ASU to pay ACLU fees in Danforth cross suit

By NICOLE CARROLL
State Press

ASU has agreed to pay more than $4,000 to the Arizona Civil Liberties Union for legal fees the ACLU incurred during its court battle to remove the cross atop Danforth Chapel, the ACLU's attorney said Wednesday.

Last month, a Superior Court judge sided with the ACLU in a lawsuit and ruled that the religious symbol must be removed, but the groups defending the cross were given 30 days to appeal the decision.

The attorney who is representing the Christian groups said they have not decided if they will file an appeal.

"It (the charge) is probably fair," ASU General Counsel Bruce Meyerson said. "Everyone had the opportunity to have their say."

Meyerson said the money will come out of a budgeted fund that his department uses for outside legal fees and court costs.

ACLU attorney Ted Mote said the total costs were more than $6,000, but that $2,000 of the fees are the responsibility of two campus Christian organizations that were intervening defendants in the suit, Campus Aglow and the Christian Law Students Society.

Mote said the ACLU promised the interveners in December that it would not hold them responsible for fees if the ACLU won the case. Mote said the organization did this so the student groups could voice their concerns in court.

"While we disagree with their position, they should not be discouraged from participating because of money," he said.

The ACLU filed a lawsuit in October 1989 against the Arizona Board of Regents and then-Interim President Richard Peck, asking for the removal of the cross on the grounds that it was a violation of the constitutionally mandated separation of church and state.

In December, the two ASU organizations became intervening defendants in the suit when the ASU administration withdrew from the matter, claiming it wasn't central to the educational mission of the University.

The 30 days allowed for an appeal will begin when the judge approves a statement signed by all the attorneys involved with the suit, stating all parties understand the terms of the court's decision.

The judge is expected to sign the agreement next week, Mote said.

Associated Students of ASU President Paul Larson said time delays, hurt feelings and extra costs could have been avoided if the matter had been handled internally when the issue was first raised.

Last fall, the ASASU Senate, Faculty Senate and Interfaith Council voted to have the symbol removed, while an ASU Classified Staff Committee survey supported retaining the cross.

Students meet with officials in closed session

By DAN NOWICKI

University officials met behind closed doors Wednesday with the student leaders of last month's tuition protest to discuss potential strategies for lobbying the state Legislature on various quality of education issues.

Chris Stiles, a chief protest organizer and an Associated Students of ASU senator, had previously stated that all negotiations between protesters and University officials would be open to the press.

Wednesday's closed meeting was defended by Stiles, who said the meeting was closed because "it was in the best interest of the students."

"The last thing we want to do is give the impression that the students are in league with the administration to hedge

Tempe radio stations' license pulled

By KEVIN SHEH
State Press

The Federal Communications Commission's review board stripped Tri-State Broadcasting Co. of its license to operate Tempe's KUPD-FM (97.9) and KUKQ-AM (1060) in a decision made late Tuesday.

The stations will not be forced off the air, however, unless Tri-State loses an appeal of the decision.

The review board's decision, which affirmed a 1988 ruling by an administrative law judge denying Tri-State's application for renewal of its broadcasting license, said the company deceived the FCC.

"(It) was a misrepresentation issue," said Allan Sacks, the FCC review board's chief for law.

The review board is only the first level of appeal. Leland Blair, the FCC review board's senior staff attorney, said that Tri-State can still appeal the case to the full FCC, the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington, D.C., and the Supreme Court.

The review board report alleges that Tri-State misled the FCC about the roles station executives Robert Melton and Barry Leverant played at KUPD/KUKQ.

Radio stations KUPD/KUKQ, 1900 W. Carmon St. in Tempe, were stripped on Tuesday of their license to broadcast by the FCC, pending an appeal of the ruling.

According to FCC documents, Tri-State claimed that Leverant was the KUPD/KUKQ general manager, handling the station's affairs on a day-to-day basis. In fact, says the FCC, Melton — who was supposedly acting only in a non-supervisory role — actually managed the station.

Tuition increases decline nationally

From Staff and Wire Reports

Many U. S. colleges and universities are announcing some of the smallest tuition increases in a decade for next fall. But as students here know, ASU is not one of them.

Nationally, college officials credit themselves with cutting costs, especially in administration, and passing the savings on to students.

But some higher education leaders believe next fall's modest increases also are a response to a growing sense of outrage among students, legislators and others after a decade in which tuition increases were far in excess of the nation's inflation rate.

"I think we're approaching the end of the big increases," said Robert Atwell, president of the American Council of Education. "What's doing it is the demographics, the student response, the legislative response in some cases, the governing boards getting interested in this issue, the editorial boards of newspapers and magazines."

Average tuitions rose by 5 percent to 9 percent during the current school year, according to the College Board's most recent annual college cost survey.

ASU's planned increase for fall 1990 will be 8.5 percent over current tuition for Arizona resident students.

But the increase for non-residents — $1,000 more than this year's fees — is an 18.2 percent leap.

Especially sobering, say Atwell and others, has been a recent falloff in applications at many colleges, including at top ones such as Harvard, suggesting that schools no longer can simply raise their rates with impunity.

Stanford University is raising fixed student fees by 5.25 percent in 1990-91 to $20,210, the smallest increase in 15 years, and considerably less than the 8 percent hike for the current year. The smaller increase is due to a $22 million cost-cutting program, according to school officials.

This week, Massachusetts Institute of Technology announced its rates for next fall will rise to $20,700, a 7.1 percent increase, slightly less than the 7.2 percent the previous year.

The University of Michigan and Wayne State University are holding increases to the lowest level in years — 6.5 percent. A year ago, Michigan posted a 9.6 percent increase.

Although many schools are announcing only small increases, some like Richard Rosser, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities aren't ready to declare an end to the college cost spiral.

He and others point out that next fall's announced increases are "all over the map," with some still in double digits. And students on several campuses have protested steep hikes in recent weeks:

- At the University of Miami, where costs are headed up 9.9 percent to $18,212, about 150 students wore black armbands and carried a coffin to mourn the "death" of affordable tuitions.

- Syracuse University students boycotted school owned profit-making outlets in January to protest a 9.94 percent tuition increase that will raise annual costs to $17,588. During a nationally televised basketball game, students also displayed signs protesting the increase.

- In Oklahoma, 10,000 students attending public colleges and universities presented regents a petition protesting proposed tuition increases ranging up to 12.5 percent. Last year, rates rose 16.6 percent.

- And at ASU, about 500 students demonstrated last month after regents voted to raise yearly tuition by $116 for in-state students to $1,478, and $1,000 for out-of-state students to $6,484.

Such protests would seem to indicate a mood change from previous years when students paid their tuition with barely a murmur even as rates were climbing by as much as 20 percent.

Next fall's more modest increases also may reflect nervousness in academia over a continuing U. S. Justice Department investigation of at least 56 private colleges looking into whether school officials are improperly collaborating in setting tuitions and financial aid packages. State Press reporter Carolyn Huffman contributed to this report.

White House: Libya's chemical arms 'threat'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House said Wednesday that Libya has renewed production of chemical weapons, posing "a major threat" and requiring "vigorous action" to shut down the plant.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater refused to exclude the possibility of a military strike to knock out the poison-gas plant.

"We don't rule out anything," he said.

However, Fitzwater also suggested the plant could be closed if foreign suppliers denied it the raw materials needed to produce chemical weapons.

"The international community should step up its efforts to deny Libya the ability to continue operating the plant," he said.

Chemical weapons are considered the poor nations' atom bomb because they are relatively cheap to produce and hard to detect. Libya is one of about two dozen countries considered capable of or actually producing poison gas, which was used by Iran and Iraq in the Persian Gulf war.

The latest U. S. charges underscore the hostile relationship between the United States and Libyan dictator Moammar Gadhafi. Tensions reached a crisis point in 1986 when the Reagan administration ordered that Tripoli be bombed.

Fitzwater said the United States was consulting with other governments to express serious concern about the facility.

The plant at Rabta, 60 miles south of Tripoli, is producing limited quantities of mustard gas and nerve agents, U. S. officials said.

"Rabta is dangerous and becoming more so," Fitzwater said. "This points to the necessity for heightened international vigilance of Libyan procurement activities and for vigorous efforts to stop the operation of Rabta."

Asked what he meant by "vigorous action," Fitzwater said, "We aren't willing to speculate on what specific efforts, but nothing is ruled out."

He would not comment on the type or quantity of weapons being produced.

"Any amount is a major threat," he said. Gadhafi's regime has "a history of terrorism activities and a history of erratic military behavior," Fitzwater said. "And therefore, that is the most immediate threat."

In 1988, the United States raised concerns about Rabta and persuaded West German companies and other foreign suppliers to stop providing technical assistance. U. S. officials said then that Libya had stopped work on Rabta before reaching full production but maintained an assembly line.

Fitzwater said production resumed recently, and West German politicians have said that Libya had produced enough gas for 1,000 artillery shells.

Fitzwater declined to discuss which countries were supplying chemicals to Libya.

"We certainly would urge all countries to survey their internal situation, inventory their chemical production facilities and to make their own judgments that they are not a source for any of these chemicals."

"We don't really know how the chemicals are getting there or where they are coming from," Fitzwater said. "But there are so many routes, again I urge you not to focus on who's giving them chemicals, but to focus on Mr. Gadhafi and Libya."

Gadhafi, who has steadfastly denied Libya was producing chemical weapons, says the plant was designed to produce pharmaceutical drugs.

JANA, the Libyan news agency, said in a dispatch that an unnamed official source at the Libyan foreign ministry "disclaimed" reports that Libya has produced "quantities of chemical weapons in (the) Rabta medicine factory."

The source, according to JANA, contended that "such allegations aired at present by some media circles aim at creating a state of suspicion" in light of efforts by Libya and other Arab African nations toward economic and political unity.

Prosecution rests in Valdez case; charges remain

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A judge Wednesday refused to dismiss charges against Joseph Hazelwood after the prosecution rested its case and the defense offered a new theory on why the former Exxon Valdez skipper should be cleared.

Attorney Dick Madson argued that Hazelwood should be acquitted of the charge of operating the vessel while intoxicated because he technically was not in control of the tanker when it went aground March 24, causing the nation's worst oil spill.

Basing his argument on case law involving drunken driving, Madson said Hazelwood's decision to go below and turn over control of the bridge to the third mate absolves him from responsibility whether he was drunk or sober.

He drew the analogy to a person who is intoxicated, gets in a cab and tells the driver where to go. If the driver runs a red light and hits a school bus, then the person in the back seat giving directions can not be liable.

Assistant District Attorney Brent Cole said Coast Guard regulations clearly require the captain to be sober, no matter where he is on the ship. But the judge noted that Coast Guard regulations do not apply in the trial because Hazelwood is charged under state law, not federal.

Still, Superior Court Judge Karl Johnstone refused to drop the charge, saying "reasonable minds can differ" on the allegations.

He also declined to dismiss the felony charge of criminal mischief and two other misdemeanors, reckless endangerment and negligent discharge of oil.

Hazelwood's defense opened with testimony from a Valdez flower shop owner who said the master bought flowers to be sent to his hometown of Huntington, N. Y., on March 23, before he sailed.

The prosecution rested its case after Madson tried to poke holes in an expert's testimony that Hazelwood was drunk while in command of the oil-laden ship.

Hazelwood, 43, could get up to 7 1/4 years in prison and $61,000 in fines if convicted on all counts.

Pro-Iran group denies hostage release imminent

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A pro-Iranian underground group holding two American hostages in Lebanon said Wednesday it does not intend to release the captives, and it urged attacks on U. S. targets.

The group also accused the United States of planning a military operation to free the 18 Western captives.

The statement was released by the Revolutionary Justice Organization just hours after Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani said he wants the issue of Westerners held in Lebanon resolved.

"We tenaciously cling to keeping America's nose in the mud under our feet. There is no intention to release hostages,"

Cicippio

Revolutionary Justice said in an Arabic-language statement.

The handwritten statement was accompanied by a black-and-white photograph of hostage Joseph Cicippio of Valley Forge, Pa. Cicippio, acting comptroller of the American University of Beirut, was kidnapped Sept. 12, 1986 in Lebanon.

Agreement would boost U.S.-Soviet air travel

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and the Soviet Union plan sharp increases in air service between the two nations, ending cutbacks that began with the 1979 Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, a State Department official said Wednesday.

The official said that under a tentative agreement reached in London last week, U. S. airlines would increase scheduled service to Moscow and Leningrad and gain new rights to serve six additional Soviet cities, including two in the Soviet Far East.

These cities include Kiev, the capital of the Ukraine; Riga the capital of Latvia;

Minsk, the capital of Byelorussia; Tbilisi, the capital of Soviet Georgia; and Magadan and Khabarovsk in the Soviet Far East.

Confirming the tentative agreement, State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman said Soviet airliners would be permitted to increase trans-Atlantic service to New York City and Washington and would gain new rights to serve Chicago and Miami with onward service to two undisclosed points in South America.

Soviet air service over the Pacific also would begin to Anchorage, Alaska and to San Francisco with a mandatory stop in Anchorage, the department said.

Additionally, both nations would be allowed up to 100 charter flights a year over the Atlantic.

Positive consideration also would be given to additional charter flights between the United States and the Soviet Union over the Pacific, she said.

Airlines of both nations would also have the right to increase the number of weekly flights and to increase the number of airlines designated to serve the expanded routes.

Sandinistas distribute guns in wake of defeat

JINOTEGA, Nicaragua (AP) — Sandinista leaders say they'll hand over the government on April 25, but their local forces don't appear ready to hand over their guns.

The army, a party organ, is delivering truckloads of assault rifles to civilians in Jinotega and Matagalpa provinces who live in the poor neighborhoods the leftist Sandinistas regard as their "social base."

"All the barrios have guns. They are all defending their land," said Francisca Castileblanco, a 52-year-old tortilla vendor, showing off her new AK-47.

The Sandinistas have said they will "defend the conquests of the revolution," including opposing any efforts to return land to previous owners and possibly other aspects of the conservative economic policies of the new government of President-elect Violetta Barrios de Chamorro.

Honesty

Society has made lying acceptable, expected

Lynn Vavreck
Asst. Opinion
Editor

"Honesty is such a lonely word, everyone is so untrue."

Billy Joel

Times are changing.

A good indication of this is that recently people have been preceding the word "honesty" with the word "old-fashioned."

Honesty is quickly becoming one of those archaic terms, used only when someone has an idiosyncratic tendency. An honest person is becoming someone who is relegated to the group of people who are different or not normal.

Consider some current events. How many times have students been promised things that they never receive? The regents and the administration have been caught red-handed in downright dishonesty. Recently, a local journalist was caught lying about his identity to get information. On a national level, examine our government. We have mayors speaking out against drug abuse and then running to the nearest bathroom for a fix. We have a president who has conditioned the White House press corps not to believe anything he offers as the truth, and we have had military personnel lying to Congress.

Then there's Ev Mecham. Dishonesty seems to be running rampant all around us. And instead of upsetting people and making them cling to the shadows of honesty that remain, people are beginning to accept dishonesty as a fact of life. Soon people will be examining their friends, public servants and spouses along the lines of dishonesty instead of honesty. We will begin hearing things like, "Well, he's only a slightly dishonest politician," or "She is the least dishonest person I know."

The problem with this is that we will lose track of reality. After all, when dishonesty becomes acceptable to society, people will be encouraged to tell little white lies, which will grow into bigger lies, and eventually, no one will remember what the truth is.

George Washington believed that the title "honest man" was the most enviable of all. Thomas Jefferson said, "Honesty is the first chapter in the book of wisdom." Thoughts like these should not be discarded easily. They prompt us to think about what we have let happen to our society now that we have let liars and dishonest citizens gain positions of respect.

Constant lying cannot be a pleasurable or easy way to live. There must always be that fear that someone will find out what you don't want anyone to know. Another difficulty is the brain power that it takes to create a dishonest scheme and then the determination and intent it takes to knowingly lie to people who trust you. This type of life cannot make anyone happy. It is far simpler and more enjoyable to tell the truth, to let people who respect you know how you're feeling.

But maybe this type of honest living isn't as easy as lying.

When the chips are down, it seems most people will do what is easiest, and if that means doing something dishonest and then lying about it to spare themselves grief, that is what they choose.

With a little practice and conviction though, honesty becomes just as easy as lying.

There is not much we can do to help people like Mayor Marion Barry, Ollie North or George Bush to practice living honestly. But, there is something we can do for ourselves. It is time to examine the honesty of our lifestyles. If we are not careful, we all might get trapped in the charade of dishonest living.

Most people are surprised at how many times they are dishonest in one day. If you're unsure of how to measure your level of honesty, try this exercise developed at UCLA.

Everyday, you wake up with an honesty rating of 10 points. As the day progresses, you must take away one point every time you are dishonest with other people or with yourself. The goal is to get as high of a score as possible, but it is not easy! Little things detract from your score, like telling a friend you weren't sleeping when he wakes you up with a phone call at 6 a.m. The goal? To live everyday as close to a 10 as possible.

It's important that we examine our lifestyles and bring honesty back into society as a critical quality. We must not let dishonest people walk away from their lies as if it were OK to take advantage of another's trust. Without being vindictive, it is time to make dishonest people realize that honesty is the best policy.

"Old-fashioned honesty" is a phrase that cuts directly to the degradation of truth in today's society. It is time to return to the expectations of that old-fashioned honesty. Public leaders and people of prominence may set the standards on many things, but this is one case where we, the people, can create the expectation for them to live up to.

"Let us begin by committing ourselves to the truth — to use it like it is, and tell it like it is — to find the truth, to speak the truth, and to live the truth." Richard Nixon said that as he accepted the GOP presidential nomination in 1968. Those are powerful words from a man who didn't believe them as much as he spoke them.

We owe it to each other to believe in honesty, to use it like it is and tell it like it is. If we don't, we are being dishonest with ourselves, and the presence of that "old-fashioned" honesty in anybody's life won't make a bit of difference for anyone.

Giving them what they need

Editor:

For days, some ASU students have been trying to counter-argue the heterodoxy preached by some campus evangelists who label everybody else but themselves as sinners. Therefore, according to them, all of us should either be saved or sent to hell. I greatly appreciate the strong resentments held by the students here. However, I couldn't help but think about the other side of the coin.

Students are actually helping the fanatics promote their ideas.

These people are not going to be defeated by a strong outspoken student reaction; moreover, they thrive on such a reaction.

What they need is what the students have so far given: the audience and the publicity.

The moment we leave them alone will be the moment they collapse.

Remember: Any demagogue needs an audience.

Japanese corporations have a yen for charity in U.S.

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

It's almost as bad as the hiccups. A song starts running through your mind, and you can't get rid of it. You find yourself softly whistling or humming it. In idle moments, it's there in the back of your head, bum dee, bum, dee bum.

Usually the song sneaks in after you hear it. But the tune that has been plaguing me started after I read a news story out of Japan.

It seems that the Japanese foreign ministry quietly called together about 300 of the country's top businessmen and offered them tax breaks if they would give handouts to the United States' needy.

They didn't use the word "handouts," of course, but that's what it amounts to.

The ministry said the tax breaks would be given to Japanese companies that do business in the U. S. and make contributions to schools, hospitals and charitable and philanthropic organizations.

Because the Japanese government will be providing the tax breaks, that means the government will be actually picking up the tab. And, in the long run, that money will come from Japanese taxpayers.

So we'll be getting charitable handouts from Japanese citizens as well as their corporations.

When I read that, the song started up. It's called "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime." And it begins:

Once I built a railroad, made it run,

Made it run against time.

Once I built a railroad, now it's done

Brother, can you spare a dime?

It's an oldie and probably not familiar to those without some gray in their hair. Two songwriters, "Yip" Harburg and Jay Gorney, became angry and wrote it in 1932 when they saw so many jobless men panhandling on the streets during the Great Depression — men who had fought in World War I and helped build this country.

But to get back to the proposed Japanese handouts.

Apparently some Japanese officials are worried about American public opinion. They've seen polls showing that more Americans fear Japan's economic tactics than fear the Soviet Union.

And they sense that many Americans think we're getting the short end of the trade stick. That may or may not be true, depending on which expert you believe.

But it is a fact that while the Japanese sell us cars and TV sets like hotcakes, they hinder many American businesses, such as Toys "R" Us, from opening outlets in their country.

And while they buy up American businesses and real estate, an American owning a major piece of stock in a Japanese corporation can't even get on the board of directors.

So the Japanese tycoons are being urged to show that they're really good guys at heart by tossing some of the dollars they make here at our worthy causes.

Ah, there comes that song again:

Once I built a tower to the sun,

Brick and rivet and lime.

Once I built a tower, now it's done.

Brother, can you spare a dime?

It's not clear how the Japanese business men feel about their government's proposal. While most American corporations make a point of having executives take part in do-gooder activities, and many establish big charitable foundations, that's not the Japanese style.

And there's the problem of Japan's food industry being angry because its businessmen think cheaper American food imports might cut into their market, lowering their profits, and putting their people out of work.

Their anger shouldn't be a surprise. Nobody likes being tossed out on the street because of low-cost foreign competition. Many unemployed American autoworkers, and those who once worked in TV and radio factories, surely understand how threatened Japanese workers might feel.

Anyway, if any of the Japanese corporations go along with their government and thrust money at our needy, it will be basically a public relations gesture to make them appear likeable. But, what the heck, as the old saying goes, you shouldn't look a gift fish in the mouth.

Nevertheless, the thought of this country being on the receiving end of charity from Japan is kind of embarrassing. I don't want to sound like Lee Iacocca, but have we really slipped that far?

Ah here comes that pesky song again:

Once in khaki suits,

Gee we looked swell

Full of that Yankee-Doodle-Dee-Dum.

Half a million boots went sloggin'

Through hell, I was the kid

With the drum.

Say, don't you remember?

They called me Al.

It was Al all the time.

Say, don't you remember?

I'm your pal.

Brother, can you spare a dime?

Will students fight for the $5.6 million?

Editor:

I just read in the State Press about the $5.6 million in surplus that the Joint Legislative Budget Committee didn't expect. Well, neither did I, and that's why I'm disappointed. But, luckily, we were told about it in advance this time.

According to Paul Larson, the final budget won't be coming out until April or May, so that gives anyone who cares about where their money goes enough time write letters, organize, petition — anything to let the Legislature know that we could definitely use the money here, and why not, since it belonged to us in the first place.

I want to organize, but since public opinion is so all-fired important, maybe I should wait for the public to say something. But by then it will probably be too late. I want to petition, but I'm afraid that nobody will be willing to stick their necks out, since there will be names and numbers on that paper.

I want to write a letter, but I don't think it will make a difference, it is just one letter. Students, faculty and staff, which of these is your excuse?

Animal rights really means mammal rights

Joseph Sobran
Universal Press Syndicate

WASHINGTON — The animal-rights movement has arrived. It's in. Not just respectable, but down right chic. It's become the subject of an approving cover story in The New Republic. Any minute now it will appear in the Style section of The Washington Post.

Let's lay our cards on the table here. I love dogs. I like cats. I've never met a porpoise, but I'm sure they're as adorable as they seem on TV. I'd hate to see the whale, or any other notable species, become extinct. I've had mild qualms about eating ham ever since I read an article saying that pigs are highly intelligent animals which, given a chance, are as affectionate as dogs. I wince at the lobster tanks in swanky seafood restaurants. I marvel at spiders and don't like to kill them. All creatures great and small have their place, as far as I'm concerned.

But this isn't the whole story. I have mixed emotions about our animal friends. The other night I had a nightmare that a lion had broken out of the zoo and wandered into my house. I tried to make the kids get into their rooms and close the doors but they didn't take it seriously. (I have mixed emotions about them, too.) The lion, to give him his due, didn't cause any trouble, but he sort of took over the place, and it made me nervous.

I know lions are magnificent beasts and all that, but they stink. The male will let his mate bring home the bacon, as it were — usually some poor antelope. Then he eats as much as he wants. If he's really hungry, he may leave nothing for her and the cubs. They may all starve. Literally. He doesn't care.

I regard this sort of behavior as boorish and insensitive. It suggests a feeble commitment to family values. And suggests an even weaker commitment to the rights of antelopes.

And here, as I see it, is the crux. It's one thing to say we should be reasonably kind to the animals we encounter. Who could argue with that? But it's another thing to say they have "rights."

In the first place, they don't even claim rights for themselves. They certainly don't recognize each other's rights. So any rights they have would be exclusively man-made, at least until we could raise their consciousness, which might take millions of years.

That would put us, the human race, in the position of policing the entire animal kingdom, making sure they didn't violate each other's rights. After all, if they have rights, these are not just rights that inhibit us humans in our dealings with them, but rights against each other.

'And what if, after all our efforts, the spiders simply refused to live on tofu? Can we really blame them for that?'

We could reduce our own work load by allowing each species to police itself, but we'd still have to protect weaker species against predators: the antelope against the lion, the rabbit against the fox, even (if we mean business) the fly against the spider.

If we succeeded the predatory species would become extinct. This would be a pretty self-defeating victory for animal rights. One way around it might be to put the predators on a different diet, which it would be up to us to produce. We're talking about a lot of soybeans. Before we act rashly we should commission a feasibility study from the Department of Agriculture.

And what if, after all our efforts, the spiders simply refused to live on tofu? Can we really blame them for that?

Or are we really serious about protecting the fly? A small incident may be illuminating. A visitor to my house once found me engrossed in a TV documentary showing a fight between a desert rat and a scorpion. "I always root for the mammal," I explained.

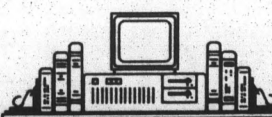

Before you condemn me, look into your own heart. Isn't this seemingly activist sympathy really behind the animal-rights movement? I think so. The whole movement is focused on mammals. They are felt to be "cuter," more like "us," in their intelligence, warm blood and, all too often, fur. Their pain and suffering are felt to matter more than those of other classes of animals.

The double standard is evident in the movement's assault on the tuna fishing industry. These people aren't upset about the slaughter of tens of thousands of tuna. The hell with the tuna. All they care about is a few dolphins, which whimper pathetically when they get caught in the net. If there was ever a case of the squeaky wheel getting the grease, this is it.

Let's call this movement by its right name: the mammal-rights movement. And before we cave in to its agenda, it owes us an explanation of why some animals are more equal than others.

The report explained that "intentional lack of candor during the course of an FCC hearing can lead to disqualification."

Blair said it was unusual for an established licensee to be denied a renewal.

"(Stations) are generally granted licenses as long as they perform with meritorious programming," he said. "They can get a renewal preference, which is usually enough to fend off competition."

Joel Levy, attorney for Tri-State, said he planned to exhaust all legal options in an effort to retain the license.

While the report said Tri-State's misrepresentation of its ownership was the main issue upon which the decision turned, it noted that many letters complaining about programming were not placed in station files or were destroyed by station personnel, which is a violation of FCC regulations.

Janice Smith, who works in the FCC's complaints and investigation department, said about 15 complaints on KUPD programming are on file.

"Most of the complaints were for profane or offensive material," Smith said.

The report said, "These violations additionally tended to confirm the licensee's overall unreliability."

Leverant, a member of Tri-State's board of directors, said that while there is cause to worry, it is too early to be overly concerned.

"This is just the second step in a four- or five-step process," Leverant said.

A "construction permit," which would grant permission to another party to operate the stations should Tri-State lose its appeal, was given by the board Tuesday to Grimm and Clifford, an oil company in Abeline, Texas.

Blair said Grimm and Clifford applied for a competing application for the frequency when Tri-State applied for renewal in August 1983. Radio stations must apply for renewal every seven years. KUPD/KUKQ's current license expires Oct. 1, 1990.

"When the licensee applies for a renewal, competing applicants can file along with them," he said.

Katherine Schmeltzer, a lawyer for Grimm and Clifford, said she is confident the commission will uphold the review board's decision.

Jack Grimm, president of Grimm and Clifford, was one of the original owners of the radio stations. He relinquished control of the stations to Tri-State in 1970.

Grimm said his organization submitted a competing application in 1983 because "we simply felt it was necessary." He added that if his company regains control of the station, he does not know whether a format change will take place.

KUPD currently plays album-oriented mainstream rock, while KUKQ bills itself as an alternative station.

Meeting

the role of the press in this matter," Stiles said.

Stiles said that if the lobbying strategies discussed at the meeting were made public at this time, "they would be rendered ineffective."

"The timing is critical," Stiles said.

More than 600 students marched Feb. 21 to the Student Services Building, where approximately 35 students staged a sit-in at the Cashiering Services offices in response to the Arizona Board of Regents' decision to raise yearly tuition $116 for in-state students and $1,000 for out-of-state students. The demonstrators concluded the 53-hour sit-in after agreeing to a series of meetings with administrators.

In the course of the protest, students targeted increasing faculty salaries and improving the quality of undergraduate education as goals of the action.

"The emphasis for this year has shifted to quality issues, which is not to say that we still won't press for a tuition rollback," said Walter Richter, president of the College of Liberal Arts and Science College Council.

Wednesday's meeting consisted solely of the "core negotiating group," which was formed last week. The group consisted of Stiles, Richter, ASASU State Relations Director Shannon Sellers, Vice President of University Relations Brent Brown and Vice President of Student Affairs Bob Soza.

ASASU President Paul Larson could not attend the meeting due to other commitments.

Stiles said he thought the meeting was very productive.

"The strategies and insights that we were exposed to, I think, can be converted to success at the Legislature," Stiles said.

Richter agreed with Stiles.

"The battle is going to be fought and won at the legislative level," Richter said.

Stiles said: "The people who organized the protest are following through by becoming educated in the nuances of budget politics and in preparing ourselves to do very specific lobbying. We've had a crash course in lobbying technique."

"There's a definite possibility to improve faculty and staff salaries and to create financial aid for financially disadvantaged students," he added.

Soza said he also believed Wednesday's meeting went well.

"I thought Shannon Sellers did a terrific job of running the meeting," Soza said. "The dialogues continue to be extremely positive."

Soza added that the presense of the press would have disrupted the "working atmosphere" of the meeting.

Brown could not be reached for comment.

University Budget Director Alan Carroll is expected to attend the group's next meeting, which has been tentatively scheduled for March 16.

Stiles said the negotiating team will discuss the issue of equity in funding at future meetings.

The state Legislature is currently debating next year's education budget. In past years, ASU supporters have blasted the Legislature for allocating more money per student to UofA.

"The regents have acknowledged that an inequity exists to the tune of at least $6 million in instruction and student services," Stiles said. "We're beginning to realize that some of our quality-of-education issues can be most aptly addressed by resolving the inequities that exist between UofA, ASU and NAU."

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents on Wednesday:

- A non-student was cited and released after police said he was seen allegedly looking into female student's dormitory rooms from Parking Structure Five on Tuesday. The suspect, Daniel P. Serino, was also arrested on a felony criminal trespassing warrant issued in December by the Maricopa County Sheriff's Office.
- Serino posted $1,370 bond and was released.
- An ASU student reported to police that she was physically detained Tuesday outside a classroom in the Language and Literature Building by her teacher who threatened to have her withdrawn from class.
- Two ASU students were injured in a bicycle collision about 9:30 a.m. Tuesday at Forest and Tyler malls. One student was taken by ambulance to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital for treatment but the other student refused medical attention.

- An unknown suspect falsely reported to police that a body was hanging off the fourth level of Parking Structure Five about 1:30 a.m. Wednesday. Police and fire units responded to the scene but no one could be located.
- A thief stole an ASU student's $700 bicycle Tuesday from his room at 717 Alpha Drive.
- A thief stole an ASU student's $150 bicycle Monday from Sahuaro Hall.
- A thief stole an ASU employee's wallet and contents, valued at $110, Friday from the UAC.

Tempe police reported the following incidents on Wednesday:

- A 15-year-old Mesa girl reported Tuesday that she was kidnapped at gunpoint from a bus stop at Apache Boulevard and McClintock Drive. She was able to escape unharmed after the unknown suspect stopped at a Circle K store in Mesa.

Police said the alleged incident occurred about 1 p.m. when she was forced into the suspect's white full-size Ford pickup after he displayed a handgun. The victim told police she had seen the suspect before in the area of the bus stop.

The suspect was described by police as a Caucasian in his mid-30s, 5-foot-9 to 6-foot, with a heavy set build and a "beer belly." He had black and gray hair and a moustache.

•A 23-year-old ASU student was arrested Tuesday in connection with the theft of a pair of shoes belonging to another woman that occurred on Feb. 24. She was wearing the shoes when she was arrested about 8 p.m. in the 200 block of East University Drive.

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — An opossum with a punky orange hairdo has museum officials stumped.

Orange opossums are unheard of among experts, the museum staff said Monday.

"We're sure she hasn't been dyed or anything like that," said Holly Coover, an assistant curator at the Dayton Museum of Natural History. "She's just orange."

"We're trying to figure it out," said Tom Hissong, the curator of education. "All our veterinarians can figure is it's a genetic defect."

The year-old opossum, known only as "O. P.," was donated by a family who raised her from infancy.

"They found two in the same litter that were orange," Coover said. "One got loose later, and the family dog munched it."

Hair samples from the opossum have been sent for analysis to state wildlife experts.

Forward Alex Austin and the Sun Devils head into tonight's Pac-10 Tournament opening game against Washington.

Devils open tourney with UW

By PAUL CORO
State Press

With the home-court advantage, a regular season-ending victory and a 2-0 edge over its first opponent, the ASU basketball team is in the same position of past Pac-10 Tournament champions but don't get any ideas.

The Sun Devils (13-14 overall, 6-12 Pac-10) have the unenviable task of trying to beat Washington (11-16, 5-13) for the third time this season in the opening game of the tournament at 7 tonight in the University Activity Center.

"It's a very difficult thing (to beat UW for a third time)," ASU Head Coach Bill Frieder said. "We have to be careful of that. If we let up just a little thinking it's going to be easy because we beat them twice and they pick it up a notch, now you're looking at 10-12 point loss instead of a two-three point win."

The Sun Devils and Huskies enter the tournament as the eighth and ninth seeds, respectively. At the UAC on Jan. 6, ASU defeated UW, 63-48, but the Huskies made it tough on the Sun Devils in Seattle on Feb. 1, losing 58-56.

ASU is coming off a home win against fifth-seeded Oregon, 75-71, on Saturday. In that win, the Sun Devils snapped a six-game losing streak and posted their best shooting performance in a month.

"I feel better not because we've beaten (UW) twice, I feel better because we played well against Oregon Saturday," Frieder said. "If we can sustain the kind of effort we had on Saturday, I think we have a good chance."

The Huskies main attributes are their star guard and zone defense. While Eldridge Recasner is UW's main offensive weapon (16.2 points per game, its zone defense is what can give teams fits.

"They stay pretty much to their zone, but it's a good zone," Frieder said. "It's important for us to be patient and have good shot selection and shoot well."

With a 2-3 zone that allows perimeter shots, ASU had success in both games from the outside, mostly due to a healthy Matt Anderson. Anderson said that zone defenses like the Huskies' bother his recovering knee the least.

"When you get into games, you have a lot of adrenalin and you tend to forget about things like that," Anderson said. "Other than my knee, I feel great."

The Sun Devils and Huskies are the two worst teams in the conference as far as scoring offense and 3-point field goal percentage.

"I think both of these teams are teams that have problems scoring against good defense," Frieder said. "I think the team that plays the best defense and who takes control of the game defensively and who is the aggressor will be the team that wins."

That winner will move on to play top seed Oregon State at 4 p.m. Friday.

The tournament, in its fourth and final year, marks the first time ASU has played host to post-season action since an NIT first-round game against Cal-State Fullerton in 1983.

"I'm happy about playing it at Arizona State," Frieder said. "I think it's an advantage to us. Hopefully, we can make the most out of that situation."

UW Head Coach Lynn Nance said he is wary of the Sun Devils' advantage at home but is optimistic with his team's progress.

"I think we've made strides," said Nance, who is in his first year at the Husky helm. "I think we didn't have the type of losses and games this season that they had last year."

Nance may elect to try a box-and-one because of the re-emergence of forward Alex Austin, who has scored 51 points in the last two games.

"You've seen five Alexes this year," Frieder said. "I think on Thursday you're going to see No. 6 — one you have never seen before."

Austin said after the Oregon game that he sees ASU as a "darkhorse" in the tournament.

"I pray to God we win in the first round because a lot of people are afraid of our patience and slow tempo," Austin said.

•The second game of the first round between seventh seed USC and tenth seed Washington State is scheduled to begin at 9 p.m. The winner will play UofA at 8 p.m. Friday.

•Besides the OSU-ASU/UW and UofA-USC/WSU match-ups Friday, UCLA and Oregon will play at 2 p.m. while Stanford and California will play at 10 p.m.

•The Sun Devils' average attendance at home this season was 7,161, the highest figure since the 1980-81 season (8,703).

•In last year's conference tourney, ASU made a quick exit after being upset by last-place USC in the opening round, 94-82. The Sun Devils are 1-3 in Pac-10 Tournaments.

Long break ends as mens tennis hosts Illinois

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

After nearly a one-month competitive layoff, the ASU mens tennis team will put its skills back into action today against Illinois starting at 1:30 p.m. at the Whiteman Tennis Center.

The unintentional break in competition was the fault of cancelled matches and rainouts over the past few weeks. ASU last played on Feb. 15. Head Coach Lou Belken said he fears his team may be rusty in today's competition.

"It is not so much what I am expecting from them as what I am expecting from us," he said. "(The break) could be good for us because we are going into an unbelievable part of the season well rested."

Belken said he has been pleased with the accomplishments his team has made over the past weeks during practice. His main goal was to make everyone comfortable with their own style of play and to make time for plenty of sets to implement that.

"This is the first year I have ever given the kids a break in mid-season and we have had more time to work on things," Belken said. "I felt comfortable with the things we worked on."

The Sun Devils were scheduled to host an invitational last Tuesday but it was cancelled. Belken said he had counted on the tournament as being an icebreaker to the tough stretch of matches the team faces this month.

As an alternative, the ASU team called in a group of tennis pros to scrimmage against early this week. Belken said he hopes the scrimmage served its purpose in warming the team up.

"A couple of them are trying to play minor leagues, so they provided a good match," he said, adding that the highlight was Sun Devil No. 2 player Dave Lomicky's win over ex-Long Beach State No. 1 player Pat Crow, to whom Lomicky lost last season.

Today's match marks the beginning of a 10-game home stretch. Belken said the team is in good spirits about the long homestand.

"We like to play here because we have had success here in the past," he said. "There are certain things you can do as a tennis player to take advantage of the conditions here that the opponents are not aware of."

On Saturday, the Sun Devils will play host to Minnesota at the Whiteman Tennis Center. Belken said although ASU beat them last year, 5-4, he is expecting a dog fight this time around.

ASU will face a tough schedule for the remainder of the month, loaded with Pac-10 foes. Other teams the Sun Devils will host in March are top-ranked Stanford, No. 4 UCLA, No. 6 California and No. 11 USC.

"We have some great matches lined up," he said. "We were lucky to beat Minnesota last year and Alabama is a great team that is always competitive in the Big Ten."

ASU was not ranked in the pre-season polls but the Sun Devils have cracked the top 25 for the first time this season at No. 23. Belken said he expects his team to finish higher and feels the lack of match results hurt the team's position in the national rankings.

"Rankings do not mean anything," he said. "We want to be in there because we feel like we are a top-20 team, but we are not going to go crazy after that."

Women hoopsters face No. 4 Huskies

By KRIS TIMMONS
State Press

The ASU womens basketball team finishes up its season in a home series against fourth-ranked Washington and unranked Washington State this weekend.

Four Sun Devil seniors will be playing in their last series of their collegiate careers as they face the Huskies (24-2 overall, 15-1 Pac-10) at Scottsdale Community College tonight at 8 due to a conflict with the mens Pac-10 Tournament at the University Activity Center.

Academic All-American Fran Ciak, Carolyn DeHoff, Rosalind Senior and Lisa Jones have all contributed as Sun Devils. Ciak and DeHoff have started all season and are averaging 14.8 and 7.3 points per game, respectively.

The Sun Devils (13-13, 5-11) are coming off a road split with the Oregon schools last weekend. ASU Head Coach Maura McHugh said that although the loss to Oregon was disappointing, the team shot well.

The Sun Devils shot 49 percent from the field, yet only 46 percent from the line against the Ducks.

McHugh said the key to a victory against the Huskies is offensive execution.

"I think that even more important for us right now, is being able to score," McHugh said. "A lot of times, people will say it's rebounding, or it's this or that, but there have been games when we have out-rebounded the opponent and still have lost the game.

"We're struggling offensively and we have got to get that together," she added.

McHugh also said that limiting the opponent's trips to the charity stripe will also be pertinent to a Sun Devil victory.

"We are sending people to the line too much and we're not shooting well from the line," McHugh said. "We can't allow our opponents to shoot 25 or 30 more free throws than us and win games."

The Huskies are led by Amy Mickelson (averaging 14.9 points per game), Karen Deden (14.7) and Laurie Merlino (12.2).

McHugh said she expects to see a lot of hard man-to-man defense from Washington.

"They are not scoring a lot of points as a team," McHugh said, "but they can score from all positions. They are pretty balanced and fundamentally sound."

Going into the last series of the season, McHugh said she hopes that the seniors get pumped up and the energy carries over to the underclassmen.

"This is the very end of the season," McHugh said. "This is it. I think we want to go out on a very good note. It gives us something to play for so we're going to try to put together the two best games we can."

Softball takes nine-day break

By MATTHEW KASTER
State Press

After playing 29 games in 21 days, the ASU softball team will be able to take advantage of a nine-day break before it begins the second half of the season.

Things should heat up for the Sun Devils soon after that, as the second half of their season is loaded with Pac-10 opponents.

Head Coach Linda Wells said that ASU (16-13 overall, 1-1 Pac-10) must "play through" the break, and keep up the same intensity that brought them back from a slow start.

"We didn't really have an opportunity to play together before the season began," Wells said. "It took us a few games to know who we were and what we can do."

"Now that we've played into the season, we've got to play through the break. I feel it's important to maintain the intensity that we've worked for in the last two weeks."

The Sun Devils began the season on a rough note, losing their first four road games while struggling to a 5-10 record. Fortunately, ASU turned things around during its home tournament, and has won eight of its last 11 games.

Wells said that strong pitching played an important part in the turnaround, especially from starting pitcher Terri Carnicelli. Through Feb. 26, Carnicelli had the lowest ERA in the Pac-10 (0.45), while ranked second in the number of innings pitched (78).

"She has pitched extremely well for us so far," Wells said. "Lately our offense has given her a lot more support and has taken some of the pressure off her."

Maintaining offensive pressure will be a must for the second half of the season, especially after an impressive 4-2 outing at the Roadrunner Invitational in Las Cruces, N.M. ASU's batting improved during the tournament led by the slugging of shortstop Ann Rowan. Already the team's best defensive player, Rowan lifted her batting average to .311 during the tournament with eight hits including two doubles and one home run.

Reliever Dawn Wood and outfielder Sheri Keller are two other members who will figure prominently in the second half of the season.

Wells said that Wood will be needed to give Carnicelli a well-deserved rest, and that Keller must work out of a batting slump before the break is over.

The Sun Devils will resume the season on the road with a doubleheader against UNLV on March 13.

Hockey ends promising season

By ROBERT LADD
State Press

The ASU hockey team finished its season ranked 15th in Collegiate Club Hockey with a 15-10 record and has given every indication that its program is on the rise.

"We were real close to going to the national tournament this season," Ice Devil Head Coach Jim Manguso said. "We established a lot of credibility this year and feel we have set the blocks to build upon."

With this in mind, the hockey club is looking to expand its membership.

"We need players as well as non-players," Team Manager Mike Hoffarth said. "We want people who enjoy the game of hockey and are also looking for a trainer, equipment manager and a coach for our 'B' team next year."

Collegiate Club Hockey includes 100 teams such as UofA, Penn State, North Carolina State and Rhode Island.

"Although we are a club sport," Assistant Coach Gary Cornelson said, "it is our intent to stay part of the University. We want to get the University more involved in our program along with the students."

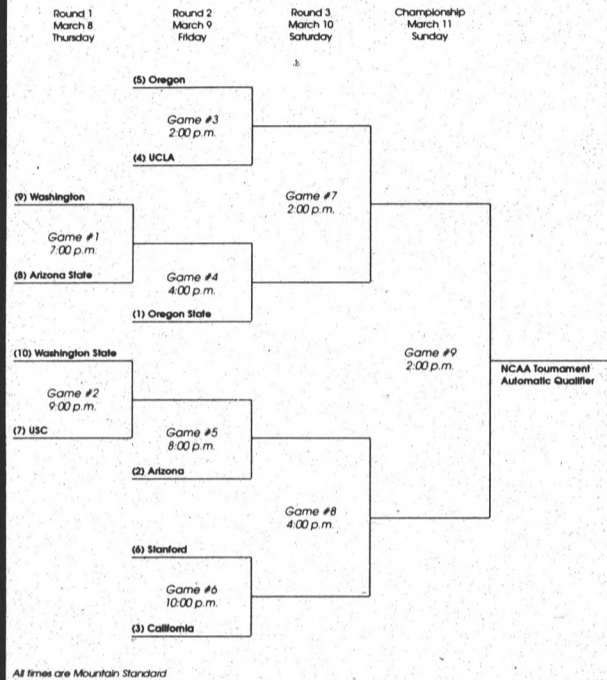

With things coming together for the Ice Devils, future aspirations include nationals, but more importantly, establishing themselves as a team that can beat any other team.

"Our goal in the future," Manguso said, "is to be able to go down to Tucson and make (Ice Cat Head Coach) Leo (Golembiewski) worry."

If interested in the ASU hockey club or just hockey, the Ice Devils invite you to their meeting tonight at 7:30 at the Student Recreation Center's small gym B.

ASU volleyball signs 4 recruits for fall '90

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

ASU womens volleyball Head Coach Patti Snyder said she is overwhelmingly pleased with the four student-athletes who signed letters of intent to attend ASU in the fall of 1990.

Snyder

The Sun Devils signed 6-foot outside hitter Nancy Christian, 5-foot-10 outside hitter Kathy Culbreath, 5-foot-9 setter Tiffanie Johnson and 6-foot middle blocker Christine Everett.

"All four have the chance to be force players," Snyder said, adding that each player will potentially vie for a starting position. "Overall, I am happy with the (players) in terms of volleyball experience and athletic ability."

Christian will come to ASU straight from Scottsdale Saguaro High School, where she earned all-conference honors three times and was twice named most valuable player of her division. She was also named to the AAVC state all-star team and was a 5A East Valley Region co-player of the year, in addition to playing on the Arizona Juniors Club.

"She is a tremendous athlete — 6-foot, lean and extremely quick," Snyder said of Christian, who may also train in the middle-blocking position. "She is an extremely gifted athlete and of course it's always nice to have the local kids."

Christian said she is looking forward to competing for ASU because the competition will be a notch higher than in high school.

"It is going to be hard and it is kind of scary," Christian said. "It will definitely be different."

She said the reason she chose ASU was because it had a good program and she wanted to stay in-state. Among the other schools that recruited her were San Diego State, San Jose and Pittsburgh.

"I love the program, I love it over there (at ASU)," she said. "My ability to be a team player will hopefully help (the program)."

Kathy Culbreath, who is currently at Platte Valley High School in Kersey, Colo., was named Colorado State Player of the Year in 1989, and received all-state and all-league acclaim three times. She is also a 4.03 honors student who is ranked third in her class.

"She is another extremely quick athlete and I am really excited about her," Snyder said. "She is really a great kid."

At her high school, Culbreath competes as a middle blocker, but Snyder said her duties on the Sun Devil lineup will mostly be limited to outside hitting.

Johnson, who competes for Tustin (Calif.) High School, received honorable mention All-America status in 1987 as a member of the U. S. Junior Olympic squad. She is also a two-time all-Seaview League player.

"Tiffanie has good setting technique and is also a very sound hitter," Snyder said. "I expect her to come in and at least challenge for the starting position. She is someone who could have impact on the team as a freshman."

Everett comes from Eastern Arizona College in Thatcher, where she earned All-American honors during both of her seasons. She also competes on the EAC womens basketball team. Prior to competing for EAC, she played volleyball for a club team in Hawaii.

"She has the ability to play at a really high level above the net," Snyder said. "She has excellent fundamental skills all-around."

The four new players should physically do a good job of filling the vacancies left open by the players whose eligibility ran out, Snyder said.

"They should all fit in with the team well," she said. "It is just a matter of learning what we are doing at ASU and finding their own little niche on the team."

Even though Snyder considers this class of recruits highly talented, she said comparing them to last year's seniors is like comparing apples and oranges.

"It is hard for freshmen to replace leadership and experience," she said. "But compared to the other classes of freshmen, I think we got four of the top 50."
