Danforth cross decision expected this week

By NICOLE CARROLL
State Press

A decision on the fate of the Danforth Chapel cross will be handed down this week, a Maricopa County Superior Court Judge said Friday, but groups on both sides of the issue claim the suit is far from over.

Mote

Arizona Civil Liberties Union Executive Director Louis Rhodes said his group would also file an appeal if the decision is not to remove the cross. But "If it (the cross) is going to come down, it's going to be in a while," said Dan Martin, a junior political science major and one of three students involved in a Christian organization's defense of the cross. "I don't think it can be decided in such a low court."

he said that after the presentations Friday, he is sure the ACLU will prevail.

"Much of the statements of (defense attorney Doug Drury) are simply not grounded in the reality of what's going on," Rhodes said. "I feel they did the best they could, but it's almost an impossible argument."

"The law is just so firmly on our side."

The ACLU filed a lawsuit against the Arizona Board of Regents and former Interim President Richard Peck last October, demanding the removal of the cross. The group claims the cross is a violation of the constitutionally mandated separation of church and state.

Campus Aglow, an ASU Christian organization, became an intervening defendant in December when the University withdrew from the matter. Campus Aglow distinguishes the Danforth cross as an accommodation of religion and claims it should be maintained.

Drury, a lawyer with the Phoenix law office of John A. Propstra, said he thinks the case could go either way.

"I think both sides made the points needed," Drury said. "I would like to think the judge would take this matter under advisement."

ACLU attorney Ted Mote said the 1971 Supreme Court decision in the case of Lemon vs. Kurtzman identified the criteria for determining whether a symbol violates the establishment clause of the U.S. constitution.

Mote said the Court must decide whether the symbol has a secular purpose, whether its primary effect is to advance or inhibit religion and whether the symbol creates an excessive government entanglement with religion.

He said any religious symbol on the Danforth Chapel would fail all of the tests.

"The removal of the cross would not be an

ASASU must fill 2 Senate spots for Arts college

By DAN NOWICKI
State Press

The College of Fine Arts' two vacant Senate seats will be filled by executive appointment due to a "very, very minimal" student response to Thursday's scheduled elections, Associated Students of ASU Executive Vice President Mike Pressendo said Friday.

Pressendo said he hopes to have the positions filled in time for Tuesday's General Session.

'I really don't know what else we can do.' . . . All the students we contacted knew that the elections were being held.'
— Mike Pressendo

He said the status of the Fine Arts College Council will remain in limbo indefinitely.

"I really don't know what else we can do," Pressendo said. "We did everything. We handed out flyers, we had front page coverage in the Press. All the students we contacted knew that the elections were being held."

Only one student attended the election. Another student who had expressed interest at Wednesday's informational meeting could not attend the election because of a bicycling accident.

Michelle Neilson, the ASASU College Council coordinator, also said, "The turnout wasn't as high as we expected."

She added, however, that the poor showing does not necessarily mean there is no interest in the positions.

"We had a lot of people come down to the office who are interested," Neilson said. "Right now, we're going to try to work it out another way."

Neilson said many students could not attend the election due to scheduling conflicts or other personal reasons.

The College of Fine Arts' College Council disbanded more than two years ago due to lack of interest. The college has been without Senatorial representation since Sen. Stacey Vogel resigned unexpectedly on Jan. 30.

Students urged to run in spring vote

By DAN NOWICKI
State Press

An informational meeting for students interested in running for office in the 1990 Associated Students of ASU elections will be held at 3 p.m. on Feb. 20 in BAC 116.

Four executive ASASU positions and two Senatorial seats from each college on campus will be filled.

Brian Boley, the ASASU election coordinator, said the candidate orientation meeting will be "pretty much informational."

Boley said he hopes the meeting will regenerate interest in ASASU and that many students will attend.

"In 1987, 39 students ran for positions," Boley said. "In 1988, 35 students ran, and last year only 24 students ran. The turnout has been slumping the last couple of years."

Boley also said that although there is no ceiling on campaign spending, students should not let financial limitations discourage them from running.

"It's been talked about that people think that they shouldn't run because of spending or because the current people at ASASU are going to run and are going to have the City council battles roach problem

Tempe officials plan to spend close to $60,000 to fight pests

By HOBART ROWLAND
State Press

Tempe city officials say they will be ready for this season's bout with sewer-dwelling cockroaches.

Ron Hughes, a buyer in the Tempe purchasing department, said the city is expected to spend close to $60,000 this year to rid the area one of nature's most indestructible pests.

The City Council approved the Public Works Department's decision to accept Phoenix-based In-cide Technologies' bid to supply the city with $32,000 worth of an EPA-approved, boron-based powder which will be sprayed by the department's Wastewater Division into manholes to battle roaches that breed in the sewer systems. Hughes said intensified spraying begins in early spring and continues through the summer months when the number of roaches increases dramatically.

"It won't kill them all," said Hughes. "But it will at least get rid of some of them."

Hughes said Tempe's expenses, which include paying a city worker to spray 15 tons of the poison into the city's 7,000 manholes, will be considerably lower than other Valley cities.

Mesa sewer officials recently began an in-house spraying program that they say will end up costing their city $80,000.

Hughes said that even Mesa's $80,000 yearly tab is a small expense for a problem that, if left unattended, could cost a city up to $3 million.

"What we're doing in Tempe is preventative maintenance," he said.

During the warm months, Wastewater Management Superintendent Denzil Jones said the city uses the insecticide powder when residents call complaining of an overabundance of roaches in their homes.

"Some days we'll get 50 calls a day," Jones said. "We just come by and shoot a little powder into the nearby sewer lines."

Tempe Public Works Director Jim Jones said that for all the city's efforts, cockroaches continue to thrive in the warm desert climate due to an almost superhuman immune system.

"You give them anything, and they seem to feed on it," he said.

'We can put men on the moon, but we can't kill roaches in our own back yards'

— Jim Jones

In a few years, Jones said, the insects may build up a tolerance to the city's insecticide and a new method will have to be used.

"We can put men on the moon, but we can't kill roaches in our own back yards," he said.

Terri Brixen, associate director of ASU Physical Plant, said the University has stepped up its spraying on campus in the last year.

"It (the roach problem) was really bad for a while," he said. "But, since we started using insecticide more often, things are getting better."

Brixen said that ASU hires a contractor to do the spraying, but he had no figures on how much ASU spends annually on the problem.

Nelson Mandela freed after 27 years in prison

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Nelson Mandela walked through a prison gate to freedom Sunday, setting off joyous celebrations and violent clashes as blacks nationwide welcomed their leader back from 27 years in jail.

Mandela

"Comrades and fellow South Africans, I greet you all in the name of peace, democracy and freedom for all," Mandela told tens of thousands of cheering supporters who thronged outside City Hall at twilight, many getting their first look at the African National Congress leader.

"I stand here before you not as a prophet, but as a humble servant of you the people."

In his suit and tie, Mandela looked much more a politician than a guerrilla leader. His elderly appearance probably shocked many South Africans, the majority of whom were born after Mandela was last seen publicly in 1964.

Mandela has clearly lost weight since the 1960s; both his face and his body are leaner than when he was a sturdily-built boxer decades ago. At 71, his face is creased with two thick lines that frame his strong, confident smile.

But he spoke in a strong voice as he emphatically reaffirmed his commitment to the ANC's guerrilla campaign and called for increased pressure to end white-minority domination — the same cause that resulted in a life sentence on charges of plotting against the government.

"Today, the majority of South Africans, black and white, recognize that apartheid has no future. It has to be ended by our decisive mass action," he said.

"We have waited too long for our freedom," he said in a rousing half-hour speech frequently interrupted by roars of "Viva!"

Violence broke out about the same time Mandela's motorcade arrived in Cape Town from Victor Verster prison. Police said a black looter was shot to death by officers, and first aid workers said more than 100 people were injured when riot police fired shotguns after groups of black youths smashed shop windows in the city center.

Some youths retaliated by hurling bottles at the officers. Hundreds of terrified people, who were waiting to hear Mandela, ran for cover as police fired blasts of shotgun pellets.

Clashes between police and celebrating blacks were reported in at least two other areas, including the tribal homeland of Ciskei, where hospital officials said police shot three people to death and wounded 20.

In Natal Province, where ANC supporters have been feuding with a more conservative black group, police said 12 blacks were killed in factional fighting Sunday. It was a harsh reminder of the bitter feuds involving black factions who disagree on the best way to fight for equality.

Elsewhere, hundreds of thousands of blacks danced and jogged through the streets of big cities and impoverished townships, rejoicing at Mandela's freedom.

"Very good news. Very good news," President Bush said after Mandela's release.

A thunderous cheer went up as the white-haired man, who was the world's most famous prisoner, walked hand-in-hand with his wife, Winnie, through the gate of Victor Verster prison in Paarl, 35 miles from Cape Town.

Under a brilliant blue sky, the Mandelas gave clenched-fist salutes to the hundreds of supporters who had waited for hours outside, many of them waving green, gold and black ANC flags and wearing T-shirts emblazoned with a youthful image of Mandela.

Mandela appeared solemn and dignified as he and Winnie walked to a white BMW sedan and climbed in. He broke into a broad smile as the car set off slowly in a police-escorted motorcade.

The decision to free Mandela, after a prolonged international campaign on his behalf, was announced Saturday by President F. W. de Klerk. Eight days earlier, de Klerk stunned the nation by lifting a 30-year ban on the ANC and announcing other reforms aimed at clearing the way for black-white negotiations.

Mandela in his speech called de Klerk "a man of integrity" who had gone further than any previous National Party leader in accommodating black political aspirations.

But he said further steps — including the lifting of the state of emergency and release of all political prisoners — must be

Tanker spill sends oil globules ashore

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Workers blotted up gooey blobs from along miles of beaches and boats skimmed oil offshore Friday as the slick from a punctured tanker drifted off the scenic coast.

The spill of up to 300,000 gallons of Alaskan crude oil from the tanker American Trader sent globules and a sheen ashore Thursday night at spots along several miles of beaches south of Los Angeles.

Newport Beach, five miles down the coast from Huntington, got a brown tide of quarter-size globs and that city declared a state of emergency.

The 811-foot tanker carried 21 million gallons when its single-wall hull was punctured, apparently by an anchor, as it approached an oil pipeline mooring about 1½ miles offshore Wednesday night.

Several hundred workers hired by the oil shipper and volunteers worked around the clock to soak up the goo at Newport. They had filled some 800 large trash bags with towels, sand and oil by Friday morning.

Newport Beach city officials were pleased by the effort, said City Fire Capt. Ray Pendleton. "The impact has been less than we thought," he said.

"Are we out of the woods? No, not yet," said Charles Webster, crisis manager for British Petroleum America Inc., which owns the oil and chartered the tanker. "But we're working to stay ahead of the curve."

Booms had been placed across the entrances to the Bolsa Chica Wetlands, the Santa Ana River and upper Newport Bay, and there were no reports of oil reaching those wildlife habitats.

Coast Guard Rear Adm. William Kime said the soiled shoreline measured 1½ miles at Huntington and three-quarters of a mile at Newport. The slick stretched 5 miles by 7 miles from Bolsa Chica State Beach to Newport Beach.

There was concern the slick might drift south to Laguna Beach, a scenic art colony fronted by rocky tide pools. Webster said a cleanup firm was on call there.

Cleanup costs were to be borne by the ship's owner, American Trading Transportation Co. Inc. of New York, Webster said.

No winner, no loser in Tyson-Douglas fight

TOKYO (AP) — Buster Douglas, a 29-year-old boxer from Columbus, Ohio, knocked out Mike Tyson on Sunday in a world championship heavyweight bout with no winner, no loser and a "long count" controversy.

What a fight! Hours after underdog Douglas' 10th-round knockout, the World Boxing Council and World Boxing Association suspended the result pending investigation of a "long count" protest by Tyson's promoter, Don King.

Tyson, knocked out for the first time in his pro career, said he's still the champion. "I knocked him out before he knocked me out," Tyson said.

Douglas said he's champ: "Just call it a victory for the small man."

Douglas' father, former middleweight world contender Bill "Dynamite" Douglas, said: "He pulled the greatest upset in history."

Because of an error by referee Octavio Meyran, Douglas was on the canvas for 12 seconds after Tyson knocked him down in the eighth round. Two rounds later, Douglas knocked out Tyson with a five-punch combination.

"There is no champion before Feb. 20," when the WBC meets in Mexico City to settle the controversy, said WBC President Jose Sulaiman of Mexico.

Sulaiman suggested what course the two governing bodies might take: "When there are problems, a rematch is absolutely mandatory," he said.

Only the International Boxing Federation, which sanctioned the bout as a championship match, said Douglas is the winner. The IBF, however, isn't recognized by the Japan Boxing Commission.

Douglas' disputed victory has created a wide-open heavyweight division that for three years had been the personal domain of Tyson, who was 37-0 with 33 knockouts.

Tyson was scheduled to defend the title against No. 1 contender Evander Holyfield on June 18 at Atlantic City, N.J., but Holyfield has no contractual obligation to fight Tyson if Tyson is not the heavyweight champion.

"There's nothing wrong with losing, I can handle a loss, but I want to lose fairly," Tyson said at the post-fight news conference, which Douglas did not attend.

Douglas was felled in the eighth round by a right uppercut to the jaw. "I wasn't really hurt," Douglas said. "When I looked up the count was at six. I got up between seven and eight. I clearly heard eight."

Douglas was upright at nine, but by then the timekeeper had tolled 10, although Meyran — who failed to pick up the timekeeper's count — didn't know that. He motioned for the two boxers to resume fighting, then the bell rang.

Soviets in space

MOSCOW (AP) — Two cosmonauts took President Mikhail Gorbachev's drive for economic efficiency to new heights Sunday, blasting off on the Soviet Union's first space mission designed to turn a multimillion-dollar profit.

Riding a Soyuz TM-9 capsule, flight Commander Anatoly Solovyov, 42, and engineer Alexander Balandin, 36, soared atop a column of orange-white flames into cloud-streaked skies over the Baikonur space complex in Soviet Kazakhstan at 9:16 a.m.

Their on-schedule launch was televised live, and for the first time, four active U.S. astronauts were invited to the formerly top-secret spaceport on the steppes of Central Asia to watch it. They were Dan Brandenstein, head of NASA's astronaut office and commander of the 11-day January mission of the space shuttle Columbia, and Paul Weitz, Ron Grabe and Jerry Ross.

NATO safe in Germany

WASHINGTON (AP) — NATO Secretary General Manfred Woerner emerged Sunday from talks with President Bush to suggest that a reunified Germany could be a part of the Western alliance without extending NATO's military reach over the territory that is now East Germany.

Woerner said a way can and will be found to keep a united Germany in NATO while recognizing "the legitimate security interests of the Soviet Union."

Drunk driving

Everyone responsible for ending needless deaths

Jade Danner
Columnist

My friend Gary graduated a year before me. He was a good-looking, popular guy. Gary played baseball and football and was intelligent. Gary was the kind of guy that every one liked.

Before the first day of my senior year in high school, Gary was dead. I didn't find out until school started again.

My friend Kelly told me that Gary was killed during the summer break. She said he'd been killed in a drunk-driving accident in July.

Later, I found out that Gary had been thrown from the back of a pick-up while his friend Billy was driving.

Gary had gone out with the boys to commemorate the old life of high school and to welcome the challenges of the life ahead.

It was about 2 a.m., and Gary and his friends were all drunk. Gary couldn't drive so he handed Billy the keys. They loaded up the truck and headed home.

I don't know why Gary sat in the back. All I know is that Billy was drunk, took a turn to fast, lost control, and the truck flipped. Now Gary is dead.

Gary will never see the future they toasted to that night. There are no more days of celebration for him. Gary's death affected the lives of his parents and of others who knew him.

I desperately tried to understand the "whys" of Gary's death. Each time I hear about someone who has died in a drunk-driving accident, I still search for comprehension.

Why did Billy drive that night? Why didn't someone stop him? Why weren't the cops there? How could this happen? There are laws that prohibit drunk driving. Why doesn't that stop the deaths? Why?

I think maybe today I understand. Morality, or doing the right thing, isn't as much a matter of making laws as it is a matter of social awareness.

Billy drove that night, and Gary allowed him to, because no one told him not to.

Laws, as an influencing factor in a human decision, are only effective when enforced. But how many people can the police reasonably be expected to catch?

If we can't rely on law enforcement to influence behavior, one question still remains. How do we make our streets safe again?

*'Why did Billy drive that night?
Why didn't someone stop him?
Why weren't the cops there?
How could this happen?'*

We've got to take some responsibility and make drunk driving socially unacceptable.

There is no greater influence on the actions of most people than the opinion of the surrounding society.

If drinking and driving becomes socially unacceptable, people will stop driving drunk to avoid disapproval from their peers.

Just about everyone needs to feel accepted. Social acceptance means doing the right thing in the eyes of society.

If I'm going to stay sober to drive, it shouldn't be because I'm afraid of getting a ticket or sent to jail, it should be because it is the right thing to do.

The problem with talking about "society" and "social acceptance" is that most people view these things as abstract, intangible enigmas that can't be changed.

In reality, you and I are part of society and can affect the things that are considered acceptable.

We need to believe that driving drunk is not OK. We need to believe this for ourselves and our friends.

We need to incorporate this philosophy into our own thoughts and actions. The "action" is the toughest part.

This past Saturday, I decided I would be the designated driver. At first it was hard to see everyone else drinking and having a good time as I sat with my Diet Pepsi in hand.

People asked why I wasn't drinking and understood that I was driving. I appreciated the fact that the host had Diet Pepsi available — although I was somewhat surprised.

Driving to the party, I thought I was going to be bored out of my mind. But I have to admit I had a great time.

Seeing drunken people through sober eyes was entertaining. Getting home safely in the car that I still have 20 payments on was probably the best part.

The fact that no one undermined my decision not to drink was an important factor in my success Saturday night.

I felt good about driving responsibly. I think my friends were proud of me, too. I know they are happy to be alive.

There is nothing wrong with drinking and having a good time. Heaven knows I'm the first to grab a beer on Friday night.

There is something wrong with getting in the driver's seat when you've had a few.

My friend Gary was the life of the party. He was young and bound to succeed.

He made one bad choice, and now he's dead. Will you make that choice, too?

Ritter comic 'demeaning'

Editor:

I am writing in response to the "Ivory Towers" cartoon of Friday, Feb. 9, in which Ritter creates for us a body-lice infected hairy-legged feminist. In Ritter's political cartoons, he has created a similar character, and now she appears in the daily comic strip he so skillfully turns out. I find Ritter's portrayal of women to be demeaning, whether it is his air-headed sorority type or the braless, tattooed Ms. La Femme.

While the State Press is free to print whatever it chooses and to hire whomever it chooses, I feel it has a responsibility to the campus community for the content of the paper. The paper, which is funded by advertising funds and from those funds pays Ritter for his "originality and enlightenment," should be more sensitive to its readers, which include sorority women and also feminists (which are not mutually exclusive groups).

It seems to me that Ritter is trying to do one of three things with his "Ivory Towers" cartoon regarding women:

1. Satirize a perceived apolitical and apathetic campus into becoming united over a "cause,"
2. Allow his real perception of male superiority to seep out, or,
3. Create attention to himself and his ego.

Mayor?

Jesse Jackson will not seek unspeakable job

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

If I were a bookie, I'd offer odds of at least 5-to-1 that Jesse Jackson won't run for mayor of Washington, D. C.

I haven't talked to him about his plans, nor do I have any inside information. But there is one thing I know about Jackson.

He's smart.

Let me correct that. There's one other thing I know about Jackson. He lives to talk. He looks at a defenseless ear the way William Perry eyes a roast chicken.

And there is not a subject that Jackson cannot talk about, whether he knows anything or not. However, his favorite topics are those that are of majestic, grand, national or global importance.

So what's he going to say if, as Mayor Jackson, someone yells: "Hey, why the hell didn't they pick up my garbage this week?" Garbage is not the most majestic of subjects.

But garbage is what being a mayor is about. And street lights, sewers, curbs, cracked sidewalks, and how fast the cops and firemen get from here to there or there to here.

The last thing a mayor needs is the gift of oratory. Even worse, the compulsion to say whatever pops into his mind.

The most successful mayor of modern times was Chicago's Richard J. Daley. He was at his oratorical peak when saying: "The wunnerful people of dis wunnerful city."

I remember when he exhorted a group of young Democrats to put aside their differences and unite in the coming campaign. He dipped into history and shouted:

"It's like George Washington told his men when he was crossin' duh Delaware. Let's all get in duh boat!"

But who cared the way he talked? Not the voters. He knew what everyone in city government was doing — feloniously or otherwise. His idea of fun reading was to pore over a massive budget or a stack of contracts.

In contrast, one of the most talkative mayors in modern times was Ed Koch, in New York. He talked so much that the voters of New York finally said, in effect, "Shuddup and g'bye."

No, being a mayor is a nuts and bolts job. Sure, there are grand plans to be made. Let's tear this old thing down and put up that new thing. Let's turn this into a shining city on a hill. It can be great fun, unveiling architectural renderings of a domed stadium or a hospital complex.

But when the fun is over, you have to sit down at your desk, get out the calculator and figure out where the money is going to come from. The gift of oratory is wasted when you tell a voter packing mortgage and tuition payments that he has to cough up more this year.

It also doesn't do you much good when unions come in and say: "This ain't enough."

I doubt if the rhyme-happy Jackson would satisfy a union boss by saying: "It is rough, not being enough, so can we deal on the cuff?"

No, if anyone in public life would be miscast as a mayor, it's Jesse Jackson. Even Sonny Bono makes more sense being the mayor of Palm Springs. He can get by saying: "Frankie, you're a beautiful person and a wonderful human being."

But Palm Springs doesn't have crackheads sprawled within tripping distance of the White House. What's Mayor Jesse going to do about that? Hoist them to their feet and say: "You are somebody!"

No, after one term he'd be a beaten man. Washington's many poor would still be poor. The dopers would still be doping. The press would be asking: "What about the homeless rate, the homicide rate, the overdose rate, the tax rate, and how come the garbage wasn't picked up yesterday?"

Telling the press, "Ah, but you must consider those problems in the context of the entire universe," just won't cut it.

So, that's why Jackson is pushing the idea of making the District of Columbia a state.

Then he could have the job he is perfectly suited for — U. S. Senator.

A senator doesn't really have to do anything but talk. And they don't have to do that if they aren't in the mood.

Senators have aides who do all the mundane chores, from answering letters to drafting legislation to hustling campaign contributions. So, all a senator has to do is make sure he looks awake and sober when the C-span cameras are on him.

There are those who say statehood for D. C. is ridiculous, and maybe it is. But I'm in favor of it.

If it doesn't happen, and Jackson can't become a senator, then he's going to run for president again. And again and again.

And as President Bush might put it: "Ears-wise, I'm not sure I can take much more of that oratory thing."

Bush cannot continue to fight drugs with rhetoric

Cody Shearer
North American Syndicate

WASHINGTON — Several officials I spoke with who attended the U. S. Conferences of Mayors here last week thought President Bush and his drug policy advisor William Bennett were on something, given their overly optimistic appraisal of the war on drugs. Bush enthusiastically declared "notable progress" had been made on the frontlines and Bennett cheerfully claimed that "the scourge . . . is beginning to end."

Of course, these promising assessments had a purpose. They served as a backdrop while President Bush unveiled the second phase of his anti-drug strategy, which called for an additional $10 billion in drug war spending beyond last year's appropriation, a bigger role for the military and the death penalty for more drug-related crimes.

As much as I would like to believe in President Bush's efforts in challenging drug use, I found his recent comments totally inconsistent with reality and dangerous in the sense they downplay the true dimensions of the crisis.

While President Bush announced a new facet of his drug program, I was touring drug infested areas in southeast Washington, D. C., a short 20 minute drive from the White House. What I saw shocked me. On a rainy afternoon, I spotted several hundred young black males leisurely selling cocaine on street corners and in housing project corridors.

After a four-hour tour, I concluded that my combat-weary police escort was locked in a losing battle since his department's resources are so meager. With only 300 officers available in his district to challenge drug use in an area where thousands of people sell or consume illegal substances, one is fooling one's self to think significant progress can be made. Short of closing crack houses, stopping suburbanites from entering the area to purchase drugs and arresting out-of-town dealers after dropping off their product, how are outnumbered police going to halt this war? The only option, my friend proposed, was to keep the drug dealers on constant edge, which would require the use of a thousand policemen in his precinct alone to sweep drug plagued blocks, house by house on a regular basis.

My friend insinuated that President Bush had shown little understanding of the drug crisis, had spent too little money, and offered too few ideas without any focus.

Indeed, outstanding evidence implies the country is being conquered by drugs. A national survey of 392,000 students in grades 6-12 finds that only 22 percent of the class of 1989 was drug free, with 78 percent of students admitting use of a drug or alcoholic beverage in the past year. As for drug use, 17 percent of the students in grades 6-12 said they'd used marijuana on weekends and 3.2 percent confessed that they'd snorted cocaine. Almost all of these activities occurred out of the home and "in other places in the community." One wonders if President Bush has read the National Parents' Resource Institute for Drug Education report?

Such data is hardly new or shocking. The Drug Enforcement Administration sheepishly acknowledges that even though our country has 5 percent of the world's population, it continues to consume 50 percent of its cocaine.

Given such hard information and undeniable trends, one must ask why so few public officials emphasize that drugs are symptomatic of something that is terribly wrong with America's soul. And yet the testimony is everywhere. Even my innocent friends in New York City were shocked last week when the "New England Journal of Medicine" reported that a boy born in Harlem today can expect to die sooner than a boy born in Bangladesh. It seems the life expectancy of males in Harlem is down to 51 years — a year less than the expected longevity of male Bangladeshis and 21 years lower than the average life span of a white male in the suburbs.

Is it any wonder that all kinds of people, even well-educated ones, risk selling drugs when the American dream has failed them. A recent study by economist Ben Harrison at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has found that one out of three black male college students earned wages in 1987 that fell below the poverty line of about $12,000 for a family of four. Similarly shocking is that half of the black female college graduates also earned low poverty-level wages. So where is education's much touted path out of poverty?

Our country is overrun by so many social ills that it's indecent and impractical for President Bush to believe volunteerism can cure what ails us. And yet he continues to promote his "thousand points of lights strategy" in fighting drugs, even though the Gallup polling organization says there has been no increase in giving or volunteerism since Bush came to office.

Just suppose there had been a measurable rise in drug-fighting volunteers. How would they cope with the fact our government will soon have to spend $15 billion a year to prepare drug babies to enter kindergarten by age five? How are volunteers going to involve themselves in special medical care? Last year an estimated $2.5 billion was needed to care for the birth of 375,000 drug babies in this country.

Surely it's time to acknowledge the inevitable that neither the government nor the private sector has spent enough money or allocated sufficient manpower to make a serious indentation in the drug epidemic. Small-scale tinkering with existing programs won't win the drug war or any other national disaster.

ASU students favor manatory seatbelt law, campus poll says

This article marks the return of Student Viewpoint, a weekly poll of student opinion in the State Press. The unscientific poll, conducted at various points around campus, is meant to provide an insight into students' views on current issues.

By KRISTIE YOUNG AND VANJA THOMPSON
State Press

A majority of ASU students favor a mandatory Arizona seatbelt law, according to a recent informal poll taken by the State Press.

One hundred students were asked whether they favored or opposed a mandatory seatbelt law in Arizona.

Results show that 68 percent of the students think a mandatory seatbelt law should be implemented in Arizona, while 22 percent opposed it and 10 percent were undecided.

Eric Gardanier, a junior electrical engineering major, said he thought the proposed law "would help out as far as reducing insurance rates. Hopefully, medical expenses would go down."

Attila Juhasz, a sophomore marketing major, was also in favor of the law.

"Once I was in an accident and (a seatbelt) saved my life," he said.

But another student, who opposed the law, said that her friend lost her life due to a seatbelt.

"The driver, who wasn't wearing a seatbelt, was able to get out of the car, but my friend couldn't get (her seatbelt) off in time. The car blew up and she died," said Tiffany Gervasio, a freshman dietetics major.

Alex Erickson, a junior business major, was also opposed, saying "I feel (the seatbelt law) is unconstitutional because it's my right to wear it or not."

Arizona Rep. Jim Miller, R-Phoenix, drafted a mandatory seatbelt bill last year which passed in the House but died in the Senate in a tie vote.

Bobby Raymond, D-Phoenix, has said he strongly opposes the law but was unavailable for comment.

A total of 33 states have already implemented the mandatory seatbelt law, including California and New York.

If the law is passed in Arizona, the maximum penalty fee for noncompliance would be $25.

J. B. Nelmark, a senior finance major, said "If people want to kill themselves they have the right to do it."

Mandela

taken before talks can begin. The ANC shares these demands.

Mandela was the last well-known political prisoner in South Africa. Six of his ANC colleagues who had been imprisoned for more than 25 years, including Walter Sisulu, were released in October.

In the mid-1980s, Mandela rejected offers to go free in exchange for a renunciation of violence. De Klerk abandoned this condition, although he said after meeting Mandela on Friday night that he believed the black leader was "committed to peaceful solutions."

Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda, one of the South African government's harshest critics, urged the ANC to suspend guerrilla actions in the wake of Mandela's release.

But Mandela told the Cape Town crowd the ANC resorted to violence in 1961 as a "defensive action against the violence of apartheid," and added, "The factors which necessitated the armed struggle still exist today."

"We have no options but to continue," he said.

He urged whites to "join us in the safety of a new South Africa. The freedom movement is a political home for you, too."

Mandela, whose imprisonment included years of hard labor on windswept Robben Island in Cape Town's harbor, told his family: "Your pain and suffering was far greater than my own."

His walk was smooth and graceful and he appeared extremely fit, the result of a two-hour daily exercise regimen that reportedly began each morning at 3:30.

His reserved, even formal demeanor was likely to work in his favor among whites, who have long been flooded with government propaganda portraying him and the ANC as a communist-led terrorist group.

Mandela ended the speech in dramatic fashion, re-reading the close of his famous statement in court in 1964 when — after two years in jail — he received a life sentence for plotting anti-government sabotage.

"I have cherished the ideal of a democratic and free society in which all persons live together in harmony and with equal opportunities," he said. "It is an ideal which I hope to live for and achieve, but if need be, an ideal for which I am prepared to die."

White police officers and black activists, whom they might once have arrested, worked together to ensure Mandela's safety.

Early Sunday, scores of policemen stood guard outside the prison while a small army of photographers and television crews from across the world frantically took the first pictures of Mandela as a free man.

But when Mandela and his wife got into the car to leave, security broke down. Some eager witnesses to history surrounded the car and nearly climbed on top of it.

Be wary of mail fraud.

False claims and fraudulent schemes are often promoted through the mail and/or advertising.

Before responding to an offer, especially before sending any money, check into the background of the organization doing the promotion. Ask the organization to provide more information. A reputable firm will gladly provide information that will help you determine if the offer is legitimate. Call the Better Business Bureau. They will be able to tell you if complaints have been filed against the firm.

Watch out for some of the more common schemes:

• Work-at-home offers. The Better Business Bureau has never seen a legitimate work-at-home offer where a home-worker is required to pay any money.

• Job offers. Overseas job offers are sometimes merely a ploy to sell a list of companies with overseas branches. Or fees as high as $300 may be charged to send your resume to foreign companies. Chances of actual employment are not good.

• Business franchises, vending machine routes, distributorships. Be wary of these schemes which promise large returns for a small investment and very little of your time.

These are only a few of the many ways consumers can be victimized. Keep in mind, if an offer sounds too good to be true, it probably is.

If you feel you have been victimized, call the Better Business Bureau. Save all correspondence, envelopes and other related evidence to the scheme, and report it to your local Postal Inspection Service.

Valuable publications regarding mail fraud may be obtained free of charge from your local post office.

Mail fraud costs American consumers an estimated $500 million a year.

Arizonans more aware, tolerant of AIDS, study finds

From Staff and Wire Reports

PHOENIX (AP) — Arizonans are becoming increasingly aware of how the AIDS virus is transmitted and more tolerant of the people most affected by the disease, according to a study released Friday by the state Department of Health Services.

An overwhelming majority also believe that public schools should provide AIDS education, according to the survey conducted for DHS by the Phoenix-based Behavior Research Center.

In comparison to similar surveys conducted in 1987 and 1988, public awareness of AIDS issues has improved dramatically.

But one ASU health official believes that these figures do not necessarily hold true for University students here.

Chuck McDuffie, coordinator of health education at the Student Health Center, said that college students still may not be as knowledgeable about AIDS as older adults.

"College students still think, in many cases, that it (AIDS) has nothing to do with them," McDuffie said. "People with AIDS are such an invisible group of people to college-age people."

The study also revealed that Arizonans may be growing more tolerant in their attitudes toward AIDS and those most affected by the illness.

McDuffie said he still sees "quite a lot of intolerance" at ASU.

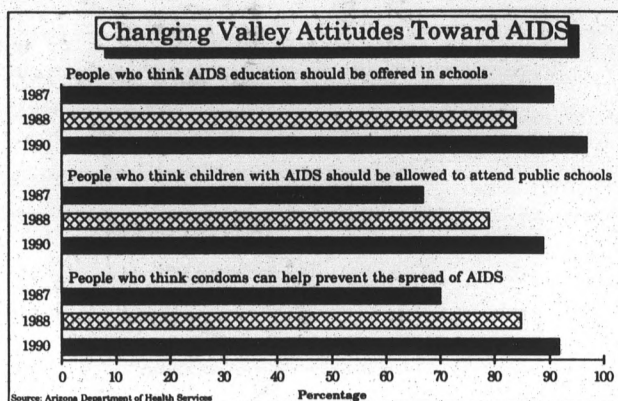

"I don't see the attitude changing among students," he said. "Many still seem to think it is a 'gay disease.'"

The number of people in the Valley survey who believed AIDS education should be offered in public schools increased to 97 percent in the most recent survey from 84 percent in 1988 and 91 percent in 1987. More than three out of four respondents said school-based AIDS education should begin in the sixth grade or earlier, compared to 69 percent in 1988.

The survey is an indication that AIDS education efforts are having an impact on the public, said Dr. Steven Englender, assistant director of the DHS division of disease prevention services.

"Similar studies nationwide show that adults have become knowledgeable about basic AIDS facts," he said. "The challenge now is to translate this knowledge into actual behavior change."

McDuffie said, however, that there are "still a lot of studies that show students aren't changing their behavior." AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is caused by the human immunodeficiency virus, which destroys the body's immune system.

State Press staff member Michelle Burgess contributed to this report.

Student counselors to give advice on contraception, sex issues

By SONJA LEWIS State Press

Four female ASU students will be counseling their peers beginning this week on contraceptive use and other sexuality issues.

After completing a semester of training, Contraceptive Advice and Reproduction Education, a newly formed group of paraprofessional students, will work with other students trying to obtain birth control.

Students requesting birth control at the ASU Student Health Center are required to meet with a counselor for an hour to discuss various methods of birth control.

"(The paraprofessionals) try to make sure women know all of the methods available, so when they decide on a method, it's an informed decision," said Danae Brownell, health educator at the health center who is involved in the training of the students.

Brownell said when talking to the applicants she tried to evaluate if they felt comfortable teaching human sexuality.

"They have to be open-minded to all the different options and not be biased in the presentation of any certain method," she said.

Once the student counselors were confirmed they underwent four hours of training a week to prepare to be in C. A. R. E.

Peer counselor Sarah Ambler, a sophomore therapeutic recreation major, said that she is glad training is over and is anxious to begin counseling.

"It was fascinating to learn everything I did, but I'm glad I'm all done so I finally put it all to use," Ambler said.

Ambler got her first taste of peer counseling when she held a presentation at her residence hall, Palo Verde Main.

She said she was nervous and had to refer some of the questions to experts but felt she helped other students in a way that only other students can.

"I think that because I'm a peer, they might be able to relate to me better," Ambler said.

Another counselor, senior psychology major Tiffany Price, agreed with Ambler and added that in being a counselor she learned to better relate to other students also.

"I've learned basically just to listen and to be more responsive," she said.

Glendale man stabbed at Tempe complex

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A Glendale man was stabbed early Sunday after an argument at a Tempe apartment complex, police said.

Marc Deymonaz, 21, was taken Scottsdale Memorial Hospital-Osborn where he was listed in satisfactory condition after surgery, Tempe police Cpl. Donald Girnt said.

No suspects were arrested and it is unknown what type of object was used in the stabbing, Girnt said.

He said Deymonaz was stabbed about 1:15 a.m. in the parking lot of Fox Tree Apartments, 730 E. McKellips Road, after he went with a friend, who is the manager at the complex, to talk with some tenants about a loud party.

When they left the apartment, three men followed them to the parking lot and Deymonaz was stabbed. Girnt did not know where or how many times Deymonaz was stabbed.

The suspects fled the complex after the incident, which is still under investigation, Girnt said.

act of hostility toward Christianity," Mote said. "The only reasonable alternative is to prohibit the display of all religious symbols."

Drury's argument rested on a different interpretation of the constitution.

"This is not merely an establishment clause case," he said.

Drury said the cross and chapel were not the forbidden "establishment" of a religion by the state, but an "accommodation" of religion.

He added that students at the University need a place to worship on campus, and that no one religion is prohibited.

Mote disagreed.

"Can anybody walk into that chapel and place their own religious symbol up there? Obviously not," he said.

Mote added that leaving the cross on the chapel is much more harmful than taking it down.

inside track," Boley said. "But it's open to anybody, and anybody with the right attitude, the right frame of mind and who really wants to be a dedicated candidate (can win)."

"That allows anybody who has an interest, anybody who wants to change things, anybody who wants to speak out (to participate)," Boley continued. "The election isn't 'fixed' for anybody on campus. Anybody can run."

Students interested in running for office must maintain at least a 2.2 GPA and carry a minimum of six hours of classes.

Boley also stressed the importance of ASASU in relation to the students on campus.

"Student officers exert pressure on the administration and the Board of Regents on such issues as tuition hikes, parking problems and state budget cuts that affect every student," Boley said. "The safety escort service, the bicycle co-op and legal services are all part of ASASU."

"If there was no student government, there would be many services that the University wouldn't have," he said.

The Usual Suspects

Divided they fall

Billionaire Donald Trump and his wife Ivana may be calling it quits, a columnist reported yesterday.

"While friends hope for a reconciliation, many sources tell this columnist that attorneys have already been engaged to divide the spoils," Liz Smith wrote in the Daily News, citing unnamed sources.

Trump, 43, went to Japan last week alone. Smith said it was the first time Mrs. Trump, 40, did not go with him on a business trip.

"We will not dignify idle gossip with a response," said Gary Lewi of Howard J. Rubenstein Associates, a public relations firm that represents Trump.

Forbes magazine said Trump, a developer, is worth around $1.7 billion, ranking him 19th on its 1989 list of America's 400 richest people.

Mrs. Trump, a former model and an alternate for Czechoslovakia's Olympic ski team in 1972, manages the Trump Castle casino in Atlantic City, N.J., and has been in charge of renovations at the Plaza Hotel in New York City.

Her pay for the Plaza job, Trump said, was "one dollar plus all the dresses she can buy." She refers to him as "The Donald."

Holocaust survivor honors actor

Although Simon Wiesenthal would undoubtedly take credit for his work of tracking down Nazi war criminals he says the last thing he sees himself as is a movie hero.

Never the less, he has traveled to Berlin to pay tribute to actor Ben Kingsley, who portrayed him in a film about his life.

The World War II concentration camp survivor presented Kingsley with the Golden Camera award, one of West Germany's highest television honors, for his performance as Wiesenthal.

"Kingsley didn't just perform, he got inside my skin," Wiesenthal, 81, said of the television movie about his life.

"In all this time — and it's been 45 years, more than half my life — there has not been one day when I have forgotten that I am a survivor," Wiesenthal said in an interview with The Associated Press.

He had nothing but praise for the film, "Murderers Among Us — The Simon Wiesenthal Story," a U. S. television production. "Watching the film was like seeing parts of my previous life over again," he said.

How to: defuse the ecological time bomb

(Editor's note: excerpts for this edition of College Notebook are taken from "50 Simple Things You can do to Save the Earth." The best-seller is available at Books, Etc for $4.95 in paperback. The material is used with permission.)

The 90s have already been coined by some as the decade of environmental action. Specialists are telling us that if we don't clean up our earth within the next decade, the damaging effects of our pollution will be devastatingly irreversible.

Learning to save the earth is no longer a question of education. It is a question of responsibility. On Feb. 1 the State Press reported that environmental protection was a top concern among college students. "Six out of every seven students questioned agreed that the government is not doing enough to stop environmental pollution," the article said.

But placing all of the responsibility for our world on the government renders us not only impotent, but irresponsible as well.

After all, it is the things we do every day and the choices we make as consumers that have led to rain-forest destruction, the "green-house" effect, and the unending pile-up of garbage.

Fear not. There are things we can do to effect a change. "50 Simple things You Can do to Save the Earth," offers just that. Here is a sampling:

► Start with your car. A poorly tuned car will use 9 percent more gas than a car that's tuned up. A clogged fuel filter will eat up more gas, too. Make sure your tires are properly inflated. If every car owner in America would take this simple step we'd save a whopping 2 billion gallons of gas every year.

► Stamp out Styrofoam. A styrofoam cup may seem like a convenient way to hold your coffee this morning but 500 years from now when the earth is still littered with billions of them it won't be so convenient any more. Styrofoam, which is made from benzene (a known carcinogen), is completely non-biodegradable. When at your favorite deli ask for paper plates and cups. Better yet, boycott restaurants that persist in using styrofoam.

► Stop junk mail. Unread junk mail constitutes an enormous amount of wasted paper. If you saved up all the unwanted paper you'll receive in the mail this year, you'd have the equivalent of one-and-a-half trees. And so would all of your neighbors. And that adds up to about 100 million trees every year. To keep your name off of future junk mailing lists write to: Mail Preference Service, Direct Marketing Association, 6 E. 43rd St., New York, NY 10017.

► Eat low on the food chain. If Americans reduced their meat intake by just 10 percent, the savings in grains and soybeans could adequately feed 60 million people, worldwide, each year. Beef production has also led to destruction of rainforests. Half of the forests in Central America have already been cleared to raise cattle. Cutting back on beef could have other rewards. Since your diet need only consist of 12 percent protein, the excess that you consume (and most Americans do consume more meat than they need) is converted by your body to fat.

► Be water wise. Don't let the water run while you brush your teeth and shave. You will save up to nine gallons each time you brush, and 14 each time you shave simply by turning off the water when you don't need it. You can save one to two gallons each time you flush if you put a plastic bottle in your toilet tank. Water conservation is particularly important here in the desert.

► Use a clean detergent. Phosphates in laundry detergents make their way into streams and lakes with disastrous results. Use a low-phosphate or phosphate-free detergent. Liquid detergents are generally phosphate-free.

► Get off the can. Don't buy aerosol cans containing chlorofluorocarbons. CFC's are contributing to the "green-house" effect by destroying the ozone. Even aerosols that contain no CFC probably use propane or butane as their propellant, which have their own hazardous effects. Air conditioners are also major CFC offenders. Try to cut down on their use at home and in your car.

► Make a commitment. This may mean starting a recycling program in your dorm or apartment complex or simply passing on the information here. "50 Simple Things You Can do to Save the Earth" contains over 100 more suggestions (they're grouped into 50 categories) and over 75 sources for more information.

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Foods as diverse as chocolate, sea slugs and calf brains have been touted as aphrodisiacs throughout history, says the co-author of a book on the subject.

"Almost everything you can think of has been used as an aphrodisiac — including tree bark, shark's fin and hippopotamus snout," said George Armelagos, co-author of "Consuming Passions."

Often foods perceived to enhance sexual desire simply may add to physical or mental well-being because they are good sources of protein, such as eggs, caviar and oysters, he said.

Chocolate, a popular Valentine Day's gift, has a substance called phenylethylalanine that accumulates in the pleasure centers of the brain, mimicking what happens during sexual activity, he said.

Alcohol, especially champagne, is commonly thought to be an aphrodisiac, reflecting poet Ogden Nash's sentiment that "Candy's dandy, but liquor's quicker," Armelagos said.

"Although champagne is a noted ingredient in seduction scenes, whatever effectiveness it may have is probably due to the flattery of being offered an expensive commodity," he said.

Still, no food has ever been proven to be an aphrodisiac.

"The brain is the most important sexual organ," he said. "If you think Saltines will work, then you've got a good, cheap aphrodisiac."

Devils shooting turns ice cold, fall to Trojans

Sundi Kjenstad/State Press

ASU junior Isaac Austin goes in for a layup as the Bruins' center Chris Munk attempts the block.

By PAUL CORO
State Press

In his first official campus visit, prize recruit Ed O'Bannon disappeared from his seat a couple of times as the ASU basketball team pulled a disappearing act of its own.

It did not take any magic for USC (8-11 overall, 3-9 Pac-10) to hand the Sun Devils (12-10, 5-8) their worst defeat of the season, 88-63, in front of 6,851 at the University Activity Center.

"That was bad, wasn't it?" ASU Head Coach Bill Frieder said.

Yes, it was. The Sun Devils never led in a game that saw them shoot 32 percent, a season low, compared to a 63 percent mark from the Trojans.

"They just beat our butts every which way from start to finish," Frieder said. "They just pushed us aside on the boards and dunked it in. They pushed us aside on the perimeter and went by us and shot it in."

USC struck early and often. ASU fell behind 7-0 after freshman Harold Miner nailed a trey and backcourt mate Robert Pack added a driving jumper and a layup.

The Sun Devils' first points came 3:40 into the game when center Isaac Austin dunked on a feed from forward Alex Austin. ASU crawled to within one with 11:27 left in the half, 12-13, on uncharacteristically shaky free throw shooting from Alex.

From there, the Trojans proceeded to score on each of their next 11 possessions while the Sun Devils hit only two field goals in seven minutes to give USC a commanding 30-16 lead.

ASU would trim the lead to 35-24 on a 3-pointer from Matt Anderson, who finished with five tri-fectas, with 2:49 to go in the half but that was as close as the Sun Devils would get for the remainder of the game.

"When you get in a hole against a talented team like that and you now have to start overplaying them or press, you're dead," Frieder said. "Because we don't have the quickness or strength to go with that talent."

Talent? The Trojans are now tied for eighth place in the conference, yet they played as though they were eighth in the nation.

"I thought we were the aggressors offensively and defensively and didn't make foolish decisions," USC Head Coach George Raveling said.

Miner, the conference's premier freshman, was expected to give ASU difficulty. But it wasn't his team-high 22 points that hurt the Sun Devils. It was players like Pack, a junior transfer, and Keith Greeley, a freshman that did the damage.

Pack nearly doubled his season average, scoring 18 points and handing out a game-high seven assists, while Greeley chipped in 10 points and five rebounds (2.5 season average for both) off the bench.

"(Pack) killed us," Frieder said. "We did a pretty good job handling Miner in the first half (six points) and that's what was so disturbing being so far behind."

The Austin brothers led the scoring attack with a combined 37 points, but made only 12 of 37 field goal attempts. Alex, the team's top 3-point threat, connected on one of ten shots beyond the arc.

"If I don't put the ball in the hole, we don't stay in the game," Alex said. "The bottom line is we feel we should have beat this team — twice."

"The coaches talk about tournament bids and how this game is important and we come out and play like that."

•The Sun Devils' next three games all come on the road with the first being UofA on Thursday.

•O'Bannon's reaction to the student response as he entered the UAC: "That was crazy. This is my first visit and for something like that to happen is embarrassing."

•USC scored 42 of its 88 points off layups as opposed to ASU's 14.

Collins gets victory in his first meet of the season

By MATTHEW KASTER
State Press

Although ASU shot putter Shane Collins is still recovering from arthroscopic knee surgery, he was still able to throw a winning toss in his first meet of the season Saturday.

Collins threw for a distance of 59 feet, 11.75 inches, good enough for a first-place finish at the Husker Invitational Indoor track and field meet.

Recovering from knee surgery had been a major worry for Collins and his coaches before the season started. Now, with a solid opening performance behind him, Collins seemed more worried about getting the season underway.

"My knee held up all right," Collins said, "but my timing is still off. I was really happy with it, it's a good throw for only a few weeks' training."

Collins' throw also met the provisional qualifying mark for the NCAA indoor finals in March.

"Sixty feet will probably be good enough to get me into the (NCAA indoor) finals, but I've still got a ways to go," Collins said.

"Once I can get back into the weights again, my heavy lifting and deep squats, I should be coming off even better."

The NCAA's automatic qualifying standard is 60 feet, 6 inches, which Collins said he expects to make next Saturday when the Sun Devils travel to NAU for an indoor dual meet against the Lumberjacks.

Wrestlers tie with Hawkeyes

By DAN ZEIGER
State Press

This is starting to become a habit.

The ASU wrestling team should be prepared for close matches against tough teams when they reach the NCAA tournament, partly because they've had so many of them already.

The second-ranked Sun Devils added another chapter to that story with an exciting 18-18 tie with third-ranked Iowa in front of 4,556 spectators on Friday night at the University Activity Center.

"The meet was dramatic; there's no doubt about that," Iowa Head Coach Dan Gable said.

With the Sun Devils leading 18-14, Iowa heavyweight John Oostendorp came extremely close to pinning Mike Anderson on two occasions in an 18-5 decision. Anderson, in his sixth match since returning from a knee injury, was able to maneuver out of bounds to hold off Oostendorp's first attempt.

"I thought I had him the second time," Oostendorp said. "I know I didn't the first, but it was pretty close."

In the second near-pin situation, with about 45 seconds remaining in the match, Anderson was able to turn himself over and hold on until time ran out.

"That pin attempt was close at the end there; you could have flipped a coin," Gable said. "It's up to the ref to decide, but you're not supposed to get those calls on the road anyway."

The Hawkeyes received four points in the team score because Oostendorp's margin of victory was between eight and 14 points. Had Oostendorp won by pinfall or 15 points, Iowa (17-1-1) would have left Tempe with a victory.

"I don't think he (Anderson) was flat," ASU Head Coach Bobby Douglas said. "He's still not in top form after being out because of his knee."

At 190 pounds, the Sun Devils (15-2-2) nearly scored a pinfall victory of their own. Rex Holman, one of four freshmen in ASU's lineup, came close to pinning third-ranked Brooks Simpson twice.

"The match at 190 was a barnburner," Douglas said. "I don't think the fans who really know wrestling ever felt the match was over."

Simpson was able to hold on for a 3-3 draw, which maintained ASU's four-point advantage.

"I didn't want to make any mistakes at the end, so I settled for the draw," Holman said.

Trailing 12-6, the Sun Devils won three consecutive matches to surge to their four-point lead.

At 158 pounds, ASU's tenth-ranked Ray Miller claimed an 18-10 decision over Iowa's Keith Trammel. Trammel was a replacement for eighth-ranked Mark Rieland, who suffered a broken jaw in practice last week and is out for the year.

Dan St. John (167 pounds) followed with his 135th career victory, a 7-3 decision over

Scott Troyanos/State Press

Sun Devil head wrestling Coach Bobby Douglas eyes Shawn Charles after Charles was defeated.

Bart Chelavig.

ASU then claimed a 16-12 advantage as a result of G. T. Taylor's (177 pounds) 3-2 decision over Pat Kelly.

"After we fell behind early, those matches became big for us," Douglas said.

Zeke Jones (118 pounds) gave the Sun Devils a 3-0 lead by improving his season record to 28-0 with a 5-2 decision over Steve Martin, but the Hawkeyes won the next two contests.

Twin brothers Terry and Tom Brands gave Iowa a 9-3 advantage with two big victories. At 126 pounds, Terry dominated ASU's Shawn Charles, scoring a 27-12 technical pinfall. Tom, top-ranked at 134 pounds, acquired an 11-4 decision over Wayne McMinn, who was filling in for third-ranked Andy McNaughton.

Thom Ortiz, ranked second at 142 pounds, pulled ASU closer with a 4-0 decision over Troy Steiner.

Sun Devil gymnasts suffer losses to UCLA

Men finish 2nd on Friday, 5th on Saturday at UCLA

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

ASU mens gymnastics Head Coach Don Robinson said he had mixed emotions about the results of this weekend's competition.

He said the Sun Devils' second-place finish in the Santa Barbara Invitational on Friday was exciting, while their fifth place finish in the UCLA Invitational on Saturday was depressing.

"It's not as good as we wanted, but it's not as bad as it could have been," he said. "I was pretty happy with the (Santa Barbara) meet — we had good team effort and good team unity."

During the Santa Barbara Invitational, ASU scored 273.10. Stanford won the tournament with 276.4. Cal-State Fullerton, UC-Santa Barbara, BYU, and San Jose State followed in places three through six.

In the floor exercise, Licurgo Diaz-Sandi took second place with a 9.75. Christian Rohde scored a 9.6 on the pommel-horse to place him in first.

In the all-around, Stanford's Conrad Vorsanter led the six teams with 56.50, and was followed by Diaz-Sandi who took second place with a 55.90.

Robinson said the Invitational was highlighted by Chris Smith, who had his best score in the still rings with a 9.4.

"He did a great job at Santa Barbara," Robinson said. "He was really a team leader. I didn't think he would do quite what we expected."

At the UCLA Invitational, ASU came in fifth place with 271.5. Nebraska won the tournament with 283.075, followed by UCLA, Minnesota, and New Mexico State in the second through fourth places.

Robinson said although his team committed some mistakes, he felt a fifth-place finish in an invitational of this prestige is something in which to be proud.

"The best teams in the nation were there," Robinson said. "And if we ended up fifth in the nation, that would be commendable."

The highlight of the UCLA Invitational, Robinson said, was Diaz-Sandi's near-perfect floor routine in which he scored a 9.9.

"It was as close to perfect as you can get," Robinson said. "He stuck absolutely everything."

Robinson also said Mike Alwicker, who placed second on the pommel-horse, performed his career best, along with Rohde in the vault, who Robinson said had his "best routine of his whole life under pressure."

Women make mistakes; bow out to No. 1 Bruins

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

ASU womens gymnastics Head Coach John Spini said he was proud of how competitively the Sun Devils performed against top-ranked UCLA Sunday.

However, the few mistakes he said his team made were the exact cause of its defeat against the Bruins, 189.5 to 187.3.

Spini said if the Sun Devils had not suffered poor execution on the uneven bars and two out-of-bounds during the floor exercise, they may have given UCLA a better run for its money.

For instance, on the beam, ASU outscored the Bruins 46.75 to 46.25, while between the vault and the bars, the Sun Devils suffered over a two-point deficit.

"We are still having problems on bars," Spini said. "We have practiced and done more routines and tried everything we can. We gave them two points on just one event."

Molly Carpenter, who scored her lowest score on the bars (8.65), agreed that it is the team's most inconsistent event.

"The bars are definitely our weak link," she said. "We are having a consistency problem. Its our hit-or-miss event."

In order to cure the problem, Carpenter said she is going to focus almost exclusively on this aspect of her performance during practice.

"I really need to get my act together on bars," she said. "If I can get that down, I will feel happy."

The Bruins outscored the Sun Devils on the floor exercise by half a point. Heather Carter led ASU in this event with a 9.7, followed closely by Michelle Colavin with a 9.6 and Carpenter with a 9.55.

In the all-around, Suzy Baldock and Carpenter took fourth and fifth place with 37.30 and 37.20, respectively. UCLA's Jill Andrews led the all-around with a 38.30.

Spini's goal prior to the meet was to get a good home score to use in the Sun Devils' average which could qualify them for the NCAAs. He said the team may decide to use Sunday's 187.3.

"We went over 187, and that's good," he said. "We just want to get the chance to compete in that last round of Nationals."

For the home meets in the University Activity Center, the Sun Devils have only been attracting a few hundred spectators. Spini said he would like to see if his team would improve with a good-sized, boisterous crowd supporting it.

"The fans would help us tremendously," he said. "We have no home-court advantage, its just team against team."

"I can't wait to get back on the road."

Five top 10 womens golf teams to meet; von Heijne debuts

By KRIS TIMMONS
State Press

Ulrika von Heijne will make her collegiate debut as the No. 2 ASU womens golf team begins first-round action today at the Chris Johnson Intercollegiate Tournament in Tucson.

The 54-hole tournament at the Randolph Park North course will conclude Wednesday, and features No. 1 San Jose State, No. 3 Arizona, No. 8 Stanford, and No. 9 UCLA.

von Heijne hails from the same Swedish town as Sun Devil golfer Per Johansson, who took first place in the Ping Arizona Invitational in Tucson last week.

ASU Head Coach Linda Vollstedt said that the men winning their Tucson tournament last week makes it even more important for the women to win this week.

"We always play well down in Tucson," Vollstedt said. "And we would like to go down and win the championship because the mens team won it last week."

"We would like to repeat and bring the trophies back up to Arizona State."

Vollstedt does not think the pressure of her first collegiate competition will affect von Heijne.

"She was clearly the best in the qualifying rounds," Vollstedt said. "She's a real gutsy kind of player. She really likes competition and I think she'll be a real surprise."

Sun Devil Brandie Burton, the nation's top-ranked player, will be looking for her fifth collegiate win in as many tries. If successful, she would tie the national record of Sharon Barrett of Tulsa who won her initial five events of the 1979 season.

Vollstedt said she is looking for the strongest individual performance from Burton but added that Burton is more concerned with the team winning than her own performance.

"Brandie's thoughts are 'I'll just play my best and hope the team wins,'" Vollstedt said. "If she also happens to win individually, that's another plus."

No. 10 mens swimmers soak No. 6 Bruins

By LARRY NEWELL

State Press

The ASU mens swimming and diving team is peaking at the right time.

On Friday, the 10th-ranked Sun Devils were expecting a close meet with the sixth-ranked Bruins, but this battle never materialized as ASU drowned UCLA 64-49.

This was the Sun Devils second upset of a top-ten team in three weeks.

"I was really surprised how easily we won," ASU swimming Coach Ron Johnson said. "Our confidence has really grown the last few weeks and our guys are starting to think they have a good chance to make a real fine performance at the NCAA Championships."

Top Sun Devil individual performances were turned in by senior Paul Howe, who had winning performances in the 200- (1:39.56) and 500-yard (4:29.03) freestyle events. Sophomore teammate Richard Tapper tied with Howe for top honors in the 500-yard freestyle.

Freshmen Magnus Eriksson and Fran Gray recorded first-place performances in the 100-yard freestyle (45.00) and the 200-yard backstroke (1:51.60), respectively.

Johnson said the real surprise for ASU came in the 400-yard medley and the 400-yard freestyle relays, events which UCLA ranks among the best in the nation.

The 400-yard medley relay team led by the sophomore trio of Terry Flock, David LeBlanc, and Keith Dennison, with Eriksson swimming the last leg, set a new Mona Plummer Aquatic Center record of 2:20.39, eclipsing the old mark of 3:20.39.

"The relay victories were the key to our winning the meet," Johnson said.

Although the Bruin's Chris Dudka recorded first-place performances in both the 1- (313.20) and 3- (342.75) meter dives, Sun Devil junior Drew Johansen recorded second-place finishes in the two dives. Teammates freshman Chip Jones finished third in the 1-meter dive and sophomore Rick Sawtell placed third in the 3-meter dive.

"This was undoubtedly our best team performance of the season," Johnson said. "The team is really pulling and working well together."

Texas cranks up bats, wins 2 of 3

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — David Tollison drove in four runs with a double and a home run Sunday to lead Texas to a 9-5 win over ASU.

The victory lifted Texas, No. 2 in the Collegiate Baseball ESPN ranking, to 6-1 overall. ASU, No. 8 in the ranking, fell to 10-4.

Right-hander Mark Smith (2-0) earned the win, striking out two while giving up five runs and five hits in six complete innings. Mike Bradley picked up the save with four strikeouts. Steve Brody (1-1) had the loss.

Tollison gave the Longhorns the early lead with a two-run double in the second. Clay King then drove in a run on a ground-out to short and Kyle Moody singled in Tollison to give Texas a 4-0 lead it never relinquished.

Tollison capped a four-run Texas third with a two-run home run to give Texas an 8-1 lead. Freshman first baseman Scott Pugh preceded Tollison with an RBI double after centerfielder Lance Jones, who started the inning with a single, scored on one of two ASU errors in the inning.

ASU's Todd Steverson had a solo homer in the third and Mike Scialo hit one in the fourth.
