Allied prisoners head to freedom

Iraqi Republican Guard battling fundamentalists

By The Associated Press

After a cheeseburger lunch, six Americans, three Britons and an Italian headed out from Baghdad to Jordan and a real taste of freedom Monday, ending weeks as prisoners of war.

Iraq's U.N. ambassador said all remaining allied prisoners could be freed as soon as Tuesday.

In southern Iraqi cities, meanwhile, Islamic fundamentalists and others bent on ousting President Saddam Hussein were reported locked in street battles with Saddam's loyalist Republican Guard in the angry aftermath of the Persian Gulf conflict.

Refugee and exile sources said rioters killed the provincial governor and mayor of Basra, Iraq's embattled second city.

Gen. Colin Powell, in Washington, again made clear that the U.S. administration looks forward to a Saddam-less Iraq.

"We hope a regime will emerge in Baghdad that is committed finally to living in peace with its neighbors," the Joint Chiefs of Staff chairman told a Veterans of Foreign Wars convention.

Diplomatic calendars were fast filling up as the victors in war seek to set the course of peace.

The White House announced President Bush will meet one-on-one with allied leaders in the coming weeks to develop a blueprint for long-term stability in the Persian Gulf.

Arab foreign ministers concluded one meeting in Saudi Arabia on Monday and planned another for Syria this week to set an Arab agenda for the peace. Secretary of State James Baker will leave Washington Wednesday to visit Mideast capitals to discuss postwar issues with allied leaders.

State official to recommend more money for ASU

By KEN BROWN

State Press

A state budget official said Monday he will recommend an additional $114,000 for University funding, while the budget-setting process faces another delay from Arizona's governor-elect.

Although student leaders called both developments good news, they remained skeptical about the future of this year's financial aid situation.

"Overall, it's just like them throwing us bones," said Matt Ortega, president of

Associated Students of ASU. "I say 'Hey, you're not doing me any favors.'"

A House of Representatives vote on the legislative recommendations has been postponed at the request of Governor-elect Fife Symington, who wants to have a part in the budget draft.

John Lee, a staff member of the Joint Legislative Budget Committee, had originally drafted a budget recommending $1,087,000 for the State Student Incentive Grant program — a move that upset some who said the figure fell $114,000 short of the minimum federal requirement.

Campus leaders said the shortfall jeopardized $1.1 million in federally-matched funds.

Lee, claiming support for the SSIG all along, said he will make up this difference in a new request to House and Senate appropriations committees when they resume budget talks.

"For five years, I've always recommended full matching funds (for the SSIG)," he said, adding that he did not know of the federal requirement. "It's not like I was against it. That's not even an issue."

The JLBC, a group of analysts that advises the Legislature on budget matters, has recommended $179.9 million for ASU main campus funding. It would cut $7.6 million from main campus funding and give the University $52 million less than the Arizona Board of Regents asked for in November.

University officials have repeatedly criticized the JLBC proposal, charging it robs students and attempts to obscure $20

Vijaisimh

Officials find funds to rehire professor

Some stories do have happy endings.

Kadambi Vijaisimh, a teacher in the department of computer science who was fired in February due to budget cuts, has been rehired after officials said they found the funds to pay his salary.

About 200 students signed a petition to protest the mid-semester firing of Vijaisimh, who started teaching again Monday.

"Nothing can tell you of the joy I feel," Vijaisimh said.

The 45-year-old faculty associate, who has taught off and on at ASU for eight years, said returning to the classroom is the continuation of a love story.

"These students mean so much to me," he said.

Cheers erupted from CSC 181 students Monday as Vijaisimh entered the classroom.

"I became used to his style, and then they pull him from the class. That was no good," said senior industrial technology major Neil Amborsio.

Sophomore Lori McKenna said "VJ," as he is known to his students, makes learning interesting.

"He's not like other teachers. He's funny, and he's interesting," the psychology major said.

Vijaisimh thanked his students for petitioning to get him rehired.

"I've taught all over, and you guys are really special," he said.

Vijaisimh and one other faculty associate were laid off when the department of computer science in the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences was forced to shrink its spending after a University budget cut.

All colleges at ASU were forced to return percentages of their funding because of mid-year budget cuts mandated by the state Legislature in January. ASU suffered a $5.6 million loss.

Safety Escort Service volunteer rate declines

By ANDREW FAUGHT
State Press

ASU's low crime rate may be contributing to the decreased number of Safety Escort Service volunteers this year, the program's director said Monday.

"In years where there have been incidents on campus, there have been no problems getting volunteers," said Jessica Groenke, director of SES. "Any year there is not an incident on campus, volunteerism goes steadily downward."

According to a study released last month, ASU's crime rate ranked the lowest among Pac-10 universities.

Groenke said when people assume ASU is safe, this attitude leads to the reoccurrence of incidents on campus. She added she is decreased public relations efforts, resulting from the heavy concentration on ASASU's budget crisis.

But Verhines stressed the importance of generating awareness among students about crime.

"The crime rate may be down," she said. "But it's still there and still has the potential to happen."

Groenke said she needs 20 volunteers for the service to function at its maximum safety capability.

Escorts serve on either an early shift from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. or a late shift from 9:30 p.m. to 12:15 a.m., Sunday through Thursday.

Associated Students of ASU Sen. Adrian Fontes, College of Education, said he is volunteering as an escort out of fairness to students who consistently use the service.

"It's definitely unfortunate what's happening here," Fontes said. "I'd hate to see a student get hurt because we didn't have enough escorts."

ASASU Campus Affairs Vice President Cherie Verhines said that declines in volunteer service may be due to the

Iraq cracks down hard on protesters

SAFWAN, Iraq (AP) — Iraq's Republican Guard launched a fierce crackdown on protesters demanding the overthrow of Saddam Hussein and the establishment of an Islamic republic in Iraq, witnesses said Monday.

The Guard, which was routed by allied troops last week, was reported to be turning some of its remaining tanks and guns on the demonstrators, who are apparently disgusted with Saddam's handling of the Gulf War and sense that he may be vulnerable.

There were reports of protesters killing government officials, including the mayor of Basra, a governor, and a son of Saddam.

Witnesses said demonstrations had erupted in at least eight Iraqi cities, stretching from Iraq's second-largest city, Basra, to the holy city of Kerbala in central Iraq. They said that in some places the Iraqi troops were shooting women and children.

"The special forces are destroying everything in front of them. If anybody shouts from a building they knock it down," said Mahar Hakawati, 24, a Jordanian photographer who came to Kuwait from Basra.

Hakawati said he saw Republican Guard tanks moving through the streets of the southern Iraqi port town, devastated twice in a decade by wars initiated by Saddam. He said the military had surrounded the city.

Many people in Basra appeared to have guns taken from police stations, and rumors that Saddam fled the country sparked celebrations in the city, he said.

Gunmen riddled portraits of the Iraqi president with bullets, he said.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, reported five explosions at midday in Basra. It said refugees fleeing the violence were streaming into Iran across the border at Shalamchah.

It quoted refugees as saying Saddam's eldest son, Udai, was killed in the battle at Basra, along with a provincial governor and the mayor.

Refugees reaching this town just north of Kuwait, most of them Kuwaitis trying to return home, said demonstrators were marching in Nasiriyah, Shutra, Suq ash Shuyukh, Imara, Samawah and Kut, mostly in southern Iraq.

The refugees identified the holy city of Karbala as the northernmost town wracked by protest. In the city, south of Baghdad, protesters slashed X's across portraits of Saddam and flung mud at them, said two men who left the town on Saturday.

Witnesses said rioters looted government warehouses before setting them alight and attacked prisons, government offices or vehicles and the offices of Saddam's ruling Arab Baath Socialist Party in numerous towns.

The Baath governor of Nasiriyah was reportedly gunned down by demonstrators, and police fought pitched battles with them in the streets, refugees said.

"There was a lot of death. The police were killing the opposition, and there were many injured on both sides," said Ali Yacoub, a 32-year-old Kuwaiti policeman sprung from a jail in Nasiriyah on Sunday after the opposition battered down the doors. Yacoub said he had been held there with about 500 other Kuwaitis since November.

Refugees said many of the rioters didn't know how long they could maintain control of government buildings seized during demonstrations.

In Nasiriyah, "many said they did not have the ammunition to continue, they also have no gas," said Yacoub.

Reliable sources said soldiers anxious to flee southern Iraq are exchanging their weapons for transportation.

The same sources said that Iraq has fired its general director of security, Abdul

Nine killed in retirement home blaze in Colorado

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — A fire raced through a retirement home and killed nine people Monday as neighbors and employees helped rescue residents by pushing them to safety in wheelchairs.

Investigators said they suspect the fire was caused by a furnace flue pipe in the attic.

Eight residents died in the blaze and another died later at a hospital, said police Lt. Ron Resling.

Seven women ranging in age from 72 to 91 were hospitalized, including one in critical condition. Most suffered from smoke inhalation. Eight other people were treated, including four firefighters.

An employee of the Crystal Springs Estate retirement home discovered the blaze about 12:30 a.m. in a room where smoking was allowed, leading officials to initially speculate that the fire started there.

But investigators later said it appeared that heat from the metal flue, which carried fumes from the furnace to the outside air, penetrated into the attic over a long period of time, drying out the wood and causing the fire.

"Our investigators are pretty well in agreement that that was the area of ignition," said Deputy Fire Chief Terry Gladin. "That's 98 percent confirmation."

Fire Capt. Ron Culp said the fire's cause would not be determined until investigators finished searching through the debris.

The quick-moving fire caught the residents asleep, and the two employees on duty had to break down the doors to the private rooms to evacuate them. Crystal Springs does not house people who need medical care and is considered a "residential care facility" for people aged 70 to 98.

Tricia Hightower, the home's cook, lived nearby and was awakened by a phone call from another employee. She and her husband ran over to the burning building where firefighters were lifting residents out of their beds, put them in wheelchairs and raced them across the street.

A neighbor, Carolyn Johnson, said she woke up and saw the fire, grabbed some blankets and ran to the scene. Flames were leaping as high as 15 feet in the air and she could hear glass breaking, she said.

"You just feel helpless," she said. "It was a sad situation. You just feel like there wasn't anything you could do."

Some of the residents did not want to leave their homes, Hightower said.

"It's been their home with all their belongings and they were confused," Hightower said.

Ms. Johnson said relatives of home residents rushed to the building as word spread about the fire.

"They barely got their cars stopped and they were running down the street to see if their relatives were all right," she said.

Denise Oldach, a spokeswoman for the city, said all 24 residents of the home were accounted for.

Preliminary damage estimates were set at $500,000.

On the walls that were still standing, photographs could be seen Monday — faded wedding portraits and pictures of children.

"It's like we just lost nine . . . grandparents," said home administrator Susan Brown.

"It's the most tragic fire we've ever experienced," said Culp.

Culp said the one-story building, built in the 1950s, had sprinklers in the kitchen but not in the corridors or the residents' rooms. He said the building was built before the fire code required a sprinkler system and probably was in compliance.

Sprinklers would have prevented the fire, he said. "If it would have been sprinklers, we wouldn't have had this," Culp said.

There were smoke and heat detectors, and they did work, he said.

Jim Sanner, the home's co-owner, said several more smoke detectors were installed just last week in some of the rooms.

"It was a big family and that extends to the staff," he said. "We lost some dear friends. . ."

Said Mary Alger, a resident who escaped injury: "The way I look at it, evidently the good Lord don't want me yet. When he wants me, he'll come get me."

Cyanide poisoning victim remarried day before taking drug

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — A day after she unwittingly took a cyanide-laced cold pill, Kathleen Daneker ended a yearlong divorce and remarried.

Three days after the Feb. 8 wedding, the 40-year-old mother of three became violently ill and died.

A 44-year-old man from the nearby Olympia suburb of Lacey in western Washington died a week later of cyanide poisoning after he also took Sudafed 12 Hour decongestant capsules. A second woman poisoned by a tainted Sudafed capsule lapsed into a coma Feb. 2 but has since recovered.

Manufacturer Burroughs Wellcome Co. of Research Triangle Park, N.C., on Sunday voluntarily ordered a nationwide recall of the over-the-counter capsules.

The three victims took capsules from blister packs with the same serial number, bought at different stores within roughly 30 miles of each other.

Mrs. Daneker's family said they were advised by authorities not to discuss details of the events leading to her death.

They described her as a religious woman, an optimist whom others turned to when they needed a lift, and a patriot whose house was decorated with American flags and yellow ribbons hung in support of the troops in the Persian Gulf.

They said she was embarking on a new life in remarrying Ken Daneker and hunting for a job. A day after her death, an employer called with a possible job offer, said her oldest son, Ken, 18.

"She was a really positive person," he said. "Friends would call her when they felt bad. She would uplift them through prayer."

Her other sons, Joshua and Chris, are 14-year-old twins.

Mrs. Daneker had recently completed a temporary state clerical job, which involved helping the disabled. Although she once wanted to be a teacher, she took whatever work she could find, said her mother, Shirley Skinner.

Mrs. Daneker was a devoted member of the First Assembly of God Life Center Church, Skinner said. "She had a lot of faith, a lot of prayer," she said. "She was always looking up."

In recent months, Mrs. Daneker spent each Saturday helping disadvantaged children through a church-outreach program, Skinner said.

EDITORIAL

Euphoria over victory ought to be tempered

It's over. Thank God. This sentiment is one that most can agree on — regardless of personal differences concerning the Persian Gulf war.

While there is plenty to celebrate — renewed patriotism, the liberation of Kuwait, the release of 10 allied POWs and the eventual return of soldiers to American soil — we must not get too caught up in this victory.

Yes, it looks good, real good, for President Bush right now. He certainly won't have a lot to worry about when the 1992 election rolls around. Bush demonstrated his ability to go to war in addition to exhibiting his desire for peace.

The Economist recently wrote, "Not only has Mr. Bush won; so has the presidency as an institution. There will be fewer questions about the power of the commander in chief in the future and less talk of the War Powers Act. By voting in January, Congress may have preserved its formal power under the Constitution to declare war. But it will find it harder in the future to oppose a president's war policy."

The military also has enjoyed quite a reception from the American public (deservingly so). Many people will be less apt to complain about military spending.

Bush and his military machine are in fat city after demonstrating an unequalled finesse in dealing with the "big bad guys."

However, now the war is over, and it is time to bring some of this firm leadership home. This battle was swift, but the wars we have been waging for years against poverty, drugs, illiteracy and AIDS are far more sluggish. Domestic programs, namely education, need to move to the top of the post-war check list.

When the finishing touches are put on peace, the United States should look toward home.

If there is to be a continued military presence in the Middle East, the implications should not weigh on the United States.

Prophetic professor raises doubt about need for war

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Syndicate

There has to be an explanation. In only a few days, we've almost totally destroyed what one expert after another had told us was the fourth most powerful fighting force in the world.

And expert after expert told us that, yes, we would surely win a ground war, but it could take weeks, maybe months of desert warfare, and at a great cost in American lives.

Maybe I dozed off and missed it, but of all the retired generals and military analysts on the tube, did even one of them say that in four days the world's fourth most powerful fighting force would be looking and acting like haggard recruits on their first day in boot camp? And the loss of American lives would be fewer than we suffered in a routine World War II skirmish?

As a matter of fact, someone did predict it. No, not me. I'm no military expert, and I believed all those retired generals and think-tankers who said it was going to be long, hard and bloody.

But on Jan. 15, long before the ground war began, an article appeared on the op-ed page of this newspaper. It was written by Professor John J. Mearsheimer, chair of the political science department at the University of Chicago and a military scholar.

When I read it that day, I shook my head and thought: "I hope he's right, but..."

Here are portions of the professor's remarkably prophetic article:

"Many Americans fear that throwing Saddam Hussein's army out of Kuwait would be a very tough job for the American military, with U. S. casualties ranging into the tens of thousands.

"... This pessimistic view is incorrect. In fact, the U. S. military is poised to clobber Hussein's forces and score a stunning victory in Kuwait.

"... The campaign should be over in a week or less and probably fewer than 1,000 Americans will die in combat, a very low number for a large army fighting in a major armed war."

Why would it be that quick and decisive? Mearsheimer pointed out that our forces are better equipped, better trained in armored warfare and that we controlled the skies.

"In contrast: The Iraqi army... is a Third World military that is incapable of fighting mobile armored battles. This crucial Iraqi shortcoming in tank warfare was demonstrated often in the recent Iran-Iraq war, a conflict in which the manifest deficiencies of the Iraqi military were laid bare.

"In fact, even by Third World standards, the Iraqi army is a below-average fighting force. It is certainly not in the same league as the North Vietnamese army, and it does not even measure up well to the Egyptian and Syrian armies. If the Israelis can consistently score impressive victories over the Egyptians and Syrians, even after being completely surprised in 1973, why should we not expect the U. S. military to rout the Iraqis?"

He then explained the ground strategy that would probably be used, and it was pretty close to the strategy that was used.

And he concluded: "... Saddam Hussein should understand that the American military is going to inflict a devastating defeat on his military forces in Kuwait. He will be left in much the same position that Gamal Abdel Nasser was in after Israel destroyed his army in the Six-Day War. The American public, on the other hand, should recognize that although there is certainly cause to be concerned about casualties, the United States is not about to become involved in a war of attrition with high casualty levels.

"In fact, American forces may suffer as few as 500 fatalities, roughly the same number of troops the Israelis lost against Egypt and Syria in the Six-Day War."

The professor called it, and that's impressive. But it also raises some questions.

If a University of Chicago professor knew with such confidence that the supposedly ferocious Iraqi army was "even by Third World standards... a below-average fighting force," didn't our vast intelligence establishment know it?

And if they knew it, why were we told, over and over again, that Iraq was not merely a menace to Kuwait and Saudi Arabia, but the entire Arab region? It would be understandable if some Americans thought Saddam would be storming the beaches of Florida.

If the Iraqi army was as overrated as the professor says, and as the past few days have proved, then what might have happened if our ambassador to Iraq hadn't told Saddam that we weren't interested in Arab border disputes. What would his reaction have been if he had been told: "Don't mess with Kuwait, or you'll be up to your ears in American bombs."

Maybe down the line, when the euphoria has passed, some military and political historians will pore all over all the decisions and events that led to the war. Until then, I'm glad we won and that the price in our blood wasn't steep. But I'm going to wait a while before being convinced that the entire adventure couldn't have been avoided.

War lesson is double edged

Ellen Goodman
Washington Post Writer's Group

When the war began the young teacher had worried about the fear she saw in the faces of her third grade. We had talked then about how and how much to reassure children. Her desire to protect them has struggled with her desire to acknowledge that war is indeed fearsome. What should children know about war, she had wondered, and how should they know it?

But when the teacher called back on Victory Day, it was with a different report from the classroom and playground. She was worried about the cheerfulness of her young charges. The ease of war had erased their anxiety. The glory of war had trumped its terror.

As the international good guys trounced the bad guys, as America won, her children played SCUDs and Patriots. Gradually her own vast sense of relief at the end of the killing had developed an edge. What had the children learned about war, and is it what they should know?

Like the teacher, I was among those who believed we should stop short of fighting. For most Americans the passion to fight depended on the number of casualties they imagined. I imagined them by the tens of thousands.

Yet once it began, most of us who questioned the war were left with one shared wish: that it be short and victorious, that our soldier sons, daughters, mothers and fathers come through it safely. Well, we got what we wished for.

In its 43 days, there were more Americans killed in the plane collision in Los Angeles than in the collision in the Persian Gulf. Our military performed and so did its hardware. We stayed on the right side of that elusive line that separates moral from immoral behavior in war. We beat Saddam, rescued Kuwait. And best of all, we did it quickly.

Yet, despite the vast, unifying sense of relief at the body bags that will come home empty, there is still a wound. An unexpected, unrelenting worry about the meaning of an "easy" win.

Vietnam, with all its horror, taught us about the sweaty, terrifying brutality of war. Will the gulf teach us about a swift, surgical, antiseptic strike? Vietnam taught us about the terrible toll of war without victory. Will the gulf teach us about the glories of victory with only "collateral" carnage?

And Vietnam taught us to be reluctant about getting into another faraway war. What message will come from the gulf? Don't be afraid?

On V-Day the speeches were also aimed at a long domestic debate. The victorious ends will surely be used to justify the peacetime means: the military budget and buildup of the '80s, that came at the cost of bridges and schools and children.

Dick Cheney, the secretary of defense, said with I-told-you-so delight that during the Reagan years we were "buying more than $600 toilets." He will surely ask for more. Which of our leaders — those who bask in being "right" about this war or those who worry about being "wrong" — will say no to Stormin' Norman, Colin Powell and their commander in chief?

Americans who measure national strength in the health of our families and our economy are stilled by the martial celebration. So are those who count the lost souls on the city streets as well as the cheering souls in the Kuwaiti streets. For a time their words will be damp blankets under a flag-strewn sky.

Neither the teacher nor I would trade victory for defeat or wish a single more casualty. We got out of this without chemical warfare, without nuclear holocaust, without domestic devastation — by the skin of our teeth. Still I understand why she worries about 8-year-olds who have known only a good little war. If this is how they, how we, will understand war: good and little.

Last week at recess this woman stopped a fight on the playground with her normal, routine admonition: "This is not the way we solve problems." On the faces of her children there was a look of disbelief.

Everyone in my battalion knows that I draw; I've been asked to draw caricatures for several Marines here so far. They pay me with cookies or toilet paper. Ha! Ha! Ha!

I plan to finish school once I get back. I'll finish in six months (1 semester) — sounds great, God willing.

LETTER

Editor:

This is in response to the letter "Coor has sold out" that appeared in the Feb. 27 issue of the State Press.

President Lattie Coor's decision to allow student-athletes special registration privileges was not based on dollars as the writer of the Feb. 27 letter is saying. I also think the term "athletes" he uses is incorrect. "Student athletes" is the correct term because we are also here at ASU to learn and receive an education like fellow students.

President Coor's decision is justified. Student-athletes at ASU must complete a program of study and take only those classes that are on that plan of study. If a student-athlete fails to get into one of those classes on his or her program of study, he or she will become ineligible to compete in sports. They may also lose their scholarship — which has happened to a friend of mine. Also, there are currently about 3,000 student-athletes enrolled at ASU and in no way would they interfere with other students who are trying to get into their required courses.

I would also like to mention that many student-athletes excel not only on the field, but in the classroom as well. It seems to me that the writer of the letter is using President Coor's decision (preregistration for student-athletes) to dampen the image of the student-athlete at ASU.

Man accused of forgery arrested in Tempe

By TEENA CHADWELL
State Press

A man who swindled up to $40,000 from local banks was arrested by Tempe police in a Glendale bar Friday and accused of 25 counts of forgery.

Scott Randolph Steadman, 27, was arrested at JC's Fun One bar, 5546 N. 43rd Ave., Glendale, after police received a tip that he would be at the bar, Tempe Detective Don Calendar said Monday.

Steadman reportedly "befriended" men he met mostly in Phoenix bars before allegedly stealing their checks and bank cards.

The suspect, who has been living out of hotels for the past four months, forged more than 60 stolen checks between November and February, cashing them at local First Interstate and Valley National banks, police said.

Steadman allegedly walked into the banks and posed as the person on the stolen bank card. Most of the forged checks cashed at First Interstate Bank were written for $950. At Valley National Bank, most checks were for approximately $400, Calendar said.

Calendar said Steadman is homosexual and either would "pick up" other homosexuals or "they picked him up."

Most of the time, Steadman gave a false identity to the victims, saying that he was working for CBS Studios or a local financial company, Calendar said.

In the first incident, Steadman allegedly gave the victim his real name, police said.

Calendar said Steadman cashed a large number of the forged checks one day in mid-November and at another time in mid-January.

On each of the days, the suspect allegedly cashied 15 checks at different First Interstate Bank branches, many in Tempe, Calendar said.

During those two days, First Interstate Bank lost $28,000 from the forged checks, Calendar said.

Although police believe the suspect committed more than the number of forgery counts he is being accused of, there are only 25 clear cases, Calendar said, adding that the total loss from the 25 cases is approximately $33,000.

Steadman is being held at Maricopa County Jail in lieu of a $2,800 bond.

Crackdown

Rahman Aldour, charging him with negligence in the exercise of his duties.

The witnesses here said demonstrators in Basra have started carrying portraits of Mohammad Bakr Al-Hakim, a prominent Shiite clergyman that runs an opposition group from Iran.

"They want an Islamic Republic. . . . There are many pictures of Imam Ali," said Sabah Abed, a 35-year-old Iraqi who had worked as an ambulance driver in Kuwait.

Ali is the patron saint of the Shiite Moslems. His death in a 7th century battle over the succession to the prophet Mohammed led to the creation of the Shiite and Sunni branches of Islam.

But Abed said the goal of the rebellion did not appear to be unity with neighboring Iran, which is an Islamic republic.

Other refugees said the uprising was not confined to Shiites; they said many people are simply tired of Saddam.

"They want a new president. He is a tyrant, a bloodsucker, a warmonger," said Abu Mohammed, a 34-year-old truck driver. As he spoke, 43-year-old Fahd Fayad wailed in the background, saying 16 relatives had been killed in an allied attack on Basra.

"I am not crying for one or two," the man said, tears streaming through his gray stubble. "I am crying for 16. . . . Nobody wants Saddam anymore."

On Monday, a trickle of refugees became a flood at this wrecked border town.

Vehicles groaned under mattresses and other household goods. Some refugees fled with just the clothes on their backs and tore into army rations distributed at the checkpoint.

U.S. soldiers from the First Infantry Division questioned the refugees as they passed through the town.

"They said Basra is just absolute bedlam," said Capt. Ernie Marcone, 27, of Hollywood, Fla., quoting a group of engineers let across the border late Sunday.

"They said there were riots and the Republican Guards were putting it down. They had rolled tanks in. They said they were even shooting women and children."

A Kuwaiti translator working for the U.S.

military said all the refugees were telling the same story, but it was impossible to determine the extent of the uprising in Iraq, especially since most of those fleeing south are Kuwaitis.

Abed, the ambulance driver, said violence erupted in Karbala on Thursday during the celebration of a Shiite saint's birthday when the pedestrian boulevard between the mosques of Hussein and Abbas was packed with worshippers.

Reliable sources said the demonstration began when a security official fired into the crowd, killing a woman. The official was stabbed, the demonstration became more violent and three men were killed, the sources said.

Rehire

said Vijaisimh was rehired with funds from the Office of the Provost's budget.

"We just took it out of our own office budget," Gooding said.

However, Gooding said finding the money wasn't easy.

"The money is very limited and we couldn't do it all the time," Gooding said. "We thought it was so important to maintain his relationship with his students."

Ben Huey, chairman of the computer science department, said the other faculty associate fired holds another position at the University and was not rehired to teach.

The five faculty associates in the computer science department are hired on a semester basis and are not under a contract that would protect them from firings due to budget problems.

Huey said full-time faculty associates in the department of computer science are paid between $25,000 and $32,000 for two semesters.

The instructor's rehiring is just a small bright spot in the gloomy outlook for the department, Huey said, adding that he predicted an even tighter budget for the fall.

"This has been going on for the past five years. We've been doing more and more with less and less," he said. "Next year will be no different."

"Our fate and the fate of the entire University will be in the hands of the Legislature."

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents Monday:

•A man was approached by police after allegedly doing "donuts" on the second floor of Parking Structure 4 Sunday afternoon. Police warned him about trespassing and reckless driving.

•An unknown person damaged an ASU student's vehicle while it was in Parking Structure 5. Estimated damage is $500.

•An unknown person stole items from an ASU student's vehicle while it was parked in Lot 13. Estimated loss is $30, and estimated damage is $220.

•Several items were stolen from Physical Education West. A window was broken in the south locker room. Estimated loss is $50, and estimated damage is $390.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Monday:

•Friday, police arrested Denny Patrick Stanton, a 26-year-old ASU student, and accused him of one felony and two misdemeanors, including possession of dangerous drugs, giving false information and driving on a suspended license.

Police stopped the student for allegedly speeding in the 500 block of N. Scottsdale Road. The suspect reportedly gave a false name and birthdate to the officer. Police said they discovered the suspect had a suspended license after his real name was revealed.

The suspect was taken to the Tempe Police Department, and during the search at the jail, he allegedly tried to conceal crystal methamphetamine in his mouth.

•Police arrested a 37-year-old man Sunday and accused him of aggravated assault with a firearm.

The suspect allegedly got into an argument with a 17-year-old juvenile who was driving his vehicle behind the man's residence.

The suspect, toting a shotgun, followed the juvenile in his vehicle to 1350 W. Third St. and fired one round toward the victim's vehicle, while the juvenile was sitting inside.

The shot hit the rear driver's side of the vehicle. The victim was not injured and police later arrested James Gordon Noack at his residence in the 700 block of S. Priest Drive in connection with the incident.

•Police arrested an 18-year-old ASU student Sunday and accused him of disorderly conduct after he allegedly urinated in front of 7-11, 1310 E. Broadway Road. Police said he was in clear view of traffic on Broadway Road and 7-11 customers.

•Police arrested a 22-year-old ASU student Sunday and accused him of theft after he allegedly stole an air conditioner from the west wall of German Auto Repair, 922 E. Apache Blvd.

•Police also arrested a 20-year-old ASU student Sunday and accused him of conspiring to commit a theft, after he allegedly agreed to be a lookout for another suspect who allegedly stole the air conditioner from the west wall of German Auto Repair.

Cease-fire

Monday was the fifth day of a cease-fire that ended the lightning war in which U. S. and Allied forces reversed Iraq's seven-month occupation of Kuwait and devastated the once-powerful Iraqi army.

American troops pressed on with cease-fire chores of locating and removing thousands of land and marine mines laid by the Iraqis, and other U. S. soldiers got down to tasks of clean-up and pack-up preparatory to flights home — under a still-uncertain withdrawal timetable.

Ten ex-POWs began their long journey home Monday from Baghdad, freed by the Iraqis as an initial gesture after Sunday's cease-fire meeting between allied commander Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf and Iraqi generals. The two sides agreed at that meeting to a complete release of prisoners.

Iraq's ambassador to the United Nations, Abdul Amir al-Anbari, said Monday that all remaining allied prisoners could be freed as early as Tuesday.

"It's a matter of logistics," al-Anbari said. "Otherwise we are prepared to repatriate all so-called coalition POWs tomorrow if the airport facilities allow. Otherwise definitely all of them, and I emphasize all of them, American, British and other members, will be repatriated through the (Red Cross) in Baghdad either tomorrow or the day after tomorrow."

CBS News quoted al-Anbari as saying the prisoners would be freed by Tuesday morning.

The six Americans released Monday included the only female allied soldier listed as missing in action — Army Spc. Melissa Rathbun-Nealy, 20, of Grand Rapids, Mich.

She and Spc. David Lockett, 23, of Fort Bliss, Texas, both transportation specialists, apparently were delivering equipment to front-line positions near the Kuwaiti border in Saudi Arabia when captured by Iraqi troops who punched across the Saudi border in a short-lived attack in late January.

The freed prisoners, clad in yellow jumpsuits bearing the letters "PW," were turned over to Red Cross officers in Baghdad by Iraqi officers.

Although some looked thin and haggard, Red Cross official Angelo Gnaedinger told reporters in the Iraqi capital that the 10 were "in satisfactory good health."

Six thousand miles away, their families already knew that.

"There she is. . . . She looks so good," Rathbun-Nealy's father, Lee Rathbun, said in Michigan as he watched a CNN television report on the release. "My God, there she is."

After a lunch of burgers, cola and chocolates, they departed by road westward. Late Monday, they arrived in Jordan, where they boarded a U. S. Air Force transport and flew to the gulf emirate of Bahrain to be examined aboard a U. S. Navy hospital ship there.

Budget

million the University system would lose. Paul Barberini, ASU director of Student Financial Assistance, said Lee's new recommendation satisfies only one of three University concerns, neglecting the Arizona Financial Aid Trust Fund and the Board of Regents' tuition set-aside fund.

"I suspect it's a very wise move," he said. "It's a pretty good investment, if you put in a dime and get a dollar from the government."

Barberini also echoed concerns of student leaders who said AFAT is not funded properly.

Ortega, while calling Lee's move a positive step, said he is not satisfied with the proposal.

"In my mind, he's still $9 million short," he said. "Everything to (the JLBC) is a smoke-and-mirrors game."

"They are trying to twist numbers and make it look like they're being generous, when we're not really getting anything."

Student Regent Danny Siciliano said campus leaders will use the budget delay to their advantage.

"Obviously, I'm pleased, but it's the first of a number of steps we're going to take to get people educated," Siciliano said. "Any more time we're given is good."

Others, however, were not so quick to call it a victory.

Rob Miller, state relations director for the Arizona Students Association, said Lee's move is just a cover-up for budgetary incompetence.

"(The previous SSIG recommendation) is the most blaring example of John Lee's mess-ups in this budget," Miller said. "It's not that he wanted to support the SSIG, but that he realized how much of a mistake it was not to."

Graphics field opens doors for graduates

By PATRICIA MAH
State Press

The printing and publishing industry is vigorously pursuing interns and graduating students specializing in graphic communications, an associate professor in ASU's industrial technology department said recently.

"In two weeks I had four major recruiters call up wanting to schedule (interviews) for this semester alone," said Tom Schildgen, who also coordinates graphic communications in the department. "I'm just sitting here doing simple math, looking at how many interviews are available and discovering that we don't have that many graduates."

Schildgen said the department, which is part of the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences, has about 60 undergraduates and 12 graduate students.

He said the department's list of recruiters includes the Government Printing Office, the Internal Revenue Service and Gannett/USA Today.

Daniel Crisp, manager of USA Today field operations in Washington D. C., said ASU is one of six universities across the nation actively recruited by the newspaper.

He said USA Today looks for people with a background in printing/manufacturing.

"We also look for people that can be self-starters and have the kind of personality to be leaders," he said. "Our needs are to have college-educated people in (technological) programs."

"ASU fills the bill nicely," Crisp said.

Schildgen stressed the importance of student internships. "As a rule of thumb, the faculty believe you have to work in the industry," he said, adding that the teachers actively consult with printing firms.

Brad Carroll, a senior industrial technology major, interned with Gravure printing plant in Casa Grande, Ariz., last semester. He worked in the quality control department of the plant, which prints newspaper inserts for Target, Kmart and Mervyn's stores.

"It was a very interactive type of experience where our job was to basically examine the product as it progressed through the production line," he said.

Carroll said he worked 40 hours a week at Gravure while taking 12 credit hours at ASU.

"It was real hectic. It was a real stress," he said. Carroll said he was surprised so few people know about the industrial technology department.

"(The printing and publishing industry) is a little-known field, which is surprising because printing is the third largest industry in the country," Carroll said. "But few people are aware of that."

Mary Gilmore, a faculty associate in the industrial technology department and the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Telecommunication, said many of her students discovered the industrial technology department accidentally.

"There are a lot of students majoring in departments around this University who ultimately will end up in the printing and publishing field without aiming . . . directly for it," she said.

Schildgen explained that graphic communications students study printing and publishing for all related industries, such as computer graphics, journalism and fine arts.

"We don't train people to go into production capacity in the industry," said Schildgen. "What we do is train people who know the technology and who can acquire it and manage it."

Nevada residents protest nuclear waste site

By KELLYE KRATCH
State Press

Distrust of the U. S. Department of Energy led to Nevada residents' outcry over a proposed, high-level nuclear waste repository near Las Vegas, a recent report indicated.

Members of ASU's Department of Hazard Studies participated in the study, which was part of a federally-funded, multimillion dollar project — one of the largest social-impact assessments in U. S. history.

Researchers found that people's trust in government greatly influenced their feelings about the Yucca Mountain project.

"We took a survey of the Las Vegas metropolitan area to get people's perceptions of the risks (involved in the project) and their images of the risks associated with the site," said Alvin Mushkatel, director of ASU's Office of Hazard Studies.

"What we find is that the higher the trust in federal agencies, the higher the amount of support for the repository," Mushkatel said. "Unfortunately, there is not a great deal of trust in federal agencies that are given the responsibility for overseeing the siting of the repository."

Marilyn Dantico, interim assistant vice provost for academic personnel at ASU West, co-authored the risk perception report and agreed that the Department of Energy has a credibility problem.

"Data indicates that people don't trust most of the federal agencies charged with oversight to do a good job or tell the truth," she said.

Dantico suggested the DOE could increase people's trust by "minimizing the perception that they're bureaucrats — people think of bureaucrats as covering things up and lying."

She said one option is to "increase the number of scientists and the visibility of scientists, and increase the role of scientists in management and oversight of the facility.

"People indicate a higher level of trust in scientists," she added.

Stephanie Hanna, a spokeswoman for the Department of Energy, blamed much of the opposition to the Yucca Mountain site on "a lot of exposure to environmental problems related to the DOE from long ago."

She said the publicity of past problems has had a "ripple effect" on current projects.

"It's going to be necessary to start with an open-door policy to take care of existing situations — to attack the problems and get them corrected," Hanna said.

Nevadans' opposition to the proposed site is premature since studies to determine whether Yucca Mountain is a suitable location for the repository will not be complete for another seven to 10 years, she added.

Currently, high-level nuclear waste emitted from power plants and defense projects is stored on site, where it is produced.

Hanna said that although this practice is not dangerous now, it could pose problems in the future when natural deterioration of the structures occurs.

"Nuclear waste has a much longer life cycle than the plants," she said. "They were never designed to last over 1,000 years."

Mushkatel called the proposed, high-level nuclear waste site "a very important project to protect the inheritance of future generations."

Besides the link between trust in government and perceived risks, the study also determined that sex and race influenced public opinion toward the site.

Blacks, Hispanics and white females perceived a significantly higher risk from the repository, Mushkatel said, whereas, as a group, white males were the least concerned about risks.

Devils drub UCLA; Texas Tech next

From staff reports

Gary Tatterson struck out 10 batters in tossing his third complete-game victory of the season to lead the ASU baseball team to a 4-1 win over UCLA Monday at Jackie Robinson Stadium.

Tatterson, who gave up just two walks, improved his record to 4-2 while lowering his ERA to 2.47 with his second consecutive complete-game victory. The senior threw a one-hit shutout in a 10-0 win against Rice last Wednesday.

The ninth-ranked Sun Devils (14-10 overall, 2-4 Six-Pac) took two of the three games in the series and have now won four of their last five heading into a two-game series with Texas Tech beginning today at 2:30 at Packard Stadium.

ASU struck quickly off UCLA starter Tim Lindsay, who was the loser as three errors by the Bruins (9-9, 2-4) accounted for three of the Sun Devil runs.

Tatterson's win was the second consecutive complete game for the ASU pitching staff. Sean Rees also fanned 10 while going the distance in an 8-7 victory Sunday.

Texas Tech is sporting a 17-2 mark following a 4-3 victory over Grand Canyon Monday, but Red Raider coach Larry Hays should get an indication of exactly how good his team is today.

Tech, who finished 31-28 and seventh in the Southwest Conference last year, has raced out to a quick start thanks in part to a relatively light schedule.

The Red Raiders have played only two road games and faced a ranked team only once this season, splitting a pair of contests with No. 25 Oklahoma at the Diablo Classic in El Paso, Texas, two weeks ago.

But Hays does return six starters and five pitchers from last year and the experience could make Tech the SWC's surprise team. The Red Raiders boast two potent offensive threats in outfielder Wes Shock (.365, six HR, 22 RBI) and shortstop Tim Tadlock (.359, two HR, 16 RBI).

Tech's honors candidates at the beginning of the season, designated hitter Grant Hammersley (.417, two RBI) and catcher Tony Tijerina (.403, 13 RBI), have been unexplosive but still productive as the team's two leading hitters.

Hays also possesses a solid pitching rotation, highlighted by starters Mark Brandenburg (5-1, 2.65 ERA) and Rodney Steph (4-0, 2.67 ERA). Travis Gage has come out of the bullpen to post a 2-0 record with a 1.50 ERA and one save this season.

Sanchez wrestles in pain but often inflicts it as well

By LORENZO SIERRA Jr.
State Press

No pain, no gain. It looks good on posters with men and women who have perfect bodies. To actually live those words takes a different type of human. Wrestlers fall into the "NP,NG" mode of athlete. At ASU, the entire team falls into the category, as nearly all the wrestlers have wrestled with pain this season.

One wrestler in particular wrestled with pain and won his first Pac-10 title.

Sophomore Marco Sanchez won the 134-pound title at the Pac-10 Championship Feb. 24 in Palo Alto, Calif., even though he was suffering with rib problems.

The one thing that sets Sanchez apart from most though is that he enjoyed wrestling in pain.

"To me, pain drives me," Sanchez said. "I think pain is a threshold some people can't get through and I can. That's how I've been able to survive in this game."

One person who has taken notice of Sanchez's will to wrestle in pain is 17-year coach Bobby Douglas.

"He is a remarkable individual as far as pain tolerance," Douglas said.

Apparently, Sanchez drove his pain all the way to the conference championship match where he survived against Oregon's Scott Glenn.

After regulation time expired, Sanchez and Glenn were tied at 1-1. When the match went into overtime, Sanchez said he knew he had his opponent beat.

"I was up and ready to go," Sanchez said. The match ended when Sanchez scored a controversial takedown 1:59 into the overtime period. Both wrestlers were at the edge of the mat and had pulled up. The referee never stopped action when Sanchez took advantage of the situation.

"A lot of wrestlers relax when they see the edge of the mat, that's what the guy from Oregon did," Sanchez said. "He stopped. I stopped for a second, but it's a good thing I got back on the ball before he did."

"I was going to take him out anyhow. He was getting bad position."

With his victory, Sanchez won an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament. At the NCAA championships, Sanchez plans to take his intensity to another level.

"I'm shooting to win it," Sanchez said. "In high school, I did the same thing. There's no reason why I shouldn't do it now."

Sanchez's self-set goals would be high for any collegiate wrestler, but for Sanchez, wrestling is a sport that found him.

As a youth in San Jose, Calif., Sanchez oriented himself with some of the "mean" kids in his area.

"I was a problem child," Sanchez said. "I used to hang out with these guys and we used to cause trouble."

One reason Sanchez found himself in that situation was the effects of his mother's death when he was 12.

"When my mom died, it set me off in a tangent," Sanchez said. "I went on a mission just to get my mind off of it."

Sanchez was persuaded to join wrestling when he was in the eighth grade because the coach told him it was a way to get into a legal fight.

His roots on San Jose's streets have helped Sanchez get through some tough times as a Sun Devil.

"When I get down on myself in the course of a match or if the intensity of the match is picking up, I remind myself who I am and what I've done to get here," Sanchez said. "I remind myself there's no way this person has done more than I have and been through the stuff I have to get to this point."

The other way Sanchez picks himself up is in his usual, painful way. Sanchez, who wears braces, removes his mouthpiece. Eventually, he gets hit in the mouth and begins to bleed. From there on, there is no question about his intensity.

"If I have a hard time getting fired up for a match or I feel I'm not at the intensity I need to be at, I take out my mouthpiece," Sanchez said. "I taste my own blood — and that's it."

Sanchez is ranked 11th nationally in the 134-pound division.

ASU distance runners among achievers during weekend

By MARTY MURPHY
State Press

ASU's track team was going in different directions this weekend as the indoor track season wined down and the outdoor began.

The outdoor season began with a bang on Saturday at Sun Angel Stadium with the Sun Devil All-Comers meet.

The meet was minus the Sun Devils that had already qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championships on March 8 and 9 in Indianapolis.

Because sprinters make up the bulk of ASU's Indoor Championship team, Sun Devil coach Tom Jones decided to let them sit out.

"Anyone who has qualified won't run before the NCs or the Pac-10s," Jones said. "I don't want to risk an injury."

That left a team that was primarily distance-oriented in the non-scoring open meet.

Juniors Erik Walbot and Tony Hernandez put up some good marks in the men's 800 meters. Walbot was clocked at 1:51.29 and Hernandez had a 1:55.69, running in different heats.

"The times were very encouraging for this time of the season," Cordell said. "The whole team ran well."

In the field events, ASU freshman Charlie Cohen threw the javelin 232.3 inches to meet an NCAA provisional mark.

Junior Susan Abramsen was fourth in the shot put with a throw of 42-feet-1½ inches.

Meanwhile, at the Texas Tech Chance meet in Lubbock, four Sun Devils were trying to improve on personal bests in order to solidify NCAA chances.

Freshman Nick Hysong pole vaulted 17-feet-4½ inches, short of his previous best of 17-feet-6½, while freshman Lenny McGill was unable to improve on his triple jump mark enough to qualify for indoors.

Juniors La Shawn Simmons and Tesra Bester qualified automatically in the long jump with leaps of 21-feet-11 and 20-feet-8½, respectively.

"They had a heck of a meet," Jones said.

marks in the men's 800 meters. Walbot was clocked at 1:51.29 and Hernandez had a 1:55.69, running in different heats.

In the 1,500 meters, junior Todd Lewis ran a blazing 3:50.45 to finish first in the event. Sophomore Chris Guinnip was fourth in his heat with a time of 4:00.29. Hernandez posted a 4:00.58.

In the 3,000-meter steeplechase, sophomore Dave Harkin finished second with a 9:22.69 and sophomore Troy McKay was fourth with a 9:31.24.

The women distance runners also put up some good numbers.

Freshman Kim Toney ran a 2:10.47 in the 800 meters, finishing first. Sophomore Trish Huffmaster was second to Toney at 2:19.96.

Sophomore Kelly Cordell placed second to former Sun Devil Teresa Barrios-Scott, who ran a 9:50.49, four seconds ahead of Cordell. Sophomore Shannon McKay was fourth with a 10:23.4.

Tennis holds high hopes after indoor meet

By DARREN URBAN
State Press

The ASU women's tennis team now knows where it stands. After finishing in a tie for 13th in the USTA/ITCA National Indoor Championship this weekend in Madison, Wis., Sun Devil coach Sheila McInerney said her squad can challenge for as high as fifth in the nation with consistent play.

"I feel pretty good from an overall standpoint," McInerney said. "The kids know what is ahead of them. There is no clear-cut No. 5 team and there's no reason why over the next couple of weeks we can't have a shot at it."

ASU, which lost 6-0 to No. 2 Florida in the first round, dropped a 5-2 second-round decision to No. 11 Pepperdine before defeating No. 14 San Diego 5-3.

The Sun Devils (8-5 overall, 2-2 Pac-10) have now lost to the top three teams in the nation this season: the Gators (10-0),

No. 1 Stanford (8-1) and No. 3 UCLA (5-4).

"We have to play very, very well on our schedule to win," McInerney said.

However, McInerney said the 1-2 tourney mark produced some positive results, especially considering that Florida went on to smother the Cardinal 6-0 in the tournament final, breaking Stanford's 72-match win streak.

"I thought the kids played good against San Diego," McInerney said. "I felt we could have played better, but you're not going to get a tougher draw than Florida. It lets us know where we are."

McInerney added that the Gators' win over the Cardinal was inspirational for ASU.

"Playing that kind of competition rubs off on the kids," McInerney said. "It lets them know that no team is unbeatable."

The Sun Devils have encountered their share of injuries so far this season, but McInerney said once the team is complete she is confident of their chances.

"If we're healthy we can play with anyone," McInerney said. "We have three excellent doubles teams, and then all we need to get is two or three singles wins."

Seniors Karen Bergan and Barbara Thompson sat out the tourney for ASU. While Thompson should be back in the next match, Bergan, whose original diagnosis of bruised ribs is now feared to be cracked ribs, will be out longer than originally anticipated.

"Karen's going to be out a while," McInerney said. "We're going to have to pull together. The good thing is that everyone is getting a chance to play."

Sun Devil women's golf places 13th at Josten's Invitational

By AMY SLADE
State Press

After a shaky 13th-place finish over the weekend at the Josten's Invitational, ASU women's golf coach Linda Vollstedt said her team will have to put everything else in its life on hold to prepare for their next trip.

The Sun Devils will compete in the Besty Rawls Invitational in Austin, Texas March 15-17. It is the last tournament before ASU returns to Karsten Golf Course for its lone home match in early April.

"We will have to practice hard all next week in order to prepare us for next weekend," Vollstedt said. "We just didn't play well (at Josten's) because we weren't ready for the weather or their course."

Vollstedt said the weather last weekend was miserable, which made the course extremely difficult to play. She added that the entire field of 15 teams had much higher scores than normal due to the conditions.

The tournament was made official after two rounds of play because of continuing rain and will stand as a 36-hole event.

"We wanted to play the third round, but after three or four holes it was raining too hard," Vollstedt said. "We knew how to play with the conditions (by the third day) and there were a lot of teams we could have beat."

The No. 24 Sun Devils entered the second day in 15th place and shot a team score of 329, improving by 21 strokes from their previous-day total to finish 13th.

Team host San Jose State took first-place honors with a two-day total of 626, 14 shots ahead of second-place Stanford. The Spartans also had top individual performances by Pat Hurst, who took medalist honors with a two-round score of eight-over-par 152. SJSU's Tracy Hanson finished second with 156.

"San Jose State should have won and they did," Vollstedt said. "Stanford also plays the course a lot, so they are used to it."

Individually for ASU, Vollstedt said she was pleased with sophomore Tricia Konz, who was the top Sun Devil golfer. Konz finished in a tie for 21st by shooting an eight-over 80 on the second day for a two-round total of 19-over 163.

ASU junior Lynne Mikulas improved by eight shots from the first round with a second-day score of 80 for a two-day total of 168.

Although Vollstedt said the weather was a factor in the team's performance, she said ASU's biggest problems were its mental preparation and handling of the conditions.

Racquetball club places 4th

From staff reports
The ASU racquetball club took fourth place overall on the strength of a second-place finish from its men's team at the 1991 Rocky Mountain Region Racquetball Tournament in Provo, Utah.
On the campus of BYU, the men had five singles players wind up in either third or fourth place in their respective divisions. Senior captain Tony Pond took third in Division 2 while junior Jason Small was third in Division 3. Junior Sam Tanielian (fourth place in Division 4), junior Bret Burgholzer (fourth place in Division 5) and senior Rusty Taylor (third place in Division 6) also competed in singles.

ASU's Division 1 doubles team of Tanielian and junior Eric Henderson took second in their level while Pond and Small teamed for second-place honors in Division 2. In Division 3, Burgholzer and Taylor place third.
Meanwhile, two ASU women helped the club's cause by taking two third-place performances. Senior Eileen Dwyer got hers in Division 2 while sophomore Sandy Davis placed in Division 3.

FOR WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6, 1991

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Errors in judgment could occur now about pleasure pursuits. In business, aspirations must be kept realistic. You're shrewd, however, where financial interests are concerned. TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Spending could get out of hand for those who travel now. Shoppers should be wary today. A better understanding is reached with a close tie. Club activities are a plus. GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Someone may not follow through on a commitment. It's not a time to take financial risks. Circumstances turn to your advantage in business. CAPITALIZE on opportunity. CANCER (June 21 to July 22) You should get more than one estimate on repairs. Feelings could get out of control now. Guard against obsessions. Judgment is good about a child's interests. LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22) Intentions mean well but you may lack follow-through. Be sure to be persistent in your efforts in business. You make important decisions now about family and investments. VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22) Carry out your promises made to others. Some confusion exists today about a business concern. Partnerships are highlighted late in the day. Accent togetherness. LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Friends could prove to be a distracting influence early in the day. Plans may not yet be settled about travel. Sharp thinking leads to financial gains in business. SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Try not to go overboard in the use of credit today. You may be hearing some big talk in business now. Thinking is on target when it comes to creative and intellectual endeavors. SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Try to be on time for appointments today. A shrewd eye is needed for financial transactions and shopping now. Mental interests and home-based activities are highlighted. CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19) You have high ideals today but they may be difficult to execute. Daydreaming and distraction may interfere with career progress. Gains come through social life. AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18) Escapist tendencies need watching today. Be down to earth in romance. Those who apply themselves now will end this day with career and financial gains. PISCES (Feb. 19 to Mar. 20) There may be a tendency to let things slide now. Be mindful of details in connection with work. Friends could overstay their welcome. Cultural pursuits bring joy. YOU BORN TODAY work well with groups and have a willingness to accept responsibility. You're universally minded in your outlook towards life and have a genuine concern for the welfare of others. You have a strong imagination and naturally gravitate towards the creative arts. Writing, music, painting, and businesses allied to the arts often appeal to you. Birthdate of Robert "Lefty" Grove, baseball player; Carmen de Lavallade, dancer; and Elizabeth Barrett Browning, poet.
