Lawmakers OK record labels

Donny Osmond comes to state to speak out against measure

PHOENIX (AP) — Pop singer Donny Osmond flashed his perfect teeth, autographed pictures and even sang a few words for an Arizona Senate committee, but the lawmakers weren't singing his song when they voted to require warning labels on risqué records.

The measure, approved 8-1 Monday by the Judiciary Committee, would make it a crime to omit the labels or to sell labeled records directly to minors.

Osmond, who acknowledged that he had a "goody-goody" image, was the recording industry's star witness. Recording executives parked his limousine on the Capitol mall and escorted him for handshaking and autographs before the vote.

The bill's supporters countered with Steve Clifford, an insurance executive who said he had founded the heavy metal group Icon.

Heavy metal "is a destructive lifestyle," Clifford said, testifying in businessman's suit and haircut. "It got me into drug abuse, alcoholism. I thought about suicide. I tampered with Satanism."

Osmond, wearing a black leather jacket and cowboy boots, said he had always had strict morals but had written lyrics that probably would qualify for the warning labels, especially if sung with a different intonation.

The committee's audience included teenagers with T-shirts promoting controversial groups, and many of them groaned at first when he got up to testify. They laughed when he said, "I'm a little out of my element," though, and they applauded when he finished testifying for their side after breaking into song for a few words.

The measure's sponsor, Sen. Jan Brewer, R-Glendale, was among those clutching a picture with Osmond's autograph, but she wasn't swayed.

Her bill would require labels for recordings with lyrics "describing, advocating or encouraging sodomy, incest, bestiality, sadomasochism or any other sexual conduct in a violent context, satanism, murder or morbid violence or which contain lyrics advocating or encouraging the use of illegal drugs."

FIJIs settle in case alleging hazing injuries

By CAROLYN HUFFMAN and DAN NOWICKI
State Press

ASU fraternity Phi Gamma Delta, or FIJI, ended a two-year hazing lawsuit shortly before it was to go to trial Monday by settling with the plaintiff for $30,000.

Former FIJI member Scott Dinin, an ASU student, alleged in his suit that he and other FIJI pledges were paddled and forced to pile goat feces on themselves, causing physical injury and mental trauma.

Related story, page 13.

In addition, the suit stated that Dinin was "coerced and brainwashed" to join in the hazing of others after becoming a full member.

The trial had been expected to last at least a week.

Roger Martin, Dinin's attorney, said the jury had been picked when the offer to settle was made.

"I think ($30,000) is a fairly substantial offer," Martin said. "If you look at the ranges of settlements, psychological damage, as a rule, is not easily converted into dollars, even if you are able to establish negligence."

He added that ASU was not named in the lawsuit because the University "acted responsibly."

John Hobbs, the attorney for the fraternity, could not be reached for comment.

Dinin said he felt vindicated by the settlement.

"Hazing is like racism," he said. "You've just got to take a stand."

Dinin filed the lawsuit in May 1988, shortly after the FIJIs were forced to vacate their campus house and were put on a two-year probation by ASU. The University's actions came after a 22-month investigation into hazing complaints filed by Dinin.

Dinin said that if the suit had gone through a trial, "We would've presented evidence that would have made people sick."

Arizona is one of few states without firm laws against hazing practices, Dinin said.

But Martin said he hopes the settlement in this case will "curb unsupervised initiation rites."

"I think temporarily it will have an impact on it," he said. "And I hope it will continue. (Hazing) is out of vogue."

ROTC called 'cancer,' necessity during campus debate

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

Advocates on both sides of the proposal to ban ROTC from the ASU campus debated for two hours Monday afternoon in an open hearing sponsored by a Faculty Senate subcommittee.

Room 105 in the Social Science Building was filled with almost 100 students and faculty members ready to speak for or against the measure proposed by Roger Axford, professor of curriculum and instruction.

"It is incumbent upon us at ASU to eliminate the cancer of ROTC on campus," Axford said.

Axford

David Connor, a senior in the College of Public Programs, agreed with Axford, saying that his father fought and was injured in the Vietnam War.

"I have a lot of respect for the military and for my father, but I'm 21 years old and I think it's time we draw the line (with the military)," Connor said. "ROTC is something we have to start with."

Jeff Stizza, chairman of ASU's College Republicans, disagreed with Axford's proposal because "people will always fight, and we have to prepare for that to ensure our freedom."

Stizza said his organization is sending letters to the Faculty Senate and ASU President Lattie Coor in support of campus ROTC.

"Size of the force may change, but we will always need the defense," Stizza added. "No one individual should have the right of choosing what students study."

Mark Reader, a political science professor, favored the proposal because "the modern period of violence has outlived its use."

"As far as the ROTC is concerned, their presence is an undesirable presence," Reader said. "Some of us aren't interested in teaching the military of tomorrow, some of us are interested in teaching the citizens of tomorrow."

David Silver, a junior liberal arts major, opposed banning ROTC from campus and compared it to the police academy.

"Police officers are willing to use force to protect citizens rights," Silver said. "I don't protest Dr. Axford's right to speak out against the ROTC, but I do protest his right to take away my right to attend ROTC at ASU."

Silver added that ROTC produces

'No one individual should have the right of choosing what students study.'

—Jeff Stizza

"morally straight, mentally awake and physically strong" leaders.

Kristin Lucas, an "ordinary ROTC student," said she would not be able to attend ASU without the financial support that ROTC is offering her.

"I'd rather be an educated leader of the system than not to be educated at all and lead people into combat," Lucas said, adding that she joined ROTC to become a leader.

Lectures at ASU to help sex addicts

Author, sexual counselor to speak on intimacy, relationships, behavior

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

Support for people addicted to drugs and alcohol is easy to find, but there is a group of addicts who don't know where to get help and are too ashamed to ask.

These people are addicted to sex. The Winners Circle, a campus group, will present two lectures titled "Are You Addicted to Sex?" Sexual counselor Al Ells, director of Samaritan Counseling Services in Scottsdale, will speak about co-dependent patterns, sexual roulette, masturbation and one-sided relationships in his lecture.

The first lecture will be held today in the Farmer Education Building, Room 117 at 7 p.m. The second lecture will be held March 13 at the same place and time.

For the first lecture Ells said he will focus on the issues of intimacy and co-dependency and in the second lecture he will speak more on the physical aspect of human sexuality.

He said his lecture will address healthy and unhealthy dating habits and warning signs that a marriage is in trouble.

As the author of the book "One-way Relationships," Ells said co-dependency is something we are hearing more about and certainly something students should be aware of when in a relationship.

Co-dependency is simply when one person loves another person more than they are loved in return, he said.

"Thinking, 'Well, if I am just a little nicer, a little better, then everything will work out,'" can ruin a marriage, Ells said.

Ells said he will also present some contradicting viewpoints from sexual counselors on masturbation.

"The reason most people masturbate is that they're addicted," Ells said. "If you get a partner who doesn't match your fantasy (when masturbating) you'll have a problem building an intimate relationship with them."

Andy Hogg, a psychologist at Counseling and Consultation and an authority on interpersonal relationships, said students should identify their sexual addictions now, before they become a more difficult obstacle.

'Almost every healthy college student needs intimacy, but when they need sex to feel better, then there's a problem.'

— Andy Hogg

"Almost every healthy college student needs intimacy, but when they need sex to feel better, then there's a problem," Hogg said.

Ignored addiction can cause severely conflicting love relationships and sexual dysfunctions, he said.

Hogg added that people who are in sexually addicting relationships rarely will find the sense of closeness they are looking for.

"A lot of people who have sex addictions need to feel needed and wanted," Hogg said. "(But) when people are in sexually addicting relationships they lose the feelings of intimacy, sexuality and passion."

S. Africa sends troops to quell unrest at home

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — South Africa sent troops into the black homeland of Ciskei on Monday to quell widespread looting and arson following a military coup that ousted the territory's authoritarian president.

Brig. Gen. Oupa Gqozo of the Ciskei army, who seized power Sunday, told cheering supporters the African National Congress and other anti-apartheid groups would be allowed to operate freely under his new government.

South African Foreign Minister Pik Botha said his government intervened at the request of Gqozo, who led the bloodless coup in the nominally independent homeland on the Indian Ocean coast.

More than 50 factories, many owned by Israelis and Taiwanese, were set afire in a second day of rioting and looting in several parts of Ciskei, witnesses said. Two hotels and dozens of vehicles also were burned, they said.

There were no deaths reported in Sunday's coup, but doctors at Cecilia Makilwane Hospital said three people were fatally stabbed and dozens more injured in the subsequent rioting.

"All the shops and factories were burning," said an employee at a local hotel. "Everybody was looting and there was complete chaos."

Rioters, many of them drunk, broke into shops, removed goods, and then set buildings ablaze with firebombs, the witnesses said. Looters used wheelbarrows to haul away stoves, refrigerators and other items, officials said.

Witnesses said the looting spread Monday evening to the black and mixed-race townships outside the South African port city of East London, about 40 miles from Ciskei's capital of Bisho.

Botha said Monday his government would not "entertain any request" to intervene in the homeland, but the troops were sent in shortly afterward when the looting began again.

Gqozo received a rousing cheer Monday when he told thousands of people at a stadium in Bisho that the African National Congress and other anti-apartheid groups would be free to engage in political activity in Ciskei.

The ANC is the main black group fighting South Africa's white-run government. South African President F.W. de Klerk legalized the ANC last month, but some homeland leaders still don't allow the group to operate in the territories they control.

Gqozo made the announcement following meetings

Monday with the ANC-aligned United Democratic Front.

"We have extended the hand of friendship" to the Front, Gqozo said.

He said he believed Ciskei residents would back his government if it had the support of the Front and other anti-apartheid organizations.

In contrast, deposed President Lennox Sebe suppressed

Progressives, Yeltsin gain in Slavic balloting

MOSCOW (AP) — Candidates who want faster reform won elections across the nation's Slavic heartland and Boris N. Yeltsin easily gained a legislative seat in the Russian republic, unofficial returns indicated Monday.

Yeltsin has said he will seek the presidency of the republic, which traditionally means a place on the Communist Party's ruling Politburo. That could return the Communist maverick to the membership he lost in February 1988 for advocating speedier change.

Leaders of popular movements in the Ukraine and Byelorussia, an outspoken television commentator in Leningrad and a defiant editor in Moscow also appeared to have won in Sunday's local and republic elections.

"We're so happy! Such success!" said Irina Rozhenko of the Ukrainian pro-democracy movement Narodny Rukh.

Byelorussia, the Ukraine and the vast Russian republic account for 80 percent of the Soviet Union and more than two-thirds of its 290 million people.

Most of the 1,800 contests for seats in the legislatures of the three republics remained undecided, with no candidate getting the required majority. State TV said fewer than 15 percent were resolved in the Russian republic.

Activists said strong showings in this round nearly guaranteed victories in runoff elections for candidates who want to step up the pace of reforms begun by President Mikhail Gorbachev. The runoffs are expected in two weeks.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Margaret Tutweiler said Monday that, "While, for the most part, these were not multiparty elections, there were, nonetheless, many hotly contested, competitive regional and local races, offering voters a clear choice of candidates and ideologies."

"This represents an important and, indeed, historic step forward in the process of democratization in the Soviet Union," she said.

Defeat of old guard local Communist leaders probably would help Gorbachev's liberalization. He has railed against functionaries who hamper reform, and people hoping to exercise new economic freedoms have told of crippling obstacles erected by local party officials.

Ukraine party chief Vladimir A. Ivashko, considered a moderate protege of Gorbachev, qualified for a runoff against an opponent backed by the Narodny Rukh pro-democracy group. Vitaly I. Vorotnikov, president of the Russian republic, defeated

News Brief

Theologians surprised by exorcism

NEW YORK (AP) — Theologians expressed surprise Monday about Cardinal John O'Connor's disclosure that the rare rite of exorcism has been performed twice in New York in a year.

But other ceremonies dealing with evil spirits, including a baptismal prayer, are more common in the Roman Catholic Church.

O'Connor mentioned the exorcisms during a sermon Sunday and to reporters afterward. He said heavy-metal music spiked with satanic lyrics created an atmosphere conducive to devil-worship and demonic possession.

The cardinal said the exorcisms were approved by the archdiocese's vicar general and appeared to be successful, but gave no other details. He also said the novel, "The Exorcist," is a "gruesomely authentic" portrayal of demonic possession.

According to a story published Dec. 12 in the San Francisco Chronicle, Pope John Paul II recently increased the number of exorcists in Rome and in Turin, where there are a reported 40,000 devil worshippers.

Exorcisms are confidential; no figures are kept on the number performed in the United States, said Bill Ryan, spokesman for the U. S. Catholic Conference in Washington, D.C.

Worker charged with spiking cooler

SAINT JOHN, New Brunswick (AP) — A nuclear power plant worker was charged Monday with spiking a lunchroom cooler with radioactive water that eight men drank before the contamination was discovered.

The eight who drank the contaminated water last month at the Point Lepreau plant have a slightly higher chance of getting cancer, officials said, but are in no immediate health danger.

Daniel George Maston, 33, assistant operator at the plant bordering Saint John, was arrested Sunday in the incident, which at least one power plant worker said appeared to be a practical joke gone awry.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police released few details of the investigation that led to Maston's arrest.

During a court appearance Monday, Maston was charged with causing a noxious substance to be administered with intent to endanger lives or cause bodily harm. The charge carries a maximum penalty of 14 years in prison.

The contamination was discovered Feb. 22 during routine urine checks of plant employees.

Police officials said the day before, a glass of slightly radioactive heavy water was dumped into a 5.2-gallon cooler that provides water to a dispenser that mixes it into fruit juice.

Heavy water is used to cool the power plant's reactor. It is not radioactive itself but the water is exposed to radioactivity from the plant's uranium fuel rods.

Maston did not speak during his 10-minute appearance. Provincial court Judge Bill McCarroll ordered him held until he finds a lawyer and enters a plea Wednesday.

The courtroom was crowded with other workers from the nuclear power plant, but only one, Trent Lamb, spoke with reporters.

He described Maston as a "quiet guy" and said many Lepreau employees believe the water contamination was not malicious but a bad practical joke. Lamb was not among the eight who drank the tainted drink.

Maston does not work in the control room of the power plant, officials said.

Colin Nichols, president of the union that represents more than half the workers at Point Lepreau, refused to discuss Maston or the charge against him. But Nichols said the arrest has eased tensions.

"People are feeling a little more comfortable," said Nichols, head of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 2309. "But there are still a whole lot of questions we all want answered about why someone would do this."

The workers who drank the spiked juice, none of whom have been identified publicly, met Monday afternoon with a doctor who advises the Atomic Energy Control Board, which regulates the Canadian nuclear industry.

The doctor was brought in to answer the workers' questions about their exposure, officials said.

One worker was exposed to almost four times what is considered the annual safe limit of radiation, officials said. The others received lesser exposures.

The annual limit of radiation for workers in the nuclear industry is set at 50 millisieverts. The average person is exposed to about three millisieverts a year, from the sun's rays and uranium on Earth.

Under federal regulations, none of the eight will be allowed to work in areas of the generating station where they would be exposed to radiation for one year.

The Brothers are back

God never said He'd send Rick, Jed as proxies

Lynn Vavreck
Asst. Opinion
Editor

There are a few things that even good friends don't talk about.

Religion, sex and politics have been making enemies of friends for a long time. Maybe it's because these three topics are rooted in normative moral values, the values that comment on how you think the world should be. And, to subject your normative moral values to the scrutiny of others, even friends, is risky — after all, you will be challenged to defend your values. It can be unpleasant.

But this is what has been happening for a week now on Cady Mall.

During the busy noon hours, maneuvering Cady Mall has been challenging, physically and morally.

The well-known campus evangelists, Brothers Jed and Rick, have returned to ASU to save the sinners and stop fornication on our devilish campus. At least that's what they would like for people to believe their purpose is.

But, it seems their purpose, according to the hundreds of students who have been listening to them lately, is pure entertainment.

The crowds that have been gathering around Brother Jed and Brother Rick have been doing a little more than listening. Active participation has become the norm during these noon-time sermons.

Monday for example, one student jumped up on to the concrete bench next to Brother Rick and started to mimic his actions and tone of voice. As Brother Rick sang out against sex, the student demonstrated gesturally exactly what actions Brother Rick was denouncing.

Other students took it upon themselves to yell and lash out at the evangelists. Hecklers and joksters emerged spontaneously as the topics of conversation moved to more personal levels.

Finally, when the evangelists began insinuating that all fraternity men were sinners because they fornicate regularly, the crowd responded with cat calls and other signs, both gestural and verbal, of disagreement.

So, Brothers Jed and Rick have descended upon ASU to save all the sinners and convert the heathens. And they're attracting quite a crowd.

But, the question arises: Does anybody take these guys seriously? Are there any students out there, among the raucous crowds, that listen and think about what is being said, and then change their moral values?

Is it possible to lash out at a group of people, let alone students, and hope to have a lasting impact on their lives? Surely, these evangelists must know they will be lashed back at. Surely they must understand that their insults do not apply to all ASU students. Surely they know that their behavior is not always benevolent; their words can sting.

And all this in the name of Christianity.

Yes, this is the paradox. Here we have two men calling a bunch of young people sinners and telling them they will go to hell if they don't change their lives. This, they believe, is something any good Christian would do for a friend.

But Christianity also demands tolerance of others and their rights. It is called respect, a good virtue to have.

It is beautiful that Brothers Jed and Rick believe so strongly in their faith. It is unsightly what they have let happen to that belief, what students do to that belief and how the whole charade becomes humorous and obnoxious entertainment.

All people have normative moral values, whether they realize it or not. These values make up the governing philosophies by which we live our lives. Some people get these values from religion. Others get them from philosophers, parents, socialization or plain old-fashioned experience. But the most significant thing about your values is that they're yours.

It is futile to try and force your normative values on another person. Campus evangelists, people handing out bibles in airports and even bumper stickers on cars that read "Jesus Saves" are all ways of forcefully attempting to inflict others with your beliefs.

Well, it seems that as long as you live up to the standards of your values, than you should be satisfied. To expect others to live up to those values is unfair.

Religion is the trickiest of all, since most religions are based on a set of values. With all the different populations of the world worshipping different faiths, different gods and different values, it is not reasonable for anybody to believe that his group is the only group with the true belief.

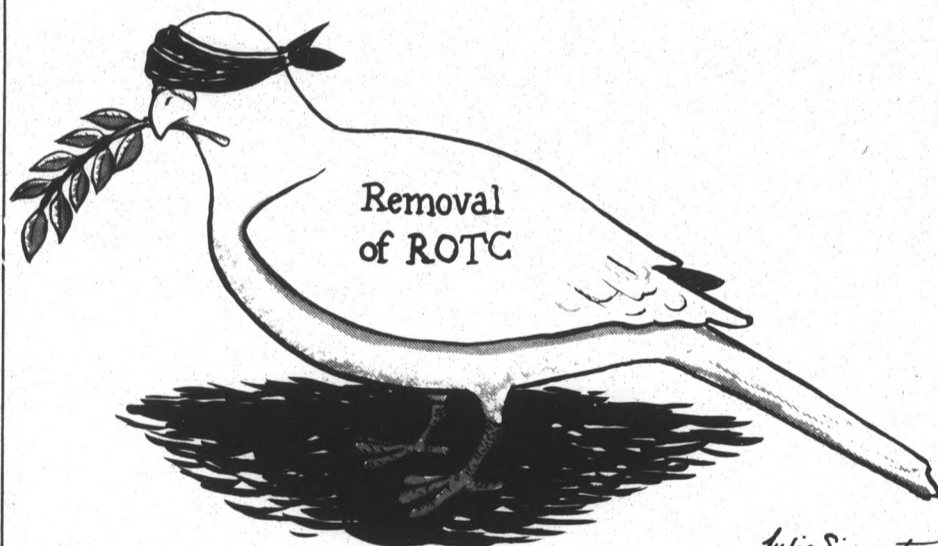

If your values include those of Christianity, like Brothers Jed and Rick's must, then you must know that God sent His only begotten Son to save the world for sinners. God also made it very clear to Christians that someday He will come again to judge the living and the dead.

Note that He said He would come. He didn't say He'd send His Brothers Rick and Jed.

Thanks for the entertainment guys, but today's not judgment day.

And you're not the judges.

Campus evangelists inciting riots

Editor:

The history of this country is about freedom. Men and women have fought and died for freedom of lawful assembly; freedom of expression; and freedom of religion. Should freedom of assembly, access to this campus, and the right to "preach one's gospel," be widened to personal abuse, harassment and condemnation of passers-by? Are we allowing preaching of the gospel to hide under a veil of incitement to riot?

Thursday, February 27th, there was a young man holding a gawdy banner bearing the inscription "Repent! Hell for sinners." He began drawing a crowd by proclaiming the destiny of all but his like was going to be in hell. When questioned as to who was going to hell, he replied: "Catholics, some Jews, Muslims, homosexuals, fraternity and sorority folk, as well as others. Since the crowd to whom he addressed these remarks was a cross section of the aforementioned — they took umbrage with him. After hours of hostile verbal exchanges, the crowd closed the circle around this "campus evangelist" and at least three cigarette lighters were propelled to set his buns on fire.

The point is that no one should have access to the student body to incite that kind of ugliness.

Not only was he creating a nuisance, inciting a riot, but he was flawed in his message.

Should a Jew, homosexual, Catholic or any student who is paying the amount of tuition that is required here be subject to public condemnation just to alleviate fear of law suits or the voice of the ACLU?

The gospel he presented was flawed, Christ came not into the world to condemn it but to save it. Plus the scripture is plain that it is "the goodness of God that brings one to repentance" and finally, the gospel means "good news," this group is presenting bad news.

These church ministries represent the benign pendulum swing of religion on the campus.

This is bad news.

Capital's drug war attracts little attention from locals

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

WASHINGTON — The glassy-eyed man was lying on the sidewalk at the busy intersection, his head resting against the base of a building. I don't know what his drug of choice was, but it was clear that something had fried his brain.

He pulled himself slightly erect, waved a tattered sleeve at a pedestrian, and bellowed: "Hey, man, get religion, you mothuh."

I'm sure that on many street corners in these United States, a bellowing dopehead might have caused a stir. Or at least a mild ripple of interest.

And this wasn't just any street corner. On one side, there was the National Press Building, working-home to many of this country's biggest media organizations and best-known journalists.

Across the street was the magnificently restored Willard Hotel. Abe Lincoln and other presidents slept there. So did Buffalo Bill. So did I. Ain't democracy great?

On another corner was an expensive department store, and a row of fine shops began just behind the shouting man's head.

Again, he shouted: "Git religion, you . . ." His stream of obscenities bordered on the creative. But nobody broke stride. A well-dressed man who had received the dopehead's colorful religious advice, gave him a friendly grin and kept going. Everybody kept going.

And that's the way it seems to be in Washington. There may be a crack epidemic, with competing dealers shooting each other in record numbers, and even the mayor being pinched. But it doesn't appear to distract those who make their livings in government, law, the media, lobbying, politics, big-time labor and the city's other wheeling-dealing industries.

It was a pleasant spring-like day, so I strolled the several blocks from the shouting man to Capitol Hill and beyond, counting human burnouts along the way.

They weren't so numerous that I had to step over them. But I counted more than a dozen slouched on benches, sitting on steps of buildings, or just shuffling along. I can't say for sure that they were all on crack or something similar, but they weren't hooked on bran muffins.

As I passed the Capitol Building, uniformed cops told pedestrians to clear the street. Big cars, carrying important people, were about to arrive. Someone asked: "Who is it?" "I think it's the president of Norway," someone answered.

Just then a young man shuffled along the tree-lined walk. He was wearing dirty old military fatigues and house slippers. Judging from the blank look on his sagging face, his mind was somewhere more distant than Norway. The cops didn't give him a glance and he just went shuffling along.

As I say, they weren't everywhere. It wasn't as jarring as seedy parts of Manhattan or the poor black sections of Washington and other big cities. Most of the people on the streets were well-dressed and appeared to be hurrying somewhere. But the rejects were there. A few were noisy, but the rest were ghost-like, seeming to cringe in shadow even at noon.

It was the contrast that was so striking. There, along the streets of the center of this country's government, dopeheads drifted along or just flopped down, watching the movers and shakers go by.

When I mentioned this to a few people who live and work there, they sort of shrugged it off, as if I had mentioned a pothole or parking problem.

So, while those of us in other parts of the country might read alarming accounts of the drug crisis in D. C., it doesn't seem to have that city in a dither. At least not those who make up the city's core of power. When we overhear them in restaurants, they're talking about money, careers, money, politics, money, government, and money. The poor souls really should have a baseball franchise to get their minds off their wallets.

The fact that their mayor is going to be a defendant in a drug bust, and is sinking deeper and deeper into a legal swamp, is a municipal problem. If he's not mayor, somebody else will be. And in Washington, with national and international political figures tripping over each other, one of the journalistic screechers on the McLaughlin Group has more status.

So even with the regal presence of a federal "drug czar" in their midst, a mayor possibly facing jail as a drug user and a liar, and the president dashing to Latin America to suggest that we escalate the great drug war by unleashing bugs that eat coca leaves, there doesn't seem to be any sense of grave crisis, despite what we read.

And I didn't see anything that looked like a drug war. Not even a paddy wagon to pick up the fallen dopeheads. The attitude brings back memories of the famous Daniel Moynihan phrase: Benign neglect. Live and let live. Or live and let die. Well, maybe that's a subtle form of war.

Reporter, Editor sloppy

Editor:

Once again I am amazed at the poor writing skills and lack of editorial ability of the State Press writers and editors. I am speaking in particular about reporter Gremlyn Bradley and her article about the lecture given by Kim Martin, state coordinator for Arizona Right to Choose.

In this article Bradley refers to Kim Martin as pro-abortion and to the National Right to Life organization as anti-abortion. These two diametrically opposed words are packed with negative images that do not address the facts. By choosing to refer to these groups as pro-abortion and anti-abortion, Bradley editorializes as to what her opinion is and is engaged in dangerous word play. Both of these activities do not belong in an article that is supposed to be reporting the facts of an event. Bradley needs to learn that language is an extremely powerful weapon and choice of words and phrasing should be done with consideration for what is really being said. It is the duty of the press in a free society, such as we claim to be, to report the facts and not let personal bias leak through the cracks between the lines. It is true that a major shortcoming of the English language is its extreme polarity. We have left/right, up/down, right/wrong, pro/anti with no direct manner to express the totality that exists between. However, the true mark of wisdom is to see issues and events as occurring in varying degrees, not in black and white, and to understand that the world of absolutes does not exist in the world of social reality.

Abortion is a perfect example of polarized thinking being unable to explain the issues at hand. The issue of abortion is not simply one of either pro-choice or anti-abortion.

The solution would be simple if that were the case; it is not. Bradley's mistake resides in the fact that pro-choice and pro-abortion are not mutually inclusive words; they are not synonyms. Pro-choice means exactly what it states; that freedom of choice is guaranteed by the Constitution and this freedom includes a woman's right to govern her own body. If a woman's choice is to have an abortion, then that is her choice. If the choice is to refrain from having an abortion, then that is her choice as well. Both of these positions are supported by the Pro-Choice movement. They are not pro-abortion as Bradley reports. To reduce the debate to that level is to make a mockery of the complexities involved. To use the words pro-choice and pro-abortion as synonyms is wrong and is very dangerous because it is an attempt to sabotage the logic of the reader. The tag words that Bradley has chosen do not belong in news article and should be relegated to the editorial page where they belong. Bradley, in failing to recognize her own error, has proven herself to be an amateur journalist with an immature understanding of the power of words.

John V. Engstrom
Senior, English Literature

Editor's Note: The story in question, which appeared in the Feb. 16 issue of the State Press, referred to the group Arizona Right to Choose as being pro-abortion rights, and made mention of the anti-abortion platform of the organization National Right to Life. Arizona Right to Choose was never referred to as pro-abortion. It is the policy of the State Press to use the terms "pro-choice" and "anti-abortion" when reporting on the abortion issue.

Strong support for yearbook subsidy

Editor:

We would like to take this opportunity to commend the ASASU Senate for passing the legislation in support of The Sun Devil Spark yearbook. By unanimously approving the referendum, the Senate made a statement indicating that it believes students should have a say in fee issues that affect us all.

We would also like to clarify some key points about the legislation that students need to understand before making a decision on how to vote on April 3 and 4.

Most importantly, the 'One Dollar' subsidy proposal is the result of extensive dialogue among a wide spectrum of student leaders concerning a problem that faces the yearbook program at ASU. We think this is the best solution.

The Sun Devil Spark is one of very few student traditions at ASU. Under its current budgetary system, it remains at risk of being unable to recover from any single year of sluggish book sales. In other words, the yearbook tradition could be lost once again as it was from 1972-86. We as student leaders and concerned students must take positive steps to ensure its existence.

The yearbook should be made affordable to every student every year. A simple one dollar activities fee would fund the program operationally from year to year and bring the price of a yearbook down below $20.

Finally, when students rallied against the tuition increase, The Sun Devil Spark was in favor of that action. We were not prepared to move forward with the subsidy legislation without the support of students concerned about the tuition issue. What needs to be made clear is that students who are actively involved in the tuition protest are also in support of the yearbook measure. In fact, student leaders across the board, from presidents of major organizations to candidates for every ASASU office, support ensuring the existence of The Sun Devil Spark.

What students need to understand on April 3 and 4 is that they will be voting to sustain an important student tradition and make possible a decrease of over $10 in the price of the yearbook. This will make it possible for virtually all students to afford a yearbook, not just a select few.

Frieder tastes sneaker — again

Editor:

Basketball Coach Bill Frieder is the most quotable source in Arizona since Evan Mehan. As with the previous and unlamented governor, Frieder continually puts his foot in his mouth and exhibits his monumental ego. To wit:

Referring to the players' autograph session for fans after Saturday's win over Oregon, our coach was quoted by Kent Somers (The Arizona Republic, March 4), "We're still promoting the program. In two or three years, we won't be doing that (expletive)." Does that mean that once fannies fill the University Activity Center Frieder will ignore the fans? Is allowing youngsters the chance to meet the players they've cheered for all season an "expletive?"

Frieder has flaunted his ego all season.

Before we began a six-game losing streak he announced, "A winning season and the Frieder name will get us in the NIT," (Saturday, he continued to deflect

Mike Redhair, Alex Austin and the rest of the Devils played hard against both Oregon schools last week. Their losses are not the fault of the players. The fault lies with a coach who has his big men, not his ball handlers, bring the ball upcourt during a press.

Don't blame the players, Bill, they're working their hearts out. And don't consider an extra effort for the fans — who pay your ticket — to be an expletive.

Fine Arts meeting to be held Thursday

By DAN NOWICKI
State Press

An informational meeting for fine arts students interested in running for a position on the new College of Fine Arts Council will be held Thursday at 4:30 p.m. in Room 131 of the Fine Arts Complex.

Nominations for all four executive council positions will be accepted at the meeting. Elections are scheduled for Friday at the same time and place.

On Feb. 11, Associated Students of ASU held a meeting for students interested in council seats. Only one person showed up for the meeting, and one other showed up for the elections the following day. The council seats were left unfilled.

Joe Harper and Danielle Conklin were appointed to the ASASU Senate on Feb. 13 following Sen. Stacey Vogel's resignation. Vogel, who resigned due to what she termed "professional problems," said that ASASU executives were hampering her efforts to form a Fine Arts Council.

Both Harper and Conklin said upon their appointments that forming a council for the college was their "main priority."

The College of Fine Arts has been without a College Council for more than two years.

Michelle Nielson, ASASU College Council coordinator, said one duty of the new council will be to redraft the bylaws.

"Since there hasn't been a college council for two years, somewhere along in the transition the bylaws were lost," she said.

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents on Monday:

- Two ASU students were arrested late Saturday in connection with the theft of license plates from Lot 63. They were cited and released.
- An ASU student was arrested Sunday for driving on a suspended license during a traffic stop at McAllister Avenue and Apache Boulevard. He was cited and released.
- A thief stole an ASU student's $420 bicycle Friday from Ocotillo Hall.
- A vandal caused $100 damage to a door at the Solar House, 800 E. University Drive.
- A vandal caused $50 damage to a door at Sahuaro Hall.
- A vandal caused $50 damage Sunday by breaking a window at a Marriott food stand near the Physical Science Building.

Tempe police reported the following incidents on Monday:

- A man who pretended to have a gun under his jacket robbed a Circle K store of $60 about 1:30 a.m. Saturday. The clerk told police the suspect is the same man who robbed him on Feb. 7.
- In the latest robbery, the suspect entered the store at 1602 N. Scottsdale Road and demanded money from the cash register before fleeing on foot.
- Another Circle K was robbed of $92 about a hour later by a man who pretended to have a gun in his jacket pocket. The holdup occurred at 228 E. Baseline Road and it is unknown if it is connected to the other robberies.

•Two Yuma men were arrested about 2 a.m. Saturday in connection with the burglary of a Tempe home after a resident was awakened by the sound of someone in the house.

Police arrived at the home in the 1600 block of East La Donna Drive as the suspects were trying to get into their vehicle. One suspect was immediately taken into custody while the second man led police on a foot chase through three fenced yards before being captured. Police recovered about $500 worth of property taken in the burglary.

•A 38-year-old Tempe man was arrested Friday night on a charge of selling alcohol to minors after police said they saw him allegedly sell a six-pack of beer to two 17-year-old girls at the drive-thru window at Apache Liquors, 1858 E. Apache Blvd.

The girls told police they have purchased alcohol at that business every weekend for the past six months and have never been carded, police said.

•A 21-year-old ASU student was arrested Saturday on a charge of leaving the scene of an injury accident that occurred at Mill Avenue and Apache Boulevard.

•A 19-year-old ASU student was arrested Friday night for underage possession of a pitcher of beer and for giving a police officer false information at Pizza Doug Out, 411 S. Mill Ave.

•A 22-year-old ASU student was arrested Saturday morning on DUI charges at 900 E. Apache Blvd.

2 men rob couple in Tempe motel

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A Texas couple was robbed at gunpoint in their Tempe motel room early Sunday by two men who said they were police officers. They weren't.

Tempe police said Eddie and Angela Olivas, of El Paso, were asleep about 1 a.m. in their room at the Riviera Motel, 625 N. Mill Ave., when two suspects slipped past the drapes covering an open arcadia door and entered their room.

The couple was awakened by the men, one of whom displayed a small semi-automatic handgun, as they told the couple, "We're the police and you're under arrest," police said.

The suspects then handcuffed the victims and took $5,000 in cash from them. The couple told police the money was going to be used to purchase a vehicle so they could get back to Texas.

After the suspects fled, Angela Olivas was able to free one of her hands from manacles and fled to an adjoining room where she called police.

Police described the first suspect as Hispanic, 5-foot-4, 190 pounds with brown hair, brown eyes and a moustache. The second suspect was Caucasian, 6-foot, 170 pounds with brown hair.

South Africa

anti-apartheid activism in the homeland and detained hundreds of opponents.

Ciskei, a 3,600-square-mile territory of about 1 million people, is one of 10 black homelands in South Africa. None is recognized as sovereign by any country other than South Africa.

South Africa established the homelands in the 1960s to try to create separate, tribal-based states for blacks, while whites would retain control of national politics and the economy.

Neither Botha nor Gqozo, the coup leader, said how many South African troops were sent to Ciskei.

Botha declined to say if South Africa would recognize the military government, although Pretoria has recognized the military rulers that came to power in a coup two years ago in the neighboring Transkei homeland.

Gqozo, 36, said he was encouraged South Africa sent troops to help control the unrest and that South Africa had given no indication it opposed the new government.

Foreign investors, mostly Israelis and Taiwanese, own most of the industries in Ciskei. The previous government attracted foreign capital with generous subsidies that paid all the wages of workers making about $50 a month.

Residents said the factories were a symbol of Sebe's oppressive rule and people were burning them because of the poor pay and working conditions. But many of the people who looted shops were simply taking advantage of the lawlessness, others said.

Gqozo said he and three other officers in the Ciskei Defense Force had formed a Council of State to run the government. He also said he would like to see Ciskei relinquish its nominal independence and return to South Africa. The Transkei homeland is considering a similar plan. The South African government has not taken a position on homelands that want to return to South Africa.

Sebe was in Hong Kong on a trade mission when the military struck. He remained at a Hong Kong hotel Monday and was not available for comment.

Referring to Sebe's alleged corruption and deteriorating education and health services, Gqozo said Sunday, "The final straw ... was the action of the previous president who, despite the grave situation in the Ciskei, saw fit to leave the country when it most needed strong, fair and democratic leadership."

The new government said Monday it lifted the house arrest on all of Sebe's Cabinet members after firing them.

Forum at ASU to address education issues

By KRISTIE YOUNG
State Press

An "open forum" will be held today to allow students to discuss issues in education with Lee Shulman, past president of the American Educational Research Association.

Shulman, president of the National Academy of Education and professor of psychological studies at Stanford, will discuss issues relating to the professionalization of teaching and the National Board for Teacher Certification.

The lecture will be held from 9 to 11 a.m. in Room 210 of the Farmer Education Building. The free forum is open to all students.

ASU education Professor David Berliner said, "It is basically an open forum for the students to be able to discuss educational issues and new developments in teaching with Dr. Shulman."

Berliner said that Shulman is "a distinguished contributor to educational research.

"He will be addressing school superintendents and principals from around the Valley at noon in the MU," he said, adding that Shulman agreed to "stand still for two hours and address the students."

Shulman will discuss tests for board certification (a subject he has been researching for three years), the role of content knowledge in pedagogy and the place of case knowledge in teacher education.

Berliner advised students to "be prepared with questions."

Sen. David Bartlett, D-Tucson, the only senator to vote against the measure, said the definition was so broad that it would include recordings of most operas, Shakespeare and the bible.

Brewer said she was willing to tighten the definitions further to exclude opera and such classics as "Goodnight Irene," with its references to suicide, or "Frankie and Johnny" with references to murder.

Modern lyrics are far coarser, she said after distributing samples to lawmakers.

"It's filthy and it's raunchy and it's bad," she said.

Jason Berman, president of the Recording

Industries Association of American, said RIAA members were meeting next week to try to work out an industrywide label and believed voluntary measures like those of the movie industry should be tried in place of state laws.

And David Bodney, a lobbyist for the National Association of Recording Merchandisers, told senators that making the recordings illegal for purchase by those under 18 would just lead to underground sales with fly-by-night operators bringing the music in from other states.

"What else is that person selling to kids?" he asked. "Crack? Obscene materials?"

ROTC

Barry Van Dyke, chairman of the curriculum and academic programs subcommittee, said he hopes to have a recommendation on ROTC for a committee debate within one week.

The committee will then forward their recommendation to the full Faculty Senate by the March 25 meeting. A representative from each side will then be able to debate the issue during the full Senate meeting.

The Faculty Senate's decision will then be passed on the President's Office for a final ruling.

Soviet Elections

a lone opponent in the city of Krasnodar, winning 71.3 percent of the votes cast.

Both are members of the Politburo.

Preliminary figures showed Yeltsin, who has said he will challenge Vorotnikov for the republic presidency, got 72 percent of the vote in his district of Sverdlovsk in the Ural Mountains. He defeated 11 other candidates, said Anatoly Moiseyev of the Russian Federation Election Commission.

Narodny Rukh members said the movement's leader, poet Ivan Drach, was elected in the first round along with several other prominent activists.

Zyanon Paznyak, leader of the Byelorussian People's Front, got 59 percent of the vote in his Minsk district, said spokesman Victor Ivashkevich. He said activist candidates appeared to have carried cities but party "apparatchiks," including Byelorussian party chief Yefrem Sokolov, won rural districts.

In Leningrad, Bella Kurkova, controversial commentator of the television program "Fifth Wheel," appeared to be the only first-round winner, said IMA Press, an official youth news agency.

"Fifth Wheel" is a public affairs program that includes long segments about politics and such social problems as crime and poor living conditions.

Despite Leningrad's reputation as a conservative bastion, pro-democracy candidates dominated the elections, said Yelena Velinskaya, editor of IMA Press. She said only two of about 150 candidates supported by the ultra-right nationalist group Pamyat survived the first round.

Vladislav Starkov, editor of the country's most popular newspaper, Arguments and Facts, was reported the winner of a seat to the Russian republic's parliament.

Starkov ignored a strong suggestion from Gorbachev that he quit last year after the paper, which has a circulation of 33 million.

printed results of a poll implying human rights activist Andrei D. Sakharov was more popular than Gorbachev.

Unofficial reports said well-known dissident Sergei Kovalyov also won a seat in the Russian parliament.

Nearly 150 million voters were registered to vote Sunday and more than 11,000 candidates vied for 1,800 seats in the three republic legislatures and thousands more places on local governing councils. Official results are expected Tuesday.

Official reports said 86 percent of the candidates in the Russian elections and 80 percent in the Ukraine were members of the Communist Party.

Gorbachev, who was not a candidate, described the elections as a battle between reformers and entrenched bureaucrats, and added: "I am convinced that perestroika will win."

"Our elections involve a new type of people, people who have been given new impetus from perestroika," his plan for restructuring the Soviet society and economy, he told reporters after voting.

Political tension has increased in some regions as direct control from the Kremlin decreases. In recent weeks, Gorbachev has prodded the Communist Party into giving up its monopoly on power and pressed for a new, more powerful presidency.

In Lithuania, candidates of the pro-independence Sajudis movement swept earlier legislative elections and won more seats in runoffs Sunday. Of the 25 candidates elected Sunday, 18 were from Sajudis, according to reports from activists and the official news agency Tass.

Some activists in the Baltic republic want the legislature to vote on secession from the Soviet Union before Gorbachev gets his new powers, which would include the right to suspend the legislature of a republic and send in troops.

VW ON CAMPUS

"Pizzas, trophies and road trips—our Volkswagens deliver."

Andy and Liza Keene
Texas A&M University

Andy and Liza Keene, students at Texas A&M, talk about their silver Volkswagen GTI's.

"My husband Andy and I bought our first GTI in Texas and drove directly to Boston. A few days later we turned around and headed back to Texas, by way of Arizona. That cross country trip was all it took. We liked the car so much we decided to buy a second one."

"Volkswagens have a unique feel that no other cars have," explained Andy. And he should know. Andy's been racing his GTI on the Autocross circuit for years and he has a shelf full of trophies to prove it. When Andy isn't racing, he's delivering pizzas to A&M students. "I don't know what's more challenging—racing Autocross or delivering those pizzas before they get cold." Together, the Keenes' Volkswagens have logged over 200,000 miles. They love their GTI's parked side by side. But we don't know how much longer they can keep them together. Right after we took this photo, Andy ran off to look at a new 1990 Jetta GLI 16V.

Sen. Walker speaks on grasping opportunities, talking initiative

By GREMLYN BRADLEY
State Press

Sen. Carolyn Walker, D-Phoenix, told a small crowd Monday night that she "didn't know A from B about the legislative process" when she first was elected to state office.

Walker

"I walked in with a lot of confidence," she told about 25 people in the speech, which was sponsored by the women's studies department. "A few days later, I had none."

Walker said her interest in politics stemmed from an interest in history and a civics class assignment to watch the Democratic National Convention. "I fell in love with John F. Kennedy and the Kennedy clan, and politics."

In 1972, she told her district's representative, E. Leon Thompson, D-Phoenix, "You know one of these days, I'm going to have your job."

Ten years later, when Thompson retired, she decided to run for his seat. She was told by people two things that she already knew: she was black and she was a woman.

"There's something amazing about not knowing you can't win," she said. With help from her family and some innovative campaigning, she won by 19 votes.

"My brother, macho pig that he is, told me I couldn't win."

Believing one should "move up or move out," Walker decided to run for a Senate seat in 1986.

"I fooled them again," she said. "I won again." As the first black female senator in Arizona, Walker said the Senate "was not used to seeing anybody black in there."

And her life "was never the same again" after the 1986 election of Gov. Evan Mecham.

Walker said she and members from the black community met with Mecham to talk about the rescinding of the Martin Luther King holiday.

"He said, 'I like black people, some of my best friends are black people.' He had no idea that he was insulting a roomful of people."

About the holiday, she said she hopes the Legislature will resolve the issue before the current session ends.

"One day we'll get one," she said. "I just don't know which day."

Walker also touched on her nine current pieces of legislation dealing with domestic violence. Although she does not consider herself a victim, she said her ex-husband was physically abusive.

"People think I'm on a crusade, which I'm not," she said, adding that domestic violence "is a devastating occurrence in one's life."

As for her career in the Legislature, Walker does not see herself in state government 10 years from now.

"Other people ought to have the opportunity to get involved."

To those who want to become politically active, Walker advises joining a precinct committee and taking advantage of opportunities.

"Never let the fact that you're a woman or a minority stop you," she said. "The worst thing that can happen is that you might win."

Greek organizations join to ban pledging rituals

By College Press Service

In one of the biggest boosts to the national effort to end hazing, eight more greek organizations said they would ban their pledging rituals starting next fall.

Two other national fraternities, Zeta Beta Tau and Tau Kappa Epsilon, banned pledging in the fall of 1989, and a host of national organizations, including the National Interfraternity Conference and the American Council on Education, have urged changes in the pledging process.

Now eight more sororities and fraternities announced they would stop making their pledges go through all "activities" except their initiation ceremonies.

"There shall be no 'pledging' or 'pre-pledging' process in any of the constituent organizations," said a statement released Feb. 17 by the Council of Presidents, made up of Omega Psi Phi, Phi Beta Sigma, Kappa Alpha Psi and Alpha Phi Alpha fraternities, and the Delta Sigma Theta, Sigma Gamma Rho, Zeta Phi Beta and Alpha Kappa sororities.

"Hazing is a problem everywhere," admitted Roy Watson, an Alpha Phi Alpha at the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa, "but in our fraternity, we don't condone it."

Filmmaker Spike Lee, whose "School Daze" featured numerous scenes of fraternity hazing, wanted it taken a step aggravated by hazing rituals at the school.

Thirty-one states have passed laws banning hazing — different kinds of mental and physical abuse inflicted on people as a condition of joining some kind of group — but deaths and injuries from hazing have continued. In the greek setting, it's generally limited to men's fraternities.

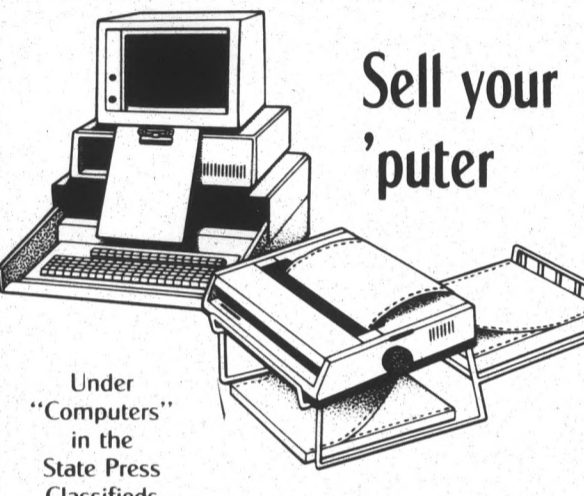

Most recently, three Florida A & M University students who were arrested Feb. 19 for shoplifting told authorities the thefts were part of a fraternity hazing ritual. University officials are conducting their own investigation into the incident. If found guilty of hazing, fraternity members could be expelled and their fraternities could lose their campus charters.

A month earlier, at the University of Florida in Gainesville, a student trying to join a fraternity was arrested for shoplifting, and 13 other students from the Delta Tau Delta fraternity were charged with hazing.

More than 40 students have died in the past decade in hazing incidents.

further. During a speech at Morehouse College in Atlanta, he called on his alma mater to ban fraternities. Last term, Morehouse freshman Joel Harris died of a heart ailment

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — You need two things to be a turkey calling champion, says Walter Parrott. A good ear and an understanding wife.

"You have to have a good rhythm, an ear for rhythm, tones, sounds," said the defending champion at the National Wild Turkey Federation meeting.

And "you have to have a wife that'll listen to it," Parrott said.

But Parrott, 34, of Doe Run, Mo., was out-clucked Saturday by Matt Morrett who strutted off with the national championship.

The 19-year-old Morrett from Harrisburg, Pa., first competed at age 6. He's been gobbling up awards ever since.

Contestants had to give the tree call of a hen turkey, the assembly call of an old hen, the yelp of a hen in springtime, the whistle and call of a lost turkey, the cutting of an excited hen, and the cluck and purr of a hen.

There was a little actor in the callers as they crouched and rose, hands cupped around their mouths, imitating the sounds of a turkey in spring or an old hen calling an assembly of birds.

Judges concentrated on the sound from behind a white curtain and their backs to the caller.

ASU mens gymnastics team not pleased with road swing

By VICKI CULVER

State Press

Even though the ninth-ranked Sun Devils split this weekend's competition, 3-3, ASU mens gymnastics Head Coach Don Robinson said he was disappointed because his team did not perform up to par.

The Sun Devils defeated San Jose State and Western Michigan and lost to Stanford, Cal State-Fullerton and California during three separate meets running Thursday through Sunday on the road.

"It was not a happy weekend, but it taught us some things," Robinson said. "We just need to spend some more time in the gym."

In their final regular season road meet of the season Sunday, the Sun Devils posted a second-place score in a triangular meet with a 271.55, behind Stanford which scored a 275.15. Western Michigan took third-place with a score of 257.70.

The sole event in which ASU led was the still rings with a 46.00 mark, ahead of Stanford's 45.80 and Western Michigan's 43.75. ASU junior Chris Smith had the highest score in the rings with a 9.55.

"Chris Smith was inspired," Robinson said. "He looked absolutely great all weekend."

Smith also led the floor exercise (9.65) and received third place in the vault and high bar with scores of 9.30 and 9.65, respectively.

Robinson said he was also pleased with the performance of junior Christian Rohde, who placed third in the all-around with a 55.1 at the Stanford Invitational.

"I was very happy with Christian Rohde," Robinson said. "He led the team and really competed well."

The Sun Devils' usual high scorer, junior Licurgo Diaz-Sandi, was limited in competition due to a sore ankle. Robinson said the ankle had been bothering Diaz-Sandi for awhile, but finally gave in prior to the weekend competition. Diaz-Sandi will visit a doctor this week to determine the severity of the damage.

Although Diaz-Sandi competed in every event except floor,

Robinson said he was not comfortable in dismounting, which hindered his individual scores.

"If Lico would have been in, we would have beat Cal," Robinson said. "It is hard for a gymnast with a sore ankle to be effective."

Another downfall to Sunday's meet, Robinson said, was the poor facilities of host Stanford. The Sun Devils, who normally practice only on matted surfaces, were forced to work out on cement during their visit. The springboards were also shabby, Robinson said, and one slipped on Rohde in mid-competition.

On Saturday night, ASU again placed second in a four-team meet against Cal State-Fullerton, San Jose State and Western New Mexico. The Sun Devils posted a 276.05 — their highest score of the season, behind Fullerton (280.70). San Jose State scored a 268.70 and Western Michigan a 216.55.

Robinson said Fullerton was a good team and fought hard for its win. He said he was particularly happy with the season-high score ASU garnered.

The beginning of the Sun Devils' hectic weekend began Thursday, when they met California and lost 271.35 to 270.40. Robinson said his team performed extremely sluggishly.

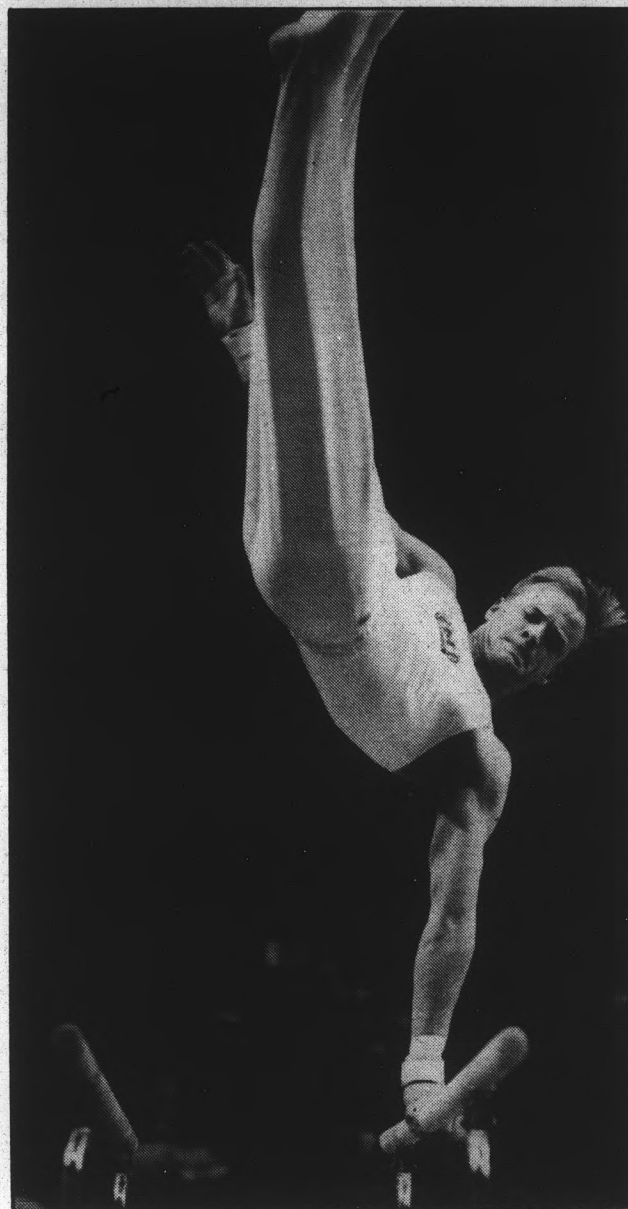

"Thursday, we did not do too well," he said. "Cal-Berkeley is a team that should have never beaten us, but they did."

ASU's Rohde (54.35) and freshman Paul Bedewi (52.85) placed second and third in the all-around, behind Cal's Tim Acito who scored a 55.50.

Despite the fact that ASU competed in three meets in just four days, Robinson said that fatigue should not have been a factor in the final results. However, he said, the Sun Devils were unfortunately complaining of being tired on the last day.

"Being on the road and traveling does take its toll," he said. "But it all depends on the individual — if you think you're tired, you're tired."

ASU will now come home for a long break from action until its March 24 dual meet with BYU at the University Activity Center. That match will mark the Sun Devils' regular season finale before they play host to the Pac-10 Championships.

Baseball loses one; nightcap postponed in tie

Staff and wire reports

STANFORD, Calif. — The ASU baseball team lost the first game of a Pac-10 Southern Division doubleheader on Monday as Stanford's Mike Mussina pitched his third straight complete game and struck out 12 to lead the Cardinal to a 14-8 victory at Sunken Diamond.

In the nightcap, Stanford's three hits in the bottom of the ninth tied the score 7-7, but the game was then suspended because of darkness. It will be completed April 9 at Sunken Diamond.

In the opener, David McCarty hit a three-run homer and drove in five runs for the Cardinal (17-5 overall, 5-3 Six-Pac). Tim Griffin added a two-run homer for Stanford while freshman Jeff Hammonds had three hits and stole two bases. Mussina's 12 strikeouts tied his career high.

Anthony Manahan led the Sun Devils (16-9, 2-5) with a three-run homer in the ninth and three RBI. Fernando Vina scored two runs and hit a solo home run.

In the second game, ASU's Todd Douma pitched a no-hitter through 7½ innings, and took a 5-1 lead into the eighth. With two outs, Douma hit pinch-hitter John Lynch and Hammonds followed with a single that extended his hitting streak to 16 games. Troy Paulsen then cleared the bases with a three-run homer.

The Sun Devils scored twice in the ninth to lead 7-4, but Stanford tied the game with three singles before the game was suspended.

•Due to rainouts on Friday and Saturday and Monday's suspension, ASU will make up the third game of the series on April 9 after its three-game series with California. This marks the second time this has happened to the Sun Devils. ASU will make up an earlier rainout with USC on April 23, after a three-game series with UCLA.
•The Sun Devils will continue Six-Pac play this weekend when California comes into Tempe for three games. Friday's game time, which was originally scheduled for 5 p.m., has been moved to 7 p.m.

ASU women golfers continue streak; freshman wins for 5th time in 6 tries

By KRIS TIMMONS

State Press

The third time is a charm for the top-ranked ASU womens golf team as it captured its third consecutive victory on Sunday at the Jostens' Invitational in Monterey, Calif.

And for Sun Devil freshman Brandie Burton, it was her fifth victory in six appearances as she continues her dominance of collegiate womens golf.

Burton's only non-winning appearance came last month at the Chris Johnson Intercollegiate where she was forced to withdraw after one round of play due to a kidney stone.

ASU (317-308-308-933) finished seven strokes ahead of second-ranked Tulsa (331-304-305-940) and Burton (75-73-76-224), the nation's top amateur golfer, finished two strokes ahead of teammate Amy Fruhwirth.

Fruhwirth, an All-American senior, finished in a second-place tie with Southern Methodist's Leslie Green with a three-round score of 226 at Fort Ord's par-72 course.

Fruhwirth said she played strong and consistent.

"The win was a long time coming," Fruhwirth said. "We didn't do nearly as well as we would have liked to last semester."

Sun Devil Head Coach Linda Vollstedt said that her team came away with a "gutsy" win.

"It was a tough tournament," Vollstedt said. "It was like a mini-nationals because all the teams for nationals were there this weekend. It was a real big victory for us."

Once again, the ASU team was hit with adverse weather conditions.

"It was rainy and cold," Vollstedt said. "The second day there was fog and you couldn't see the hole."

Fruhwirth managed to stay away from the fog, however.

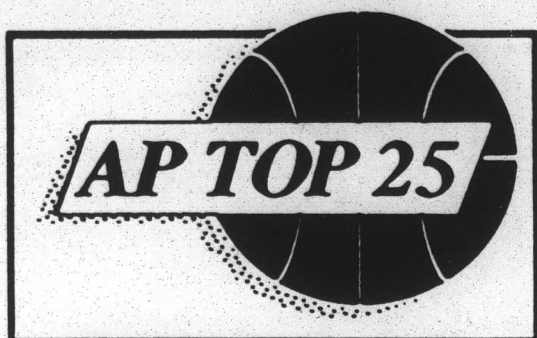

"It didn't really affect my game," Fruhwirth said. "I knew where I wanted to hit the ball and I could usually see the flags. Some of my teammates had a hard time seeing the green or even the flag."

Vollstedt said the victory was a team effort.

"It was a contribution from the whole team," she said. "I was proud of Brandie to win five in a row. And I was proud of Amy. She almost won it. Her attitude was super. It's a pleasure to watch her play."

The 10-year coach said she was pleased with how the entire team played with sophomore Lynne Mikulas still recovering from the flu and freshman Tricia Konz suffering from an inner ear infection.

Konz tied for 24th place at 21-over par while senior Missy Farr finished in a 62nd place tie at 37-over par. Mikulas tied for 67th at 39-over par after recording an opening round of 92.

Third team reaches No. 1 from Big Eight

By The Associated Press

Oklahoma on Monday became the third team from the Big Eight to hold the No. 1 spot in the AP college basketball poll this season.

The Sooners (23-4) jumped to the top from fifth after beating the other two teams from its conference which had been No. 1 this season — Missouri and Kansas — in three days.

The victories were decisive — 107-90 over Missouri and 100-78 over Kansas.

The Sooners received 47 of 63 first-place votes and 1,555 points from a nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters to easily outdistance Kansas (28-3), which dropped one spot to second with 1,473 points.

Oklahoma had its first-ever No. 1 ranking last season when it was in that spot for three of four weeks.

The Sooners went to the top position on Feb. 1 but lost at Oklahoma State three days later and dropped to fifth in the next poll. They rebounded with consecutive home victories over No. 3 Missouri and No. 1 UofA and held the top position for three more weeks before losing to Missouri on Feb. 25.

"We're taking it a little bit different than last year," Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said Monday. "When you achieve a top ranking for first time, like we did last year, it becomes bigger than what you try to achieve on the court. Right now, we're just going to take it in stride and shoot for our final two goals of winning the next two tournaments."

The first of those tournaments will be the Big Eight get-together this weekend in Kansas City where the Sooners could possibly face both Kansas and Missouri. The second, obviously, is the NCAA.

"If there's a time to be number one, I guess now would be it because it means you're playing good basketball at the most important time of the year," Tubbs said.

Oklahoma was only one of nine teams from last week's poll which didn't lose at least one game last week. It's the same 25 teams this week, with the order shuffled to reflect all those losses.

UNLV (26-5) dropped from second to third after losing at Cal-Santa Barbara 78-70. The Runnin' Rebels had three first-place votes and 1,363 points, 66 more than Syracuse (22-5), the Big East regular-season co-champions with Connecticut, which was 10th last week.

BADMINTON

For the seventh consecutive year, ASU captured mens, womens and mixed titles at the Collegiate Badminton Championship in College Park, Md.

The Sun Devils took individual titles in mens and womens singles and doubles play, as well as mixed doubles. Redshirt freshman Tom Reidy was crowned in mens singles, doubles and mixed doubles.

"Tom was definitely the class of the tournament," Head Coach Guy Chadwick. "Basically, he is taking over where (former ASU national champions) Ben Lee and Chris Jogis left off."

First-year Sun Devil Jenny Chan claimed the womens singles championship. Chan and defending champion Liz Aronsohn defeated teammates Denise Jones and Stacey Murty in womens doubles.

"We were waiting to see who would pull it off and Jenny played better than her teammates overall," Chadwick said.

Reidy and Aronsohn took the mixed doubles crown, defeating Chan and McAdam.

"We have such a strong team already and the fact that we will be training together for three more years, leads me to believe that there is no end in sight to our continued dominance of the collegiate badminton competition," Chadwick said.

RACQUETBALL

In its first appearance at the Collegiate Regionals, the ASU racquetball club placed third among 15 teams Saturday in Provo, Utah.

The Sun Devils competed with only five men and two women in a division set up for six men and six women. This regional tournament sets the seeding for the National Collegiate Tournament in Berkeley, Calif., at the end of the month.

UofA took first place in each of the overall events. ASU pushed the Wildcats into tie-breakers in many of the matches. BYU finished second.

The Sun Devils were highlighted by performances from Randy Rafidi, who beat UofA's top player for third, and Sau Tang, who suffered a one-point loss in the womens title game.

Cause of Gathers' death unknown

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Relatives of Hank Gathers learned Monday it will be at least one week before they know what caused his sudden death and Loyola Marymount officials declined to answer questions concerning the basketball star's medical history.

The 23-year-old senior center collapsed during a tournament playoff game Sunday and died less than two hours later. He had collapsed once before, on Dec. 9, and was diagnosed as having cardiac arrhythmia.

Bob Dambacher of the Los Angeles coroner's office said results of the autopsy have been deferred pending the completion of toxicology and tissue studies. "So, there is no determination yet as to the cause of death," he said.

He said the results probably will not be announced for a week to 10 days.

Bo Kimble, one of Gathers' best friends and teammates dating back to their teen years in Philadelphia, said Gathers "was taking his medication."

And Dr. Mason Weiss, the attending cardiologist at Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital, where Gathers died, said: "As far as I know, everything was done to make sure that it was safe for him to play. And to the best of what medicine can do to predict these things, everything was correctly done. He was still taking his medication. He took it Sunday afternoon."

A hospital statement, which was read at a news conference, said in part that Gathers had been monitored regularly since the heart problem was discovered in December after he had fainted at the foul line during a game.

He was tested extensively, then placed on medication before being allowed to return to the lineup. He ended up missing only two games, but was out three weeks. Gathers later convinced doctors to cut back on his medication, saying it made him sluggish, and said afterward that he could feel his body-strength improving.

Teammate Jeff Fryer said Gathers, one of the nation's top scorers, was so excited about playing Sunday that he did something out of character — he took a run around the track at Loyola.

"We thought he was crazy," Fryer said of the 6-foot-7, 210-pound Gathers. "That was Hank. He had never done that before. He was just pumped for the game. My locker's right next to his. He told me and Terrell Lowery that he was going to run on the track. We didn't believe him. Coach Westhead didn't know Hank was out there. I'm not sure how far he ran. He usually jumps rope before a game."

Daniel Freeman Hospitals Inc. distributed the following statement at a Loyola news conference, after it was announced that no medical questions would be answered:

"Hank Gathers was evaluated at Daniel Freeman Memorial Hospital after he passed out during a basketball game in December and underwent a rigorous battery of cardiology testing. A cardiac arrhythmia, a heart rhythm disturbance, was noted and treated with an anti-arrhythmic drug. His condition had been monitored on a regular basis since the December incident."

Meantime, it was an emotional day on the Loyola campus as teammates and friends talked about Gathers and wept.

The Rev. James N. Loughran, university president, called Gathers' death "a great tragedy. There's no explanation for it that I know of. Our whole campus is grieving."

Although Coach Paul Westhead said no decision had been made about whether the team would play in the NCAA tournament, Kimble said he wanted the No. 21 Lions to play as a tribute to their fallen star.

The Lions won the West Coast Conference at 13-1 and earned the berth when the tournament was called off following Gathers' death.

Gathers collapsed at 5:14 p.m. PST Sunday, about 6½ minutes into Loyola's tournament game against Portland. He died at 6:55 p.m.

"Hank and I were like brothers, we were so close," Kimble said. "We overcame so many obstacles. He was up for every game. He gave 100 percent every time he played."

"He's one of the best people in the world," he said. "He was always nice to everyone. I know he's listening. I just love him so much. I'm going to miss you, Hank."

With that, Kimble couldn't go on, and was assisted from the podium. Later, after regaining his composure, Kimble was able to smile when he talked about Gathers and indicated strongly that the team would play in the NCAA tournament.

"Oh yes, definitely, I'm sure we're going to play," said Kimble, who has succeeded Gathers this season as the nation's leading scorer. "We can turn a negative thing into a positive thing. We're going to be up for the challenge, we're going to dedicate this to Hank."

Gathers and Kimble came west together after graduating from Dobbins Tech in Philadelphia in 1985. They went to Southern Cal for one year, then transferred to Loyola Marymount, where they were the main ingredients in college basketball's highest-scoring team the last three seasons.

On Sunday, Gathers had just given the Lions a 25-13 lead with a thunderous slam dunk and was heading back to his spot in the Lions' press, when he dropped to the floor.

Loyola doctors rushed on the court, and after a few moments Gathers tried to get up, struggling to his knees. But then he began to suffer what appeared to be a seizure.

Gathers' mother, Lucille, ran onto the court from the stands, followed by his aunt, Carole Livingston. Their screams and cries rang through Albert Gersten Pavilion as a stunned crowd of about 3,000 watched in silence.

A 25-minute team meeting was held before Monday's news conference. Westhead later said, "There was just a great deal of quietness concerning Hank. There was no sharing of feelings. We who were with him need not talk about it."

"For you, some words are appropriate. Hank the Bank, as I would often call him, the Bankman. He was our guy as a player and as a person. He was the leader of our team. He was the fiber of what we are. Whatever we were, we were Hank's team."

"We called him Bankman because we went to him for everything. We went to him for rebounds, we went to him for points, we went to him for life. He was a walking thunderbolt. He was especially attracted to little kids. Never was there an occasion when Hank would walk away from a little kid."

"Hank represents the little kid in all of us because to Hank Gathers, basketball was play and we all want to play. Basketball was free play, and Hank Gathers was the best in playing freely."

Teammate Fryer said: "Everyone of us looked up to Hank. I've never been around a person who could make a group of people laugh so hard. I'm just glad I had a chance to play with such a great player and person. Our hearts will always be with him."

Gathers became only the second player in NCAA Division I history to lead the nation in scoring (32.7 average) and rebounding (13.7 average) last year, repeating the feat accomplished by Wichita State's Xavier McDaniel five years ago.

Gathers figured to be a first-round selection in this year's NBA draft. A fifth-year senior, he opted to pass up the draft last season, saying at the time, "I just think there's more for me to do here."
