ASU officials to talk today about growth

By KEVIN SHEH
State Press

University leaders today will discuss solutions to the growth-related problems ASU faces, including the possibility of scaling back the student population.

ASU President Lattie Coor said faculty size, student body size and classroom size will be some of the issues introduced at the general campus discussion, which will be held at 9 a.m. at the College of Business Center for Executive Development.

Coor said the ideas presented at the meeting would be investigated over the summer and discussed again at a similar meeting to be held this fall.

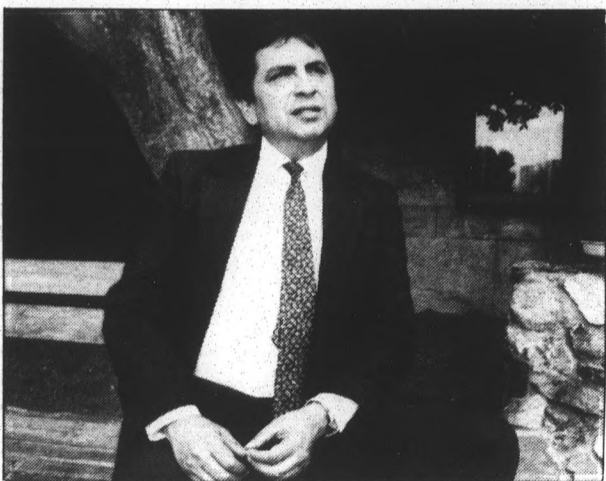

"You can't do these things in an ad-hoc way — they take too long and are too important," Coor said. "They have got to be done thoughtfully and with care."

Coor has called for the reduction of the campus population — which currently exceeds 43,000 students — because of quality of education issues related to the continued growth of the University.

Prior to the discussion, Provost Richard Peck and Christine Wilkinson, acting vice president of Student Affairs,

Chapa says board must 'balance' tuition, needs

On the Issues:

Growth: "You can't do what you're supposed to do well, and that's teach, in the kind of environment where you're tripping over each other."

Tuition: "I know what it means every time you raise tuition. It is a tremendous burden."

Minority Retention: "There's a time bomb out there. We've got to open up the structure to minorities and women so that they feel like they've got a piece of the action."

State Funding: "(The regents) have a judiciary responsibility to the system to try to get as much of the money as we can from the state."

Basha names education as regents' top concern

On the Issues:

Growth: "ASU is just too damn big. We desperately need another campus."

Tuition: "Every time we raise tuition, we are occluding another segment of society from taking advantage of what is so important to have. I think it's wrong."

Minority Retention: "Arizona has one of the highest drop-out rates in the country; we have to reverse that or it will bankrupt the state."

CHANDLER — Ask Eddie Basha to name his top priorities and he doesn't miss a beat.

"Basha's and education," fires back the 52-year-old grocery store magnate and newest member of the Arizona Board of Regents, the governing board of the three state universities.

"Education increases and enriches a person's life," he adds. "The higher the education of this state's citizens, the higher the state's prosperity."

While the Chandler native is best known by the public as the chairman of the board of the family-owned Basha's supermarkets, his intense civic involvement is what landed him one of the state's most prestigious appointments.

The Stanford University graduate grew up in the Chandler public schools. He earned extra spending money by working after school in his father's stores, where he did "everything but drive the diesels."

His first experience in educational administration was on the board of the Chandler Unified School District. A three-time president of the board, Basha served Chandler schools for 14 years.

PHOENIX — In 1961, Arthur Chapa was a freshman at the UofA, where he pumped gas to raise the $150 he needed each semester for tuition and books.

Thirty years and three degrees later, Chapa has returned to the Arizona university system in a slightly different role.

This time he's not scraping for tuition, he's setting it.

Popularity up for McCain, DeConcini

PHOENIX (AP) — The pendulum of public opinion appears to be swinging the other way for Arizona's two U. S. senators after a slide in job approval caused by their ties to Phoenix financier Charles Keating Jr., a new poll showed Monday.

Republican John McCain's job ratings are the most improved with 36 percent now approving of his performance and only 16 percent disapproving, according to a survey of 716 state residents this month by the Behavior Research Center of Arizona.

In January, McCain's approval rating was at an all-time low of 33 percent and his disapproval rating was at its highest point to date — 18 percent.

For Democrat Dennis DeConcini, the downward trend in his job ratings also appear to have leveled out and his overall assessment from the public has improved modestly.

The study showed that 34 percent of state residents polled approve of DeConcini's performance — the same as in January — while 24 percent disapprove, 2 percent less than four months ago.

DeConcini and McCain's biggest gains were with their own party and with residents in Pima County.

McCain's popularity in Pima County rose from 9 percent to 40 percent while his Republican backing almost tripled from 15 percent to 41 percent.

DeConcini's backing in the county soared from 20 percent to 43 percent and his Democrat support rose from 27 percent to 38 percent.

senators were those most likely to vote, unaligned and Maricopa County voters.

McCain and DeConcini both came under public scrutiny in connection with their efforts in past years on behalf of Keating and Keating's Lincoln Savings and Loan Association, which since has been seized by federal regulators. Both DeConcini and McCain have denied any wrongdoing, however.

The poll was conducted as part of the Behavior Research Center and non-partisan Rocky Mountain Poll series. Its possible margin of error is plus or minus 3.73 percent.

Post-Earth Day protests

A San Francisco financial district employee is grabbed by demonstrators early Monday as he attempts to get to work. Hundreds of environmentalists demonstrated Monday in the financial districts of New York and San Francisco, where post-Earth Day protesters shattered windows at the Bank of America. Authorities said 249 people were arrested.

U.S. poised to penalize USSR

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is ready to announce a series of economic penalties against the Soviet Union in response to Moscow's crackdown on Lithuania, U. S. officials said Monday.

Bush was expected to outline his strategy at a Tuesday meeting with congressional leaders, said officials who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Among the steps will be postponement and withholding of a variety of trade and economic concessions that the Soviet Union is seeking from the United States, the officials said.

However, the administration's measures are not intended to interfere with U. S.-Soviet arms negotiations or to postpone the May 30-June 3 superpower summit, the officials said.

Although exact details of the administration's package were not clear, the general thrust will be to slow down U. S.-Soviet trade liberalization talks, which had been scheduled to resume in Paris on Tuesday, the officials said.

Among the actions expected to be announced by Bush on Tuesday are a withdrawal of his earlier U. S. support for Moscow's bid for observer status in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the international organization that oversees free-market trading rules.

Although such an approach would be a measured one, the sanctions could help mute criticism in Congress that the Bush administration wasn't doing enough to respond to the Soviet's tightening crackdown in Lithuania.

Moscow last week sharply curtailed oil and natural gas supplies to the secessionist state.

Amtrak train derails in SE Iowa; at least 84 hurt

BATAVIA, Iowa (AP) — A 19-car Amtrak passenger train derailed Monday, injuring at least 83 of the 400 people aboard, authorities said.

Seven cars of the eastbound California Zephyr derailed about 1:25 p.m. on Burlington Northern tracks, authorities said. Eyewitnesses counted as many as nine cars off the track.

"It made a hell of a noise and then all kinds of dust started flying," said Robert Franklin of Batavia.

The train was carrying 394 passengers and about 20 crew members, said Debbie Hare, an Amtrak spokeswoman in Chicago.

Area hospitals reported receiving at least 83 people from the accident, 10 of whom were hurt seriously enough to be admitted.

Iowa State Patrol Lt. Ronald Moon said there were no known deaths.

The cars began to run off the track just before it reached a crossing on the southern edge of this town of 525 residents, 90 miles southeast of Des Moines.

Investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board and Burlington Northern were dispatched to the scene.

The train had 12 passenger cars, four baggage cars and three locomotives, said Sue Martin, an Amtrak spokeswoman in Washington.

Marci Larson, another Amtrak spokeswoman in Washington, said the last seven cars derailed, three remained upright, three were left leaning and one, a sleeper car, was turned on its side.

Amtrak officials said they did not know how fast the train was traveling when the cars left the tracks and that the train's "black box" would have to be examined. The train is authorized to travel as fast as 79 mph in the area, they said.

Among the passengers was Wisconsin State Rep. Marlin Schneider, who was returning from the National Conference of State Legislatures in Boise, Idaho, and suffered a bruise to his leg.

Uninjured passengers were taken to a community center about two blocks away from the crash.

Cars from an Amtrak passenger train lie on their sides after the train derailed Monday afternoon near Batavia, Iowa. More than 350 people were on board.

Polhill savors breakfast, sleep

WIESBADEN, West Germany (AP) — Freed American hostage Robert Polhill checked into a hospital suite and spent his first day of freedom Monday savoring scrambled eggs and bacon and enjoying an afternoon snooze.

Polhill

U. S. officials, who plan to question Polhill about his nearly three years in captivity, gave the 55-year-old professor a day off to rest and undergo routine medical tests. He was released Sunday.

They said Polhill, held by a pro-Iranian group, was likely a captive in the same building as two American colleagues, but they doubted he would know much about any of the other 15 Western hostages in Lebanon.

Meanwhile, there were reports from Tehran and Lebanon that a second hostage release may be in the offing. But news reports in Tehran and Beirut and a Pro-Iranian Shiite cleric said the U. S. would have to reciprocate.

U. S. officials said they had no information that a second release "was going to happen."

Shuttle launch planned for today

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space shuttle Discovery stood ready once again, weather willing, to ferry the Hubble Space Telescope into orbit today to seek answers to two questions: How old is the universe, and how big?

At the Kennedy Space Center on Monday, officials expressed confidence the liftoff, scheduled for 8:31 a.m. EDT, will occur.

But there was little of the excitement of two weeks ago when hundreds of astronomers gathered, with their families, only to see the launch scrubbed with four minutes to go in the countdown.

"Here we are once again," said William Lenoir, head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's space flight program. "We think once again we are ready."

The unstable weather during launch preparations on Monday was more of a concern than today's. NASA delayed by an hour the rollback of the service structure that had protected the shuttle from the elements.

Loading of more than a half million gallons of hazardous fuel was to start as scheduled after midnight on the assurance of forecasters that the storm would be out of the area by then.

For today, there was the prospect of an hour's delay for early morning fog but little else to worry about.

The crew of five, commanded by Loren Shriver, spent the day making last minute changes in flight plans, undergoing equipment checks and relaxing.

The $1.5 billion Hubble telescope, the finest ever made, is expected "to give us a new set of eyes and ears," said Lenoir. "I can't say what we are going to learn, but I will be astounded if we don't learn many new things."

The telescope will provide astronomers with 10 times better resolution and 25 times more sensitivity than any ground-based telescope and one-half billion times more sensitivity than the human eye.

Germany will pay more to merge

EAST BERLIN (AP) — West Germany agreed on Monday to give East Germans a bigger share of Western wealth as their struggling nation is merged with its rich neighbor.

In a surprising concession, West Germany said it would exchange each virtually worthless East German mark paid to workers and pensioners for one strong West German mark.

The 1-1 rate would apply to wages and pensions and to savings accounts of up to 4,000 marks ($2,300), said Dieter Vogel, spokesman for West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

The East German government had demanded the 1-1 rate to protect workers from higher living costs in a unified Germany and the loss of huge subsidies that existed in the former socialist system.

West Germany opposition parties said the plan would cost billions and lead to inflation. Prices on the Frankfurt Stock Exchange plunged 2.5 percent after the announcement.

Anticipating the money merger, the East German state bank on Monday began moving sacks of out-of-circulation East marks out of storage in the East Berlin treasury to make way for shipments of the West German mark.

An estimated 100 tons of currency was loaded onto trucks to be burned to make space for the West German currency.

Getting credit not hard for today's college students

Steve Kricun
News Editor

Apply now.

Sophomores, juniors, seniors, graduate students get the credit you deserve. Even if you have no credit or no bad credit you can still get student credit. All you need is a signature and a pulse. Well, at least a signature.

Throughout the year ASU students are blitzed with credit applications from American Express to BankAmericard to Citibank. On the malls and throughout the halls and classrooms on campus, companies display advertisements for credit cards neatly packaged in a special pre-approved student application — because they believe in our futures.

Of course they don't really believe in our futures — they're gambling on them.

In the banks' eyes, the fact that we're responsible college students makes us profitable targets. That's why they offer the prestigious privilege of credit to college students for no other reason than they graduated high school and were accepted to college. What's so hard about getting accepted to college?

Banks are bending over backward in the collegiate market to outfit college students with their plastic spending gear.

Alan Petticrew, area marketing supervisor for BankAmericard, said banks want to help students establish their credit while they're young because they know how hard it is to get credit after you graduate.

The BankAmericard application, stamped with the seal of "automatic approval," will give any college sophomore, junior, senior or graduate student enrolled in a four-year accredited college or university a Visa or MasterCard with a $500 limit for having a clean or absent credit record.

Petticrew said that with the advent of new student credit programs, the old "Catch 22" about getting credit is a thing of the past.

But there is a catch.

The catch is that many students don't realize there is a dark, very dark side to the credit allotted to them. It's easy to find yourself on the verge of poverty (as if you weren't there already) trying to afford your new debts.

Most students don't think about their overall balance when they're charging up a storm. Sure the minimum payment may only be $25 a month, but it could be for the rest of your life.

The most lethal twist, however, is once you get one credit card it's simple to get another and another and another and so on and so on and they'll tell two banks and they'll tell two banks and so on and so on . . .

Soon you could have a credit card for every store you frequent. It's a miracle called "Instant Credit!"

Almost every department store has it. Here's a typical scenario: You're in Dillard's and you just maxed out your Visa on your latest purchase, so the helpful clerk asks, "Have you thought about opening a Dillard's account?"

"Why no, I haven't," you say to yourself "but what a wonderful idea, after all it is an emergency."

In less than an hour your credit can be recharged — and bang — you have another $200 to $400 to blow at Dillard's, Broadway, Robinson's or Bullocks.

Watch out, the consequences can be severe. Multiple credit cards can be the beginning of the end for students who live month to month on meager salaries or on financial aid because they generally can't afford more than one monthly payment. And when the bills come crashing in, it becomes hard to stay financially afloat and student options are few.

One option is Consumer Credit Counseling Service, a non-profit service that aids ailing debtors by dealing with their creditors for them. Merna Copley, vice president of counseling and educational services at CCCS, agrees that the major pitfall of credit card use for students is when they get too many cards and the minimum monthly payments become insurmountable.

The Tempe branch of CCCS has already seen 58 students over the last 3 months who were unemployed. However, many more employed students visited the service but Copley said the figures weren't available.

CCCS helps students by organizing their budget and creating a debt management plan to enable them to regain financial stability. Many banks and lending institutions, like Citibank, are eager to waive interest and late charges and will accept lower consistent monthly payments from CCCS clients because of the program's past success.

Are all students responsible enough to handle credit cards? Obviously not. If they were, students without jobs wouldn't apply for credit cards.

The real tragedy here is that companies like Chase Manhattan Bank lure in naive students with promises of easy credit. "Remember," the application says, "you can still qualify for a Chase card even if you don't have a job or credit reference."

Who do they expect will pay?

An unemployed student is a fool to get a credit card, unless his parents plan on paying the bills.

But what about the students who get addicted to credit, becoming creditaholics and getting in trouble with the law for SUI — Shopping Under the Influence of credit?

Credit cards are so addicting because it's so easy to "charge it" and get instant self-gratification.

The ultimate responsibility for credit lies in the your hands — the student cardholders. Decide if you want to abuse your credit privileges.

You must choose, but choose wisely.

Keep cross at Archives

Editor:

I read the article last week and saw the front page photo of the removal of Danforth Cross.

The article explained why it was removed, as most of us know, and briefly re-discussed the issue over the battle of the Danforth Cross.

The article states it was removed in the dawn hours and was taken to the Arizona State University Archives, until a permanent location is found.

I would like to see the cross stay at the archives.

The cross is an important artifact in the history of this campus, or may soon become history anyway. It reflects a major topic of the '80s — religious conflicts. Not that religion is a new topic, but I think the cross itself is an important link to the way we make history today.

A cross was removed from Danforth Chapel, it was a heavily covered media event, people argued about it for months.

In 40 years, we could be attending an ASU football game as alumni, griping about how great the players were when we went to school. We could be discussing the lives of old lab partners who now have 12 grandchildren, and the subject of religion may pop up. Then one of us may itch his bald spot and say "I wonder what ever happened to that cross they took off that chapel, right after Mecham started into it again . . ."

Education

Parents, not society to blame for drop out rate

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

"Where did President Bush find this dummy?" asked Slat Grobnik, looking up from his newspaper.

Oh, let's leave poor Dan Quayle alone. "I don't mean Quayle. It's this secretary of education."

Ah, you mean Lauro Cavazos. "Yeah, whatever his name is. What a klutz."

That's a rather harsh appraisal. After all, the man is our nation's highest educational official. Show some respect.

"Yeah? Haven't you read what he said about high school dropouts?"

I know that it is considered a grave crisis, particularly among minority groups, so Bush has set up task forces to look into the problem.

"Nah, I mean the latest. This guy Cavazos went to one of these task force meetings and talked about whose fault it is that so many Hispanic kids drop out of school."

I assume he blamed the school system, as everyone does.

"Yeah, he mentioned that. But he didn't stop there. He started talking like a loony."

He suffered some sort of breakdown in public?

"Just about. He said that it's not the schools that aren't doing the job, it's the parents of the dropouts. He came out and said a kid's mudder and fodder got to take responsibility for getting a kid to go to school. And he said that if all these kids are dropping out, the parents ain't doin' their jobs."

I don't understand. Why are you calling him a dummy? You've been saying the same thing for years.

"I know, but I'm not the secretary of education, or the president, or a mayor or any other politician or mucky-muck. So, it's OK for me to say it. But this stiff don't seem to know that what he said is a big no-no."

But if he believes it to be true, and if you agree, why shouldn't he come out and say it?

"You're as dumb as he is. I'll tell you why. Because this ain't the old days. We got a new set of rules now. When there is a problem — or a grave crisis, like they like to call it — you gotta blame society or the government or the one I like the best — the failure of institutions. You never blame people. But what this guy went and did was blame people. And that's against the rules. So that's why he's a dummy. He don't know how to play the game."

Yet you agree with him? "Sure, but what do I know? All I know is that everytime one of my kids got to high school, I got out a broom. I told them to sweep every floor in the house. When they finished sweeping I gave them a mop and told them to scrub every floor in the house."

What does that have to do with education? "Just this. When they finished scrubbing, I told 'em that if they wanted to drop out of high school, OK, but there was a good chance they'd be spending the rest of their lives sweeping and mopping floors. And if that was their idea of fun, it was jake with me."

Isn't that rather simplistic? "Well, that ain't all I did. Me and the wife, we did more than shove 'em out the door in the morning and hope that they'd come home before midnight or that a desk sergeant wouldn't call us to bring down bail money. We told 'em that when they came home, we wanted to know what kind of homework they had to do, and if they didn't want to do it, they didn't have to. They could sweep and scrub the floors instead. And when they screwed up, we didn't go down to the school and threaten to sue the principal. We went and talked to the teacher. Then I'd threaten to bop my kids in the chops. Not the girls, though. I only told them I'd shave their heads."

... it's not the schools that aren't doing the job, it's the parents of the dropouts. He came out and said a kid's mudder and fodder got to take responsibility for getting a kid to go to school.

So what you are saying is that parents must assume at least some responsibility for their children's education.

"Well, who the hell had 'em, I mean, George Bush ain't their daddy, and Barbara Bush ain't their mommy. Society didn't tell them: 'Hey, go make babies.' What's the teacher supposed to do — go home with 'em at night, turn off the TV and help them with the homework, get 'em up in the morning and cook 'em breakfast? The teacher has 'em, what six hours a day, nine months out of the year? And she has a whole room full of 'em. But the parents got 'em 18 hours a day, Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, 12 months out of the year, and all they got is their own. And me? I'm part of society, and they ain't my kids, so how come it's my fault if some other mope can't keep his kids in school—"

You have a point. "Sure, but this secretary of education ain't gonna be in his job too long if he talks like that because that ain't what people want to hear. Remember Bernie Epton?"

Sure, he ran for mayor of Chicago. "Right. And one day he went to a big meeting and some woman jumps up and tells: 'If you're mayor, what are you going to do about the drop out rate?'"

"He says: 'As mayor of Chicago, there isn't anything I can do about it. Those are your children, and it's your job to keep them in school.' So the woman got mad and yelled at him. I guess she thought the mayor was a truant officer, or maybe he should come by in the morning and give her kids a ride to school. But he gave it to her straight."

Epton was a forthright fellow. "Yeah, but remember what happened to him in the election?"

He lost. "Right. And I'll give you five bucks to a dollar what that woman's kid is doing right now."

What? "Pushing a broom. If he's lucky."

Administration responds to bike problem

Editor:

Bravo to the administration for its efforts in attempting to solve the rapidly increasing problem of bicycle and pedestrian traffic here at ASU.

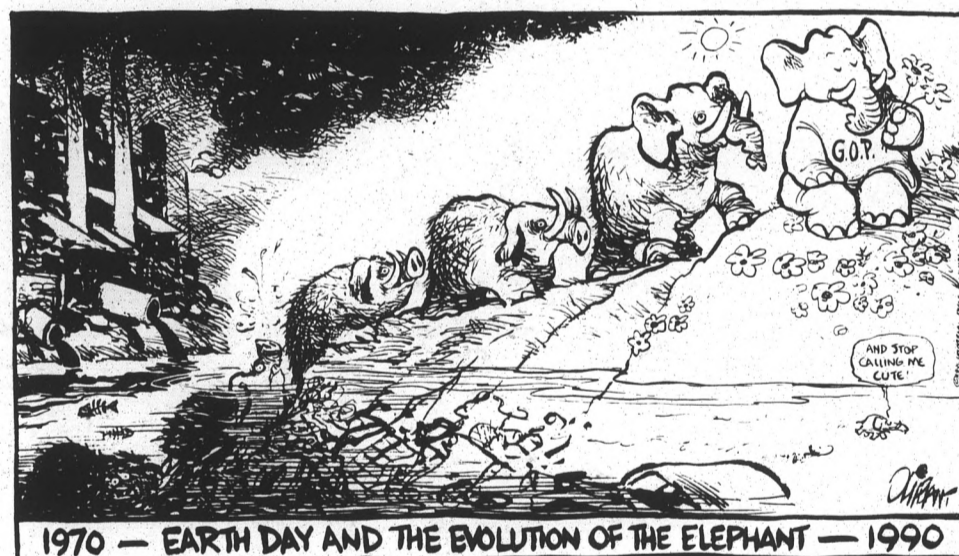

Plans are currently underway to help alleviate the congestion and potential hazards we face while on campus.

However, I believe it is necessary for the students' voice to be heard. Now is the time for students to express their ideas and concerns regarding this important matter.

Let's make sure President Coor, the Department of Planning and Construction, and our newly elected student representatives are working on a plan with students' interests in mind. Those who have been hit or nearly hit can finally stop saying: "Hey, the University should do something about this!" It is.

Let's make sure it is not more of those useless green bike paths.

Mt. Graham, Hubble telescopes needed for research

Editor:

Mr. Andrew Maul's letter in the April 9 State Press contains a misleading discussion about how astronomers do science with their telescopes. Unfortunately, the misconception expressed by Mr. Maul is being voiced elsewhere in Arizona, so we are prompted to clarify the facts of how astronomers make use of telescopes.

Telescopes are used for three main purposes: First, literally as "light buckets," to gather light as rain buckets collect rain. If we need to collect rain water in a rainstorm, then the larger the bucket, the more rain we can collect. Similarly, if we want to study the light emitted by very faint and distant stars and galaxies, then we need to collect as much light from them as possible. The telescopes that will be built on Mt. Graham will be larger than the Hubble Space Telescope and the largest in the world at the time they are finished.

Second, we also need to "zoom" in on distant objects in order to study the finest details about their structure and composition. The property of a telescope that allows us to zoom in on distant stars and galaxies also depends on the size of the telescope. However, on the ground, the motion of our atmosphere disturbs the light from outer space and prevents us from studying fine details. In space, we don't have to look through the atmosphere and can study the smallest features in the most distant galaxies. The ability of the Hubble Space Telescope to zoom in on the most distant galaxies will revolutionize many, but not all, of our studies of the universe.

Third, since all objects in the universe emit a broad spectrum of wavelengths, we need to be able to study them over a broad spectrum of wavelengths in order to assemble a realistic picture of the universe that is not limited by our own eyesight. Fortunately, for our health and well-being, our atmosphere limits the wavelengths that can pass through the atmosphere. Can you imagine if it didn't block out X-rays?

In space, there is little such limitation and we launch satellite observations to study the universe at a variety of wavelengths.

The Hubble Space Telescope will zoom in on distant objects and the light it collects will not be disturbed by motions of our atmosphere. It is also superior to ground-based telescopes in that it will observe ultraviolet light. However, the Hubble Space Telescope is inferior to the largest ground-based telescopes, including two in Arizona, in terms of its light-gathering power. The size of the Hubble Space Telescope, 94 inches in diameter, is limited by the size of the largest mirror that could fit in the Shuttle cargo bay and, therefore, will not be able to study objects as faint as will be possible with the Columbus telescope (two 320-inch diameter mirrors).

In all aspects of astronomy we find that our ability to see faint objects produce more questions about the universe, not less. Questions that still need answering include (but are not limited to): How did the universe begin? How did it evolve with time? How was the Sun and solar system formed? How will the sun die and when? Answering these questions is what makes astronomy such an exciting scientific field in which to work. The "cosmic" questions we ask, hope to answer, are those that all of us ask, not just astronomers.

If we want to continue to answer these questions and to continue to advance our science, we require both the Hubble Space Telescope in orbit and larger telescopes on the ground such as the Columbus telescope. The two kinds of telescopes are complementary in what they do, not mutually exclusive. The use of, and need for, these two kinds of telescopes is comparable to the use of, and need for, both a wide angle lens and a telephoto lens for a photographer or a TV station to convey the action of a sports event. No, Mr. Maul, the Columbus telescope will not be "obsolete" before it is built. It will have the most modern detectors and will provide a view of the most distant galaxies that will exceed the capabilities of all the existing telescopes in Arizona.

Finally, we also would like to point out that Arizona is the center of American astronomy. If we want to remain at the forefront of this science, then we must continue to grow and provide facilities that cannot be found anywhere else in the United States.

All of the undersigned are instructors of the introductory courses for this semester and we encourage Mr. Maul, and any other concerned students, to come by our offices and discuss these issues with us. We also encourage everyone to learn more about the fundamental issues that can be studied by the Hubble Space Telescope and by the telescopes to be built on Mt. Graham. Three of the undersigned will be users of the Hubble Space Telescope during its first year in operation. We are all strong supporters of the Columbus telescope and the other Mt. Graham projects.

in securing Polhill's release.

But the president said he would make no deals with the pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem militants in Lebanon still holding the Western hostages, seven of whom are American.

After his release in Beirut on Sunday, Polhill said he wasn't used to talking a lot.

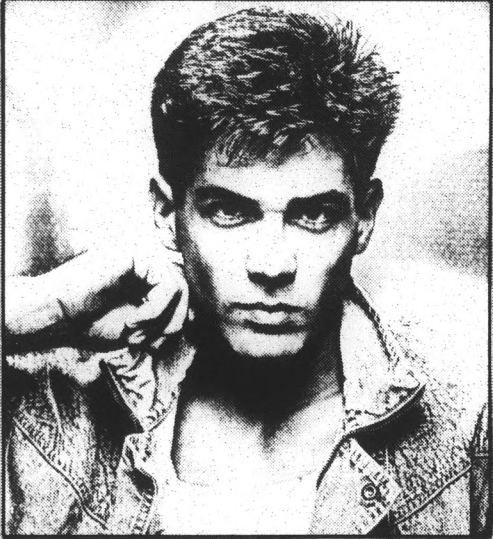

Initial medical tests showed he was malnourished. But U. S. officials said he had received treatment for his diabetes while in captivity.

Lithuania

Earlier Monday, the White House welcomed what it called signs of flexibility from Moscow in its standoff with Lithuania. And officials said that the president remained hopeful that the crisis still could be resolved through negotiations between Moscow and the rebellious Baltic republic.

Bush earlier had proposed a variety of U. S. help to the ailing Soviet economy — ranging from technical assistance to an easing of legal restrictions on U. S.-Soviet trade — that are now expected to be put on hold.

Secretary of State James Baker III cautioned last week that economic relations "are being put to risk by Soviet actions in Lithuania."

Before the officials disclosed Bush's course, Baker said consultations with West European governments on a course of action "will be completed very soon."

In a sign of business as usual, a senior State Department official said Monday that Baker will meet May 5 in Bonn with the foreign ministers of the Soviet Union, Britain and France on security concerns raised by prospects of German unification.

In Moscow, the spokesman for Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev said the Kremlin might negotiate with Lithuania if it freezes its March 11 declaration of independence for two years.

Lithuanian leaders have refused to do that, saying the Republic was forcibly annexed by the Soviet Union in 1940.

Basha

Basha is also a former member and past president of the Arizona Board of Education and is a current member of 10 civic and charity organizations.

He said his experience with the various levels of education directly relates to the goals he hopes to attain as a regent.

"There needs to be a closer bond between the universities and the K (kindergarten) through 12 program, especially the K through (third grade) area," he said.

Basha said he would like to establish an "education corps" of more than 1,000 young men and women to "toil in the vineyards of education" and help keep elementary school children interested in learning.

He said he would also like to see the universities offer a free summer school for at-risk students that would teach traditional subjects such as reading and history through entertaining activities.

"We need more one-on-one with children," Basha said. "This is an area where young people in the universities can help."

Basha said he is also concerned about the issue of minority student recruitment and retention, but that the state needs to concentrate its efforts on students before they enter high school.

"Arizona has one of the highest drop-out rates in the United States; we have to reverse that or it will bankrupt this state," he said.

Basha is the father of six sons, two of whom have graduated from ASU and one who will enter the UofA this fall. He said as a regent and parent, he is concerned about the quality of education at the state universities.

"ASU is just too damn big," he said. "The quality suffers by nature of its bigness."

He said he would like to see this problem combatted by increased interaction with the community colleges and University expansion.

"We desperately need another campus," Basha said.

Basha is the director and past president of the East Valley Partnership, a community planning group that has been actively lobbying ASU President Lattie Coor and the state Legislature for the addition of a third University campus.

He said an alliance could be forged with Chandler-Gilbert Community College to accommodate the East Valley's higher education needs, but that "the demographics are going to dictate a new facility."

He said he wants to implement options that stress accessibility to education for people in rural areas.

"Mohave, Yavapi, Apache, Pinal and Graham counties could conceivably all have university programs," he said.

He said would also ask the U.S. Department of Interior to turn over the responsibility of American Indian education to the universities.

"The (Bureau of Indian Affairs) is too far removed," he said.

Basha said he knows that his ambitious agenda will require heavy funding, and added that it should come from the state and not the students.

"I am concerned by the continuous rise in tuition," he said. "Every time we raise tuition, we are occluding another segment of society from taking advantage of what is so important to have. I think it's wrong."

Basha said he did not want to judge the regents' recent decision to raise resident tuition $116 and out-of-state student tuition $1,000 next fall.

He added, however, "I would hope the Board of Regents would make a philosophical statement to the legislators, citizens and state of Arizona that we cannot afford to close out tuition to any more segments of society."

Basha said he would continue to lobby the Legislature to direct more money into education.

"Education is the only investment that our state leaders make," he said. "Everything else is just an expenditure."

"They (legislators) must be convinced that what we're doing makes sense and cents."

Unarmed Tempe bank robber gets unknown amount of cash

By DAN NOWICKI
State Press

A bank robber escaped with an undisclosed amount of money from California Federal Savings, 1844 E. Southern Ave., at about 10:30 a.m. Monday.

The subject, who showed no weapon, entered the bank and told the teller "I want to make a withdrawal." He then told the teller to place the money in a blue fannypack.

Police described the suspect as a Hispanic male with brown hair, approximately 6 foot and weighing 150 lbs. The suspect was last seen wearing a blue and white baseball cap, a white T-shirt, a long-sleeve plaid shirt, blue jeans and the blue fannypack.

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents Monday:

- Two male students were arrested for possession of marijuana on the east side of 418 Adelphi Drive. One of the subjects was also arrested for possession of drug paraphernalia.
- A thief stole a student's scooter, valued at $650, while it was parked at Mariposa Residence Hall.
- A thief stole the front license plate from a student's car while it was parked in Lot 59. Loss was estimated at $5.
- A thief stole a student's bicycle from a room at Cholla Apartments. The student said the room was locked when he left and when he returned.
- A male student and a female student were warned about disorderly conduct after the female student poured a beer on the male student's car. Police discovered that the male had previously poured a shake on her. Both subjects were told to leave the area.

- A male student was arrested for illegal possession of alcohol in the C-wing of Sahuaro Residence Hall.

- A male student was arrested for illegal possession of alcohol on Adelphi Drive, north of Sahuaro Drive.

- A thief stole a purse and its contents, valued at $47, from a truck belonging to a man not affiliated with ASU. The truck was parked in the river bottom north of First Street.

Tempe police reported the following incident Monday:

- A male student was assaulted and robbed by two men while walking westbound on Fifth Street. The suspects knocked the victim to the ground and removed his wallet.

The suspects were last seen getting into an orange van with white stripes.

THANK YOU, ASU AND TEMPE, FOR YOUR STRONG SUPPORT OVER THE YEARS.

ASU interns get taste of police workings

By CAROLYN HUFFMAN
State Press

ASU students Carl Cooper and Scott Brunner are learning quickly that real-life cops and robbers are much different than their counterparts on TV.

The justice studies majors are getting a taste of the business as interns at the Tempe Police Department.

"Justice Studies students have preconceptions that being a cop is glamorous," said Noah Fritz, crime analyst for Tempe police. "The truth is that a lot of it is paperwork. It's not like you see on TV; there are none or few murders in Tempe."

Sgt. Kevin Kotsur, Tempe police's Personnel Services sergeant, agreed that students may have inaccurate ideas about police.

"I think they're surprised," he said. "I think they expect to be militant."

Fritz is directing the department's interns this semester. Both students are working mainly on computer projects, on the administrative side of police work.

Cooper is working on computerizing police reports, creating a program that would eliminate the mounds of paperwork officers must fill out after every incident.

"If you ever see a cop in a parking lot, sitting there with his lights on, he's filling out reports," Cooper said.

He calls the program "paperless reporting." "We're trying to make it as easy as possible for police officers who are mostly middle-aged and have no experience with computers."

Cooper, an ASU junior, plans to become an officer. He said the internship, although administrative, is a good supplement to textbook learning.

"It's almost completely different from what's in books," he said.

Fritz agreed. "It's a real good opportunity to bridge what you learn in the books with the real world," he said. "This is how people really interact."

Both interns are given chances to ride along with patrol officers or take part in other police work.

"They've offered to let me do almost anything I want to do," Cooper said.

Brunner, a senior, works partly on an electronic "pin mapping" program, which displays a Tempe map on a computer screen and marks areas where crimes have occurred.

Brunner demonstrated the program by requesting a display of auto thefts for 1989 in Tempe. One by one, small white dots sprinkled across the map like snow flurries.

His work with statistics also aids in crime tracking, Fritz said.

For instance, if a juvenile is arrested for a burglary, he said police can use the tracking program to check for other burglaries in the neighborhood and question the suspect about those as well.

Brunner said he was surprised to learn how a police bureaucracy works.

"I didn't expect the police department to act like any other business," he said. "The management style is the same as a regular business."

Fritz said the interns are given a "good picture from the top down" of a police department.

"They've been given a chance to see how decisions are made," he said.

Brunner said that working for the administration, as opposed to being out on patrol, has its benefits.

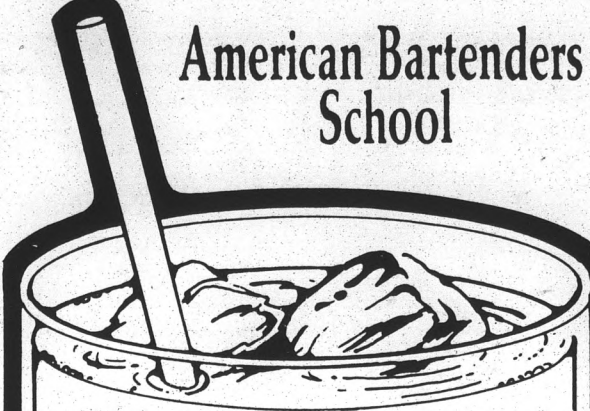

"I have access every day to the chief and the commanders," he said, adding that regular rookie officers may not meet the chief as often.

"This is going to do nothing but help me," said Brunner, who plans to join the Coast Guard as a pilot and eventually work for a federal law-enforcement agency.

"It's reinforced the idea that I'd like to work in the police field," he said.

Cooper said the internship is an advantage for those who want careers in police work.

Carmen Otte
Embry-Riddle University

NASA trainee Carmen Otte and her favorite space vehicle.

When Aeronautical Engineering junior Carmen Otte talks about her 1982 Volkswagen Jetta, it's only natural that she begins with space.

"I like its size, especially the trunk. A big trunk is important when you go away to school and have to carry practically everything you own.

"And I love Jetta's space inside. It's roomy, comfortable. Last year I drove 200 miles each way to a summer job at NASA. I'm glad I was in my Jetta."

Of course, there's more to Carmen's Jetta than space. "My car has over 200,000 miles on it. It doesn't cost much to operate and it's good looking. I think Volkswagens are excellent cars for college students."

Since Carmen hopes to design spacecraft someday, we had to ask her what kind of vehicle she envisions in the future.

"That's easy. A red Volkswagen Cabriolet convertible. I've already got one picked out for graduation."

The VCI College Graduate Finance Plan makes owning or leasing a Volkswagen easier than ever before. And you may not need a credit history to qualify. Visit your authorized Volkswagen dealer for details.

Student gives up career in law, turns to teaching, wins award

By SHELLY LE VICK
State Press

What has been called the "most honorable profession" certainly has never been known as the most financially profitable.

But Mark Ebert gave up a career in law to study teaching and it has already begun to pay off.

Ebert has been named the outstanding student-teacher in the College of Education for 1989-90 and officially will be presented with the award on May 10 at a ceremony at Grady Gammage Center.

"In my second year of law school, I started having doubts in traditional practice," Ebert said. "I decided to finish getting my degree so people couldn't ask if I had flunked out."

Ebert worked as a University attorney until early 1989 when he began exploring a career in teaching.

He found that he enjoyed teaching. He worked at Boys State, a program teaching high school juniors about government functions.

"For a while I wanted to teach high school, with a goal of getting into an educational position like a school principal or superintendent, but I've realized with an advanced degree I'd rather teach college students," Ebert said.

Ebert said the biggest challenge he has faced in changing professions has been to forget much of his legal training when teaching basic government classes.

He said he received much support in his career change from his former boss, ASU Legal Counsel Bruce Meyerson, who helped modify Ebert's work schedule to accommodate his teaching schedule.

Chapa

much of the money as we can from the state."

But he added, "The state has limited resources and everyone is grabbing at that pot. We have to understand that the Legislature can't satisfy everyone's needs."

He said the board's job is to find a balance.

"There isn't going to be a decision made about money that's going to satisfy everyone," he said.

"The Legislature has its own mission to try to do the best it can for everybody. Our mission is to try to do the best we can for the universities."

Chapa splits his work week between Tucson and the Capitol, where he lobbies lawmakers on behalf of the Pima County Board of Supervisors.

He has held positions as an assistant to Congressman Morris Udall, a foreign affairs analyst with the Department of Defense and a military historian for the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Soon after returning to Tucson to begin his law practice in 1981, he was appointed to the Arizona State Community College Board.

He said his experiences with this organization enforced his belief that the universities should interact with the community colleges to make higher education attainable to the greatest number of students.

He said that NAU has already implemented this type of program in Yuma by offering upper-division classes at Yuma Community College.

"It has tremendous impact on savings of dollars," Chapa said. "It also allows people in that area to take advantage of a four-year program that many of them couldn't take advantage of (before) because they can't come to Phoenix or Tucson or Flagstaff."

"Those guys out there are taxpayers too." He said change must occur at ASU and UofA because the schools have gotten too big.

"You can't do what you're supposed to do well — and that's teach — in the kind of environment where you're tripping over each other," he said.

ASU President Lattie Coor has talked about building a third University campus in the East Valley. Chapa said he is not opposed to that option, but added that, "It's an expensive proposition to build another campus, extremely expensive."

"At a time when this state is undergoing economic difficulties, right now is a not the time to talk about new brick and mortar schools," he said.

"There are other ways to do it for the short-term and then maybe look at that kind of option for the long-term."

Chapa and Regent President Edith Auslander are both of Hispanic origin and are the only minorities on the board. Chapa said the issue of minority recruitment and retention is very important to him.

"There's a time bomb brewing out there," he said. "The drop-out rate among non-minority students is high, but certainly in the minority ranks, it's even higher."

"We've got to deal with that; we've got to open up the structure to minorities and women so that they feel like they've got a piece of the action.

"But we've got to make it fair and make people feel like they're on an even playing field. People shouldn't be given anything just because they are minorities or women."

Chapa is active in the UofA's Hispanic Alumni Association and hopes to implement a student mentoring program within the organization.

The new regent admits he is a very busy man, but said his career would not create conflicts with his regent duties.

"I'm not by any stretch of the imagination a wealthy man," he said. "I've got to work just like any other lawyer to support my family, but I will devote any and all time that's required to do this job."

Chapa said he would specifically take extra time to speak to students at the universities when they had questions or concerns.

"If we can't do that," he said, "we've forgotten why we're here."

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Derek Chung is a Spam fan with a mission — to enlighten college students about "this brick of pink meat."

"I just put up posters to get people here to eat more Spam," said Chung, a senior at Carnegie-Mellon University.

"I can never tell whether people will want to come over and actually eat the stuff."

Chung spent Saturday trying to coerce 50 or so fellow students to sample the culinary delights of Spam at Spamfest VI, his sixth free love feast of canned luncheon meat, soda pop and Twinkies.

Billed as the "premier pork event of Carnegie-Mellon," the mini festival at Chung's off-campus apartment draws the curious, the doubters and the determined.

"We don't sit around and eat Spam normally," said senior Barbara McQuain, 21, of Elkins, W. Va. "But Derek makes things out of Spam that you wouldn't believe."

There's Spam pizza, Spamwiches, macaroni and Spam, and the main staple, Spam and eggs.

Chung said the all-time favorite is Spam Polynesian, in which the meat is sliced up, mixed with pineapple and served in a pineapple shell topped with apricot preserves "to cover up some of the Spam flavor."

"Spam partially fills you up and partially you just don't want to eat much of it," said Chung, 20, of Dublin, Ohio.

Bob Patterson, vice president at Geo. A. Hormel & Co. in Austin, Minn., said the company is used to jokes aimed at its most famous product, which was introduced in 1937 and was a staple of GIs during World War II.

ASU, USC battle without fists to 7-5 Devil win

By SETH SULKA
State Press

LOS ANGELES — The only fight in Monday's game between ASU and USC at Dedeaux Field was inside the players themselves.

There were no violent, or for that matter any unusual, incidents in the game, but that did not stop the two teams from waging a battle that saw the lead change hands seven times before the Sun Devils were able to secure a 7-5 victory.

Both coaches were pleased with the way the game's management was handled and that no negative incidents erupted.

"I thought that both teams dealt well to tend with the business at hand, and that is the way it should have been," USC Head Coach Mike Gillespie said.

With the win, third-ranked ASU (40-11 overall, 16-7 Pac-10 Southern Division) stretched its lead over the third-place Trojans (31-16, 15-9) in the Six-Pac, while narrowing the gap with first-place Stanford to 2½ games.

"This was really a big win for us," said ASU Head Coach Jim Brock, who was concerned about the team's safety prior to the game. "It was big even if all this other stuff didn't happen."

"We beat them four out of six and they're a very good ball club. This rivalry is not matched by really anything else as far as ASU baseball is concerned — even if it is not for all the most beautiful reasons in the world."

Despite some of the uglier moments that the two teams have shared, it would be hard to argue that the teams have produced anything but well-played baseball games. And Monday was no exception.

Trailing 5-4 going into the eighth inning, ASU had only six more outs to try and crack reliever John Cummings. Cummings, who had relieved starter Randy Powers before the start of the third inning, had held the Sun Devils during the middle innings to just one run on four hits.

However, after a lead-off walk to Anthony Manahan and an RBI triple to Jim Austin, Cummings was replaced by Tim Quintanilla. The Sun Devils scored two additional times in the inning on an RBI triple by Tommy Adams and a sacrifice squeeze bunt by Todd Steverson, giving them the lead for good.

Cummings took the loss, dropping his record to 4-3. Austin, who missed the final two games of the UCLA series due to a broken nose, turned out to be the difference for ASU. Austin collected three hits on the day including an RBI single in the third inning that tied the score at 4-4.

"(Cummings) hung me a curve ball and I capitalized on it," Austin said. "It felt good being back. It was tough playing the whole season and then sitting out for two games."

Austin was not the only Sun Devil providing heroics during the game. ASU got two outstanding pitching performances from Tony Pena and Gary Tatterson.

ASU's Lynda Tolbert established the best 100-meter hurdles collegiate time (12.99) this year at the Mt. San Antonio Junior College Relays on Saturday.

Tolbert returns to action, runs top collegiate time

By DAN ZEIGER
State Press

With Lynda Tolbert running for the first time since suffering a hamstring injury two weeks ago, ASU Head Coach Tom Jones said he wondered just how much the strained leg muscle would affect her performance.

However, in front of a national television audience at the Mt. San Antonio Junior College Relays in Walnut, Calif., on Saturday, ASU's star sprinter showed that she has recovered just fine, thank you.

Tolbert, ranked first in the nation and fifth in the world in the 100-meter hurdles, won the event with a time of 12.99 seconds. Jones said the effort was the best college time so far this season.

"Lynda was questionable throughout the week," Jones said. "We were a little hesitant with her. She was going about 80 percent in practice."

For the senior from Washington, D. C., the time is the second best of her career (behind a 12.75-second effort in 1989) and the second best in ASU history. Tolbert's spectacular run also bested her Pac-10 season-best time of 13.15 at the Sun Angel Track Classic on April 7.

"At the beginning, I asked her to run the first five hurdles soft," Jones said. "I think it's the first time I've ever seen her behind after five hurdles. Then, she just turned it on and blew past everyone else."

Maicel Malone, who enjoyed the spotlight in lieu of the injured Tolbert by setting two stadium records against UofA and NAU two weeks ago, enjoyed her second straight impressive meet by finishing first in the 400 meters with a time of 51.59 seconds. Malone's mark is the top time in the nation this year and is the second best in school history.

"(Malone) runs so easily; it's incredible," Jones said.

The sophomore from Indianapolis, Ind., who anchored the 4x400-meter relay with a 49.9 split, was named the Pac-10 womens track athlete of the week yesterday for the second consecutive time.

In addition, the womens 4x400-meter relay team of Toinette Holmes, Dana Jones, Charmaine Williams and Malone finished third with a time of 3:33.96, eclipsing their Pac-10 season-best of 3:34.96 on April 7. Nike International and the Southern California Cheetahs, both private track clubs, placed first and second, respectively.

"We were running against really high-caliber teams," Jones said. "When you go up against teams like Nike International, well, everyone on that team is a national champion."

The Sun Devil men were highlighted by sophomore Todd Lewis, who finished 12th in the 5,000 meters with a school record time of 13:51.4, which automatically qualified him for the NCAA Championships.

"Todd ran a really smart race," Jones said. "The field was loaded with Olympians but he ran what he was capable of. He's only a sophomore, so he'll get faster in the future."

Lewis, whose effort is the best in the conference this season, was named the Pac-10 mens track athlete of the week yesterday.

Also, sophomore Shane Collins placed second in the shot put with an effort of 63 feet, 4 inches.

"Shane has the ability to get around 67 or 68 feet," Jones said. "He's just a puppy, though. In the future, he's going to steadily improve."

Collins finished a distant second to Randy Barnes, the American record holder in the event, who blew away the rest of the field with an effort of 73 feet.

Jones said that the unique differences between Sun Angel Stadium and the San Antonio Junior College facility may have posed a problem for the Sun Devils.

"Sometimes, we get comfortable running in our own facility," Jones said, "and when you come to a track like that with tight turns and long straightaways, it's a tough adjustment to make."

ASU returns to action when it travels to Philadelphia for the Penn Relays on Thursday.

James lone Sun Devil picked in NFL draft, headed for Cincy

By ROBERT LADD
Contributing Writer

After all 12 rounds of the 1990 NFL draft, only one ASU player was drafted. Wide receiver Lynn James was picked in the fifth round as the 128th player overall by the Cincinnati Bengals.

James

Before the draft on Sunday, James expected to go in the second or third round because he had been considered the fifth-best receiver by USA Today. He was ranked in the top 50 collegiate prospects by The Sporting News.

"I got real nervous after the third round," James said. "Players that I was rated higher than began to get drafted and I started to think that maybe I wouldn't go."

James led all ASU receivers in yardage-per-catch last season by averaging 21.3. He also had the longest reception, 80 yards, for the Sun Devils his junior and senior year. With his breakaway speed, he has developed a deep-threat reputation that the Bengals are counting on.

"We have high expectations for him," Receivers Coach Mike Stock said. "He's a good size receiver (6-foot-1) with a lot of speed (4.47-second 40-yard dash) and we are happy to have him."

The feeling for James is mutual, considering the Bengals have developed into one of the better teams in the AFC and played in Super Bowl XXIII against the San Francisco 49ers in 1989.

"I feel great," James said. "Cincinnati is a competitive team and I like their wide-open offense. They have a big name quarterback (Boomer Eason) and running back (Ickey Woods). I hope I can fit in and contribute right away."

Although James is virtually unknown to the fans of Cincinnati and its media, the Bengals hope his anonymity is a temporary situation as they plan for him to make an early contribution.

"The sooner the better as far as we're concerned," Stock said. "Hopefully he can fit in right away because we have a slot open. He has a lot of learning to do, but if he works hard he will fit in."

James said he is already beginning to feel like he belongs. Bengals' running back Ickey Woods and safety David Fulcher, a former Sun Devil, have begun to call him "Rook" because of his rookie status.

By becoming a member of the Bengals, James is reunited with an old teammate, cornerback Mitchell Price, who was drafted in the ninth round. James and Price played together at Southern Methodist University before the Mustang football program was handed the death penalty.

"I'm looking forward to playing with (Price) again," James said. "We used to be good friends at SMU."

Everything seems to be in place for James, who reports to rookie camp in Cincinnati on Friday for four days. This will be the first of many camps that he will attend before training camp in July.

"It's all academic now," James said of being drafted in the fifth round. "It doesn't matter if your drafted in the first or the twelfth round. You have to do what it takes to make the team."

"I've been faced with all kinds of adversity throughout my collegiate career and this is nothing new to me. I'm ready for the challenge."

Rohde finishes second on pommel at NCAAs

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

Just a couple of days before the NCAA mens gymnastics Tournament at the University of Minnesota, ASU gymnast Christian Rohde had himself and coaches wondering if he would even attend the championships to compete on the pommel horse.

Rohde had dislocated his finger just two weeks prior to the tournament and was not expected to be healed for six weeks. Despite the doctors orders, he decided to attend the meet and sweat out the throbbing pain the injury was causing him.

With his swollen black and blue fingers taped tightly together, Rohde managed to pull out a second-place finish in the pommel competition of the NCAA Championships — just five-hundredths of a point short of a No. 1 finish.

"For awhile I did not even think I was going to go," said Rohde, who scored a 9.85. "So I have to be happy with second place."

ASU Head Coach Don Robinson said he was extremely pleased with Rohde's performance and felt he could have taken the tournament title had he been injury-free.

"I was delighted with Christian," he said. "He went All-American and took second in the nation. That is very commendable."

"He had to work under a lot of pain just to go to Nationals. He not only went with black and blue fingers, but he finished in second place. All of a sudden he rose to the occasion."

Rohde dislocated his finger so badly that many ligaments were torn. He said he felt great pain when he worked out two days after the injury occurred at the NCAA Regionals. At the NCAA Finals, however, he said his adrenalin kept him from feeling hindered.

"I trained (for the NCAA Tournament) but I could not bend my hand," he said. "It hurt when I went but I had so much adrenalin that I really did not think about it much."

In the preliminaries of the tournament, Rohde qualified in fifth place with a 9.7. Out of the eight qualifying gymnasts, he was randomly selected to compete last. He said the pressure he felt after all of the eight competitors competed over a 9.7 was very nerve-wracking.

Even though Rohde said the meet was exciting — due to the large crowd supporting the meet and Athletic Director Charles Harris' attendance as a member of the NCAA Gymnastics Rule Committee — he felt the excitement could not be fully enjoyed without the entire team at the meet.

"It was just not half as fun as seeing the team and cheering for them," he said. "It is not the same feeling at all. There is a lot more enthusiasm when you have 10 guys out there yelling for you."

The other gymnast who qualified for the NCAA Championships from ASU was Chris Smith, who finished 14th in the finals of the still rings after missing a crucial skill on his routine.

Smith also competed in the vault in the preliminaries, scoring a 9.4 and a 9.5, but the scores did not make the qualifying cut for the finals.

"I was very disappointed," he said. "I messed up my routine, but I thought I would have had a good chance if I had done my routine like I usually do."

Robinson said he thought Smith performed well in the preliminaries but thought he seemed nervous.

"He did exactly what I expected him to do on both events in prelims, but then he went on to finals and well . . ." Robinson said. "He was so nervous he could not see straight. He was not used to that kind of crowd."

Smith agreed that nerves were a factor in his overall performance on both events.

"There was a lot of pressure at the end," he said. "During finals you go one person at a time, everyone is watching you and it is quiet."

Baseball

Tatterson was involved in the game's most intense moment. With the bases loaded and two out in the bottom of the eighth, Tatterson came in to face Murph Proctor. Proctor battled Tatterson to a full count before fouling off two payoff pitches in a row. But Tatterson, who picked up his third save, prevailed getting Proctor to fly to center field for the third out.

"I've never in my life seen a guy who was faced with the most important, scary situation in the world and you could read nothing on his face except the same calm you see when he is out doing some kind of drill," Brock said.

Pena relieved a shaky Rusty Silcox, who started the game but only lasted an inning and a third. In six and a third innings, his longest stint of the year, Pena kept his teammates close, allowing just one run on four hits while improving his record to 2-1.

"I felt pretty good because in high school I used to be a starter," the freshman from Santa Ana, Calif., said. "It felt good to get loose for the long range. All I had to do was pace myself and go after each guy."

Brock had quite a bit of praise for the freshman.

"Our confidence in him builds every time that he goes out there," Brock said. "He does not seem to have any freshman-type fears."

ASU started scoring in the first inning when Mike Kelly was hit by a pitch from Powers. The ball apparently slipped during Powers' release and therefore, the umpires took no action. Kelly scored on Manahan's double down the left field line.

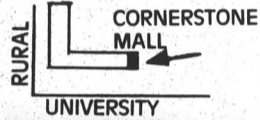

The Trojans wasted no time getting to Silcox, scoring three times in their half of the first. After Mike Robertson led off with a double, Mark Smith hit a two-out RBI single and then scored on Brett Boone's single. Brett Jenkins made it 3-1 with a double that scored Boone.

Baldock near-best too low for NCAAs

By VICKI CULVER
State Press

The competition at this year's NCAA womens gymnastics Championships was so tough that ASU's No. 1 gymnast Suzy Baldock scored close to her season high in the all-around yet still did not make the final round in any events.

Baldock scored a 38.225 — less than a point lower than her season high — in the tournament on Saturday that was held at the University of Oregon in Eugene.

Her scores in the individual events were a 9.7 on bars, 9.55 on beam, 9.25 on vault and a 9.4 on the floor exercise.

The cutoff score to make it into the finals in Baldock's best event, the uneven bars, was a 9.8.

"I was expecting to see a lot of good gymnasts but there were a lot more than I expected," Baldock, who finished 20th in the all-around said. "I would like to have placed better because it was the best meet I could have had."

ASU Head Coach John Spini said Baldock performed well enough to make it to the finals in each event, but felt the scoring in the earlier session was much tighter.

"They were just looking for the big guns in the evening (session)," he said. "The scores go up about .20 of a point in the evening. That just shows how important that night rotation is."

On the floor exercise, Spini said Baldock performed her best routine of the season. She added and successfully executed a trick that she had never used in competition before.

"Her floor was tremendous yet she only got a 9.4," he said. "I thought it was the best floor she ever did."

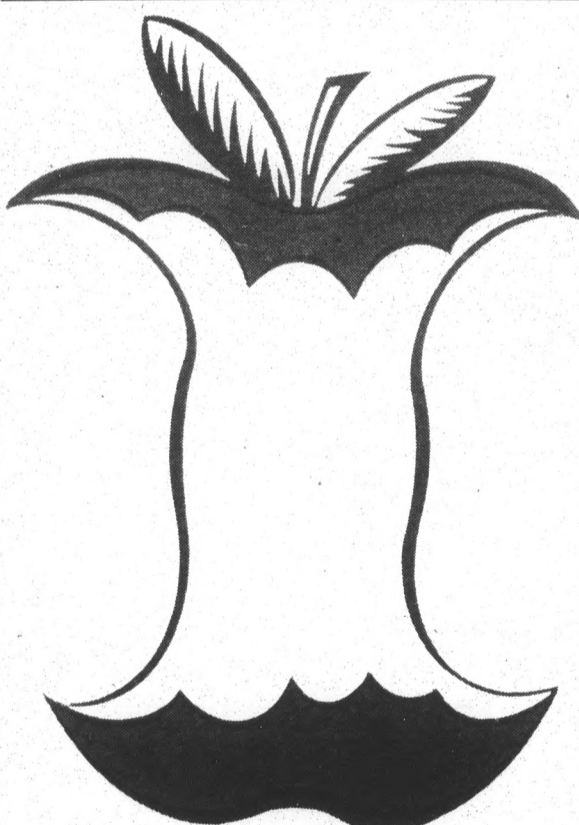

Baldock thought she performed best on floor and on the bars.

"I did my best bar routine all year," the senior said. "It did not matter that I did not make finals because it was just a good feeling."

Prior to the tournament, Spini said his goal for Baldock was to execute in all four events and to go All-American (the top six in any event.) Even though she did not accomplish the latter goal, Spini said he was extremely pleased with her performances.

"She did a marvelous job and was just fantastic," he said. "I was hoping she would go All-American — she performed like she did."
