College council plans protest of tuition hike

By DAN NOWICKI
State Press

The College of Liberal Arts and Sciences College Council will hold a rally Wednesday to protest student dissatisfaction with the recent Arizona Board of Regents decision to increase tuition at the three state universities.

"I want this to be the biggest protest ever held on campus," Walter Richter, president of the liberal arts college council, said of the 12:30 p.m. rally at the fountain on Cady Mall.

"By a show of force of student unity, we can hopefully influence future decisions regarding tuition increases and, more importantly, the way students are treated, period," Richter said. "It's important that the students' views are taken more seriously."

The regents voted Friday to increase tuition by $116 for resident students and $1,000 for non-residents per semester.

Protest organizers' list of demands includes requiring the regents to establish a consistent method of determining tuition, the preservation of the Arizona Financial Aid Trust Fund and the raising of faculty and staff salaries to nationally competitive levels.

Coor: Aid 'top priority'

Says higher fees must increase financial help

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

ASU President Lattie Coor said he is willing to make compromises while working with state legislators to ensure that a larger financial aid pool will be available by next semester for needy students faced with sharp tuition increases.

"I believe so strongly in a pool that it has top priority, even if it means altering the original plan," Coor said. "When fees start rising, we have an obligation to insist that financial aid grows."

The Council of Presidents, comprised of the three state university presidents, is asking that the Arizona Legislature honor a plan to set aside an additional $625,000 in aid for non-resident students who demonstrate financial need. This proposal is intended to offset the $1,000 tuition increase for out-of-state students that the regents approved Friday.

The board also approved a $116 increase

ASU 911 service draws complaints

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

Complaints from the College of Education alleging that serious flaws exist in the campus 911 emergency telephone service have prompted ASU officials to re-examine the University emergency system.

The concerns stem from an incident that occurred in late January when a female student, suffering from the flu, was vomiting and needed medical attention, ASU Police Chief Bill Bess said.

Bess

911 was called, and a police officer with medical training beyond CPR arrived at the scene, Bess said, adding that officials at the College of Education were upset because an ambulance was not dispatched.

"They were not satisfied with the procedure," Bess said.

A second incident occurred Monday when a professor in the Farmer Education Building was suffering from an unknown medical problem and an office secretary called the emergency number.

The secretary said she asked for an ambulance but was met with a barrage of questions from the dispatcher on duty.

"I told them we needed an ambulance and that we didn't want police or paramedics," Carol Hansen said. "They asked me if it was an emergency or if someone (from the office) could drive him to the hospital."

Hansen told the dispatcher that the patient, who had a history of medical problems, needed an ambulance immediately and that no one could drive him to the hospital.

"After that the line went dead," Hansen said, adding that the office did not know if help was on the way.

But according to Bess the scenario was different.

Bess said the dispatcher received a call at 11:49 a.m. asking for an ambulance, but the caller hung up before the dispatcher could tell her that one was on the way.

ASU police arrived at the scene at 11:54 a.m., Bess said. Paramedics arrived at 11:57 a.m., and an ambulance arrived at 11:58 a.m., he added.

Bess said he expects to meet with Dean Gladys Johnston and possibly a representative from the Tempe Fire Department this week "to look at the current system to see if it needs any changes."

Currently, when a dispatcher gets a caller who requests emergency medical service, an ambulance will be called, Bess said. If the dispatcher does not have enough information to determine the seriousness of the call, a University police officer will be sent to the scene to decide whether the situation requires additional medical attention, he added.

"We're inclined to operate on the safe side," Bess said, adding that the dispatcher will send an ambulance in all questionable situations.

A faculty senator from the College of Education recommended to ASU President Lattie Coor during a Monday Faculty Senate meeting that something be done immediately to solve the problem.

"The response is too slow," M. Scott Morton said. "You don't want to have to convince someone that an ambulance is needed."

Morton added that within the last couple of years, three faculty members from the college have died from emergencies that occurred while they were on campus.

"I'm not saying that anyone is responsible," Morton said. "But the current system needs to be investigated in depth."

Coor said the situation will be looked into immediately. "This is obviously of the utmost importance," he said.

ASU officer says 'whistle blowing' cost promotion

By MIKE BURGESS

An ASU police officer has filed a grievance with the University, charging that the police department failed to promote him because he reported seeing an on-duty officer engaged in sexual misconduct with a woman in a marked patrol car.

According to a copy of the confidential grievance obtained by the State Press, patrolman Charles A. Loftus claims that after he reported the July 1988 incident, a written reprimand was put in his personnel file because he broke the "code of silence" among police officers.

Since then, Loftus claims, he has been transferred to the West Campus, and he charges that the department has subjected him to a "malicious and deliberate attitude."

The grievance was filed in late January, and a hearing date has been set for March 2. The University Grievance Committee — made up of 15 students,

Wisconsin, DePauw to let ROTC remain

By College Press Service

Despite objections to Reserve Officer Training Corps policies banning homosexuals, officials at both DePauw University in Indiana and the University of Wisconsin decided to let ROTC units stay on their campus.

The DePauw faculty agreed Feb. 5 to keep the ROTC program, but only after passing a resolution that "condemns discrimination against homosexuals in scholarship and in commissioning."

Faculty members also called for the school to complain about the ROTC policies to regional commanders, and to warn them they will review the matter in two years "with a view to possibly terminating the ROTC program."

Three days earlier, Wisconsin's Board of Regents voted 13-3 against evicting ROTC but resolved to require campus officials to urge Congress to force the military to accept gays and lesbians.

Harvard and Yale universities, the University of Minnesota and Dartmouth College also have debated ROTC's anti-gay policies this school year, but Bill Cladwell, a spokesman for the Department of Defense, which coordinates ROTC programs, said the military has no plans to discuss changing them.

"We feel that homosexuality is incompatible with military science," Caldwell said.

East Berlin border troops dismantle a segment of the Berlin Wall close to the Brandenburg Gate Monday night.

Wall being dismantled

WEST BERLIN (AP) — A huge East German crane began dismantling a long section of the Berlin Wall next to the Brandenburg Gate on Monday night and thousands of people cheered.

More than a mile of the wall is to be taken down between the Reichstag building and the Checkpoint Charlie crossing point. Most of it is to be replaced by a fence.

"This is terrific," said Ralf Lukas, an East German soldier who operated the crane. "It had to happen. I was terribly lucky to be on the job."

A crowd of onlookers, estimated by one policeman at 7,000, cheered as the crane began removing pieces from the top of the wall and loading them into a truck to be hauled away.

East German officials said they will leave a 200-yard gap in the wall between the Brandenburg Gate and the Reichstag, but nearby fences on the eastern side would prevent unobstructed access to the opening.

Rainer Menzel, a spokesman for East German border troops, said the entire wall between the gate and Checkpoint Charlie would be down by the end of March.

Since Nov. 9, the East Germans have been opening numerous passages through the Berlin Wall, although the East Germans require a check of passports or identity cards at all of them.

The Reichstag is the expected seat of the Parliament of a united Germany, although officials say it will take years to renovate the ornate building.

Cheney unable to bridge differences over bases

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, shunned by Philippine President Corazon Aquino, told Filipino officials Monday that the United States will abandon its bases here if it finds that keeping them is too expensive or that Americans are unwelcome.

As violence was reported in several clashes between leftist protesters and police near U.S. installations, Cheney met for nearly three hours with Defense Minister Fidel Ramos in discussions that were described as "very cordial, very forthright."

Meeting reporters afterward with Ramos, Cheney said the United States "will stay only as long as the Philippine people wish it to stay — and only if the terms negotiated are acceptable to both parties."

At issue in Monday's discussions was a $96 million cut Congress made in the Bush administration's request of $360 million to compensate the Philippines for the six bases, which include two of the United States' largest overseas installations, Clark Air Base and Subic Bay Naval Base.

"We recognize there is a shortfall of $96 million over what we had anticipated," Cheney said. "I also pointed out that in East Asia, in this part of the world, the United States provided a little over $600 million, and about $500 million of that comes specifically to the Philippines."

Cheney

The secretary left Clark Air Base 50 miles north of Manila on Tuesday for the next stop on his tour of U.S. military installations in the Far East, Okinawa.

Cheney has said his discussions with Filipino officials did not amount to the beginning of negotiations to extend the base agreement, which expires next year.

An influential Filipino minority is pressuring Aquino not to renew the agreement. In addition, leading Filipino

Vaclav Havel arriving for meeting with Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vaclav Havel, the dissident playwright who went from prison to the presidency of Czechoslovakia inside of eight months, was to meet with President Bush on Tuesday, the first of Eastern Europe's new democratic leaders to visit the White House.

Havel was arriving here Monday evening after stops in Iceland and Canada on a Western trip that comes conspicuously a week before his first trip to Moscow.

The Czech Parliament elected Havel president Dec. 29, a few weeks after a peaceful revolution led to the ouster of Communist Party Chief Milos Jakes and his hard-line government.

Construction begins on prayer center

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Ground was broken Monday for a prayer center that officials hope will end the long-festering dispute over a Roman Catholic convent at the Auschwitz death camp.

The convent housing about a dozen Carmelite nuns on the edge of the Nazi death camp has angered Jews and others worldwide who see it as an intrusion of Christian symbols at a site where most of the victims were Jews.

The Roman Catholic church agreed at negotiations in 1987 in Switzerland to relocate the nuns to an interfaith prayer and education center farther from the camp, but a February 1989 deadline for moving the nuns was missed.

Carcinogens in food cause risk of cancer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Natural carcinogens in meat, grain and other foods are a far greater danger than pesticides and additives, accounting for more than 98 percent of the cancer risk in the diet, a government scientist said Monday.

Even a minor reduction in these naturally occurring hazards, he said, would surpass the benefits of eliminating all traces of dangerous manmade chemicals.

The culprits include not only such recognized health hazards as fats and beer but such seemingly innocent products as bread, yogurt, mushrooms and many spices, including cinnamon and nutmeg.

Leadership plans to curb protests

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Interim President Ion Iliescu said Monday the army and police should have more power to curb protests because violent anti-government demonstrations could lead to anarchy and a new dictatorship.

More than 300 people staged a rally Monday evening, but this one was well away from government headquarters — Sunday's target — after 12 armored personnel carriers and hundreds of soldiers blocked access.

One soldier, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said that unlike Sunday, when the army was "caught unprepared by the angry demonstrators," soldiers now had "very specific orders to let no one near the building."

About 5,000 miners rallied on Monday in support of the government, angrily demanding an end to protests that culminated Sunday when about 500 people ransacked government headquarters, smashing windows and doors with rocks and iron carpet rods.

Some miners attacked bystanders with sticks. At least four onlookers were injured, including a gray-haired man rescued from the miners by soldiers.

Iliescu said the 21-member Executive Bureau of the ruling Provisional Council of National Unity decided to propose a law "increasing the power of those organizations that must maintain law and order and defend institutions and citizens

Post Mortem

What went wrong in the battle against the tuition hike?

The overriding consideration is that we have been told we need to produce $25 million (in additional tuition revenues). We would be irresponsible not to do so.

— Regent Esther Capin

Well, we certainly wouldn't want the Arizona Board of Regents to be irresponsible, now would we?

In the cold, sober light of dawn, following the terrible beating students took at the Arizona Board of Regents' tuition meeting in Tucson — where in-state students got stuck with a $116 fees hike and out-of-state students were blasted with an almost incomprehensible $1,000 increase — responsibility seems to be the word of the hour.

Indeed, the tuition hike was such an epic disaster for the student body that it is incumbent upon us to perform a thorough post mortem on the whole affair — in order to determine exactly who or what is to blame for this mess: and to try and figure out how we can keep it from happening again.

Usually when students are the victims of a financial rape like this, the guilty party is obscured within the regents' bureaucracy, or in the state legislature, or in the university administration. But not this time.

To find who is culpable for the tuition mess, we need look no further than to our own elected student representatives in Associated Students — to find the ones most responsible for the high-dollar tuition hikes we now face.

We all knew this would be a tough year for students. Arizona is experiencing a fiscal crisis, and the state universities are expected to tighten their belts like every other part of state government. It follows from this that in order to maintain the current level of services at the universities, tuition must rise to help offset cutbacks in the state budget. Tuition was destined to increase this year because of the simple reality of our state's economic woes.

To combat the inevitable increase, the Arizona Students Association (ASA) — a group made up of the student body presidents and other representatives from the three state universities — developed a detailed report to present to the regents, arguing for a reasonable hike, but against the exorbitant increases proposed by the presidents of the universities.

The report is logical, intelligent and persuasive.

But it was absolutely useless in convincing the regents to maintain tuition rates at a decent level.

Why?

In November 1988, students were faced with a similar tuition threat. At the time, student government officials organized massive protests — including a 700 student-strong ASU rally in the College of Law's Great Hall, where students got a chance to tell members of the board of regents, who were holding a meeting in the building, that the tuition hike they were considering was simply too high to bear.

The rally was extraordinary. Hundreds of students filled the hall, chanting and stomping their feet for the benefit of the TV cameras present. The regents seemed genuinely shaken by the show of force, and the testimony of the angry, frustrated students. It was a passionate event, and the board members came out looking like the Grinches Who Stole a College Education away from the poor students.

The regents were embarrassed, and as a result, the board and students struck a compromise. Tuition was raised — by a lower, more manageable sum.

But this year there was no rally. Student leaders, including Associated Students of ASU President Paul Larson, didn't want one.

Larson and the other ASA representatives cut a deal with the regents last year. The regents proposed that if ASA would agree not to stage an embarrassing, confrontational rally like in 1988, then the board would include ASA in discussions relating to the "tuition-setting process."

In other words, if the boys and girls in ASA agreed to act like little ladies and gentlemen, then the older folks would allow them to speak at the dinner table.

So during the whole "process," the students in ASA were quiet, calm and dignified. Be professional, they thought. Respect the regents, and they will respect us. We will be included in the final decision.

So they waited.

Even our Barbie-doll student regent, Peggy Steffens, waited. In accordance with the agreement, she sat virtually mute at all the regents' meetings this year, with a glazed-over expression on her face and vacant eyes staring into space or at the documents she would occasionally ruffle in front of her . . . waiting to be involved in the "process."

Paul Larson and the rest of the ASASU crowd waited too, preparing their fair-minded reports, confident that the regents would read them and then do the right thing.

They waited. And they waited.

And in the end, the whole group, and all of their efforts, were rendered completely irrelevant.

Not one ASA proposal made it into the final tuition plan. Not one idea offered by our student leaders that would have eased the financial burden on in-state or out-of-state students was considered by the board. Without a tangible show of force by students, all the reports in the world weren't worth a damn.

Not until Friday's final tuition meeting in Tucson did student leaders finally wake up to the realization that the "process" they were supposed to be involved in was nothing more than a bad movie — with a predetermined script and with students cast in a minor supporting role as the poor, dumb children.

Surprise! The regents had never intended to include students in the "process."

As the final vote was about to be tallied Friday, Larson told the board that he thought the whole tuition "process" had been nothing but a "quick and dirty way to get to the bottom line."

And he was right. But he had waited too long.

The tuition setting process is a political game, and those who come out on top in politics are those who have the muscle and the will to use it. The only kind of muscle students had was their collective voices and ability to rally — a bargaining chip which was traded away by mutual agreement between ASA and the regents. Traded away for something we are all entitled to by law — access to public meetings and the right to speak to public officials.

The regents took us for a ride. And our student leaders went along willingly.

The ASA representatives worked hard, and they meant well. They genuinely believed that by treating the regents in a businesslike manner, real progress could be made in the student interest.

Yet one marvels at their naivete. Students haven't been able to make any progress with the regents on tuition issues during the last 10 years by being quiet. Not once.

The only time we have ever been successful is when we argued rationally: And rallied and protested — loudly, with conviction.

The lesson is clear. Next year, when tuition time rolls around, ASA should again prepare all the logical arguments and amass all the data and the facts and figures that tell why a huge tuition increase will dash the educational hopes of hundreds of state university students. Let's present those reports to the regents in a calm, businesslike way.

And then let's gather up all the copies of the reports and burn them in a big bonfire in the middle of campus.

Just for emphasis.

ASU: More than just sports, fun

Editor:
Dear Mr. Sinnett, in your letter of Feb. 16 you wrote, "ASU does not provide us with the opportunity to become doctors or lawyers or to obtain other highly sophisticated degrees."

I hate to break it to you pal, but ASU does have a college of law — and a highly respected one at that!

Imagine that — a University that not only supports a "big sports program" and a "huge Greek system," but a law school as well!

Probably hard for you to believe. Perhaps you should have followed your own advice and done "a little background checking" before you wrote your letter.

If you can break away from the pool for a few minutes, why don't you stop by the law school sometime. You can't miss it — its the round building with all the "ivy climbing up the walls."

South Africa Peaceful resolution of racial troubles possible

Jeff Greenfield
Universal Press Syndicate

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Five years ago, when I left South Africa after my visit, I was as pessimistic as can be imagined about this country's future.

The massacre at Langa had triggered a wave of violence that would lead to a national state of emergency; black-on-black violence, which has thus far taken 3,000 lives just in the province of Natal, was on the rise, with the government sitting back and relishing the prospect of violent black disunity.

Within the African National Congress, talk was heard about moving against so-called "soft target" — shopping centers, movie theaters, even schools — rather than restricting operations to military installations.

And the National Party government of President P. W. Botha appeared unwilling to do more than abolish "petty" apartheid rules, such as bans on interracial marriage and the use of public amenities such as beaches.

Now, the ground has shifted; now, the National Party has made a decisive break with the foundations of apartheid; now, issues such as voting rights for blacks and a commitment to end white domination are the official policy of the ruling party.

And now Nelson Mandela and the leadership of the African National Congress and other once-forbidden groups are invited to participate as equals in charting the country's future.

This is cause for hope; it is not, however, cause for excessive optimism. What remains to be resolved is, in some ways, even more daunting than what has already been accomplished.

'The political dilemma is hard enough. President F.W. de Klerk has made it clear that a simple "one man, one vote" electoral system will not work for South Africa.'

The political dilemma is hard enough. President F. W. de Klerk has made it clear that a simple "one man, one vote" electoral system will not work for South Africa; in his view, some constitutional protection for the white minority is absolutely essential.

He points to the "undemocratic" protection for small states embedded in the U. S. Constitution; the Senate exists to give small states far more power than their numbers would merit.

But can race be the basis for disproportionate power in a nation trying to abandon its supremacist past? Will separate voting rolls or separate legislative houses form a basis for a grand compromise?

Hard as that question is, the nature of the beliefs of the black leaders could pose even harder problems. Nelson Mandela, Walter Sisulu and the other old lions of the ANC are bound to an ideology that seems remarkably out of place in a world where communism is abandoning its deepest beliefs even within the Kremlin.

Western editorialists have already expressed uneasiness with Mandela's post-release embrace of the South African Communist Party. And his strong support for the nationalization of enterprises such as banks and mines has raised this conundrum: Since economic aid from abroad is likely to be flowing into Eastern Europe, and since Western nations lack either the appetite or the wallet to pour in aid, South Africa's economic future — particularly for blacks — lies in growth.

Spend a half-day in township such as Alexandra, where there is no real work, and you cannot help but wish for basic investment on a massive scale. The growth of black trade unions, such as the Mine Workers and the Congress of South African Trade Unions, suggests that in a politically free South Africa, the wretched exploitation of black workers could be relegated to history. But even in a system where job discrimination and wage slavery are abolished, there will be no progress without investment; and there will be no investment without a sense that the new government, whatever its complexion, will not be looking to nationalize the first risk-takers who come into the country.

South Africa is a country of breathtaking riches. Were it not for its suppression of black enterprise, intelligence and political rights, it would long ago have taken its place as one of the economic giants of the world.

It has the chance, for the first time in its history, to fulfill that destiny now. For the first time, there is a chance for something other than oppression or bloodshed. If it cannot find its way now, at this time of promise, then God help South Africa.

Discovering the virtues of trash journalism

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

When I returned from vacation, a co-worker asked me what I thought about a major national news story that had occurred while I was away.

I told him I hadn't read it. Looking surprised, he said: "It was in all the papers. Front page."

Then he mentioned a big international development. I told him I had missed that one too.

"Don't you read papers while you're on vacation?"

As a matter of fact, I don't. When I'm working, I read four or five papers a day, plus the various national and international news wires. By the time I go home, I have news squirting out of my ears.

So, when I take time off, I try to ignore the great issues of the day. I figure that if something really big happens — the start of World War III or the arrival of Martians — I'll hear people screaming in the streets and will become informed.

Because most news people are news junkies, my co-worker seemed amazed.

"You actually don't read any newspapers?"

So, I confessed to a dark, dirty little secret. Yes, when I'm on vacation, I do read one newspaper. And I read that paper only when I'm away from Chicago.

This requires a brief explanation. It begins with the fact that normally I don't do the food shopping. So, I don't get into supermarkets.

But while I'm on vacation, I share shopping chores. And as I'm standing in the checkout line, my eyes are drawn to a supermarket publication called Weekly World News.

Because I work for a serious, responsible newspaper, I shouldn't admit this. But I love the Weekly World News.

You may be a regular reader of this publication — especially if you lack several front teeth, have three junked cars in your front yard and your favorite sport is TV wrestling.

If the New York Times can be considered the Mozart of journalism, then the Weekly World News might be described as a journalistic Gergely.

So, I always grab a copy and slip it among the groceries and mumble to the checkout lady: "Uh, it amuses my wife."

Then I devour every amazing story.

The last issue I read, which I brought back with me, contained nothing about the upheavals in Europe, Bush's budget, the reunification of Germany or other weighty matters.

But it had a screaming headline (all of its headlines scream or, at the very least, shriek) that said: "Bulldog Rips Mercedes to Shreds!"

It seems an Australian's car stalled on a country road. Suddenly a big bulldog came out of a hedge and began chomping his car. "I feared for my life," the man said. The dog's owner said: "I don't know what got into Barney, he's normally a good boy. I guess he just liked the way the car smelled."

A few pages over was the headline: "Rock Music Cures Deaf Girl!"

There was no scientific explanation for this miracle. Maybe the kid had a waxy buildup and the bass guitar burst through.

In most stories, the headlines tell it all. For example:

"Fatal Reunion! Divorced Couple Die When Their Cars Collide On The Way To Patch Things Up!"

"Old Lady Locked 55 Hours In Coffin-Sized Closet!"

"World's Biggest Cat — 51 Pounds And Growing!"

"Chain-Smoker Kicks 30-Year Habit . . . Then Chokes To Death On Wad Of Nicotine Gum!"

"Naked Thief Turns Into Human Icicle . . . After He Gets Stuck In Restaurant's Vent And Freezes!"

"Angry Man Guns Down His Bean-Eating Buddy. He Just Kept Passing Gas, Says Gunman!"

But in that issue, my choice for top headline was: "Love-Starved Hippo Tries To Mate With Scuba Diver"

(For those who demand the sordid details, it happened in a river in South Africa where some blokes went swimming. The diver, who suffered a few cracked ribs and considerable indignity, said: "He thought I was his mate." An animal expert said the young man was lucky. "Hippos are fierce lovers who don't stop until completely satisfied, and they are used to getting their way."

Keep that in mind if you plan to swim among hippos.

A close second to the hippos headline was the one about an incident in Swaziland, which also is self-explanatory:

"Cannibal Steals Accident Victims' Corpses And Eats Them!"

And this country got hysterical when California motorists were shooting at each other?

Finally, there was the story about a West German man who was slicing some salami for a snack before his favorite TV show came on. The knife slipped, and cut his hand.

Apparently he was a TV addict. The headline tells it all:

"Man Bleeds To Death While Watching TV! He Wanted To finish His Program Before Going To Get Help!"

But the vacation is over, so, I'm back to significance.

Will Jesse run? Will Gorbachev survive? What about Bush's budget?

And will we solve the problems of the inner city?

I think maybe I'll start doing the food shopping.

Protest

College of Liberal Arts and Sciences Sen. Christopher Stiles, who will be speaking at the rally, said the college council "would like to see (the demands) considered by the Legislature."

"The (tuition) prices are going up, but the quality isn't," Stiles said.

Council Parliamentarian Bob Johnson said the goal of the rally is "to rattle the Legislature."

"We're going to embarrass the Legislature, and we're going to embarrass the Board of Regents," Johnson said. "We're just trying to show our numbers."

"We're shooting for 3,000 students," he added.

Tami Willingham, ASASU campus affairs vice president, said she would have liked to have seen a rally organized sooner.

"Some of my friends are out-of-state students who will not be returning to ASU next semester because they're being denied the education they seek from ASU because the dollar amount doesn't equate to the quality of education they deserve," Willingham said. "We want to know that we're getting our money's worth."

Willingham said she was optimistic about the rally.

"Nothing's set in stone until the decision is final," Willingham said. "I've never heard of the Legislature not passing the board's proposal, but you never know."

Former ASASU President Chris Cumiskey, who is currently running for election to the Arizona House of Representatives in District 25, is also scheduled to speak at the rally.

Members of ASU's Young Democrats and United Students of Arizona for Choice are expected to be on hand to provide voter registration for students.

Financial Aid

in yearly resident fees.

Coor said he did not favor exempting, or "grandfathering," currently enrolled non-resident students from the large hike because entering students would not be protected from the effects of the tuition increase.

"We're going to end up with rich white kids here," Coor said. "We're not going to have diversity."

Rep. Bev Hermon, R-Tempe, did not predict a favorable outcome for the supplemental financial aid package.

"The chances of them (the universities) getting that money is slim to none," Hermon said, adding that the Legislature has already set aside $1 million for student financial aid.

Regent Douglas Wall, one of three regents who voted against the steep tuition increase, said his vote would have been different if the grandfathering clause had been part of the package.

Wall said grandfathering is a sure way for students to receive aid.

"I'm not sure that student aid would reach the people that need the help," he said. "Grandfathering would have gone into effect immediately without red tape."

Regent Andrew Hurwitz also voted against the package because it did not include grandfathering.

Hurwitz said his only hesitation about the approved financial aid plan was that the Legislature has to OK the extra money for the Council of President's financial supplement before students can receive aid.

Grievance

faculty and staff members — provides a hearing board for grievances that cannot be resolved at the department level.

Loftus, 29, a four-year member of the force, charges that Patrol Lt. Craig Emanuel used the reprimand that he issued to keep Loftus from being promoted to the rank of corporal. There were three corporal positions open in April 1989, and Loftus finished second in the department in testing for the position, according to the grievance.

"I really wouldn't have a comment," Emanuel said of the charge. "It's an employment matter and should be kept in that setting."

ASU Police Chief Bill Bess, who joined the department after the incident, also declined comment on the grievance but added, "I'll be anxious to see what the results are."

In the grievance, Loftus states: "The community expects the highest degree of integrity from the police officers that protect them."

"But I feel that the police officers should be able to expect the same degree of honesty from their supervision without fear of retaliation."

Loftus asks in his grievance that the University promote him to corporal and remove the reprimand from his personnel file.

In addition, he wants the University to reprimand the department on its promotional practices and on retaliation on "whistle blowers." The grievance also seeks the establishment of a permanent promotional process.

Loftus, who is an ASU senior political science major, joined the University department after serving five years with the Maricopa County sheriff's office, where he worked as a deputy and a jail detention officer. He also worked one year as an officer with the Youngtown Police Department.

He has several commendations for exceptional service in his personnel file.

Cheney

Congressmen have urged her to postpone those discussions until this year's cuts are restored.

There are some 18,000 U.S. military personnel in the Philippines, plus 20,000 dependents.

For his part, Ramos acknowledged that the Bush administration needs congressional approval for aid commitments but said he had told Cheney that "time is of the essence" in meeting current U.S. obligations. The secretary said Ramos had been "very direct and very forthright" in presenting his government's position.

Aquino was so upset over the congressional cut that she announced before Cheney began his two-week tour of Asian nations hosting U.S. bases that she would not see him, leaving that task to her defense minister.

The secretary pledged his "best efforts" to restoring the $96 million cut but U.S. diplomats have said that an austerity-minded Congress is unlikely to change its mind.

Despite the current differences, Cheney said that ties between the two nations are strong.

"I think that is a misreading of events to suggest that somehow, the United States is trying to send signals other than the one I have already given publicly, which is our very strong commitment to our alliance with the Philippines," the secretary said.

When asked whether he could say that his government wanted the base to remain, Ramos declined to answer the question, saying the issue was under discussion in the Philippine Congress.

After the talks with Ramos, Cheney flew to the Subic Bay base, 50 miles west of Manila, to inspect a helicopter carrier and to chat with a group of Marines and sailors.

While there were no reports of violence at Subic Bay, about 300 militants hurled rocks at police trying to stop them from dismantling barbed wire barricades at the entrance to Clark. Demonstrators said about 30 students had been injured. The protesters regrouped later and staged an "indignation rally," accusing Philippine police of being "puppets of U.S. imperialism."

In Manila, about 200 members of the militant League of Filipino Students, chanting "Yankees go home," marched to the U.S. Embassy and hurled bottles and rotten tomatoes at police, who charged with clubs and tear gas.

One student was arrested and at least four policemen were injured in the protest, which occurred near Cheney's heavily guarded hotel.

against violent acts."

He warned that violence unleashed by political passions could throw the country into the kind of anarchy that has torn Lebanon asunder.

"If the army and police don't have the legal ability to maintain order, people will feel it necessary to defend themselves — we could become like Lebanon, and anarchy could lead us to total chaos," he said in an address read on state television.

"We appeal for civic responsibility. Anarchy can only lead to a new dictatorship."

Iliescu, who did not outline the proposed powers sought for the army and police, spoke amid reports of pro-leadership demonstrations nationwide.

Gen. Dumitru Penciu, the nation's police commissioner, was quoted by state radio as saying pro-government rallies were held in Cluj, Brasov, Turda, Bistrita, Jiului Valley and in Bucharest.

The broadcast gave no details.

But state TV showed Iliescu meeting with miners and saying the anti-government demonstrators were "hooligans" hired by "foreign agents" — rhetoric strikingly similar to that used by toppled Communist dictator Nicolae Ceausescu to describe his opposition.

Hundreds of protesters stormed government headquarters in Victory Square on Sunday in the most violent protest since Ceausescu's ouster and execution in December.

They occupied the building for about three hours, briefly holding Vice Prime Minister Gelu Voican Voiculescu before hundreds of troops arrived to establish order.

Student-produced cable shows pay in experience

By CAROLYN HUFFMAN
State Press

ASU has thrown its hat in the ring of student-produced cable television shows.

"Southwinds," a weekly news-in-review program, is staffed and produced by broadcasting students and airs on Tempe Cable Channel 34 twice a week.

The show is part of the weekly lineup of National College Television Network programming in Tempe. NCTN offers alternative format shows, all produced by college students around the country.

"Southwinds" is a result of Don Godfrey's Television Practicum class. His students oversee the daily NCTN broadcast as well.

"This semester has gone extremely well," Godfrey said. "This is the best management team I've seen in 10 years of doing this (at universities)."

"Southwinds" debuted in September with students as news anchors, reporters, technicians and camera operators. It is broadcast through Dimension Cable, and appears in Tempe at 4:30 p.m. Friday and 2:30 p.m. Monday. The rest of the Valley can see it at 4:30 p.m. Monday and 5 p.m. Wednesday, also on channel 34.

"Friday is basically live," said Vicki Fiorelli, promotions director for the show. "We should get done taping at about 4 and it airs at 4:30."

Six reporters gather the news for the show, drawing from sources like local newspapers or wire services. The emphasis is on local rather than international news.

"The idea is that you're getting something out of ASU whether you go to school here or not," Godfrey said.

"Southwinds" also covers sports, focusing on those that receive little ordinary news coverage. Sports anchor Kirby Mauss reports on Tempe high school athletics as well as the less-publicized ASU teams.

"This is more of a show for ASU students and the Tempe community, so we want our stories to focus on Tempe and students," Fiorelli said.

Students apply for staff positions and are hired by Godfrey. Although the jobs are non-paying, staff members think it pays off in experience.

"This applies everything I learned in the classroom," said Michelle Neilson, station manager. "I'm getting hands-on experience, and that's what's going to get me a job."

"You can't buy the experience," added Mauss, a senior broadcasting major. "You learn the smallest, dumbest things that will put you ahead in the job market."

Mauss said he has learned the most about being in front of the camera. "You wonder if you're going to impress," he said, "and when (the cameras) start rolling, your heart starts pumping."

The news anchors of "Southwinds" Kirby Mauss, Deborah Cary and Vai Sihakema prepare for the taping of the show on KAET Channel 8.

News anchor Vai Sihakema, a Phoenix Cardinals kick returner in the fall, is spending his spring getting experience to be a sports broadcaster.

"I've learned how tough and difficult it really is to do this," he said.

ASU may produce other types of student shows in the future. The NCTN lineup includes college-produced soap operas, game shows, music videos and other humorous programs.

"There's no limit to what we can do if we get organized," Godfrey said.

Field school offers study of native healing practices

By KEVIN SHEH
State Press

This summer, ASU students will be offered a rare opportunity to learn Spanish and native healing practices while earning credits through a program offered by the University's anthropology department.

The Ethnographic Field School, to be held this summer in Ensenada, Baja California, Mexico, will offer students the chance for cultural orientation.

"It's a great experience," said Jill Johnson, who attended the pilot program last year. "It's surprising how much Spanish you can pick up in five weeks."

Micheal Winkelman, director of the program, said students will emerge from the experience with more than just credits.

"Students will gain an appreciation for other cultures and (will learn) how to operate within them," he said.

Gustavo Vasquez, a former ASU assistant who will be assisting Winkelman in Mexico, agreed, adding that the program offers students more than technical knowledge.

"People have a lot to learn from each other," Vasquez said, adding that programs like this could serve to bring different cultures closer together.

Winkelman said that although an interest in Spanish and a background in anthropology is necessary, fluency in the language is not crucial.

He said aside from earning a possible eight Spanish credits if both sessions are attended, there are other advantages to attending the field study program.

"The students will be living with a family in Ensenada," Winkelman said, adding that this would "immerse" the students in the language.

"This ensures no interference from (the student's) native language," Winkelman said.

But the main focus of the field school will be ethnomedicine, which is the use of herbs, spiritual healing and other traditional healing practices in treatment. Winkelman said the practices deal with the augmentation rather than the suppression of symptoms.

"From my perspective, (ethnomedicine) practices are very effective," Winkelman said, citing that 20 of 22 plants used in the traditional healing practices in Baja California were found in relevant pharmaceuticals.

Vasquez said health has taken a different dynamic in Mexico due to the the country's economic structure.

"(Ethnographic medicine) is very widespread in Mexico," Vasquez said, adding that although America is more doctor-oriented, the traditional methods are necessary in Mexico due to the country's economy.

Students will be able to develop their own research topics. Johnson said her research topic last year dealt with Mexican's perception of Americans.

"They don't think too highly of us," Johnson said, adding that the negative perception likely results from the Mexican's frequent contact with American tourists. "They think Americans are very materialistic."

Winkelman said that although the cultural integration is important, there are other considerations.

"It's fun to learn about other cultures," he said. "The development of cross cultural skills is really what this is all about."

Classes will be offered in two sessions this year: June 18th to July 13th and July 16th to Aug. 10, with program costs, including lodging and tuition, ranging from $1,000 for one session to $1,900 for both sessions. Students interested in the program can contact Winkelman at 965-6213.

2 ASU moot court teams advance to national competition

For two ASU teams arguing in a regional appellate court competition, the question was hardly moot.

The ASU moot court teams, sponsored by the University's National Black Law Students Association, advanced to nationals in the Frederic Douglas Moot Court Competition, after beating teams from 14 other schools in the region. Only two teams from each region advance.

Patricia Kirtley, in her second year at ASU's law school, said the team's success was astonishing since this is the first year the University's NBLSA sponsored any moot court teams.

"I was very surprised," Kirtley said. "We thought we were good, but we didn't expect this."

Kirtley and her teammate, Vernon Harris, not only finished first in the event, but won the prize for best petitioner's brief in the competition as well. ASU's Kevin Butler and Gale Burkes took second overall, with Burkes winning the best orator honors.

ASU law Professor John Morris, the teams' faculty sponsor, said the competition is an exact facsimile of what lawyers can expect when facing an actual appellate or supreme court.

He said that after the teams file briefs, the judges of the competition review them and develop questions based on the briefs.

"All argument is designed to elicit information from the lawyers concerning the things in the brief," he said, adding that to succeed, the students must be able to focus the judge's attention on the points the students feel is pertinent.

Kirtley said the issue being addressed was a complex equal protection/fair housing question.

"In our case, blacks began moving into an all-white neighborhood," Kirtley said. She added that the case centered on whether a minority cap could be established when concerns with "white flight" surfaced.

Kirtley said remaining composed while being drilled by the judges was the biggest challenge.

"You are only successful if you can make your points while satisfactorily answering (the judge's) questions," Kirtley said. "You have got to know the law."

Morris said the involvement from faculty was minimal. "We just encouraged them and had 'dry runs' to help them prepare," he said.

Kirtley said there were other amenities besides the competition.

"(Successes in these competitions) look wonderful on a resume," she said. "Law students die for this."

The national competition will be held March 7 to 11 in Detroit, during the NBLSA's national convention.

BRANFORD, Conn. (AP) — Not even the prospect of a place to frolic in the nude is luring buyers to a proposed condominium project in Connecticut's slumping real-estate market.

PST Corp. of Westport tried to draw customers to its 42-unit Oak Hill Condominium by offering a "clothing optional" recreation area consisting of a clubhouse, sauna, pool and hot tub.

"You have to be creative in a slow market, but this idea is dead," said Douglas Nelkin, a marketing consultant on the project.

The complex would have been the first of its kind in New England, although they are popular in California and some Southern states, Nelkin said.

PST has an option on the land and was trying to drum up interest in condos selling for $179,000 to $199,000.

Nelkin said about 1,000 brochures were sent to "naturalist" associations. "Most people said it was a good idea, but they weren't in the market for a new home," he said.

ASU hopes to snap 4-game losing streak

T.J. Soko/State Press

By SETH SULKA
State Press

During the past two weeks, the ASU baseball team has found out how tough life can be on the road.

After losing two out of three to then top-ranked Texas and dropping two in a row to sixth-ranked USC, the Sun Devils have fallen to 10-6 overall, 0-2 Six-Pac, and dropped from No. 8 to No. 11 in the Collegiate Baseball/ESPN rankings.

ASU hopes to turn around its recent misfortunes in the familiar surroundings of Packard Stadium as it opens a seven-game homestand which begins today with Lubbock Christian at 2:30 p.m.

The Sun Devils are coming off a 6-0 defeat on Sunday and a 5-3 loss Monday to the Trojans. The series was scheduled for Friday through Sunday, but rain pushed the opener back two days. The two teams will conclude the series on April 23, following ASU's visit to UCLA.

USC beat the Sun Devils in the opener behind a six-hit pitching performance from senior Randy Powers (2-0). Junior Todd Douma (4-1), who came into the game with a 1.88 ERA, gave up seven hits and five runs in 2 1/3 in taking the loss.

One bright spot for ASU in the series was the offensive performance by junior Fernando Vina, who extended his current hitting streak to 12 games with four hits in eight at bats, including two doubles.

But ASU will try to get back on the winning track with its two-game series against the Chaparrals.

Lubbock Christian (2-6), coming off a series with Grand Canyon University in which it lost three of the four games, will be looking to improve its 1-9 series record against the Sun Devils.

Head Coach Jimmy Shankel said that his Chaparrals will have to play well against ASU if they expect to get a victory.

"We know that they're going to be double tough this year," Shankel said. "We are going to have to do a lot of things right to get out of here with a win."

The Chaparrals will call on junior J. J. Munoz to start today's game with junior Dan Kelly to start on Wednesday. The Sun Devils' starters have yet to be determined.

Munoz and Kelly both turned in shaky performances against the Antelopes but Shankel said that he expects them to improve during the season.

"They're going to get better," he said, "and if they're on their games, then we have a chance to win."

After posting a 52-25 record in 1989, the Chaparrals lost six key seniors and added 11 new players this season. But with half of the players new to the team, Shankel said that it will take time to smooth out their rough start.

"The new guys are accepting their roles a little better, and we have some guys getting some clutch hits," Shankel said. "It's going to take us a little while to gel but I think that we're getting closer."

ASU tennis player Joel Finnigan is the team's No. 2 seed.

Sun Devils to regroup after shutout by Bruins

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

If there was anything ASU mens tennis Head Coach Lou Belken said his players learned from losing 6-0 to UCLA last Friday, it was how to regroup.

The match played by the Sun Devils was such a disaster that Belken said the team is going to spend the next two weeks correcting its errors, improving its technique and doing some overall soul searching.

"Anytime you lose individually and as a team, those are the times you learn the most about yourself," Belken said. "We have had time to reflect on that and we are going to use these two weeks to correct the areas that need to be corrected."

"We really have to work on individualizing things and in doing that we should come together as a team."

Among the areas of weakness that Belken said he wants to spend time correcting are individual playing styles and game preparation.

Even though Belken said the third-ranked Bruins were a talented team, he feels the Sun Devils are a much better team than the 6-0 score showed.

"We didn't play up to our capabilities," he said. "They are a good team, but I think we are competitive with them."

Belken said one of the reasons the Bruins have been so successful in the past is because of their depth. Belken said they usually have eight or nine high-quality players vying for playing time.

The loss against UCLA was the first match in which the Sun Devils were shut out as a team. Belken said the 6-0 loss was a lot for his players to swallow.

"I think we felt we were going to be successful," he said. "There was some frustration and disappointment at the level we played at and at the results — losing's gotta hurt."

Belken said he will be anxious to meet UCLA again in March in Tempe, so the Sun Devils can prove they are on the same ranks of talent as the Bruins.

On Saturday, ASU was scheduled to compete against USC, but the match was rained out. Belken said he would have liked to play the match, to see if his players' desire to win would have been intensified due to the previous day's results.

He said a similar thing happened last month when the Sun Devils suffered a loss against UC-Irvine, then went on to defeat Fresno State the next day.

"(Playing against USC) would have been a real test of character for us," Belken said.

This week marks the first week of ASU's two-week layoff from competition. Belken said the toughest season competition will begin in March.

"We are going to have some big matches and see some big names," he said. "You won't see better competition than what you will see here."

Missouri regains top spot over Kansas

By The Associated Press

Missouri is No. 1, again at the expense of Kansas. The Tigers returned to the top spot in The Associated Press college basketball poll on Monday following a week in which they again beat the Jayhawks and knocked them out of the No. 1 ranking.

Missouri (24-2), second last week, beat Kansas and Oklahoma in Big Eight Conference games last week and garnered 61½ first-place votes and 1,596½ points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters.

The Jayhawks (25-2), two-time losers to Missouri, ended their second two-week run as No. 1 with half a first-place vote and 1,510½ points. Missouri and Kansas both have games at Oklahoma this week. The Sooners, ranked 10th this week, have a 43-game homecourt winning streak.

Duke (22-4) beat Stetson, East Carolina and Wake Forest last week and moved from sixth to third with 1,384 points, just one more point than UNLV (22-4), which also jumped three spots from a week ago. The Runnin' Rebels beat two ranked teams in their three victories last week — New Mexico State and UofA.

Georgetown (20-3), received one first-place and fell two places to fifth after a loss to Providence. La Salle (22-1) received the other first-place vote and was 14th.

Connecticut (22-4) followed the Hoyas in sixth with 1,127 points, while Michigan (19-5) was seventh with 1,088 points.

Georgia Tech (19-4) was eighth with 1,042 points, 19 more than Purdue (18-4) and 44 more than Oklahoma (19-4), which rounded out the Top Ten.

The Top Ten comes from just five conferences. The Big Eight has the top two teams and Oklahoma, while the Atlantic Coast Conference (Duke and Georgia Tech), Big East (Georgetown and Connecticut) and Big Ten (Michigan and Purdue) have two each. UNLV plays in the Big West.

Syracuse, fourth last week, tumbled to 11th after losses to Villanova and Notre Dame.

Clemson (20-5) makes its first appearance in the rankings since the final poll of the 1986-87 season. The Tigers increased their winning streak to five last week with victories over North Carolina State and Furman.

Indiana (16-6) returned to the rankings after a one-week absence with a 118-71 rout of Iowa.

UCLA (16-7), 23rd last week, dropped from the rankings after home losses to California and Stanford, the first victories for those schools at Pauley Pavilion. St. John's (20-7), 24th last week, also dropped out after losing to Providence after an overtime victory at Seton Hall.

VW ON CAMPUS

Mary Frasco
University of Detroit

"It only takes 30 seconds to love this car."

Mary Frasco, a grad student in Education at the University of Detroit, talks about falling in love with her Volkswagen.

"Thirty seconds. That's how long it takes to put the top down on my Cabriolet. And that's how long it took me to fall in love.

"There's nothing quite like the feeling you get driving a convertible. And there's no convertible quite like my Cabriolet.

"Sunglasses on, wind in my hair—I love driving this car. And it's a good thing. Because when I go out with my friends there's never any question of whose car we'll take.

"Everybody just hops in my Cabriolet.

"I can't imagine driving anything else."

The Volkswagen Cabriolet. It's the distinctive European convertible with the Volkswagen price.

 It's time to think about Volkswagen again.

If you drive a Volkswagen, you might be selected to appear in an ad like the one above. Send your story and a photo to: Volkswagen Testimonials • 187 S. Woodward, Suite 200 • Birmingham, MI 48009
