Some of the 35 to 40 students who remained overnight in the Student Services Building hold up signs for television camera crews Thursday morning. The students will continue the sit-in to protest the recently approved tuition increase and the decline in the quality of education until noon today.

Sit-in continues as students ally with professors

By DAN NOWICKI
State Press

As 30 disgruntled ASU students continued their all-night sit-in Thursday at the Cashiering Services offices in the Student Services Building, protest organizers met with faculty members "in order to create a bond between faculty and students."

"(We want) to work together as co-special interests," said Walter Richter, president of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences College Council, which orchestrated the student protest. "(They are) battling for their fight to get increased salaries and better working conditions, and in turn they can help us out with some of our concerns."

Students began the sit-in Wednesday after about 600 protesters marched into the building to register their displeasure with recent tuition hikes imposed by the Arizona Board of Regents.

Richter cited smaller classes and more support staff as goals shared by the faculty and the student protesters.

Christopher Stiles, an Associated Students of ASU senator from the College of Liberal Arts, said the focus of the protest is being shifted from the tuition hike to the quality of education at the state universities.

"What we'd like to do is call for an open panel, an ad-hoc task force to be formed, including members to be announced later today or tomorrow, to study quality of education issues and implement those recommendations," Stiles said.

Stiles recommended that the task force include the state superintendent of public instruction, a representative from the governor's office, members of the Arizona Board of Regents, faculty members and students.

Stiles said the sit-in will continue until noon today, when students will leave the building to prepare for next week's possible schedule of protest activities.

Stiles said that if the regents have not acknowledged the protesters' request for the task force by Tuesday at 6 p.m., a statewide strike involving students at ASU, UofA and NAU will be organized.

In the strike, students at the three universities would attempt to shut down administrative activities and services at the schools.

Tuition rollback bill fails by 1 vote

Legislator says student protest increased support for measure

By NICOLE CARROLL
State Press

A bill to roll back university tuition to last year's rates for a two year period was defeated in the Arizona House by a single vote Thursday, and the representative who introduced the measure said the ongoing ASU student tuition protest was responsible for the close count.

"A lot of legislators who wouldn't have supported me without the protest thought they'd better do it," said Rep. John Kromko, D-Tucson. "They can see they (the students) are mad."

Kromko introduced the bill by taking it on as an amendment to a special education measure. The bill was defeated 26-25.

Kromko said he introduced the measure because the Arizona Board of Regents is mismanaging university funds and should not receive any increased tuition revenue. He said he will continue to tack the freeze onto all tuition-related bills that make it to the House floor.

"I think the situation is getting out of hand at the universities," he said. "The regents don't understand how difficult it is (for students) to pay for tuition."

Chris Stiles, a senator from the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences who organized ASU's student protest, which led to a sit-in at the Student Services Building, said he was "thrilled that the Legislature is listening."

However, he added, "we're not willing to accept a freeze if that means less university revenues from the Legislature. That wouldn't be in the best interest of the students."

Rep. Bev Hermon, R-Tempe, said she supports the student Health officials say meningitis caused student's death

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

Irene Sullivan, the 21-year-old ASU student who died Tuesday night, was stricken by meningitis, and health officials on Thursday urged anyone who has been in close contact with her to start taking antibiotics.

Sullivan, a political science major, died within 24 hours of noticing flu-like symptoms.

There had been fears that her death was linked to a highly contagious strep infection that killed three people in Tucson.

On Thursday morning, however, officials at Valley Lutheran Hospital in Mesa, where Sullivan died, listed the cause of death as meningococcus meningitis. They said the illness is characterized by high fever, vomiting and pain in the upper body.

Valley Lutheran spokeswoman Linda

Murro said that although meningitis is highly contagious, there is a "one-in-a-million" chance that another person who contracted the bacterial infection from Sullivan would die.

"There is no need for panic," Murro said, adding that she was unsure why the infection killed Sullivan. "(The bacteria) was in her blood stream, went to her stomach and attacked her system, and it shut down — that is very rare."

Sullivan had flu-like symptoms Tuesday morning and was admitted to Valley Lutheran later that afternoon, unable to move her arms and with purple blotches on her skin.

Murro said students who came in close contact with Sullivan since Friday should go to the ASU Student Health Center to begin precautionary antibiotic treatment.

Meanwhile, Dr. Pamela Tom, health center director, said, "We have been receiving numerous calls from concerned parents and students.

"We are instituting an antibiotic to help prevent infection. I would instruct (students concerned about contracting the infection) to call the health center and ask to speak to the nurse so they may do an evaluation."

Tom said an evaluation consists of questions about current health.

She added that "people have been pretty calm" despite the fear that Sullivan died of a new contagious bacteria that causes death in 24 hours.

Tom said most students need not be concerned with contracting the infection because transmission of the bacteria is from person to person, through infected droplets of saliva by sharing food, water, smoking the same cigarette or being coughed on.

She said the antibiotic rifampin will be used.

Murro said some of Sullivan's sorority sisters at Sigma Sigma Sigma should be given the antibiotic.

Sullivan attended sorority functions with her friends last weekend, but so far nobody has reported any signs of illness.

On Feb. 7 a freshman at Rochester Institute of Technology in New York also died of meningitis, 16 hours after complaining of stomach pains and a fever.

In 1987 Curry College in Massachusetts shut down for a week because of an outbreak of viral meningitis. In the same year more than 4,000 students at Duke University in North Carolina lined up for antibiotics after fellow students were diagnosed with meningococcal bacteria.

Nominations to be sent to Mofford

UofA Student Regent expected to be named soon by governor

By NICOLE CARROLL
State Press

The nominations of three UofA students for the position of student member of the Arizona Board of Regents have been confirmed by the Tucson University's Student Senate and sent to Gov. Rose Mofford.

Mofford is expected to name one of the candidates to the prestigious post "before too long."

Associated Students of UofA President Dean Fink said an Arizona Students Association selection committee chose law student Christopher Avery and seniors Chris Worley and Danny Siciliano because they were "mature and experienced students."

They were confirmed by the Senate Wednesday. "I think it (student regent) is a vital position," Fink added. "It allows the regents to interact on a regular basis with someone who represents the student body."

The three state universities take turns nominating the student regent each year. NAU graduate student Peggy Steffens currently holds the position and is the first student regent to have full board voting privileges. The new regent will assume office on July 1.

Siciliano, 19, is majoring in economics and political science. He is currently one of nine ASUA senators. He said he hopes to pursue a degree in law after graduating in two years.

He said if appointed he would work to change state legislators' minds about higher education.

"At best the state Legislature is deprioritizing education, at worst it is starting to have an antagonistic view," he added.

Worley, 21, has a double major of Soviet studies and political science. He said he intends to enter the Peace Corps after graduating next year. His career plans include serving in some capacity with foreign relations.

Worley, an ASA member for the last three years, said he would like to emphasize the diversity among the student body to the regents.

"At best the state Legislature is deprioritizing education, at worst it is starting to have an antagonistic view."

— Danny Siciliano

"It expands bigger than just minorities and the problems with cultural diversity," he said. "There are commuter students, student parents and day-care needs at all three campuses."

Avery, 26, grew up in Flagstaff and completed his undergraduate degree at Utah State University, where he was student body president.

He said his unfamiliarity with higher education in Arizona would probably be his biggest asset as student regent.

"I wouldn't walk in having my mind made up," he added. Fink said all three candidates would serve the students well.

"I don't think we'll go wrong with any decision made," he said.

Panel hopes to select new provost by spring

A 13-member committee has been named by University President Lattie Coor to search for a new provost and vice president for academic affairs.

Law Professor Alan Matheson will head the committee, which is made up primarily of faculty members and administrators.

The new administrator will take office July 1, when incumbent Richard Peck becomes president of the University of New Mexico.

Coor said he hopes the interview process will be completed by May 2.

Coor predicted that the committee will be able to select a candidate by spring, but said that "if this ambitious timetable encounters difficulties, we will roll (the decision) over to the fall."

Reagan says he had no 'inkling' of Contra aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Reagan testified in a videotaped deposition released Thursday he never "had any inkling" his aides were secretly arming the Nicaraguan Contras during a congressional ban on military aid.

In testimony for the upcoming trial of John Poindexter, the former president also said he remained unconvinced there had been a diversion of Iran arms sale money to the rebels — until prosecutors confronted him with the report of the Tower Commission he appointed.

Reagan said he would have expected Poindexter, his former national security adviser, to inform him of any diversion of funds to the Contras "unless maybe he thought he was protecting me from something."

Reagan's testimony was taken in Los Angeles last week and made available in Washington. The former president was jovial and testy by turns during eight hours — winking at Poindexter as he took the stand and talking amiably with the judge but also answering in abrupt fashion when Iran-Contra prosecutor Dan Webb said he wasn't addressing a question.

He said at numerous points that he couldn't recall a date, a name, whether someone had told him something or not.

Reagan said decisively that he agreed with a letter Poindexter sent Congress saying the White House was complying with the ban on help for the Contras — a letter that forms part of the basis for one charge Poindexter faces.

But he also said, when told by prosecutors, that he was learning from them for the first time that former National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane, Poindexter's predecessor, had pleaded guilty to misleading Congress in the affair.

Reagan testified, "It was my impression" that National Security Council aide Oliver North's assistance to the

Reagan

Contras was limited to "communicating back and forth . . . on the need for the support of the Contras."

"I guess that I had never . . . had any inkling that we were guiding their strategy in any way," Reagan testified under questioning by Webb.

Asked what he thought North was doing, Reagan said that "you have to have people that can be available to make contact with the leaders of the Contras . . . sometimes closer than just writing a letter."

"It was my understanding because his name would crop up in memos and so forth that that's what he was doing," the former president added.

Poindexter, who faces trial March 5, is charged with conspiracy, two counts of obstructing Congress and two counts of making false statements.

It was Poindexter's lawyers who had won a court order to take Reagan's testimony, hoping to show Reagan had approved of the activities that led to his former adviser's indictment.

De Klerk accepts ANC proposal on formal talks

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President F. W. de Klerk on Thursday accepted a proposal by the African National Congress to send a delegation for the first formal talks between the white government and its foremost adversary.

The ANC's commitment to dialogue "is a positive step," reflecting a desire to "search for solutions through peaceful means," said de Klerk, who lifted a 30-year ban on the guerrilla movement three weeks ago.

De Klerk also made his first public statement on a controversy involving Defense Minister Magnus Malan, who has been linked in press reports to a secret military unit that allegedly assassinated anti-apartheid activists.

The president, interviewed by the state-run TV network, said the allegations would be thoroughly investigated by a judicial commission, criticized the press for conducting a "trial by media," and praised the role of the security forces in saving South Africa from "anarchy and chaos."

Opposition political leaders demanded Malan's resignation and urged de Klerk to ensure that no cover-up takes place.

Malan, in statements this week, denied having ordered assassinations, but did not rule out the possibility the unit may have committed such acts. He pledged the military would not interfere with any investigations.

The Star newspaper of Johannesburg quoted sources as saying Malan had been aware of the unit at least since 1987.

Police investigators have said in court papers that members of the unit, called the Civil Cooperation Bureau, are suspected of involvement in the assassinations last year of David Webster, a Johannesburg human rights activist, and Anton Lubowski, a civil rights lawyer and pro-independence activist in Namibia.

De Klerk last month ordered a judicial inquiry into charges that military and police squads murdered government opponents. The commission is expected to investigate the unsolved killings of at least 60 activists in the past decade.

Three former policemen have confessed to serving on death squads. Several active police officers are under investigation.

The activists allegedly killed by the death squads include members and supporters of the ANC.

Although it was legalized Feb. 2 as part of de Klerk's peace initiative, the ANC said its guerrilla campaign remains one of its tactics in trying to pressure the government to end white-minority domination.

On Feb. 16, the ANC said from its headquarters in Zambia that it would send a delegation to South Africa to confer with de Klerk about obstacles in the way of negotiations on a new constitution.

The ANC says the state of emergency must be lifted and all political prisoners freed before such talks can start. Its office in London released a list Thursday of more than 750 prisoners it said should be freed.

Nelson Mandela, left, welcomes representatives of the Natal branch of the United Democratic Front to his Soweto home Thursday. On the right is Zwalakhe Sisulu, son of former General Secretary Walter Sisulu currently on a peace mission to try to end fighting between UDF and Inkhatha.

No date for the preliminary meeting has been set. De Klerk said the government would first have to address "legal uncertainties" regarding exiled ANC leaders who might be liable for prosecution in South Africa.

Earlier Thursday, the government said de Klerk had postponed a meeting scheduled for Saturday in Zaire with leaders of some black African nations. The ANC had urged a boycott of the meeting, saying de Klerk's reforms had not gone far enough.

2 Germanys should reduce military forces, official says

EAST BERLIN (AP) — The two Germanys should reduce their combined military by two-thirds when they unite, and some U. S. and Soviet soldiers should remain during the unification process, the East German defense minister said Thursday.

Adm. Theodor Hoffmann said the armed forces should be purely defensive and both states should remain in their respective alliances until they are reunited under a new European security system.

West Germany belongs to NATO and East Germany is in the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact. About 380,000 Soviet soldiers are stationed in East Germany and NATO has more than 300,000 in West Germany, including about 250,000 Americans.

Hoffmann said a joint German military should be reduced to about 300,000 men initially.

Airlines ask government to require infant safety seats

WASHINGTON (AP) — The airline industry changed its position on infant safety seats Thursday and asked the government to require them for all passengers under 2 years old.

The proposal, if adopted by the Federal Aviation Administration, could require thousands of parents each day to buy tickets for children who now fly free. Airlines, however, still would have the option of offering free rides or reduced fares.

Iran paper says hostages should be freed

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — An Iranian newspaper close to President Hashemi Rafsanjani said Thursday all 18 Western hostages in Lebanon should be freed because they have become a propaganda tool for Iran's enemies.

Most of the captives are believed held by kidnapers loyal to Iran.

"Regardless of the West's propaganda ploys, Moslem forces, out of Islamic and humanitarian considerations, should work to get the hostages free with no precondition," the English-language Tehran Times said in an editorial, parts of which were carried by Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency.

It was the first known statement by an Iranian newspaper in support of freeing all the hostages, whose fate is believed linked to a power struggle within the Iranian government.

Eight Americans, four Britons, an Irishman, an Italian, two West Germans and two Swiss citizens are captives in Lebanon.

Terry A. Anderson, 42, has been held the longest. He is chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press and was abducted March 16, 1985.

Anderson's sister, Peggy Say, was in Damascus, Syria, on Thursday as part of a tour with an Associated Press delegation to seek the hostages' release.

Among leaders with whom she has met are Javier Perez de Cuellar, the U.N. secretary-general; Pope John Paul II, and Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Attempts to see Iranian leaders have failed.

Asked in Damascus about the Tehran Times editorial, Say said: "I am deeply grateful. It is encouraging. I consider that Iran is not part of the problem, but part of the solution."

Arafat told Say in their meeting last week that Rafsanjani had the greatest influence with the kidnapers, but hard-liners in the Iranian government limited his room for maneuver.

In its editorial, the Tehran Times said the struggle against Western influence in the Middle East was legitimate and should continue, but that all forces in Lebanon should work to free hostages of whatever nationality.

"They should regard the hostages as victims of imperialist policies of the West and make attempts to get them all freed," it said. "Maybe 1990 will be the year for the release of all the hostages."

It repeated Rafsanjani's demand for the release of Iran's charge d'affaires in Beirut, Mohsen Musavi, and three other embassy staff members kidnapped in north Lebanon in July 1982 by members of the Lebanese Forces, a Christian militia. All four are believed dead.

Lebanese Forces Commander Samir Geagea said in August 1988 he found no trace of the men after taking over the militia in 1986. Geagea blamed his predecessor, Elie Hobeika, for their disappearance and apparent murder.

Rafsanjani has offered to help free the Western hostages. In August 1989, he said there were "reasonable, prudent solutions" to the problem. Two months later, Rafsanjani said he would not try to get them released unless the United States freed billions of dollars in Iranian assets frozen in 1979.

Any statement with even a hint of conciliation is condemned promptly by factions in the Iranian government who reject the reconciliation with the West favored by Rafsanjani.

Ali Akbar Mohtashemi, the former interior minister and Rafsanjani's main rival, regularly encourages groups holding hostages in Lebanon. He said in a newspaper interview last month they have "a natural right to take hostages to inflict heavy blows on their enemies."

Most of the kidnapers are believed linked to Hezbollah, or Party of God, a Lebanese fundamentalist Shiite Moslem group Mohtashemi helped organize in the early 1980s.

Tuition protest

Students will take no more

There is an old adage that says it's too late to close the barn door after the horse is already gone.

But when the Arizona Board of Regents rode out of Tucson last Friday, they took with them $25 million in student money. That's how much the large resident tuition increase and the unprecedented nonresident tuition fee hike will generate in 1990-91.

The horse has galloped away, and it is unlikely that the protesters who seized the Student Services Building on Wednesday will be able to reverse the huge rise in fees that has already been approved.

However, the anger created by yet another tuition hike has tapped a reservoir of resentment that has been building for years. It only took one afternoon of callous action by the board for this resentment to spill out onto campus.

And the issues that have now been raised by the student protesters will have far more impact on the future of ASU than any single year tuition hike possibly could.

Students have occupied the Student Services Building because they are tired of paying more money for less education. They are tired of being excluded from decisions that so directly impact their lives.

There is support among the faculty for the protesters because they, too, are tired of ASU's negligence in the area of undergraduate education. They are sick of being forced to accept huge lecture halls full of hundreds of eager students — students who the professors know they can never reach individually simply because of their numbers.

And ridiculously low pay for professors in Arizona has further demoralized the faculty and created a high attrition rate.

What the protesters have called for to address these problems is the creation of an ad-hoc task force that will study the quality of education at Arizona Universities and implement any recommendations given by the task force.

Student leaders have recommended that the task force include the state superintendent of public instruction, a representative from the governor's office, regents, faculty members and students.

What they would discuss is nothing less than the future of ASU.

There is something wrong when costs rise every year and yet quality continues to decline. Clearly, if ASU were a business it would go bankrupt. But it isn't a business, it is a school — our school — and the bottom line isn't money, but our education and our future.

Students have indicated by their protest that since their education is no longer "as nearly free as possible," as is mandated by the Arizona constitution, they are going to demand a voice in how their money is being spent.

The University must refocus its priorities on its central mission — undergraduate education. This protest is an excellent way to start.

Ban bikes from Palm Walk

Editor:

Once again, the State Press Police Report lists another injured pedestrian struck by a bicyclist on campus. This time it happened on Palm Walk. Although such incidents do not seem to always be reported, people getting hit is a common occurrence. I'm sure people walking about campus certainly ponder whether today they too will become the next victim. Since coming here in August, I've had three near-misses. And I can assure you, I am not a reckless, irresponsible walker.

I recognize that the campus is too large to restrict bicycle transportation in and around campus. Rather, I propose Palm Walk should be restricted from cyclists.

I move that Palm Walk should be just that — a walk!

'We the students'

Editor:

We, the students, will no longer be ignored by an administration that does not care and does not listen. We are occupying the Student Services Building because the tuition increase was unfair and unconstitutional. We demand that the administrative system be fundamentally changed so as to allow the needs of the student to be met effectively. We demand fair and equitable representation. The Board of Regents blatantly disregards the needs and concerns of the students and faculty to suit other purposes: 70 percent of the current tuition hike is appropriated for the state budget, not for the University. This is wasteful, negligent and intolerable.

Students are the sole reason for this institution. We, the students, are united by common concerns and common outrage. We are angry and we will not be silenced.

Class size problem deserves attention

Editor:

After reading the article about class sizes here at ASU, I was happy to see that the problem is getting more attention. Although limiting enrollment for certain classes is necessary, unless more sections of those classes are opened up, it will create more problems that it solves.

get the classes that are full here. It's about time that the administrators of this school start considering how the money they will spend on the faculty club can be better spent. ASU needs to get its priorities straight and start giving students the education we are paying too much for already!

More money

Editor:

The recent tuition increase itself is not what bothered me, it was the nonchalance the board had in making their decision. A board of just a few people dictated the future education and therefore future of thousands of students. I am one of the lucky, whose parents can absorb the increase, but what about those students who are not so fortunate? They are the ones left with only a few hard choices to make. While the Legislature has already indicated that the chances of an additional financial aid fund becoming a reality are very low, the board presents this fund as the "viable and realistic" solution.

I realize that the University operates along the same lines as a business, profit motive is very high. I also happen to know that if a business squandered its money like this institution does (i.e. the lawsuit against the Board of Regents brought on by the newspapers), those responsible would have been fired long ago.

The next time somebody asks me about attending ASU I will not hesitate to recommend that they look elsewhere. To me, if I am going to spend this amount of money on tuition, it seems like a better bargain to invest the dollars where the bureaucracy is not as big — a place where my opinion carries more strength during decision making processes affecting the student body, and my money contributes to my education rather than a bunch of unrealized needs.

Some want to see de Klerk pay for what he's done

BOXBURG, South Africa — On the veranda of his unassuming middle-class home a half hour outside Johannesburg, a stocky, affable 39-year-old Afrikaner named T. J. Ferreira offers his visitor coffee or tea, exchanges pleasantries, and explains why he and his fellow conservatives maintain they are willing to start a violent uprising if necessary to preserve white rule in South Africa.

At a time when the ruling National Party has abandoned its commitment to apartheid, through which it came to power in 1948, at a time when President F. W. de Klerk recognizes Nelson Mandela as a national leader rather than as a terrorist, a significant minority among whites is watching its entire world turn upside down.

T. J. Ferreira is a political force among them; as Conservative Party chairman for Boxburg — a largely blue-collar community — he helped lead the fight to bar blacks from the lake, playgrounds and other town amenities.

For Ferreira and his followers, de Klerk's move toward negotiations with the recently legalized African National Congress is, in the most literal sense, treason.

"F. W. — we call him 'Farewell Whiteman de Klerk' — is part of the enemy, worse than the communists, because he is in our midst." To share power with blacks, Ferreira maintains, is to destroy the country. He makes no bones about why: Blacks, he maintains, are simply inferior to whites.

It is important to understand this. Unlike some American Southerners, who opposed the civil rights movement on constitutional grounds, such as states' rights, the Afrikaners who oppose an end to apartheid do so because they believe a black majority will destroy the economic and moral fiber of the nation.

"You can't show me one prosperous country north of South Africa," Ferreira says. "Look at Zimbabwe: The moment the Europeans have pulled out, the country has gone for a loop." Could the reason be the wholesale adoption of socialism in black Africa?

No, Ferreira maintains, it is because of the innate incompetence of blacks.

"If the Europeans had been here in Africa and the blacks had been in Europe, Africa would have been one of the best places to live in the world. And we wouldn't have any blacks left, because they would have died in the cold, because they wouldn't have been able to think for themselves."

If you point to the American civil rights movement, where the bitter-end opposition of white segregationists crumbled within a few years of the landmark laws of the 1960s Ferreira rejects such analogy.

"We have a difference in population," he says. "Being in the majority, as you whites in America are, I would have no fears of these people. But we here in South Africa are not willing to have their culture forced upon us."

In voices such as that of T. J. Ferreira, the National Party government finds itself a dilemma of its own making. The party came in power, ousting the British-based governors in 1948, on a set of assumptions now faithfully clung to by the conservatives: that blacks were divinely ordained to serve whites and to be ruled over by them, and that any notion of racial equality was a step toward inevitable black onslaught.

For years, the National Party denied the franchise to blacks, created boards to judge whether the kink of a citizen's hair or the shape of a citizen's lips meant he should be classified as white or colored or black, created "Bantu" schools to teach blacks just enough to make them loyal servants, and created fictional black "homelands" from which blacks were assumed to come, thus making them non-citizens in South Africa.

These and a hundred other depredations have brought South Africa to its present state. Now, F. W. de Klerk is attempting to do what Nixon did in going to China, what Gorbachev is doing in abandoning the Leninist faith.

He is attempting to cast aside the ideological framework in whose name he came to power. Sadat got murdered for his troubles; Gorbachev may not survive his own conversion. And if men like T. J. Ferreira have anything to say about it, F. W. de Klerk will not survive his own heresies, either.

More money should mean more education

Editor:

On Saturday, my morning was abruptly interrupted by the bitter taste in my mouth that came from reading the news of the $1000 tuition increase for out-of-state students next year. As I read on, a rage started to envelop me. How could the Arizona Board of Regents morally do this to currently enrolled students?

The increase itself is not what bothered me, it was the nonchalance the board had in making its decision. A board of just a few people dictated the future education and therefore future of thousands of students. The power definitely lies with the pen and those who wield it. I am one of the lucky one's whose parents can absorb the increase, but what about those students who are not so fortunate? They are the ones left with only a few hard choices to make. While the Legislature has already indicated that the chances of an additional financial aid fund becoming a reality are very low, the board presents this fund as the "viable and realistic" solution.

To make the increase worthwhile, it would be necessary to receive smaller class sizes and easier accessibility to required classes, rather than a new landscaping job. I realize that the University operates along the same lines as a business, profit motive is very high. I also happen to know that if a business squandered its money like this institution does (i.e. the lawsuit against the Board of Regents brought on by the newspapers), those responsible would have been fired long ago.

As of now, I do not know if I will stay or leave next year. The only thing holding me back is the hassle of transferring elsewhere. I do know, however, that the next time somebody asks me about attending ASU I will not hesitate to recommend that they look elsewhere. To me, if I am going to spend this amount of money on tuition, it seems like a better bargain to invest the dollars where the bureaucracy is not as big — a place where my opinion carries more strength during decision-making processes affecting the student body, and my money contributes to my education rather than a bunch of unrealized needs.

Charges of racism not scrutinized carefully enough

Joseph Sobran
Universal Press Syndicate

WASHINGTON — Let's see. Who has been accused of bigotry this week? Well, confining ourselves to the newsworthy examples, there is Andy Rooney of CBS' "60 Minutes," of course. Then there's Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, who made some remark that put the anti-racist warriors at Vassar in a tizzy. Then there's John Silber, the president of Boston University, now running for governor of Massachusetts, who holds the distinction of having been charged with both racism and anti-Semitism within the space of a few days.

Is there any truth to the accusations? No, not unless you define "racism" and "anti-Semitism" in some sense so broad as to qualify as Pickwickian. These words have lost whatever semantic content they once had.

In fact, the striking thing about the sort of accusations that have become a daily feature of our public life is that nobody really believes them — not even the people who make them. Nobody seriously thinks that Messrs. Rooney, Moynihan and Silber favor harming, defaming or even snubbing members of minority groups. The sole purpose of the attacks is to humiliate these men and bring them to their knees in abject apology.

This baneful technique, unfortunately, works. The media publicized the noisemakers uncritically. Often the target of the attacks suffer harm to his reputation and fortunes.

And when he survives the hit without much damage, the public still gets the message: The fanatics are out there, gunning for anyone who doesn't display the prescribed attitude toward minority groups.

For the accusers, it's a no lose situation. All you have to do is make one of the standard undefined charges, and you may hurt someone whose views you hate. You have nothing to lose. It's up to him to prove he's innocent, which is hard to do when it's very clear what he's supposed to be guilty of. The uproar alone is unnerving to anyone it's directed against.

Most important, the accuser pays no price for libeling the victim. Lawsuits are costly, time-consuming, exhausting and usually futile, especially for public figures. The media don't cross-examine the accusers to find out if they have proof for their charges or interested motives for leveling them. Flinging loose charges of bigotry is treated by the press as a perfectly legitimate form of public discourse.

In a sense, the accusers are protected by the sheer semantic vacuity of their accusations. The word "racism" is simultaneously inflammatory and hopelessly vague. No plaintiff in a libel suit could prove he's not "racist" in whatever eccentric sense his libeler may have in mind.

That's why, in an era when rash charges of bigotry have become routine, not a single accuser has suffered the disgrace Joe McCarthy eventually suffered for making loose charges of communist affiliations. We have no equivalent to "McCarthyism" for the opportunistic accusation of bigotry.

McCarthy made one big mistake: he made accusations that meant something readily definable. If he said someone was a communist, he had to show actual membership in the Communist Party or some connection with the Soviet Union. He accepted a burden of proof he was finally unable to sustain. His unsubstantiated charges backfired.

Part of the reason he was ruined was that the press became increasingly critical of him. After a few successful months, he came under withering scrutiny — the kind of scrutiny today's accusers are exempt from.

Moreover, liberal opinion disapproved of McCarthy's goals on ideological grounds. But it's ideologically sympathetic to the goals that drive the imputations of bigotry.

So the ethnic accusers have every incentive to make loose charges and few disincentives to deter them from doing so. They have learned that they have the power to terrify dissent, and they do it every day. Thanks in large part to the free press, we have laissez-faire for libel.

Art professor formally charged with public sexual indecency

By CAROLYN HUFFMAN
State Press

An ASU art professor who was arrested last year in the Education Lecture Hall was formally charged Thursday with public sexual indecency — a class one misdemeanor.

Anthony Gully, who has been at ASU for 17 years, was arrested Oct. 6 after an alleged sexual abuse of an undercover police officer.

A pre-trial conference has been set for March 21, according to Maricopa County Superior Court spokesman Bill FitzGerald.

ASU police charged that Gully exposed himself to the officer in the Farmer Education Building mens restroom, then arranged to meet the officer in the nearby lecture hall.

The alleged abuse occurred in the lecture hall mens restroom, police said.

After his arrest, Gully was reassigned to off-campus activities, according to Bruce Meyerson, the University's legal counsel. He returned to teaching this semester.

Gully and 14 other men were arrested on charges relating to sexual indecency after faculty members complained to police.

Student allegedly tries to sell 13 pounds of pot to officer

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

An ASU student was arrested Wednesday night on a felony drug charge after police said he allegedly tried to sell an undercover narcotics officer 13 pounds of marijuana in the parking lot of the Cornerstone Shopping Center.

Tempe police said George Andrew Pauli, 22, of the 1900 block of East University Drive in Tempe, was arrested at about 9 p.m. at 920 E. University Drive on suspicion of offering to sell marijuana.

Pauli, a senior mechanical engineering major, was booked into Tempe City Jail and later released, police said.

The drugs, worth an estimated $19,500 to $22,100, were impounded along with the student's vehicle, police said.

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents on Thursday:

- An ASU employee injured her head and right wrist Wednesday when she fell off of a cement picnic table on the west side of the Memorial Union.

- An ASU student injured his nose Wednesday while playing basketball at the Student Recreation Complex.

- An ASU student was arrested Wednesday at McAllister Avenue and Apache Boulevard for driving on a suspended license.

- A thief stole $100 on Wednesday from the cash drawer in the parking decal sales office at the ASU Department of Public Safety headquarters, 628 E. Apache Blvd.
- A burglar pried open a safe between Tuesday and Wednesday in the Education Copy Center at Payne Hall and took $10.50. Damage to the safe is $500.
- A thief stole an ASU student's $450 bicycle Wednesday from the south side of the Physical Science A-wing.

- A thief stole an ASU student's purse and contents, valued at $45, Wednesday from the Anthropology Building. Most of the property was recovered later when it was found deposited in a mailbox at the U. S. Post Office at Fifth Street and Mill Avenue.

- A burglar broke into an ASU student's car Wednesday in Lot 63 and stole a six-pack of soda. The unknown suspect unsuccessfully tried to steal the vehicle's stereo and speakers.

Tempe police reported the following incidents on Thursday:

- Two ASU students were arrested about 1:30 a.m. Thursday at 737 E. Broadway Road on misdemeanor criminal damage charges after one student was seen hitting a car with a tire iron while the other kicked a mirror off of it.

- One of the students also was arrested on a misdemeanor assault charge after he hit a person in the mouth.

protest but that she voted against Kromko's amendment. "It's a part of a message that's being sent," Hermon said. "I don't think the Legislature wants to take on the additional responsibility of setting tuition. I don't think they are actually going to roll that process back."

Hermon, chairman of the House Education Committee, added that she supported the proposal to exempt current non-resident students from the $1,000 tuition hike, which was rejected by the regents last week when they approved tuition increases.

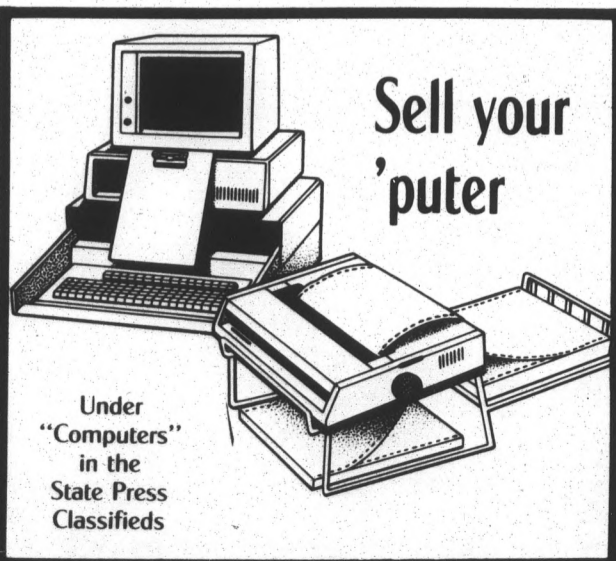

"It's just not fair," she said.

Kromko said he hopes the student protesters urge their parents to write and call their legislators. He said there was no purpose to the state universities if middle-income families could not afford the tuition costs.

Tempe proposes ordinance to limit car stereo noise

By HOBART ROWLAND
State Press

Tempe resident Sandra Lee Smith decided enough was enough.

For two years, she said, her neighborhood near Kiwanis Park has endured weekends of pounding music coming from trucks and "low rider" cars cruising Mill Avenue and nearby All-American Way south of Baseline Road.

"We (area residents) are not just being old fuddy-duddies," she said. "There's no escape. We don't have the choice of turning the music down."

Smith finally sent a letter to the city complaining about the noise. Other frustrated residents near Tempe High School also complained, prompting the city attorney's office to draft an ordinance limiting the noise caused by car stereos and boom boxes in Tempe. The ordinance is similar to a bill introduced in the state Legislature that would cut boom box noise statewide.

The proposed Tempe ordinance, which received a mixed review from Tempe City Council members at a pre-session meeting Thursday, would fine car audio power junkies $250 for playing boom boxes loud enough to be heard more than 49 feet away.

The proposal, which excludes amplified emergency, utility and parade vehicles, states that boom boxes can distract drivers to the point of becoming a safety hazard to motorists and pedestrians.

Smith added that the loud music also infringes on "other peoples' rights" by invading the privacy of their homes. "You can feel the vibrations shaking your home and coming through your body," she added.

Of course, not everyone agrees with her. A stereo industry sales representative said the proposed ordinance is just another way of limiting the freedoms of young people.

"It doesn't make sense to penalize the kids," said Dean Taylor, who works for Orion Industries, a leading stereo amplifier manufacturer based in South Tempe. "You need to give them some place to express themselves."

If kids aren't given this outlet, they will spend the money on other more destructive pastimes, such as drugs, Taylor said.

He said he believes that the $250 fine is "ridiculous" because parents will most likely have to pay it.

"There's no sense in punishing the parents," he said.

Taylor said "pounders," powerful boom boxes that push more than 200 watts of power through rows of four or more speakers, can range in cost from $3,000 to $4,000.

Brad Huda, installation manager at 21st Century Sound in Tempe, said he is more sympathetic to those bothered by the noise.

He admitted that customers who buy car stereos for cruising want the music to be as loud as possible.

"Some will move 10 feet away from the car to measure its power," he said. "They're not concerned with the sound quality inside (the vehicle)."

At Thursday's meeting, Councilwoman Carol Smith said she believes that the noise is enough of a problem that the city should look into it.

Other councilmembers were not convinced of the ordinance's effectiveness.

"Enforcement is going to be a hell of a thing to do," Vice Mayor Don Cassano said. "It won't make a real change in anything."

Tempe Police Chief Dave Brown said his department will wait to see what the City Council does before discussing viable ways to curb the noise.

"We need to sit down with the city's prosecuting attorneys and find out the best way to deal with it (enforcement)," he said.

Mayor Harry Mitchell said that the proposal, which only applies to vehicles on streets and public ways, should be revised to include vehicles parked on private property.

That way, Mitchell said, those cranking boom boxes in restaurant parking lots would also fall under the ordinance and be subject to a fine.

Meanwhile, Smith is facing another weekend of loud music. "It gets annoying when they (the cruisers) say they're getting picked on," she said. "I don't think they really understand what I'm going through."

Students crowd the second floor of the Student Services Building Thursday morning.

Protest

Meanwhile, students participating in the Student Services Building sit-in for the second consecutive day kept themselves occupied by sleeping, reading newspapers and doing homework.

Valerie Pearman, a junior social work major who spent Wednesday night in the building, said the sit-in was not an exercise in futility.

"I think we really proved a point by staying here last night," Pearman said. "We proved that we were willing to fight."

Pearman added that the sit-in helped the students get "a little more organized in our protest because we spent that time together."

Arizona Board of Regents President Edith Auslander said, "Students have a right to state their opinion, just as long as they don't violate the rights of others."

Auslander said that because she has had no direct contact with the students, she could not respond to the students' demands specifically.

Stiles said faculty support for the ASU protest is mounting.

He added: "I've had people come up to me from various parts of the administration, people I would never have expected to come up to me on a bet, who sort of glance over their shoulder to see if their supervisor is looking at them, and saying, 'Hey, I remember 20 years ago. I went to this university and we did this and I'm so glad to see this happening.' They're thrilled."

Political Science Professor Mark Reader, who addressed the students at the sit-in Thursday afternoon, complimented the student activists and encouraged them to press for a public inquiry into the quality of education at the state universities.

"There are many people at this University who are coming to understand that our tuition dollars are buying us less," Reader said. "I think our common interest is really the interest of improving the quality of education on the campus."

Reader, who has taught at ASU since 1967, said he has seen the quality of education at the University decline over the past decade due to understaffing and student overcrowding.

"The massification of the educational process here has, I think, really had a serious impact on the quality of instruction," he said.

'Lagging' mental health care in AZ spurs downtown walk

By SUZANNE ROSS
State Press

The Mental Health Association of Maricopa County, in conjunction with Valley businesses, is sponsoring a "Walk for Conscience" today in Phoenix to promote awareness and support for behavioral health programs in Arizona.

The walk is scheduled to begin at 10 a.m. at the Arizona State Hospital on 24th Street and Van Buren Street and will continue west on Washington Street to Wesley Bolin Plaza. Prospective marchers are encouraged to join the walk at any point on the route.

"We hope to educate the public through the media about the critical state of mental health in Arizona," said Cheryl Collier, executive director for the Mental Health Association of Maricopa County. "We need to raise the level of consciousness on mental health needs in the state by recruiting people. I want to engage the public in the battle."

But Collier said it is difficult to involve Arizonans in mental health issues.

"Mental health is not the sexy topic in Arizona," Collier said. "There were 10,000 people downtown protesting abortion... we'll be lucky if we get 1,500 to show up."

In a report released Wednesday, the Phoenix South Community Mental Health Center said that Arizona is lagging far behind other states in most areas of social welfare. The report ranked Arizona 49th of the 50 states in the category of behavioral health care.

The report, Decades of Neglect: Alarming Trends 1989, also said that Arizona ranks last among the states for care of the seriously mentally ill with a per capita expenditure of $16.20 — a slight improvement over 1987 when the per capita expenditure was $14.40. The national average expenditure per capita is $38.40.

Alarming Trends reveals that many people move to Arizona for economic opportunity and leave because of the poor quality of life. Quality of life is determined by nine factors, including crime rates, adequacy of health care and education.

Collier said that Arizona is populated by migrants who moved to the state to start a new life but found that the quality of life is not up to par.

"Arizona ranks at the bottom of the barrel for mental health funding and the quality of life," Collier said.

After moving to Arizona, many people find it difficult to adjust to the new lifestyle because of lack of support networks such as friends and family, according to Alarming Trends. Lack of support networks may contribute to other problems such as Arizona's high rates of crime, alcoholism, drug abuse, divorce and suicide.

Keith Frankel, executive director of East Valley Behavioral Health Association, said that Arizonans need to be more aware of behavioral health problems.

"The purpose (of the walk) is to keep attention focused on the behavioral health crisis in Arizona and to underscore the need for continued support from the Legislature and the governor's office," Frankel said.

Frankel estimated that about $250 million in state funding is needed in order to provide adequate care for Arizona's mentally ill. Last year the Legislature provided $30 million in mental health funds.

Collier suggested that an alternative to legislative funding is to get more people involved with mental or behavioral health issues.

"There are things that we can do using our own great resource, and that's the people," Collier said. "Through the use of volunteers, we are trying to develop our own resources within the community."

Lack of services and support for behavioral health is also evident at ASU.

Jesse McClure, dean of the School of Social Work at ASU, who will be participating in the walk, said the lack of mental health services is a real and significant problem at ASU.

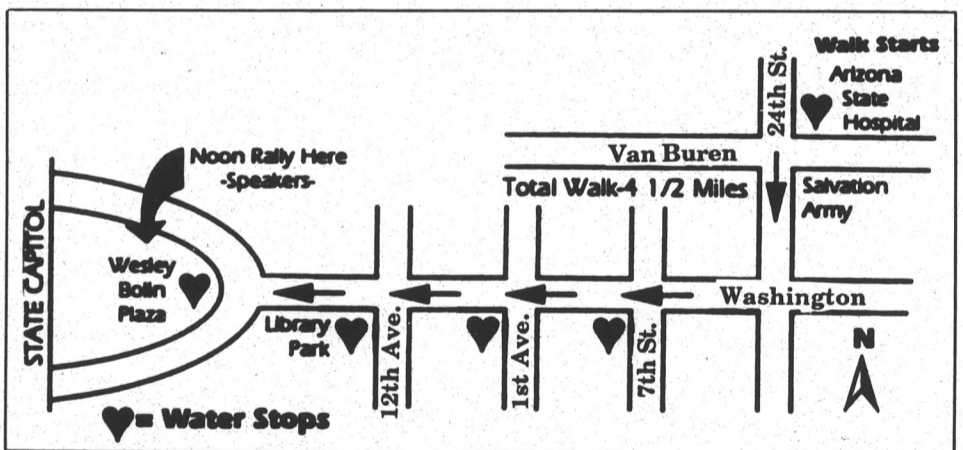

"It is important to make people aware that this is a major problem that Arizona — and its subunits, like ASU — faces," McClure said.

McClure said there is a great need to bring attention to the mental health issue and hopes that the walk will generate some much needed support. He also said that lack of adequate funding is a major problem that could result in other problems in the state.

"You have to pay to have good services," McClure said. "The state will not be able to attract industry — no one will want to come to Arizona because it does not have enough service facilities."

A rally will be held immediately after the walk, in which legislators and other speakers will address the crowd.

"Even family members will be getting up and telling their sorrows," Collier said.

The "Walk for Conscience" commences at 10 a.m. at the Arizona State Hospital at 24th Street and Van Buren and finishes around noon at Wesley Bolin Plaza.

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (AP) — Buckling up may pay off some day in West Virginia. State Sen. Ned Jones introduced a bill Monday that would give police officers the authority to hand out lottery tickets to belt-wearing motorists. The bill would exclude drunken drivers or motorists who violate the speed limit by more than 10 mph. It would be up to the state police to figure out how to dole out the lottery tickets, which would not be awarded unless everyone in an auto had their seat belts on. The Legislature recently voted down a bill to require motorists to wear seat belts. Jones said his approach is just the ticket. "Now we're using the carrot instead of the stick," he said.

Cardinal clobbers Sun Devil women, 106-64

ASU Head Coach Maura McHugh called it a nightmare. The Sun Devils (12-11 overall, 4-9 Pac-10) were overpowered by the third-ranked Stanford Cardinal (23-1, 13-1), 106-64, Thursday night at the University Activity Center.

"I said to the team, 'Let's pretend we had a bad dream, it was a nightmare. Let's forget it,'" McHugh said.

ASU committed three of its 27 turnovers within the first minute of play, which allowed the Cardinal to get ahead, 5-0. The Cardinal never looked back.

By the 9:26 mark of the first half, Stanford had built up a 29-point lead and went into the locker room at halftime leading 57-39.

The Cardinal came back out for the second half and outscored the Sun Devils by 25. Cardinal Head Coach Tara VanDerveer said that the key to Stanford's victory was the scoring tempo they created.

"In the first 10 minutes, we were scoring at a 160 (points) a game pace," VanDerveer said. "We came out, got the ball and just went. And I think that if you do that at that tempo for the whole game, it will wear them down."

VanDerveer added that although she got a strong effort from each individual player, junior guard Sonja Henning was the player who got the Cardinal going.

"She's the one that gets it and goes," VanDerveer said. "She does a really good job pushing the tempo."

Henning was among six Stanford players to score in double figures. Senior forward Katy Steding had a double-double, 18 points and 12 rebounds, in 23 minutes of play.

"They're just a great team," McHugh said. "They played well and we didn't. Period. There's nothing you can say after a game like this except 'Yuck.'"

ASU's top scorer was senior guard Rosalind Senior with 13 points. Freshman Crystal Cobb was held scoreless in 19 minutes of play.

The Sun Devils did receive a strong effort from sophomore Deborah McGee, who finished the game with eight points and two assists.

"Debbie played very, very hard, and very, very well" McHugh said. "She came out and hustled all over the court. She made her open shots and she helped on defense. I was very pleased with her performance."

The Sun Devils next face the California Golden Bears (15-9, 7-7) on Saturday night in the UAC at 7:30. The Bears beat UofA Thursday night in overtime, 90-78.

California will be without senior guard Chris Holten who was averaging a team-high 12.3 points and 3.8 rebounds per game. Holten quit the team after being suspended for rule violations on a road trip in Washington.

Junior guard Laura Baker, averaging 11.5 points and 3.5 assists per game, was also suspended but is expected to return prior to the ASU game.

McHugh said the 83-74 loss to the Bears on Jan. 25 was a physical and aggressive game.

Shaky Sun Devils travel to Bay to meet Bears

By PAUL CORO
State Press

With the Sun Devil basketball team's foundation becoming unsteady, this weekend's trip to the epicenter of the Bay area could bring it down.

Just two weeks ago, ASU (12-11 overall, 5-9 Pac-10) was riding a three-game winning streak, shooting for an NIT bid and apparently on its way to a winning season.

Now, the Sun Devils have dropped three straight games and must win two of their final four games to finish above .500 for the regular season.

"We're at a position again where we were a couple times this season," Head Coach Bill Frieder said. "Going on the road when you have a losing streak is tough but the last times we had losing streaks we broke them on the road. So there's hope."

ASU opens the trip with tonight's 7:30 (PST) game at Cal-Berkeley (19-7 overall, 10-5 Pac-10). In the teams' previous meeting in Tempe on Jan. 25, freshman Brian Hendrick's 17-footer at the buzzer gave the Golden Bears a 68-66 double-overtime victory.

"What we did good against Cal was we defended the key people very well, especially (Keith) Smith," Frieder said. "What they did well was they shot the 3-point play well and the freshman kid (Hendrick) had a great game."

The Bears are coming off a 93-68 whipping at the hands of UofA that broke a five-game winning streak. Last week, Cal swept USC and UCLA in Los Angeles for the first time in 30 years. Guard Keith Smith scored 49 points in those two games to garner Pac-10 Player of the Week honors.

"Cal will be very tough to play because they have great athletes at every position and they do a good job defensively," Frieder said. "They come at you and press you the whole game. We've had our share of problems with pressure defenses."

Handling pressure may be the least of the Sun Devils' problems. ASU is slumping severely with a 34 percent mark on field goal attempts in its last three games.

Representative of the shooting slide is Alex Austin, who the Sun Devils count on most for point production. Austin has made just 16 of 57 (28 percent) during ASU's losing streak, including a 2-for-16 performance at UofA. His 3-point shooting percentage has dropped from 38 to 33 percent in three games.

"The biggest thing Alex has to do is not panic when things don't go well early in a game," Frieder said.

Austin's troubles may be in part attributed to his inability to spring open off screens because opponents have begun to switch on him.

"Every time you think you got him playing under control, then the next game comes along and you got to do it again," Frieder said. "He has been in an amazing slump."

As a result of the Sun Devils' cold shooting, Frieder said the team's defense has deteriorated. ASU has had difficulty setting up its defenses after missed baskets.

"You can get your defenses set and do a better job when you score baskets," Frieder said. "We have not shot the ball well and it's put us in a hole, allowing teams to get transition baskets on us."

Frieder said his biggest concern presently is guard Matt Anderson's slow recovery from knee injury. Anderson did not practice Friday through Monday.

"He should be at the point now where that thing is going full speed and there's no swelling," Frieder said. "But it's just the opposite, he's really struggling running and it's swelling up on him."

To complete the Bay trip, the Sun Devils will visit Stanford (15-8, 7-7) at 3:00 (PST) Sunday. Frieder said ASU must win in order to pass the Cardinal in the Pac-10 standings for sixth place, which is the last spot to get a bye in the first round of the Pac-10 Tournament.

"We've got to get back to playing the way we're capable in order to have some kind of chance to win some of these remaining games," Frieder said.

ASU softball team explodes for 18 runs

By MATTHEW KASTER
State Press

The ASU softball team opened its home tournament with a solid show of offensive power by winning both of its games Thursday night against Creighton, 6-0, and Illinois State, 12-0.

Scoring early helped the Sun Devils take charge of both games. Catcher Christi Serritella opened the first inning against Creighton with a triple, and was immediately followed by back-to-back doubles from second baseman Liz Phillips and outfielder Kim Anderson. ASU had a commanding 5-0 lead by the end of the first inning.

Third baseman Stephanie May scored the only other run in the first game, driven in by Michelle Phillips' double.

The display of hitting power pleased Head Coach Linda Wells, who credited Phillips and outfielder Becky Davis for leading the way in the first game. Both ladies were 2-for-4 at the plate with one RBI in the first game.

"We were at least hitting the ball hard, and executing our bunts," Wells said. "They made mistakes, but we were at least giving them tough balls to play."

ASU's offensive power was also helped considerably by strong defense and solid pitching.

Pitcher Terri Carnicelli started both games and held her opponents scoreless during each outing. Carnicelli allowed only six hits against Creighton and never walked a batter.

A quick turnaround between games may have also helped the Sun Devils. Umpires for the tournament kept to a tight schedule and started the second game against Illinois St. less than 10 minutes after ASU's win against Creighton.

The short intermission must have kept the Sun Devils warm because they managed to improve both offensive and defensive play. The Sun Devils pounded Illinois State for 14 hits.

Shortstop Ann Rowan led the hitting attack in the second game with two hits and two RBI. First baseman Brandi Hust also had two singles and an RBI, and Madrid had one double and one RBI in her four trips to the plate.

'We were at least hitting the ball hard, and executing our bunts.'

—Linda Wells

Carnicelli's pitching also improved in the second game, allowing only two hits against Illinois State, and never allowing a base after the first inning. She finally left the mound in the top of the fourth inning with ASU ahead, 7-0.

Carnicelli was relieved by Dawn Wood, who kept the shutout alive for two more innings.

Umpires called the game in the bottom of the fifth with ASU on top 12-0 because of the eight-run margin rule.

Tournament play will continue throughout the weekend. The Sun Devils play twice today, with the first game beginning at 11 a.m. against Cal-Poly Pomona and again at 7 p.m. against Penn State. ASU will also play tournament games Saturday (7 p.m.) and Sunday (6 p.m.).

ASU seeks first Six-Pac win

By SETH SULKA
State Press

As the Sun Devil baseball team looks to get its first Pac-10 Southern Division win this weekend, Head Coach Jim Brock said that he expects to continue his newly acquired duties of coaching at first base.

Brock said that he made the switch to help the team get more out of its running game.

"For me to run the offense the way that I want to run it, it's better for me to be out there," Brock said. "I have a tremendous amount of control over the runner at first base and second base and it's easier to pick up my signs."

"It puts me right in the middle of the running game."

There should be plenty of action on the basepaths with UCLA heading into Packard Stadium for a three-game series against the Sun Devils (12-6 overall, 0-2 Six-Pac). The series will begin at 7 tonight and continue on Saturday and Sunday with 1 p.m. game times.

The Bruins (12-3, 1-2) have jumped out to a good start by hitting .299, despite being picked to finish fifth in the Six-Pac.

"They're certainly the surprise team in the conference," Brock said. "It's a different kind of UCLA club. I think that they might run a little more."

ASU will look to sophomore lefty Sean Rees to keep the Bruins off the bases tonight while junior right hander Tim Lindsay (2-0, 2.95 ERA) is expected to hurl for UCLA.

Rees (3-0, 3.38), who will be pitching on four days rest, last saw action against USC when he gave up two runs in two innings.

Rusty Silcox pitched impressively in his debut against the Trojans after his eligibility was cleared. He is expected to throw against junior Scott Schanz (2-0, 2.81) on Saturday. ASU's Todd Douma (5-1, 3.09) is probable for Sunday against senior John Sutherland (4-1, 3.91).

Sun Devil second baseman Fernando Vina, who is known mostly for his defensive ability, has hit safely in 16 of ASU's games to raise his average to .357, third-best on the team. Vina, whose 12-game hitting streak was stopped on Tuesday, leads the team in doubles with seven and is tied in triples with two.

Along with Vina, the Sun Devils continue to get solid offensive performances from the likes of Mike Kelly (.424, 16 RBI) and Anthony Manahan (.443, 24). However, Brock showed concern about the production from specific parts of the lineup.

"Certain guys in the order are not performing right now as well as I'm sure they can," Brock said.

One of those struggling is Todd Steverson. The freshman outfielder has only managed seven hits in 55 at bats.

The Bruins are led offensively by sophomore first baseman

Chris Pritchett and junior catcher Paul Ellis. Pritchett is hitting .489 with five homers and 16 RBI while Ellis has belted 10 homers and driven in 30 RBI with a .396 average.

"Our hitting has been our biggest surprise so far," UCLA Head Coach Gary Adams said. "But we are going to need to get good pitching, good hitting and good defense to get a win out there."

Wrestling to test new top ranking

By DAN ZEIGER
State Press

The most important by-product of the ASU wrestling team's 19-13 victory over Oklahoma State last weekend came on Tuesday as the staff of Amateur Wrestling News selected the Sun Devils the nation's new top-ranked team.

ASU (17-2-2) narrowly edged previous No. 1 Oklahoma State, collecting 312 points against the Cowboys' 310, but ASU received 10 first-place votes to OSU's six.

The Sun Devils take their top-ranked status on the road for their final regular season meet against Cal State-Bakersfield on Sunday.

Coming off its dramatic victory last Sunday, ASU Head Coach Bobby Douglas is hopeful his team will not suffer a letdown against the tenth-ranked Roadrunners (11-4).

"Well, that is always a possibility," Douglas said, "but we're going to be very prepared. This could be our toughest match of the season."

The weekend will be a homecoming of sorts for ASU's Townsend Saunders, ranked third at 150 pounds with a record of 26-3. Saunders won the NCAA Division II 142-pound championship for CSUB before transferring to ASU in 1987. He will return to Bakersfield to face top-ranked Richard Bailey (25-1), who handed both Saunders and Thom Ortiz losses earlier this season.

"Saunders will be ready," Douglas said. "The match at 150 should be a good one."

A key factor concerning Douglas is the confidence level of the Roadrunners, who are undefeated in Pac-10 matches.

"They are a confident team," Douglas said. "They are convinced that they can beat us, and they have said that publicly."

CSUB's strength is at the middle weights, where in addition to Bailey, the Roadrunners have nationally-ranked wrestlers at 142 and 158 pounds.

Ortiz, ranked second at 142 pounds with a 24-1 mark, goes up against CSUB's Steve Morris, fifth-ranked at 24-3.

ASU's Ray Miller, ranked seventh at 158 pounds with a record of 21-8, will be tested by fifth-ranked Jeff McAllister. The Bixby, Okla., native is 5-2 since transferring to CSUB from Oklahoma State, where he was 15-1-1.

"They have a lot of experience with three ranked wrestlers," Douglas said. "Also, their heavyweight has defeated ours, so we won't be favored there."

The Sun Devils' Mike Anderson (10-7-1) will try to avenge his earlier loss to Tom Osendorf (21-7).

ASU will again be without seventh-ranked Andy McNaughton (134 pounds), who re-injured his ankle at the NWCA All-Star Classic three weeks ago. Freshman Wayne McMinn will wrestle against CSUB's Mike Dallas (17-10).

The Sun Devils will return to Bakersfield after a two-week break for the Pac-10 tournament on March 10. Douglas said he is hoping for a good showing to end the regular season.

Swimmers hope for high finish

Your Lucky Number

After completing a school record 11-win season, the eighth-ranked ASU swimming and diving team (11-2) looks to record its best finish ever at the Pac-10 Championship.

"Last season we finished fifth and scored 874 points, but this season we have the realistic opportunity of placing third and getting up near 1000 points," ASU womens swimming Coach Tim Hill said.

The Sun Devils best finish ever was fourth in 1987, the inaugural year of this competition.

Hill believes that top-ranked Stanford will win the conference championship with fourth-ranked California looking good for runner-up accolades. Then it will be a dogfight between seventh-ranked UCLA and ASU for third.

UCLA, who has placed third in all three previous Pac-10 Championships, will be led by last year's five-event all-American sophomore Kristin Stout. In addition, the Bruins have a duo of four-event all-Americans, junior Sheryl Smith and senior Melissa Herndon. In addition to success in their individual events, these three athletes compete in both the medley and freestyle relays.

ASU will counter with two-time All-American freestyle specialist, junior Michelle Thompson, who was the sixth leading scorer at last season's Pac-10s (76 points). Sophomore Heidi Hendricks, who last season recorded a fourth-place finish in the 100-yard breaststroke, looks to finish higher at this season's conference championship.

Hill said he also looks for sophomore Therese Lundin, who excels in the 100- and 200-yard butterfly, the 200-yard medley relay and the 800-yard freestyle relay, to break out and swim very well.

In the diving competition, Hill believes most of the Sun Devils' title hopes lie in sophomore Janae Lautenschlager. Last season, Lautenschlager finished second in the 1-meter dive but looks to capture the individual title this year, as she recorded a Pac-10 best in the 1-meter dive (300.75) earlier in the year.

In the mens competition, junior Drew Johansen has been ASU's most consistent diver in both the 1-and 3-meter dives and looks to be the Sun Devils' highest finisher.

Hill feels that while individual performances are important, the struggle between ASU and UCLA will likely come down to the relays, which has been one of the Sun Devils' strongest events.

"The key to our success definitely lies in our performance in the five relay events," Hill said. "Secondly, we must get as many individuals to score as we can."

ASU diver Drew Johansen will compete in the 1- and 3-meter events. Scott Troyano/State Press

Devils' track team sends four to TAC

By MATTHEW KASTER
State Press

For Lynda Tolbert, Maicel Malone and Toinette Holmes, time is not a problem; all three have qualified for the NCAA indoor championships.

The trio now has time to compete, along with shot putter Shane Collins, at the TAC Indoor Championships Friday in New York City.

For the rest of the team, the indoor season may be growing short. The team travels to NAU, where thin air and a large track help efforts to meet NCAA qualifying marks.

TAC competition is nothing new for Tolbert. Tolbert finished second in the 1989 TAC 55-meter hurdles. She will line up against Jackie Joyner-Kersey for the fourth time this season.

"I usually do double workouts every day, but Coach (Tom) Jones gave us two days to rest before this meet," Tolbert said. "If anything, it's made me stronger."

Maicel Malone and Toinette Holmes will run in the 400-meter dash. It will be the first time either has competed in an indoor championship.

Malone is confident that she could beat world-record holder Diane Dixon. Her first outing against Dixon was also her first quarter-mile on an indoor track.

"Technically, I ran a good race," Malone said. "I went out fast, and I was able to stay right on her shoulder, but I wasn't used to running on the boards."

While Malone, Holmes and Tolbert compete in New York, several ASU athletes will be trying for NCAA qualifying marks at NAU.

Sprinter Ed Lovelace has run a provisional qualifying time of 47.10 seconds in the 400-meter dash, but needs a 46.3 for an NCAA birth.

Triple jumper Lenny McGill has jumped 50-feet-7½, but needs the NCAA mark of 51-feet-7.

Womens tennis heads for weekend set in UCLA, USC

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

There is no doubt in ASU womens tennis Coach Sheila McInerney's mind that this weekend's tennis competition will be a dog fight.

The eighth-ranked Sun Devils will play host to No. 2 UCLA and No. 6 USC this Friday and Saturday at 1:30 p.m. and 1 p.m., respectively, at Whiteman Tennis Center.

Last weekend, the Sun Devils split matches against top-ranked Stanford, in which they lost, 3-5, and against No. 7 California, in a down-to-the-wire 5-4 victory.

McInerney expects today's and Saturday's matches to be equally as competitive as the battles played over the past weekend.

"We feel pretty good about it," she said. "One of our goals was to beat Berkeley and the other goal is to finish higher in the Pac-10. And in order to do that, we must beat UCLA and USC."

In order to defeat top-ranked teams, McInerney said ASU is going to have to play to near perfection.

"If we play well, we should have a great chance against both teams," she said. "But we will have to play all the way down the line, because they are solid all the way down the line."

One advantage McInerney said the Sun Devils may have over the Bruins and Trojans is team balance. She said ASU has equally strong singles and doubles lineups, whereas UCLA excels in doubles and USC in singles. However, she said neither team has a weak singles or doubles lineup.

Another factor in the Sun Devils' favor this weekend is the home court, McInerney said.

"We have always done well at home," she said. "We need to just go out there, give it our best shot and get a good swipe at them."

In the past, ASU matches with UCLA and USC have been close. Two years ago, the Sun Devils defeated the Bruins, while last year they lost a close decision to the Trojans, 5-4.

This season, McInerney said all Pac-10 teams are close in talent, adding that there have been more intraconference upsets this year. She said the talent gaps in the Pac-10 are slowly closing.

From a coaching standpoint, McInerney said she is not solely concerned with winning this weekend's pair of matches. Despite the outcome, she said if her team plays to the peak of its potential, she will consider it a victory.

McInerney said just the experience of competing against high-caliber teams should help the Sun Devils when they travel to Madison, Wis., to compete against fourth-ranked Georgia in the first round of the National Womens Indoor Collegiate Team Tennis Championships.

"Whenever you play a schedule like we have it helps down the road," she said. "Obviously, playing against UCLA and USC will help us against Georgia."
