Civil rights probe of ASU police dropped again

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

The U. S. Justice Department has declined for the second time to seek charges against the ASU police officers who handcuffed two black students in front of an angry mob of whites during a racial brawl.

"It did not constitute a prosecutable violation of federal civil rights statutes," Justice Department spokeswoman Obern Rainey said Friday of the actions by Cpl. James J. Klosterman and Officer Terry L. Lewis actions during the April 15, 1989, incident on Alpha Drive. Rainey added that the case has been closed.

Both Klosterman and Lewis declined to comment on the decision.

ASU Police Chief Bill Bess hailed the Justice Department's ruling.

"That's good news," said Bess, who joined the department in December, on Sunday when informed by a reporter of the Justice Department decision. "We need to put that incident behind us and move forward."

Justice Department officials originally had ruled against charges in October. The case was reopened by the FBI's Phoenix office about a week later, after it was learned that Robert Rucker and James Liddell, the two black students, never were interviewed by agents. The FBI investigates claims of civil rights violations and forwards its findings to the Justice Department, which determines whether to seek charges.

Rucker declined to comment Sunday on the Justice Department's decision, and attempts to contact Liddell were unsuccessful.

The federal civil rights probe was launched last spring after Rucker and Liddell claimed they were handcuffed and bullied by Klosterman and Lewis, who took the students into "protective custody." They were put in the back of police

More than 30,000 participate in downtown abortion rallies

By DAN NOWICKI

PHOENIX — More than 30,000 Arizonans took a stand on the abortion issue Sunday by participating in rival rallies and marches in downtown Phoenix.

Nationwide, thousands of activists on the pro-choice and pro-life sides of the issue rallied the day before the 17th anniversary of the Supreme Court's Roe vs. Wade decision that legalized abortion nationwide.

Berry Sweet, the president of Arizona Right to Choose, estimated the number of pro-choice marchers in Phoenix at about 10,000.

"I think it went wonderfully. It's beyond our wildest dreams," Sweet said. "We had no way of knowing what kind of crowd we were getting as they were pouring into Patriot's Square — the level of excitement just escalated and escalated."

Sweet said the largest prior pro-choice rally in Phoenix attracted only 250 people.

Peck to assume presidency of University of New Mexico

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

ASU Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs Richard Peck was named the 15th President of the University of New Mexico late Thursday night.

"We are delighted that Dr. Peck has agreed to accept the UNM presidential post," said Robert Sanchez, president of the New Mexico Board of Regents.

During a telephone interview Sunday afternoon, Peck, 54, said he had bittersweet thoughts about leaving ASU.

"I am pleased to have been named president," he said. "I'm looking forward to it with mixed feelings."

Peck said that he will miss the excitement at ASU and its future possibilities. He said that what he will miss most is the people.

Peck will replace UNM President Gerald May, who announced in July that he will be returning this summer to the university's College of Engineering as its dean. Peck will take office July 1.

Peck said he is leaving a "solid administrative team" and advises his replacement to trust the staff.

Details of Peck's contract, including salary, have not yet been worked out, Sanchez said.

Peck said he has not decided exactly when he and his wife will leave Arizona, but he said it will be after spring graduation.

"I still have six months of my job left here," he said.

ASU President Lattie Coor said he was happy for Peck but sorry for the University.

"I had the most unusual relationship with Dick," Coor continued. "He was carrying out the presidency very ably when I was preparing to come to ASU. He has an incisive understanding of how a university is to run."

Peck will face many of the same challenges at UNM as he did at ASU, May said, adding that low state funding because of a flat economy is the primary problem.

"UNM cannot physically keep up with the needs of the state," May said. "Funding is a continuing problem. We are substantially below our peers."

May predicted minority students will soon become the majority population at UNM.

"Minority relations are a continuing source of concern," May said. "We're not where we want to be."

May added that another concern was lack of local support.

Tuition hearing moved to MU Arizona Room

The Arizona Board of Regents tuition hearings scheduled for Thursday have been moved from the MU Alumni Lounge to the MU Arizona room.

The regents resources committee is considering proposals to raise resident tuition $116 or $152 and non-resident tuition $532 to $1720 a year.

Last week student government officials were told the meeting could not be moved from the lounge, which holds only 100 people.

Resources committee chairman Jack Pfister said he was unaware of any problems resulting from the originally scheduled meeting room.

Associated Students of ASU President Paul Larson said the committee will allow the Arizona Students Association 30 minutes to present their alternative tuition proposal. He said students in attendance will then have 30 minutes to address the board members.

Pro-life activists said they were also surprised by the large turnout at their afternoon rally. Pro-life demonstrators appeared to outnumber the pro-choice crowd.

"We're extremely pleased with the numbers," said John Salvatore, Director of Project Rescue, an active anti-abortion organization.

The pro-choice advocates congregated at Patriot's Square at 1 p.m. and marched to Wesley Bolin Plaza, where the rally was held at 3 p.m. Speakers at the rally ranged from Hattie Babbitt, a Phoenix attorney and wife of former Arizona governor Bruce Babbitt, to Nancy Lee Grahn and Judith McConnel, stars of the Emmy award-winning NBC soap opera "Santa Barbara."

"Because of this issue, we have been reminded that our vote matters, which is the same as saying that we matter," said Grahn, who is the founder of "Daytime for Choice," a group of pro-choice soap opera actors. "That's very positive."

Grahn also warned of legislation that will result in "reducing women to breeders." She and McConnel went on to lead the predominately female crowd in an impromptu version of Steam's 1969 hit "Na Na Hey Hey Kiss Him Goodbye," in which the names of various anti-abortion legislators were inserted into the lyrics.

Sweet said Arizona legislators "had better be careful."

"I think by the turnout you can tell that at least this issue has become if not paramount, one of the most important issues. And I hope that the pro-choice people will look very carefully and find out where the candidates stand and take their position very seriously," she said.

One vocal anti-abortion marcher shouting "abortion is murder" made his way into the pro-choice congregation but was escorted out by police without incident.

Sporadic shouting incidents between rival marchers continued throughout the afternoon but police reported no arrests.

Scott Troyanos/State Press
About 10,000 pro-choice demonstrators turned out in downtown Phoenix Sunday for a rally. Pro-choice leaders said the group was the largest ever in Arizona.

Fallen Armenian

A huge crowd gathered Sunday to view the open coffin of an Armenian militant, with a blood stain visible on his head, in the Armenian capital Yerevan. Moscow sent troops to Baku, U.S.S.R., after fighting flared between the Moslem Azerbaijanis and mainly Christian Armenians. The neighboring republics are locked in a decades-old dispute over the region of Nagorno-Karabakh, which is inside Azerbaijan but populated mainly by Armenians. The bloodiest wave of violence erupted Jan. 13, with anti-Armenian rioting in Baku that killed 67 people. The total number of casualties is 129 dead and more than 500 wounded.

Communist party leaders resigning refuse to disband

WEST BERLIN (AP) — East Germany's ruling Communist Party on Sunday expelled Egon Krenz, the ousted leader who opened the Berlin Wall, and lost its popular No. 2 official in a resignation that could cripple the embattled party.

The Communists rejected demands to disband but offered the opposition "co-responsibility" in the government until May elections, abolished their clasped-hands emblem and offered to change their party's name.

Tens of thousands of anti-Communist protesters carrying suitcases marched across the border from Duderstadt to Goettingen, West Germany, in a symbolic exodus but returned later in the day.

West Germany's ARD television said about 60,000 people were involved but police in Goettingen put the number at about 25,000.

Wolfgang Berghofer, a reformer who was the Communist Party's deputy chairman, resigned along with 39 other prominent members in his home city of Dresden, the official news agency ADN said.

Berghofer, Dresden's 46-year-old mayor, is credited with helping to head off a potential massacre of pro-democracy demonstrators in October. He was the first official to call for a free-market economy.

In a two-day meeting that ended Sunday, the Communists expelled Krenz and 13 members of the ousted ruling Politburo. It rejected demands to disband but promised "radical reform and consolidation" and rehabilitated 47 East Germans punished for speaking out against former hard-line Communist leaders.

Krenz immediately appealed his expulsion, becoming the first former top leader to fight back publicly. A dozen former leaders were kicked out in December and nine are in prison awaiting corruption trials.

The official announcement did not specify a reason for Sunday's purge. However, the Communists are moving to rid themselves of the last of the top officials associated with Erich Honecker, the hard-liner replaced by Krenz on Oct. 18.

Roy forced into exile

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — A prominent civic leader, considered the father of Haiti's constitution, was forced into exile Sunday by the military regime, a day after it imposed a state of siege and arrested dozens of critics.

Dr. Louis Roy "was carrying a small suitcase, kissed the ground two times, and mounted the stairway to exile," a relative told The Associated Press.

Roy, 74, founder of the Haitian Red Cross, flew to Miami aboard a commercial flight.

On Saturday, another government critic, conservative leader Hubert de Ronceray, was forced into exile after police and soldiers rounded up dozens of opponents.

Manuelito seeks chairmanship

TOHATCHI, N.M. (AP) — Albuquerque resident Laurence Manuelito announced he will seek the chairmanship of the Navajo Nation.

Manuelito, who came in third in the 1986 election for Navajo chairman, joins Rep. Albert Shirley, D-Church Rock, and suspended Chairman Peter MacDonald as announced candidates for what the Tribal Council now calls the presidency of the tribe.

Manuelito said he considers the post to be the chairmanship, and predicted Navajos will reject the title of tribal president, along with requirements that candidates live on the reservation three years before an election.

Manuelito, owner of the contracting company, Chuska Development Corp., said Saturday he believes issues of the 1990 campaign will be similar to those of the past.

"We're still lagging in economic development, education and basic health care," he said.

Manuelito, 44, said controversy in tribal government over the suspension last year of MacDonald and allegations of impropriety in the chairman's office have raised the awareness of the Navajo people.

Manuelito made his announcement Saturday at his home chapter of Tohatchi, northeast of Gallup. He said he plans to visit all 109 Navajo chapters during his campaign.

The primary election is in August.

Barry seeks help after cocaine charge

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mayor Marion Barry, acknowledging that he needs "to heal my body, mind and soul," but declining to mention drug abuse, announced Sunday he will seek help following his arrest on a cocaine possession charge.

"He has reached the hour of reckoning," said his wife, Effi. At times blinking back tears, the mayor provided no further details on what kind of assistance he will seek, except to say that social activist and self-described nutritional expert Dick Gregory has been consulting him on how to get help. An aide said Barry's main problem was with alcoholism.

Top advisers to the mayor, speaking on condition of anonymity, said that the mayor is considering checking into the Betty Ford Clinic in Rancho Mirage, Calif. and two unnamed clinics in the Washington area. A decision on where the mayor will be treated is expected before Monday, the aides said.

Barry's brief statement was the latest chapter in an unfolding drama that has riveted the nation's capital since the mayor was arrested on drug charges last Thursday night.

While the mayor did not say whether he is suffering from drug abuse, others did.

Herbert O. Reid Sr., one of the mayor's closest personal advisers, said he hoped that from Barry's travails "we can all learn something about drug addiction."

"He's doing the right thing," Reid said. "I am — we all are — relieved, because many of us have suspected for some time that he has had a problem."

Barry

"The most serious problem is alcoholism," Barry spokeswoman Lurma Rackley said. "The mayor has acknowledged that he has a health concern, and the details are his private matter."

"For you to admit that you have a problem . . . that you need to make yourself whole again is truly a burden lifted from our souls," the mayor's wife said in remarks that

Nudists lobby for rights on public lands

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Congress returns this week, lobbyist Kevin Kearney will climb out of his hot tub, slip into a conservative blue suit and head for Capitol Hill to give America's 35,000 card-carrying nudists some national exposure.

"We need to come out of the closet," says Kearney, the first full-time lobbyist for the Florida-based American Sunbathing Association.

Kearney, 38, an avid outdoorsman, has become an enthusiastic convert to "clothing-optional" recreation since he was hired last March by the oldest and biggest nudist organization in the country.

He conducts business from an office in his suburban Cabin John, Md., home, and has installed a telephone in the back yard next to his bubbling hot tub, where he makes calls while skinny-dipping. "It's a good place to work," he says.

In his battle against government cover-ups, Kearney works closely with Turner V. Stokes, a Leesburg, Va., computer specialist and longtime nudist who founded NUDEPAC, a nudist political action committee, five years ago.

"We're mad as hell, and we won't take it anymore," says Stokes, borrowing from the line made popular by the movie "Network."

Kearney already has lobbied the National Park Service and other federal agencies to issue regulations guaranteeing nudists the right to enjoy swimming, camping, hiking, white-water "canuding" and other recreational activities on public lands.

His next targets are the 65 members of House and Senate committees with jurisdiction over public lands. He recently mailed each of them a copy of the ASA's artsy new wall calendar for 1990, featuring photos of nudes romping in the Grand Canyon, splashing in Colorado hot springs and scaling snow-covered California mountain peaks.

Only two legislators responded. A California Democrat wrote back asking for more calendars. An Iowa Republican's envelope came back unopened and stamped "Return to Sender."

Undaunted, Kearney is pondering several other gimmicks

Steep tuition hike looms

Darrin Hostetler
Editor

Over at the offices of the Arizona Board of Regents it's decision-making time again, as board members get set once more to hike student tuition rates. The only question for them is — how much?

On Arizona's campuses, though, the choices facing students are a little more complex and far-reaching. For some, the impending tuition hike will represent the premature end of a college career. These students must answer a tougher question — What am I going to do with my life now?

If you haven't heard, there is a typhoon size tuition hike brewing out there, and the numbers blowing around are enough to send most of us running for cover.

For in-state students, tuition is predicted to rise anywhere from $116 to $152 per year. That's bad enough.

But the really horrific figures are aimed at out-of-state students — who may face as much as $1,720 in extra fees in 1990-91.

Talk of tuition hikes is pretty standard fare at ASU. It's happened before, it will happen again — and it's definitely going to happen this year.

With both the governor and members of the state legislature waving around the budget cutting machete like modern-day Barbary pirates, it is a sure bet that Arizona universities are going to get slashed.

And it is equally sure that tuition is going to be raised to make up for the legislative budget cuts.

We're going to be paying more next year for an ASU education — Arizona's depressed economic situation and legislative climate demand it. That is the reality.

But it is also a reality that hikes of the magnitude currently under discussion by the board are going to cut from the universities many students who are living on the financial margin — those who are barely squeaking by in their quest for a degree.

Those students with families to support, who come from minority or disadvantaged backgrounds, who have returned to the University after decades away to battle the odds and complete their degree — all these students are going to suffer the most.

Students who are struggling from paycheck to paycheck, barely covering the cost of tuition and books, saving to buy food and other necessities of life — these are the students that Arizona universities are going to lose.

It is vital that the regents, who sometimes view the tuition question as just a series of financial options outlined in a prepared budget manual, be made to see the human cost of their tuition equations.

Last year, when students were faced with an $156 tuition hike, they marched en masse to a campus regents tuition hearing to protest the hike and tell the board that such an increase was simply unacceptable. Valley media picked up the story, and incredible pressure was brought to bear on board members.

And it worked.

The hike was cut in half, and hundreds of ASU students were able to remain in school.

In fact, last year's efforts were so effective that the board's initial impulse this year was to avoid giving students a chance to flood newspapers and television stations with their comments about the tuition hike.

They wanted to hold this year's tuition hearing in a small campus room that would exclude the 600 screaming, stomping, mad-as-hell students who showed up last time.

But student leaders did a little screaming and stomping of their own, and the meeting is now scheduled for Thursday in the MU Arizona Room — where there will be room for hundreds of students, faculty and staff.

Like last year, the regents will again be forced to look those of you in the eye who are looking at this proposed tuition hike as a mortal blow to your education, your job prospects and your future. You students who absolutely can not endure any more financial strain without dropping out of the University will get a chance to tell the regents all about it.

But unfortunately, the regents have only allotted 30 minutes for students to speak at this meeting. Not all of you will get a chance.

So, as we did last year, we at the State Press are asking you to tell us all about it, too.

Put your situation in writing. Tell us about your sacrifices, your kids, your two jobs and all the obstacles you have overcome to make it this far at ASU. And tell us why a $152 increase or a $1,700 increase may push you out of the University — and away from your chance to get a degree.

Tell us your story.

And we'll tell it to the regents, either by printing it on this page or by delivering copies of your letters to members of the board during their meeting here Thursday.

The Arizona Constitution mandates that the regents and the Legislature keep a college education as affordable as possible.

The tuition increases the board has planned clearly violate that mandate.

But the only way to convince the regents of that is to show them proof.

That proof is you — and the stories you have to tell.

Deliver signed letters about the proposed tuition increase to the State Press offices in the basement of Matthews Center by 5 p.m. Wednesday.

Students have right to choose ROTC

Editor:

Today the ASU Faculty Senate will hear a proposal spearheaded by education Professor Roger Axford that, if passed, could eliminate the ROTC program at ASU.

This is not a question of "warmongers and peacenicks," "nukes and protestors," but rather a question of whether ASU, while striving for diversification, will choose to take away a program benefitting more than 150 students each semester.

We have long prospered as a campus because of the freedoms we students hold — freedom to organize into groups of students with shared interests, freedom of these groups to coexist and pursue common and/or differing educational goals and, most importantly, the freedom to disagree with another group's philosophies without fear of repercussions. Through these freedoms, choice is created, and through choice, diversification. If we, however, eliminate a freedom, we eliminate a choice, and thus, we eliminate diversification. Professor Axford, if successful with his proposal, would take away a freedom from the students. Although I am not a member of the ROTC program, I enjoy my freedom to Choose not to be a member. I also respect the freedom, the rights of the 160 ASU student cadets who have freely chosen to join the program.

If we eliminate the ROTC program because it promotes "militarism," then it would also be logical to eliminate courses such as HIS 790: History of the Soviet Union, which surely inspire communism. Of course, then, ASU football must go, as it promotes violence and aggression. While we're at it, why not just give "Sparky" the boot, so as to put a stop to our mass Satanic worship (don't laugh, somebody has already tried to do just that!) Ridiculous? Why of course, but the parallel I draw is clear and the equation is simple: The more you take away, the less you ultimately have.

There once was a time when ASU was a small teacher's college located, ironically, in the Old Main building, presently home of the ROTC program. Perhaps Professor Axford simply wants his old "one-room schoolhouse" back again, so that he can teach "Narrow-Mindedness 101: The World As It Should be, According to Roger Axford." This course will be open to all students who are sick and tired of their freedom of choice.

Anti-ROTC group 'misinformed'

Editor:

Although Roger Axford's proposal to eliminate ROTC from the ASU campus does not concern me, his comments do disturb me. I found it disturbing that someone so misinformed with such inaccurate ideas is educating students on our campus. Mr. Axford, I would encourage you to educate yourself about the ROTC program before making ignorant comments like "its business is killing."

In my four years of AFROTC I have learned the basic Air Force structure, the history of air power, leadership and management skills and National Security issues and policies. Oh yes, and I also learned to fly a Cessna 172. (Hardly a killing machine, Mr. Axford!) I guess I missed the course "Killing 101."

After graduation this May, I will go on to pilot training and then serve eight years in the Air Force where I may be called on to protect the people of this great country in spite of people like you, Mr. Axford.

Before jumping on the bandwagon, I would encourage Mr. Axford's 22 followers (and anyone else who may be misled) to understand for themselves what ROTC teaches before being led blindly by his false ideas.

So far so good

Bush's ratings high: Everything's been just fine

Jeff Greenfield
Universal Press Syndicate

NEW YORK — So, George Bush has been president for a year, and his popularity ratings are staggeringly high. The compulsory question before the house is: why?

To answer the question honestly you need a simple household device: a razor; to be specific, Occam's razor. Occam, more formally known as William of Occam, was a 14th-century English philosopher who coined one of the most valuable, and most widely ignored, principles of clear thinking: "Entities are not to be multiplied beyond necessity."

In other words, don't conjure up an hour-long answer to a question that can be answered in three minutes.

Using Occam's Razor to cut away irrelevant or unimportant information, we can dispense with silly questions, such as why President Bush is more popular than Reagan even though Bush doesn't give memorable speeches or radiate power from the television screen.

It's all explained by the story, told here before, of the 8-year-old boy who never talked.

For years, the boy's parents had taken him to every expert they could find. Tests showed the boy to be bright, healthy, with perfectly normal hearing and all the physical ability to speak. He showed no signs of mental or emotional illness; he simply never talked.

Then one day the boy came down to breakfast, dug into his cereal, looked up at his mother and said, "Hey, Mom, this oatmeal's cold."

After a moment of shocked silence, the boy's mother gasped, "You can talk perfectly, but for all these years you've never said a word. Why?"

To which the boy replied, "Up to now, everything's been fine."

Here is just about everything you need to know about the president's popularity. For the public (the 8-year-old boy), the president (the oatmeal) is just fine.

We're at peace in the world, and the one overt use of American armed might ended with an apparent success in Panama with little sign of widespread second thoughts about the number of dead civilians or the precedent for interventionism.

The fear of nuclear war with the Soviet Union, a staple of the international landscape for most of the postwar era, has just about vanished. And communism, once feared as the totalitarian wave of the future, now seems to be melting away faster than the Wicked Witch of the West.

The economy seems fine, with the disastrous consequences of the trade budget deficits still a matter of conjecture rather than reality. Unemployment is low, inflation is under control and none of the powerful images of economic distress — shuttered plants and factories, gasoline lines, rampant price hikes at the grocery store — are part of the current landscape.

Moreover, this placid vista is presided over by an amiable fellow who, unlike Ronald Reagan in his first term, is attempting simply to preserve the current political atmosphere rather than to roil it. Bush, unlike Reagan, stirs little ideological antipathy, principally because Reagan fought those brazenly divisive battles almost a decade ago, additionally because Bush seems to have no ideology whatsoever.

There is no debate over aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, no nuclear freeze movement warning of impending nuclear winter, no alarms being sounded over single-issue theocratic zealots out to destroy the First Amendment.

In fact, with the single exception of the abortion issue, the only matters that seem worth really getting angry about are issues for which the entire political establishment bears bipartisan responsibility: the savings and loan scandal, for example, or the crime epidemic in our cities.

Trying to find a Democratic opposition with the wit or the guts to fight hard on these issues is like holding a mirror up to the mouth of a comatose patient looking for the faintest signs of life.

I still believe that George Bush's failure to define where he wants to lead this country reflects a potential vulnerability: If the oatmeal ever does get cold, the complaints will be long and loud. Right now, though, there's no particular reason for the 8-year-old boy to say anything much at all.

Falling in hate can be dangerous to your health

Joseph Sobran
Universal Press Syndicate

WASHINGTON — I devoutly believe that love makes the world go 'round, but sometimes hate brings it to a screeching halt. To the credit of the human race, whole books are written about love, but relatively little has been written about hatred.

There are, of course, big hatreds, such as we are seeing revived in the breaking of the Soviet empire, wherein the Kremlin is playing the somewhat unaccustomed role of peacemaker between ethnic groups. Such collective enmities, however tragic, always strike us as a little absurd, since we can hardly believe right and wrong could ever correspond to two categories of human beings, both presumably made of much the same stuff and both endowed with human goodness and frailty. How could any reasonable man ever harbor a murderous animus against an entire population? Yet it happens.

They say love is blind. I don't think so. Blind love is what we call infatuation. Real love sees faults, but puts them in a perspective of understanding and needs no illusions.

But hate really is blind by its very nature. I saw a remarkable example of this recently in a letter about an old pal of mine, whom I'll call Ed, written by another old pal of mine, whom I'll call Max.

To my distress, there is no love lost between Ed and Max. At one time I hoped and expected they'd like each other as much as I liked them both. But after working on a joint project together, they went the way of Gilbert and Sullivan, except that neither could even bear a second collaboration. They parted company two years ago.

Ed dislikes Max as intensely as he dislikes anyone, which is not very. He is content to avoid him. Ed is a chipper guy, and would rather save his energy for things he enjoys.

With Max it's totally different. He's still obsessed with Ed. His letter, to another friend of ours, is a long diatribe, full of what I might call lies, except that I think Max may have talked himself into believing them. Some of his accusations even contradict each other. He seems not to notice. His sole purpose is to make Ed appear a perfect monster. It doesn't occur to him that his description of Ed would seem overdrawn as a portrait of Nicolae Ceausescu, that those who know Ed will find it absurd, or that even those who don't know him will find it implausible.

How did this morbid passion arise? Well, their joint project was a modest success, and Ed got most of the credit. Whether he actually claimed the lion's share I don't know. He may have. But that's not really a reason to deny him any humanity, as Max does. Max will concede nothing good about Ed, twisting even his chief virtue, affability, into hypocrisy.

Reading the letter, I felt sorer for Max than for Ed. Max has done something terrible to his own perceptions, his mind, his soul. Nothing his letter could do to Ed's reputation would be as bad as what Max has done to himself. In refusing to see anything redeemable in Ed, he has shrunk his own world. If anyone is in danger of turning into a monster, it isn't Ed.

That's hatred for you. It's not at all the same thing as mere dislike. It doesn't correspond so much to love, even as an opposite, as it does to lovesickness — the unhealthy obsession with the beloved in isolation from the rest of the world.

What a dismal state of mind! Most of us have known it, at least fleetingly, and it's shameful to remember. We recognize it sometimes in divorcing people who are absurdly eager to have us believe they have somehow fallen in love, lived and slept continuously with Absolute Evil; or at least an Absolute Jerk. It wouldn't say much for them if it were true.

We pardon the lover much absurdity. It's harder to pardon the hater, who really needs pardon, as well as pity. Dislike may be justified. Anger, even very deep anger, may be justified. But hate is so self-consuming that it can never be worth justifying.

If the hatred of an individual is so irrational, the hatred of a whole group — most of them total strangers — is madness. It's still the exception, but, as any day's headlines attest, never exceptional enough.

THE GOVERNESS.

March

More than 20,000 Arizonans rallied at Encanto Park at 1 p.m. to denounce Roe vs. Wade and show support for legislation which would restrict abortion.

Former Gov. Evan Mecham, who was on hand at the rally in support of the anti-abortion forces, also said he was impressed with the turnout.

"Looks good," Mecham said. "Looks real good."

The introduction and invocation at the rally was given by Bishop Thomas O'Brien. Other speakers included retiring state Rep. Jim Skelly of Scottsdale, who read letters from congressmen Jon Kyl and Jay Rhodes, who could not attend; and Dr. Warren Stewart, pastor of the First Institutional Baptist Church in Phoenix.

"Historians will look back at this time in history and write what a tragic time it was and ask how could society permit mothers to kill their unborn babies," Skelly said. "And historians will write that because we are going to be successful. It may take another year, it may take another five years, it might take another 10 years, but we will bring constitutional protection to the innocent unborn."

Skelly, who was presented with the first William Wilberforce Award during the rally for his efforts on behalf of the anti-abortion movement, also said he believes the rally will have a positive effect on the Legislature and the current legislative session.

"I think it will do two things. I think it shows the public the depth of support for the pro-life philosophy. I think it also shows the Legislature the depth of support for the pro-life philosophy."

"Through the years I have seen people who were pro-abortion, who have voted pro-abortion, completely change and become staunch pro-lifers," Skelly said. "In Arizona, I have never seen the reverse happen."

Wilberforce was a 16th century British Parliament member who led the fight to abolish the slave trade in the British Empire.

At 2:30 p.m. the anti-abortion group marched to the state capital, where 16,000 red balloons were released to symbolize the 16,000 abortions performed in the state last year.

For national anti-abortion forces, the weekend of activity culminates today with a march on the U.S. Capitol, where President Bush is scheduled to address the Washington "March for Life."

In Southern California, 5,000 linked arms to line the sides of Beach Boulevard along parts of a five-mile stretch through the cities of Anaheim and Westminster to dramatize their opposition to abortion.

In Provo, Utah, right-to-life groups sponsored several "baby showers" to gather donated maternity clothes and baby gifts for needy women who spurned abortion.

followed her husband's. "For our family, it is just the beginning."

Barry, surrounded by clergy in a broadcast appearance in front of St. Timothy's Episcopal Church near his home, clasped his wife's hand and said he has come "face to face with my deepest human failures."

Barry said, "these ministers have helped me to keep the strength I need . . . I'm going to find a way to heal my body, mind and soul."

The mayor did not take questions and turned the podium to Mrs. Barry following his brief statement. Attention has been focused on Mrs. Barry in part because the mayor was lured to his arrest by a woman with whom the mayor has been friendly.

Barry, 53, was arrested Thursday evening at a downtown hotel in an FBI sting operation. He now faces a misdemeanor cocaine possession charge after testing positive for cocaine in blood and urine tests administered following his arrest.

Close advisers to Barry told The Associated Press on Saturday that the mayor has agreed to enter a drug treatment center. The sources said details on the type of treatment and location of the facility were still being worked out.

Barry had been poised to announce his bid for a fourth term as mayor on Sunday but his arrest has thrown local politics into convulsions. Several advisers said Barry had agreed to abandon his bid for re-election, and they added that the possibility of his resigning from office was never discussed in Friday and Saturday strategy sessions.

Nude

to improve the nudist image among Washington power brokers.

He's thinking of inviting every member of Congress to a nearby Maryland nudist camp this summer to shed their inhibitions, press the flesh and enjoy some barbecue in the buff.

On National Nude Weekend in mid-July, Kearney may lead a bare-bottomed sailboat regatta down the Potomac River to challenge federal, state and local anti-nudity regulations. He's also ready to propose a federal excise tax on bathing suits, which he calls "a piece of totally useless recreational equipment."

There are no federal regulations outlawing nudity. Spokesmen for the National Park Service, the U. S. Forest Service and the Tennessee Valley Authority say nudists generally are welcome on public lands unless their activities are forbidden by local statutes or threaten to disturb the tranquility of wilderness areas.

But George Berkclacy, a National Park Service spokesman, had discouraging news for Kearney. "We have no intention of developing regulations which allow for nude sunbathing," he said.

Kearney complained that without uniform federal regulations, unsuspecting nudists run the risk of arbitrary eviction by hostile park rangers, some of whom have threatened their au naturel visitors with guns or handcuffs.

"Our people have lost many beaches over the last decade, and they're frustrated and tired of being hassled," he said. "This sort of thing would never be allowed to happen to surf casters or tennis players or golfers."

Officials propose funds to aid out-of-state students

Scott Troyano/State Press

ASU President Lattie Coor discusses a proposed tuition hike at a luncheon Friday.

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

ASU President Lattie Coor said Friday that the President's Council will propose a scholarship fund for out-of-state students to help alleviate the burden of a possible tuition increase that will be discussed by the Board of Regents Thursday.

The scholarship money will come directly from the tuition increase, Coor said, adding he has not ruled out a grandfather clause to protect current students from drastic tuition increases.

"I've come to no final conclusion on the grandfather clause," he said. "But I'd like to see a much richer financial aid program to directly assist those who need it the most."

The regents are considering a plan that would make out-of-state students pay up to 100 percent of their total cost of education — a 17.5 percent increase.

Non-resident students currently pay $5,484 a year, but the proposed tuition hike could raise the out-of-state fee to $7,204 a year.

Sonia Delgado, 21, a senior political science major, said that she is concerned about the hike. Delgado, who is from Panama, said she and six other Panamanian students are at ASU on a full-scholarship program.

"Every time the out-of-state tuition increases, our chances for graduating decreases," she said, adding that increased fees are deducted from her scholarship fund.

The President's Council is made up of the three Arizona university presidents. Coor said that he will talk with the presidents from UofA and NAU before Thursday to iron out any problems with the proposal.

Coor said that if non-resident tuitions increase, then faculty and staff salaries must increase in order to maintain a high level of education.

"It isn't healthy for a university, which can afford a higher sticker price, not to have competitive salaries," he said, adding that higher salaries are the key to minority recruitment and retention.

Coor said that when he was president of the University of Vermont, salaries increased up to 10 percent yearly. Last year, salaries at ASU rose only 3 percent.

He added that staff salaries at the University level are 15 percent less than at the state level. He blamed this difference for the 30 percent turnover at ASU.

Candidates file to run for general elections

By HOBART ROWLAND
State Press

Three mayoral candidates and 10 competitors for City Council filed campaign papers by Friday's eligibility deadline to run in Tempe's municipal elections on March 20.

After 12 years in office, Mayor Harry Mitchell will face some competition in the May 8 general election from former District 27 state Senate candidate Ken Van Doren and past City Hall hopeful Ilias Kostopoulos.

Mitchell, a government teacher at Tempe High School, has been the target of attacks from Van Doren since December when the candidate questioned the mayor's role in the city's exchange of parking spaces for choice Phoenix Cardinals tickets in 1988.

After public outcry forced him to cancel the deal, Mitchell contended there was no corruption involved. The tickets, he maintained, were obtained for promotional reasons, not for city officials' use.

The ticket controversy has since died down, and Mitchell is enjoying a good deal of recognition for his efforts in the city's downtown revitalization projects.

Incumbent Council members Frank Plencner and Carol Smith will run against a list of up-and-comers which includes Mitchell's former campaign manager Chuck Malpede and Neil Giuliano, director of constituent relations for the ASU Alumni Association.

Plencner, who is running for his third term on the Council, said he is encouraged by the competition.

"It shows that people are interested in what happens to this city," he said. "I won't take anyone for granted."

Richard Ryan, owner and operator of Cannery Row Pub on Forest Street near ASU, will be taking his first stab at a City Council seat, and ex-ASU football player Prentice Williams is beginning his seventh campaign push towards City Hall.

Eight others will be taking on the incumbents.

Smith said the turnout speaks well for the city and said she believes this enthusiasm will influence voter participation.

"I hope people will participate in the election and be aware of the whole broad spectrum of issues," she said.

cars after they were attacked by white fraternity members who mistook them for suspects in an earlier assault on a fraternity member.

Rucker and Liddell had accused ASU police of humiliating them because they said they were the only people arrested and were handcuffed in front of about 500 students, many of whom were yelling racial slurs. They were later released at ASU police headquarters, where they had been handcuffed to chairs.

Meanwhile, Bess said he is interested in reviewing the recommendations of an independent University panel, which will be released today. The panel investigated the police actions during the fight as part of a 13-point plan to combat racism at ASU that was sparked by campus protest of the fraternity row incident.

"I want to look at the recommendations to see if there is some need for specific changes in policies and procedures," Bess said, adding that ASU police officers recently took part in racial sensitivity training — also part of the University's anti-racism plan.

Bess also said he believes the Justice Department decision will help mend the Police Department's image.

"When you're under question, it puts a cloud over the department," he said.

- Two ASU students at Sahuaro Hall were warned by police about marijuana possession after a residence assistant reported smelling the drug.
- A juvenile was injured late Saturday when she ran down a ramp at Sun Devil Stadium. The girl, who is unaffiliated with ASU, was treated at the Maricopa County Medical Center in Phoenix.
- An ASU student was arrested for making a false report to a law enforcement agency. The student was cited and released.
- An ASU student was arrested for underage possession of alcohol Friday at the Cholla Apartment Complex. The student was cited and released.

Tempe police reported the following incidents on Sunday:

- An ASU Physical Plant painter was arrested on felony drug charges Thursday after he allegedly tried to buy 35 pounds of marijuana from undercover narcotics officers during a three-month period.
- Timothy Leon States, 33, of Mesa, was arrested without incident about 2:30 p.m. in the 100 block of East University Drive in Tempe. He was booked into Tempe City Jail on charges of conspiracy to possess marijuana and possession of marijuana.
- Three youths, one of whom was armed with a knife, robbed a gas station store of two 12-packs of beer early Friday.
- The robbery occurred about 2:05 a.m. at the Prestige Station, 980 W. University Drive when two of the suspects took the beer. When the clerk tried to stop them, a third suspect pulled out a knife and made stabbing motions at the clerk who was not injured.
- The suspects then fled the store on foot.
- An ASU student was arrested early Friday on a theft charge after he ate a spaghetti dinner at Carrow's, 1215 E. Apache Boulevard, and fled the restaurant without paying the $4.80 tab. He was arrested and booked into Tempe City Jail after a short foot chase by police.

- A 22-year-old Tempe man was arrested after he crashed his motorcycle during a 75 mph chase with police during rush hour on Thursday. The man later told police he fled because his driver's license had been suspended for speeding.
- The chase began about 7:26 a.m. on Price Road just south of Broadway Road when police saw the man make an unsafe lane change and speed. He wouldn't stop when police tried to pull him over and continued speeding south on Price Road.
- The suspect then stopped just north of Southern Avenue but took off. He then drove over a raised median into oncoming traffic, where he hit a median at Price Road and the Superstition Freeway and flew off his motorcycle into a street sign.
- A 61-year-old Colorado man and his wife scared off a would-be robber by yelling after the suspect pulled out a small-caliber handgun and said "give me everything you got."
- The robbery attempt occurred about 10:54 p.m. behind the La Quinta Motel, 911 S. 48th St. The suspect fled after the couple began yelling.
- A thief stole a 44-year-old ASU student's duffle bag and its contents, valued at $199, from under a table at Coffee Plantation, 680 S. Mill Ave.

Peck

"We must continue to build a good community relationship," May said. "It's a continuing challenge that needs to be rebuilt consistently."

May said the he is very pleased about the regent's decision and that the campus reacted well to the decision.

Someone who will miss Peck more than the average student is his daughter Laura, a sophomore at ASU.

"Obviously I'm pleased for him," she said. "It is a great career move."

"I'll miss him and the school will miss him, but I know he'll do a great job."

Laura Peck, an ASU sophomore, said she has no intentions of following her father to UNM.

"I didn't come here because my dad was here," she said.

"I was just really impressed with ASU. He's leaving, I'm not. I like it here too much."

Peck graduated magna cum laude from Wisconsin's Carroll College in 1961. He then went on to the University of Wisconsin-Madison, where he earned his master's degree in 1962 and doctorate degree in 1964.

He came to ASU in 1988 as provost and academic affairs vice president, and from July 1989 to Jan. 1 he served as interim president.

As interim president he hired 111 new faculty members, including 57 women and minorities. He hired six administrators, four of whom were women and minorities.

Peck visited the Albuquerque campus Wednesday as one of two finalists for the top job. The other finalist was Eugene Trani, vice president for academic affairs at the University of Wisconsin.

The Usual Suspects

Mayflower Madam recants AIDS advice

Former "Mayflower Madam" Sydney Biddle Barrows has apologized for a paragraph in her new intimate etiquette book that suggests dinner guests be told if someone with AIDS is at the table.

The publisher, Doubleday, said in a press release Saturday that many have complained that the passage in the book "Mayflower Manners" is insensitive.

Miss Barrows said in the release, "My advice was intended to protect the feelings of such a guest from the ignorance of those who might inadvertently bring up a subject, causing discomfort to the guest. I intended no other meaning or inference."

She said the passage would be deleted in future printings.

The book by Ellis Weiner and Miss Barrows is described by the publisher as "a satirical and tongue-in-cheek advice book."

Quincy Jones honored

Musician Quincy Jones was awarded the French Legion of Honor Sunday for his work as a trumpeter, composer, arranger and record producer.

Jones, 56, is well known on both sides of the Atlantic. His career includes collaboration with some of America and France's greatest artists — Aretha Franklin, George Benson, Jacques Brel, Michel Legrand, Miles Davis, Ray Charles and Charles Aznavour, to name a few.

As a record producer, Jones was responsible for two of the most successful albums of the 1980s — Michael Jackson's "Thriller" and "Bad."

After six years of dedicating himself to producing, Jones released his own album, "Back on the Block," which has risen to 16th place on U. S. charts since its December release.

Hey Pa! the ranch is finally finished

Actor Michael Landon and his family will now be able to relax on their new ranch estate, after 10 years and a reported $7 million.

Landon, who starred in "Little House on the Prairie" and "Highway to Heaven," traded an oceanfront residence at celebrity-saturated Malibu Colony for a ranch estate in bucolic Bonsall Canyon.

Landon, 52, has seven grown children from two previous marriages and has two young children with his current wife, Cindy.

Barbara Stanwyck dies

Barbara Stanwyck, who began show business as a Ziegfeld Follies dancer but went on to play some of the toughest ladies in film and TV, died Saturday of congestive heart failure. She was remembered by colleagues Sunday as an uncompromising professional.

Miss Stanwyck died at St. John's Hospital and Health Center in Santa Monica, said agent Larry Kleno. She was 82.

Her 60-plus years in entertainment spanned the chorus line, vaudeville stage, silents, talkies and television. She plotted murder with Fred MacMurray in "Double Indemnity," played a horrified victim in "Sorry Wrong Number" and ran the ranch with an iron hand in the series "The Big Valley."

She earned three Emmys, four Academy Award nominations and an honorary Oscar for her work in more than 80 films.

Jessica Lange stars in "Music Box" as a lawyer defending her father (Armin Mueller-Stahl) against charges of Nazi activities during World War II. Associated Press photo

Lawyers and Nazis

They form the backbone for good 'Music Box'

By KRAMER WETZEL
State Press

A: Anal Sex.

Q: Where do lawyers come from?

A: When their lips are moving.

Q: When are lawyers lying?

A: Professional courtesy.

Q: Why don't sharks attack lawyers?

Lawyers are often maligned, and justly so. They are the ones that keep getting me out of jail, and that ranks them right down at the bottom of the heap with whale dung, poisonous snakes, movie critics, and Nazi war criminals.

What happens when Nazi war criminals are combined with lawyers in a movie plot? What happens when a twist of good, traditional American values, like working at the steel mill and honoring mother and father, is thrown in? One would expect a tasteless piece of trash. But a good script, careful direction and casting successfully combines all these elements.

"Music Box," directed by Costa Gravas, is promoted as a courtroom drama, a mystery, and a story about a relationship between people. Mystery, maybe, courtroom drama, no. The courtroom is merely a backdrop for a larger story that unfolds behind the scenes. According to the proverbial press kit, the actor who plays the judge is really a judge in Chicago. He claims the courtroom tension is accurate, and the precepts of the law are well portrayed.

Jessica Lange plays a lawyer — and I'm sorry to see that. Her father (played by Armin Mueller-Stahl) is accused of Nazi war crimes. She defends him, and her defense is brilliant. Unfortunately, in order to win her case she is forced to discover something about her father she would really rather not deal with. But, like life, she must learn to cope with the past.

As both a daughter and a lawyer, Lange must decide if her father is guilty. His exemplary life after his purported heinous crimes comes to the surface. We get a picture of an ideal father figure, the American dream that anybody can, and will, succeed if they are willing to work hard, live right, eat their Wheaties, and go to church.

There is the added bit of international intrigue, and once again those dirty commies are blamed for the usual evils.

Ultimately, Lange's character must make a difficult decision. She does the right thing, but with diastrophic consequences for herself and her family.

There is a problem with this movie, and it has to do with the end. Now, I like unhappy endings when the end is arrived at in logical and realistic fashion. The bad news here is the denouement is delivered via a literary device called deus ex machina (where the conflict is resolved by some outside, irrelevant force). Except for the final unraveling, the story is quite good and seems realistic.

No matter how good "Music Box" is, it won't be very popular. After all, lawyers and Nazi war criminals aren't popular figures to begin with. But the story is good, and the performance by Lange is stunning. It made me wonder what I would do if I were placed in a similar situation.

The movie also suggests that lawyers are real people with sincere and deep feelings. That's one idea I could never believe. Remember, movies aren't reality.

'Leatherface' lacks redeeming value

Raw meat appropriate appetizer for hack and slash movie

By KRAMER WETZEL
State Press

I am a fan of Joe Bob Briggs. Make no mistake about that: I read the "Drive-in Movie Critic of Grapevine Texas" with religious fervor. I started reading him when I was but a young lad, before he was nationally syndicated, before he made it to T.V. I used to worship the ground he walked on. If he reviews a movie, I don't go see it. Best thing I ever did was take Joe Bob's advice, and then do the other thing.

Until now, though, I have yet to see even one of Mr. Briggs' "pick hits." I wish I hadn't been forced to see this one. It removes the mystique from the genre. I wonder if Joe Bob will ever be deep and meaningful again. I saw "Leatherface: Texas Chainsaw Massacre, Part Three." I want to throw up.

The editor, my boss, called me up. "Go see 'Miss Daisy,' 'Glory,' and, uh, 'Leatherface.'"

I said, "Huh?"

I asked again, and then I repeated the list, omitting "Leatherface." It didn't work. Some of these editors are pretty sharp, particularly for journalism students.

"Just go see it," he said.

Right. I saluted the telephone and marched out of my bedroom, straight into the bathroom. I began feeling nauseous.

I put it off as long as I could. My girlfriend had brought another, completely unrelated fact, to my attention. "You never take me to Monti's. You go with all your other friends, but you never take me." Nag, nag, nag. I said to myself, "Self, she wants to see 'Leatherface'. She wants to go to Monti's, so why don't we just kill two birds with one Saturday night out?" I put on my best plaid Polyester sports jacket. She hates that coat. The attire seemed more than appropriate for our intended plans for the evening.

Last Saturday, we went to Monti's. What a lucky day, Saturday the 13th. I timed this as best I could, and I "accidentally" left the movie listings at home. "Leatherface" was at 8 p.m. We arrived at Monti's at 7:30, only to find the wait was an hour and fifteen minutes. Hah. I tactfully suggested other alternatives.

"How about Chili's?" I was thinking about my wallet.

"No way. You promised me Monti's and 'Leatherface.'"

Why do I always get the stubborn women for girlfriends? I refused to stand in line at Monti's so we went back to my place. An hour later, this time armed with the movie section, we went back to Monti's. I prayed for another hour long wait. No such luck. The nice hostess remembered me. Laurie put us right at the top of the list. We were seated in minutes.

"Self," I said, "time for the back-up plan."

"What back-up plan?" I asked.

Looking over the menu gave me an idea — my second line of defense. We ordered the "steak for two." Nothing works as well as a large chunk of raw meat, loaded with carcinogens: that'll put her to sleep. Unfortunately, I had a very hungry girlfriend on my hands. Never underestimate a woman. First she ate all her appetizers and then commenced on the rare sirloin. I should have ordered one of those things just for her. What we had didn't slow her down at all. Worse, I only got about a third of the steak. I don't want you thinking my girlfriend is some porker, either, she only weighs 92 pounds. That's her wet weight, too. Make that 97 pounds after dinner.

'Leatherface'

Coffee, cigarettes, desert, more coffee, more cigarettes. I tried my "I'm so tired" expression. None of my little ruses were working.

"Well, how about 'Ski Patrol'?" I asked hopefully.

"Leatherface."

"I don't think it's showing this late, tonight..."

"Leatherface. You promised. Or else."

Women can be so persuasive.

Rare sirloin, raw meat, both were the correct appetizer before seeing "Texas Chainsaw Massacre, Part Three." There's a lot of raw meat in "Leatherface." There is nothing socially redeeming about this movie. It is not entertaining. It's disgusting.

The movie is about a cannibal family that lives in what looks like West Texas. There is much suspense. Road kill is everywhere. The weirdos survive. It's disgusting.

The family that eats other people isn't without some historical background. West Texans are known for their lack of warmth when dealing with tourists from the wrong side of the Mason-Dixon line. But it's not personal. In this movie, it is personal. And it's disgusting.

Then, there is this guy with a face mask. The mask is made from various parts of other people's faces. That's bad. His brother gives him a special chainsaw. It has gold anodized guard plates and a huge chrome blade. Miserable looking thing. He uses it to chop up living people. It's disgusting.

According to the promotional material, "Leatherface" was originally rated X because of the violence. I still think it should be rated X. The editor obviously didn't cut enough of the gore. Wait, maybe there's a lesson for my editor... Nah, he wouldn't learn anything.

Kramer Bob says "Don't check it out. Not at the Drive-in, not at the dollar movies, not even at the video store. If it ever makes it to cable T.V., don't stay up to see it." Leatherface is that bad.

And I still want to throw up. The only problem is I would have to look at all that raw meat. Just like the movie.

NEW YORK (AP) — In Iowa, where they covet convertibles, loathe telephone answering machines, keep an eye out for extraterrestrials and pine for more affectionate goldfish, the poll people are at it again.

"If you could take one thing with you after you die, what would it be—" asks the Iowa Poll, an often-irreverent institution that has been probing public opinion in its home state for 46 years.

The answers, published Sunday in The Des Moines Register: loved ones (19 percent); pictures (6 percent); pets and jewelry (3 percent each). And so on.

Extraordinary elsewhere, such tidbits are common fare in this tireless chronicler of the offbeat in Iowa society. "We like to be a trendsetter in the area of goofiness," said the poll's director, J. Ann Selzer.

Others are catching on. Just this month, WCBS-TV in New York aired a special called "The Great American TV Poll." Among its findings: Twenty-one percent of Americans think suspenders on men are sexy.

That's just the latest. In September the Los Angeles Times revealed that 8 percent of the drivers in Southern California have fuzzy dice, or some such ornament, strung from their rearview mirrors. And CBS News reported last year that 7 percent of Americans believe Elvis Presley may still be alive.

A spokeswoman at Graceland, the King's Memphis mansion-turned-museum, maintained that he died on Aug. 16, 1977.

ASU fights off Antelope rally, sweep season-opening series

By SETH SULKA
State Press

After the ASU baseball team crushed Grand Canyon 12-2 Saturday, it looked as though the Sun Devils' bats had enough firepower left to carry them through Sunday's game.

But when the smoke cleared, it was ASU's clutch pitching that proved to be a savior.

The Sun Devils survived a ninth-inning rally by the Antelopes at Brazell Field to post a 5-4 victory and complete the two-game sweep of GCU.

"It was a good win for us," said ASU Head Coach Jim Brock. "We need to learn how to play with the tying run on third and the winning run on second."

"You have to give Grand Canyon a lot of credit. They appeared to be out of the ball game, and they came back and did a heck of a job in the ninth."

The Antelopes did make a legitimate run at the Sun Devils in the ninth. Aided by second baseman Fernando Vina's throwing error, two walks and a wild pitch, GCU had three hits and scored three runs in the inning.

ASU sophomore pitcher Kip Vaughn, who relieved junior Todd Douma, started the inning with a strikeout. It was his fourth strikeout in two innings of relief. He then gave up two straight singles and threw a wild pitch to put runners at second and third.

Sophomore designated hitter Jim Price then hit a ground ball which scored Doug Kimball from third. Freshman catcher Grant Gunkel followed with another single that scored another run. After Vaughn walked the next batter, junior Gary Tatterson came in to try and finish off the Antelopes.

Tatterson, after Vina's error and a walk, faced junior second baseman Tim Florez. With the bases loaded and two out, Tatterson got Florez on a fielder's choice to Vina.

Tatterson said that he wasn't bothered by the pressure situation that he faced.

"I went to Glendale (Community College) for two years and that is what I did there," Tatterson said. "I would come in when it was tight. That is what I did here today — just there's a little more pressure at this level."

As opposed to Saturday's game, in which ASU scored eight times in the first three innings, the Sun Devils didn't manage a run until the fourth inning.

After retiring the first two batters in the fourth, junior Bart Grubb walked ASU's catcher Eric Helfand. Left fielder Mike Kelly made Grubb pay for the walk when he smashed a two-run shot over the left field fence.

"I'm really pleased with my swing right now," said Kelly, who hit a triple and two singles in Saturday's game. "He (Grubb) threw me a curve ball and I was guessing curve. The coaches told me to look for the curve ball with a three-and-one count."

At the time, a 2-0 lead looked safe with Douma in control. Through six innings, Douma had a no-hitter.

O'Connor pushes Sun Devils past UofA, 84-78

By KRIS TIMMONS
State Press

Junior guard Karen O'Connor had 27 points and 10 rebounds as the ASU womens basketball team beat UofA Friday night by a score of 84-78.

It was the first Pac-10 win for the Sun Devils (9-6, 1-4 Pac-10) which Head Coach Maura McHugh said was a "huge win, just for the team's confidence."

McHugh belittled the fact that the win came against the arch rival Wildcats.

"For us, it wasn't so much that it was Arizona, it was just that we had to win a home game," McHugh said.

ASU and UofA battled for the lead early in the first half and the Wildcats led the Sun Devils by two at the 17:08 mark of the first half, UofA's only lead of the game.

ASU led by as much as 12 points in the first half and went into the locker room at halftime with an eight-point advantage.

The Wildcat defense held ASU to just nine points in the last three minutes. UofA sophomore forward Brenda Frese hit two free throws and a three-point field goal to bring UofA within seven with just under 1:30 left in the game.

ASU forward Monique Ambers fouled out a second later which put Frese back on the line to shoot the bonus. She sunk both free throws to cut the Sun Devil lead to five.

The Wildcats trimmed the lead to two when Frese hit another 3-point field goal with 1:03 remaining in the game.

O'Connor was fouled by UofA junior Timi Brown and hit both free throws on the bonus to increase the ASU lead to four with 50 seconds left in the game.

Senior Carolyn DeHoff was fouled 12 seconds later and missed the first shot of a crucial one and one.

The Sun Devils hung on and hit five shots from the charity stripe to seal the victory.

McHugh said the game was what she had expected.

"It was very, very physical and very scrappy like we expected," she said. "All in all, I thought this was a great game."

Defensive breakdowns caused ASU to falter late in the second half, according to McHugh, but she felt the team stayed in the game mentally.

"When the lead slipped a little bit, instead of going into the tank, they (Sun Devils) kept their composure and kept playing hard," McHugh said.

Wildcat Head Coach June Olkowski attributed the UofA loss to a combination of little mistakes.

"As I told my kids in the locker room, we haven't done anything major," she said. "We need to correct the little things which would give us one or two points here and there."

DeHoff, who contributed eight points and four assists, credited the ASU victory to team balance.

Three Sun Devils scored in double figures: O'Connor (27), Fran Ciak (19) and Rosalind Senior (11).

Low seeds play to top billing in Classic

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

The ASU mens tennis team accomplished exactly what it wanted to in this weekend's Winter Classic held at Whiteman Tennis Center.

It gave team underdogs the opportunity to prove themselves.

Prior to this weekend, Greg Prudhomme was not a competitor in the top six spots, but after this weekend's action, Sun Devil Head Coach Lou Belken said Prudhomme has put himself in the battle for the No. 6 seed.

"Greg is a guy who really helped himself with this tournament," Belken said. "He made improvements over the fall, but did not get a whole lot of exposure."

"That's the reason for this tournament — to see if someone like Greg could come through."

The Winter Classic was a double 16-draw tournament. ASU played without the services of its regular season No. 1 and No. 2 seeds Brian Gyetko and David Lomicky, thus moving its regular three through six seeds into the top four spots.

Prudhomme, who was seeded No. 6 in this tournament, defeated University of Nevada-Las Vegas' No. 5 seed Robert Vinson in the final match of the second draw, 6-4, 7-6.

"I went as far as I could," Prudhomme said. "It feels good anytime you can play a tournament without a loss and play well."

The match between Prudhomme and Vinson lasted for two and a half hours. Prudhomme said this was indicative of how equally competitive the two were.

"It was a really good match-up," he said. "We both had the same style, but I had better endurance — that's the thing I had going for me through the whole tournament."

In the first 16-draw, ASU's Daniel Marting, who was seeded No. 1 in this tournament, defeated UNLV's No. 2 seed Eric Aanes in the final round, 6-4, 6-3.

No. 2 Joel Finnigan was defeated in the third round by Aanes, 7-5, 0-6, 6-0. No. 4 Sun Devil seed Brad Williams lost to Aanes in his first round of play.

In the second draw, ASU's No. 5 Nick White was defeated in his third round by Vinson, 6-0, 6-4. Len Gyetko was also defeated by Vinson in his first round, 6-4, 6-1. Gyetko was defeated in the final match of the consolation round.

With the exception of a couple of short breakdowns by his players, Belken said he was proud of the tournament results.

"Of the schools here, we had the strongest program," he said. "We have to back that up by results."

Tolbert triumphs at Sunkist, nearly breaks American record

By MATTHEW KASTER
State Press

Last Friday night, ASU hurdler Lynda Tolbert served notice to the track and field community that she's ready to take it all.

Tolbert won the womens 50-meter hurdles at the Sunkist Indoor Invitational track meet in Los Angeles, Calif. Although it was only the first race of the season for Tolbert, her winning time was only five-hundredths of a second shy of the American record.

Tolbert posted the fourth-fastest time ever in that event, blowing through the finish line in 6.89 seconds.

The race was intended to showcase some of America's finest female hurdlers in a season opener. Tolbert was scheduled to race against two-time Olympic medalist Jackie Joyner-Kersey. American record holder Kim McKenzie was also included in the field. Both women withdrew from competition at the last minute.

The lack of any "big name" competition mattered little to Tolbert, who was very enthusiastic about her winning time.

"I'm really happy with it," Tolbert said. "It's only my first race of the season. Usually, the first meet of the season is just a test. It's really a good sign to run so well this early in the season."

Tolbert said she thinks that she can "definitely" run faster than her Friday time.

"I was really hoping for the American record," she said, "but it's good to know that I can work from there."

Tolbert's victory was also marred by a fall at the end of the race. After crossing the finish line, Tolbert was clotheslined by a rope that is used to slow the sprinters down. Attendants holding the rope somehow caught Tolbert across the neck with the rope, instead of the waist. The impact sent Tolbert flying backwards onto the ground.

"I tried to catch myself with my hand," Tolbert said, "but I think I hit everything. I landed on my back, and I also hit the back of my head. I'm still a little tight."

Head Coach Tom Jones also added that a rough flight back didn't help her injuries. Tolbert will visit a physical therapist this week to help work out any soreness left over from the fall.

Tolbert will rejoin the ASU team for their first meet of this season on Saturday. The Sun Devils will travel to NAU for a dual meet in the Skydome.

Devils, Austins calm the 'Canes

ASU Head Coach Bill Frieder notched his 200th career victory as the Austin brothers combined for 46 points to lead the Sun Devils to a 62-58 decision over the University of Miami (Fla.) Saturday.

Frieder becomes the 10th active Division I coach to win his 200th game before losing 100. ASU (9-7) snapped a three-game losing streak and won for the first time since Matt Anderson's Jan. 6 knee injury.

Isaac Austin scored 13 of his 19 points in the second half while Alex Austin poured in a game-high 27 of in front of 3,275 spectators at the Miami Arena.

Two Isaac Austin free throws made the lead 57-53 with 1:02, but Miami's Jake Morton nailed a 3-pointer with 42 seconds remaining.

After Mike Redhair's turnover, UM's Thomas Hocker missed a 3-point shot. Isaac Austin's following dunk gave the Sun Devils a 59-56 lead with 28 seconds. Wylie then misfired on a 3-point attempt. ASU converted three of four free throws in the final seconds to seal the victory.

Legends dust off gear for cause

By DAN ZEIGER
State Press

A lot of them aren't as quick as they used to be, and more than a few have developed receding hairlines in their time away from the NFL. But when they all came together in a flag football game for charity, no one seemed to mind.

Approximately 5,000 spectators filled Hoy Field Friday, along with a national television audience, for the first Diet Pepsi/Pro Football Legends Bowl, which benefits the Phoenix chapter of the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation.

Former Dallas Cowboy and Hall of Famer Roger Staubach displayed some of the talents that made him the NFL's all-time leading passer. He guided the NFC Legends to a 19-6 victory over the AFC Legends at Phoenix College.

Staubach threw for three scores on Friday as the NFC Legends took control of the game in the second quarter and never looked back.

Trailing 6-0, the NFC put together an 80-yard drive that was capped by a 3-yard scoring toss from Staubach to Charlie Young, the former Los Angeles Ram star. The march was aided by back-to-back AFC penalties, amounting to 49 yards.

On a third-down play from the NFC 15, former Denver Bronco Steve Foley was called for pass interference on Drew Pearson, Staubach's teammate in Dallas, which brought the ball upfield 28 yards. On the next play, Ben Davidson, formerly of the Oakland Raiders, was flagged for holding, moving the ball to the AFC 36.

Staubach hit Young with a touchdown pass five plays later. Former Washington Redskin Pro Bowler Diron Talbert converted the extra point and the NFC Legends led 7-6 at halftime.

On its first possession of the second half, the NFC marched 80 yards for its second touchdown, a 12-yard pass from Staubach to Chuck Foreman, who played with the Minnesota Vikings. The drive was highlighted by two passes to Young totaling 51 yards. The missed extra point left the score at 13-6.

The NFC concluded the scoring before the third quarter ended. Cliff Harris, a former All-Pro with Dallas, intercepted a pass from former Raider star Jim Plunkett and returned it to the AFC 47. Five plays later, Staubach connected with Talbert on a 4-yard scoring play. The NFC was again unable to cash in on the extra point.

Unable to generate any offense in the second half, the AFC Legends could not get back into the game. Former Miami Dolphin Jim Kiick, who caught a four-yard touchdown pass from Plunkett in the second quarter, gave the AFC its only points.

The AFC Legends came up losers, but in the final analysis, the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation was the real winner.

"I love doing things like this for charity," Kiick said. "It's fun to meet all the ball players you haven't seen in a long time and playing against them now that they've slowed down too."

The Pro Football Legends Bowl featured 34 of the games all-time greats who, along with Head Coaches Tom Landry (NFC) and Hank Stram (AFC), have been involved in a combined 79 Super Bowls.

"It was a good show and a great turnout for the benefit," Green Bay Packer Hall of Famer Jim Taylor said. "All the boys that came out here played hard, and it turned out I was on the winning team."

to-back singles. After a run-scoring sacrifice fly, Douma left the game.

"I felt pretty good about my game today," Douma said. "My main goal (Sunday) was to go out there and throw strikes and work ahead of the batters."

Douma's no-hit bid through six innings and sophomore Sean Rees no-hit bid through eight innings on Saturday give Brock a very promising sign about ASU's pitching.

"That's kind of what we hoped for from these two guys," Brock said. "In intrasquad games and in the fall, everything both of them had done indicated that they can go out and do what they've done. We're very, very pleased."

Brock said that this game was both good and bad for his young ball club.

"It is kind of painful going through, but in the long run (it is good)," Brock said. "We had a chance to see Tattersson in a game-on-the-line type situation, and that was certainly a plus."

GCU is also a young team, starting two freshman, but despite the loss, Head Coach Gil Stafford said he was pleased with the effort.

He said: "It was a good game for us. It's tough anytime you run kids out there and you expect them to hit good pitching and they've only seen live pitching a couple of times."

"We won't play anybody any better all year long."
