Committee names provost finalists

By JENNIFER FRANKLIN
State Press

ASU's provost search committee named four finalists Wednesday for ASU's No. 2 administrative position.

The finalists for the position of senior vice president and provost are Milton D. Glick, interim president and provost of Iowa State University; Ross D. MacKinnon, dean of the faculty of social sciences at State University New York at Buffalo; James C. Moeser, dean of the College of Arts and Architecture at Pennsylvania State University; and Anya P. Royce, vice chancellor for academic affairs, dean of faculties and academic advisor to the president of the eight-campus Indiana University system.

The committee, which began meeting in December, reviewed the applications and nominations of nearly 200 people before arriving at the list of finalists, said Mort Munk, chairman of the search committee.

"We're very happy with the candidates and their qualifications," he said.

Each of the candidates will visit the campus for interviews and meet with students, faculty and staff in public forums.

Royce, the only woman finalist, will meet with faculty and academic professionals from 3 to 4 p.m. and with students and staff from 4 to 5 p.m. on April 26 in the MU Pima Room.

Moeser will meet with faculty and staff on April 27 in the MU Pima Room.

Budget cuts come under stiff ASU West opposition

By KEN BROWN
State Press

About 150 students, administrators and Valley residents gathered at ASU West Wednesday to convince legislators that a hard battle must be fought against Gov. Fife Symington's proposed cuts to the branch campus.

"To cut money from ASU West would be cutting off your nose to spite your face," said 22-year-old Patricia Herbert, a junior English major. "What we get from this campus we give back to the community."

Four members of the Senate Education Committee scheduled last night's meeting to field input on the proposed budget cuts from the public.

Symington's budget draft, which is expected to pass the House of Representatives today with virtually no changes, recommends more than $3 million in funding cuts for ASU West.

Lawmakers expect some Democratic opposition to Symington's budget in the Senate, but most changes are anticipated when the budget draft enters conference committee discussion. Symington has requested to take part in the discussions, offering his own office as a meeting place.

In a report distributed at the campus meeting, ASU West officials said the cuts would result in a hiring freeze, the closure of the Sundome Center for the Performing Arts, elimination of the school's nursing program and layoffs in student services personnel.

A proposal by the Joint Legislative Budget Committee, which will be considered alongside the governor's draft in budget talks, recommends nearly $2 million more than last year's legislative

International students want to be recognized as fifth minority

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

International students seeking formal recognition as ASU's fifth minority will present a petition to the Cultural Diversity Committee April 30, in hopes of being represented on the University's Multicultural Awareness Board.

"International students have special needs, and those needs have not been addressed," said Alex Bouzari, senator-elect for the College of Business.

But a minority representative said the four coalitions existing within the MCAB adequately represent international students.

"Most international students come under either Asian or the Hispanic constituency," said Michael Lane, an acting representative for Native Americans and a former MCAB member.

"Constituency (within the MCAB) is based on culture, and they should fit within those major categories."

The MCAB serves as a communicative link between campus minority groups and student government. It also distributes money provided by ASASU to fund cultural diversity events. University-defined minority groups include Native Americans, blacks, Asians and hispanics.

Bouzari, former chairman of the International Student Council, said if the CDC endorses international students as a fifth minority, he will apply for international student representation on the Associated Students of ASU's MCAB.

'International students have special needs, and those needs have not been addressed.'

— Alex Bouzari

"The MCAB has a lot of advantages that we need," Bouzari said, citing a financial link to minority students as an example.

Mary Charette, program coordinator for the CDC, said she supports Bouzari's plans to increase international student involvement.

"I know that international students make up a large percentage of our enrollment population, and they don't have the resources available to them as do other students," Charette said. "They don't understand that they can participate in political and social activities, and there hasn't been an effort to increase their involvement."

But Leon Shell, associate vice president for Student Affairs, said he is not certain that placing an international student on the MCAB is the best way to increase international student representation.

"I think there's a legitimate concern for the further representation of international students, but I'm not sure if the MCAB is the proper vehicle to do that," Shell said.

"That's for (ASASU) to decide."

MCAB Director Melissa Lopez said this is the first time she has heard about Bouzari's petition but agreed that "international students are underrepresented."

But, because MCAB follows the University's definition of "minority," she said it is questionable whether an international representative could be a voting member of the board.

Lopez added that "the MCAB and diversity coalitions would be willing to help international students anyway they can" in order to ensure adequate representation.

Governor gives pep talk to Republicans

PHOENIX (AP) — Gov. Fife Symington gave House Republicans a brief pep talk Wednesday, urging them to "hang tough" in the face of Democratic opposition to his budget, which is scheduled for a House vote on Thursday.

The House, meanwhile, passed bills that would replace an unpopular environmental tax with a fee paid by retailers and change the law to allow a major Scottish distiller and brewer to operate a resort in Arizona.

Symington, who met Tuesday with Senate Democrats to explain his decision not to request additional mental-health funding next year, thanked House Republicans for supporting his budget plan.

Speaker Jane Hull, R-Phoenix, plans to take the Symington budget to the floor on Thursday and says she intends for it to pass without amendments.

"Your action will put my budget in a good negotiating position," Symington said. "I realize some flexibility is called for, but this will put it in a strong position."

Symington said it was his understanding that minority Democrats would offer a number of "potentially embarrassing" amendments to the budget and urged the Republicans to stand their ground and to pass the budget intact.

The House voted 50-3 to replace the so-called "Drano tax" on hazardous products such as motor oil, drain cleaners and paint thinners with a $10 annual fee paid by virtually all retailers in the state.

The 8½ percent tax on the wholesale price of hazardous products was enacted by the Legislature last year. It was meant to be a major source of funding for the state's Water Quality Assurance Fund, or "Superfund," which would pay for the cleanup of hazardous-material spills and other threats to drinking water supplies.

The tax is to take effect July 1, but it has been criticized by retailers who say it would be difficult to collect and expensive to administer.

The $10 fee would permit retailers to sell or use any of the dozens of hazardous products listed in the legislation.

"It would include virtually anybody who has a transaction privilege (sales tax) license," said Rep. Herb Guenther D-Tacna, the chief sponsor of the measure.

He said an estimated 312,000 permits would be issued, which would raise about $3 million for the Superfund.

The measure was amended to require the Department of Environmental Quality to conduct a study of major users of hazardous products who would escape paying the fee because they are not retailers. It also would require the Department of Revenue to study ways of collecting fees from those users.

The bill (SB1170) now goes back to the Senate for concurrence with House amendments.

The liquor bill (SB1435) would provide a way around a state law that prohibits a producer of alcoholic beverages from operating a retail liquor business in Arizona.

Under the legislation, a company that produces liquor could own a resort where alcohol is sold, so long as the facility has at least 550 guest rooms, swimming and tennis facilities and a golf course.

The resort also would have to be built and licensed between the time the bill takes effect and the end of 1996. The company also would have to buy its liquor from a wholesaler with no direct interest in the property and contract with a third party to run its retail liquor operations.

It is intended to allow Guinness Enterprises, the Scottish company that makes Guinness liquors and publishes the Guinness Book of World Records to build a resort somewhere in the Phoenix area. The exact location has not been disclosed.

The bill passed the House 42-10 and now goes to the Senate.

Kromko voted against the bill, which he said is "special legislation" aimed at a particular company and location.

Nationwide walkout idles train tracks

Freight trains ground to a halt Wednesday in the first nationwide railroad strike in nearly a decade, halting rail shipping of everything from coal to car parts and interfering with most Amtrak trains and some commuter services.

"Anyone out there want to give me a lift to New York? I'm at the railway station," said Australian tourist James Veel, who was stranded at Raleigh, N.C.

In El Segundo, Calif., a freight train blocked an intersection for nearly 30 minutes after its crew stopped the train and walked away, police said.

Congress and the Bush administration sought a quick end to the strike, with talks focusing on a cooling-off period that would allow a new emergency board to make recommendations for settlement on a contract to replace one that expired in 1988.

Freight carriers and unions scheduled no new talks after last-ditch bargaining failed to produce a settlement before the midnight Tuesday expiration of an initial cooling-off period. The strike waged by eight unions and honored by three others against 10 companies, started at 7 a.m.

The strike by 235,000 rail workers over wages, work rules and health care costs could also idle as many as a half-million non-railroad workers.

"Three years without a contract is long enough," said Jim Davis, a coach repairer for Norfolk Southern in Roanoke, Va.

"If they can give management anywhere from $20,000 to $100,000 bonuses why can't they give us something?" said Richard Zietler, a Conrail accountant in Philadelphia.

Earlier this week, the Bush administration said Congress should enact legislation to stop the strike and force the unions to accept the recommendations of a presidential emergency board that issued a report in January.

In Lincoln, Neb., state Sen. Spence Morrissey, a Burlington Northern track inspector, said the strikers believe the emergency board's recommendations are far from a compromise.

"They represent to us what is a 30 percent cut in real wages

'80s prosperity, income growth benefits East Coast

WASHINGTON (AP) — People living along the East Coast enjoyed the fastest income growth during the record prosperity of the 1980s, the Commerce Department said Wednesday.

At the top of the list were residents of New Jersey, whose per capita incomes jumped an average 8.0 percent annually, to $24,968, between 1980 and 1990, according to a study by the department's Bureau of Economic Analysis. The national average was 6.5 percent annual growth, to $18,685, for the decade.

Other top growth states, during the longest peacetime economic expansion in U.S. history, were Massachusetts, up an average 7.9 percent each year to $22,642; and New Hampshire, up 7.8 percent to $20,789.

Tied for fourth place, with 7.7 percent annual growth, were Connecticut, at $25,358, and Maine, $17,200.

Wyoming, whose per capita income growth averaged just 3.8 percent annually, to $16,398, was at the bottom of the list. Just above it were Alaska, up 4.6 percent each year to $21,761; Oklahoma, up 5.1 percent to $15,444; and Louisiana, up 5.2 percent to $14,391.

Per capita income is the annual total personal income divided by the resident population.

Despite topping the growth list for the last decade, residents of New Jersey were not the wealthiest people in the nation as the 1990s began. That distinction went to those living in Connecticut, who had a per capita income totaling $25,358.

New Jersey was No. 2, followed by Massachusetts, $22,642; New York, $21,975, and Maryland, $21,864.

The next five were Alaska, $21,761; California, 20,795; New Hampshire, $20,789;

Gorbachev's plea for investment gets icy reception in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's elite toasted and cheered Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Wednesday, but turned a cold shoulder to the Soviet leader's frank plea for aid and investment as talks failed to resolve a territorial dispute.

Gorbachev, in a speech to parliament, urged Japan to join the "new spirit in Soviet-U.S. relations" that began with the end of the Cold War and promised that the Soviet Union would never attack Japan.

He also claimed broad Soviet military reductions in Asia and said he did not intend to interfere with Japan's most important relationship, its security treaty with America.

Yet midway through Gorbachev's historic four-day visit, deep-seated Japanese doubts about their giant Soviet neighbor and its economic stability were proving more difficult to overcome than Cold War hostility.

Accompanied by his wife, Raisa, the 60-year-old Soviet president entered the wood-paneled main chamber of the Diet, or parliament, to a standing ovation. He received another when he finished speaking 45 minutes later.

In his most plain-spoken request to date for foreign aid,

Gorbachev warned that "the development of a new peaceful world order will largely depend on the outcome of perestroika. ... We are counting on support for our efforts, particularly now as we go through this critical stage."

"If we let the new social processes get out of hand, the country may really be thrown into the chaos that gives birth to dictatorship," he said in a speech interrupted seven times by applause.

At a luncheon meeting earlier, Gorbachev was blunter

U.S. analysts: Saddam has strengthened grip on power

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite President Bush's desire to see Saddam Hussein toppled or exiled, U.S. government analysts say the Iraqi president has strengthened his grip on power since the war's end by snuffing out two major revolts.

Bush and his administration had fanned the flames of rebellion by urging the Iraqi people to rid themselves of Saddam. With the failure of the Shiite and Kurdish revolts, the administration is looking to senior military officers or leaders of his ruling Socialist Baath Party to remove Saddam.

"But it's a long shot," said one government analyst who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

This analyst said the administration has a "kind of pious hope that those surrounding" Saddam would get rid of him when they realized the ruin he has brought on his once-prosperous country.

But the catch is that those in the best position to remove Saddam are also the ones probably most loyal to him, having survived numerous purges to weed out any real or imagined opposition, he said.

"Saddam's domestic position has improved greatly with the regime's victory in the last month," said another analyst with access to information about Iraqi politics.

"He does face enormous long-term problems and threats," he added.

Government planners are also hoping that these problems — namely Iraq's economic ruin — will make it impossible for the Iraqi leader to recover and will hasten his political demise.

For now, the administration is stymied. "Much of its thinking is wishful," said one government analyst.

Asked by reporters on Tuesday whether Saddam was any closer now to leaving power, Bush answered, "I would think so, but I can't prove it."

Reflecting his frustration, Bush said he might consider granting safe passage to the Iraqi leader if Saddam agreed to relinquish power and leave Iraq. But Bush also said he

BOOS & BRAVOS

Boo to defeated executive vice president candidate, Adrian Fontes. Fontes recently filed two complaints alleging questionable campaign violations against Executive Vice President-elect Christian Hagedorn. Adrian, don't be a loser. Take it all.

A bellowing, ballyhooing boo to Gov. Fife Symington for his pitiful allotment toward education in the newly-announced budget plan. Officials originally feared the worst possible education scenario would come from the legislative staff. But Symington, who ran on a campaign platform that boasted "top priority" education, made initial proposals seem light. He hacked the education budget beyond repair while fattening the state's tourism department.

Bravo to ASU's provost search committee for finally coming up with a list of four finalists for the long unfilled No. 2 administrative position.

Bravo to the ASU Master Plan Committee for making a sincere effort to include students and surrounding neighborhood associations in the planning process for University growth.

Boo to Associated Students of ASU President Matt Ortega for contradicting himself. Ortega criticized a student (who was rejected by the student regent selection committee) for having a "poor-sport attitude" when the rejected candidate personally delivered his own resume to the governor's office. Earlier that same week, Ortega wrote a letter to Symington, endorsing Rob Miller (another selection committee reject) for the same spot.

"Go back to sleep, Adrian. Elections are over."

News, gossip hard to distinguish between

Ellen Goodman
Washington Post Writer's Group

BOSTON — Did Teddy Kennedy Have Anything On Underneath His Oxford Shirt? Did Nancy Reagan Have An Affair With Frank Sinatra In The White House? Do I Have Your Attention Yet? Gossip and news. News or gossip? Not even my dictionary makes a very helpful distinction. Gossip is mildly defined as "the casual talk about other people's affairs." News is staidly described as "information about recent events." Tell me where one ends and the other begins, and I'll make you editor. This week, the Kurds are dying in the Middle East while the headlines are focused on whether it was a rape or a romp at the

Kennedy Compound in Palm Beach. The hole in the ozone has grown while the lead story says that Nancy recycled presents. Unemployment has grown to 6.8 percent while Julia Phillips' down-and-dirty book about Hollywood is the No. 1 best-seller. And before any of us get too self-righteous, I give you the words of my neighbor, a think-tank type who downed an entire page of Kennedy copy with his morning coffee and told me: "I regret to say that I read every word." That just about sums up everyone's ambivalence about gossip-news. Love to read it. Hate to have read it. Inhale the dirty details. Exhale criticism of the reporters who write them. Ivana Trump, Gary Hart, Elizabeth Taylor. In the global village, there is an odd parity between celebrities of every stripe from Washington to Hollywood. They are our neighbors and we want to know them. National Enquirer aside, how should a reputable newspaper cover the rich, famous and occasionally infamous?

This is the sort of question that editors actually worry over when we get together, as we are doing this week in Boston at the American Society of Newspaper Editors convention. The best part of talking about coverage is that it gives us a wonderful opportunity to repeat all the juicy details without being caught gossiping. Is it news when the nephew of Sen. Kennedy, William Smith, is named as a rape suspect? Absolutely. Is it news when someone says they saw a naked woman with long hair walk into the water at their beach? Uh. Do we have the right to know if Nancy, not Ronnie was running the country? Yup. Do we have the right to know if Nancy's mother loved bathroom jokes, or if her husband was stepping out on her the night Patti was born? Well. . . . We come up with all sorts of excuses for reporting information that is something between scandalous and scurrilous. We can write and read about sex and sleaze while under the guise of character and governing.

Kitty Kelley herself, author of the Nancy Reagan book, which came Federal Express for immediate publicity, once won an award for "cultural" reporting. Her hatchet still carries samples of blood from other victims, including Jacqueline Onassis. But this time, she justifies her work as investigative journalism: "It goes to the heart and soul of hypocrisy." So does that comment. Whether newspapers run Kelley's reporting or our own, we salve our conscience by debating the journalistic "standards" of gossip-news. Do you have two sources on Teddy's undies or lack thereof? Did Kitty lift quotes from her book on Frank? Can Julia Phillips prove that Warren Beatty is "priapic"? These sometimes ludicrous standards are ways that we attempt to responsibly report the irresponsible. After all, in West Africa there is a tribe called the Ashanti that cuts off the lips of members caught gossiping about the chief. But here we have to figure it out on our own.

Warts and all, Kelley's book shows famous flawed

Cody Shearer
North American Syndicate

WASHINGTON — I felt a bit virtuous last week when Kitty Kelley's shameful and sloppy book on Nancy Reagan hit the bookstores. Ms. Kelley had called me on several occasions in recent years to have lunch with her in order to lay out some of my stories about the Reagans, since our families grew up near one another in Pacific Palisades, Calif., though we were not close friends by any means. Every time she'd call I'd refuse her request, and even those from persistent mutual friends who called on her behalf. I turned Kitty Kelley down, not because I'm an unfriendly person. I make a point of always trying to help colleagues. It's just that my past experiences with Kitty Kelley led me to believe that she was less than trustworthy. In a way, she and Nancy Reagan are quite similar. They are both unscrupulous, ambitious and ruthless. This is an important fact to know when reviewing Kelley's slimy opus, because it leads one to believe that none of Mrs. Reagan's inner circle of friends would have ever confided in Kitty Kelley, given her background. You never trust anyone you don't feel good about and Kelley is that kind of person. My hunch is that Kelley only interviewed low-level characters, who didn't know that much about the real Nancy Reagan, which explains why the book is full of unsubstantiated allegations and innumerable acts of guilt by association. Many of Kelley's claims would never have made it past a city editor on a small suburban newspaper. Kelley's suggestion that Nancy Reagan and Frank Sinatra were getting it on upstairs in the family quarters of the White House is not proven. Though the book says staffers snuck Frank Sinatra upstairs when President Reagan was out of town and would hold her phone calls, that doesn't mean anything. Did Kelley ever interview two or three of

Mrs. Reagan's closest friends who described Mr. Sinatra's performance in bed? Of course not. That is what Kelley needed to prove her point and she didn't get it. In this case, she and Simon and Schuster ought to be ashamed of themselves. No one can miss the bottom line in Kelley's book. Nancy Reagan and her husband were a bunch of conniving, social-climbing hypocrites, without any deep-seated convictions. As a case in point, Kelley repeatedly emphasizes how cheap Nancy Reagan was. This is nothing new. All Kelley had to do was travel to the Brentwood Mart in West Los Angeles and interview the butchers in the meat department. They would have told her that Mrs. Regan routinely asked for discounts and free food when she was the governor's wife. I suspect she did this because she felt insecure about not having as much money as her Rodeo Drive friends in Beverly Hills. Moreover, Kelley makes no mention of the fact that Nancy Reagan often solicited other friend's clothing for her husband. Her technique was to come up to someone at a party and comment on what a wonderful tie, belt or shirt they were wearing. She'd then say something to the effect that Ronnie would love one of those. Whereupon her flattered friend would take off whatever they were wearing and offer it to her husband as a gift. What's important is that Mrs. Reagan acted as a freeloader while her husband traveled around the country giving speeches about welfare chiselers. In good conscience, how could Ronald Reagan attack welfare cheats when his wife was hustling everyone in Los Angeles? So what if Nancy Reagan happened to be tight with a dollar, does that change Ronald Reagan's place in history as one who helped end the cold war? How are these facts related to one another? While Kelley emphasizes that Nancy Reagan ran the country for eight years, she completely overlooks why the former first lady persuaded her husband to break bread with the Russians. Nancy Reagan did this, according to close family friends, because she wanted to prove to daughter Patti in a spiteful manner that Ronnie wasn't an out-of-touch, fascist warmonger like Patti always believed. By maneuvering her husband to the negotiating table with the Russians, in response to their initial overtures, Mrs. Reagan played a critical role in U. S. history. Who knows if Kelley ever learned of Nancy's true motivation? It may not matter to her since she received $4 million advance from Simon and Schuster, which encouraged her to insert every negative anecdote she'd ever heard about Nancy Reagan in her book. Unfortunately, unless you're acquainted with the Reagans, one doesn't know what to believe. I know Nancy Reagan's manipulative, heavy-handed ways, but I doubt she ever helped her daughter obtain an abortion, as Kelley contends. There's no question Mrs. Reagan was obsessive about her children, to a fault. During Parents Weekend at Yale University in fall 1976, for example, she and Ronnie had gone out to dinner with their freshman son to get a pizza when the threesome happened to encounter some of young Ron's drunken roommates on campus. Being Parents Weekend, Ron introduced his roommates. At which point, one of the more intoxicated ones in the group happened to vomit at Mr. and Mrs. Reagan's feet. Mr. Reagan tried to comfort the embarrassed young man and did so by telling him he also used to do the same thing "all the time." But Mrs. Reagan was horrified and eventually tried to convince young Ron to move into another college at Yale. Regardless of all the failings and omissions in Kelley's book, there is value in some of her reporting, such as President Reagan paying for an abortion in the 50s, because it underscores what an inadequate job most national political reporters do in covering politicians. Too many areas of import are off limits. It's unfortunate Kelley never had the guts to reveal some of what she learned in a magazine article years before, when the American people really needed to know more. At a time when public figures spend so much effort and money portraying themselves as something they are not, a view from second-level staffers, however imprecise, provides an important reminder that famous people are flawed humans too. Kelley has done just that, warts and all.

Don't take it personally

Editor:
I recently observed "Lattie's Dog" come under fire again. The letters all have different authors, but the underlying theme is the same: the State Press should discontinue publishing the feature because the cartoon is rude, insulting, profane, childish, immature, juvenile, moronic, racist, etc. Furthermore, some people believe that it promotes date rape and alcoholism.

Hey people! Wake up!
I'll be the first to admit the subject matter of "Lattie's Dog" is not always the purest in nature. But if you happen to be one of the people taking offense to Ford M.'s idea of humor, that's too bad. Maybe if you kept quiet, he might switch to a different target for laughs. But by continually whining and sniveling, you will only get pummeled further. The main purpose is to make the readers laugh. Periodically, some person or group is going to be at the short end of the stick. Don't take it personally.

Lastly, for those of you who think "Lattie's Dog" should be discontinued because it's gross or disgusting, take a look at "The Far Side." In all my time here, I have yet to see one complaint about Gary Larson. Most would agree his idea of humor is far more disgusting than Ford M.'s, but it's funny nevertheless. Take the cartoon for its face value — a cartoon to make people laugh or get a chuckle. If you want something wholesome and pure, read the Christian Science Monitor.

So the next time you read "Lattie's Dog," and you find yourself so completely outraged that you can't see straight, just relax. If that doesn't work, quit reading the comic section.

Bogus bill

Editor:
Currently, during the annual charity campaign, each state employee receives a booklet which provides information about various charities. Most of the listed charities are affiliated with the United Way, but many are not.

There is a bill in the state Legislature, Senate Bill 1433, which proposes to change the law to allow the Board of Regents to provide a different list to University employees. The regents plan to list only United Way affiliated charities.

This means that the Nature Conservancy, UNICEF, NAACP, the Sierra Club and Planned Parenthood plus many other groups that don't quite fit the United Way mold will be left off the University list.

SB 1433 has already passed the Senate (with considerable lobbying by the United Way charities). I urge everyone to call their state representative today and voice their opposition to SB 1433. The toll-free number for the Legislature is 1-800-352-8404.

Not a laughing matter

Editor:
I know you receive many comments, both pro and con, about "Lattie's Dog," and I usually don't have much of an opinion one way or the other. How to Raise Finals Scores in Monday's State Press was "cute." However, Tuesday's strip was beyond anything even resembling a mere hint of humor.

I don't know if Mr. Ford M. has the slightest inkling of how many bomb threats the University receives over the course of one year, but in our college alone, threats are numerous. This is not a laughing matter. It poses a very real terror in the lives of those people working in the buildings on campus as well as disrupting the business of the University (namely teaching students). I would hope that the State Press would take some responsibility in what it allows to be printed (at least to insure the safety and well-being of the students, faculty and staff).

Free speech guaranteed

Editor:
In response to the article in the State Press about the ASU Review, and in response to the first issue of the Review itself, I write to correct a few misinterpretations that both may have created.

First, the Campus Environment Team (CET) has not recently broadened the code of conduct. At the recommendation of a separate study committee, the president adopted an anti-harassment code last May, before the CET was appointed.

Second, one of the first acts of the newly appointed CET was the drafting and recommendation of a set of interpretive guidelines that ensure that the anti-harassment code would not be applied to infringe upon constitutionally protected speech. I was the principle drafter of those guidelines, and the ACLU and the First Amendment team at a major law firm helped with the final drafts. President Coor heartily supported that effort, and he officially adopted the guidelines as an inseparable part of the anti-harassment policy. Copies of the policy, complete with the interpretive guidelines, are available in the Office of the General Council, ASB 202 or the Office of Equal Opportunity, ASB 113.

Third, President Coor, the CET and student leaders have acted courageously and responsibly this year in encouraging freedom of expression while addressing problems of racial tensions. I have described these efforts in detail in letters to the State Press and to the College of Law student newspaper, the Devil's Advocate. Indeed, a nationally syndicated columnist plans to publish a column within a few weeks praising ASU for distinguishing itself from the many universities that admittedly have adopted a less careful approach to these problems.

The University has not violated free speech rights, and it has no intention of doing so. If it ever does, I hope that the State Press and the Review can bring the problem to the attention of the University community so that we can all react appropriately.

Finally, I welcome the Review to the marketplace of ideas on campus. The CET encourages discussion and debate of challenging issues dealing with nondiscrimination, free speech, multicultural education and political correctness. If any reader desires copies of letters and press releases reflecting the CET's statement on these topics, please send me a note at the College of Law.

A day in the life of Fife includes speeches, luncheons

TERI JANUS
Contributing Writer

It was 6 a.m. on a clear Wednesday morning when the alarm next to Gov. Fife Symington's bed roused him for work.

A conversation Symington had late the night before with the U. S. Ambassador for Kuwait still weighed heavily on his mind as he let the two dogs out and slopped his pet pig, Hampton.

An hour later, the governor was showered and dressed, waiting for his two Department of Public Safety bodyguards to arrive and escort him through the day.

A picture of confidence, Symington looked the part of governor in a neatly pressed navy suit and polished black shoes. While waiting, he reached into his pocket for a tube of chapstick, a ritual he repeated several times throughout the day.

At 7:30 a.m., Symington met for a weekly breakfast with Republican legislators to discuss the week's major state issues.

Almost two hours later, the governor arrived at Sky Harbor Airport's Department of Public Safety office in Phoenix. Symington's mother waited in a DPS car for him. She was meeting a friend in Tucson for the day, but planned to attend her son's appearance at Sahauro Elementary School in Casa Grande.

In the air, the governor and his press secretary, Doug Cole, discussed a letter between two high-ranking national officials. Symington told Cole he wanted to stay out of it.

After the plane landed in Casa Grande at 10 a.m., the governor took a car to Sahauro Elementary School where a second-grade class was awaiting his arrival for a live press conference. The second-graders were the reporters, of course.

The children questioned Symington about his job, his favorite food and his favorite animal. Symington, always smiling, told the children about his pet pig, Hampton.

After the 20-minute conference, the governor called it the best conference of his career and headed to the schoolyard to address 500 students.

At 10:45 a.m., the governor boarded the plane for Tucson, grabbing the second of what will be five meals that day. He said he remained on a campaign diet between bites of tunafish and potato chips.

"I still manage to lose weight," Symington said. "I eat small amounts every time, and I jog three miles every other day."

Arriving in Tucson at 11 a.m., Symington traveled to the Doubletree Inn where Peggy Gitting from KUAT-TV is awaiting his arrival for a taped interview. Gitting questioned him for 15 minutes, then Symington left for a Rotary Club luncheon. On the way to the luncheon, Cole comments that Gitting was pretty tough with her questions. Symington replies, "That's OK, I was fine."

At the 12:15 p.m. luncheon, the palm-pressing and ovations made it difficult to tell Symington had served only five weeks as governor. Symington used the admiration to sell his budget proposal, explaining he needed their support for his budget to succeed.

The governor arrived at his Tucson office for the first time at 2 p.m. to meet with Pima County's tax analyst, Arnold Jeffers.

At 3 p.m., Symington discussed transportation issues with Bob Sundt, H. Wilson Sundt and James McDonald of the Arizona Associated General Contractors Highway Chapter. They met in the Tucson office to express their concerns about the Arizona Department of Transportation. Symington put them at ease.

"Government is a service business, we are serving the public. I hope to serve my customer's better," the governor said, adding that there will be definite change at the Arizona Department of Transportation. He said he was in the process of hiring a new ADOT director.

Symington's Tucson trip ended with a 4 p.m. meeting of the Tucson Airport Authority.

The governor discussed his vision of the future of aviation in Arizona answering questions concerning the introduction of a regional airport in Arizona. The governor compared the Valley's potential situation to Atlanta, where its regional airport created thousands of jobs and billions of dollars for the economy.

At 5:40 p.m., running behind schedule, Symington helped his mother get back onto the plane. He had 30 minutes to discuss education and his proposed budget while the plane headed for Phoenix.

Symington said he does not agree with the figures used by Arizona universities, adding that the universities will lose only .6 percent in general funding, rather than the 3 percent

Fife Symington waits with his mother for a plane at Sky Harbor Airport on his way to speak to a group of elementary students in Casa Grande.

ASU's Budget Director Alan Carroll claims. Symington said his plan is for the university administration to absorb the cuts.

After the flight, Symington kissed his mother good-bye and escorted her to a second DPS car, leaving the airport to attend a 6:15 p.m. dinner at an Arizona Supreme Court justice's house.

His wife, Ann, met him there. He made it home in time for a pillow fight with his son, Thomas, at 10 p.m. It messed up Thomas's room, but it was the only chance Symington had to spend with his son that day.

Symington switched on the news and checked his schedule for the following day.

Finally, the governor could retire for the night.

Tempe may spend $3 million to lure in Angels

By DAVID A. PUNDT
State Press

Tempe officials said it could cost up to $3 million in renovations to lure the California Angels to Diablo Stadium for spring training.

Deputy City Manager Jim Piper, who is handling the negotiations, said that while talks are still in preliminary stages, "it's possible there could be an agreement within 90 days."

"The goals and objectives of both the team and the city are very similar," Piper said, adding that because the Angels have their minor league facilities in Mesa's Gene Autry complex, the city now can concentrate solely on improving Diablo Stadium.

"Exactly what improvements are made depends upon what the architect comes up with," he added.

Talks between Tempe officials and the Seattle Mariners, the current stadium tenants, broke off on March 22, when agreements could not be reached on stadium improvements and a lease renewal. The California Angels said they were ready to negotiate with the city a few days later.

The Mariners' lease runs out at the end of the 1992 Cactus League season, and the team, which has been in Tempe since 1977, is exploring options in Tucson and Florida. If all goes as planned, city officials hope the stadium will be ready for the Angels in the beginning of 1993.

Meanwhile, HOK Inc., a Kansas City, Mo.-based architectural firm, is proposing changes to the stadium that would include relocating team offices and the press box to a second tier above the home plate seating area.

"The stadium is very unique in the way it's constructed in that once inside, you can see the field immediately," said HOK Vice President Earl Santee. "And moving the press box and offices will enhance that even more."

While Tempe did not designate cost parameters for improvements, Santee said HOK suggestions should approach $3 million. Earlier city estimates have ranged from $3 million to $5 million. A new stadium would cost an estimated $7 million to $8 million.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

City Council likely to approve World Cup Soccer bid

The Tempe City Council likely will approve a request today allowing the city to bid for the chance to host the opening rounds of the 1994 World Cup Soccer Tournament at Sun Devil Stadium.

Tempe City Councilman Neil Giuliano said he expects the proposal to pass at tonight's meeting without debate.

"Encouraging World Cup Soccer to come to the Valley is a very appropriate expenditure of city money," he said.

The World Cup Soccer Presentation Committee asked the city for a $1,000 contribution, support in welcoming the games and a banner displayed over Mill Avenue 30 days before the event.

Deputy City Manager Gary Brown said ASU will collect ticket revenues and sales taxes from the event and bill the University for out-of-pocket expenses.

"If the sales taxes collected are less than city expenses for the event, the University would owe the city the difference," Brown said. Officials said ASU would recoup those expenses through contract negotiations with the World Cup Soccer Association.

"That way our taxpayers are assured that city expenses will be covered," Brown said.

Committee Chairman Paul Wiggs, director of economic development for Arizona Public Service, said every Valley community he approached has voiced support for the request.

"Mesa, Litchfield Park, Peoria and Phoenix (city) councils have all pledged to participate," Wiggs said. "Gilbert passed their resolution Tuesday, and Glendale will consider it at their meeting next week."

Wiggs said the committee also intends to go before the Arizona Legislature to ask for a reduction in the 5.5 percent ticket sales tax for the event.

Strike

"They want to take our work rules and change them at will," he said. "These are rules that protect our days off, our hours of service, starting times and other things. These are things that those who have gone before us fought for and won over the past 100 years, and they just want to throw them out the door."

"We want to work," said Glen Trexler, a local union official in Albuquerque, N.M. "We're not out here to be dissidents or anything. We just want to support our families."

There was some scuffling on picket lines in Philadelphia and one man was arrested. But in Kansas City, "everybody is being civil," said Al Mauro, vice president of Kansas City Southern.

Though the striking unions work on freight lines, most Amtrak passenger trains and many commuter trains run on tracks owned by the freight railroads and often rely on their union signalmen, brakemen and other employees.

Some 21,000 commuters who rely on the state-run CalTrain on the San Francisco Peninsula had to find alternate ways to work.

But in Chicago, commuter trains ran on schedule after a court order kept open one railroad's commuter lines. Then three other railroads reached agreements to keep their commuters lines running.

Amtrak's busiest region, the Northeast corridor from over the life of the contract along with decreased health benefits," he said.

Washington to Boston, was not affected because Amtrak owns that track, although some commuter lines outside Washington were shut down.

General Motors Corp., Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. predicted a virtual production shutdown by week's end.

"We anticipate that approximately 75 to 80 percent of our operations will be affected within the next 24 hours and all plants will be affected by the end of the week," GM spokeswoman Karen Longridge said Wednesday.

Manufacturers in Rochester, N.Y., said a prolonged strike could have a disastrous effect.

"If the strike lasts longer than a week to 10 days — two weeks tops — it could put a stranglehold on our economy," said Charles M. Goodwin of the Greater Rochester (N.Y.) Metro Chamber of Commerce.

Eastman Kodak Co. officials said the photography company normally uses trains to deliver 40 percent of its film and products to buyers. It began switching to trucks Tuesday in anticipation of the strike, spokesman Jim Blamphin said.

Farmers also were concerned. "In Minnesota, this is the planting season. There's a great deal of fertilizer moving up to Minnesota from the south right now. The strike does threaten to cut off fertilizer movement," said Minnesota Transportation Commissioner John Riley.

Most coal-burning power plants had big stockpiles.

"With our current coal inventory, it would take a long, long strike to cause problems," said B.J. Smith, a spokeswoman for American Electric Power Service Corp. in Lancaster, Ohio. AEP operates 19 major coal-fired generating plants in seven states.

Former defense secretary supports base closures

By RICHARD RUELAS
State Press

Former Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara called for a 10 percent tax increase and applauded Arizona military base closings in a speech delivered Wednesday.

McNamara, who served under presidents John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson, shared his vision of 21st Century America with about 175 members of the ASU College of Business Economic Club of Phoenix at the Arizona Biltmore.

"If we dare to break out of the mind sets of the past four decades, we can reshape our own society . . . in ways which will lead to a far more peaceful and a far more prosperous world," McNamara said in his speech titled "A Vision for Our Nation in the 21st Century."

The former president of Ford Motor Company and the World Bank Group of Institutions called for "a 10 percent tax increase — on all taxes" during the next 10 years.

He argued that the tax increase would not hurt the economy. "I would phase that in, in a rising economy," he said. "There would be no reduction in consumption."

Acknowledging that tax increases are not popular among voters, McNamara said that solutions to the country's problems "do not come on the cheap."

Sen. Pete Rios, D-Hayden, said, "It took a lot of intestinal fortitude to deliver that type of speech to that type of audience."

Rios said after comparing the United States' tax rate to those of other countries, and considering the services provided, the idea of a tax increase "ain't all that bad."

McNamara also called for deeper cuts in defense spending, charging that the end of the cold war has not led to substantial changes in foreign policy.

When asked if he supports the closing of Williams Air Force Base and other military bases across the country, McNamara said, "Absolutely!"

McNamara said he was "proud of the bases we closed" in the 1960s, during his tenure as secretary of defense.

"Those areas are better off," he added.

Now that Williams will be closed, Rios said that 20-year-old plans for a regional airport in the East Valley may be

Image Awards salute service to black community

It was a gala event at Neeb Hall Wednesday night as ASU's chapter of the NAACP turned out in force to honor groups and individuals that have demonstrated authentic service to the University's black community.

"These students exhibit positivity where negativity once prevailed," said ASU alumnus Alonzo Jones, who co-hosted the Second Annual NAACP Image Awards. More than 100 students and faculty members attended the event.

Dance and vocal performances were scattered throughout the Academy Awards-style event, with 21 awards handed to students and faculty members described by many presenters as "the best and the brightest, future leaders and role models."

"Sometimes I wonder if some of the things I do in my personal life make a difference, and just being invited here tells me that they do make a difference. I'm extremely honored," said Chris Kieselbach, a senior who helped bring Malcolm X's daughter to campus in February.

Other winners included four black women who came face-to-face with campus racism when they discovered a racially degrading flier at Cholla Apartments in February.

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents Wednesday:
 •The rear wheel of an ASU student's bicycle was stolen from a bike rack on the west side of Neeb Residence Hall. Estimated loss is $95.

•Police stopped two men on a motorcycle at Orange Sreet and McAllister Avenue for wearing no eye protection. The officer handcuffed the men thinking the motorcycle was stolen. Police discovered later that it was not. Because the men had no proof of ownership, the motorcycle was impounded and later released to the registered owner.

•An ASU employee said three juveniles broke a window at the Mitchell School. Estimated damage is $150.
 Tempe police reported the following incidents Wednesday:
 •An 18-year-old man died from injuries he received in a motorcycle accident at 4:52 a.m. Tuesday on Price Road between the Superstition Freeway and Baseline Road. Chris Doyle, of the 800 block of W. Lindner Drive in Mesa, was driving a 1988 Kawasaki Ninja motorcycle when he allegedly struck a guard rail after losing control of the vehicle. He died at Scottsdale Memorial Hospital. A passenger on the motorcycle, who also was transported to Scottsdale Memorial Hospital, is in good condition, police said.

 •Police arrested an 18-year-old man Tuesday outside of Desperados, 524 W. Broadway Road, and accused him of being a minor in possession of alcohol. An officer said he saw the man walking toward him in the parking lot with a beer in his hand. The suspect told police an employee asked him to pick up the beer bottle. The individual said he was going to throw the beer away, not drink it.

Income

Illinois, the only inland state in the Top 10, at $20,303, and Hawaii, $20,254. Mississippi had the lowest per capita income, at $12,735 — $5,950 less than the national average. Others at the bottom were West Virginia, $13,747; Utah, $14,083; Arkansas, $14,218;

New Mexico, $14,228; Louisiana, $14,391; Alabama, $14,826; Kentucky, $14,929; South Carolina, $15,099, and Montana, $15,110. As the economy settled into a recession as 1990 came to a close, the growth in personal income was slowing everywhere except in the Rocky Mountain and Plains regions. And the faster increase there was due entirely to federal farm subsidies, the study said.

Personal income grew just 0.8 percent in the nation as a whole during the fourth quarter last year, down from 1.3 percent from July through September. Personal income is the total pre-tax income from all sources, less social insurance. The report also said personal income growth failed to keep up with inflation, which totaled 1.7 percent in the fourth quarter as measured by a Commerce Department index. By region, personal incomes grew 0.6 percent in New England, down from 1.0 percent in the third quarter; 0.5 percent in the Mideast, down from 1.3 percent; 0.5 percent in the Great Lakes, down from 1.2 percent; 0.5 percent in the Southeast, down from 1.4 percent; 2.3 percent in the Plains states, up from 0.1 percent; 1.3 percent in the Southwest, down from 1.7 percent.

Valley symposium discusses addictions, substance abuse

By DIANE SANTORICO
State Press

Substance abuse in the workplace, love addiction and nicotine addiction are some of the topics that will be addressed at the Third Annual Addictions Symposium at ASU West Saturday.

Clay Dix, program coordinator for social work at ASU West, said the symposium is sponsored by West Valley Camelback Hospital and will consist of three sessions.

The lectures for the first session, which begins at 9 a.m., are "Dual Diagnosis with the Addictive Person," "Addictive Personality: Drugs, Alcohol, Sex and Gambling," "Why Kids Use Drugs" and "Substance Abuse in the Workplace."

Marcia Baker, director of addiction services at West Valley Camelback Hospital, said substance abuse in the workplace is a very large problem.

"We spend a lot of time with businesses and discuss how substance abuse affects them," said Baker, the keynote speaker for the symposium.

Baker, who has been director since August 1990, said health benefits, absenteeism and theft all are problems related to employees and drug abuse.

Co-dependency likely will be the most popular lecture, Baker said.

"The speaker for it (the co-dependency lecture) is a co-dependency therapist, and she will define what it is and its recovery process," she said.

Employers who want to assist their employees in coping with addictions will benefit from the second session. "Nicotine Addiction," "Family Dysfunction," "Love Addiction," "Eating Disorders" and "Workaholicism" are the lectures in this session, which begins at 10:45.

Baker said he is expecting about 300 people to register for the symposium, which also is sponsored by the National Council on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence and the Deer Valley and Glendale Union High School Districts.

Macho men may be emotionally unhealthy according to experts

Men who try to live up to the "macho" image that was prevalent during the 1980s could suffer emotional damage down the road, many experts say.

"We learn early on that big boys don't cry, and they don't need. We are supposed to be independent, and we are taught that feelings, except for anger, are female," said Joel Hutchinson Ph.D., of ASU's Counseling and Consultation.

He said men often are reluctant to seek help, adhering instead to traditional macho roles. But this reluctance often leads to problems such as depression and substance abuse.

Hutchinson said the socialization of boys is a constant trend — and starts early.

"Even infant boys are handled differently, they are treated less fragile than girls," he said.

The problem is not necessarily with men only, Hutchinson said. The lack of expressiveness also is found in women who come from dysfunctional families.

"It is not just a male problem, women feel this too," he said. "It is people in general that are taught 'don't talk, don't trust and don't feel.'" major, said women often perpetuate the problem when they expect too much.

William Derts, an ASU agribusiness

"They want it both ways — strong, independent and sensitive and romantic all at the same time," he said.

Derts, 23, added that he believes men hide their real feelings because of their ego.

It's male ego — females are more comforting, it is female trait," he said. "Male attitude means a dominate attitude, it goes back to when women were all considered helpless and dependent on men, but as time goes on that attitude is weakening."

Some of the consequences related to suppressing one's feelings can include drug dependency and depression, Hutchinson said.

"People who grow up under these rules, lose touch and hide. One way is through addiction and the control of interpersonal circumstances," he said.

Hutchinson said a change is possible in the future, but a very slow change.

"The old ways whisper to us," he said. "They are reinforced through all of the developmental years."

ASU West, GCC collaborate on 4-year plan

By KELLYE KRATCH
State Press

ASU West and Glendale Community College have collaborated on a program that will enable students to earn a bachelor of science degree in recreation after completing two years of study at each school.

"We're really just now starting to get the ball rolling to boost enrollment in recreation studies," said John Hultsman, ASU West associate professor of Leisure Studies.

"One of the goals of the program is to try to provide people in the community college with a para-professional career option," he said. "We expect to see the first (GCC) students (at ASU West) in about three or four semesters."

GCC currently offers one of the introductory courses required for a bachelor's in recreation, he added.

Students desiring the bachelor's degree can complete their first two years of study at GCC, earning an associate of arts degree. They then can complete the recreation program at ASU West.

GCC, a two-year college, does not offer upper-division classes, while ASU West does not offer freshman- or sophomore-level classes.

"The creation of this 2+2 program is a significant development for students at Glendale Community College," said Kent Staheli, chairman of health, physical education and recreation programs at GCC.

"Students desiring to obtain a bachelor's degree in recreation can do so without having to transfer to another, more distant university," he added.

There are three options available to students under the cooperative 2+2 project.

Students can complete their two-year associate of arts degree at GCC and go directly into a para-professional job in the recreation field. Hultsman said, "Basically, there are some entry-level jobs in leisure available to people with an associate degree," but without a bachelor's degree, opportunities are limited.

The second option under the 2+2 plan enables students to complete their associate of arts degree at GCC and transfer to ASU West to complete their bachelor's.

Under the third option, students can complete their two-year degree at GCC, get a job as a para-professional and attend ASU West part time until they complete the bachelor's degree program in recreation.

ASU's main campus also offers a bachelor's of science in recreation that is an "exact parallel" to what the 2+2 plan offers.

But, Hultsman said, ASU West is currently pursuing accreditation that would enable the west campus to offer courses and majors different than those offered at the Tempe campus.

"As soon as the North Central accreditation goes through," Hultsman said, "you'd have to apply to transfer to ASU West" from the main campus.

Hultsman said enrollment in leisure studies programs is "up considerably from last year."

He said 13 people have pre-enrolled for a recreation administration class this year, up from three last year. Two additional recreation faculty have been hired.

Awards

"When the events unfolded, we didn't expect to be recognized," said Nikki Gross, one of the four students. "We just did what needed to be done."

Junior justice studies major Nichet Smith echoed Gross's words after receiving her Award of Courage.

"The most important thing is that something positive did come out of this," Smith said, citing ASU's new cultural diversity requirement.

NAACP President Ashahed Triche urged students to continue their work against racism.

In a loudly applauded speech, Triche spoke of snow flurries and blizzards endured by blacks.

"There are some people who were around 30 years ago, and there was a blizzard everywhere," he said, adding that today's college students have only experienced "snow sprinkles."

But sprinkles over a span of 30 years can make walls and hide roads, Triche said.

"Sometimes there's so much on the ground, you can't even remember what the road looks like," Triche added. "(But) there is a road out there — we built it."

Charlene Cole, assistant dean of Student Life, and five other faculty members received a standing ovation for their work with black students and cultural diversity.

"I'm really touched. When I went to school 20 years ago, there wasn't anybody there for me," Cole said, adding that she has dedicated her career to giving students the support she never had.

Rossie Turman, chairman of the Afro-American Coalition, agreed that further steps to combat racism will involve instilling big dreams in the next generation.

"Keep looking back and reaching back — and pulling others forward, because that's what it's all about," he said.

academic professionals from 3 to 4 p.m. and with others from 4 to 5 p.m. on April 30 in the MU Pima Room.

Glick will meet with faculty and academic professionals from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. and with students and staff from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m. on May 2 in the MU Ventana Room.

MacKinnon will meet with faculty at 2 p.m. and with others at 3 p.m. on May 7 in the MU Ventana Room.

Munk said forms will be available for written comment on the selection of the provost.

"We hope that there is response, and that people show up to forums," he said.

Associated Students of ASU President Matt Ortega, a member of the search committee, said he hopes students will attend and question the candidates.

"I think students need to make sure that (the finalists) know the reason they're being interviewed is for the students," Ortega said. "The system is for students, and they shouldn't be allowed to forget that."

Ortega said that while "all of the candidates look great on paper," he is concerned that there are only four finalists.

"Four people is (a) pretty small (group)," he said, adding that he had anticipated more ethnically diverse candidates and women.

ASU President Lattie Coor, who will select the provost, said he is pleased with the committee and its group of finalists.

"The quality of the candidates and of the work of the search committee is to be commended," he said.

Coor said the hiring of the provost will be based on leadership abilities, an understanding of the budget considerations a major university has to face and interest in the needs of students.

The finalist selected also should understand the direction and goals of the University in cultural diversity, economic development and community outreach, as well as the relationship between teaching and research at ASU, he said.

"Then, of course, chemistry will be involved," Coor said.

Budget

appropriations for ASU West.

Although the JLBC recommendations were initially attacked by those who claimed it robbed students, University officials hope the Legislature will lean toward the proposal in budget talks.

The possible closure of Glendale's Sundome Center for the Performing Arts — financed by ASU West — drew much of the night's attention, but ASU West Provost Vernon Lattin said his main concern was aborted growth in the still-fledgling institution.

"It's such a fragile thing," he said. "You can't just stop in the middle of something. It's not like we're fully developed or half-way developed."

"We're just beginning."

Sen. Jan Brewer, R-Peoria, suggested that ASU West depend more on the main campus in some areas, but Sen. Lela Alston, D-Phoenix, quickly responded by saying ASU Main is in financial trouble itself.

"I think ASU Main would be more happy to provide that support if they themselves were not being cut so dramatically," she said.

Former lawmakers who were key figures in developing ASU West testified on behalf of University officials, saying the "ASU West dream" is in jeopardy with the proposed budgets.

Former Sen. Ann Lindeman, who with fellow lawmaker Sterling Ridge pushed for the development of the campus in the 1970s, speculated that the governor's staff had a "personal vendetta" against ASU West.

Some lawmakers contend that ASU West is too expensive to operate because of the higher per student cost that accompanies the lack of lower-division courses. The campus offers only upper-division course work.

But Sen. Stan Furman, D-Phoenix, said he believes lawmakers simply were unaware of the impact of budget proposals.

"It's easier to beat up a little kid than a grown person," Furman said. "This is a very young University, and (it) doesn't have all the established lines of communication that some of the other schools do."

Soviet

about asking for aid. He threw out most of a prepared text in trying to persuade 600 business leaders he was serious about reforming the crumbling Soviet economy.

"Our Far East and Siberia have resources, but they lack the infrastructure to develop them," Gorbachev said, adding that the Soviet Union has much to learn from Japan's experience of converting military industries to commercial use.

Gorbachev stressed he was aware of the need for the Soviet Union to deal with its outstanding debts.

"This year has been especially difficult because our oil exports have declined due to the Gulf War. But we have the resources to resolve the problem. Your understanding would be appreciated," he said.

But Japan's hard-nosed business elders, whose savvy built this country into the world's No. 2 economic power, said political and economic problems must be resolved before they can invest.

"It was all requests. (Gorbachev) didn't have any gifts to offer us. That's a pity," said one executive who refused to give his name. Indeed, the Soviets are asking Japan for a loan to pay off hundreds of millions of dollars of debt for Japanese exports.

As expected, there was no progress reported on Japan's main condition for freeing up Japanese capital: that the Soviets return four islands off northern Japan seized in the closing days of World War II.

Saddam

hadn't been approached by any broker to arrange such a deal.

"We want him out of there so badly, and I think it's so important to the tranquility ... of Iraq, that under that condition we might" drop possible war crimes charges against Saddam, Bush said.

Lawmakers are also vexed.

Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., is asking the president to seek United Nations support for an ultimatum: Saddam and his party must relinquish power or face allied military attack.

Only a few lawmakers were willing to go that far, but others supported the idea of a UN-sponsored war crimes tribunal, and House Speaker Thomas Foley suggested the international economic embargo be used as leverage to keep Saddam in check.

The administration is walking a delicate line between wanting Saddam out and fearing his removal could result in political chaos and a possible power grab by neighboring Iran and its Shiite proxies in Iraq.

Saddam has skillfully played on that specter with the Sunni power elite in Baghdad, too, U.S. analysts say.

Although Saddam's power base is rooted in his hometown clan and is secular rather than religious, the country's Sunni minority is more powerful than the generally less educated Shiite majority.

"They (the Sunnis) have scores to settle with Saddam, but not at the expense of their privileged status in Iraq," said a third analyst. "If they could get rid of Saddam without sinking the Sunni regime, a cabal of military and political leaders might do so."

But the risks are enormous. "They know they'd only have one shot, so to speak," said another analyst. "They fail, and they're dead."

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Dissatisfied with your IQ? For less than $200, you can add 30 points. Tired of struggling to trim that waist? For that same money, you can buy an exercise machine that will take off inches without the strain. Sound too good to be true? The federal government thinks so. That's why it's confiscating these products, as well as a purported breast enlarger and hemorrhoid cure, from a New Jersey mail-order company. In federal court Monday, the U. S. Food and Drug Administration was authorized to seize the supposed wonder products, found in mail-order catalogues distributed by Lifestyle Fascination Inc. Company manager Scott Carpenter insists the products work. He said he's being targeted for purely economic reasons. Take the Hemorrhice, a hollow finger-shaped instrument that's frozen before it's applied. Because he sells a reliever of hemorrhoids, a lot of people lose money, he said. "The drugstores won't touch it," he said. "Let's say you come in once a week to buy Preparation-H. If you were a drugstore, why cut all those sales by replacing it for something you would only sell once?"

Ehmann not short on baseball talent

By DAN ZEIGER
State Press

With his outstanding play at shortstop this season making him a legitimate pro prospect, could it actually be possible that ASU's Kurt Ehmann once only wanted to play football?

Not that a little action on the gridiron is a bad experience, but if not for recurring tendinitis in his right shoulder that eventually ended his career, Ehmann probably would not have had the chance to become the solid baseball performer he is today.

Ehmann decided to quit football after suffering his injury during his freshman year at Golden West College in Huntington Beach, Calif. Still with the hunger for competition, he elected to return to baseball by transferring to Mendocino College in Ukiah, Calif., where his father is the school president.

"I went up there with a solid attitude that I wanted to get in the baseball games because I had been playing football," Ehmann said. "I worked hard in the off-season, and when the season did come around, I did well. I wasn't playing shortstop — I played center field — and my concern coming here was to play short."

In his one season at Mendocino, Ehmann batted .413, set a new school record with 62 hits in 39 games, was chosen as the team's most valuable player and was a first-team all-conference selection. He easily caught the attention of the Sun Devil coaches and was lured to Tempe with visions of being the starting shortstop.

If only athletics were as easy for everyone else — should circumstances prevent you from being a success at one sport, just move on to the next one and be a bigger star there.

"My freshman year I thought I had a great season in football," Ehmann said. "The coaches liked me and going into my sophomore year, I was an all-state free safety in junior college. Then I got hurt, and I wound up getting back into baseball. I guess it was a pretty good thing I was injured.

"I'm glad I got back into baseball. I knew it was my strength, but I kind of miss football too. Maybe I should look and see if (ASU football coach Larry) Marmie has any openings."

The physical education major certainly knows that his future is not as a two-sport star. Judging by his performance during the last three weeks, in which he has performed at his highest level all season, Ehmann is quite content to stay on the diamond.

The junior will take a career-high 10-game hitting streak into a series at No. 2 USC beginning Friday. Preseason evaluations of Ehmann said his hitting was a question, but he has raised his average 36 points to .302 by going 14-for-44 with two home runs and 10

Sun Devils miss top spot with split against UofA

TUCSON — One pitch.

That is how close the ASU softball team was to taking over first place in the Six-Pac.

The eighth-ranked Sun Devils (35-12 overall, 7-3 Six-Pac) instead lost a tough 3-2 first contest to split a doubleheader with UofA and settle into second place.

The Wildcats (44-9, 6-4) won the initial game on Kristin Gautier's two-run double with ASU pitcher Karey James ahead on the count with two strikes in the bottom of the 10th. A strikeout would have given ASU a 2-1 win.

"It was a thriller," Sun Devil coach Linda Wells said. "In the tie-breaker, something is going to give somewhere."

One ASU player who gave UofA hard times was starting pitcher Dawn Wood, who limited the Wildcats to one run on three hits over 6½ innings before giving way to Amber Tintman.

Wood

"I learned a lot today," Wood said. "I learned that you have to battle with the batters."

On the other side of the battle was UofA ace Debbie Day, who went the distance and even drove in the Wildcats' first run.

Day, who improved her record to 22-4, gave up seven hits to the Sun Devils, who now feel they have the upper hand when the two teams meet on Tuesday.

"I felt it was to our advantage that we got to see Day so much," Wells said. "We saw her for 10 innings in the first game and we saw her in the second game when her arm was going to fall off."

Offensively, Christy Serritella and Rachel Brown both went 2-for-4 to pace the Sun Devils.

In the second game, ASU dominated the nation's No. 3 team in every aspect of the game.

The Sun Devils used Brown's third-inning RBI to chase starter Susie Parra from the game. A tired Day was greeted by Becky Davis' two-run double that capped a three-run third inning as ASU blanked the Wildcats 5-0.

Terri Carnicelli picked up the win for the Sun Devils as she shut out UofA with a four-hit effort.

"I felt strong from the beginning," Carnicelli said. "I felt confident with all my pitches."

As confident as Carnicelli was with her pitches, the Sun Devil hitters were confident with their bats.

Brown led the way by going 2-for-3 with an RBI. Liz Phillips went 2-for-4 with an RBI.

After the heartbreaking first-game loss, the Sun Devils would have been forgiven had they suffered a letdown. Instead, the opposite happened, but Wells would not take credit for the rebound.

"I didn't know if it was anything I said," Wells said. "I really think this is a hard-nosed group. They're pretty mentally tough. They were appreciating that saying 'Yeah, we should have won that game, but by golly, let's get back at it' and they have been that way all year."

After spending over a month on the road, ASU returns to Sun Devil Club Stadium Friday with a doubleheader against California. That series will be followed Saturday with a non-conference game against Cal State-Northridge. Both doubleheaders start at 6 p.m.

ASU men's tennis gets wins from Bulldogs, Pac-10 offices

By DARREN URBAN

State Press

On Wednesday morning the ASU men's tennis team had 17 victories on the season.

By the afternoon, after a two-for-one feat courtesy of the conference offices, the Sun Devils had 19 victories with a 6-0 win over Fresno State at Whiteman Tennis Center.

A decision from the Pac-10 giving ASU (19-9) a forfeit win over California for a rain-shortened March 15 match in Tempe, reincarnated the Sun Devils' hopes of a 20-win season with one meet left after its blanking of the Bulldogs.

"This was the most nervous I've been before a match all year," ASU coach Lou Belken said. "We had a good showing coming off the weekend (5-1 and 5-3 losses to the Bay area schools). We were playing a team we had everything to lose against."

The conference gave the Sun Devils another win Wednesday morning. The Golden Bears, who were trailing ASU in singles play before the Friday match was rained out, went to Tucson to play UofA Saturday and failed to return to Tempe Sunday as per conference bylaws.

"Our interpretation of the conference handbook said they had to stay," Belken said. "They stated some reasons why they couldn't stay. (Athletic Director) Charles Harris and (Associate Athletic Director) Herman Frazier took it to the league, and fortunately we have two administrators willing to put forth that effort."

The Pac-10 confirmed the win was ASU's, but declined further comment.

The decision put extra emphasis on the meeting with No. 25 FSU, which beat the Sun Devils last season in Tempe.

Senior Dave Lomicky, who left the Bulldogs after his freshman year, struggled early in the No. 1 slot, but recovered for a 3-6, 7-6, 6-4 victory over his former school.

"Dave did a nice job," Belken said. "It was hard for him to play today because he really wants the win."

For Lomicky and fellow seniors Brian Gyetko, Dan Marting and Joel Finnigan, it was a clean sweep in the last home match of their college careers.

"I'm kind of glad it's over," said Marting, who recorded a 6-4, 2-6, 6-3 win. "They're a pretty good team. Last year, we played them early in the season and we were overconfident. This year we knew what to expect."

Junior Ross Matheson, who captured a straight-sets victory, said ASU has stagnated just below its goals.

"We're borderline breaking the top five," Matheson said. "What the team is frustrated about is that we've been killing ourselves (in practice), but we can't quite get up there. We want to do something special."

Bono's golf: ASU senior earns praise

By AMY SLADE
State Press

For someone who could not even break 100 as a freshman, being one of the top five golfers for the defending national champion Sun Devil women's golf team is quite a feat.

Mindy Bono, the Springfield, Ill., native, who was a walk-on during her sophomore year at ASU, did not start playing golf until the summer after her senior year of high school.

"She's worked really hard to get where she is," ASU coach Linda Vollstedt said of the squad's only senior. "She's very appreciative of the opportunity that has been given to her."

"Most of the girls on the team have been playing since they were 10," Bono said. "I played softball for 10 years before I decided to take up golf. . . I figured golf had a better future."

Vollstedt said it is rare for a player to walk on to such a strong program like ASU, but added that Bono was an exception to the rule because of her athletic ability.

"I really admired her when she first came into my office," Vollstedt said. "I told her if she practiced hard, didn't cause any problems and did exactly as I told her, I'd give her a chance on the team."

En route to her present worth, which includes a low round score of 73 in the Lady Sun Devil and being a member of the 1990-91 traveling squad, Bono has spent endless hours on the course trying to perfect her skills.

When she first came to Arizona, her three-digit scores were not the only thing that needed work.

"When I go out and play, I've got to trust my swing," Bono said. "It's my mental game that I need to work on."

Vollstedt, who Bono said inspires her in the mental aspect of golf, spoke highly of Bono's dedication to improve her game.

"She has great work ethics and always practices really hard," Vollstedt said. "She has great time management and adds maturity to our team."

Bono's practices consist of mostly work on her short putting, although she takes roughly 150 swings every session. She puts in three to four hours a day, four or five times a week, outside of tournament action.

Bono said she gets personal satisfaction out of practice because it is the only way she improves.

That rigorous schedule can get rough for a graduating senior.

"I have great pride in my school work," said Bono, who has a 3.0 grade point average. "I respect any athlete who has had a similar lifestyle throughout college, not just one year like me."

Bono, a journalism major with an emphasis in public relations, has already landed a full-time job with International Corporate Golf after graduation. Her job will consist of setting up golf outings for businessmen and coordinating various golf schools.

"My goal was to stay in golf and PR was the perfect route," Bono said. "Plus, I'll still have time to work on my game."

Another way for Bono to improve her game, she said, is simply by watching other golfers.

Former ASU standout Billy Mayfair,

Bono's boyfriend and a PGA tour player, has served as a motivator for her as well. She highlighted last week's Masters, where Mayfair tied for 12th, as a great learning experience.

"He doesn't want to force knowledge on me," Bono said, "but he is more than willing to help if I ask."

She is still toying with the idea of pro golf, but knows her game still needs improvement.

"It was a lot easier going from 100 to 80 then it will be to go from 80 to par," Bono said. "I'm at that stage where it is difficult to improve."

As her collegiate career comes to a close, Bono is shooting consistently in the high 70s. With just two tournaments remaining, Bono hopes to play a key role.

"I feel like I let my team down by shooting an 80 (in the third round of the Lady Sun Devil) after getting off to such a good start (rounds of 74 and 73)," said Bono, who tied for 10th. "I've got confidence that I can contribute and help the team win."

"I've put in a lot of hard work, but I'm not where I want to be."

Ehmann

RBI during the string.

One of the homers was a moonshot at Berkeley on April 6 that landed on the roof of the University of California Recreational Sports Facility, which stands about nine stories high and is 380 feet from the plate at Evans Diamond.

In three games against Stanford last weekend, Ehmann had one of his best series of the year by nailing five hits and seven RBI, with a career-high four of them coming in a 10-4 Sun Devil victory on Sunday.

But do not ask Ehmann the reason for his prolific hitting spree — chances are he will look at you with the uncertainty of a graduating senior contemplating the scarcity of jobs in the market.

"I don't know," Ehmann said. "I'd been working with (hitting) coach (Jeff) Pentland all season, and things are just starting to come through. When I came in, I had sort of a chopping-wood swing, and he's been working with me on a more level swing that helps me push through the ball."

"I think that I've always been a good hitter. Then I came here and had a tough fall, but I always knew I could hit here. I'm just proving the point right now. I think I can play anywhere at any level."

One of the reasons for the increase in Ehmann's production is the fact that the entire ASU batting order has gained confidence along with him. Performing as well as they have all year are catcher Clarke Rea, right fielder Todd Steverson and second baseman Mike Scialo.

With third baseman Jim Austin continuing to be consistent and outfielders Mike Kelly and Scott Samuels both breaking out of slumps, Ehmann has found no shortage of pitches to hit at his ninth spot in the order.

"I just want to continue to do what I have all season," Ehmann said. "When I come up in the ninth position, if that is where I'm going to be playing the rest of the year, I want to come up and drive in runs. That is the way the coaches want it, and I'd basically like to keep doing what I have been (doing)."

That work ethic has made Ehmann a favorite of Sun Devil coach Jim Brock, who has sung the praises of his shortstop all year. Ehmann said he thinks his desire to learn and the fact that he does not mind getting his uniform dirty are the qualities that coaches enjoy most.

"I'm out here to learn and have fun," Ehmann said. "I don't try to talk back. I try to listen and do what the coaches expect me to do. I've done that, and it's been fun. When you're not on anyone's bad side and get along with coaches that like to teach you — well, that's what they're here for."

"I just like to work hard and play ball. That's about it. I guess that's why they call it a game."

Ehmann said that is an attitude he hopes to carry into a pro career after the end of this season. He was selected by the Los Angeles Dodgers in 1990, and the improvement he has shown this year could translate into a more attractive offer when the June draft rolls around.

"I know I have a lot of improvement left — that's why I have been debating on whether to stay in school or enter the draft," Ehmann said. "I'd really like to sign if the offer is right. I have no problem coming back — it's been a lot of fun. But the draft is something you have to take very seriously."

"Maybe another year here would be good for me, and I wouldn't mind it. But I'd like to get into pro ball as soon as I can and start playing. I think that's what I need to do — keep playing baseball."

Best of ASU track heads for Mt. SAC

By MARTY MURPHY
State Press

The ASU track team will be in Los Angeles for the Mt. San Antonio College track meet this week for the annual mini-track convention each year.

The event kicks off with a junior college meet on Thursday and a high school meet on Friday, followed by Saturday's collegiate meet and Sunday's concluding open international meet.

ASU coach Tom Jones will bring nearly 20 athletes to this year's Mt. SAC meet.

Four of those athletes will be the women's 4x400-meter relay team of senior Dana Jones, freshman Shanequa Campbell, freshman Kim Toney and junior Maicel Malone. The team currently holds the season's top Pac-10 time at 3:34.74.

Jones and Campbell will also compete in the open 200 meters.

Toney will compete in the invitational 800 meters, in which she has posted a 2:06.50 thus far this season.

LaShawn Simmons, a junior, will be returning to her former school and will compete in the 100-meter hurdles and the long jump.

Also competing in the long jump for the Sun Devils will be junior Tesra Bester and freshman Lisa Hale.

Bester has a personal best of 20-feet-8½ while Hale has gone 19-feet-2¼.

The fourth best high jumper in the Pac-10, freshman Shelly Choppa, will try to improve on her best mark of 5-feet-10 as well.

For the first time this year, sophomore Kelly Cordell will run the 10,000 meters. Her teammate Trish Huffmaster will compete in the 3,000.

On the men's side, junior Todd Lewis will run the 5,000, an event in which Lewis will try to qualify for nationals.

"I want to get a good automatic qualifying time," Lewis said. "This is the meet that everyone tries to qualify in because the 5,000 and 10,000 are the best races in the nation."

"There is always a good field there. They get guys from Europe to come over and a lot of the best guys in the country come, like collegiate All-Americans."

One of those top college runners that Lewis may face could be UofA's Marc Davis.

On Saturday night in Tempe, the two dueled it out in the 1,500 before Davis nipped Lewis at the wire by .67 seconds.

Lewis will be joined by sophomore Chris Guinnip, who also will run the 5,000.

ASU will also compete in the men's 4x400-meter relay and the sprint medley relay.

Both those relay teams will consist of junior Erik Walbot, senior Robert Rucker, freshman Mike Sulcer and senior Ed Lovelace.

season Saturday against UofA in Tucson, not only with a chance at Belken's first 20-win season, but also his best season percentage-wise.

"As far as being the coach, the goals I set are to make NCAAs and to improve every day," Belken said. "We have a chance at 20 wins, which isn't a goal, but an accomplishment."
