave them more conservative assumptions."

Of the $1.7 million approved, $885,000 was pre-designated by former ASU president J. Russell Nelson for stabilization of the 82-year-old Fine Arts Annex, the building planned to house the University Club.

"That was already committed to restore a chunk of the exterior," Zafra said.

The remaining $830,500 will be used to redecorate the building and to add dining facilities.

In addition, parking services will fund $49,100 for a new parking lot and surrounding landscaping.

Lonnie Ostrom, president of the University Club board of directors, said the club intends to pay back any University capital investments.

He said the University Club will turn over membership dues and monthly fees to the University until the debt is erased.

The new PKF report shows that this scenario is realistic if the club opens with 600 members and attracts 100 new members each subsequent year for five years.

But Associated Students of ASU president Paul Larson said the club is a money-losing venture.

"The Board needs to understand this is not going to be a revenue-generating project," Larson said. "This club is going to lose money every year. It will require a subsidy."

Faculty and staff members must pay a $25 initiation fee, a $300 renovation contribution and $12 each month in membership fees. Community members may join by paying a $200 membership fee and a $300 renovation contribution. Their monthly fees have not yet been determined.

The updated club revenue figures in the PKF report are based on the collection of fees year-round, not just during the school year.

"If you're going to be a member, you have to pay for 12 months," Ostrom said.

At its meeting this month, the Arizona Board of Regents unanimously approved funding for the controversial University Club, which is planned to be built in the former Fine Arts Annex.

Currently there are 560 members, but Zafra said he's not concerned about reaching the required membership.

"They (the club's board of directors) think they are reasonably conservative figures," Zafra said.

Ostrom agreed.

"I think once it's up and operating, there will be growth," Ostrom said.

He said the club should be ready for use in the summer of 1991.

The PKF report to the Board failed to compare the ASU University Club to similar projects at other Pac-10 schools.

Zafra said this was not an oversight. He said the firm only researched the University Club of Phoenix, a dining facility open to all alumni of any college or university.

The club proposal must now go through project approval from the Board. Construction plans have to be finalized and the food contract has to be put out to bid.

"It's not a done deal," Larson said. "It's just one step closer."

Committee to lure 1993 Super Bowl to Sun Devil Stadium

By NICOLE CARROLL
State Press

With resounding approval from the Arizona Board of Regents, a committee formed to lure the 1993 Super Bowl to Sun Devil Stadium will present its proposal to NFL team owners at their March meeting.

ASU Athletic Director Charles Harris said staging the event in Tempe would bring money, prestige and publicity to the University.

But it could also temporarily take away nearly 5,000 student parking spaces.

The committee must supply the NFL with information concerning lodging, transportation facilities, climate, stadium information and auxiliary areas.

The NFL would require that Sun Devil Stadium and Parking Lot 59 be available for use by Super Bowl organizers one week before the event. The game would be held during the second week of the spring semester.

Harris, also a member of the citizen committee, said he is working toward a solution to the parking problem.

"It is a major issue — we have made that emphatically clear," Harris said.

He said it is not clear whether the NFL will need the space for an entire week, but it will definitely be indisposed for two or three days. The lot will accommodate 30 to 40 broadcast media semi-trucks, 800 sportswriters and corporate hospitality centers.

Ron Kucera, acting assistant director of parking services, said his department was contacted about the pending problem.

"We strongly impressed on people who are evaluating (the Super Bowl proposal) the need the University community has for parking in that area," Kucera said.

Harris said the committee is examining several alternatives for displaced students.

Its ideas include having students park in satellite locations and be bussed to ASU, utilizing empty spaces in campus parking structures and the possible use of parking made available by the City of Tempe's Rio Salado project.

Gennady Gerasimov, the Foreign Ministry spokesman, denied the decree was a backtracking in Gorbachev's reforms, which have led to greater openness and liberalization of society since he became Soviet leader in March 1985.

"I would not interpret this step as being at odds with glasnost and democracy," Gerasimov said. "On the contrary, the step opposes anarchy."

In a front-page commentary in Izvestia, Albert Plutnik wrote: "Perestroika has been forced to defend itself. And it's not its fault if to defend itself and others, it needs the help of emergency measures."

Spokesman Vladimir Yanchenkov of the Interior Ministry, which is in charge of police affairs, said in Moscow the death toll in the Caucasus had risen from 37 to 56 in Azerbaijan and that 156 people had been injured.

Two of the dead were members of law enforcement agencies, he said. Most of the victims were Armenians, the ministry said.

Yanchenkov said authorities had recorded 167 "pogroms," or ethnic attacks, and cases of arson.

The violence exploded Saturday night with anti-Armenian riots in Baku. People were burned alive and a witness said women were thrown from windows.

Fighting rapidly spread to Nagorno-Karabakh and nearby areas of Azerbaijan, with the belligerents using helicopters, armored vehicles, machine guns and other arms seized from government arsenals or offered by their compatriots.

In the Shaumyan region of Azerbaijan, fighters took an armored personnel carrier and infantry fighting vehicle and seized soldiers as hostages, Komsomolskaya Pravda said. The armored vehicle crushed a police car in a "barbarian slaughter," the paper said.

Some of the fighters were masquerading as soldiers by wearing their uniforms, it said.

Soviet TV showed Interior Ministry troops firing in the air as they rode in armored personnel carrier through an Azerbaijani village near Nagorno-Karabakh to enforce the emergency decree.

The ministry said the Azerbaijani People's Front, a grassroots political group that has organized anti-Armenian protests, was preventing arriving troop reinforcements traveling to battle areas by blocking roads.

People's Front militants even seized four tanks without ammunition from a railway station in Zazaly, the ministry reported.

Izvestia said the gang took five soldiers hostage, but later released them and the tanks.

A large cache of explosives was discovered in Azerbaijan in railway cars headed for Armenia, Tass said.

In Nagorno-Karabakh, about 26,000 people — about a sixth of the population — had been detained and nearly 3,000 firearms and other weapons confiscated since the conflict began, Izvestia said.

Azerbaijanis were said Tuesday to be continuing a virtual rail blockade of Armenia's 3.5 million people, cutting short fuel and other supplies.

In Baku, detachment of security troops patrolled the city and armored vehicles moved through the suburbs of the Caspian Sea port, Azerbaijani activist Alesker Siyabov said by telephone.

Siyabov, a member of the Azerbaijani People's Front, said anti-Armenian sentiment was still running high in the republic of 6.9 million people.

Tass said 2,000 Armenians were evacuated by ferry and plane from Baku, an oil-producing center of 1.7 million. Of the 220,000 Armenians who lived there before the strife over Nagorno-Karabakh began, only a few thousand remain, it said.

In February 1988, Azerbaijanis went on an anti-Armenian rampage in the industrial city of Sumgait, near Baku, and 32 people, mostly Armenians, were killed.

telephone marketers and others who depend on telephones were especially affected, officials have said.

The failure, however, may have been somewhat muted by the Martin Luther King holiday, which reduced the load of government, business and banking calls.

AT&T said about 148 million calls were attempted Monday, compared with about 110 million attempted calls on a normal day, mainly due to the number of callers who got busy signals or recordings the first time.

Company spokesman Gary Morgenstern said AT&T completed about 83 million calls Monday, within the range of 80 million to 85 million calls completed on a normal day. About 35 million of those completed calls went through during the problem period.

Allen said he was optimistic the problem would not recur or affect the company's credibility in its battle to maintain its 70 percent share of the long-distance market.

AT&T plans an advertising campaign designed to help show customers it is still "the right choice" in long-distance carriers, Allen said, adding the company plans to contact its large customers to assess the outage's impact.

Eastern Airlines, for example, was still trying to determine how much business it lost when travelers could not get through to its reservation operators.

"We estimate we lost many thousands of calls during the outage and thousands of potential bookings," said Eastern spokeswoman Karen Ceremsack.

Neither MCI Communications Corp. nor US Sprint, AT&T's main competitors, plan to change their marketing strategies to capitalize on AT&T's problem, spokesmen said. Both reported an increase in calls Monday as customers sought alternatives to AT&T.

"It's an unfortunate situation and not one we're going to try to take advantage of in that way," said John Landsberg, a Sprint spokesman at its Kansas City, Mo., headquarters.

AT&T said it would investigate the possibility of transferring major customers to competitors during emergencies. On Monday, AT&T operators at first refused to give out access numbers for its customers to use MCI or Sprint due to a company policy, but the policy was abandoned later in the day, AT&T said.

Mrs. Bush met Tuesday with the reporters in the airy West Hall room of the White House second floor. Her eyes, though tearing slightly, looked less puffy than they have on some recent days.

She said she can "always tell which of my friends have been to the grocery store" when they call to ask about her health after reading dire reports in supermarket tabloids. "They are so fake," she said of the tabloids.

Told that it was a first visit to the second floor for one of the reporters, she insisted on an impromptu tour.

"Look at the tourists. Aren't they cute?" she said, waving to a woman from the window of the room where she keeps her clothes.

On other subjects, Mrs. Bush said:

•She had been "a little testy" about an avalanche of letters saying it's unsafe for the president to attend the Feb. 15 drug summit in violence-torn Colombia. She said she would prefer the summit be elsewhere, but "I can't change his mind or make those decisions."

•She plans to write a book after leaving the White House based on 30 years of diaries, but says it won't be a "kiss and tell."

•"A lot of progress is being made" in her war against illiteracy. "But it's a drop in the bucket. . . . We're trying to change the whole system."

their education they must pay by only 1 percent, which is consistent with current Board policy.

But Elliot said he does not think grandfathering is the obvious answer.

"It's up in the air," Elliot said. "They are exploring the consequences (of grandfathering). We're looking at the administrative complications that it may create."

Regent A.J. Pfister, chairman of the Regent Resources Committee, which is examining the different tuition options, echoed Elliot's opinion.

"The Board is clearly concerned about them (current non-residents)," Pfister said. "I'm not sure that leads to the conclusion of grandfathering."

Pitt said extra paperwork should not be a concern in exempting current out-of-state students from a substantial tuition increase.

"So far as I'm concerned, it may take a little more administrative work, but the administrative work is worthwhile to protect somebody who is already in place," Pitt said.

Elliot and Pfister both mentioned establishing a special financial fund for students who demonstrate financial need as an alternative to grandfathering. They both said students who cannot qualify for financial aid would have to assume the full increase.

"Presumably they (non-qualifying out-of-state students) are able to manage the cost increases," Pitt said.

Elliot agreed.

"Any time students attend a university, they face the possibility of fees going up," Elliot said. "That's a risk anyone would face, particularly one going out of state. There's no guarantee."

But Larson said he does not believe there will be enough financial aid to help all the affected students.

"The Legislature does not feel we should be supporting out-of-state students," Larson said. "Do you think they'll provide financial aid just for out-of-state students? That's ludicrous."

"A grandfather to me is the only option."

Currently there are 8,062 full-time non-resident undergraduates and 1,615 full-time non-resident graduate students. Of the undergraduate students, ASU's Student Financial Assistance Office reports that more than 6,000 do not receive any sort of financial aid.

Currently, out-of-state students taking six or fewer credit hours are eligible for in-state tuition rates. All part-time students pay $77 a credit hour. The change under review would make part-time out-of-state students pay $253 for each credit hour.

Resident students may also be hit with a large tuition increase.

The Board adopted a policy in 1988 requiring a .5 percent increase in the portion of education costs paid by in-state students each academic year.

Based on this policy, the Board is expected to raise in-state tuition anywhere from $116 to $152 a year.

In 1987 in-state tuition was raised $60, and in 1988 it was raised another $82. Last year, due to student protests against a proposed $156 increase, regents settled on a $84 hike.

Pitt said he believes the tuition-setting process should be more consistent from year to year.

"When somebody enters this system, they ought to have a pretty good idea tuition should go up in certain ranges if the cost of education is up," Pitt said. "However, if tuition goes up $50 one year, next year $100, and the next year $150, the process should be more refined. It is not a political game."

Pitt urged the Regents at the Jan. 5 Board meeting to consider the tuition increases carefully.

"I think there has to be more integrity to the way we operate," Pitt said. "We're reacting instead of leading."

King

Pat Quaranta, past president of the AAIC, said he will work together with King supporters to put an alternative proposal on the ballot allowing both the King and Columbus holidays.

Organizers of Monday's downtown march to commemorate King's birthday believe the King holiday cancellation produced the record turnout of 8,000 who walked 4.5 miles from Eastlake Park on Jefferson Street to the State Capitol. The crowd had swelled to 15,000 people by the end of the march.

Strains of "We Shall Overcome," the "Black National Anthem," and several other spiritual tunes rang throughout the crowd, as they marched in tribute to King.

Political, business and civil rights leaders motivated the racially mixed crowd through speeches as they urged the Legislature to reinstate the Columbus Day Holiday, thus blocking the referendum.

Statewide polls indicate 71 percent of voters would vote to repeal the law that substituted King Day for Columbus Day.

King supporters admit Arizona residents must engage in massive public relations and voter registration drives to preserve the King holiday in a statewide election.

Arizona is now one of four states without a paid King holiday, although the Arizona Board of Regents declared the day a University holiday in 1988.

ASU is sponsoring a week-long series of events that will honor the slain civil rights leader, who would have been 61-years-old this week.

Daily events include broadcasts of selected King speeches and slide presentations highlighting the American and International civil rights movements. The film "Cry Freedom" will be aired in the M.U. Cinema from 2 to 4:30 p.m. daily.

Robert Shafer, co-chair of the ASU Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Celebration Committee, said the committee has been working to celebrate the King dream since the University approved the holiday.

"So far we have had a good turnout at the various events," he said. "And we are looking forward to the visit of Dr. Randall Robinson this Thursday. He will be discussing the significance of the King holiday and the situation in South Africa."

Robinson, executive director of the Trans-Africa Association, is the keynote speaker for the tribute to King. He will speak Friday in the Education Lecture Hall at 2 p.m.

Paula Mc Clain, also co-chair for the MLK committee, said the planning for this year's activities began in October. She said that although Arizona has been dealt a setback in establishing the holiday, the committee has made great strides to uphold the King dream for the University's benefit.

'Rescue 911' re-enacts Tempe man's suicide attempt

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Tempe police officer Alison Miller didn't need to rehearse.

"I did the original," Miller said without a hint of nervousness at her acting debut.

Miller, along with fellow officer Steve Sears and several members of the Tempe Fire Department, got a taste of Hollywood last week when they performed the re-enactment of a bizarre Tempe suicide rescue that will be featured on "Rescue 911," a drama-re-creation television show that stars William Shatner.

The re-creation, which is expected to air in February, chronicles the Dec. 11 rescue of a 42-year-old Tempe man who was found nearly unconscious from carbon-monoxide fumes in the garage of his home, where his car's engine was running.

Officers Miller and Sears, who work out of the department's South Tempe substation, responded to a call to go to the man's home after a telemarketer in Tipton, Iowa, randomly dialed his home phone number and heard a disturbing suicide message on his answering machine.

The telemarketer, who was making calls for a survey on television viewership, listened to the message — which was intended for the man's estranged wife — and, believing the man was serious, contacted her supervisor. The supervisor then called Tempe police.

When the officers arrived, they found the man nearly unconscious. Tempe fire paramedics arrived moments later and transported him to a Mesa hospital, where he was revived.

He was later treated at a psychiatric hospital. After his release, the man moved back to his home state of Indiana.

"This is a one-in-a-million type of situation," "Rescue 911" segment Director Greg Goldman said of the show's decision to do the Tempe rescue story. "I think what we do is uplifting stories — people who sink down then have a second chance. This is the case."

"The man feels there is a reason this happened," Goldman said. "The reason is suicide is not the way out and he'd like to get that message to anyone if they are contemplating it."

Cameraman Dusty Powers of KD Films gets a close-up of actor Gregory Dee for a segment of "Rescue 911". The segment is a re-enactment of an Tempe man's suicide attempt by carbon-monoxide poisoning in his garage.

New fire code puts increased responsibility on landlords

By MIKE BURGESS and HOBART ROWLAND
State Press

Tempe landlords will now be required to install and maintain smoke detectors in all rental homes after Thursday's Tempe City Council decision to tighten fire-code prevention standards.

Council members voted 4-1 to make changes in the city's fire code that would also make landlords responsible for installing fresh batteries in the smoke detectors annually.

Tempe Fire Department spokesman Russ Wollam said one of the factors that led to the pursuit of the new code was a three-alarm fire at The Villas apartments, 1717 S. Jen Tilly Lane, in April 1988.

The apartment complex contained no smoke detectors. The fire, one of the city's worst in a decade, caused $1 million in damages and left about 22 ASU students homeless. Wollam said the new code will provide an added amount of safety to renters.

"They can expect an early notification of a fire and that will increase their chances of surviving," he said.

Wollam said ASU students will be affected, since college students make up a large part of the apartment renters in the city.

Tempe's previous code required residential buildings constructed since 1983 to have smoke detectors, but older rental homes and apartments were not specifically covered. Last week's decision will ensure that older units are protected.

Wollam said investigators plan to check classified ads and tax rolls to identify rental units that will require alarms under the new ordinance, which will take effect Feb. 15.

The city's new code is the most progressive in the East Valley. Mesa and Chandler fire codes do not require fitting older units with smoke detectors.

Fire officials estimate there are 40,000 to 50,000 rental units in Tempe, and 70 percent of these households already have smoke detectors. But national statistics show as many as 50 percent of all smoke detectors don't work.

By requiring landlords to change batteries annually, the city hopes to avoid such dangers.

Councilman Bill Ream, who cast the one vote against the measure, said he believes the new standards place too heavy a burden on landlords.

Suzanne Gilstrap, executive director of the Arizona Multihousing Association, argued that revisions requiring landlords to change batteries yearly and keep written maintenance records do not effectively serve the city's purpose.

Tenants, she said, should be responsible for testing and replacing batteries.

The city, which before Thursday was operating under regulations of the 1985 fire code, updates its standards every three years, incorporating amendments proposed by the Tempe Fire Marshal.

Reports of major crimes on campus increased in '89

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Sexual assaults reported to ASU police during 1989 may have reached an all-time high as major crimes on campus rose 35 percent last year, according to Police Department statistics.

"There is a crime problem and we have to address it," said ASU Police Chief Bill Bess, who took over the University's top law enforcement spot in December. "The figures speak for themselves."

Police records show that during 1989, 15 sexual assaults were reported to police — up from the eight reported during the previous year. The jump is an 87.5 percent increase.

"I'm very concerned about the increase in rape reports," Bess said. "One rape is one rape too many."

Bess said most of the incidents were situations where alcohol was involved and the victim knew the suspect.

He said he did not know if the number of rapes reported last year was the most ever for the University, but Leon Shell, who has been ASU's dean of student life since 1972, said he cannot think of a year when the number was higher.

But while the increase in sexual assaults may seem dramatic, University officials say several factors contribute to the rise.

"There's more of an awareness of the crime of rape," Bess said. "Secondly, I think there has been a decrease in tolerance by the victims."

Also, officials point to sexual assault awareness programs in campus residence halls and in the greek system.

The rape statistics are among eight major crime categories that make up the FBI's annual Uniform Crime Report, for which police departments nationwide voluntarily submit their statistics. The numbers included only crimes reported to police.

In addition to rape, assault also showed an increase, rising 28.8 percent. There were 103 assaults on campus in 1989, while 80 occurred the year before.

Bess said he believes alcohol played a factor in the majority of assaults on campus.

In other violent crime categories, there was one robbery reported at ASU both in 1988 and 1989. There has never been a murder on campus.

"I think we're fortunate," Bess said of the murder category.

In property crimes, police records show that burglary had the most significant percentage increase.

Burglary was up 80.6 percent in 1989 with 177 incidents being reported. The previous year 98 incidents were reported.

Loss from burglary in 1989 totaled $95,779.

Theft, auto theft and arson also increased. There were 1,026 thefts in 1989, up 30 percent from the 789 reported in 1988. The total value of items stole in 1989 was $314,469.

Thieves stole 54 vehicles from campus last year a 25.6 percent increase from the previous year. A total of $226,185 worth of vehicles were stolen from campus in 1989.

And arson increased slightly in 1989 with six deliberately set fires being reported. There were five arson cases on campus in 1988.

Arson accounted for $1,499 worth of damages on campus last year.

To combat the increase in crime at ASU, Bess said police plan to increase the visibility of officers at known high crime areas on campus in addition to upgrading the department's crime prevention program.

The Police Department recently received a $28,000 crime prevention grant from the state Department of Public Safety.

Bess said he also would like to see students take a more active role in reporting crimes and working with police.

"We have some work to do and we need help," Bess said.

ASU investigation fails to reveal source in sexual assault case

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

An internal University police investigation has failed to find the police sources who disclosed to the State Press that basketball player Sam Mack was a suspect in a campus sexual assault case, ASU Police Chief Bill Bess said.

In addition, Bess said the probe probably will be discontinued.

"I don't know if it is an important thing to pursue," Bess said. "My opinion is that we have more important things to pursue than this particular situation.

"I will look at the information I get and I hope it will be resolved quickly," he said.

The investigation was launched in late November by Deputy Chief Doug Bartosh, who at the time was the department's acting chief.

Bartosh was upset by the sources' disclosure of Mack's name because Bartosh believed it could have jeopardized the police department's investigation. He said disciplinary action would be taken against the sources if they were found.

In addition, Bartosh also asked the State Press for the names of the sources, but the newspaper refused.

The State Press had quoted unnamed department sources in a November story that reported Mack was a suspect in a sexual assault alleged by an 18-year-old female ASU student. The incident reportedly occurred Nov. 5 in a room at Mariposa Residence Hall.

After the newspaper story, ASU police officially disclosed that Mack, a 19-year-old junior communication major, was a suspect in the case.

Mack, who was suspended from the basketball team by Head Coach Bill Frieder, was never arrested in connection with the case, and the Maricopa County attorney's office later declined to charge Mack because of insufficient evidence.

The redshirt forward, who transferred to ASU from Iowa State University, remains suspended indefinitely by Frieder.

Peck

UNM's new president will take office July 1.

Peck said he has turned down nominations for top university positions in Texas, Oregon, California and New York, adding that his main interests are in Southwestern universities.

"This was a little different — it was in the Southwest," he said. "There are not too many opportunities in this region."

Peck said the primary reason he was nominated was because of his interim presidency.

"I was in the spotlight because of my experience here at ASU," he said.

The Arizona Board of Regents presented a plaque to Peck Jan. 5 for his performance as interim president.

"He demonstrated his dedication to ASU and energy to the job," said Edith Auslander, president of the Board of Regents. "And his nomination is a credit to our university administration. I am pleased when our administrators advance in other systems. We are grateful to him for his humor and enthusiasm."

UNM President Gerald May announced July 1, 1989, he was returning to his position as the university's dean of engineering. As president, he earned $110,000 a year.

UNM has a student population of 28,687, most of whom attend classes at the main campus in Albuquerque. Three smaller campuses and two graduate centers are located nearby.

Peck earned $112,844 both as ASU's interim president and as provost.

The new UNM president's salary will be negotiated, Ramo said.

Eugene Trani is the other finalist for the UNM presidency. He is vice president for academic affairs for the University of Wisconsin, a university system in which the student population totals more than 160,000.

Scheduled campus visits for Trani and Peck include meetings with the regents, May, the President's Council and representatives of the faculty, students, staff, alumni, branch campuses, media and local community.

Puppy credited as hero in house fire

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Sometimes the biggest heroes come in the smallest of sizes. And sometimes they have four legs. Tempe fire officials on Tuesday were crediting an 8-week-old puppy named Blitzen with saving its owners from an early-morning house fire.

"The dog woke them up in time," said Tempe Fire Department spokesman Russ Wollam. "If they were in there a minute or two longer, they would have been victims."

"He saved their lives," Wollam said. Wollam said the fire occurred about 1:45 a.m. at 109 W. Seventh Street. Two engine trucks and a ladder company had the blaze, which caused $3,500 in damages, under control in about four minutes, he said.

The fire was caused by an electrical short in a wire to a table lamp in the living room of the home, Wollam said.

He said the fire began while Melissa Davisson and Douglas Heath, both 19, were asleep. Their slumber was disrupted when Blitzen, a labrador retriever/husky mix, began barking.

"They came out to see why it was making noise," Wollam said, adding that when Heath opened the bedroom door, he was greeted by "a blast of hot air."

"Heat and smoke were throughout the house," he said. Wollam said Heath then used a lamp to break out a bedroom window so he and Davisson could escape.

In addition to Blitzen, which Heath got for Christmas, firefighters also rescued a German Shepherd and two cats, which were treated for smoke inhalation.

"I feel really gifted," Heath said of Blitzen's efforts. "It was really great."

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents on Tuesday:

- A hit-and-run driver caused $2,500 in damages after crashing into four vehicles parked in Lot 63 on Monday afternoon. Police have a suspect in the case but an arrest has not been made.

- A woman was arrested early Tuesday for driving on a suspended driver's license at Normal Street and Apache Boulevard.

- A man was arrested early Monday on a charge of driving with a suspended driver's license at Rural Road and University Drive.

- A thief stole a University employee's keys Monday from first floor trash chute door of the A and B wings at the Cholla Apartment Complex.

Tempe police reported the following incidents on Tuesday:

- A 22-year-old Scottsdale woman was arrested early Monday after she led police on a car chase that reached speeds exceeding 95 mph.

The chase began about 3:05 a.m. when an officer spotted the woman's Chevrolet Camero spin 360 degrees at the intersection of McClintock and University drives.

Officers pursued the woman's car north on McClintock to McKellips Road then east on McKellips to Longmore Road where she was taken into custody by the Salt River/Maricopa Indian Reservation police. She was arrested on charges of driving under the influence of alcohol and excessive speed.

- Thirty-four sticks of dynamite were discovered Sunday in a room at the Tip Top Motel, 2051 E. Apache Blvd. A suspect in the case has not been located.

- An ASU student was robbed of her Gucci purse early Saturday after she was knocked down by an assailant and kicked in the abdomen during a struggle for the purse. The incident occurred about 2:30 a.m. near Sixth Street and College Avenue.

- A 26-year-old ASU student was arrested on an assault charge after he allegedly spit in another man's face while parked at a red light at Fifth Street and Hardy Drive.

- A 20-year-old ASU student was arrested early Sunday on a disorderly conduct charge after he allegedly yelled profanities at an employee at Taco Bell, 936 E. Apache Blvd.

- A 52-year-old Tempe woman was arrested last Friday after she allegedly ran into a neighbor's apartment, broke a screen door and damaged a wall before she stripped off her clothes and beat the residents with a large wooden stick.

- A Tempe man was arrested last Friday night after he allegedly climbed on the roof of Margarita Ville, a bar at 1120 E. Apache Blvd., and attempted to steal a 7-foot-tall helium balloon that was attached to the roof.

- A 30-year-old Tempe man was arrested after he allegedly gouged his brother's left eye during an argument they had about aluminum cans.

Park

to play in pools of sewage in the yard near her home. "My kids were always sick," she said. "I don't know for sure, but I think it was from the sewage."

Wagner said he believes the University simply didn't have the time or the manpower to maintain the property.

"It got to the point where we were stuffing rags into open sewer lines," he said.

Residents also claim that the trailer park, located near popular ASU watering holes the Dash Inn and The Vine, also had security problems.

Tenants said their mailboxes were frequently vandalized, and three residents said they found couples having sex in the park's yard on separate occasions.

Karen Kloc, ASU properties coordinator, said she met with the Dash Inn manager and asked ASU police to step up patrols in the area.

"Any rental property near the ASU campus is going to have these problems," she said.

Attorney and former park resident Raymond Beck claims that ASU had no authority to operate the mobile home park because the park had no relationship to education and was not student or faculty housing.

Riley agreed that although there is some basis in law to Beck's claim, the University "is permitted to acquire land for expansion and operate a commercial enterprise on that land."

At a Tempe Justice Court hearing last March, Beck and the three other residents delinquent in their rent payments to the University told the court that ASU had failed to maintain habitable conditions in the park.

The ASU Physical Plant, Riley said, produced evidence to the contrary.

"Residence areas are always first on their list of maintenance priorities," he added.

Prior to the hearing, Riley said, county health inspectors reported that leaking sewage was coming from faulty connections to the residents' sewer lines.

Riley said the only sewage ASU's plumbers saw leaking in the park came from the trailers themselves, adding that the Physical Plant "did everything it could to correct the problem."

In addition to maintenance and security problems, Beck said tenants were not properly notified of when they had to leave the property and only a few were paid the relocation fees guaranteed them by state law.

"The last owner agreed to sell the property if ASU paid the tenants' moving costs," Beck said. He said only six tenants in the 60-space park have been paid relocation fees.

"The University has wrongly interpreted the law to its own advantage," he said. "By law, all residents of the park are entitled to payment of relocation fees."

But Kloc said that in accordance with state law, all tenants were notified that the land's use would change and the park would close. Kloc maintains that only residents living at the park prior to 1984 were entitled to relocation fees.

A Tempe Justice Court ruling entered April 7, 1989, requires tenants to pay all back rent owed to the University along with $200 in legal fees.

Although Beck filed a motion at Tempe Justice Court to throw out the decision, at a Jan. 5, 1990, hearing, Justice Court Judge Margaret Trujillo ruled that ASU is entitled to all money owed to them by the tenants.

Claiming the hearing was a sham, Beck has submitted a claim against the state of Arizona for $200,000 and plans to take the case to the Maricopa County Superior Court.

Riley said he is ready for the controversy to end.

"Eventually this will all be decided in court, but we hope it never goes that far."

UofA faculty poll says president should be ousted

By NICOLE CARROLL
State Press

Nearly 70 percent of UofA faculty members polled in a survey conducted by the American Association of University Professors said UofA President Henry Koffler should be ousted by the Arizona Board of Regents after one more year as president.

But some student and university officials are questioning the credibility of the survey results.

"We're kind of skeptical of the survey because of the way it was done," said Dean Fink, president of Associated Students of University of Arizona.

The AAUP, a national organization, conducted telephone interviews with 165 tenure-track UofA faculty members Dec. 31 through Jan. 3. Members polled represented 84 academic departments. The results were presented to the regents on Jan. 5.

Fink said the entire faculty should have been polled in order to get an accurate picture of attitudes toward Koffler.

Thomas Rehm, chairman of the UofA faculty, said the questions and the timing of the poll influenced the outcome.

"The poll was given over the phone with a limited number of answers available," Rehm said. "It was also given over a holiday weekend."

The survey contained 11 questions to which the respondents had a choice of answers ranging from "very good" to "very poor" and the option of "no answer."

Carol Bernstein, a UofA professor and acting president of the Arizona chapter of AAUP, said she stands behind the survey as representative of faculty attitudes.

"The regents should never have a president that doesn't have the confidence of the faculty," Bernstein said.

Koffler, who has been UofA president since 1982, was unavailable for comment.

Coor launches new term, new decade at ASU

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

A new decade is here and so is ASU's new president. Lattie Coor, who officially took over the top position Jan. 1, said he is not overwhelmed by the large University and looks forward to improving the quality of life for students.

"I fully welcome the extensive set of issues here," he said. As ASU's 14th president, Coor is facing such issues as campus overcrowding and minority recruitment and retention.

Coor said he will present specific goals for ASU during his inaugural speech March 15.

"I will be in crisp form in eight weeks with a clear set of terms," he said.

Coor said he would like to improve the quality of education at ASU and make the University "user friendly."

"We have the opportunity to make ASU one of the leading universities in the nation," he said.

Coor said the main campus is at capacity, adding that he hopes the University will keep up with the growing number of students by expanding the West campus and possibly opening another branch of the University.

He said he would like to see the research program at ASU complement, not compete with, the undergraduate program.

Another major concern that will be faced by the new president is the spate of problems ASU faces with its minority program.

Ten percent of ASU's student population is made up of minorities, who have graduation percentages and GPAs below the national average, said Louis Olivas, assistant vice president for academic affairs.

"Dr. Coor has expressed a concern for these averages," Olivas said, adding that he is optimistic that Coor will help strengthen the minority recruitment and retention plan. "I am certain he will make creative progress and add new charge to the program."

ASU Athletic Director Charles Harris also is optimistic about working with Coor.

"I am excited about Coor being part of the ASU community," Harris said. "I think he is a dynamic leader." Harris said he is pleased that Coor supports the policy of student-athletes making academics their top priority.

Edith Auslander, president of the Board of Regents, said she is satisfied with the decision to bring Coor to ASU.

"He is the exact right person for the job," she said. "He is dedicated to Arizona education."

Coor, who left the University of Vermont after serving as its president for 13 years, is earning a base salary of $144,500 at ASU — making him the highest paid university president in Arizona history.

He will also receive a deferred compensation plan that will pay him an additional 18 percent of his salary, adding $26,010.

Coor and his family live in a University-owned home, and he receives a $7,273 annual car allowance.

Regents told to pay newspapers in disclosure suit

By NICOLE CARROLL
State Press

A Maricopa County judge ruled last week that the Arizona Board of Regents must pay two Valley newspapers $35,000 for legal costs incurred during a lawsuit filed against them by the Board last spring.

The Board lost the first round of the suit, which would have forced the Board to release complete resumes of ASU presidential candidates.

But Jacqueline Schneider, the Board's legal counsel, said the regents are going to stand by their decision to withhold the names and refuse to pay any fees until a final judgment is handed down.

The controversy erupted when the First Amendment Coalition threatened to file a lawsuit against the Board on behalf of the The Arizona Republic and Tribune Newspapers, demanding the release of presidential finalists' resumes.

Meanwhile, the Board took action and filed a suit against the papers seeking a judgement stipulating that state public record law does not require the disclosure of unedited candidate resumes. Two weeks later, the papers countersued the Board, asking the court to dismiss the regents' suit.

In September, the courts ordered the regents to release the 236 candidate resumes.

Dan Barr, an attorney with Brown & Bain law offices who represented the newspapers, said the final judgement, expected in the first week February, will address possible open meeting law violations.

"The regents are under a court order to release the names and they have refused," Barr said. "I think it's a fairly tenuous position."

Regents president Edith Auslander said the Board has every intention of continuing the fight.

"The Board did vote to appeal the decision and we are preparing that," Auslander said. The regents have said that to protect the selection process, they are not releasing the candidates' names. They claim confidentiality is necessary to lure the best candidates, who might otherwise be afraid of repercussions at their current institutions.

Barr said the regents will eventually be forced to comply with the newspapers' requests.

"The Board's position is without merit," Barr said. "They will be told they must comply with public access law."

The regents' own legal costs have reportedly reached $97,000. Associated Students of ASU president Paul Larson said

Officials: Mofford's 'prudence' may hurt University

By GREMLYN BRADLEY
State Press

In her 1990 State of the State Message, Gov. Rose Mofford said she wants to be known as the governor of prudence, protection and prosperity.

But her speech left some listeners doubtful as to whether ASU's students will benefit from such goals.

The State of the State Address was delivered to Arizona's 39th Legislature on Jan. 8, during the opening of the Second Regular Session.

'There's a long way to go on the governor's proposal.'

— Doug Todd

One of Mofford's key "prudence" points was the proposal that "for every dollar of new revenue, spending will be reduced by one dollar."

However, these spending reductions, or budget cuts, will have an adverse impact on the University — and students in particular.

"It's going to have an impact on the students in means of class sizes, various service levels in student affairs and all areas," said Alan Carroll, director of ASU's Budget Office.

According to Carroll, ASU's main campus faces a $2.5 million cut in appropriations for its current-year budget, assuming the state Legislature confirms the governor's dollar-for-dollar program. Because of the large cut, most programs, from financial aid to tuition, will be affected.

"We're expecting more students (enrolled at ASU) than last year," Carroll said. "With less money to deal with it, it's going to result in less program services."

Rep. Bev Hermon, R-Tempe, said Mofford has committed a "major strategy error" by reducing higher education and K-12 programs.

"I don't think you devise a program of economic prosperity by cutting education," she said. "I think the two go hand in hand."

In the State of the State Speech, Mofford called for "across-the-board cuts of 4.8 percent," resulting in $170 million in reductions and $170 million in new revenue.

Hermon said the "so-called 4.8 percent reduction" was arrived at by using last year's appropriation figure and combining it with the current inflation rate and the total number of all new students.

"So, she (Mofford) is cutting all of the new students, basically, and combined with a tuition increase, it seems particularly unfair," Hermon said.

'I don't think you devise a program of economic prosperity by cutting education.'

— Bev Hermon

Concerning Mofford's address, Sen. Doug Todd, R-Tempe, said "nobody expected her to propose cuts in higher education or K-12."

Todd, however, said the term "cut" is nothing new for ASU or the other state universities.

"There's not enough money to take care of it all — it's a process of determining the needs," Todd said. "User fees will be raised and it's probably a fair guess that we'll see tuition increase."

But both Hermon and Todd said Mofford's proposal is still just that — a proposal.

"There's a long way to go on the governor's proposal," Todd said.

"I don't think the populous will support this program," Hermon said. "I'm hoping we can do better, but without the governor's support, it's going to be difficult."

Poll finds governor's popularity nearly unchanged in year

PHOENIX (AP) — A newspaper's poll shows that Gov. Rose Mofford's popularity remains virtually unchanged over the past year, with more than half of those surveyed still satisfied with the overall job she is doing as the state's chief executive.

Compared with survey results from nearly a year ago, fewer believe Mofford has a good understanding of key issues or that she has a well-defined program for moving Arizona ahead.

"If I were running Mrs. Mofford's campaign," said Alfredo Gutierrez, a former state senator and Democratic political consultant, "I would be very gratified with this poll."

Mofford has not officially announced her political plans, but her campaign committee has raised an estimated $300,000. Arizona will elect a new governor in November.

The statewide poll of 808 Arizonans was conducted Jan. 4-7 by The Arizona Republic.

The number of those dissatisfied with Mofford has risen slightly since a similar poll from February 1989.

Fifty-seven percent of the respondents were satisfied with Mofford's performance this month, compared with 61 percent last year. The number of those dissatisfied with the governor increased to 28 percent, from 21 percent in the previous poll.

Gutierrez pointed out that the January poll was taken before Mofford delivered her State of the State address, which, he said, was designed to rebuild her image.

State Republican Chairman Burt Kruglick viewed the results differently.

Although 60 percent believed that Mofford understands the issues well — down from 70 percent a year ago — and 57 percent were satisfied with her performance, most voters are comparing Mofford with her predecessor, former Gov. Evan Mecham, Kruglick said.

The poll found that, compared with Mecham, 62 percent believe Mofford is doing a better job than the former governor. Eleven percent say she is doing worse, and 21 percent consider her about the same as the man who was impeached and removed from office in 1988. Six percent were unsure.

Financial aid disbursement a 'breeze' due to planning

By KEVIN SHEH
State Press

More staff, better preparation and longer hours all contributed to the smooth distribution of more than 2,000 financial aid checks during the first two days of disbursement.

"This is a breeze," said Michael Mills, a senior purchasing major who picked up his check Saturday at the Physical Education West building. "Last year, I waited for over three hours before I got my check."

A staff of more than 100 — some of whom were hired specifically for the first week of financial aid disbursement — were on hand Saturday in anticipation of long lines.

"There was a line outside the building at 6:30 (Saturday) morning," said ASU Comptroller Gerald Snyder. He said that by opening at 7:00 a.m. — instead of at 8:15 a.m. as had been publicized — the lines were eliminated before they had a chance to grow to last year's proportions.

This semester, $16 million in financial aid will be handed out.

Of the 8,200 financial aid checks, 1,000 were mailed to students capitalizing on the Student Aid Disbursement Office's mailing program.

"A major drawback of disbursement mailing is most student disbursements are loans, which require the signature of the student," said Carol Balk, manager of student aid disbursement. "So, these students must come in person to receive their disbursement."

Balk said the University is investigating other options to make the distribution process easier for students.

"If government regulations could be amended to obtain signatures in advance, more checks could be mailed," she said.

Because things ran smoothly on Saturday, Balk had expected to be hit hard Tuesday. Because many students are not on campus for classes on Tuesdays and Thursdays, crowds were still not a problem.

"Things have been really steady," Balk said Tuesday. "The average wait has been only five minutes."

Paul Barberini, director of student financial assistance, offered a way students can keep the lines down.

"Eligible students can arrange their aid disbursement through the mail," Barberini said.

Snyder cited student failure to complete the registration process and out-of-state banks' delay in sending financial aid checks as primary reasons some checks were not available.

Disbursements will be distributed through Friday from 8:15 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. at P.E. West.

College of Public Programs strives for diversity in the '90s

By DAN NOWICKI
State Press

This is the first in a series of articles profiling the 10 major colleges at ASU, with special emphasis on the goals each wishes to accomplish in the 1990s.

ASU's College of Public Programs believes it is ready for the '90s.

The five departments within the college are either among the top 10 programs in the country or expect to be within the next five years.

"We think the college is among the very best of its kind in the country," said Anne Schneider, who has been dean of the college since June 1989.

The College of Public Programs, established in 1979, consists of the Department of Communication, the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Telecommunication, the Department of Leisure Studies, the School of Public Affairs and the School of Justice Studies. The journalism and public affairs schools are both fully accredited.

The College's approach to curriculum has made the program something of an academic prototype for other colleges around the country.

"You might think of (the departments) as a second generation of social science and humanities disciplines," Schneider said. "They're very similar to what we'll see around the country in the 21st century."

ASU's School of Public Affairs was ranked ninth among more than 250 similar schools across the country in 1988 by Administration in Society, an academic journal, which also named the School of Justice Studies as one of the top five programs of its type in the nation.

The director of the School of Public Affairs said attaining a broader cultural mix within the School is a goal he would like to see met in the new decade.

"We want (more) diversity among both students and faculty," Joe Cayer said.

The College's Department of Leisure Studies boasts the highest per-faculty rate of publication in scholarly journals among the 507 programs in the United States.

But at least one student doesn't believe the "publish or perish" credo helps students.

"There is too much emphasis on research for the professors," said Matt Chapa, a senior communication major. "Between the research and the melodrama they've lost touch with the students."

But Schneider said she hopes to remedy this problem. She said she would like to provide "a small-college experience" for undergraduate students.

"We would like for our classes to be less lecture-oriented with a greater emphasis on writing, reading and critical thinking about what one has read," she said. Schneider said future courses within the college will stress individual student involvement.

The College of Public Programs currently enrolls 3,232 undergraduate and 526 graduate students. The ratio of students to faculty is 26.2 to 1.

Schneider said the college hopes to increase the ethnic and cultural diversity of its faculty and students in the near future, according to literature. Recent affirmative action and Action Now recruitment efforts have resulted in the hiring of five new faculty members, all of whom are women and two of whom are minorities.

Although only 12 percent of the college's student population consists of minorities, Public Programs officials said the proportion of minority undergraduate students has been increasing slightly over the past few years.

New, efficient cooling system to save University money

By KEVIN SHEH
State Press

A more efficient air-conditioning system — the largest of its kind in the country — will save the University money but won't be finished in time to combat the summer heat.

The water cooling system, which was developed in 1985, was installed at ASU West two years ago.

Construction of the ASU unit, which began late last semester, is slated for completion in September.

A 25-foot deep pit, north of the Student Recreation Complex, will house a 5.5 million-gallon concrete thermal storage unit. Water held in the tank will be cooled at night and used to provide air conditioning on campus during the day.

Gerry White, manager of mechanical engineering in the Planning and Construction Department, said the purpose of the unit is to save money on University air-conditioning costs. White anticipates that the University will save $1 million a year by using the system.

"The total cost of implementing the system will be $5 million," he said, adding that 18 percent of the cost will be absorbed by Arizona Public Service.

Alan Carroll, director of the ASU Budget Office, said ASU's utilities bill is currently more than $11 million a year. He said most of the bill is paid through state appropriations.

The installation of the thermal energy storage tank allows the University to cool water at night, when electricity is cheaper.

Val Peterson, director of ASU's Physical Plant, said the water used for air conditioning is presently cooled by electric chillers located at the central plant east of the old wing of Hayden Library. The chillers are used most during the hot hours of the day.

"This (new system) is a proven system, which we know will work," Peterson said, citing the success of the unit at many other locations throughout the Valley, including ASU West.

The eastern end of the construction area was previously an archery practice field. After completion, the area will be covered with 3 feet of dirt and transformed into an intramural field that will be lit for night use.

The intramural field will consist of four softball fields and four flag football fields, according to Gerald Maas, director of recreational sports and student activities.

New KAET-TV programming available for visually impaired

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

ASU's KAET-TV, Channel 8, will be the first television station in Arizona to introduce enhanced programming for the blind and visually impaired when it airs the season premiere of "American Playhouse" Jan. 24.

Richard Nelson's play, "Sensibility and Sense," will air at 8 p.m. and is the beginning of free weekly programming that will enable visually impaired people to gain insight to visual aspects of a TV program they usually miss.

With Descriptive Video Service, viewers receive brief narrated descriptions of scenery, character movements, costumes, and scene changes that are inserted into the program's dialogue. The insertions will not interfere with regular programming.

"I think for the first time it will allow (visually impaired viewers) to feel the complete picture," said Barbara Maack, creative services manager of KAET.

"One blind woman was in tears because she was so moved at being able to experience something like this," Maack said.

Working in conjunction with KAET will be ASU Disabled Student Resources, who will inform visually impaired students and the community about obtaining DVS.

Disabled Student Resources will make available information letters in large print for the visually impaired and programming guides in brail for the blind.

Daily added that many of his blind or visually impaired students do not watch TV because they cannot understand it in a complete manner, especially in documentaries and films, which are harder to follow than sitcoms.

"I think (DVS) is going to be a great alternative to reading or talk radio," Daily said. "A look of a person, someone walking away, or scenery is important and (visually impaired viewers) miss out.

Michael Thomsen, KAET's manager of education and telecommunications, said the adaptive programming of "American Playhouse" will open doors for other TV programs. Thomsen said he hopes other public stations in Arizona will follow KAET's lead and implement DVS.

"Both in terms of the number of stations making use of DVS and the programs which offer DVS, this is just the beginning," Thomsen said. "Later we hope to increase the service to five hours week and then to 10 hours a week."

DVS is transmitted through the Separate Radio Program channel, a standard feature of most digitally tuned television receivers. It's usually located behind a small hinged door on the front of the television.

For TV sets without the SAP channel, adapters may be purchased at electronic stores.

Programs that will be accompanied by the DVS service are indicated by a capital "D" in the program guide.

Parking plans designed to help frustrated students

By KRISTIE YOUNG

State Press

Just when you thought it was safe to park at ASU, Parking and Transit Services has teamed up with the ASU Bookstore and designed some new parking regulations.

But these new plans are designed to help, not hinder, students frustrated with the parking situation.

Ron Kucera, acting assistant director of Parking and Transit Services, came up with a way to ease the pain of the parking nuisance by approving a plan to give dorm students a break.

As an effort toward a "kinder, gentler nation", Kucera incorporated a measure that gave dorm students the liberty to park in the dorm lots from Jan. 8 to Jan. 16 without decals.

"The effort was designed to make it easier for dorm students to have a grace period in which to get new their new decals changed," Kucera said.

He said the measure was implemented early this semester to "help students park the way they should and to help them be able to follow regulations later on in the semester."

Also, the ASU Bookstore, in conjunction with Parking Services, has designed a plan to relieve the problem of parking citations given in the metered lot adjacent to the bookstore.

The plan will aid patrons of the bookstore in appealing parking citations received in the metered lot due to overtime parking.

Jim Selby, assistant director of the ASU Bookstore, said the meters located in Lot 27 next to the bookstore do not give students enough time to make purchases.

"The 50-minute time allotment does not allow students to adequately collect all of their books and supplies without having to worry about getting a ticket for overtime parking," Selby said.

During "rush week," or the first week of every new semester, the bookstore is packed with hundreds of frantic students hurrying to find their books and supplies. During this time, the cash register lines begin to wind in and out of the narrow aisles.

To accommodate the hundreds of patrons, the bookstore hires 60 to 100 temporary employees. This increases the number of staff members, but the inexperience of the temporary employees slows down store operations. This contributes to the long lines at the registers and sparks the tempers of students waiting in those lines.

Selby said students spend from 30 minutes to an hour in register lines. Since the parking meters only allow 50-minute parking, "this becomes a problem."

The new plan calls for a memo attachment to accompany each citation given in Lot 27. Each memo states that although a citation has been given, it may be appealed by presenting the ASU Bookstore sales receipt along with the citation to a University hearing officer within 14 calendar days after issuance.

The time of purchases made at the bookstore will be displayed on the receipt, and if the time on the citation is reasonably near the time on the sales receipt, the ticket may be revoked.

"During the days of Jan. 16, 17 and 18, every citation issued in the lot will receive the memo attachment," Selby said. "We are trying to make it easier on the customer."

Selby said the idea of the memo had been suggested before, but this semester was the first time it is being implemented. If the program is successful, he said it may be repeated in upcoming semesters.

Annabel Geisheimer, a senior marketing major, thought the new policy was a good idea.

Julie Sigwart/State Press

"I think it's fair for both the student and ASU," she said.

Tanya Smithson, a sophomore family resources and human development major, said she couldn't "believe Parking Services is actually giving the students a break for once."

Selby said he thought this plan will bring positive student response. "The bookstore can't handle 43,000 students at one time, and this plan should help to ease the tension a little."

Although these measures were taken to help in student parking, the parking situation at ASU still seems to be a problem.

Between July 1988 and July 1989, 107,350 parking citations were given. Last semester, $44,352 was collected on 49,289 citations.

The biggest number of parking violations came from overtime parking, or "leaving a vehicle in a metered parking stall after the time on the meter has expired."

For this violation, 42,897 citations were issued amounting to $428,970. These figures jumped considerably over the July 1987 to July 1988 number of citations given, which were 34,227 citations and $342,270.

Other frequent violations were parking in unauthorized lots and no vehicle registration.

The only violation to go down in numbers was improper decal display, dropping from 5,990 in 1987-88 to 2,358 in 1988-89.

Although these numbers seem high, Kucera said he thinks student parking at ASU is improving.

"We are trying to implement new programs to aid students in their parking ordeal," Kucera said. "All we can do is to look for ways to make it easier for students to park the way they should."

Failed computer consortium due to long-range strategy

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — The leaders of U.S. Memories said the planned computer chip-making consortium failed because the electronics industry lacks a long-term strategy to compete with Japan.

"We had an opportunity as a nation and an industry to send a message and we missed it," said Sanford L. Kane, president of the now-defunct joint venture.

The company's failure served a blow to plans to convince the firm to build its proposed $1 billion plant on a site on the Phoenix/Tempe border at 48th Street and Broadway Road. Colorado Springs, Colo., Austin, Texas, and Middletown, N.Y., were also vying to attract the consortium.

U.S. Memories had planned to break ground on its chosen site this month.

"It is truly a shame that the facility plans could not go forward," said Gov. Rose Mofford in a statement.

U.S. Memories, formed six months ago with the hope of expanding America's small output of dynamic random access memory chips, or DRAMs, announced Monday it was dissolving because of inadequate financial support from computer companies.

Japanese companies now supply about 75 percent of the market, while U.S. manufacturers have less than 10 percent. U.S. Memories hoped to take 25 percent of the U.S. market.

The consortium was born at a time when short supplies had driven up the price of DRAMs, which store data in a wide range of electronic products and are often compared to crude oil in their importance to industry. Since then, chip supplies have increased and prices have dropped, in part because several companies, including Samsung of South Korea, have started production, analysts say.

'What happens today does not bode well for an industry that has made a technical decision rather than a tactical one.'
— Sanford L. Kane

At a meeting in Dallas on Wednesday, most of U.S. Memories' original seven investors and four potential backers were unwilling to put up enough money to enable the consortium to build the plant, Kane told a news conference. The companies also would not promise to buy enough of its four-megabit DRAMs, he said.

U.S. companies apparently no longer think they have a problem with chip supplies, Kane said.

"What happens today does not bode well for an industry that has made a technical decision rather than a tactical one," Kane said.

Wilfred Corrigan, U.S. Memories' chairman, said the issue for American companies wasn't simply one of adequate supply but more a matter of control over it. He gave grudging praise to Japan's "coaching and quarterbacking."

"You look at a U.S. laptop computer today, and the display comes from Japan, the memory comes from Japan," he said. "The computer has simply become the gift box in which Japanese products get mailed to the user."

One analyst predicted the collapse of the consortium would have no immediate effect.

"The bottom line is today, there's a good supply (of DRAMs) and the prices are low and going lower," said Fred Jones of Dataquest in San Jose.

The consortium's original investors were International Business Machines Corp., Digital Equipment Corp., Hewlett-Packard Co., Intel Corp., Advanced Micro Devices Inc., National Semiconductor Corp. and LSI Logic.

Although U.S. companies in several industries have cooperated in recent years on joint research projects, U.S. Memories was planned as the first consortium to manufacture products.

U.S. Memories originally planned to pay for the plant with $500 million in equity financing from chip makers and users and $500 million in debt, with fund-raising expected to be completed last year.

The consortium later decided it would need only $400 million in debt and $350 million in equity — $150 million from industry investors and the rest from outside backers. Computer companies, however, also would have had to agree to buy 75 to 80 percent of the consortium's chips.

But at the meeting last week, only IBM and Digital maintained the "major" commitment to the venture, Kane said.

Kane declined to give details of the commitments from individual companies, however. He also declined to criticize individual companies for their decisions.

Hewlett-Packard said through a spokeswoman that it was disappointed by U.S. Memories' announcement and expressed surprise at "the lack of the support for it among computer-systems companies."

New day-care poll to evaluate needs

By KRISTIE YOUNG
State Press

An incomplete 1988 campus child-care survey is forcing the University to play catch-up this semester with a new, more thorough look at student parents' child-care needs.

"The (1988) survey did not adequately reflect the needs of the students at ASU," said Lee Ellen Brigman, research director in the Office of Student Affairs.

The original $16,000 survey was conducted for student affairs in December 1988 by the Tucson Association for Child Care, which questioned 664 ASU employees and 250 female students.

Brigman said the first survey only represented undergraduate women, "which only represents 15,000 students out of the 43,000 that attend ASU."

Maureen Duane, coordinator for child-care resources, said the 1988 survey "had good faculty and staff representation, but the students' needs were not addressed."

"We needed new current data," Duane said. This year's survey was revised to include students with dependent children. The survey was conducted to determine the the number of student parents at ASU and to get some idea of the age range of their children.

The new survey, conducted during pre-registration, was compiled of questions from students and child-care organizations.

Duane, a former child-care center director, is responsible for preparing the results of the survey. A report of objectives for child care at ASU and recommendations to students, faculty and staff will be composed by Duane and will be available at the end of the fiscal year — after the close of this semester.

The new survey was conducted three different ways. First, a table was set up at the pre-registration sites to survey students who are parents. Also, the Office of Student Affairs sent cards in the mail encouraging student parents to send in the card to receive their survey by mail. A final effort was made during on-line registration, when the surveys were conducted at each of the four registration sites.

"We had a lot of help from the registrars," Duane said. Duane said that although the results from the survey are not yet in and the total cost of the survey is not known, current data indicates the survey will be beneficial to ASU.

"I am very pleased with the input from student parents," Duane said. "There are strong feelings out there, and I appreciate the fact that the students took the time to let us know their feelings of the situation."

Suit

it is time for the Board to give up the fight.

"It's going to cost twice as much money; it's going to be dragged out for two more years," Larson said. "I think (the regents) should cut their losses and get on with it."

ASU President Lattie Coor — once only an applicant himself — said releasing candidate names is only harmful in the very early stages.

"I think at the time an individual becomes a serious candidate, the names can be made public," Coor said.

The total cost of interviewing 236 presidential hopefuls and selecting Coor topped $93,000.

Of that sum, $40,000 was paid directly to the executive search firm of Heidrick and Struggles and the rest was in related expenses.

Laura Anderson, a spokeswoman for the search firm, said its fee is based on 33 percent of the vacant position's beginning salary. She said this amount is standard procedure for top search firms.

Larson said some of the additional expenses dissappointed him.

"I'm not unhappy with that total number," Larsen said. "The problem is I know it could have been less."

The Usual Suspects

Gonzo battles over land

Fear and loathing are gripping Woody Creek, Colo.

Hunter S. Thompson, the proverbial chronicler of the weird (whose column appears in The State Press Magazine), is having a real-life Hatfield and McCoy's dispute in Woody Creek, where he lives.

The details of the battle are reported in the January-February issue of Smart magazine, of which Thompson is a stockholder and editor-at-large.

The gonzo journalist has a running feud over land in Woody Creek with Floyd Watkins, a flashy developer from Florida.

So intense is the animosity between them that the feud has been marked by vandalism, threatening phone calls and late-night shotgun blasts. Thompson himself was almost indicted for an incident involving some automatic weapons, the magazine reports.

Thompson has written about the dispute in his weekly column, disguising himself as a character named Cromwell and Watkins as McCoy.

The dispute is at the point now where Watkins has put Bengal tigers on his property and Thompson is thinking about purchasing elephants.

Tom Cruise and Mimi Rogers in happier times.

Cruise, wife splitting

In a move that's sure to please women everywhere, actor Tom Cruise and his actress-wife Mimi Rogers are calling it quits after nearly three years of marriage.

"We have decided to file for divorce," the couple said Tuesday in a joint statement from publicist Andrea Jaffe.

Cruise, 27, and Rogers, 33, were married May 9, 1987, with actor Emilio Estevez as best man.

"While there have been very positive aspects to our marriage, there were some issues which could not be resolved even after working on them for a period of time," the couple's statement said, without elaboration.

"This has been a time when I have been the focus of much attention," Cruise said. "When I was asked direct questions by the press about my marriage, I felt that to compromise our privacy was to compromise a basic trust."

Wagner's music returns

Gottfried Wagner, grandson of German composer Richard Wagner, will be touring Israel with his grandfather's work, even though it's been considered taboo in that country ever since it was blared over Nazi death camp speakers during World War II.

Wagner maintains that even though the 19th century composer was a self-declared anti-semitic, Hitler exploited his music as a glorification of the master race.

In the past, all efforts to break the boycott have been met with stormy protest, although many Israelis say they listen to Wagner at home.

Following an Israel Philharmonic Orchestra concert, conductor Zubin Mehta announced as an encore the prelude to the Wagner opera "Tristan and Isolde." In response, the audience cried, "Shame." An usher rushed to the stage, pulled up his shirt to show Nazi-inflicted scars and shouted, "Play Wagner on my body."

How to: Improve your study habits

Editor's note: This is the first in an occasional series called "College Notebook." The series will look at common dilemmas students face — dilemmas not necessarily covered by a newspaper (or by university literature, for that matter).

The series also will look at people or events that aren't necessarily earth-shattering but still have a measurable effect on college life.

For the series' debut, we look at "How to Study." The tips presented are adapted from "Where There's a Will, There's an A," the videotape by ASU Prof. Claude Olney and are used with permission.

His seminar on developing good study habits is available on audio tape at the ASU Bookstore for $29.95. Videotapes are available by phone: 800-225-9500.

So you just got your report card for the fall, and you're not entirely happy. Need to change some of those study habits? Or do you feel like you've never really learned how to study?

All it may take to send your GPA soaring could be a few simple "tricks," according to ASU finance Prof. Claude Olney. Since 1981 he's been teaching students how to study.

Try these tips:

- ▶ Treat your college education like a business career. Be aggressive about getting what you want. Use the tools of big business — computers, typewriters, copy machines, tape recorders, and filing systems.
- ▶ Choose courses you like — you're more likely to succeed in something that interests you.
- ▶ Take difficult courses at a community college — your GPA from another school won't transfer. Or audit difficult courses the first time around — you'll have a big head start when you take it for a grade.
- ▶ Check out your professors. A good professor can make any course interesting, and a bad instructor can ruin a good course.

▶ Be prepared to bail out. Don't be afraid to drop a class that isn't working for you.

▶ Don't miss class — be on time and don't leave early. Some of the most important information comes at the very beginning and end.

▶ Sit in the front row. Students in the front row receive more attention and are more likely to clarify questions they have.

▶ Always do extra credit. Extra credit isn't really extra since everyone has the opportunity to do it, and it is often the only difference between an "A" and "B."

▶ Pre-test yourself. Obtain all previous study guides, quizzes and tests available. Rather than just re-reading your material, ask yourself the kind of questions that are likely to appear on a test.

▶ Study in short bursts with breaks in between rather than marathon sessions. The facts that you study first and last will be remembered best. Short study sessions will ensure that your concentration is at its peak.

▶ Study according to your biological clock. If you are a "night owl," your body temperature is probably highest at night, so your ability to concentrate will be at its peak then. If you are a morning person, take advantage of the early morning hours. Don't let your friends or roommates razz you for studying at odd hours if that's what best for you.

▶ Take worthwhile notes. Concentrate on key points from textbooks and lectures. A key point may be an answer to an exam question.

Eat well, too

ASU nutrition professor Melinda Manore says what you eat affects your ability to concentrate. She offers these tips:

- ▶ People respond differently to caffeine. If you're not used to caffeine, relying on it to stay awake to study may make you nervous, impair your ability to concentrate, or prohibit you from getting enough sleep.
- ▶ Don't go to class or an exam on an empty stomach. Glucose, which is available in sugars and carbohydrates, is the brain's primary energy source.
- ▶ Good glucose sources include: fresh fruit and vegetables, juices, milk, bread and cereals.
- ▶ Keep the above-mentioned items on hand as nutritious snacks while studying. If you allow yourself to get hungry while studying, you'll be more likely to grab the first available food, which might come from a vending machine.
- ▶ Make sure your diet is adequate in B vitamins. Although no vitamin can give you energy, the B vitamins are instrumental in allowing your body to turn food into energy. Whole grains and lean meats are good sources of B vitamins.

"In a Hurry — Call Ahead"

His life was an incredible statement. I've always admired him.

James Stovall portrays Paul Robeson in the ASU production "Paul Robeson."

Robeson preceded today's heroes

By SHARON KANEY
State Press

When most of us think about civil rights activists, we think of Martin Luther King Jr., Jesse Jackson or Malcolm X.

And that's a shame because Paul Robeson, a brilliant performer and All-American athlete, was a forerunner to them all.

But he remains largely an unsung hero.

Phillip Hayes Dean's play, "Paul Robeson," is one of the only works to sing his praises.

"Paul Robeson" will be presented at the Paul V. Galvin Playhouse Jan. 18 and 19 for three performances.

"It's one of the only examples of the full scope of the man's life," says actor James Stovall, who portrays Robeson. "That's why the piece stands out."

The play begins with Robeson's attendance as the only black student at Rutgers University in the early '20s and ends near the time of his death — covering a span of nearly 60 years. After graduating Phi Beta Kappa, Robeson pursued a law degree from Columbia University.

But Robeson soon discovered the legal profession to be virtually exclusive of blacks, so he turned to a career in entertainment. "Many black leaders were artists," Dean said in a recent interview, noting that the entertainment industry was one of the first to accept blacks as professionals.

Robeson's brilliant vocal career took him to Europe and in 1934, he visited the Soviet Union. Robeson developed an affinity for the Communist Party because of its complete lack of racial segregation and oppression.

"He was one of the first blacks to discover that there are blacks in the Soviet Union," Dean said.

McCarthyism and the Cold War virtually destroyed Robeson's career in the United States, and he died in 1976.

Stovall, who says he is honored to portray Robeson, became more and more impressed with him as he began to research the part.

"He did phenomenal work to organize labor unions. He was very much an activist," Stovall said. "His life was an incredible statement. I've always admired him."

Playwright Dean is guest-directing the ASU production. Careful not to let the essence of a single line be lost, Dean is quick to make certain that Stovall does not drop a single word. He even mounts the sparsely set stage himself during rehearsal to demonstrate dance steps for The Black Bottom and The Cake Walk.

Burt Wallace, who will be appearing in the ASU production as Robeson's pianist, originated the part on Broadway.

"Paul Robeson" originally opened on Broadway 12 years ago. Black rights advocates, namely from Robeson's family, called for a boycott of the production, which soon closed. Later many admitted to never having read the script or seen the production. It was revived by Joseph Papp two years ago to critical acclaim.

"Robeson" is a co-production of ASU's Multi-Ethnic Series and the ASU Martin Luther King Celebration Committee.

Dean said that performance opportunities for minorities will open up when producers begin to market to minority audiences. "There are plenty of black parts that are cast white," he said. "The bottom line is money. The color is green."

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — There was a cake, flowers, guests, a judge to perform the ceremony and the bride wore a blue chiffon gown.

The groom didn't know anything about it.

Frances Upchurch, 45, staged the surprise Monday in her office. Groom Vance Helms, also 45, thought he was coming to pick her up for lunch.

"Everywhere we called, for flowers, food, everywhere — nobody believed that the groom didn't know about the wedding. It took a lot of explaining, especially to the judge we asked to perform the ceremony," Upchurch said.

The couple had planned to have a brief civil ceremony later this week, said Vance.

But when he opened Upchurch's office door, he was greeted by Judge Robert J. Smith, a large crowd of other people, and cameras.

Vance backed out and closed the door.

"When I saw (the judge) in those black robes, that was when I realized that this was the real thing," Helms said.

"Are you ready?" asked the judge.

"Yes," Helms replied.

"We have the reputations of being the dullest, most respectable people you know," Upchurch said. "We're the last people you would expect to do something like this."

A new era: Frieder, Olson meet in Pac-10

By PAUL CORO
State Press

For the past seven years, looking to basketball to redeem ASU's football team's drought against the UofA has been like Mitch Green asking Michael Spinks to beat up Mike Tyson for him.

Only once since Lute Olson took over the program prior to the 1983-84 season have the Sun Devils beaten the Wildcats (a 1986 70-63 win at home).

This year was to be different as round one of Frieder vs. Olson rings in at 7:30 tonight at the University Activity Center.

Scott Troyano/State Press

Senior point guard Mike Redhair is averaging 5.9 assists per game.

No. 23 UofA (9-3 overall, 4-3 Pac-10) struggled early with losses at Oregon and Oregon State and has had lapses recently. ASU was a team on the rise, winning eight of nine games (lost to No. 1 Kansas Dec. 22) prior to last week's trip to Los Angeles.

That all changed with 40 seconds remaining in ASU's 63-48 win over Washington at home; junior guard Matt Anderson landed badly after a two-handed slam. Anderson tore the cartilage in his right knee, putting him out of commission until at least the Feb. 8 game against UCLA.

"We have kind of regressed due to Matt's injury to where we were back in October-November," Head Coach Bill Frieder said.

Without their second-leading scorer at 14.2 points per game (17.8 in his last four games), the Sun Devils (8-6 overall, 2-4 Pac-10) have slowed their offense to a snail's pace. Last week, the team scored under 60 points in losses to 16th-ranked UCLA (62-53) and USC (69-59) and shot 38 percent from the field in both contests.

Alex Austin, who was the Jan. 9 Pac-10 Player of the Week, took 49 shots in the two games. He tied a career high with 31 points at UCLA, but made only seven of 25 shots at USC.

"I think Alex tried to do way too much," Frieder said. "He has to understand that he has got to continue to play the way Alex Austin was playing. He has to help us out on the floor to get other players involved."

Isaac Austin, who was replaced in the starting lineup by Emory Lewis, will be in the first five again after a 15-point, 11-rebound performance against the Trojans.

Frieder has said ASU will need scoring from a combination of people without Anderson, starting with the front line.

In the backcourt, freshman Brian Camper averaged nine points in his first two starts last week. Point guard Mike Redhair, who dished out a career-high of 11 assists at USC, is only averaging three shots a game.

"(Redhair) is capable of hitting (the 3-pointer)," Frieder said. "If he bangs in a couple, it will really help the inside people."

The Sun Devil big men will welcome any help they can get as they face a tough Wildcat front line tonight, led by forward Jud Buechler and center Brian Williams.

"Buechler is a great all-around player," Frieder said. "He gives you scoring, rebounding, leadership and defense."

"Williams might not be up to their expectations yet, but he's still 6-11 and very capable around the basket."

UofA, who is smarting from a 73-67 loss at UCLA Saturday, sports an on-slaught of guards that can bomb away. Matt Muehlebach leads a backcourt that has hit one-third of its 3-point shots this season.

On defense, the Wildcats have held opponents to 38 percent field-goal shooting. Frieder said they zone a lot, but are effective in mixing up their defenses.

"We have to get a great game from everybody in order to have any kind of chance," Frieder said. "Arizona has kind of dominated this place in a lot of things recently. But this is not the team it was a year or two years ago with (1988-89 AP Player of the Year) Sean Elliott."

Frieder said he is striving to develop a program like UofA's, because that would mean ASU could compete on a national level.

"I hope that someday (ASU and UofA) can play for a championship," Frieder said. "I think that would be a lot of fun. It would be a great thing for the state."

Meanwhile, tonight's rivalry revival is just a game between the Pac-10's fourth-place and seventh-place teams. That won't prevent the UAC from a possible sell-out though.

Junior guard Matt Anderson, ASU's second-leading scorer, will be out with a knee injury until mid-February.

"I'm not the type of guy that is going to build this game so far out of whack and then be so disappointed if it doesn't work out and have that carry over to the team," Frieder said. "It's only one game."

- In Thursday's game against the Bruins, Alex Austin became the 18th Sun Devil in history to score 1,000 points in a career.

- ASU has only one loss at home this season, a 65-64 defeat against Brigham Young on Dec. 5.

- Tonight's game marks the third time Frieder will attempt to record his 200th career win. He would become the 10th active coach to reach 200 wins before 100 losses.

- Senior Tarence Wheeler, who was ASU's floor leader last season until he suffered ligament damage to his knee in the 11th game, will redshirt this season. His knee did not heal as quickly as expected.

UofA's Williams has long road back

By PAUL CORO
State Press

After not playing competitive basketball for two years, UofA's Brian Williams was expected to part Tucson's Santa Cruz River.

Williams is not a miracle worker and he will be the first to admit it.

Much of the Wildcat faithful was counting on the 6-foot-11, 235-pound center to step in for 1988-89 All-American Anthony Cook without skipping a beat. One national television sportscaster predicted the sophomore to make first-team All-America.

"The first few games out people were expecting miracles from me," Williams said. "They have to understand that it takes time."

"It's a tough adjustment — one that you underestimate. You always think you can go out and pick up where you left off, but it takes more time."

Williams was redshirted last season after transferring in July 1988 from the University of Maryland. He said the transfer was based on his overall disinterest with the coaching of Bob Wade, who has since been fired from the head position.

In his freshman year with the Terrapins, the left-hander tallied 12.5 points and six rebounds a game while swatting 36 shots to earn Atlantic Coast Conference newcomer of the year honors.

"It feels kind of bizarre," Williams said. "It seems like such a long time ago. It has taken a year or so to switch modes in the playing style of a different conference."

Perhaps Williams' biggest adjustment to Pac-10 basketball has come because of the officiating. In many cases, Williams' inconsistency this season may be attributed to trouble with fouls.

"This conference is a lot different than what I got used to," Williams said. "The fouls called are called away from the action and they have no effect on the game. They call fouls so the game won't be as physical."

"That hurts West Coast teams when they travel east and expect to get those calls."

Although he has not met sky-high expectations, Williams has posted respectable statistics for a Wildcat team that has not lived up to its billing either. He is tied for second on the team in both scoring (11.4) and rebounding (5.8) with Sean Rooks. He leads the teams with 20 blocked shots.

These numbers are even more impressive considering he was sidelined over the summer with a stress fracture in his left foot, which kept him from playing in the World University Games.

"My game is coming around," Williams said. "It's finding a groove right now. Getting back to a game situation requires a high level of execution and the prowess to excel."

Williams is gradually climbing to those standards, but he has taller peaks to conquer. Few will dispute his potential to be the most dominating big man in the Pac-10. He won't.

"The possibility is there," Williams said. "It's going to take a lot of work. But I definitely expect to be to that point in the near future."

Coming out of high school, The Sporting News called him the nation's No. 1 prospect at center. He was a teammate of UofA guard Matt Othick as a junior at Bishop Gorman High in Las Vegas, Nev.

The Santa Monica, Calif. native possesses all the tools to surpass the standards left by Cook, who he guarded in practice last season. He has exceptional speed and leaping ability for a big man. Plus, he shoots the ball well inside and on the perimeter.

"I need to do things simply and more effectively," Williams said. "It's a matter of being very intense."

Sun Devils talented but young

ASU pounds alumni team 15-3; Steverson smacks grand slam; Manahan, Helfand 3 hits each

By SETH SULKA
State Press

As the Sun Devils prepare for their 1990 baseball season, a lack of talent is one thing that they won't need to worry about. ASU has six players on Baseball America's All-America teams and is ranked fifth in the nation by the magazine.

Sun Devil Head Coach Jim Brock feels that he actually has seven players that are potential "big league" ball players.

"It's kind of funny how Baseball America came out with six of our position players listed either on the first, second, or third team All-American," Brock said. "Funny . . . because the best professional prospect of them all is Tommy Adams, and he wasn't on any one of the teams."

Although none of the ASU pitchers made the lists, Brock feels that sophomores Kip Vaughn and Sean Rees are "bona fide professional prospects."

But the talented Sun Devils will have to rely on young and inexperienced players to guide them throughout the season. ASU does not have any seniors on the team and, of the 11 juniors, only one has seen considerable action with the team.

"Our experience level definitely isn't that of USC's or somebody like that," Brock said. "Obviously there are some clubs that have got some seniors and people with two or three years experience."

Brock said he hopes to try some "different things" this season with his young club.

Although he doesn't necessarily want to change the things his club has been doing, he said he would like to "give people a lot of instinct options that we don't usually do."

With instinct options, Brock is talking about situations involving players stealing bases.

"We usually tie them down on what they can and can't do," Brock said. "Now we are saying make it happen."

"Our intent is to get every conceivable time those people that can run, running."

For the most part, Brock said he feels that the Sun Devils are going to be strong defensively.

"The two guys up the middle are going to be outstanding," Brock said. "Fernando is just great and we think Helfand is an outstanding catcher."

The outfield is strong with Kelly, who Brock said will be the best defensive outfielder in the league, in left field and Steverson and Adams in center and right, respectively. Steverson and Adams are full of potential and should help this outfield be one of the strongest in the country.

ASU had a chance to showcase some of its talent and increased running attack during its annual alumni game Saturday, which the Sun Devils won 15-3.

Todd Steverson, the Devils' prized freshman, split the game open with his sixth inning grand slam.

"Basically, I was working on what (Hitting) Coach (Jeff) Pentland has been working on with us the last couple of weeks," Steverson said. "(Rusty Kilgo) threw it out over the plate and got it up a little bit. Actually, I didn't hit it on the fat part of the bat."

ASU also was able to show off some of its speed by stealing five bases. Austin led the way with two steals and Adams, Helfand, and Jon Halland each stole one base.

But the Sun Devils, who finished last season 42-19 and second in the Six-Pac, will be tested early this season with a heavyweight schedule. ASU will face seven of the ten pitchers that were listed on early All-America teams before the middle of March.

Fortunately, considering the Sun Devils' youth, they have some depth on the bench. Depending on whom Brock decides to start at first base and whether they face a right- or left-hander, juniors Bill Faysak, Jim Henderson, Tucker Hammagren and Halland, along with sophomores Dave Robson and Mike Scialo, will be available for duty.

As for relief pitching, Brock will look to junior college transfers Rusty Silcox and Gary Tatterson.

Freshman Tony Pena will be ASU's closer. Pena threw around 90 mph last fall. Although he is only a freshman, Brock feels confident that he can fill the role.

"He is a very competitive kid and we think that he can come in and literally throw the ball by people," Brock said.

However, Brock warned that anytime you count on a freshman to be out there when the game is on the line, it is an unusual situation.

Sun Devils bounce back; Ortiz gets 6th straight pin

By DAN ZEIGER
 State Press

It's almost shades of the 1987-88 championship season for the ASU wrestling team, and Head Coach Bobby Douglas still feels his team is right on schedule.

The top-ranked Sun Devils won eight of nine matches in clobbering Morgan State 28-3 Monday night in Baltimore, Md. The victory was their first match since a second-place finish in the National Team Championship Saturday.

All-American Thom Ortiz (142 pounds) scored his sixth consecutive pinfall victory by defeating Jay Barrientas at 6:37, and Wayne McMinn (134 pounds), filling in for an injured Andy McNaughton, acquired his first collegiate win with an 8-7 decision over Desmond Maddox.

Zeke Jones (118 pounds), Shawn Charles (126 pounds), Townsend Saunders (150 pounds), Dan St. John (167 pounds), Doug Eckhardt (177 pounds) and Rex Holman (190 pounds) also recorded victories as ASU improved its record to 10-1-1.

"We're having a terrific season," Douglas said, "and I think we have the potential for greatness."

At the National Team Championship in Hampton, Va. last weekend, the Sun Devil team was runner-up as a result of a 24-19 loss to No. 2 Oklahoma State in the finals. Thom Ortiz, the nation's second-ranked 142-pounder, captured the tournament's most outstanding wrestler award by winning all four of his matches, but injuries plagued ASU.

The Sun Devils were without the services of McNaughton, ranked No. 4 nationally at 134 pounds, and heavyweight Mike Anderson, who scored the victory that gave ASU a 20-15 win over the Cowboys a year ago.

Douglas said he is hopeful that McNaughton and Anderson can return in the near future, but their status remains a day-by-day situation.

Despite the lineup changes, ASU displayed its depth by advancing to the championship with a defeat of Lock Haven, Pa. in the opening round, 22-19. The victory marked Douglas' 200th career victory at ASU.

"I felt we were lucky to beat Lock Haven, but we came back with a strong performance against Penn State," Douglas said.

The Sun Devils ousted the ninth-ranked Nittany Lions 25-12 in the quarterfinals before drawing with No. 4 Nebraska 18-18 in the semi-finals. ASU advanced to the finals by a tie-breaking method, which took quite a while.

"Our team had to wait an hour for the decision against Nebraska," Douglas said, "and it emotionally drained us for Oklahoma State."

So did a hectic travel schedule that saw the team go from Evanston, Ill. to Tempe to Hampton in the last two weeks.

Ortiz

"The travel took away some of our steam," Douglas said.

It was a very productive holiday season for the Sun Devils, featuring impressive first-place finishes at the Midlands Invitational in Evanston, and the Takedown II Duals in Tempe.

ASU was first out of 42 teams in the Midlands Invitational with 110.25 points. Jones, McNaughton, Ortiz, Ray Miller (158 pounds) and St. John finished first in their respective weight classes. McNaughton was named the invitational's most outstanding wrestler, and St. John's, now only 11 victories short of Mike Davies' school record of 136 wins, received the Art Craft "Champion of Champions" award.

The biggest surprise of the Takedown II Duals came when Liberty University's Craig Holiday ended St. John's winning streak at 49 consecutive matches by mustering a 4-4 tie. However, the two-time All-American, who defeated Nebraska's Dan Harrison in the Duals' championship match, still owns a string of 55 unbeaten matches.

The Sun Devils earned the team championship by topping the Cornhuskers 21-16.

"The key to the rest of our season is how our personnel feels," Douglas said. "I feel we are in a very good situation. This year's team is one of the best we've ever had."

ASU returns to action on Jan. 26 against Ohio State and Purdue in Columbus, Ohio.

Womens golf returns to action

By KRIS TIMMONS
 State Press

Although it is pouring rain in Santee, Calif., the ASU womens golf team's hopes for a first-place finish in the Yamaha Holiday Classic will not dampen.

The third-ranked golf team is in Southern Cal this week for the 54-hole classic, which is hosted by USC, after nearly a two month hiatus.

The Sun Devils won this event last year by eight strokes over second place New Mexico State as three Sun Devils, Pearl Sinn (third), Lynne Mikulas (sixth), and Missy Farr (seventh), finished among the top 10.

Joining Mikulas and Farr on the travelling squad are senior Amy Fruhwirth and freshmen Brandie Burton and Tricia Konz.

Burton, who leads the nation with a stroke average of 72.00, will be playing in her first tournament since undergoing knee surgery in November.

Prior to her surgery, Burton won all three tournaments she entered in the fall. Her latest victory was a nine-stroke advantage at the UCLA Desert Classic on Nov. 22.

"She (Burton) is still trying to come back," said Head Coach Linda Vollstedt, adding that Burton is more concerned with how the team finishes rather than her own individual performance.

Overall, Vollstedt said she is pleased with the way the team has been playing and feels that each of her players is capable of finishing in the top 10.

According to Vollstedt, ASU has a good short game and all of the players are good putters.

Over the break, the Sun Devils made swing changes to improve their long game and Vollstedt feels that their games are starting to come together.

Although she is generally pleased with the team's performance, Vollstedt said there is still room for improvement.

"They (the team) need to gel and play consistent for three rounds," she said.

Vollstedt expects the toughest competition to come from UCLA and Auburn in the Holiday Classic.

The 11-team field includes ASU, Auburn, Central Florida, Cal State Long Beach, UCLA, New Mexico State, Pepperdine, San Diego State, Southern Cal, U.S. International, and Washington.

After this week's tournament, the Sun Devils will not compete until Feb. 12-14 in the Chris Johnson Invitational in Tuscon.

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Mark Carrier of USC was named winner of the fourth annual Jim Thorpe Award for the nation's best collegiate defensive back, officials announced Monday evening.

Carrier and the other finalists, Nathan LaDuke of ASU and Todd Lyght of Notre Dame were in Oklahoma City for the banquet sponsored by the Jim Thorpe Athletic Club.

LaDuke said he was surprised to be in the running for the award named for former Olympian Jim Thorpe.

"It's good to know people are watching other things," said LaDuke, a 5-foot-10 free safety.

Sun Devil football has landed four junior college transfers. They are expected to start classes at ASU today in order to be eligible for spring practice.

The four are running back Leonard Russell (6-foot-3, 225 pounds) from Mount San Antonio College in Walnut, Calif., fullback Gino Valpredo (6-foot-1, 215 pounds) from Bakersfield (Calif.) College, offensive lineman Bob Robertson (6-foot-4, 275 pounds) from Cerritos College in Norwalk, Calif., and outside linebacker Gavin Hill (6-foot-4, 230 pounds) from American River College in Sacramento, Calif.

The Sun Devils have also received an oral commitment from Mark Smith (6-foot-4, 315 pounds), an offensive tackle from Alhambra High.

Chris Weinke, one of the most highly-touted quarterbacks ever to be recruited by ASU, visited the campus over the weekend. The 6-foot-4, 205-pound St. Paul, Minn. native is also a baseball standout and want to play both sports. The Sun Devils beat out many powers for the early visit from Super Prep's top-rated quarterback.

.....

Mel Foels was named ASU's defensive coordinator Friday. Foels has coached outside linebackers and defensive ends at the University of Tennessee for the past six years. He has coached nine years with Larry Marmie, the Sun Devils' head coach. The 46-year-old coached on nine bowl teams in the 1980s.

.....

Former ASU punter/kicker Steve Rausch has been denied readmission for the spring semester. Rausch was suspended last year after a disturbance outside a fraternity house. The 1988 Dobson High School graduate will probably continue to attend Mesa Community College and re-enroll at ASU in the fall.

TONIGHT'S SCHEDULE

Arizona at Arizona State, 7:30 p.m.

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

With the regular season starting at 1:30 p.m. today against the University of Washington at the Whiteman Tennis Center, it may seem odd that Head Coach Lou Belken has not even filled all the team's starting positions.

There are so many factors involved in choosing this season's top six seeds that Head Coach Lou Belken has decided to wait and see how players fare at today's season opener.

As of now, Belken said he is certain of his top two seeds — No. 1 Brian Gyetko and No. 2 David Lomicky. The remaining four positions, for which Joel Finnigan, Daniel Marting, Craig Purcell and Brad Williams are vying, are up in the air.

"(Aside from Gyetko and Lomicky,) the rest of the lineup involves a lot of fluctuation," Belken said. "Brad Williams is like the wild card in a poker hand — we don't know how good he is going to be."

Williams, who was redshirted last year due to a transfer and did not participate in the team's fall season because of his involvement with the Sun Devil football team, has been practicing for only two weeks.

Assistant Tennis Coach Ford Oliver said although he and Belken know what Williams is capable of from watching him play at the University of Arkansas in 1988, they would like to see him compete in a few ASU matches to get a better feel for which seed he should occupy.

"We've seen him play but not really compete," Oliver said. "It's not fair to judge him only from the (last) tournament. We know he is very talented with a lot of potential."

Another aspect of competition that is up in the air for the Sun Devils at this point is the doubles teams. After experimenting this summer, Oliver said he and Belken have found a definite chemistry between Gyetko and Lomicky, who won the Ice Volleys tournament in Milwaukee earlier in the season.

The rest of the partnerships have not yet been chosen. "I think they are one of the best (doubles) teams in the country," Oliver said. "They really complement each other well."

Belken said today's match against the Huskies should prove to be a good test for filling the stray positions, because of the high competition between the two teams.

"Washington is going to be a good team," Belken said. "They have the best program they have ever had."

The top two players for the Huskies, Belken said, are Aaron Gross and Chet Crile. Gross is new to the UW after transferring from the University of Texas, and Crile is a freshman.

During winter break, the Sun Devils were involved in the Milwaukee Classic in Milwaukee, Wis. Gyetko advanced to the finals of that tournament, at which point he was defeated by USC's No. 1 seed Byron Black.

The doubles team of Gyetko and Lomicky made it to the semi-finals, Marting to the round of 16, Finnigan to the third round and Williams to the second round.

Also over the vacation, Lomicky won the National Amateur Indoors in Baltimore, Md.

Belken said he feels confident about the progress his team has made already this season.

"It's just a continuation of what we started last year — we are maturing as a team."

Lomax calls it quits after battle with arthritic hip

Phoenix Cardinals quarterback Neil Lomax announced his retirement yesterday at an afternoon press conference. Lomax sat out last season with an arthritic left hip.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Phoenix Cardinals quarterback Neil Lomax, who sat out last season with degenerative arthritis in his left hip, announced his retirement from the NFL Tuesday.

"I've been very frustrated that I couldn't play. I wanted to step away from the game and not hang on," Lomax said at a news conference. "I don't want to be a burden. I can go forward and go on with the rest of my life."

The Cardinals said the 31-year-old has been offered several positions within the organization but hasn't decided to take anything yet.

Lomax said he first wants to have hip implant surgery, possibly within the next month.

Lomax, a Pro Bowl selection in 1984 and 1987, has been limping noticeably since late in the 1988 season although he passed for 3,395 yards and 20 touchdowns.

After he struggled through training camp in Flagstaff last summer, the Cardinals placed Lomax on the NFL's injured-reserve list on Aug. 29, making him ineligible for the entire 1989 season.

But Lomax announced then that he would keep working out with the team and continue to go through daily rehabilitation for his hip in hopes of making a comeback in 1990.

"I really did want to play. I wanted to earn my keep, so to speak. But I just can't play any more. I thought a miracle would happen. It didn't happen."

The 6-foot-3, 215-pound Lomax was sacked 359 times in his eight-year career — including 46 in 1988 — and said the continual pounding finally took its toll.

He said he first hurt his hip in a 1982 game at St. Louis against the New York Giants when he was hit with a clip-like tackle on a scramble and fell hard to Busch Stadium's artificial turf.

Lomax was diagnosed last year as having arthritic osteoporosis and several doctors told him he needs a total hip replacement within 10 years. They also said he risked permanent damage — even paralysis — if he continued to play.

Lomax signed a four-year guaranteed contract worth $5.7 million with the Cardinals in March 1988 when the team moved from St. Louis to Phoenix.

He earned $1.3 million this season even though he didn't play a down and was scheduled to earn $1.4 million this year and $1.5 million in 1991.

Lomax's agent Leigh Steinberg said the contract was fully guaranteed in a case of a career-ending injury and that Lomax accepted a $2.65 million lump-sum settlement from the Cardinals. Steinberg said the team also is obligated to pay for the care of Lomax's hip for the rest of his life.

"A contract can't do anything for my hip," Lomax said. "I'd love to give it all back for a new hip."

Cardinal owner Bill Bidwill said Lomax "is one of the great players in the history of this franchise, and it's regrettable his career has been cut short by his hip condition."

A second-round draft pick from Portland State in 1981, Lomax completed 1,818 of 3,153 passes for 22,771 yards and 136 touchdowns with 90 interceptions in his pro career. He also rushed 222 times for 967 yards and 10 TDs.

In the Cardinal record books, Lomax only trails Jim Hart, who was 2,590 of 5,096 for 34,639 yards and 209 touchdowns from 1966-83.

In 1984, Lomax completed 61.6 percent of his passes (345 of 560) and threw for 4,614 yards — the fifth-highest single-season total in league history.
