Candidates clash over liquor issue

By KRISTEN JOHNSON
State Press

Candidates for Arizona secretary of state clashed over the Sun Devil Stadium liquor policy in an ASU debate Wednesday, but both agreed students need to stay involved to become a viable political force.

Democratic candidate Richard Mahoney and Republican candidate Ray Rottas took the stage on West Lawn in an Associated Students of ASU-sponsored debate to air their platforms.

About 30 people and a number of passersby listened to candidates debate election issues ranging from voter registration to student participation in government.

"As far as I'm concerned, liquor should be throughout the stadium or not at all," Mahoney said. "It's unacceptable and un-American."

But Rottas said he and his wife have been so offended by the intoxicated behavior of football fans that he has considered staying away from the games.

"We don't need and won't put up with that," he said. "Alcohol shouldn't be allowed anywhere in the stadium."

Candidates were each given 10 minutes to present the main

Census didn't count on student exodus

By MICHELLE ROBERTS
State Press

Tempe officials believe apartment vacancies caused by the mass exodus of ASU students from Tempe late last spring contributed to a possible miscount of the city's population in the 1990 U. S. Census.

Tempe City Planner Atis Krigers said U. S. Census Bureau statistics indicated a population of 140,238 — 8,000 heads short of Tempe's own estimates of 145,000 to 150,000. "Somehow their numbers and ours didn't jive," he said.

Krigers said he thinks the census numbers were short because the count was begun in June, when ASU's spring semester is over, and the apartment vacancy rate near the campus is 20 percent.

"We (Tempe officials) feel the census missed ASU students who should have been counted as residents," he said.

Krigers said the census results would have been more accurate if the census had begun its count earlier in the spring.

Officials said Tempe was one of 59 Arizona cities to challenge the results of the 1990 census count.

Meanwhile, a small team of U. S. census workers are reconvening two census tracts near ASU this week to recount housing units.

The tracts include residential developments near ASU, bounded east and west by Rural Road and McClintock Drive, and north and south by University Drive and Broadway Road.

Krigers said the recount is necessary because the low numbers will mean significantly less state money for Tempe.

Tempe's portion of lottery and sales tax revenue is based on population, Krigers said, adding that, on paper, the loss of 8,000 residents at $200 per person per year would mean $1.6 million less in state money.

Tempe Councilwoman Pat Hatton said the city felt there was a large undercount because of the discrepancy between the number of utility permits in Tempe and the U. S. Census numbers.

"It's (the recount of central housing units) very important to us (Tempe) because if you miss 6,000 to 8,000 people, it means dollars," Hatton said.

Diane McCarthy, district manager of the Phoenix census office, said the census takers will finish counting housing units near ASU in a week.

"What we're trying to do in this last period is just going back to make sure everyone got counted," she said.

Kuwaiti bureau chief foresees Mideast bloodshed

Hakki

By JENNIFER FRANKLIN
State Press

A bureau chief of a Kuwaiti national newspaper predicted Wednesday that a war in the Persian Gulf would be long and bloody.

"War is not going to be fought in these regions with high-technology toys," said Mohamed Hakki, who works for the Kuwaiti newspaper, Al-Abna.

Hakki told about 50 people in the MU Arizona Room that regardless of how the war turns out, thousands of Saudis and Americans will leave in bodybags. He added that anyone who talks lightly about the events in Kuwait is a fool.

Hakki, a native of Egypt, served as chairman of Egypt's State Information Service and was minister for Press and Information at the Egyptian Embassy in Washington, D. C.

Hakki said while conflict in the Middle East may have begun as an Arab problem, after Iraq invaded Kuwait, it became an international problem.

"If we look at the problem only in the context of a regional problem, we are wrong," he said.

The fact that most Arab nations support intervention in the region adds more confusion in the Middle East, he said.

Some, however, do not want foreigners fighting on Arab soil, he said.

Now, Hakki said, war in the region is more likely to happen than not.

"The choice now is war or a diplomatic solution," he said, adding that most experts think war is unavoidable.

Hakki said several things can be expected if a battle ensues.

"There is a very good chance it will not be over quickly," he said, despite American confidence the conflict would be settled efficiently.

Hakki said the anti-Iraqi forces would have to destroy all Iraqi airbases, powerplants and other major military and industrial outlets.

Hakki said U. S. public support of the war probably would not last.

The only positive result of the Iraqi invasion is the stir that it caused in the Arab community, he said, adding that uniting against Iraq could eliminate the Arabs' attitude of defeatism.

"Maybe this crisis will shake everything from the foundation," he said.

Student's group takes medical aid to Mexico

By ANDREW FAUGHT
State Press

Susan Thomas never envisioned that her March 1989 vacation in Puerto Penasco, Mexico would change her life.

The ASU nursing student said she was stunned at the abject poverty preventing natives from receiving medical care in the popular tourist town, commonly known as Rocky Point.

"When I found out they were re-using suction tubing for infants, that really struck me," Thomas said. "We throw that away up North. It was really a shock to me that so close to us they're doing without so many things."

With financial help from a Mesa church and individual contributions, Thomas' Friends Without Borders group now takes "a literal busload of supplies to Mexico every month."

As a part of her efforts, Thomas, 35, is returning to Puerto Penasco today to volunteer her help in a weekend clinic headed by a Valley ophthalmologist who will perform cataract surgeries on 30 villagers.

"I get calls regularly from specialists who want to go down and volunteer their services," she said. "The doctors are very willing."

Thomas said the clinic also will aid those who cannot afford medical attention or cannot be diagnosed by Mexican physicians.

Linda Holland, a registered nurse and member of the Arizona Volunteer Medical Team, is an interpreter at the clinics.

Holland said food and rent expenses leave Mexican families with few medical alternatives.

"They have 'curanderos' there," Holland said, referring to the Spanish word for healer.

Thomas, a full-time, dean's list student and a single mother of four, said she got involved in the efforts because it was the "right thing to do."

"I told (a Mexican doctor), 'I don't know how, but we will get you supplies,'" she said when recalling her initial exposure to the lack of medical equipment. "I didn't have a choice when I was faced with something like that."

Two weeks after her first trip south of the border, Thomas amassed $7,000 worth of medical equipment that she stockpiled in her living room.

Bush's indecision hurts budget deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Confusion over President Bush's position on higher taxes slowed congressional efforts Wednesday to start work in earnest on a new budget agreement.

Bush showed no inclination to clarify matters, saying, "Let Congress clear it up," and threatening to shut down the government again if he doesn't get an acceptable deal.

Congressional Democrats complained that an apparent Bush rejection of higher taxes on the wealthiest Americans — a reversal of the position he took at his news conference Tuesday — would make it tougher to forge a budget compromise.

But there was no shortage of options, as both Republicans and Democrats began floating new versions of tax and spending plans on Capitol Hill.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and other lawmakers who met with the president Tuesday night said he had not ruled out the tax boost at that private meeting, as reported by Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters that Bush "listened to" the GOP lawmakers rather than stating a position.

Bush, on a campaign trip in the South, was asked repeatedly about the matter, but turned away the questions with wisecracks.

He was asked as he jogged during a break in St. Petersburg, Fla., if he would care to clear up the confusion.

"Confusion?" he responded.

Was he giving up on his long-sought capital gains tax rate cut, the item the Democrats supposedly were to trade for his support of higher income taxes on rich people?

"Read my hips," he said, pointing, as he jogged by.

Could he clear up his position—

"Let Congress clear it up."

At a fundraising reception in Atlanta, Bush said he vetoed the temporary spending bill last weekend, shutting down the government, to keep the pressure on Congress that otherwise would have gone home.

The bill that eventually passed expires Oct. 19. "The clock is running and it's going to keep on running and I'll veto it again if we don't get a satisfactory deal," Bush said.

The Senate Finance Committee indefinitely postponed a meeting at which it was to discuss a budget package written by its chairman, Texas Democrat Lloyd Bentsen, generally in line with the tax trade Bush endorsed at his news conference.

"We had the deal all worked out until the president changed his position on taxes," said Bentsen.

Across the Capitol, the House Ways and Means Committee adopted a plan on a voice vote written by its chairman, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill. The package was similar to the measure Bentsen's panel had readied, although it would add restrictions on tax deductions available to people earning more than $100,000 annually.

It also would add private planes worth more than $100,000 to the list of luxury items subject to a new 10 percent tax, and place a 2-cent-per-gallon tax on petroleum products, excluding home-heating oil.

Israeli riot killing 19 prompts retaliation, inquires

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel on Wednesday appointed a panel headed by a former spy chief to investigate the killing of 19 Palestinians in a riot on the Temple Mount. It also rejected U. S. charges that police used excessive force.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's government urged Jews to gather at the Wailing Wall at the end of the religious festival of Sukkot on Thursday in a show of defiance of the Arab stoning attack that precipitated the bloodbath.

To block further violence, the army kept more than a million Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip confined to their homes by curfew. In Jerusalem, police fired tear gas to break up numerous protests by Palestinians, which continued into the night.

Arab hospital officials in Gaza and the West Bank said they treated at least 14 Palestinians shot and wounded by soldiers in scattered clashes.

In Jordan, protests by thousands of Jordanian and Palestinian university students continued for the third day Wednesday.

Monday's rioting at the Temple Mount, a site holy to both Jews and Moslems, began with Palestinians stoning Jewish worshippers. Police charged onto the Mount, first firing tear gas and then live ammunition.

Shamir authorized the inquiry hours before the U. N. Security Council was expected to debate a resolution condemning the "particularly excessive Israeli response" to the Monday riot.

The United States and Britain on Wednesday urged a quick vote to support the resolution. Not since Israel invaded Lebanon in 1982 to drive out the PLO has the U. S. taken such a strong stance against its close ally.

On Tuesday, President Bush criticized Israel for not acting "with more restraint."

China, Zimbabwe and Kuwait's government-in-exile on Wednesday added their voices to those condemning Israel for the violence.

Israel, meanwhile, rejected U. S. charges that it used excessive force and said the Security Council draft resolution was hypocritical.

Yossi Ben-Aharon, head of the prime minister's office, said such a resolution "will be useless and play into the hands of Saddam . . . It is an empty gesture at our expense."

New Stanford housing policy allows unmarried, gay couples

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Unmarried couples, including lesbians and gay men, will be allowed to share housing formerly reserved for married students at Stanford University under a new policy.

The university Board of Trustees' decision announced Tuesday gives same-sex and unmarried couples the same rights as legally married students. It entitles "domestic partners" of students to housing and university services such as access to the library and athletic facilities.

Norm Robinson, Stanford's acting dean of student affairs, said the policy would prevent students from having to choose between Stanford and their love interests.

"The change also affirms Stanford's policy of not discriminating against students on a variety of factors, including sexual orientation," Robinson said in a statement.

"This is a significant stepping stone in recognizing the legitimacy of all relationships," said Steven Petrow, director of public affairs for National Gay Rights Advocates, a San Francisco-based group that works for the equal treatment of homosexual couples.

Under the domestic partners policy, students must state they are in an "established long-term domestic partnership with a mutual commitment similar to that of marriage . . . and share the necessities of life and responsibility for their common welfare."

Stanford officials previously decided on granting such benefits case by case. In the last two years, Stanford has permitted two homosexual couples to live together at a university family housing complex.

Although the ruling was hailed by gay rights advocates as a significant victory, others said there are still several areas where Stanford continues to discriminate against homosexuals, despite a 4-year-old policy prohibiting the practice.

David Bradfute, a graduate student in biological sciences, said gay and lesbian partners should be covered under Stanford's health insurance policy. Partners now may use the student health clinic, but must pay for treatment.

Bradfute also wants the new rights extended to faculty and staff, who aren't included in the policy change.

Gay activists also want Stanford to sever ties with the FBI, the CIA and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, all of which recruit students on campus but refuse to enlist gay men or lesbians.

Style vs. substance

Sec. of state candidate runs on image not issues

Dan Nowicki
Opinion Editor

Even the most casual observer among the herd of students that streamed past the elevated speakers and the seated audience during Wednesday's ASU-Political Union sponsored Secretary of State candidates forum on West Lawn could separate the honey from the wax.

Anyone who cocked an ear, listened for a moment and then moved on to their next class can easily tell you which of the two secretary of state candidates — Democrat Dick Mahoney or Republican Ray Rottas — is prime secretary of state material and which could be called the Wizard of Smarm.

Now the position of Arizona secretary of state — often called the most boring job in state politics — isn't known for the dynamic personalities that have held it. The only two people who've had the title in recent memory have been the hard-working but uncharismatic Jim Shumway and current Arizona Gov. Rose Mofford.

And that's the way it should be. It's only natural that the state's most prestigious clerking position be held by the state's most prestigious clerk. Who can expect the office's nightmare of election figures and filing deadlines to attract the cream of the crop of Arizona politicians.

This brings us to our two dueling candidates. On one side we have the grey-haired, distinguished Rottas, former state treasurer, legislator and 100 percent pure clerk. On the other, there's the youthful, upwardly mobile Mahoney, scion of one of Arizona's more notable political families, namedropper extraordinaire and 100 percent pure politician. There couldn't be a sharper contrast between Rottas' solemn, borderline-dullness and Mahoney's bubbly, everyone's-on-a-first-name-basis enthusiasm.

So what enticement could this humdrum office hold for a Kennedy-fixated up-and-comer like Dick Mahoney?

It was probably the position's de facto "lieutenant governor" capacity, moreso than the mere satisfaction of being the state's top elections official, that inspired Mahoney to strain party loyalties and run against Shumway, the well-liked Democratic incumbent, in last month's primary. No doubt Mahoney was disappointed to learn, after his opportunistic campaign was already underway, that the feeble-pulsed Mofford would not seek a new term as governor, and instead the much healthier Terry Goddard would be a shoo-in for the Democratic nomination. "A heartbeat away from the governor's chair" is no longer as close as it could have been.

Nonetheless, Mahoney dramatically outspent and ultimately overwhelmed Shumway in the election, leaving the lifetime bureaucrat with feelings of betrayal and rejection. In fact, sources say that Mahoney's recent conciliatory attitude towards the fallen incumbent (he said the current secretary of state was "one of the best in the country" when it came to overseeing public initiatives at Wednesday's forum) is an attempt to prevent the bitter Shumway from breaking from the party altogether and endorsing Rottas. Shumway resisted the urge to secede only after last minute negotiations with Democratic higher-ups.

The fact remains that Shumway, while maybe not as personally dynamic as Mahoney, was a likeable fellow who did a good job and had devoted a good many years to party service. The Democrats should have stood behind him.

So now it's Mahoney and Rottas. Had Shumway gotten the nod from the Democrats, the race would be tighter as the candidates would be more evenly matched.

As it is, the race will be merely a replay of the Democratic primary: Flash versus experience.

But that's what the public's biting at this year.

Unless something drastic happens, it's unlikely that Rottas will fair any better against Mahoney's wall of blarney than Shumway did. So for once in the last few decades, there's a possibility that a clerk will be missing from the chief clerk's office.

Good interview vs. integrity

Editor:

Kris Timmons is right. The issue of whether women should be allowed in men's locker rooms to do their jobs as reporters has gotten out of hand.

But this was not the original issue. Contrary to Timmons' assertion, the initial issue was sexual harassment. And if this is passed off, as Timmons does, with the comment that "Men will be men. Boys will be boys," I can only add, "And idiots will be idiots."

It is a shame that someone can claim that what reportedly happened to Lisa Olsen has been "misconstrued" as sexual harassment. It was sexual harassment. Ms. Timmons, by claiming that Olsen simply created another story, blames the victim for what happened. That's a shame, too.

Left out of Ms. Timmons' account of the incident is the fact that it happened after a Patriots practice — not a game. This in itself renders much of ensuing discussion moot.

As for Ms. Timmons' discussion of the merits of locker room interviews, I will rest content with the observation that it is not clear whether reporters are confusing "good copy" with a "good interview."

Ms. Timmons asks Lisa Olsen: "What is more important to you: A good interview or your integrity?" It is all too obvious from Ms. Timmons' article what her answer would be. And that, too, is a shame.

Today it's Iraq

Sometimes we don't know which country to hate

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Syndicate

Although the shooting hasn't begun yet, I've been trying to work up a healthy hatred for Iraq. It seems like the patriotic thing to do. And I've always believed that if people go through the bother of killing each other, they shouldn't be impersonal about it. After all, it is a very intimate act.

Although I haven't reached the point of gnashing my teeth at the thought of an Iraqi, I'm sure it will come because I've had so much experience at this sort of thing.

The first time I developed a patriotic hatred was in 1939, when newsboys came through the neighborhood at night, waving special editions and shouting: "Extra, extra, Germany invades Poland."

Although I was just a kid, within a couple of years I dutifully hated Germans, Japanese and Italians. (I didn't hate Italians very long, though, because they surrendered as soon as it was convenient.)

At the same time, I loved and admired the brave Russians and Chinese, because they had joined us in hating the evil Germans, Japanese, and Italians.

But as soon as World War II ended, and I could stop hating the evil Germans and Japanese because they weren't evil anymore, I had to start hating the brave Russians and Chinese, because they weren't brave anymore, and had become evil.

While I was adjusting to that, along came the North Koreans. Even though I didn't know a North Korean from a South Korean, or any Korean from a chipmunk, I went along and hated them. The North Koreans.

Not long after that, I discovered I could still hate some Germans. Not West Germans, because they had become good and even gave us some of their ex-Nazi scientists to help us build rockets. But East Germans had become evil commies, and were to be hated.

However, this created some confusion, since Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and other countries had become commie, too, so I felt a responsibility to hate them. But I was told that they didn't really want to be commies: The Russians made them do it. So I didn't have to hate them as much as I hated the Russians and Chinese.

Then came Cuba. I had never paid much attention to Cuba because I didn't smoke cigars. But when a heroic Fidel Castro overthrew an evil, corrupt regime, I was urged to admire the heroic Castro, which I did, although he looked like he needed a bath. Then, almost overnight, Castro became an evil commie and I had to start hating Cuba. My hatred reached the boiling point when we had the Cuban missile crisis. But in recent years, it's been reduced to a simmer.

Naturally, I joined in really hating North Vietnam. And some Cambodians, although I'm not certain which Cambodians I was supposed to hate. It's possible that in the confusion I was hating Cambodians that I should have been liking, in which case I apologize.

The 1960's may have been one of my hate-peaks, second only to the 1940's. I found myself hating the Russians, Chinese, North Vietnam and Cuba, while still nursing an intense dislike for North Korea, and not thinking highly of Albania. There were a few other countries that I occasionally cursed, but their names slip my mind.

Shortly thereafter, though, President Nixon said I didn't have to hate the Chinese anymore, although I wasn't expected to hug them. And I haven't hated them since, except for that recent month or two when I could again hate them because of the way they kicked around their students. But that seems to have calmed down and President Bush says it's O. K. not to hate them, so I don't.

In fact, I don't have to hate the Russians, or hardly anyone in Europe because we've become pals and they're all eager to eat Quarter Pounders with cheese like decent folks do.

And it couldn't have happened at a better time, because of the need to hate Iraq. I can be vicious, but I only have so much hatred to spread around.

Actually, it isn't that hard to hate Iraq. It's simply a matter of shifting my hatred a few miles. Until recently, I hated Iran and kind of liked Iraq because it was fighting with Iran. But now it's time to hate Iraq, it's not necessary to hate Iran. Unless Iran cuts a friendly deal with Iraq, in which case I'll have to hate it again. Iran, I mean.

Fortunately, there is less pressure to hate some of the other Arab nations, which I formerly hated because they went in for terrorism. But now they say they hate Iraq, too, which means that I can like them. At least for the time being. Things can change quite quickly and I might have to start hating them once more, so I'm not going to like them a lot just in case.

I wonder if there will come a time when there isn't anyone I have to hate. Nah. Not as long as there are New York Mets.

Ohio obscenity trial was full of perfect moments

Ellen Goodman
Washington Post Writers Group

BOSTON — There are times when the Mapplethorpe trial in Cincinnati produces testimony worthy of the title attached to the museum exhibit: "The Perfect Moment."

Perfect moment number one: Prosecutor Frank Prouty holds up two photographs, one of a man with a bullwhip in his rectum. He asks the art director who chose these images for the show: "Would you call these sexual acts?"

She answers: "I would call them figure studies."

Perfect moment number two: Prouty questions museum director Dennis Barrie: "This photograph of a man with his finger inserted in his penis, what is the artistic content of that?"

He responds: "It is a striking photograph in terms of light and composition."

Perfect moment number three: This occurs when even the most devoted defender of free expression lifts her eye from the page to offer her own art criticism to the great curator in the sky: "AAAARGGH!"

There was never any doubt in my mind that the trial over Robert Mapplethorpe's photographs would bring "a cultural clash" into the courtroom. Soho meets Cincinnati.

But in its opening week, the testimony turned into a linguistic battle, a tale of two tongues: One side speaking art; one side speaking English. It had begun to sound less like a case about obscenity than about class, elitism, artistic sensibilities and common sense.

Americans often divide like this when dealing with art. One group thinks that Andy Warhol's Brillo Box is brilliant and the other thinks it's a scam. Each believes the other a pack of fools, though one may be called snobs and the other rubes. Guess which one is larger?

The divide is bad enough when the argument is about Brillo. But when it's about bodies, watch out.

The seven photographs at issue in this trial contain some grotesque subjects. In one of them a man urinates into another man's mouth. Show me somebody that can look at that photograph and think about the composition, the symmetry, the classical arc of the liquid and I'll show you someone with an advanced degree in fine arts. This is the sort of thing being said in Cincinnati.

By the end, the verdict may hinge on legal maneuvers. The Contemporary Arts Center may have lost when the judge denied its plea to show all the photographs, not just these. The outcome may have been determined in the jury selection. There are no museum-goers, no artists, no students of "What is art?" in this group.

But the trial in Cincinnati, like the troubles at the National Endowment for the Arts, are partly the result of the art world's own chic insularity. They come because the art community speaks its private language to a circle so small, so cozy, and so closed as to be dangerously isolated.

Perfect Moment number four: The prosecution asked how art was determined — was it merely the whim of the museum?

The witness, a museum director, said no, it was the culture at large. And this is how he determined the culture at large: "Museums, critics, curators, historians, galleries."

I agree with the museum's right to show these photographs. To leave the dark side out of a Mapplethorpe exhibit would be like leaving the tortured black paintings out of a retrospective of Goya's work. It wouldn't be legitimate to pick and choose the sunny side of the work — the calla lilies and celebrities — and show it as the whole.

Indeed, as the director also said, Mapplethorpe set out to capture the line between the disgusting and the beautiful. There is room in life for the deliberately disturbing. The museum's room — a glass case in a separate gallery — was tame enough.

Nevertheless, this trial like the funding woes of NEA are not just the fault of Jesse Helms on the rampage. They are the fault as well of an art community that lives in a rarefied climate, talking to each other, subject only to "peer review" and scornful of those who translate the word "art" into "smut."

Now there is the knock of the policeman at the door. Having failed to make their place in public, they have to make it in court. In the history of art this is not a perfect moment.

ASU Downtown Center campus alternative

By TEENA CHADWELL
State Press

Imagine arriving at ASU and finding a nearly empty parking lot.

Also, imagine that these parking spaces are only minutes away from class.

A dream? No — it's the ASU Downtown Center.

"I think its size, its location and its appearance makes the kind of strong statement we want to see made," ASU President Lattie Coor said. "It is an example of ASU's modern notion of being one University in multiple locations."

The center is geared toward people who live and work downtown, said Geneva Duarte, assistant director of the downtown campus.

In July, it was moved to its new location, 502 E. Monroe in Phoenix, and was officially dedicated in a ceremony last Friday.

Many of the classrooms have amenities students at the main campus only dream about.

Two classrooms decorated in muted shades of coral and green have French doors opening onto balconies that stretch over the colorful sights and sounds of the Mercado shopping plaza. After class, students can enjoy browsing through the unique shops or stop by one of the popular ethnic restaurants in the downtown area.

The center boasts six classrooms and three meeting rooms, which can be used by ASU groups at no charge.

Many of the College of Public Affairs classes available are night courses for graduate students.

Several computer classes, both credit and non-credit, are offered in the PC Training Program. There are three computer classrooms and a computer lab.

The branch campus is developing new programs to revitalize the downtown area and community, Duarte said.

Project Prime, a statewide partnership to improve minority education, is one such program that will target minorities in elementary and secondary schools.

"The goal is to quadruple the number of minority students who receive a college degree," Duarte said.

Coor agreed.

"It's going to help minority students enter the mainstream and compete effectively for college preparation," he said.

The program will have reached 10,000 children by the end of the year, substantially more than expected, Coor said, adding that schools chosen to participate in the program are those with a high percentage of minorities.

Non-minority students are not segregated from minorities at the targeted schools, said Bette McGraw, director of the ASU Downtown Center, adding that everyone is encouraged to participate.

"If you expect the best from people, mostly they give it to you," she said.

Tamara Wofford/State Press

ASU's Downtown Center is the Ritz Carlton of extended campuses, with close available parking and balconies in classrooms.

Thomas then formed the Friends Without Borders group, which is currently attempting to acquire tax-free status.

The Tempe-based organization, Brother to Brother International, helps Thomas get the medical supplies.

Thomas said the most disheartening aspect of her volunteer work is knowing there is treatment and not being able to act because of financial problems.

"You do the best you can," she said. "Every time I go back there's improvement."

Thomas said an integral element of the clinical work is mutual respect of cultures.

She spoke of an incident in which a patient said he was sick, because someone gave him the "evil eye" when he was a child.

"I wrote it on his chart because that's as significant as his actual ailment," Thomas said. "If somebody believes that, you have to deal with it as the truth."

She said the "evil eye" is a cultural superstition that can remain with a person throughout their life.

When Thomas is in Puerto Penasco, the Mexicans are so grateful for the clinic's presence that they'll wait the entire day to get medical attention.

"After the children are seen, they sometimes will go and kiss each of the staff as they leave," she said. "It's so humbling. It's not like you feel proud of yourself, it just breaks you."

Michael Williams, an ASU graduate student in anthropology who helps with the clinic, said that Thomas acts out of her own ideas of morality.

"What she saw was her first experience with Third World culture," he said. "It became really personal to her, and she wanted to do something about it."

points of their campaigns, and a 30-minute question-and-answer session followed.

"ASU needs to become a political force," Mahoney said. "Student involvement and participation will ensure an immediate affect on the Legislature."

Rottas said people need to educate themselves about ballot and candidate issues.

"Education is tremendously important," he said. "We are losing ground. We need to get people involved to make judgments."

Although both candidates agreed student involvement is vital, they differed on the ways to encourage it.

"We have to do something about voter registration," Rottas said. "Using postcard registration, voters could simply fill out the card and mail it in without the fear of fraud."

Mahoney said same-day registration is the answer, especially for students.

"Students come from all over, and Arizona has a terrible voter registration rate," he said. "It (same-day registration) would give students a chance to get out and vote and affect tuition and the level of higher education."

The candidates ended the debate by stating their views on changing the election process and promoting political involvement.

"If you change the way you elect people, you change democracy," Mahoney said.

Rottas agreed.

"Changes need to be made," he said. "But more importantly people interested must participate and decide how we are going to change."

The inquiry panel is to be headed by reserve Maj. Gen. Zvi Zamir, who was chief of Israel's Mossad intelligence service from 1968-74. Others on the panel are a law professor and a former director of the Interior Ministry, the government said.

Shamir's spokesman, Yossi Ahimeir, said panel members would be empowered to make recommendations as "they see fit." Israeli radio said, however, that the commission would not have subpoena powers and that its recommendations would not be binding.

A group of leftist and liberal groups including Peace Now and the Mapam Party demanded that a government-appointed investigation panel with full subpoena powers be created. The Civil Rights Association said Arabs should participate in such a committee.

The move to appoint a commission of inquiry came after the police announced they were abandoning their own inquiry amid questions about whether the force could fairly investigate its own actions.

The last time such a commission was appointed was in 1985 to examine the deaths of two Palestinian bus hijackers while in custody of the Shin Bet security service.

The call for Jews to gather at the Wailing Wall at the end of the eight-day Sukkot festival came in full-page advertisements placed in Israeli dailies by the Ministry of Religion and Israel's chief rabbis.

Educator's plans revealed

By TEENA CHADWELL
State Press

State Superintendent of Public Instruction C. Diane Bishop said Wednesday she wants to increase the high school graduation rate by making teachers more aware of problems students are having outside of the classroom.

"We need a strong dose of reality in at-risk students," she said to the audience of 28 administrators and students in Payne Hall.

Bishop added that teachers keep themselves isolated from the realities their students face.

In addition, students in public schools take the national Iowa achievement test, which does not represent the skills students learn in school, Bishop said, adding that the newly developed Arizona Assessment Plan, a student assessment test, does not match the student's curriculum 100 percent, either.

"The Arizona Assessment (Plan) is more valuable than the Iowa," Bishop said.

Students will now take both tests, the school superintendent said, because the state Legislature wants to keep the Iowa test in order to compare Arizona's performance with other states.

Members of the audience were pleased with Bishop's speech.

"Ms. Bishop is showing she is qualified for the job and has some well thought out plans for the next four years," said Sheila Brunty, program coordinator for the bureau of educational research and service for the ASU College of Education.

"It was a very excellent session," said Maggie Mangini, director of the Bureau of Educational Research and Service. "She's grown into the job."

Liquid diets a health hazard says official

By ANITA CARCONE
State Press

Liquid-formula diets are a health hazard and not the answer to a healthy weight-loss regiment, an ASU health official said.

Although liquid diets promise to shed pounds in a limited amount of days and calm hunger pangs, Karen Moses, ASU nutritionist and dietician, said the liquids are not beneficial, except for people with health risks that are worse than those associated with the diets, such as obesity.

Side effects linked to low calorie diets include heart failure, eating disorders, loss of body protein, dehydration, low blood potassium and sugar, and the inability to maintain long-term weight loss, she said.

"More and more people are using the liquid-formula diet as a regular diet plan," Moses said. "This is not appropriate, because you're not learning how to eat or diet properly, you're just drinking a formula."

Moses stressed that in order to achieve a weight loss goal, healthy well-balanced meals must be eaten regularly.

"Learning the right skills on how to select the right foods is the healthy way to maintain weight loss," she said. "College students who want to lose 20 pounds should change their eating habits instead of turning to a liquid diet.

"It may be a faster way to lose the weight, but once you're off it (the diet), it is also faster to regain the weight again."

In addition, Moses said exercising and cutting back on sugary and fatty foods can help keep the weight off longer.

Moses added that usually the weight lost from liquid diets comes from the muscles, and when it is gained back, fat takes its place.

"Liquid diets help you lose weight, but national statistics show that 92-95 percent of the people who lose weight will regain it again," she said.

Sandoz Nutrition, the corporation that invented Optifast, one of the nation's largest liquid-formula diets, are experiencing sinking success rates and are on the verge of fading out, said Cindy Thompson, chief clinical dietician at the UofA Medical Center.

She said the corporation has existed for at least 10 years and supplies the medical center with Optifast for their patients.

Jim Parson, director of the optifast division of Sandoz Nutrition, said on a national perspective, the (Optifast) market was expanding, but is now experiencing a decline.

"Over half of the 600 programs have decided to close because of the shrinking market and the competition with other commercial weight loss systems," he said, adding that consumers could be confused in deciding which diet industry to choose.

"They are a starvation-type diet that can kill people."
— Kathy Graham

According to Thompson, the company is closing its doors because of a dropping success rate and diminishing popularity.

She agreed that learning to change eating habits and maintaining muscle mass through exercise is important to keep weight off.

"I would only recommend liquid diets to people whose clinical status is greater than their body weight and if other diets have failed them," she said, adding that when obesity becomes a person's primary problem, liquid diets should be used under medical supervision with behavior modification.

Kathy Graham, a registered dietician and clinical nutrition manager at the Maricopa County Health Department, said liquid-formula diets are nutritionally unsafe and unsound, adding that they are not endorsed by the health department.

"They are a starvation-type diet that can kill people," she said. "The diets substantially lower the metabolic rate of the body, and if the person decides to get off the diet, the body is not given enough time to adjust to this change. This will result in more weight gain."

According to Jan Sinclair, a consulting nutritionist in private practice in Tempe, people will be able to lose weight rapidly with liquid-diets, but keeping it off will be the hard part.

"When you use the diet to lose weight, it's like you're taking a magic pill, a short-term answer to a long-term problem," she said.

Sinclair added that serious attention must be given to exercise and eating habits when losing pounds.

"Eating habits are hard to change and require psychological commitment, attention and lots of time," she said.

Budget

neither higher tax rates on the rich nor a lower capital gains tax. But lawmakers said those items might be added by amendments on the House floor.

Facing an Oct. 19 deadline, congressional committees must work out tax and spending details adding up to a $500 billion reduction in the federal deficit over the next five years.

Medicare spending is expected to be cut, though not as much as in the budget package rejected by the House last week, and taxes are expected to be increased on such consumer items as gasoline, tobacco and alcohol.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said, "I had hoped for an agreement on tax proposals along the lines Sen. Bentsen had indicated an intention to offer and . . . the president had indicated an intention to accept. The president's reversal of that position last evening . . . requires us to reconsider and attempt to determine how best to proceed."

Dole said that because of the political uproar they were causing, both a lower capital gains tax and higher rates on the wealthy should be excluded from the package.

"They've become sort of a tar baby," he said. "Let's get this done and get back to deficit reduction."

The confusion was also exposing rifts among Republican lawmakers.

A group of conservative House Republicans put together a deficit-slashing plan of their own, raising the income tax rate on the wealthiest Americans from 28 to 31 percent. It would drop the rate on people who are almost as well-to-do from 33 percent to 31 percent, and not increase the gasoline tax.

"We're delighted to have White House input," said Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-

Okla., the leader of the group. "We're not looking to the White House for leadership."

At day's end Tuesday, GOP senators had visited Bush to tell him they opposed raising taxes on the wealthy even if Democrats would agree to capital gains rate cuts.

"He just acquiesced in it," Packwood told reporters afterward.

"I got the impression the president thought that was fine, but I can't point to a definite fact where he said, all right, this is it," said Sen. John Chafee, R-R. I.

Dole seemed certain: "He didn't announce his position at all. He didn't acquiesce."

Most ASU students prefer to walk the campus alone at night despite recent outbreaks of violence on and near college campuses around the country, an ASU official said.

"There's a small minority of students who use (SES)," said Jessica Groenke, director of the University's Student Escort Service. "I think we need to have more people using it."

Groenke said students don't use the service for a couple of reasons.

First, she said, students may not feel that the distance they are walking is far enough to require an escort.

Groenke said no distance is too short for an escort to be called.

"Students don't have to be afraid to use us," she said.

Groenke also said many students don't want to bother the escorts.

SES is a service operated with 15 to 20 student volunteers who walk students, usually women, anywhere around campus at night.

Its office is located in the MU by the Student Information Desk. Escorts are available Sunday through Thursday, from 7 p.m. until 12:15 a.m.

The program utilizes the philosophy of safety in numbers, Groenke said.

"We do not have any claim as a safety force," she said, adding that the escort service acts as a guide or companion.

Escorts carry radios with them and are in constant contact with their dispatcher. If an emergency arises, they call their dispatcher, who will notify the police.

There is no training course for prospective escorts, but the ASU Department of Public Safety does safety checks on all escort applicants to be sure they have a clear history.

The SES was developed at ASU in 1981, a year riddled with sexual assaults on campus, said Jarred Michel, a sophomore engineering student and assistant coordinator for SES.

Students said they take on the job for different reasons.

"I first heard about it in my justice class and it seemed like a good thing to get involved in," said Jeff Elsasser, a sophomore business major.

And there are students who take advantage of the services that SES provides.

"I'm really concerned about safety on campus," said Kris Rice, a sophomore finance major. "I feel so much more secure (with an escort)."

Charlene Sandquist, a sophomore music major, agreed.

"You might as well use it (SES) to prevent taking a risk," she said.

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents Wednesday:

•A woman was hit by an ASU tram on Orange Street. Police are unsure of how the woman was hit, but apparently the driver was unaware he had hit her. She informed the driver he had hit her and left before police arrived. The woman was not seriously injured in the incident. Police are still investigating.

•A thief broke into a storage room at the University Activity Center and removed several T-shirts. There were no signs of forced entry. Loss is estimated at $990.

Police have no suspects in the case.

•An employee reported that a thief stole $37 in quarters from a pay-to-operate typewriter in Hayden Library. Police have no leads in the case and are unsure how the thief gained entry to the machine.

•A men's Giant Iguana bicycle, valued at $300, was stolen from the southwest corner of Mariposa Residence Hall where it had been secured with a U-lock.

•Police were called to the Student Recreation Complex after a student reported that a man was exposing himself in the swimming pool. When police arrived, the woman who called in the report did not wish to press charges against him. Police warned the man against such activity and released him.

•A person not affiliated with ASU was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol at Terrace Avenue and Rural Road. The man refused to take an intoxilyzer test and was booked into the East Maricopa County Jail.

•A thief stole a calculator, valued at $250, from a room at Palo Verde Main Residence Hall. Police have no suspects in the case. Tempe police reported the following incident Wednesday:

•Two men approached a man and a woman, who had just gotten out of their car at 6445 S. Maple Ave. One of the men pointed a gun at them, and the man tried to run away. He tripped, fell and one of the suspects took his wallet from his pocket. The other suspect demanded the woman's purse and slapped her. Also, the suspects took two bookbags from the back of the victims' car. The suspects fled in their car.

Arizona's economy 'very slow' survey reports

By JEFF CONCORDS
State Press

Rising prices and the crisis in the Middle East have caused Arizona's economy to level off in September, a recent survey conducted by ASU's Center of Purchasing Studies revealed.

"Basically what that means is the economy in Arizona is very slow," said Harold Fearon, a faculty associate in the center who conducted the survey. "There is not a lot of growth at this point, but we have not yet entered into a recession."

Fearon, who holds a doctorate degree in business administration from Michigan State University, said the effects of higher inflation and rising oil prices have brought the state's economy to a near standstill.

The monthly survey that has been in existence for 29 years tracks the movement of seven major economic indicators, from over 100 companies throughout the state. The data is gathered from the companies' purchasing managers and are compared to the previous month's results.

Statistics are collected from the areas of production, employment, purchases, new orders received, delivery time, inventory levels and prices paid for commodities.

"It (the survey) looks at manufacturing and construction and attempts to measure whether the economy is increasing or decreasing," Fearon said.

According to the September results, a majority of companies showed no change in six of the seven categories, compared to August.

"Fearon said the state's economy seems to be in step with the national economy, which is a good sign.

"It shows that the Arizona economy has matured and is not self-dependent," he said. "We are now buying and selling products on the international market which we were not doing 20 years ago."

As for where the economy is headed, Fearon said there are two possible scenarios based on what happens in the Middle East.

"If there is a prolonged shooting war there, that does not bode well for Arizona or the national economy," he said, adding that a war will drive oil prices even higher, sending the nation into an economic tailspin. "We could be in for some rocky economic times."

If there is a peaceful ending to the crisis in Kuwait, Fearon said things should improve.

"If the Iraqis eventually go away, I look for the economy to resume moderate growth," Fearon said.

The faculty associate said the unique aspect of the survey is its expediency.

"Typically you have to wait four to six weeks for results," he said, adding that the survey is "a sort of early warning indicator for the economy."

KENOSHA, Wis. (AP) — When Denice Sprowl learned a radio station would give free New Kids on the Block tickets to parents who would do the craziest things, she made a vow.

"I'd do anything. I'd shave my head," she promised. And that's exactly what she did to win two backstage passes, four tickets, a limousine ride to and from the Nov. 11 concert in Milwaukee, plus an evening at an adult fantasy suite in Northbrook, Ill.

Her 12-year-old daughter, Anna, had been disappointed her mother couldn't afford tickets to the popular rock group's concert at East Troy last year. Sprowl, 28, of Lake Geneva, heard about the contest on Kenosha station WJZQ. At the contest Saturday, her 38-year-old sister, Debbie DaSilva, clipped and shaved Sprowl's hair.

"When she started with the clippers, I was thinking, 'What if I do this and I don't win the tickets?'" But the sight of the hair-clipping caused several contestants to drop out, and Ms. Sprowl emerged a bald-headed winner.

Tisdell playing as freshman but not like one

By PAUL CORO
State Press

After a four-year hiatus from fun football, ASU outside linebacker David Tisdell is enjoying his time on the field again.

Growing up in football-crazy Texas, Tisdell's favorite childhood game turned into business once he entered the state's high school phenomenon.

"You can go into any town on a Friday night and if you're a thief, you can have a ball because there's nobody at home," the Hempstead, Texas, native said. "Everybody's at the stadium."

Now, Tisdell is relishing the opportunity to play in front of thousands. After beating out Dereck Moore at Camp Tontozona for the backup job to Darren Woodson, the 18-year-old true freshman will start against California Saturday because Woodson sprained his ankle versus Washington last week.

"When he went down, the whole stadium got bigger all of a sudden," Tisdell said. "I was like, 'Get up, Darren, I'm not ready.'"

In his first significant amount of playing time, Tisdell responded with 10 tackles and will now step into the role he has been dreaming of since his childhood — starting a Pac-10 football game.

"It has really been kind of easy being second string," Tisdell said. "A lot of the things Darren sees in games, I didn't get to see so I didn't worry about them. Now, I'm in there from the get-go to the end."

Woodson is one of the major reasons Tisdell has come so far in such little time, according to Tisdell and his coaches.

Woodson, a junior, was the first player he met at ASU and has taken Tisdell under his wing ever since.

"Tis is a great player," Woodson said. "The first time I saw him play, I thought he was going to be a great player."

Tisdell said Woodson has been more of a friend off the field than on because he has helped him adapt to the big picture as well as coverages and assignments.

"He's the first person who really gave me treatment as an equal," Tisdell said. "I was a freshman, but that was just a title."

As he took the advice of his brother, Barry, to avoid the freshman label, Tisdell said he gained the respect of his teammates. At camp, he was seen unexpectedly jumping into drills and sidestepping second-stringers in favor of starters for practice competition.

Tisdell said his aggressiveness is his main attribute because it helps make up for his lack of experience.

"He's a little more mature than the ordinary freshman," ASU defensive coordinator Mel Foels said. "But we expected that of him. We knew that when we recruited him. He's done a fine job."

Tisdell snubbed just about all of the Southwest Conference in order to play for the Sun Devils because he felt the Pac-10 "fits" him.

Despite posting impressive statistics (240 tackles in his junior and senior years), the 6-foot-1, 216-pound Tisdell was only touted as an all-state honorable mention in talent-laden Texas.

"I didn't get the publicity a lot of the other guys did," Tisdell said. "In a way, I was kind of an unknown. It didn't bother me though because I knew when all is said and done, I'll rise to the top."

Tisdell's early success has many wondering just how far his talents will carry him by the end of his ASU career, including himself.

"As long as I trust in God and keep my belief and faith in him, I have no limits," Tisdell said. "If I do that, there's no telling what I'll be doing four years from now."

In the meantime, Tisdell's thoughts are focused on not becoming the weak link in the Sun Devils' defense. Outside Woodson's advice, Tisdell said the coaching staff has helped him feel at ease in light of the increasing pressure that has been placed on him.

"There's a smile on their face when they tell me things," Tisdell said. "There's no fear in their eyes. It's not like they're worried about playing a freshman. If I was a head coach and had a kid 18 years old out there performing for me, I'd be a little shaky."

Tisdell's confidence has never been shaken since he committed to ASU. He said that despite little support from others, he was convinced he could play as a freshman. After spending the summer in Tempe to work out with his future teammates, Tisdell said he developed a sense of belonging that most freshmen lack.

"I had already conditioned myself mentally that I was going to be in that lineup somehow," Tisdell said. "I really expected to play."

"I've been blessed to be able to do some things I'm doing right now. Very few people get to live out their childhood dreams. To say I'm actually going to play as a true freshman, it makes me kind of teary-eyed. I wonder sometimes if it is really true. Did I really do it?"

•After reinjuring the ligaments of his right knee Saturday, defensive tackle Shane Collins has opted to have reconstructive surgery.

•Quarterback Kurt Lasher was bothered somewhat again by a sore right hand in practice Wednesday, but will still likely play Saturday.

•Of the injured Sun Devils, only inside linebacker Drew Metcalf and strong safety Floyd Fields could possibly return for Saturday's game.

•Tailback George Montgomery (shin splints), cornerback Kevin Miniefield (knee sprain), nose guard Arthur Paul (knee sprain), center Jim Watson (knee sprain) and Woodson (ankle sprain) will all probably sit out Saturday.

Freshman outside linebacker David Tisdell will start Saturday against California because of an ankle injury to starter Darren Woodson.

Volleyball tries to reason for team's rash of injuries

By GREG ZELE
State Press

On the surface, volleyball seems like a fairly innocuous sport.

Take a look at the ASU volleyball team's roster, however, and you will discover quite another thing.

Volleyball can be very hazardous to your health. Just ask Tiffanie Johnson, Jennifer Rogers, Kathy Culbreath, Jenny Halack and Christine Everett.

All of them, with the exception of Everett, were starters on the Sun Devil squad this year before succumbing to injury. Everett was a projected starter but she was injured before the season even began.

All of them are out for the rest of the season.

"Never, in all my years of playing and coaching, have I seen even one season-ending injury and this year we've had five," said Coach Patti Snyder, who has coached volleyball for nine years.

Snyder is at a loss to explain the rash of injuries. She said ASU is using the exact same conditioning program it has been employing for the past four years and the team is in better physical condition than last year.

In addition, Snyder said the team has been using the same drills in practice and working on the same techniques.

Snyder said the only real variables are the new surface on the University Activity Center floor, where the team plays its matches and used to practice, and the new shoes the team has been wearing.

The UAC floor was resurfaced in August and Snyder said the new surface is like artificial turf because once you plant your foot it often sticks.

Even though both Johnson and Culbreath suffered their injuries on the road, Snyder believed the strain of practicing on the UAC floor every day might have caused undue stress on the players' legs.

Snyder and Athletic Director Charles Harris have since determined the floor to be safe and ASU will continue to play its games at the UAC but not practice there.

The Sun Devils have changed their practice site to the P. E. East building as a precautionary measure following last week's injury to Culbreath.

"We switched our practices as more of a psychological thing," Snyder said.

Snyder has generally ruled out the shoes as a factor after talking to an Asics representative. Several teams throughout the nation use Asics Crosstrainers, according to Snyder.

"We're just beside ourselves trying to figure this thing out," Snyder said.

The injuries to the starters began with Rogers, a junior middle blocker. She tore her anterior cruciate ligament in her left knee during ASU's third match of the year against Cal-State Northridge. Rogers underwent reconstructive surgery on Sept. 8.

"After sitting out a year, I'll have a lot more desire when I return," said Rogers, who will be forced to sit out spring practice.

Johnson, a freshman setter, will also miss spring practice. She sustained an injury to her left knee when she planted her foot as she was going up for a kill during the Sun Devils' upset of San Diego State.

"I'm a little afraid I might reinjure it next season," Johnson said. "Mentally, I have to get over it more than physically."

Both Rogers and Johnson were lucky

Will Powers/State Press

Freshman Tiffanie Johnson is one of five Sun Devil volleyball players to suffer a serious injury this season.

because their injuries occurred relatively early in the season so they were able to redshirt.

Halack, a senior defensive specialist, underwent surgery on Tuesday for a torn ligament in her shoulder. Halack had been bothered by pain in her shoulder and only after she failed to respond to cortisone treatments did doctors operate and realize the extent of the damage.

"There is a slight chance that she could be back for postseason play, but we can't be sure of anything at this point," Snyder said.

Because Halack missed the redshirt deadline, her career as a player at ASU is probably over, barring a miraculous comeback.

The Sun Devils' most recent casualty was Culbreath, a freshman outside hitter. The injury occurred last weekend in a match at Oregon. Culbreath injured her knee during a pivotal game as she went up for a kill.

A's win ALCS; Pirates hold on

(AP) — The Oakland A's swept the Boston Red Sox to win the American League pennant Wednesday while the Pittsburgh Pirates defeated the Cincinnati Reds, 3-2, to keep the National League Championship Series alive.

In Oakland, the umpires got rid of Roger Clemens first and the rest was easy for Dave Stewart and the A's. They won the ALCS for their third straight trip to the World Series.

Stewart followed up his first-game heroics with an even better effort, beating Boston 3-1 and winning for the eighth straight time in head-to-head matchups with Clemens, who was ejected in the second inning.

"It was pretty wild out there, but we don't usually mess around with things like that Oakland manager Tony LaRussa said. "We just take care of our business."

Stewart, who was named series MVP, walked one, struck out one and improved to 5-0 in the playoffs, setting a record for most victories.

The Pirates ended a five-game losing streak to the Reds on their home field in Game 5 on Wednesday night, winning 3-2 behind 22-game winner Doug Drabek and a game-winning double play turned by last-minute third base starter Bobby Bonilla.

The Pirates have trailed 3-1 in the postseason only twice before in their 104-year history, and they rallied to win each time, in the 1925 World Series against Walter Johnson and the Washington Senators, and in the 1979 World Series against the Baltimore Orioles.

"All I know is we needed to win three, now we have to win two straight and we're the champions," manager Jim Leyland said.

Losing pitcher Tom Browning, who outdueled Drabek in Game 2, said the Reds still feel comfortable and confident.
