Panel's probe of April brawl inconclusive

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

An independent ASU investigative panel, hampered by delays and lack of testimony, could not determine if ASU police officers acted properly when they arrested two black students during a racial brawl last spring, according to a report released Monday.

The report is the final product of a five-month probe by the panel, which was established as part of the University's 13-point plan to combat racism. But one of the originators of the plan said the panel failed to do the job it was appointed to do.

"I think the question still lingers as to whether the officers acted properly," said Vernard Bonner, president of Students Against Racism at ASU. "Basically they dittoed the information we had in the 13-point plan."

Bonner was referring to the panel's list of recommendations in the report, which was forwarded to ASU President Lattie Coor.

Gerald Richard, a legal adviser to the Phoenix Police Department and the panel's chairman, defended the report, saying that "it wasn't trying to take the 13-point plan and vary it."

Richard said it was impossible to reach a conclusion on the police actions because James Liddell, one of the two black students involved in the April 15 fight on Alpha Drive, would not appear before the panel. In addition, the two ASU police officers in question, Cpl. James Klosterman and Officer Terry Lewis, followed the advice of their attorneys not to testify until a Justice Department probe was concluded.

The federal investigation was recently closed with officials declining to seek criminal charges against the officers.

No one yet named to fill regent spots

By NICOLE CARROLL

The terms of two members of the Arizona Board of Regents officially expired on Jan. 15, and replacements are not expected to be announced for two to three weeks, said Vada Manager, the governor's press secretary.

But names of potential regent appointees are already being discussed.

The Arizona Daily Star recently reported a list of eight men who are considered to be regent hopefuls. Manager said he could not confirm the names, but said they are "fairly accurate."

Regents Donald Shropshire, president of the Tucson Medical Center, and A.J. "Jack" Pfister, general manager of Salt River Project, will continue to serve their terms until two new regents are appointed by Gov. Rose Mofford and confirmed by the Senate.

The Star reported that the front-runners in the search are Tucson attorney Art Chapa and Phoenix businessman Eddie Basha.

Chapa's education administration experience was gained as a member of the state Board of Directors of Community Colleges. Basha has served two four-year terms on the State Board of Education.

Regent President Edith Auslander said she has not been told of any favored candidates for the seats. She said that currently, the board members represent different parts of the state, but that it is not required.

ASU won't defend chapel cross

Campus groups to face ACLU in Danforth suit

By NICOLE CARROLL
State Press

The University administration will not defend the cross atop Danforth Chapel in a lawsuit demanding its removal, ASU's General Counsel Bruce Meyerson said.

Instead it will leave the matter to two Christian groups who support the symbol's existence.

Meyerson said the University is stepping out of the controversy surrounding the cross because it is not central to the University's educational mission.

The Arizona Civil Liberties Union filed a lawsuit in October 1989 against the Arizona Board of Regents and former Interim President Richard Peck demanding the removal of the Danforth Chapel cross. The ACLU contends the cross is maintained by University funds and violates the constitutional provision calling for a separation of church and state.

ASU Christian organizations Campus Aglow and the Christian Law Student's Association will face the ACLU alone in Maricopa County Superior Court on Feb. 9.

Douglas Drury, a Phoenix attorney who is representing the Christian groups, said Meyerson's exit from the matter is good news for the defense.

"The ACLU is trying to say the state has endorsed religion," Drury said. "But the state is saying 'this isn't important to me.'"

Drury said the new situation will strengthen his main argument.

"I don't think it's a huge point, but it's evidence the state

Regents to discuss additional fee hikes

The resources committee of the Arizona Board of Regents will meet at 1 p.m. Thursday in the MU Arizona Room to discuss possible resident and non-resident tuition hikes.

This will be the only public hearing on the proposed fee increases before the regents vote on the matter at their Feb. 16 board meeting.

The meeting was originally scheduled to take place in the MU Alumni Lounge, which only holds 100 people. The Arizona Room will hold several times as many spectators.

After protests from Associated Students of ASU officials, the meeting place was changed to the larger facility.

Ann Bergin, assistant to University President Lattie Coor, said the emeriti professors luncheon was moved to another location to satisfy the space needs of the tuition hearings.

"We made every effort to make sure everyone could attend," Bergin said.

Report

The University inquiry was also delayed by the resignation of a panel member due to a conflict of interest.

Instead of ruling on the officers' actions, the panel's report lists five recommendations for the University. But four of the recommendations are already part of the anti-racism plan. They include:

- Continuing the Action Now program, which was formed prior to the plan to increase minority recruitment and retention at ASU.
- Establishing a police disciplinary review board. Steps to form a board have already been taken, but it is not known when it will be in place.
- Hiring and staffing in the police department. The anti-racism plan seeks to have women and minorities serve on employee search committees, and the panel recommendations add that the department should pursue qualified minorities for any vacant management positions.
- Police officer training. The anti-racism plan calls for racial sensitivity training for officers. The panel's recommendations add that the department should review procedures dealing with the detention of suspects, training in report writing and participation in additional training opportunities.

The only new recommendation is that the University take a strong stand against alcohol abuse. Panel members believe alcohol played a role in the incident.

The anti-racism plan and panel were established in response to campus protests of the arrests of Liddell and Robert Rucker, who were handcuffed and taken into "protective custody" after they were attacked by white fraternity members who mistook them for a suspect in an earlier assault on a fraternity member.

Rucker and Liddell said officers bullied them, and accused ASU police of humiliating them because they were the only people arrested and were handcuffed in front of about 500 students, many of whom were yelling racial slurs. They were later released at police headquarters, where they had been handcuffed to chairs.

Attempts to reach Rucker and Liddell for comment on Monday were unsuccessful.

Meanwhile, ASU officials said they will work with the panel's recommendations.

"I have reviewed the report, and I appreciate the committee's effort to complete a thorough job in spite of difficult circumstances," Coor said in a prepared statement. "I deeply appreciate the committee's recommendations, and I will monitor our efforts to ensure that we carry them out."

"We are committed to racial and ethnic harmony on this campus, and we will do what is necessary to achieve that in all of our activities," Coor said.

ASU Police Chief Bill Bess said that despite the lack of a conclusion, he was pleased with the recommendations and will try to begin implementing them.

"Some people may still have questions," he said. "I prefer to move on."

isn't supporting religion," Drury said. "If that were true, they (the ASU administration) would be in court vigorously defending it."

ACLU attorney Ted Mote said he is still confident the cross will have to come down.

"I still think we have a strong case," Mote said.

Campus Aglow Co-Director Jaynee Teagarden said her group is confident in their case and will appeal the decision if the court rules in favor of the ACLU.

"We feel good about everything," Teagarden said.

Drury said he will not consider further legal action until the final judgement in the matter is handed down.

"Right now we're just planning on winning," Drury said.

Abortion activists mobilize in nation's state capitals

Demonstrators recognize Roe vs Wade anniversary

By The Associated Press

Demonstrators marched with renewed fervor at state capitals and cities around the nation Monday to commemorate the 17th anniversary of the Supreme Court's Roe vs. Wade ruling, which legalized abortion.

At least 9,000 people marched against abortion at the Georgia Capitol in Atlanta, while Washington's annual March for Life carried a similar message to the White House, the nation's Capitol and the U. S. Supreme Court.

"It may be a long fight," the Rev. Pat Robertson told demonstrators in Atlanta, "(but) we will come back this year, we will come back next year, we will come back the year after... until sooner or later we have victory."

Norma McCorvey, the woman who was the "Jane Roe" in Roe vs. Wade, was scheduled to appear at a rally on California's capitol steps in Sacramento.

The Roe vs. Wade anniversary has become an increasingly important day to those debating the future of abortion in the United States. This year's commemoration carried special weight because of last summer's Supreme Court ruling in Missouri's Webster case.

That ruling, which opened the door for states to impose some restrictions on abortion, was the biggest legal victory in decades for anti-abortion forces and led to speculation that the high court would overturn Roe vs. Wade.

It also pumped new life into organizations on both sides of the abortion debate, and led to a flurry of legislative proposals to both restrict and guarantee access to abortions.

Those bills helped give added significance to this year's demonstrations. Tens of thousands of people marched at rallies around the nation on Sunday.

The Webster case also provided a backdrop for one of the stranger incidents in the abortion observances. On Sunday night, police in San Francisco cited Ms. McCorvey, on whose behalf the original Roe vs. Wade case was filed, for illegally posting stickers bearing the name "Roe" on city street signs. The signs were on Webster Street.

In another unusual twist, about a dozen pro-choice demonstrators wrapped 200 feet of purple ribbon around the Louisiana statehouse in Baton Rouge on Monday to draw attention to their new Coalition for Reproductive Freedom. The ribbon, they said, symbolized the purple sashes worn by suffragettes who marched for women's rights earlier in the century.

In Trenton, N.J., about 150 protesters marched in front of the New Jersey statehouse in support of anti-abortion bills, including one that would require minors seeking abortions to notify their parents.

The demonstrators included a group of schoolgirls from Incarnation School in nearby Ewing, N.J., one of whom carried a sign that read: "Real Women Don't Kill Babies."

"All of our parents gave us a chance, so why don't we give them a chance," said another student, eighth-grader Theresa Thoma.

A parental notification bill is also pending in Nebraska, where the Legislature chose Monday's anniversary to begin its debate on the issue.

Bush assures marchers of anti-abortion stance

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush assured anti-abortion marchers Monday of his "deep conviction" against the Supreme Court ruling 17 years ago today that legalized abortion and his steadfast opposition to abortion on demand.

Bush, speaking by telephone to marchers gathered outside the White House before their annual march past the Capitol and the Supreme Court, said the anti-abortion movement reminds Americans "of the self-evident moral superiority of adoption over abortion."

Bush also addressed the March for Life last year on his third day as president, continuing the tradition of his predecessor, Ronald Reagan.

Even as he spoke, pro-choice forces led by the Planned Parenthood Federation were urging Americans to call the White House switchboard to register their support for legal abortions.

Bush, in remarks that lasted just 90 seconds, said, "Before you begin the march, I want to take a minute to share my deep personal concern about abortion on demand, which I oppose."

"For 17 years the March for Life has served as a poignant reminder to all Americans that human life in all its forms must be respected. And I think all of you know my deep conviction on Roe vs. Wade," he added.

The protest movement "also reminds Americans, especially young Americans, of the self-evident moral superiority of adoption over abortion. We should all be grateful to the families that adopt babies, giving them care and love and a chance for a wonderful life," said Bush, two of whose 12 grandchildren are adopted.

After hearing Bush and a handful of congressmen and other speakers, the crowd, estimated by U.S. Park Police at 35,000, marched up Pennsylvania Avenue to the U.S. Capitol and the Supreme Court.

Leaders of the National Right to Life Committee praised the president and said they had no differences with Republican National Chairman Lee Atwater's statements that the party can support candidates on both sides of the abortion debate.

"We don't believe he's signaled any change in the Republican Party's position," said David O'Steen, executive director of the anti-abortion group. "Of course the Republican Party contains and is big enough to contain people with both points of view, as is the Democratic Party."

Earlier, backers of legal abortion raised the specter of Romania's former communist repression in warning against

Azerbaijan vows to secede from USSR

MOSCOW (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of wailing, black-clad Azerbaijanis marched through Baku on Monday to mourn people killed when Soviet troops put down a nationalist revolt, and the republic's legislature threatened secession if Moscow did not pull out its soldiers.

In another move in defiance of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, local legislators declared Moscow's state of emergency void, and militants vowed to keep up crippling strikes until troops leave.

Also Monday, Communist leaders from Soviet Armenia and Azerbaijan took a tentative step toward ending 10 days of ethnic warfare, agreeing to withdraw armed groups from areas along their border, Tass said. But activists in Armenia and Azerbaijan said they were skeptical the truce would be kept.

The official Soviet news agency reported 12 more people were killed in ethnic clashes Monday on the border of the two republics, raising the toll since Jan. 13 to 167. Soviet officials said 83 of those were from the Soviet assault on the Azerbaijani capital on Saturday or skirmishes the previous day.

Women weep for the dead at a funeral service in Baku's Kirov Park Monday, for the victims of the past week's ethnic violence.

More than 500 have been wounded in the conflicts.

An emergency overnight session of the Azerbaijani Supreme Soviet legislature demanded the full withdrawal of Soviet troops from the republic, with the exception of border districts with Armenia, said Baku lawyer Viliyad Mamedov, who attended the 11½-hour overnight session.

Lawmakers also demanded the lifting of the curfew and state of emergency in Baku and other areas of Azerbaijan, which Moscow imposed without the approval of Azerbaijani authorities, Mamedov said in a telephone interview.

If those demands are not met, Mamedov said, the legislature will consider voting to secede from the Soviet Union.

At Monday's mass rally in Baku, demonstrators carried posters reading, "Gorbachev is the butcher of the Azerbaijani people," and "Azerbaijanis will not succumb to tanks," said Shain Gajiyev, a Baku journalist.

Witnesses said throngs of mourners numbering as many as 2 million bore coffins of Azerbaijanis killed in the weekend assault down the narrow streets and major thoroughfares to Lenin Square, now renamed Freedom Square in honor of the Azerbaijani nationalist cause.

The mourners, wearing black and carrying black-bordered portraits of some of the victims, then buried the victims at Kirov Park, overlooking the Caspian Sea.

"All the people of Azerbaijan and Baku are in tears and mourning," official Baku Radio said in a broadcast monitored by the BBC in London.

Soviet troops and police did not interfere in the funeral, said Leila Yunusov, a spokeswoman for the Social Democratic Group, an informal Azerbaijani political organization.

Foreign reporters were barred from the region, so it was difficult to determine the exact death toll or reconcile conflicting information.

Military officials said no one had been killed in Baku for the last two days, and residents said the Soviet troops seemed to have the city under control. No armed clashes with troops had been reported Monday, Gajiyev said, although there were still reports of scattered gunfire.

Deliberations begin in computer 'worm' case

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Jurors began deliberations Monday on whether Robert T. Morris innocently unleashed a "worm" that struck thousands of computers or whether he plotted and executed an assault on an important national computer network.

Morris may not have intended his "worm" program to paralyze a nationwide computer network in 1988, but it was no accident that the worm attacked the network, a prosecutor said earlier Monday.

"The worm didn't break in by accident or mistake. Robert Morris intended for the worm to break in," U. S. Justice Department trial lawyer Mark Rasch said in closing statements in Morris' federal computer tampering trial.

Defense attorney Thomas Guidoboni reiterated his argument that the suspended Cornell University graduate student made a programming error that caused the worm to go berserk and cripple the Internet system on Nov. 2, 1988.

"It's not the side effects, it's not the mistakes, but what he actually intended to do," said Guidoboni.

If convicted, Morris faces up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Morris, 25, of Arnold, Md., is the first person brought to trial under a section of the 1986 Computer Fraud and Abuse Act that makes it a felony to break into a federal computer network and prevent authorized use of the system.

The worm he designed immobilized an estimated 6,000 computers linked to Internet, including ones at NASA, military facilities and major universities.

Prosecutor Ellen Meltzer reminded the jury in her summation that testimony showed Morris deliberately stole computer passwords from hundreds of people so the worm could break into as many computers as possible.

She added that Morris took deliberate and conscious steps to make the rogue program difficult to detect and eradicate. He unleashed the worm from the computer system at Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge, Mass., and made it look like it was sent by the University of California at Berkeley so authorship of the program could not be traced to him at Cornell.

Tuition Hike

Facing the human aspect

When the Arizona Board of Regents meets Thursday for public hearings on a proposed tuition increase, it will decide more than how much students will pay to attend ASU next year.

The board will also decide the fate of many out-of-state students, who could face a tuition hike of as much as $1,720.

Non-resident students, in the past, have not only been drawn to ASU by the prospect of 335-plus days of sunshine, but also by the promise of sound academic programs at comparatively low tuition rates. Students who attend ASU now no doubt expect their tuition to rise somewhat from year to year, but they also expect some consistency in that increase.

But now the regents are entertaining plans that would accelerate non-resident tuition by alarming percentages.

The proposed increase poses little problem for prospective out-of-state students, who may decide to forego what ASU has to offer in order to gain a less expensive education elsewhere. That's fine — that's their decision.

But what about the students who are already in the system, midway through their academic careers? What alternative can the board offer them?

One option would be to instigate a grandfather clause that would ensure a lower tuition increase for non-residents currently attending ASU. But this option has already been all but shot down by officials as an "administrative complication."

The favorite alternative is a "financial aid pool" for non-residents who need help while they finish their degrees. Even if the creation of such a fund were not itself replete with "administrative complications," this proposal fails to take into consideration the student who might not qualify for aid but who still cannot swallow a $1,720 tuition hike.

Some regents feel that if students choose not to pay the increase in tuition or are unable to do so, then they can leave. But that is an expensive proposition in itself.

Let's consider the cost of moving. Any move, no matter what the distance, is an expensive endeavor. The cost of renting a U-Haul trailer to move a one bedroom apartment 2,700 miles is over $1,500. Then there are numerous deposits upon arrival — phone, security, utilities, first and last months' rent — that could easily total $2,000. Is this truly an option for a non-resident student who couldn't afford a $1,700 tuition increase?

And let's not forget the cost to a student's education. Transferring coursework from college to college inevitably results in some loss of credit, to say nothing of time, tagging an extra semester or two onto his expected date of graduation.

Even the option of attending classes part time as an unclassified student — which would allow a non-resident to obtain residency — is threatened. An out-of-state student attending ASU part-time this semester can take up to six hours for $77 per credit hour. If the board adopts its new policy on part-time fees, however, that same student may be forced to pay as much as $286 per credit hour next semester.

Clearly, the tuition-increase proposal as it currently stands represents a no-win situation for many out-of-state students.

If the board wishes to pursue a policy that requires out-of-state students to pay most or all of the costs of their education, that is fine. Perhaps, it could be argued, a state university exists primarily for state residents — who pay taxes here — and non-Arizonans should go to their own state-subsidized school or pay through the nose for the privilege of attending ASU.

It could even be argued that out-of-staters should pay more than the cost of their education in order to help subsidize the rest of us, who are also supporting the institution through tax revenue.

But to raise tuition by almost $2,000 — in one devastating blow — is monumentally unfair to the students already here, working on their educations with a good-faith understanding that they will be allowed to complete it.

The board is restricting out-of-state students from pursuing their degrees by raising fees to such an astronomical level. A $1,720 increase is a substantially large sum of money — money that could go toward about four months rent and food.

Money that is tight enough already for plenty of students with the current cost of tuition.

If the regents do want such a tuition hike, they must create a comprehensive — and workable — plan to protect the out-of-state students who have already committed themselves to ASU. And if the board doesn't want to do that, then it must rethink its tuition proposal.

It's time to factor the human aspect into the tuition-setting process.

That's the bottom line.

Tuition: Dollars not scholars

Lynn Vavreck
Asst. Opinion
Editor

We are paying more and getting less. At least less of what we need.

Tuition increases over the past five years have made it difficult for students to meet the costs of education at ASU. We've been paying so much more in tuition recently, but what have we been getting for our dollars?

Are there more sections of popular classes offered? Has class size decreased? And has the University stopped "sending" students to ASU West to complete graduation requirements yet?

Good questions with sad answers.

And here's another one. What exactly is our tuition money going toward?

A breakdown of the local operating budget from the University Budget Office reveals that the largest portion of tuition dollars for programming goes to the MU, $763,600. The second largest allocation goes to Associated Students of ASU — $656,300. The Intercollegiate Athletic Board receives $549,800.

Several areas follow closely behind. These include the Lyric Opera Theater, a department of ASU's fine arts program; student activities and recreation, not including the Student Recreation Complex; ASU Public Events; and finally the Centennial Capital Campaign, a development project to solicit donations to ASU.

There are other major uses of our tuition dollars, not related to programming.

Approximately $11 million is used to service ASU's existing debt. Some $3 million is used for special ASU Plant funds, and about $650,000 is reserved for special financial aid packages.

So, if you thought your tuition dollars were going to buy a new professor or two, you were wrong. There is no allocation of tuition dollars for faculty salaries, for hiring extra instructors or anything that might remotely influence the quality of academic education at ASU.

It seems ironic that while students are demanding a higher quality of education from ASU, the University has chosen to raise tuition — which appears to have little to do with the quality of classroom education.

Education is a commodity. Students are consumers. ASU is in the business of selling education to its students. You would think that with the nation's second largest business faculty on hand, ASU would understand the dynamics of supply and demand. If students demand more English classes, the University should respond. It seems obvious there would be some effort to create a demand-driven model for undergraduate education.

Nothing could be further from the truth. Student demands seem to land on deafened ears. Since the University realizes it has a monopoly on education in this state, it seems to treat the supply and demand theory as taboo. After all, most students can't afford to go to school anywhere else, since ASU is in the lowest third of the cost bracket compared to universities throughout the nation.

So, what results is students who are upset about the cost of tuition, and upset with the quality of education. Moreover, the two are completely separate battles.

In essence, the University is telling students what they need, instead of listening to what students are asking for. ASU appropriates tuition dollars for things like the MU, ASASU, the athletic department, student recreation and other student services, then blames the Legislature for the poor quality of education, claiming it will not give the University the necessary dollars to meet the demands of students.

This is supply-side education, not demand-driven education. And while it is easy to blame the Legislature for the poor quality of education at ASU, it is also easy to understand their position.

For example, the Legislature awards new faculty positions to ASU on a yearly basis. Students complain about class size and closed classes, so the Legislature increases the faculty based on a 22-to-1 student ratio. Then, the legislators feel they have helped to appease student's concerns. But, the University turns around and hires research-oriented professors with that money. It hires professors who never see the likes of an undergraduate classroom.

The Legislature has no control over this process; it is just trying to do its job. And students end up losing.

Another fine example — the University Club, the faculty/staff dining hall. With projects like this out there, it isn't hard to imagine why the Legislature is reluctant to spend more on education. Would you give more money to your best friend if he were starving, knowing that he spent the last $50 you gave him on bubble gum? I rest my case. The Legislature is not going to give ASU more money to improve the quality of education if ASU continually spends that money on research faculty and fine eating establishments.

The Legislature is really not to blame for the shortage of everything at ASU that students need. It is administrative choice that is to blame. Giving students what they want from the University sounds like a simple and efficient way to run this business of education. If students are willing to accept fewer services and less programming in exchange for a higher quality of education, then the University should consider it.

But not here. Not at ASU, where the focus has been on research, on programming to help students feel integrated and safe, supported and coddled, and on expansion.

Undergraduates make up the majority of this campus. We are paying more and getting less, from the Board of Regents, the University Administration and from our tuition dollars.

We are dissatisfied consumers of education, and for most of us, there is nowhere left to go.

US should force Israel to behave responsibly

Joseph Sobran
Universal Press Syndicate

WASHINGTON — With the waning of the Cold War, our alliance with Israel is more problematic than ever, but then, it never really was a genuine alliance.

An ally is not necessarily a friend. He is someone with whom you share an enemy. During World War II, we formed an alliance with the Soviet Union when Germany was our common enemy. But Franklin Roosevelt made the mistake of confusing an ally, who had his own dark and devious motives, with a friend who could be trusted. So he trusted Stalin to hold elections in Poland.

With Israel, we have done things backward. First we paid $43 billion a year for an ally. Then we got the enemies. Our links to Israel have actually created new hostilities against us in the Arab world.

During the Cold War, this was a splendid arrangement from the Soviet point of view. Though Arab culture is deeply antagonistic to communism, Arab states and insurrection movements formed their own alliances with the Soviets. In a perverse way, the Soviets and the Israelis had a common interest of their own in pitting the United States against the entire Arab world.

'In a perverse way, the Soviets and the Israelis had a common interest of their own in pitting the United States against the entire Arab world.'

As the Soviets got the Arabs and we got Israel, we were assured that Israel was a "strategic asset." I wonder what strategist thought this was a profitable trade-off.

The implications are loaded with ironies. We may soon have friendlier relations with the countries of the Warsaw Pact than with the Arab world. The Zionist dream was of a country where Jews could be autonomous and independent, but Israel depends heavily on U.S. aid for its sustenance (and we feel the weight of that dependence).

Far from being the safe haven its founders envisioned, Israel is the one place in the world where a Jew lives in fear of violent death (not counting Brooklyn). And far from being the country Jews flock to, Israel is now reduced to seeking an arrangement that will force Soviet Jews who want to emigrate to go to Israel rather than their country of preference, the United States. Only by such means can the Jewish state replenish its dwindling Jewish population.

Since the Pollard spy case broke in 1985, few American politicians are shameless enough to call Israel a "reliable ally." But the dramatic exposure of that operation — repudiated at first as a "rogue" operation by the Israeli government — didn't lead to any diminution of American aid. It didn't even lead to a full congressional inquiry into the extent of Israeli espionage in this country.

So we find ourselves subsidizing the Israeli crackdown on the Palestinian uprising, during the first year of which, according to Prof. Charles Black of the Yale Law School, rock-throwing Palestinian kids died at six times the annual per capita death rate of American soldiers in Vietnam. There are other casualties. Plastic bullets cost a little girl her eye and inflicted brain damage on an 8-month-old baby. In the name of state security, a 94-year-old Arab woman was deported to Jordan and was not even allowed to take her possessions.

All this is hardly in our national interest. It isn't even in Israel's interest, except in terms of brutal calculation. The Israeli army is suffering a high suicide rate among young soldiers distressed by what they are required to do to civilians.

No, Israel is not our ally. But at a deeper level, it is our friend. No matter what its government does, its people are closer to Americans than those of almost any non-Western country. You can't follow Israeli affairs without being struck by both the frequent duplicity of its government and the courage and humor of its people.

But even a friend or relative sometimes has to be told that his quarrels are not yours. You may take in a needy uncle, only to have him continually fighting with neighbors (and always blaming them for the trouble). At that point you have to say, "Uncle Jack, we love you, but we have to get along with the neighbors. If we're going to support you, you're going to have to show us a little consideration, too." In the post-Cold War era, we should say something like that to Israel.

California betting on alternative fuels to clean air

Cody Shearer
North American Syndicate

LOS ANGELES — Here in Southern California, automobiles mean everything. When General Motors purchased the last commuter rail routes in the '40s and abandoned them, the dominion of the car was ensured. And with the arrival of television advertising, locals have been cruising happily along in their unconscious fantasies, marveling at the combination of raw animal and refined metal that purrs beneath their car's hood.

Visitors to this megalopolis can't understand why locals are so obsessed with automobiles. But, they are, in large part, because they spend so much time in their objects of desire. It is not uncommon here for citizens to travel up to 100 miles a day in their vehicles, which explains why a car phone is essential, as well as first-rate stereo systems and foreign language tapes.

Every time I return to my birthplace, the traffic seems to have gotten worse. Fly over Los Angeles on a clear day and one can see the congestion. At almost any time of the day or night, most of the region's 12 million residents seem to be edging slowly along the freeways and spewing forth a visible fume that on all but windy days makes your eyes hurt.

The celebrated freeway system, that was supposed to liberate everyone and usher in a new mobility, is so jammed that locals have abandoned it for surface streets. But nowadays, even these routes are clogged to such a degree that commuting to work must begin as early as 5 a.m. Local radio and television stations no longer offer traffic reports during rush hour, they're provided on an hourly basis, around the clock.

Despite all the agony of automobile congestion, no one here seems ready to abandon their cars in favor of public transportation, which says much about the statements everyone makes when it comes to symbolism and style. And yet last year, the reality of the environment finally forced public officials to pass long-term laws that could drastically alter lifestyles in lotus land.

If the California Air Resources Board has its way, 120 separate air pollution controls will be enacted between now and 2007. By the end of 1998, 40 percent of all cars and trucks, 70 percent of all commercial freight and all buses are supposed to run on cleaner burning fuels, such as methanol. The plan will mean the construction of new housing closer to job centers and more ride-sharing. The plan also envisions the development of new technologies, such as efficient electric motors by 2017, including the widespread use of computers at home so workers will no longer have to commute to the office.

No one can say whether this plan will work but the quality of air here has reached the point where everyone needs to be in on the act. During 1989, ground-level ozone exceeded federal health standards 157 days of the year, compared to the abysmal record of 178 days in 1988. What's unmistakable is the days of gasoline powered transportation are numbered.

Most encouraging is the extent to which this state's Energy Commission is fostering alternative fuel programs. It will spend $100 million this year to subsidize the cost of 50 methanol buses and 5,000 methanol cars, as well as encourage fuel distributors to stock methanol. Presently, methanol cannot be used in existing auto engines without significant modifications.

Nevertheless, state officials like Charles Imbrecht, chairman of the California Energy Commission, believes alternative fuels is one answer to the air pollution crisis. "We have no alternative because without alternative fuels there simply is no chance of meeting federal air-quality standards in our major non-attainment areas in the state," Imbrecht said in an interview with Environment Week last month.

Imbrecht believes promoting alternative fuels like methanol may not be the perfect solution but no reformulated gasoline is any better. He contends that auto and oil industry concerns about methanol costs are misplaced.

The opposition to methanol isn't a shock to Imbrecht. He says it comes from "the East Coast petroleum industry." But, of course, automakers aren't wild about methanol either without assurances of a guaranteed market.

California, in Imbrecht's opinion, is committed to moving ahead with its own alternative programs. No doubt the federal government could be helpful if it aided industry in changing over to those kinds of fuel. In the short term however, the rest of the world will be watching California's progress on the alternative fuels front, given the state's habit of setting trends.

Will California's alternative fuels plan make a difference? Californians like to think so because they are so optimistic about themselves. In spite of the putrid air, locals still share a sense of limitless possibility. No problem is so great that it cannot be solved, no opportunity so distant that it cannot be grasped. At least that is the official line, even among those without cars who hold to the same undimmed hope for prosperity. It seems to be the American way.

Proposed ROTC ban sent to Faculty Senate committee

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

The Faculty Senate decided Monday to send a proposal asking for the elimination of campus ROTC by 1991 to a committee for further clarification.

The motion, sponsored by education Professor Roger Axford, is going to the Curriculum Academic Program Committee, which reviews proposals from academic departments or colleges about programs or courses, said Faculty Senate President Harold White.

The committee will meet sometime in early February, said Geraldine Ellison, chairman of CAPC. She added that each side will be given an opportunity to present its case.

Axford said that by the time the Faculty Senate meets again on Feb. 19 "they will be convinced to remove the ROTC."

If the proposal is passed, the resolution will go to the President's office for a final decision.

Axford and a group of 11 professors and a dozen students are asking that the ROTC program be removed from campus because its "business is killing."

He said the University should spend the money given to ROTC on "better issues" such as child care and family studies.

A contractual agreement between ASU and ROTC states that the University must provide space for ROTC's programs.

But the contract, which was signed in May 1980 by then-ASU President John Schwada, also states that the agreement may be "terminated at the completion of any school year by either party by giving at least one year notice or sooner by mutual agreement."

Associated Students of ASU President Paul Larson said that the "future young men and women in charge of defense" should not be removed from campus.

"I think the question here is, is an uneducated military more or less dangerous than an educated military?" Larson said.

The military science department receives $34,533 from the University, and the department of aerospace studies, which includes Air Force ROTC, receives $30,665, according to the University Budget Office.

Professor narrowly escapes fire

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

An ASU professor was treated for smoke inhalation early Monday after he escaped a first-alarm fire that caused $65,000 in damages to his Tempe home, a fire official said.

Woodrow C. Monte, 46, an associate professor of family resources and human development, was treated and released from Tempe St. Luke's Hospital after the 3 a.m. blaze at 542 W. 16th St., said Tempe Fire Department spokesman Russ Wollam.

"He was barely able to escape," Wollam said, adding that the fire was caused by an unattended fire in a living room fireplace.

Investigators believe the blaze was started by an ember that popped out of the fireplace and ignited the carpet. There was a screen, but it is unknown if it was in front of the fireplace when the blaze started, Wollam said.

He said the fire spread through the living room and the kitchen and caused extensive damage to the attic and roof. There was heavy smoke damage throughout the house, he said.

Four engine trucks and two ladder companies had the blaze under control in about 20 minutes, Wollam said.

He said Monte was alone in the house sleeping when the fire began. He was awakened by the crashing sound of windows that exploded because of the fire's heat.

"There was a smoke detector but the battery had been removed at some point," Wollam said. "Had the smoke detector been operating, damage would have been less."

Wollam said that when Monte tried to open his bedroom door he was met with heat and smoke.

"He got down and crawled to the telephone and called 911 and was able to escape out the front door," Wollam said, adding that Monte crawled through the house to get out.

a rollback of abortion rights.

The head of the National Abortion Rights Action League told a gathering on Capitol Hill that legalizing abortions was one of the first steps Romania took after overthrowing its hated dictator last month.

"Romanians know firsthand what most Americans can only imagine — the deadly impact of government bans on abortion," said Kate Michelman, executive director of the abortion-rights lobbying group.

"It would be a travesty if the United States, the beacon of democracy in the world, applauded Romania's reforms while adopting repressive anti-choice laws here at home," she said.

Activists on both sides of the issue — sensing 1990 will be a pivotal year in the political debate on abortion — held competing events marking the anniversary of the high court decision that legalized abortions.

Abortion foes expected tens of thousands of marchers in Washington, and more at smaller events around the country.

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents on Monday:

•An ASU student suffered a cut above his left eye about 12:30 a.m. Sunday when he fell out of his vehicle in Lot 60 as he tried to get out of it. The student, who reportedly was intoxicated, was treated at Tempe St. Luke's Hospital.

•The Tempe Fire Department's hazardous materials unit shut down a small propane gas leak on the east side of Hayden Hall on Sunday. The leak came from a propane cylinder being used by a construction company that is re-tarring the roof on that building.

•An ASU student was arrested Sunday for possession of a fake New Jersey driver's license that was obtained by using a relative's birth certificate. The student was cited and released.

•An ASU student was arrested Sunday on a charge of possession of a stolen bicycle at the Cholla Apartment Complex. He was cited and released on his own recognizance.

•A vandal broke the windshield of a student's Volkswagen Rabbit which was parked on Adelphi Drive on Sunday. Damage is $150.

•An ASU student was arrested Sunday on a criminal damage charge after he allegedly broke another student's stereo at Palo Verde East residence hall. He was cited and released.

•An ASU student was arrested Sunday on charges of underage possession of alcohol and possession of false identification at Sahuaro Hall. She was cited and released.

Tempe police reported the following incidents on Monday:

•A 22-year-old Queen Creek man was arrested last Saturday on a threatening and intimidating charge after an investigation revealed that he mailed a letter containing a razor to a Tempe woman.

The suspect threatened to kill the woman in his letter, which instructed her to use the razor on herself. The letter also contained nude photographs.

The suspect and victim had attended high school with each other but were not close acquaintances.

•A Tempe man was arrested last Friday on felony drug charges after police served a search warrant at his home and seized several bags containing a substance believed to be methamphetamines, or speed. Officers also confiscated scales and other drug paraphernalia.

Charles K. Kupcik, 34, of the 1200 block of West 14th Street, was booked into Tempe City Jail on charges of possession of a dangerous drug for sale and possession of drug paraphernalia.

Officers obtained the search warrant after they established probable cause that Kupcik's wife had allegedly assisted in the falsification of paperwork to get a vehicle through the Arizona Motor Vehicle Division illegally.

•A Tempe man was arrested last Saturday on child molestation charges. Michael Corwin Carroll, 48, of the 1100 block of South Lebanon Lane, was booked into Tempe City Jail on the felony charges.

Two girls, ages 5 and 6, told police the incidents occurred at Carroll's residence, where they were being babysat by Carroll's wife.

•A vandal damaged a police car by throwing a large rock at its windshield while it was parked in the 1300 block of West Third Street. The damage occurred while an officer was taking a report about a loud party.

WESTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP) — A lonesome moose that wandered south into the Berkshires where there are no other moose has been smitten by a herd of dairy cows.

"He's there every day," said Frank Montague, who has been running Bridgmont Farm while his son is on vacation.

The moose has been hanging around the farm since Jan. 10, he said, and at one point even broke down a fence to get closer to the cows.

Ralph Taylor, a state wildlife official, said the moose should be out of rut by now, but perhaps is being kept sexually active by the proximity of heifers in heat.

"If they scare him away and keep him away from the cows for a couple of days it should be OK," Taylor said.

But Montague said that is easier said than done. "They said to make a racket, throw something at him, whatever," he said. "But there's not much you can really do."

Sun Devil senior swimmer Yan Cardineau comes up for air during ASU's 96-44 victory over UC-Irvine.

Men, women swimmers breeze past Irvine

By LARRY NEWELL
State Press

For the ASU mens and womens swimming teams, the spirited intrasquad rivalry between the Sun Devils was more intense than the competition posed by UC-Irvine.

ASU dominated from beginning to end, posting 96-44 and 102-38 in the mens and womens competitions, respectively.

"The UC-Irvine meet gave us the opportunity to rotate some of our swimmers in off events," mens Swimming Coach Ron Johnson said. "The competition, especially in the medley relay, is wide open, as none of our positions are locked in stone."

Sophomore Mark Arnold turned in first-place performances in both the 50- and 100-yard freestyle events, recording times of 21:25 and 46:56, respectively. In addition, Arnold swam a time of 21:24 in the last leg of the 200-yard medley relay.

"Mark had an outstanding day and stayed sharp all the way through," Johnson said.

Complementing Arnold's exceptional day, junior Geoff Brisbin and freshman Neil Lichter set personal (untapered) bests for the mid-season in the 100-yard freestyle (46.56) and 100-yard breaststroke (59.64), respectively.

The ASU womens squad proved to be even more overpowering than their male counterparts, finishing first in every event in which they fielded a swimmer.

"It came as no surprise to me that we swam as well as we did," ASU womens Swimming Coach Tim Hill said. "We expected to win and dominate in the way that we did."

Leading the potent Sun Devil attack was freshman Baukje Wiersma, who garnered top honors in the 1,000-yard freestyle (10:25.59) and the 400-yard individual medley exhibition (4:35.11).

"Baukje was definitely the outstanding performer of the meet," Hill said. "I feel that she is ready to make a big breakthrough."

Other top ASU finishers were sophomore Pam Duryea, who won the 200-yard breaststroke (2:11.37), freshman Tia Rains recorded winning times in the 100- (54:22) and 200-yard freestyle (1:56.40), and senior Bente Rist took top honors in the 50-yard freestyle (25.06) and 100-yard butterfly (59.20).

In the mens diving competition, sophomore Rick Sawtell won both the one- (290.93) and three-meter dives (264.60) for the Sun Devils. Junior Drew Johansen placed second in the one-meter dive, with freshman Bill Conti placing third for ASU. Conti also took second in the three-meter dive.

Sophomore Janae Lautenschlager duplicated Sawtell's feats by recording winning dives for the Sun Devils in the one- (291.00) and three-meter dives (292.65). The Anteaters' Holly Powell placed second in the two events, while freshman Dawn West placed third in both dives for ASU.

Women's tennis opens up with pair of sweeps

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

ASU Head Womens Tennis Coach Sheila McInerney knew her team's last two tennis matches were going to be a cakewalk.

But with tough Pac-10 competition right around the corner, McInerney also knew easy victories were essential to her team's experience.

"We realize that these teams are not as strong as we are," she said. "You show respect for a team by going out there and taking care of business."

"But these matches are for us to try to get better and I think we accomplished what we wanted to — we got the jitters out and we realize it is going to be much tougher from here on out."

The Sun Devils defeated New Mexico State, 9-0, last Friday and NAU, 6-0, on Monday, starting them off to a winning 2-0 record.

Two of the things the Sun Devils experimented with against the Aggies and Lumberjacks were serving and volleying. McInerney said her players practiced coming closer to the net, as well.

In Monday's match, NAU suffered from two injuries, and could only play four players in singles competition. ASU's Jennifer Rojohn, Karen Bergan, Luann Klimchock and Pam Cioffi each won singles matches.

In doubles competition, the dual teams of Kristi Jonkosky/ Jill Hamilton and Klimchock/Cioffi defeated the northern competition by scores of 6-1, 6-0 and 6-3, 6-2, respectively.

Hamilton said the mental and physical superiority of the Sun Devils is credited to Pac-10 play.

"Being in the Pac-10, we're used to very strong teams," she said. "These matches are like stepping stones for our goal — which is to finish in the top four (at Nationals)."

The pre-season eighth ranking of the Sun Devils by the ITCA is an ambiguous ranking, Jonkosky said. Judging from the team's last two victories, she said ASU may be among the top four.

"We have the potential to be much more than eighth," Jonkosky said. "We have the depth and we're all working hard — We feel good about how we're playing, but none of us has peaked yet."

Sun Devil gymnasts defeat Fullerton despite shuffled lineup

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

Going into last weekend's competition against Cal-State Fullerton, womens Head Gymnastics Coach John Spini was expecting only the worst.

With three of his starting all-around competitors injured, Spini was forced into working with a limited lineup. The three injured — Marika LeSieur, Michelle Colavin and Colette Anderson — could each compete in only one event.

Despite the absence of the regular starters, Spini said the rest of the team did a good job of picking up the pieces.

"I was not at all disappointed," he said. "The team on the floor gave 150 percent — we just had those injuries hanging over our heads."

The Sun Devils' lack of depth was displayed in the uneven bars. Only five women were left to compete, and all five scores counted.

After two misses early in the bars competition, Spini said the remaining Sun Devils were forced to "play it safe."

"The two misses put us 1½ points down and from there, the pressure was on," he said. "Suzy (Baldock) had to water down her routine because we needed a hit in the bars."

Although Baldock was forced to compete as gingerly as possible, she still scored a 9.4 on the bars and finished second overall in the all-around.

The beam and floor events were a major cause of ASU's defeat, Spini said. The Sun Devils suffered five falls between the two events.

The most positive aspect of the meet, Spini said, was the vault competition. ASU outscored the Titans with a 9.4 average. The vault was the only event in which Anderson competed because of a back spasm. She and ASU's Molly

Carpenter led the team with a 9.5 score in that event.

When Spini learned from trainers that Anderson would not be available for full competition, he called on team members who he said were not ready to compete.

To his surprise, Spini said, newcomers Jessica Tudos and Heather Carter both had solid competitions.

"I was pleased with the way Jessica performed," he said. "She did a good job in the vault and stayed on the beam."

"Heather could help us (later) this week and could be one of our top kids."

Spini said he hopes to have LeSieur and Anderson back in perfect health for this Friday's home meet against Ohio State. Colavin, who suffered a stress fracture in her foot, will take a couple of weeks to heal.

"(Those three) are a big help for us," Spini said. "They are worth at least a point and a half each."

ASU makes track back from penalty

By MATTHEW KASTER
State Press

Last year's NCAA probation could have ruined ASU's track and field program, but several key factors should help Head Coach Tom Jones in his efforts to rebuild the team in 1990.

Many key athletes were able to redshirt during last year's shortened season, and will return with full eligibility. Some Sun Devil track standouts also chose to compete through the NCAA sanctions, and should provide plenty of excitement this season while Jones concentrates on rebuilding the team.

Last year's track squad spent the entire season on NCAA probation. NCAA-imposed penalties limited ASU to only four home meets during the 1989 season and prohibited the Sun Devils from competing in either the Pac-10 or NCAA finals.

ASU was also prohibited from handing out any new scholarships during 1989. This year, the Sun Devils will begin fresh with a dual meet Jan. 27 at NAU's Skydome.

Jones is the first to admit that rebuilding the program will be difficult.

"There's no doubt, it's hurt us," Jones said. "The hardest part through all of this was the attrition we suffered. We lost several runners, especially on the mens team. They became discouraged by the sanctions, and either left the team or transferred. Luckily, several of our best athletes were still relatively young when the probation took effect."

Jones was able to redshirt most of these younger athletes during the 1989 season. The move to redshirt his key players helped ensure that none of them would lose any eligibility during the probation period.

As a result, the 1990 ASU track team will feature a handful of promising athletes, but may still lack the depth needed to be fully competitive in the Pac-10.

"It's definitely a rebuilding year," Jones said. "Our indoor season will focus mainly on developing the depth we need to be competitive. We have a few standouts, athletes with definite potential. But we don't have the personnel to be competitive across every event."

The few standouts that weathered the probation should help the Sun Devils grab the attention it desperately needs in its efforts to rebuild. Junior Lynda Tolbert should get plenty of attention in the 110-meter high hurdles.

Tolbert was the 1988 NCAA champion, as well as a semi-finalist in the '88 Olympic Trials. Last summer, Tolbert competed as an independent on the European Gran Prix circuit and finished her season ranked third in the world.

Tolbert will receive help from senior Toinette Holmes and sophomore Maicel Malone, two sprinters who have proven themselves with relay victories at the 1988 Pac-10 Championships. Both women will return this spring after redshirting the '89 season.

Junior Gea Johnson also redshirted during 1989 and will return after placing second during the 1989 TAC Championships in the heptathlon.

On the men's team, sophomore Shane Collins and junior Robert Rucker will also return after redshirting 1989. Rucker and Collins both decided to redshirt last year after appearing in the 1988 Pac-10s. At the '88 Pac-10 finals, Rucker placed fourth in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles while Collins placed second in the shot put.

Junior Todd Lewis also redshirted last year. He will return to lead the distance events and the steeplechase. Senior Ed Lovelace will also return for the 100-meter and 200-meter dash events.

ASU was not allowed to award any new track scholarships for the 1989 season, but will be able to recruit fully for next year.

No. 2 ranked Devils drive past Trojans

By KRIS TIMMONS
State Press

Freshman Brandie Burton and senior Amy Fruhwirth both finished four-over-par to tie for first place and lead ASU to victory in the Yamaha Holiday Golf Classic in Santee, Calif., Jan. 19.

The first round of play was rained out Thursday and the Sun Devils, who increased their national ranking to second, had a four-stroke advantage after the second round over host team USC.

ASU improved their lead to a 13-stroke margin over USC in the final round.

Burton, who was playing in her first tournament since undergoing arthroscopic knee surgery last November, won her fourth tournament in as many tries.

Burton said that her knee was a "little sore due to the cold weather" in California.

"It was a good win," she said, "because I didn't play well. I didn't hit the balls as well as I'd liked to have."

Fruhwirth birdied the last hole to tie Burton for the lead. She felt she played well and said the win helped her confidence.

Fruhwirth added that the course they played was similar to Karsten and that it required good placement of the ball.

Assistant Coach Michelle Estill said that the team played really well.

"They played solid under the conditions," she said. "It was rainy and cold."

Freshman Tricia Konz shot 17-over-par to place in 17th. Senior Missy Farr and sophomore Lynne Mikulas finished one and three strokes behind Konz, respectively.
