ASASU calls for reasonable tuition hike

By KENNETH BROWN
State Press

Student leaders said they will ask ASU President Lattie Coor today to recommend a "reasonable" increase in tuition at Thursday's Arizona Board of Regents' Resources Committee meeting in Tucson.

As a member of the Council of Presidents, Coor will fashion a tuition-setting and financial aid recommendation today to be presented to the regents' Resources Committee on Thursday.

Thursday's committee meeting is an early step in a tuition-setting process that will ultimately come before the regents.

Associated Students of ASU President

Matt Ortega said the tuition issue is "getting down to the wire" in what he feels will be the group's biggest struggle this semester.

"It's too bad in the first place that we have to see it as a battle," Ortega said. "The bottom line is we just don't want to see students paying more for less."

Arizona Students Association representatives also decided by telephone Sunday to request the regents match tuition hikes "dollar for dollar" with financial aid.

Rob Miller, ASA state relations director, said the request's wording and figures have not yet been finalized but added that representatives of all three universities agree with the idea.

Ortega and other leaders expect a tuition increase, but they hope the regents will listen to students who air their views at an Oct. 29 hearing in Tucson.

Student leaders said they hope to avoid what they claim was last year's mistake of waiting too long to counter increases.

Last February, the regents increased tuition $1,000 a year for out-of-state students and $116 for residents, which sparked explosive protests that included an all-night sit-in at the Student Services Building.

Ortega said ASASU will mobilize student demonstrations this year to voice opposition against the expected increases.

The ASASU president said student leaders already have scored large victories in their backing of the regents' recent decision to use actual budget figures in setting tuition. Leaders also pushed for a proposal that led to the board's pledge to decide on tuition in November.

Maren Lee, ASA associate director of state relations, said student bodies from Arizona's universities plan to organize "other events" in what she hopes will be a grass-roots effort for tuition opponents.

"We had outrageous (tuition) figures last year," Lee said. "That's not acceptable for us to see. We realize that increases are definitely inevitable, but they should be

Six charged in fraternity mob assault

By TENNY TATUSIAN
State Press

Six former members of the Mesa Community College football team have been charged in last year's mob assault on an off-campus University fraternity house that left one ASU student with serious head injuries, Tempe officials said.

The riot occurred Oct. 8, 1989 when a group of MCC football players allegedly ransacked the Delta Chi fraternity house, 1402 S. Jen Tilly Lane, after a rock fight left 20-year-old Matthew Springer with a fractured skull.

Tempe officials believe Mike Coleman, 20, threw the rock that hit Springer between the eyes — almost killing him. Coleman has been charged with misdemeanor assault, disorderly conduct, unlawful assembly and trespassing.

Steve Colegrove, 19, Brent Hatfield, 21, and Rick Flaherty, 25, were charged with disorderly conduct, unlawful assembly and trespassing in the incident.

Mark Rotter, 26, and Edward Breunig, 20, were charged with the same misdemeanor counts as above in addition to charges of criminal damage.

Rotter still attends the junior college full time, and Colegrove is a part-time student there. The students no longer play football for the community college, according to the MCC registrar's office.

Motion would increase faculty seats on Budget Council

By KEVIN SHEH
State Press

A motion calling for more faculty representation on the Budget Council was introduced to the Faculty Senate Monday, as student leaders called for their own voice on the financial committee.

Faculty Senate President Arlene Metha, a non-voting member, currently is the council's only faculty member.

Officials said the motion, which calls for the chairman of the Faculty Senate Financial Aid Committee to sit on the Budget Council in addition to Metha, will likely be voted on Nov. 19.

The Budget Council makes financial recommendations to ASU President Lattie Coor and coordinates program change requests for the University. After prioritizing the requests, it recommends the changes to ASU President Lattie Coor.

Coor

The council also develops budget policy and is involved in fiscal decisions made throughout the year.

Metha said an additional faculty representative — who would give specific input into University budget matters during the process — is important.

But Metha said it has not been determined by the Faculty Senate whether her seat or the proposed seat would have voting power.

"We're still open on that," Metha said.

Meanwhile, Associated Students of ASU President Matt Ortega said students need to be represented on the council before faculty are granted an additional seat.

The 2,000 to 3,000 faculty members are represented by one person on the Budget Council, but the students — more than 43,000 strong — have no voice, he said.

"I don't believe an additional faculty member is necessary," Ortega said.

He added that with the Legislature's approval of a lump sum budget for ASU, students need to have a say because this type of budget gives Coor the power to appropriate funds as he sees fit.

"It is logical and rational for us (the students) to be a part of the process," Ortega said.

Ortega said his actions should send a message to the ASU administration that students are responsible.

"Student credibility has been proven," he said. "We work well together."

Budget Director Alan Carroll said the current makeup of the Budget Council was determined by former ASU President J. Russell Nelson.

Carroll said he would not be opposed to student representation on the committee.

"I would have no problem as long as the student was responsible and could keep confidential information to himself," he said.

Coor said student and additional faculty involvement in the budget process "made a lot of sense."

Coor chairs the Budget Council, joined by Carroll, ASU West Provost Vernon Lattin, University Provost Elmer

City committee organizes to change voting

By MICHELLE ROBERTS
State Press

The Tempe Committee for Voters Rights is organizing two petition drives that would allow residents to limit mayoral and council stints in office and give citizens a say in how many signatures are needed to get an issue placed on the ballot.

If 10,995 signatures are gathered, the amendments will be placed on the 1992 Tempe City General Election ballot.

Kathleen Hollingsworth, committee vice chairwoman, said the petition limiting the length of mayoral and council positions would give new candidates a better chance when running against incumbents.

Currently, Tempe City Council members and the mayor serve four-year stints.

"I think that just being able to have some new blood on the council is always important," she said. "It's very difficult (for new candidates) to run against incumbents because they're so popular."

Hollingsworth added that it takes 4,000 votes to get a council member elected, but it takes 10,995 valid voter signatures to have an initiative placed on the ballot.

In addition, the group is attempting to place the Voters Right Petition for Initiative and Referendum Reform on the 1992 ballot.

Pat Baysinger, voters rights committee spokesman, said the petition would make it easier for Tempe voters to place an initiative on the ballot.

Currently, 15 percent of Tempe voters who registered before the last general election are needed to place an initiative on the ballot, he said.

Instead, voter rights petition advocates have suggested that 15 percent of the people who actually voted in the last election should be allowed to sign a petition to place a measure on the ballot.

"Only half of the registered voters in Tempe actually show up to vote," Baysinger said.

If the petition for initiative and referendum reform becomes a reality, the percent of Tempe voters needed to get an issue on the ballot would be the same format used by the state.

Hollingsworth said she thought the petition for initiative and referendum reform would give Tempeans a stronger voice in their government.

"I think that the existing initiative process is very cumbersome because of the more than reasonable amount of signatures it takes Tempe citizens to enact a change," she said.

Baysinger said he thinks the petitions will be appealing to Democrats and Republicans.

"We're (voters rights committee) hoping it (the petitions) have a good, non-partisan flavor to it," he said.

Tempe Councilwoman Carol Smith said she feels the petitions aren't necessary because voters have already accepted the 1968 city charter that defines the city's method of initiative placement and the length of council and mayoral terms.

But Smith said the Tempe Committee for Voters Rights can try to get the petitions on the ballot.

"We observe the Tempe charter rules, but this is America and they (voters rights) have the right to do what they want to try and change them (the Tempe charter)," she said.

The petitions will be circulating within the next month.

Today

The Today section is a daily calendar of events happening at ASU that is presented as a service to the University community. Any campus club or organization can submit entries for publication to the State Press, located in the basement of Matthews Center, Room 15. Entries must be legible, are subject to editing for content, space and clarity, and will not be taken over the phone. Due to space restrictions, the State Press cannot guarantee publication. Deadline for the entries is 1 p.m. the previous business day.

House committee offers new tax plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Democratic deficit-reduction plan under attack from the Bush administration would raise taxes on all but the poorest Americans, socking the richest 1 percent with increases averaging nearly $14,000 a year.

The proposal would cut taxes slightly on those with incomes under $20,000 a year, according to an analysis Monday by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation. Those above the $200,000 income level would face a 7.4 percent tax increase.

For people between those extremes, the legislation would result in tax increases in the 1 percent range. That would result from putting higher consumer taxes on alcohol and tobacco; giving up next year's income tax adjustment to offset inflation, and raising the amount of wages subject to the Medicare tax.

Economists for the House Ways and Means Committee, which wrote the proposal, estimated its tax changes and cost increases for Medicare beneficiaries would cost the average family $352 next year.

Analysts said:

- The poorest one-fifth of families, with after-tax income averaging $7,316, would get a $14 tax cut.

- The second-poorest one-fifth, averaging $16,917, would pay $114 more.

- The middle group, averaging $25,896, would pay $183 more.

- The second-richest 20 percent, averaging $36,481, would face a $280 tax increase.

- The top 20 percent, whose incomes average $81,934, would pay $1,173 more.

Those with incomes averaging over $428,000 — the richest 1 percent — would face a $13,951 tax increase.

Although other deficit plans are being considered, the House Democratic version is getting most of the attention now because of the administration's opposition and because it seems to have support from most of the party's House members.

President Bush, after meeting with the congressional Republican leaders, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas and Rep. Bob Michel of Illinois, said Monday that they were "pretty much on the same wavelength" in preferring a different tax increase approved by the Senate Finance Committee. "What I'll do is say the action's in the Congress and I will take a look at what comes out," Bush told reporters on a campaign trip to Texas.

Unlike the House Democrats' plan, the Finance Committee's version would avoid changes in income tax rates but would limit itemized deductions for people earning over $100,000.

The finance panel's plan would raise taxes by just under 3 percent for families in the $20,000-to-$50,000 income range; 1.9 percent for those between $50,000 and $75,000 and 3.5 percent for those between $100,000 and $200,000. The $200,000-plus group would pay 3.7 percent more.

Because differences between the House

Democrats' tax plan and the Senate Finance Committee's version will take some time to resolve, it becomes more likely that Bush will order the government shut down Saturday morning for the second time this month.

More than two weeks into the new budget year, Congress has yet to enact the first of 13 required appropriation bills. A stopgap spending measure expires midnight Friday and Bush has said he will not agree to another unless Congress has approved a deficit-reduction plan that the administration supports.

House liberals say their bill would reverse a 1980s trend that saw higher-income Americans take an increasing share of the national wealth. They note a Congressional Budget Office conclusion that the richest 5 percent of Americans saw their after-tax income rise by 5.4 percent between 1980 and 1990 while all other groups lost ground.

Gorbachev wins peace prize with leaders support

LONDON (AP) — World leaders said Monday in congratulating Mikhail Gorbachev that the Soviet leader's courage, boldness and role in ending the Cold War make him the rightful winner of the 1990 Nobel Peace Prize.

Gorbachev "has been a courageous force for peaceful change in the world," President Bush said, joining in a tide of warm praise from leaders ranging from German Chancellor Helmut Kohl to the 1983 winner, Poland's Lech Walesa.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher termed the award "terrific" and "richly deserved," and others said it may help President Gorbachev's efforts to boost the sagging Soviet economy.

"I am of the opinion that if ever an award was justified, this was it," German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher said in an interview with the Cologne-based Deutschlandfunk radio station.

In awarding the prize, the Norwegian Nobel Committee cited Gorbachev for his decisive role in the East's and West's drawing closer together, and allowing greater openness in his homeland.

Echoing the committee, Bush said Gorbachev "has brought historically significant change, both political and economic, to the Soviet Union and to Eastern Europe."

Former President Jimmy Carter, speaking at Moravian College in Bethlehem, Pa., said Gorbachev "would have been my choice."

"His selection is long overdue. In my opinion, in this hemisphere, no one else alive or who has lived in this century

Supreme Court denies appeal, supports obscenity conviction

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court turned aside free-speech arguments Monday and boosted the federal government's crackdown on obscenity.

The justices, over one dissenting vote, let stand the forced closing of three adult bookstores and nine video rental shops in Virginia under a federal anti-racketeering law.

The businesses' owners, convicted of racketeering and selling obscene materials, had argued that the subsequent seizures of their properties violated their free-speech rights.

The seizures were carried out under provisions of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. Those convicted under that law may be forced to forfeit all assets and proceeds stemming from their illegal activity.

Justice Byron White voted to hear the business owners' appeal, but four votes are needed to grant such a review.

In other action Monday, the court:

- Rejected the appeal of a former Air Force sergeant convicted in Washington state of aggravated assault for engaging in homosexual conduct while knowingly infected with an AIDS-related virus.

- Set aside a Minnesota man's federal conviction for burning an American flag during a 1988 demonstration in Minneapolis. The justices told a federal appeals court to reconsider the conviction in light of their decision last June that flag burning is protected political speech.

- Refused to let Texas, and by extension other states as well, ban deceptive advertising by airlines. The justices let stand an appeals court ruling that only the federal government may regulate airline ads.

- Unanimously ruled in a Georgia case that state officials need federal clearance, under the Voting Rights Act of 1965, before holding elections for state judgeships.

- Refused to revive a copyright lawsuit against the publisher of an unauthorized biography of L. Ron Hubbard, founder of the Scientology religion.

- Turned down the appeal of two Peotone, Ill., policemen who said they were disciplined unlawfully for wearing earrings while off duty.

Snow White rescues prince? Feminist gives new twist to traditional fairy tales

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Syndicate

Teacher Georgiann Carlson has a valid literary criticism.

She says that fairy tales such as Cinderella and Snow White are sexist because both young ladies don't find happiness until some macho prince comes along.

They also lack independence and self-worth. Snow White, she points out, is content to cook and clean for a gang of dwarfs.

There's much more that bothers Ms. Carlson: The emphasis on good looks, the idea that being old means being ugly and women being portrayed as competitive and jealous.

Carlson, who teaches at a school in a Chicago suburb, believes that such stories aren't good for little girls because they might believe the old "some day my prince will come" routine. How will they feel when a nerd, not a prince, pops the question?

So, Ms. Carlson has been rewriting the fairy tales and giving them different endings. She has Snow White rescue the prince, instead of the prince rescuing her. Then Snow White turns down the prince's marriage proposal and lives happily ever after as a single woman.

As for Cinderella, she gives her prince the brush-off, too. And she marries a stable boy instead.

I can't argue with Ms. Carlson's critique. Neither Snow White nor Cinderella are exactly liberated females. As she said of Snow White: "She's passive, selfless, silent, pure and innocent. This is patriarchy's dream come true."

And I'm intrigued by the idea of the fairy tales being rewritten to bring them up to modern social standards.

In fact, I'm thinking of trying something like that myself. And the other evening I stopped at my favorite bar for a drink to consider a plot.

Then I noticed a handsome young guy sitting on the next stool and I said: "Say, aren't you the prince? Yeah, I recognize you. Nice to meet you, prince."

He nodded and said: "My friends call me 'your highness.'"

I thanked him and said: "I don't want to meddle, but what are you doing in this joint? I heard you and that Snow White girl got hitched. Lovely dish that she is, I would think you would be home billing and cooing."

He shook his head and said: "Nope. She gave me the old brusharoo. Said she values her independence, her own space. Said we can still be friends, but when I call, all I get is her answering machine."

"Hey, I'm sorry I mentioned it, man. It must be tough to handle."

"No sweat, forget it. Fact is, she did me a favor."

"How's that?"

"Well, after I thought about it, I realized that, sure, she was a knockout, and she liked to clean house and was a good cook. But basically, she's an airhead. I'd suggest that we take in a play, but no, her idea of a good time was sitting around singing dumb songs with those seven little guys. She even got mad at me when I told her I didn't think there was anything wrong with dwarf-tossing."

"Boy, you just never know about people."

"Right, so since she dumped me, I've had more time for myself. My golf handicap has dropped. I get out to the ballpark whenever I feel like it, and I play poker once a week and don't worry about how late the game breaks up. If I want to stop in here for a few beers after a hard day at the palace, I don't have to worry about anybody phoning the bartender to see if I've left. And I can play the field, if you know what I mean."

"I can imagine, a young prince like you. Anyone special?"

"Yeah, for a while I had a thing for this girl Cinderella."

"A looker?"

"Better gams than Snow White, if you can believe it."

"I believe it. So what happened?"

"Splitsville. She fell for a stable boy."

"You're kidding."

"Nope. And they got hitched. I sent a broom and a shovel as a wedding gift."

"Hey, you're a good sport. How are they doing?"

"Not too good. I walked by their place the other night — and she was yelling at him for not changing his shoes before he came in the flat. And I hear she's after him to go to school and get an MBA. I'm not surprised, though. She was always into fancy clothes, glass slippers, going to formal balls and the night life. No way she's going to spend the rest of her life with a guy who shovels manure. Well, I got to go."

"Date?"

"No, I'm going bowling."

"Alone?"

"No, with those seven little guys. They snuck out of the house. They told me they're tired of sitting around every night singing. 'Hi ho, hi ho.'"

LETTERS

Hung up on huskies

Editor:

Last Wednesday I considered writing a letter to the editor expressing my support for the views in a letter from Roberta Gibbons. Her letter expressed her reaction to verbal abuse from a group of men while she was jogging on campus. Some of the material used in the incident was from a T-shirt, which was also addressed. I decided not to write at the time, though, since Roberta's letter stood quite well on its own.

Then, on Friday, I read a response to her letter from Thurston Hanson, and felt that I no longer had a choice. I have seen this abusive type of behavior for over two years now, but I was still shocked by the contents of the response.

Mr. Hanson seems to be of the opinion that Roberta, or any other woman for that matter, is a valid target of abuse, and that the men involved are not responsible for their own attitude or actions. According to Mr. Hanson: "No matter what you were wearing, you can definitely expect college boys to catcall." His reason that no woman should be offended by such a verbal attack: "These college guys meant no harm and did nothing but cater to their macho images, trying to win peer approval."

The most disturbing aspect of Mr. Hanson's response is not his demeaning tone in addressing Roberta, deplorable and childish as it was. It also is not that he fails to see a lack of personal courage in these "macho" men, who can't even consider the results of their actions beyond their own image in the face of peer pressure. The worst part of the whole situation is that there are enough men on this campus, like the group that was harassing Roberta, who lack any sense of noble purpose and actively seek to perpetuate the institutions of stupidity and abuse to make up a set of peers for Mr. Hanson to so aptly defend.

I do not believe that Roberta's concerns should be taken lightly on this campus. I do not believe she is "making a mountain out of a molehill" or "sending our country back thousands of years (actually only hundreds of years) to the dark ages" as Mr. Hanson believes. As evidence I refer to an FBI study cited on Channel 12 News on Saturday night that found that a woman on this campus is TEN TIMES as likely to get raped on this campus than on any other Southwest campus. This campus needs to change the nature of peer pressure that makes the statistic true.

Mr. Hanson's response also seems to suggest that Roberta is in favor of some sort of "T-shirt patrol" to enforce a legal censorship of such sentiments. I don't, however, find any statements in Roberta's letter proposing a relaxed weekend stay with the ever popular Bubba for infractions. The point of the article is that there shouldn't have to be a law against such behavior: Such behavior simply should not exist among responsible college age people. So, bravo to you Roberta. I hope against hope that your voice is one of the vast majority on this campus.

Truth in politics Politicians aren't honest when it comes to taxes

Cody Shearer
North American Syndicate

WASHINGTON — By nature, politicians are not supposed to be straightforward, even out of power. But last week at a Labor Party conference in England, Tomas Borge, the lone striving member of the Nicaraguan Sandinista Front, admitted in a speech that he and his fellow Sandinistas had blown it when they were in power by restoring to arbitrary repression and arrogance.

Because they were "internally undemocratic," Borge said, "we grew out of touch with our supporters." Their biggest mistake, Borge believed, was to have forced reluctant teenagers to fight the Contra War. "We did not use enough persuasion. We used force to recruit people into the army."

Another crucial mistake, he added, was in economic policy. "We put too much emphasis on the state and took people away from their land," he said. Such a policy had disastrous results. "Scarcity and rationing, the forced sales of agricultural products, and crimes committed by our soldiers and officers against people in the war zones," he stated, buried the Sandinista cause.

"Arrogance is the worst enemy of the revolution," Borge declared in retrospect.

Of course, such of an indulgence in mea culpa is rare, especially when one compares this behavior to that of American politicians, who only seem to offer the truth in their memoirs. But given the current crisis in American public finance, it would be refreshing to find one political leader to tell the truth about the future of the American economy and how we got into this mess.

The seeds of the current budget debacle really began 20 years ago. During the Nixon administration, Congress, even though it is supposed to "appropriate" all spending, lost control of the budget process to Nixon's Office of Management and Budget. Every year this office delivered the budget to Congress, which only modified it.

After the Watergate disaster, an embarrassed Congress passed the Budget and Impoundment Act, which required all spending committees to fit their plans into an overall congressional budget that met a strict timetable. The act also created a new Congressional Budget Office.

Unfortunately, this system never worked because of a bunch of obstinate, selfish politicians who looked after their own interests and not those of the country. Leaders like Reagan and Bush refused to cut taxes, praying that euphoric businessmen would create new jobs and provide the government with more revenue, which never happened. At the same time, dreamy Republicans refused to cut defense spending. Meanwhile, the stubborn Democrats begged off cutting welfare programs.

The predictable result from all this was a growing series of budget deficits. Even the desperate passage of a deficit reduction act in 1985 didn't make much difference.

Now that our nation's economic complacency has been jolted by another temporary shutdown in government services, one can see that the current political stalemate, fiscal chaos and pending economic depression has resulted from the ideological shape of American politics. Our political parties, which are nothing more than a series of weakly-linked coalitions with few clear ideological principles, find themselves as deeply divided as ever. The Republicans continue to represent the rich and the business classes who refuse to approve taxes for the affluent. In contrast, the Democrats are stuck with racial minorities and the poor, and they won't approve cuts in public spending for their constituents.

No one wants to address the current stand-off squarely or explain how we've managed to avoid mine fields for so long. The truth is that too few politicians here have ever made the case why we as a people must pay enough taxes to ensure the survival of liberty and prosperity at home and abroad.

Unless our political leaders discuss the unmentionable, such as their desire to hold on to a job at any cost, and challenge the unchallengeable, they are going to find themselves addressing conferences with Tomas Borge on what they did wrong when they had the public's trust. At that point, too few people care to listen.

How do eighth graders in America spend their time? Data contained in the National Educational Longitudinal Study of 1988, says the average public school student devotes 21.7 hours a week to television, 5.6 hours to doing homework, and 1.8 hours to outside reading. Girls read an hour longer than boys and Asians devoted similarly more time to studying. Black students watched the most television of all, allocating 27.6 hours a week to this activity.

Vote no on 103

Editor:

On Nov. 6, Arizonans will vote on Proposition 103. As a college freshman, fresh out of Arizona public schools, I strongly oppose this proposition.

The Arizona education system is in big trouble as demonstrated by our SAT scores, which are considerably below the national average and getting worse. The state budget for fiscal year 1989-90 is slightly less than four billion dollars, while the entire budget for the department of education is slightly more than a billion dollars. The ACE Project (Proposition 103) would cost 5.7 billion dollars over a 10-year period, but the Proposition does not provide the means for raising these funds. Throwing money at the system is not the solution to the education problem. What we need is for our education system to provide our students with a good grasp of "the three R's," thereby giving them the foundation to build their future attitudes, skills and knowledge necessary to secure their future.

Proposition 103 is a 5.7 billion dollar project that will only cause a tax increase. The extra taxes would be understandable, even desirable, if they would insure a better education for students, but they will not. Although it provides for each school district to form a "watchdog" committee consisting of parents, teachers, and community leaders, this committee would have no authority over the distribution of funds. Therefore, it seems that the committees, as well as the funds, will remain under the control of the administrators. These administrators have spent more money per student each year without an improvement in education; as a matter of fact, SAT scores have dropped each year. It is obvious, even to this freshman, that an additional $100 per student is a waste.

Too much money is already being spent on non-classroom learning activities, and good teachers are not being paid enough. Arizona needs a more effective alternative, like the open enrollment system, which is currently being used in Minnesota. In an open enrollment system, the parents may choose the district or school that they want their child to attend. This system gives the teachers and administrators more incentive to provide a better, more creative, education. Competition between schools will result in higher quality education, because the schools most in demand will receive the most funds.

Open enrollment, not the ACE Project, will better Arizona's school system. Our country's strength is dependent upon competition in the market place, and our future leaders' strength could well depend upon competition in the classroom. It is vital to my generation and those following that the voters reject Proposition 103 on election day.

Society condemned

Editor:

I am writing this letter out of shock and anger, my response to Thurston Hanson's unenlightened and demeaning point of view regarding the "Huskie" incident. My shock is that someone so ignorant of the real issue has the guts to blatantly insult someone, while making a fool of himself. But the state of Arizona seems to coddle such people. My anger is due to my realization that Thurston is probably representative of many, many others who similarly feel there is no harm in asking someone to "Be my Huskie", knowing that the Huskie in question is being raped by a Sun Devil.

Though I cannot speak for Roberta, I don't think she was asking us to begin censoring T-shirts. Nor do I believe she was concerned about the welfare of Huskies in our state. I would think someone who is an English major would be able to recognize a metaphor when he sees one. But in this case, Roberta was referring to the Sun Devil being a male who wants sex, and the Huskie as an unwilling female.

I believe she is condemning a society, in which, as Thurston says, college guys, in catering to their macho images, and winning peer approval, must speak about rape. The sad part is, I don't think men who say these things realize they are even talking about rape. A recent study showed that approximately 80 percent of male college sophomores have gotten a girl drunk so they could have sex with her. Here's a hint guys, if you have to get her drunk to go to bed with you, she's probably not willing, and you could be committing date rape. But I'm sure that also is just to be macho and win peer approval. Consider the fact that it doesn't make it right.

Thurston, darling, wake up!

Tempe's new theater more than playhouse

By MICHELLE ROBERTS
State Press

About 300 city officials turned out Monday for the dedication of the new Tempe Performing Arts Center that will be an educational resource for children and a home for two local theater groups.

The dedication took place at an annual banquet in which Tempe boards and commissions were honored.

Mike Costello, Tempe cultural service coordinator, said the center was built to provide more space for city offices and provide a permanent place for two local non-profit theater groups, Childsplay and Tempe Little Theater, to perform and practice their shows.

The center houses a two-story auditorium that will seat approximately 300 for stage productions. The basement of the building will be used for dressing rooms and costume storage.

Costello said the new performing arts center will also house the City of Tempe Housing Authority offices, the Arizona Credit Union and the Media Services division of the Community Relations office.

Costello said he thinks the theater groups will thrive in their new center.

"I think it will develop into a real valuable resource," he said, adding that the center is well-planned. "What's really important (about the center) is that it's not overbuilt. It's a true community theater size in that it's not so large we have to hire larger theater groups to come in here so the center can make it financially."

Dave Fackler, deputy community development director, said the $2.5 million center was completed in June.

He said the city recognized the center's need in the community.

"We (officials) suggested to the council that rather than spending a lot of money on rent, let's build a new building to use now as well as years into the future," Fackler said. "A group effort is what brought it (the center) all together."

Catherine Ross, managing director for Childsplay said the performing arts center was a godsend for the theater group.

"The new building will allow us to focus on what we're trying to do — theater," she said, adding that Tempe children will also benefit from the new performing arts center.

"One of our main purposes is to incorporate theater into their (children's) educations," Ross said. "Its much more exciting for children to see plays in a theater rather than in a school lunchroom."

Ross said the 1,500 Tempe school children who have visited the performing arts center since its opening in June have been thrilled with the theater experience.

"They (the school children) were thoroughly delighted," she said. "They told me about their favorite parts, were attentive and learned a lot." Costello agreed.

"This will be the first theater experience for most of them (children), many of them being minorities who wouldn't have the funds otherwise," he said, adding that officials are optimistic about the center's future.

"In time, the center will be able to provide one heck of a service to the community," Costello said.

reasonable." Lee added that the last two years have given ASA an idea of "what has worked and what hasn't" in lowering the magnitude of tuition increases.

"It has worked when there's been a grassroots effort on the part of a lot of students showing that a large body of students has those concerns," she said.

Still, Lee said the regents have, so far, been receptive to students' concerns.

"The response that we've gotten was very good," she said. "We have a very cooperative relationship."

MCC

The other students are not attending MCC at this time. While the Tempe Prosecutor's Office originally sought felony charges against the former student athletes, the Maricopa County Attorney's Office refused the charges.

"We had no reason to expect a conviction on felony charges based on the evidence we were presented," said MCAO spokesman Bill Fitzgerald. He refused to comment further on the evidence or on reasons why stiffer charges were not pursued.

Members of the Delta Chi fraternity — including Springer and his parents — held a press conference in December of last year to ask anyone with any information on the incident to come forward.

Tempe Prosecutor Geraldine Mattern said the plea proved successful when an unidentified female called the city's Silent Witness Program claiming she was a student at MCC and had overheard conversations about the incident.

After months of detective work, Mattern again submitted complaints for felony charges but was denied. The misdemeanor charges were then filed three days before the statute of limitations ran out.

Within days after the incident, MCC officials suspended three athletes from the football team and said 12 others admitted involvement in the riot.

However, at the time, the athletes claimed the rock came from someone not affiliated with the MCC football team.

Eleven days after the assault, the Tempe Police Department sought misdemeanor charges against two of the junior college football players, but soon dropped the allegations in an attempt to gather more evidence for felony charges.

The fight started about 1:45 a.m. Sunday morning after Delta Chi fraternity members asked a group of about 20 people not to park in the fraternity lot near what was then Max's 919 (now MXZ) on 919 E. Apache Blvd. They were apparently heading toward the nightclub.

The group left quietly but threatened to return in 20 minutes. Keeping their promise, they apparently recruited almost 60 people from the bar and came back within 15 minutes, when the riot immediately broke out.

The condominium that housed the fraternity was damaged extensively when people ransacked the building. Television sets were broken, walls were punched in and doors were broken down.

MCC athletes later told police they had been provoked by the fraternity and were not looking to start a fight.

KAET producers win gold

By ANDREW FAUGHT
State Press

Two KAET-TV producers have been recognized by the National Mental Health Association for their efforts to publicize Arizona's lagging mental health care.

David Majure and Beth Shapiro are the recipients of a gold award in the Media Awards Competition for their production of "Mental Health Mandate," which aired last June.

In March 1989, the state Legislature was ordered by the Arizona Supreme Court to provide a wider range of services to Arizona's 15,000 mentally ill.

"There hasn't been enough money to help," Shapiro said. "The state just has not been making (mental health care) a priority."

The Legislature was forced to act on the court order that has since lifted Arizona into a six-way tie for 38th place in mental health funding. Two years ago, Arizona was last in the United States for subsidizing mental health programs.

During the hour-long program, Shapiro said, mentally ill Arizonans were featured in the hopes that some of their stories would spur the Legislature to take action.

"Parents and advocates of the mentally ill really solidified their lobbying efforts and made a concentrated effort to talk to as many legislators on a regular basis," she said.

Meanwhile, Virginia Przeslica, a volunteer at the Maricopa County Mental Health Association, said the organization acts mainly as a referral service, in addition to being a liaison.

"The Mental Health Association will write to legislators to change laws, legislate more money to the mentally ill or get some better programs activated," she said.

Shapiro said KAET-TV is continuing its commitment to publicize mental health care and related topics.

"To make these issues understandable and make the public aware is what it takes," she said.

Michale Kelly, community affairs specialist at the Arizona State Hospital in Phoenix, said legislative sensitivities and understanding have helped Arizona's mental illness funding improve over the past two years.

But he said there are some dilemmas that need to be cured before Arizona's only state hospital ranks as one of the best in the nation.

"We're concerned about the staffing pattern and the retention of staff," Kelly said. "That (concern) will help us meet national accrediting criteria, which in turn improves patient care."

Shapiro said people assume the mentally ill are homeless or bedridden, but in reality they are more likely to be their co-workers and neighbors.

"It's a silent disease," she said. "It seems like a lot of these people get lost in the shuffle."

A plaque will be presented to Shapiro and Majure Nov. 15 at the annual meeting of the NMHA in Indianapolis.

Drunk driving display shocking proof of tragedy

Monique Hollin/State Press
Tally Johnson, a junior studio art major, looks at an auto wrecked in a drunk driving incident displayed on Cady Mall.

By LAURA SCHMIDT
State Press

For the last five years, Joe Middleton and his wife, Sula, have returned to ASU with their daughter's demolished blue pick-up truck as shocking proof of her needless death at the hands of a drunk-driver.

"I do not believe that any person has the right to make the decision that affects your life," he said. "Why does an intoxicated person have the right to get in behind the wheel of a 3,000 pound automobile?"

"The real tragedy is that it could have been you. That's not fair. That's not right."

Middleton's 18-year-old daughter, Sherri Lynne, was killed in a head-on collision by a 26-year-old drunk driver on Dec. 2, 1984 at the intersection of 75th Avenue and Osborn Road.

"I just had to walk over here because it (the wrecked truck) brings you to the accident site," said Tally Johnson, a junior studio art major.

Nyle Marmion, a senior aeronautical management major said he was stunned by the display.

"I think the pictures add a lot to it too, because you actually get to see the victim," he said.

The gruesome display is part of National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, which began Sunday and runs until Friday.

The event is sponsored by breweries and other organizations nationwide.

"It starts the focus on alcohol education," said Karen Moses, Student Health's interim assistant director of health education. "We're hoping that this will bring an awareness about some of the substance abuse problems involving alcohol."

Moses said 350 people attended the kick-off tailgate 2000 event on P. V. Beach before Saturday's football game that strived to promote a non-alcoholic gathering.

"What would a tailgate party look like in the year 2000?" asked Moses. "It would be healthier, I hope."

Moses said proceeds from students purchasing $1 raffle tickets for passes to the ASU vs. University of Oregon football game, this winter's ASU vs. UofA basketball game and the Nov. 13 New Zealand ballet will benefit the Middleton family.

has so beneficially changed the world political society as has Mikhail Gorbachev.

"He got the Vietnamese out of Kampuchea (Cambodia). He got his Soviet troops out of Afghanistan. He brought freedom in a great degree to the people of the Soviet Union. He's made possible the liberation of Eastern European countries. He's been a strong enforceable leader even when the United States opposed bringing about nuclear arms reductions, so in many ways, he's superlative."

Polish trade union leader Walesa said he wished Gorbachev "further persistence and successes on the road to democracy that you have outlined."

It was the first peace prize awarded to a Soviet or U. S. chief executive since President Woodrow Wilson won in 1919.

Israeli President Chaim Herzog said he believed Gorbachev's policies "will bring freedom and happiness to many peoples and advance peace throughout the world and particularly in the Middle East."

Herzog said Gorbachev's role in opening the way for more Jews to emigrate to Israel, "will be remembered for many generations and the entire Jewish people is full of gratitude."

From Los Angeles, former President Reagan congratulated his "friend," calling the prize a "well-deserved tribute to his bold and courageous leadership."

"Under President Gorbachev, the Soviet Union is making fundamental and necessary changes in its political and economic systems — changes which will give the Soviet people the freedoms they deserve," he said.

Germany's Kohl said in a telegram to Gorbachev: "Your personal contribution to the improvement of relations between East and West, to overcoming the division of our continent, to breakthroughs in disarmament and arms controls and solutions of regional conflicts is worthy of highly deserved praise."

In Spain, Foreign Minister Fernandez Ordonez called the award an "act of justice."

Italy's Premier Giulio Andreotti said the announcement "filled me with joy."

United Nations Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar told reporters Gorbachev had not only contributed "in a remarkable manner" to detente, but to enhancing the role of the U. N. "as a peacemaking and peacekeeping center."

Dutch Foreign Minister Hans van den Broek said the prize may boost Gorbachev's standing in efforts for domestic economic reform.

"It won't help him out of his economic predicament," London School of Economics Soviet expert Margot Light said. "But it may make his political position slightly more stable."

Citing the 59-year-old Gorbachev's contribution to the cause of freedom, Portuguese President Mario Soares said, "(It is) a choice that I applaud with both hands, enthusiastically and without reserve."

President Patricio Aylwin of Chile called Gorbachev "a man who has had the enormous courage of pushing democratic and liberalizing reforms. . . . His efforts have definitely contributed to strengthening peace around the world."

Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari said in a message of congratulations, "Your leadership and historical vision have decisively contributed to strengthening peace and detente in the world."

Bulgaria's president, Zhelyu Zhelev, told Gorbachev he deserved the reward for his "extraordinary contribution to the dismantling of the totalitarian system" and for "the creation of a new political climate in Europe and the world in which peace and cooperation among all peoples are the most cherished values."

Not all reaction was positive.

Latvian historian Jan Saltsmanis, whose homeland is among the Baltic republics fighting for independence from the Soviet Union, said the West was too impressed with Gorbachev.

"I reacted with dismay," he told the radio in Sweden, where he has lived since 1945. "Gorbachev has opened up borders, he deserves a certain merit for the development. But you . . . should not overestimate his significance in the context."

Rape prevention program grants approved

By ANITA CARCONE
State Press

A recently approved bill authorizing $10 million in federal grants to help curb campus rape incidents at the nation's colleges and universities could aid in funding related programs at ASU, officials said.

"ASU will not hesitate to pursue federal funding as soon as it is made available," said Bill Bess, director of the ASU Department of Public Safety.

Bess said that in the last year, the number of campus rapes has decreased due to increased sensitivity on the part of officials and students.

However, Linda Stroh, spokeswoman for the ASU DPS, said last year's campus rape statistics were not promising.

"The 10 reported rapes on campus last year moved ASU above all other universities in the Pac-10 in rape statistic figures," Stroh said.

The Violence Against Women Act of 1990, sponsored by Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del. is divided into four sections, each aimed at protecting women's safety and rights in specific areas.

"Safe Campuses for Women," one of the bill categories, will authorize colleges and universities to tell rape victims the outcome of college disciplinary proceedings against their attackers.

According to Senate Congressional Record statistics, every six minutes a woman is raped in this country, and every 18 seconds a woman is beaten.

In addition, the rape rate has risen four times faster than the national crime rate, meaning that rape is increasing 400 percent faster than other crimes nationwide.

In the congressional floor statement addressing the bill, Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., who co-sponsored the legislation, said the act is needed to respond to the alarming increase in brutal crimes against women in this country.

"When we, as parents, send our daughters to an institution of higher learning, we expect them to have the freedom to expand their lives both intellectually and socially," he stated. "However, the frightening reality is that one in four of the women in college today have been attacked by a rapist. If we do not do something to deal with this serious problem we are, in effect, denying women access to educational opportunities."

Bob Maynes, DeConcini's press secretary, said the "Safe Campuses for Women" section was added shortly after the original bill was introduced Oct. 4.

"Under this section, the (U. S.) secretary of education is authorized to make grants to or enter into contracts with institutions of higher education and prevention programs," he said.

Congressional findings regarding rape on college campuses revealed that rape prevention and education programs are essential to a campus environment free of fear. In addition, schools must educate students about the incidence of rape — including acquaintance rape — on campus.

Maynes said this section of the bill, which includes grants for campus rape education, will begin as early as July 1 and, at the latest, a year from now.

In a formal address to Biden, DeConcini stated that the legislation will attack the problem at all levels of society, from the home to the streets as well as from the criminal justice system to the prison system.

The third provision of the bill, which addresses the issue of civil rights for women, will attempt to fill a gap in federal civil rights laws by defining gender-motivated crimes as bias or hate crimes. It also will amend federal civil rights laws so women's rights are not violated.

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A man not affiliated with ASU was seen screaming during an argument with a bird. A pornographic magazine was found in his possession. Police threatened to charge him with disorderly conduct unless he took his argument elsewhere.
- An electric scale, valued at $1,500, was stolen from the Family Resource Building.
- An ASU student reported that eight blank checks were stolen from his backpack either in Hayden Library or at Palo Verde Main Residence Hall. Three of the checks were cashed, resulting in a loss of $700.
- A woman said her brown 1980 Oldsmobile Cutlass was stolen from Parking Structure Three. The loss is estimated at $3,000.
- An ASU employee said he injured his neck and face after tripping on an exposed piece of pipe in the west stairway of the Fine Arts Museum. The employee blamed the incident on an unlighted stairwell.

•An ASU student and one person not affiliated with the University were arrested, cited and released for trespassing through the ASU tunnel system beneath Palm Walk.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Monday:

•Three incidents occurred that Tempe police believe are connected:

An employee reported that while emptying trash at the Sport Rock Cafe, 1320 E. Broadway Road, a man with a gun approached him and demanded his wallet. The employee told the suspect that his wallet was inside the restaurant. The suspect then tried unsuccessfully to pry a ring off of the employee's finger and then fled in an unknown direction.

Minutes after this attempted robbery occurred, a man fitting the same description appeared at 502 Club, 3136 S. McClintock Drive, and confronted a 64-year-old man with a small, blue steel revolver. After taking the man's wallet, the suspect threatened to blow his head off unless he went inside the club.

In the third robbery, a man approached a customer loading groceries into his vehicle at Safeway, 926 E. Broadway Road. The suspect pulled out a small black handgun and demanded "everything." After finding out the customer had no wallet, the suspect grabbed the keys to the man's 1988 Suzuki Samurai and drove south on Rural Road.

•A former ASU student was arrested and charged with shoplifting when she left Stabler's Market, 929 S. Mill Ave., without paying for items she had removed from a display shelf and placed in her purse.

•An ASU student was arrested for disorderly conduct at 300 S. Mill Ave. when police officers asked him to pour out an open container of beer. Police said he became verbally abusive and began screaming at the officers as a crowd developed.

•A man stole $340 worth of blue jeans from Mervyn's, 800 E. Southern Ave.

•A man was arrested for indecent exposure when he urinated in the parking lot of Hammerheads Bar, 1111 E. University Drive. Police reported that while the suspect was running to avoid being arrested, he allegedly threw a bag of marijuana into the bushes.

Los Arcos Mall bus helps students, air

By MICHELLE ROBERTS
 State Press

The experimental Los Arcos Mall "Shopping Express Bus," which runs from the ASU campus to the newly renovated Scottsdale complex, has become an important service for ASU students, mall businesses and Tempe's clean air efforts, city officials said.

"We (city council) agree that this (the shuttle bus) is a very positive step for the mall as well as Tempe citizens," Tempe City Councilwoman Barbara Sherman said. "The shuttle is filling in and expanding the existing bus service."

Sherman added that the Los Arcos shuttle bus could serve as an example for other private businesses to also provide free transportation for customers.

"It's very difficult for the government to support everything and it would be great for other private businesses to do the same (as Los Arcos)," she said.

Los Arcos Mall spokeswoman Ann Morgan said the shuttle service began Sept. 24 and has transported about 1,200 students back and forth from Los Arcos Mall, located at the intersection of Scottsdale and McDowell roads.

Morgan said the mall developed the shuttle bus as an experimental program to reintroduce the newly renovated mall to the college campus and to support Valley Clean Air Campaign efforts to alleviate road traffic while improving air quality.

The program's trial run will last until August 1991, when the Tempe

Transportation Committee will examine its progress.

Mary O'Connor, Tempe Transportation Planner, said the transportation committee supports the mall shuttle because it complements the existing city bus schedule by providing a service city buses lack.

"The shuttle is great because it provides more service on the evenings and weekends. Right now there is no city busing service on Sunday throughout the entire Valley," O'Connor said.

Morgan said organizers of the mall's shuttle bus worked closely with Tempe and Scottsdale officials to coordinate the shuttle route with existing city bus routes.

"It was important to complement the existing (city bus) routes," Morgan said.

The shuttle makes 12 round trips per day Monday through Friday, 16 trips on Saturdays and 10 on Sundays.

The bus departs for the newly-renovated Scottsdale mall every hour from the bus stop at University Drive and College Avenue. It runs seven days a week from 3 p.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday, and 12 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday. The bus leaves ASU on the hour and half hour.

The bus holds 18 passengers including physically challenged persons.

Morgan said Los Arcos Mall businesses are benefiting from the shuttle service.

"It's too early to have any specific figures yet but it's definitely influencing stores in the mall," Morgan said.

Obscenity

racketeering charges stemming entirely from obscenity crimes.

Obscenity was added in 1984 to the long list of underlying crimes on which a RICO prosecution could be based.

"The court's determination of the validity of post-judgment forfeiture in this case will have enormous impact upon the future of RICO obscenity prosecutions, both state and federal," lawyers for the convicted business owners said.

Dennis and Barbara Pryba, owners of the corporations that operated the bookstores and video shops in northern Virginia, were convicted of selling and distributing obscene magazines and videotapes worth about $105.

An employee, Jennifer Williams, also was convicted on obscenity charges.

Dennis Pryba was sentenced to three years in prison and five years probation, and was fined $75,000. Barbara Pryba was given a suspended prison sentence and fined $200,000. Ms. Williams was given three years probation and fined $2,250.

One of the corporations the Prybas owned also was fined $200,000.

After a separate jury trial, a federal judge ordered that all assets — including corporate stock, inventory, bank accounts, automobiles and even office furniture — be forfeited.

The convictions and forfeiture order was upheld by the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last April.

In their appeal, the attorneys for Prybas and Williams said forfeiture of businesses engaged in constitutionally protected activities — the distribution of materials not found to be obscene — amounts to an impermissible "prior restraint" of speech.

The Bush administration urged the justices to reject the appeal.

"If bookstores, newsstands, publishing houses and the like were immune from forfeiture, drug lords and other racketeers could invest in those businesses and thereby insulate their criminal proceeds from seizure," government lawyers argued.

Students do fieldwork on threatened tortoises

By JENNIFER FRANKLIN
State Press

A group of ASU environmentalists are worried the Sonoran Desert tortoises are creeping slowly toward extinction.

Robert Kilian, president of the Society for Range Management's ASU chapter, said there has been concern over the Sonoran Desert tortoise for several years.

"They're real close to being put on the endangered species list," Kilian said.

Recently, about six members of the group went to the Maricopa Mountains on a Saturday morning, about an hour's drive west of Tempe, in an attempt to count the tortoises.

The information the students gathered will be given to wildlife biologists at the Arizona Game and Fish Department.

Before the search began, officials from the Game and Fish Department gave the students training on how to search for and handle the animals, Kilian said.

He said the purpose of the outing was to find and attach a radio tracking system to the reptiles, to weigh them and to determine their sex.

Kilian said the tracking system uses radio telemetry units attached to the front of the tortoise shell, adding that the individual units emit signals at a set frequency.

The units cost $300 each, and support equipment like antennas and signal-receiving devices total about $3,000, he said.

"Fortunately, (one receiver) services hundreds of the units," Kilian said.

Jim deVos, research branch supervisor for the Arizona Game and Fish Department, said the radios are extremely helpful in research.

"The beauty of it is that the biologist can identify the frequency a tortoise is on and relocate it," deVos said.

deVos said the research branch is studying the tortoises' blood to try and learn about the species' normal blood values.

"We're trying to find some diagnostic tools to learn what is normal about tortoise blood," he said, adding that elements such as cholesterol, triglycerates and vitamins A and B are among those being tested.

He added that being able to track one specific tortoise and the changes in its blood content would be useful.

deVos said the agency encourages student participation in its research.

"It's a win-win situation," deVos said, adding that students get hands-on experience in the field and the department benefits from the work the students do.

deVos said two types of tortoises exist in Arizona: The Mohave population that lives north and west of the Colorado River — a species already listed on the endangered list — and the Sonoran population inhabiting areas south and east of the Colorado.

He said the status of the Sonoran Desert tortoise will be reviewed next year by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife department.

"It's really premature to say that they will be listed as a threatened species at this point," he said.

Meanwhile, Kilian said the outing was successful even though only one out of seven tortoises was found alive.

"It was definitely a success. Just finding them in the desert is a success," he said, adding that the tortoises only come out of their burrows about 60 days a year.

"This is like groundwork. We don't know very much about them yet," he said.

This study, one of many throughout the state, will be ongoing, Kilian said.

"To really get any information out of this we'll have to go out over a 10-year period and take an average of our findings," he said.

Kilian said the students will conduct more research this spring, when the tortoises are most active.

ASU West to host celebration

By CHRISTINA SCHROEDER
State Press

ASU West is trying to stretch its influence to surrounding communities for the branch campus's second OctoberWest celebration dubbed "A Community Celebration," a University official said.

"The primary purpose of the celebration is a community outreach," said Matt Crum, ASU West information specialist. "We'd like people outside of ASU to come and take a look around campus as well as have fun and enjoy themselves."

"OctoberWest is a way to get people familiar with the new campus and raise money for ASU West at the same time."

OctoberWest activities begin Saturday, Oct. 27 with a hot air balloon launch at 7:45 a.m. followed by a five-kilometer run and a one-mile fun run/walk.

"Approximately 200 runners competed in the event last year," Crum said, adding that a $10 registration fee ($8 in advance) is required for the five kilometer race.

Crum said proceeds from the five kilometer run, book sale, raffle tickets, dunk tank, along with craft booth rental fees will go towards ASU West scholarships and the Fletcher Library.

In 1986, construction of the upper-division ASU branch located in northwest Phoenix began on 300 acres of land bounded by Thunderbird and Sweetwater roads and 43rd and 51st avenues in Phoenix. The Fletcher Library and the first classroom building opened this year and serve approximately 10,000 students.

Among OctoberWest's stand-out events, paintings by 25 Southwestern artists will be on display in an exhibition titled "Collectors' Choice of Southwestern Art." The exhibition begins Oct. 27 and continues through Dec. 12.

Artists whose works are part of the free display include Joe Beeler, Merrill Mahaffey, Robert McCall, Lon Mefargee and Fritz Scholder.

The paintings are on loan from the Eddie Basha Family, former Sen. Barry Goldwater, Mr. and Mrs. G. Herberger and other Arizona art collectors. The exhibit was helped along by the ASU West Academic and Cultural Advisory Committee, and will be open to the public during Fletcher Library's regular hours.

ASU West officials said the privately owned paintings are usually unavailable for public viewing.

Crum said a new addition to this years OctoberWest celebration will be "Crafters Court," a fair made up of more than 70 community vendors. Other events include stage entertainment featuring local musical and school groups, a used book sale with a rare book display and sale, and food booths.

Crum said raffle tickets will be sold for more than 60 prizes donated by local merchants.

FAYETTEVILLE, W.Va. (AP) — Tom King plans to marry Vivian Taylor this Saturday. Right after the ceremony, he'll jump off a bridge.

King is one of 300 parachuting daredevils who plan to leap off North America's second-highest bridge 876 feet into the New River Gorge, a canyon slicing through the heart of the Appalachians.

The wedding, on the New River Gorge Bridge, falls on the 11th annual Bridge Day. That's the one day a year the span is closed to traffic so pedestrians can enjoy the view and the autumn foliage — and parachutists can jump off.

The event attracts the largest number of parachutists who belong to the U.S. BASE Association. BASE stands for building, antenna, span and earth.

"For most of the jumpers, this is it," said Jean Boenish, BASE's executive director. "They take their vacation time, save their pennies and wait to get out to West Virginia."

The U. S. 19 bridge, completed in 1977, is the longest steel arch bridge in the world and the second highest in North America, after the 1,053-foot Royal Gorge Bridge in Colorado.

About 100,000 spectators are expected, said Cindy Whitlock of the Fayette County Chamber of Commerce. Hotels have been booked for months in Fayette County and are selling out fast in Raleigh and Kanawha counties, Whitlock said.

Ducks reverse trend, start from Pac cellar

By DAN ZEIGER
State Press

Over the past few seasons, the Oregon football team gained an unnerving reputation of constantly trapping themselves in an October enigma.

In 1983, 1987 and 1988, the Ducks waddled into Rose Bowl contention during the first two months of the season, but their Pasadena possibilities turned out to be as futile as Linus Van Pelt's chances of seeing the Great Pumpkin on Halloween night.

UO shattered like a jack o'lantern hitting the pavement over the second half of those seasons, as the Ducks finished 4-6-1 in '83, 6-5 in '87 and 6-6 in '88.

"We've been in the top 25 each of the last four years, but we've never finished in it at the end," UO coach Rich Brooks said. "That's our goal. We've had some good recruiting classes and we are playing some young people who I feel are very good."

This season, the Ducks, who host ASU (2-3) Saturday at 7 p.m. in the first night game at Autzen Stadium in 12 years, have started Pac-10 play exactly opposite their custom. UO, 4-2 overall but winless in two league games, is tied for last place in the conference with ASU.

The Sun Devils' injury-decimated squad will receive no sympathy from the Ducks. UO may be without the services of starting quarterback Bill Musgrave, who pulled an abdominal muscle in the team's 38-17 loss to Washington Saturday.

Brooks said Musgrave, who has completed 124 passes for 1,573 yards and 11 touchdowns this season, will not practice for three days and is doubtful to play.

"When you take your career-leading passer and total offense gainer out of the lineup, it affects us," Brooks said. "He passed for over 300 yards against Washington when we really couldn't sustain a running game, which makes his effort look even more remarkable. He's a tremendous football player."

If Musgrave is unable to play, Brooks said junior John Okken will most likely start. Okken appeared in two games this year, completing 4 of 5 throws.

Although the Ducks' injury list has not reached the epic proportions of ASU's, UO has lost fullback Brandon Jumper (knee) and flanker Tony Hargain (fractured kneecap) for the season.

The other walking wounded include tight end Jeff Thomason (hip), guard John Tattersall (knee), nose guard Marcus Woods (ankle), fullback Ngalu Kelemeni (knee) and flanker Micheal McClellan (knee). All are questionable for Saturday.

The loss of Hargain has hampered the Ducks' explosiveness in the receiving corps. Before suffering his injury, Hargain caught 10 passes for 206 yards and two scores in UO's 42-21 victory over San Diego State on Sept. 8.

"I don't think you replace an athlete as versatile as Tony," Brooks said. "We're missing his quickness and jumping ability. His injury limits our effectiveness when we go to three or four receivers because we don't have anybody with his athletic ability."

Split end Joe Reitzug, who has 22 catches for 306 yards and a touchdown, is UO's only healthy starting receiver.

As it did against ASU, Washington completely shut down the Ducks' running game last week, allowing only seven yards on the ground. But redshirt freshman Sean Burwell has been a weapon for UO at tailback, running for 503 yards and six scores this year.

"We had run the ball effectively until last week," Brooks said. "We were physically better than Idaho and Utah State, where we ran really well. We had about 40 yards in the first half at Washington, then we couldn't find the line of scrimmage. But I believe our backs are pretty good right now."

Although Washington tailback Greg Lewis rushed for 169 yards last week, the Ducks' run defense has been reasonably sound. The strength of the defense is in the front seven, who have sacked opposing quarterbacks 22 times this season.

Andy Connor, returning from an ankle injury, is joined at outside linebacker by Peter Brantley with Joe Farwell and James Bautista starting inside.

McClellan

Bautista

University of California

Woods is the anchor of the defensive line, with Jeff Cummins and Matt LaBounty, whose seven sacks lead the team, starting at the tackle spots.

"Until last week, we were playing the running game extremely well," Brooks said. "But I think our strength is up front. Brantley and Conner, our outside backers, are outstanding and Farwell and Bautista have been good inside. Woods and LaBounty have been outstanding on the line."

Daryle Smith, who leads the team with four interceptions, is joined at cornerback with Daryl Singleton. Rory Dairy and Eric Castle start at the safety positions.

UO has enjoyed some of its biggest improvements this season on special teams. Gregg McCallum has made six of eight field goal tries this season and freshman punter Tommy Thompson has averaged 41.9 yards on 28 attempts.

•ASU redshirt freshman Bret Powers was given the nod Monday by Coach Larry Marmie to start Saturday's game at Oregon. However, Powers' sore shoulder kept him from throwing in practice Monday. •Sun Devil fullback Jeff Simoneau was a no-show for practice Monday. Marmie said he did not hear from Simoneau all day.

•ASU split end Eric Guliford sat out Monday's practice with a sprained ankle, but strong safety Floyd Fields, outside linebacker Darren Woodson, tailback George Montgomery, cornerback Kevin Miniefield and nose guard Arthur Paul all practiced despite previous injuries.

Golf 11 back of UTEP; Mickelson leads Classic

By KRIS TIMMONS
State Press

The top-ranked ASU men's golf team returned to action Monday at the Taylor Made/Red River Golf Classic in Dallas and currently sits in second place after two rounds of play.

Texas-El Paso leads the 11-team field with an 11-stroke lead over the Sun Devils and 17-shot advantage on third-place UofA.

ASU coach Steve Loy, holding to his "mix and match" policy on the traveling squad, brought yet another lineup to Dallas.

Junior Phil Mickelson, who continues to head the Sun Devil squad, posted a second round eight-under-par 64 to finish the day with an 11-under par 133. Mickelson holds a three-stroke lead over the Miners' Paul Stankowski.

Mickelson, the two-time defending NCAA champion, finished second two weeks ago in ASU's third-place finish at the Ping/Golfweek NCAA Preview after capturing the Colorado Invitational in early September.

Scott Sullivan is in fifth place with a two-round score of five-under-par 139. Sullivan earned the starting spot and was exempt from qualifying after recording an eighth-place finish at the Preview, his first tournament appearance in more than a year.

"Scott played well (at the Preview)," Loy said. "He is starting to play better. We've got a lot to learn and a lot to get better at before we figure out who our best lineup is."

Inconsistency had been a large factor in the team's performance, according to Loy.

Sophomore Keith Sbarbaro, a member of the 1990 NCAA championship squad, and senior Dave Cunningham both started in the first two events of the season. However, their performances at the Preview placed them among the four players vying for the sixth spot on the traveling squad.

"We are going to continue to qualify for the last spot and they (Sbarbaro and Cunningham) have been playing the worst," Loy said.

Sophomore Jason Spittler, a lefthander like Mickelson, earned the sixth spot and made his first tournament appearance for the Sun Devils at the Classic.

After 36 holes, Spittler is tied for 18th place at one-under par.

Junior Brett Dean is tied for 28th at one-over par and senior Jim Lemon, who finished second behind Mickelson in the season's opening event, is currently in a tie for 60th place at eight-over par.

Rounding out the Sun Devil squad is sophomore Cade Stone, who is tied for 69th at 11-over par.

"I feel better (this trip) than our last trip out," Loy said. "We're not in the position where we know how we're going to get to where we want to be."

"I would always like to see us cover the leaderboard, but we're going to have to work at it."

Loy said he expects tough competition to come from No. 3 UofA and Georgia Tech. The remainder of the 11-team field includes UTEP, Southern Methodist, USC, New Mexico, Brigham Young, Houston and Florida State.

ASU volleyball heads north for match with Lumberjacks

By GREG ZELE
State Press

With half the season gone, the ASU volleyball team is going over the films of its season opener in an effort to remember what worked the first time it played NAU this year.

Both teams have come a long way since then, but the Sun Devils have managed to keep their heads above the net compiling a 11-10 record (3-6 Pac-10) whereas the Lady Lumberjacks are 6-17 so far.

ASU coach Patti Snyder, who said she was not very impressed with NAU during their first meeting, insists the Sun Devils will take today's match at 7 p.m. seriously.

This time, however, the contest will take place in Flagstaff.

ASU needed only three games to dispatch the Lady Jacks in Tempe, 15-3, 15-12 and 15-4.

"This is their big match of the year," said Snyder, adding that NAU could prove troublesome because "they are not really consistent."

Snyder said the Lumberjack crowd can make the match difficult as well.

"You go up there and they get good crowds and they're quite obnoxious, frankly," Snyder said. "They can be really rude."

Besides the fans, NAU will look to outside hitters junior Katy McCormick and Proposition 48 sophomore Angel Leath on offense. McCormick and Leath average 2.52 and 2.38 kills per game, respectively.

On defense, junior middle blocker Lisa Mueller anchors the squad, averaging 1.16 blocks per game.

"They've got some good talent," Snyder said. "They've got some kids who can jump and bang the ball."

Snyder called Leath an outstanding athlete but said she is inconsistent because she is young.

For ASU, junior outside hitter Mindy Gowell is coming off an uncharacteristic weekend series. She averaged a paltry two kills per game against USC and UCLA.

Gowell continues to pace the Sun Devils in digs and kills, however, averaging 4.71 and 4.11 per game and also places in the top 10 and 20 in the nation, respectively.

Gowell will become the first ASU player since Christy Nore in 1988 to finish in the top 20 in both categories if she can regain the form she exhibited earlier this season.

In addition to viewing game films at Monday's practice, ASU worked on its offense. Snyder said she wanted to work out the coverage errors that plagued the Sun Devils against UCLA.

The Sun Devils boast a 24-3 lead in the series.

ASU returns to home action Friday and Saturday against Washington State and Washington.

ASU duo wins doubles title

Football

By DARREN URBAN
State Press

The ASU men's and women's tennis teams recorded mixed results as they continued their preseason tournament journey last weekend.

Junior Chris Gambino and senior Joel Finnigan captured the doubles title at the Mitsubishi-Balloon Fiesta Tennis Classic in Albuquerque, N. M. Senior Dan Marting took third place in flight one singles, the upper-division bracket, while junior Marc Rothchild finished second in flight two.

Only junior Krista Amend had a solid showing for the women, reaching the semifinals of the ITCA Rolex Regional.

Gambino played in his first tournament for the Sun Devils after redshirting last season following his transfer from Indiana.

"It was good to finally get to play," Gambino said. "I was a little anxious and I didn't play my best in singles."

Gambino said he was very comfortable playing with Finnigan.

"We get along very well both on and off the court," Gambino said. "We're very serious and very hungry. We both have a 'winning is everything' approach."

"We're both very intense," Finnigan added.

Finnigan, who said he was going into the tourney to work on his serve and volley game, showed those deficiencies in dropping all four sets in his two singles matches.

"I wanted to work on it, so I served and volleyed on every point," Finnigan said. "What it will do is allow me to change up my game, and come in on net on a big point . . . (and) give me confidence on a short ball to be able to come in and put it away."

Finnigan said ASU also had to adjust to the altitude in Albuquerque.

"At that level, different tennis balls are used," he said. "You can't put any topspin on them or they'll take off."

In the women's tournament, Coach Sheila McInerney said the doubles play, normally a strength of the Sun Devils, was poor. Top-seeded doubles team Karen Bergan and Jennifer Rojohn were upset in the second round.

"Doubles is a strong part of the team, and we didn't play very well," McInerney said.

Amend was a little more blunt.

"As a team we did terrible," she said. "We've been playing better in practice."

Amend, who played in the No. 1 spot for ASU last season, was pleased with her experience at the women's first tournament of the year.

"It was good for me," Amend said. "I played in a lot of matches."

"I thought Amend, (freshman Meredith) Geiger and (junior Luann) Klimchock played well," McInerney said. "Traditionally we start slow. It is only October and the season doesn't start until January."

Amend came into the tournament ranked 25th in the nation, and she faced Geiger, her doubles partner, in the fourth round of singles. Amend defeated Geiger, 6-3, 6-1, despite the freshman's No. 19 ranking.

Geiger was happy with her overall performance in her initial collegiate tourney.

"I thought I did pretty well considering it was my first tournament," she said.

"It was weird," Amend said of playing Geiger in the tourney.

"We were both tired. We both had had some tough matches, and we just kind of played."

Geiger said it was difficult playing her partner.

"I play her in practice a lot," Geiger said. "I decided to work on my game."

Neither Amend nor Geiger were looking ahead to a possible matchup as they entered the singles draw.

"You want to take it one match at a time," Geiger said.

"We played our third matches side by side and when I saw Krista win I knew if I won I'd play her."

"You're not really looking that far ahead," Amend said.

Amend added that Geiger's superior ranking may not have been totally justified.

"Rankings don't mean a lot," Amend said. "Meredith did well in juniors, but the experience of playing . . . collegiate tennis is important. She felt pressure coming in with the high ranking."

"I was surprised I was ranked 19," Geiger said. "Krista has played up at the college level and has the experience."

McInerney said the early season setbacks may pay dividends down the road.

"This could be a blessing in disguise," she said. "Now we know what we need to work on."

Baseball splits series with Nevada-Las Vegas despite errors

By DARREN URBAN
State Press

The ASU baseball team overcame six errors to beat Nevada-Las Vegas Saturday, 7-4, to earn a split of their weekend series, putting its fall record at 3-1.

Center fielder Mike Kelly and first baseman Dave Robson collected three hits each and the Rebels committed five errors, overcoming the Sun Devils' weak defensive effort.

ASU coach Jim Brock, upset by the defense, gave the infielders a tongue-lashing in the dugout after the game.

"It's not just the middle, but the whole infield," Brock said. "Robson is doing a concerned about the other three positions."

ASU shortstop Kurt Ehmann, a junior college transfer, had three errors, and junior second baseman Mike Scialo added one.

Starting pitcher Gary Tatterson got the win, pitching five solid innings. Junior Sean Rees pitched the final four innings to earn the save.

Junior outfielders Jim Austin and Tommy Adams helped out on offense. Austin belted a booming RBI triple off the center field fence in the sixth and Adams drove in two runs with a single and a sacrifice fly.

Tatterson, who struggled in his start last weekend with six walks in four innings, rebounded this week, surrendering only three hits and three walks.

"We worked on my mechanics all week," Tatterson said. "I was down in the pen with (pitching) coach (Dub) Kilgo . . . In the beginning last week I felt fine, but I lost my confidence after that."

"I thought Tatterson looked a lot better," Brock said. "We were very, very pleased."

Tatterson, a senior, has given up six runs in nine innings this fall, but none of the runs has been earned.

"That was a problem too," Tatterson said of the errors committed behind him. "Coach (Brock) was telling me just to put it behind me because I started overthrowing."

Friday night, the Rebels rallied in the ninth to pull out a 8-7 win.

The Sun Devils led 7-5 entering the ninth, but junior lefty Scott Dodd was hammered for five hits and three runs in UNLV's final frame.

"Mechanically, Dodd has some things he's been working on in practice," Brock said. "He's been doing it better in practice, but in the game he fell back into the problem. He throws way too much over the top and he doesn't have as good command or overly good stuff up there."

The Rebels pounded ASU pitchers Steve Brody, Wayne Ball and Dodd for 18 hits while drawing six walks.

The Sun Devils' lead was in part due to their first two homers of the fall. Catcher Clarke Rea launched a two-run shot to right in the second and Adams crunched a three-run homer onto First Street in the fifth.

HEY COLLEGE students! Did you know that personal ads are only $1.40 per day for 15 words? What a great (and cheap) way to let that special someone know just how special they really are!

HEY SAE'S! The shower was freezing on Sunday! How could you? Love, those Thetas!

JOHN POIRIER IV—Thanks for the entertainment last Tuesday nite in the Engineering computer lab!

JULIET—I'D pay a kings ransom, to undue to words. Not the ones I've spoken, just the ones you've heard.—I was trying to clear the arena, of everyone but you. Because you were the first to write me, and from that second I knew—that some how, some way, our romance should live. That was the meaning of my poem, and the rose I promised to give.—Please come back, revive our romance, with moonlit champagne and a toast. "To our never ending fairy tale!" I miss you daily, my Juliet ghost. —Romeo.

KAPPA ALPHA—get ready to saddle up for the big time excitement this weekend. KA Frozen rope and stickman.

KK GAMMA Jenna and Kristin, you're great coaches. We are looking forward to the tourney this weekend. Win! Win! Win! Thanks, the men of KA.

IF YOUR BUSINESS WOULD LIKE TO SPONSOR THE HOROSCOPES, PLEASE CALL 965-6555.

FOR WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1990

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Problems from yesterday still concern you, but valuable support comes from a close tie now. The accent is on togetherness and sharing. Two heads are better than one today.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) A delay about one business matter could get you down now. However, your hands aren't completely tied and it's a good time to get other projects off the ground.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Take positive actions now to get more fun out of life. Problems with one relationship needn't keep you from enjoying yourself. Sports and exercise are favored.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) It may take awhile for someone to get back to you. Meanwhile keep yourself busy. Shopping leads to a great find. Rely on your own efforts to get things done today.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22) You may still not know which way to turn regarding a business dilemma today. However, you will be receiving some good news by phone or letter. Accent social life tonight.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22) You're still sorting out problems left over from yesterday. The exercise of initiative today will lead to career gains and enhanced financial possibilities.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) It would do you good to distance yourself from a problem related to home today. Get in touch with friends at a distance and make plans for happy social times.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) A behind-the-scenes development in business today is to your benefit. You'll have to read between the lines now, as some you deal with are evasive or noncommittal.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) You need to be on guard against deception in financial dealings today. Don't let worry keep you from taking advantage of today's pleasant social opportunities.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19) Though the recognition you deserve may not be forthcoming today, you still can make valuable progress now. Put ego demands aside and concentrate on immediate tasks.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18) It's not the best time to give others advice, but it's a good day for the enjoyment of pleasure interests. Changes may be made in connection with a travel plan.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to Mar. 20) Home life is favored over outside pleasure interests today. Success comes to you in job and financial matters, but you still may be disappointed in a friend.

YOU BORN TODAY are sometimes better managing the financial interests of others than your own. Your attitude towards money can fluctuate between penuriousness and over-generosity. You seem to thrive on challenges and are resilient in crisis situations. You may have both philosophical and literary inclinations. You're a leader in a quiet sort of way and dislike being in a subordinate position. Birthdate of: Arthur Miller, playwright; Sterling Moss, auto racer; and Rita Hayworth, actress.
