M.E.Ch.A. disturbed by charges

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

M.E.Ch.A. President Maria Elena Coronado called for an apology from Fine Arts and Sciences Sen. Vicky Levine, who publicly alleged the Hispanic organization used intimidation tactics against the Associated Students of ASU Senate last spring.

"I want to know why she implicated M.E.Ch.A.," Coronado said. "It hurts us as a name, and it hurts our credibility."

"I'd really like to see her apology in writing in the (State Press) newspaper or come into our meeting and apologize," she added.

Levine said, "it was not her intention to defame M.E.Ch.A. I don't take back my claim that financial changes for MCAB last spring were achieved by extortion. I'm sorry if anyone's feelings were hurt or damage was done to the organization."

Levine said she equates extortion with feeling "threatened."

During an ASASU budget hearing last spring, Levine said, a MCAB and M.E.Ch.A. representative appealed to senators to spare MCAB from receiving budget cutbacks.

"I interpreted that person's actions as threatening,"

ASA tries to charm socks off Board of Regents

By KRIS MAYES
State Press

The Arizona Students Association is trying to accomplish what no student lobbying group has done since the 1970s by staving off an impending tuition increase by the Arizona Board of Regents.

And they think they've found the perfect weapon — good, old-fashioned charm.

"The key to lobbying is building a relationship over time," said ASA delegate Lisa Shelley. "They (the regents) have to know the type of people we are and that we are credible."

ASA's "Adopt-a-Regent" program pairs its members with regents in an attempt to pave the way for tough tuition negotiations later this year.

According to members of the student lobbying group, it won't be high-pressured lobbying techniques or fast-paced deal making that will spare the universities from a tuition hike this year.

The new lobbying program relies on the force of ASA's personal interaction with the regents to convince board members not to increase tuition.

"We want to convince them to think of student issues up until the very end," said Shelley. "I can't ask Herm (Regent Hermon Chanen) right now to oppose a tuition hike, but that would be the ultimate goal."

Shelley, who has "adopted" Chanen, added that ASA delegates are paired with the regents based on common interests and geographic location.

The regents are expected to make a final decision regarding a possible tuition hike at their Dec. 6 general meeting.

UofA delegate Billy Chavira, who has been in contact with Regent Edith Auslander since August, said influencing Auslander on the tuition issue could be instrumental for ASA.

"I think it's important to try to get her on our side," Chavira said. "She carries a lot of influence with the regents and could cast the deciding vote."

Chavira said he maintains a line of direct communication by calling and writing to Auslander.

Auslander praised the idea of assigning an ASA member to each regent but said she had always been open to the group in the past.

"All communication helps," Auslander said, "whatever the final decision may be."

Last week, ASA announced that any tuition increases must be accompanied by a

An ASU graduate has discovered a breed of frog, resembling the one above, that sings below water.

ASU grad leaps into fame by finding frog

By TEENA CHADWELL
State Press

An ASU graduate recently discovered an underwater "singing" frog in a canyon south of Sierra Vista.

The leopard frog is the third new species discovered by James Platz, chairman of the biology department at Creighton University in Nebraska.

The singing produced by the frogs "is actually a mating call," said Platz, who received his doctoral degree from ASU in 1974. "It sounds like a snore."

Two other species of leopard frogs were discovered by Platz in the early 1970s when he was a graduate student at ASU.

But he said he never expected to find another variety of leopard frog when he returned to Arizona for a visit.

"It was discovered by a chance conversation with somebody who said we ought to look in this canyon, that there were some really big frogs there," he said.

Found mainly in Ramsey Canyon and a few other nearby canyons, the frog is covered with dark spots on its back and ranges in color from coffee-brown to green, depending on the temperature, he said.

This species is unusual because most frogs sing in the air, producing mating calls in the evening, he said.

Platz realized he had made a new discovery when he could not hear any sounds coming from the frogs one evening in the middle of breeding season.

"The next morning, there were egg masses everywhere," he said, proving frogs had mated that night.

Using sensitive underwater listening devices, Platz said he finally heard the mating calls.

"It was as noisy as could be underwater," he said.

Speculating why the frogs "sing" underwater, Platz said that it might be to avoid predators.

While at ASU, Platz was a graduate student under Jack Fouquette, an associate professor of biology at ASU.

Fouquette said the new finding is interesting because of the frog's unique underwater "singing." Scientists are only beginning to discover just how many species of leopard frog exist, he said.

Jim Collins, chairman of the zoology department at ASU, said Platz's discovery is a prestigious event for ASU.

"Jim's work in general has always brought prestige to the University," he said.

Council approves contracts; Diablo improvements begin

By JUDI TANCOS
State Press

The Tempe City Council's approval of more than $400,000 in service contracts for Tempe Diablo Stadium initiated the first phase of an overall improvement project.

The work will include relocating team offices and the press box to a second tier above the home plate seating area and making the stadium more attractive to spectators.

"It's in keeping with the overall plan for Diablo Stadium," said Councilman Neil Giuliano.

Giuliano said the city agreed to upgrade the stadium, located at 2200 W. Alameda Drive, when it finalized plans to bring the California Angels to Tempe for spring training.

"It's an improvement plan to a major community asset, just as we would take care of and improve any community asset that we have," Giuliano said of the construction plans for the city-owned stadium, which were approved Thursday.

The service contracts with Hellmuth, Obata & Kassabaum Inc. (HOK Sports) of Kansas City, Mo., and Phoenix-based CMX Inc. will pay for design proposals and construction management.

HOK Sports will receive $308,645, plus an estimated $30,000 for reimbursable expenses, for designing improvements and preparing construction plans. CMX Inc., which assisted Tempe with the Cardinals' training facility, will receive $100,800 to provide on-site supervision and inspection during the project's construction phase. The company also can receive reimbursable expenses up to $3,000.

Tempe Public Works Director Jim Jones said the two proposals "are consistent with professional fees for these services."

Construction will begin by May 1992, so it will be completed for the 1993 spring training season.

Tamara Wofford/State Press

Tempe Diablo Stadium will receive a facelift beginning in May 1992 for the California Angels' spring training.

Talks between the city and the Seattle Mariners, who have trained in the Valley since 1977, broke off in March when agreements could not be reached on stadium improvements and a lease renewal. Negotiations with the California Angels began at the end of March and were completed in July.

The lease agreement calls for a $3.8 million expenditure to expand Diablo Stadium's seating from 5,600 to 7,500, triple both the amount of concession space and the number of restrooms, and upgrade locker rooms, offices and press facilities.

Jones said HOK Sports will design the project, which is expected to go out for bids in February. Actual construction is expected to cost $3.5 million.

Diablo Stadium is the smallest seating-capacity stadium in the Cactus League.

"There's been a general need to expand it," Jones said.

Today

The Today section is a daily calendar of events happening at ASU that is presented as a service to the University community. Any campus club or organization can submit entries for publication to the State Press, located in the basement of Matthews Center, Room 15. Entries must be legible, are subject to editing for content, space and clarity, and will not be taken over the phone. Due to space restrictions, the State Press cannot guarantee publication. Deadline for the entries is 1 p.m. the previous business day.

Meetings

- Alcoholics Anonymous will have a closed meeting at noon at the Newman Center on College Avenue and University Drive.
- Re-Entry Connection will have a seminar on "First Impressions — Creating a Positive Image" at noon in the Adult Re-Entry Center, MU lower level.

- Society for Human Resource Management will have a guest speaker on interviewing techniques at 4:30 p.m. in the MU Santa Cruz Room.
- Women's Student Association will meet to discuss business from last week, organization and the Safety Escort Service, at noon in the Women's Student Center, MU lower level.
- Women In Communications Inc. will meet at 6 p.m. in MU Room 213.
- Baptist Student Union will have worship and fellowship at 7 p.m. at the BSU Center, 1322 S. Mill Ave.
- Women's Student Center will have a women's writers workshop from 3 p.m. to 4 p.m. in the Women's Student Center.

- Le Cercle Francais will meet from 3:30 p.m. to 5 p.m. at the Coffee Plantation.
- Chi Alpha Christian Fellowship will meet for worship, prayer and Bible study at 7 p.m. in Danforth Chapel.
- Golden Key National Honor Society will be on Cady Mall for campus awareness from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.
- ECKANKAR Society at ASU will have an open forum, "Use the Force: The Power of Intuition," at 11:30 p.m. in MU Hohokam Room 208B.
- Campus Ambassadors Christian Fellowship will have a seminar, "Truth, Is It Relative?" at 7:30 p.m. in MU LaPaz Room 223.
- ASU Writing Center will have a seminar, "Paragraph Development and Coherence," at 3:40 p.m. in the Language and Literature Building, Room C157.
- NAACP will meet at 6:30 p.m. in MU Navajo Room 219.

President Bush clenches his fist during an address to the United Nations General Assembly Monday. Bush told the General Assembly, "we cannot compromise" U.N. demands that Iraq destroy its nuclear weapons capability.

Bush says no give on Iraq arms policy

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — President Bush told the United Nations on Monday "we cannot compromise" on demands that Iraq destroy its nuclear weapons capability. He also urged the world body to disavow its stand that Zionism is a form of racism.

While talking tough about Iraq, Bush set no deadline for Saddam Hussein to unconditionally submit to inspection and destruction of his most dangerous weapons or face the possibility of renewed military force. White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater told reporters that the United States was discussing a 48-hour deadline with other Security Council members.

Bush said the U. N. should keep economic sanctions clamped on Iraq as long as Saddam remains in control.

He took a strong stance on the 1975 Zionism resolution, a major source of mistrust between Israel and the U. N.

"To equate Zionism with racism is to reject Israel itself," Bush said in his speech to the General Assembly of representatives from 166 nations. "This body cannot claim to seek peace and at the same time challenge Israel's right to exist."

"By repealing this resolution unconditionally," he said, "the United Nations will enhance its credibility and serve the cause of peace."

The United States has long deplored the resolution but Bush had postponed a campaign to repeal it out of a desire to maintain Arab support for the effort against Saddam in the Persian Gulf.

The State Department's assistant secretary for international organizations, John Bolton, told reporters, "We think we have a majority in favor of repeal."

As for Iraq, some advisers had urged Bush to set a 48-hour deadline after which American warplanes would be used to accompany U. N. inspectors on helicopter flights in Iraq.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said the United States was consulting with Security Council members on how to proceed, and that a decision might come in a day or two. "Our plan contains a 48-hour deadline and a proposal on how to move after that" if Saddam continues to balk, he said.

However, another administration official said the 48-hour plan "may not be relevant" anymore as the U. N. faces new problems with Iraq's denial of documents to U. N. inspectors. Nevertheless, the official asserted that the United States and its allies have the authority to use force if necessary against Iraq.

"We have the grounds for action," the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Fitzwater said Saddam's interference with inspections "leads us to be more

'To equate Zionism with racism is to reject Israel itself.'
— President Bush

pessimistic" that he will comply with U. N. demands. "It doesn't appear that Saddam recognizes the seriousness of the situation. The basic problem is he doesn't want to comply."

Bush reworked his speech at Camp David over the weekend and tinkered with the section on Iraq before leaving the White House on Monday — as Iraqi soldiers were detaining U. N. inspectors who were trying to take nuclear-weapons documents from a building in Baghdad.

"We're not going to do anything before we understand the facts," Bush said after his speech. In Baghdad, the Iraqis released the inspectors but kept the documents.

Iraqis hold UN team 12 hours, confiscate documents

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Iraqi soldiers detained U. N. officials for more than 12 hours in a Baghdad building Monday, then forcibly confiscated documents that apparently show Iraq has been developing nuclear weapons.

The inspectors found the papers in a surprise search several hours before the U. N. Security Council met to discuss Iraqi obstructions to U. N. searches for hidden weapons and production facilities.

The inspectors hauled seven carloads of papers from an Iraqi government building, but authorities stopped the team, held its members for 12 hours and "forcibly" seized the data, officials said.

Rolf Ekeus, head of the U. N. special commission in charge of finding and demolishing Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, said that before their detention the inspectors had copied some of the key documents with their own portable copying machines.

The confrontation appeared likely to lead the Security Council to accept President Bush's offer to provide troops to guard the inspectors and warplanes to escort U. N. helicopter searches. No formal council meeting was immediately scheduled.

The Gulf War cease-fire requires Iraq to allow the U. N. inspections, and the Security Council already was upset over Iraq's refusal to allow unannounced helicopter flights to suspected weapons sites.

"The Security Council resolutions that call for inspections are unconditional," Secretary of State James A. Baker III said.

"We saw earlier the tragic consequences of the failure to comply with Security Council resolutions," he warned, referring to the U. S.-led campaign that drove Iraqi troops from Kuwait after Saddam Hussein refused U. N. orders to end his occupation of the emirate.

Baker was at the United Nations for a speech to the General Assembly by Bush, who said U. N. demands that Iraq destroy its nuclear weapons capability could not be compromised.

Iraq has denied its nuclear program is intended to develop weapons.

Iraq's Foreign Ministry said the government was not trying to hide the documents, but insisted that proper receipts be filled out for the papers to prevent false claims from being made about what is in them.

Its statement was carried by the Iraqi News Agency.

David Kydd, chief spokesman of the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna, Austria, said the papers found by the U. N. experts appeared to confirm for the first time that Iraq has been "working on the development of a (nuclear) weapons capability."

A statement issued at U. N. Headquarters said "The team reported that the material was unequivocally related to nuclear weaponization activities," so U. N. and IAEA officials ordered it seized.

Political changes have done little to alter Moscow daily life

MOSCOW (AP) — Around People's Street, a mile east of the Kremlin, last month's failed coup and the momentous political changes of the past five years have done little to alter daily life.

Some local evils have vanished: the Agitpunkt, or Communist Party propaganda point; the board for party slogans and pictures of heroes of labor; the rat-infested floating restaurant on the nearby Moscow River.

But for the average consumer, life is worse.

Bakery No. 121 still has the same proud posters telling Soviets to save bread "as if it were a member of the family" and to honor it "not as a gift of nature, but a symbol of our labor."

Yet there's precious little choice of bread these days, and prices are three to four times what they were last fall. It takes 10 minutes to buy a tasteless 70 cent bun of dough spread with sticky jam.

Up the hill, among fine brick apartment blocks locally known as the "sovminovskiye doma" (government houses), the food store is a shock.

Where shelves once stood empty, now there are no shelves at all. In one corner, a little bread was for sale. On another counter, there was sausage and rancid butter.

The word "dostat" — to get — always loomed large in shortage-plagued Soviet life. Now, the search for food is more urgent than ever, and triple-digit annual inflation drives a new, constant quest for money.

"The mass of people now suffer from apathy," said Andrei Karavashkin, 27, a university lecturer. "Just look at their faces, the mood. There's been no revolution here."

For those with no prospect of more money, life seems almost without hope.

"As soon as we get up, we run to the shops," said a 72-year-old pensioner outside her home. "That's how we live all the time."

Endorsement

The State Press Editorial Board wholeheartedly endorses Ed Pastor to fill the 2nd Congressional District seat vacated in May by ailing Morris Udall.

Pastor, a 48-year-old Democrat, was the Maricopa County Supervisor for 15 years before resigning to run for Udall's seat. He is simply the most logical successor to Udall, who spent the past 30 years in office, from a student's viewpoint.

Last week he spoke to M.E.Ch.A, a Hispanic student organization, and inspired members to get involved politically, become socially aware and to graduate.

He gives validity to his claims by affirming his support of increases in the Higher Education Act, an umbrella act for all federal financial aid, including Pell Grants and Stafford Loans.

Pastor is the front-runner in the race, ahead of Yuma resident Pat Connor by 22 percent. But even the polls don't do justice to this candidate, who is the most qualified to step into Udall's shoes.

Additionally, Pastor has the opportunity to break barriers for his race as the first Hispanic to represent Arizona in Congress.

As a productive leader and respected role model, Pastor promises to be the most effective congressman.

Constructive criticism

Education holds future, not white conspiracy claims

Frost
Mike
Guest Columnist

I recently attended two meetings of the NAACP campus chapter where they planned to discuss whether or not there is a government/white conspiracy to keep down the black people of this country.

I don't personally believe that there is such a thing, but I thought it would be interesting to listen to those who feel it does indeed exist. I looked forward to a lively discussion.

What resulted was a white-bashing, look-at-what-they're-doing-to-us session that was probably restrained in intensity only by the fact that there was a white guy in the room (me).

There was no discussion — only each person's story of how they feel their race is being trampled by the white demons.

It enrages me to see the real hopes of the black community — young, educated, ambitious people — become consumed by unsubstantiated, far-flung, conspiratorial claims, driving them to believe that the entire white race is out to get them, and that it is their imperative to fight against this phantom.

Black Americans have in front of them the tragic challenge of commanding much overdue respect from their own countrymen, and the most pressing issue they can talk about is how they are allegedly being wiped out by some unseen evil white force that wishes them all dead.

The waste this hate begets is enough to make you scream — and that's what I'm doing because I feel strongly enough about this to scream.

Among the allegations I heard are: The government introduced the HIV virus into the United States to kill blacks; Drugs are smuggled into the country by the government to kill blacks; Whites own liquor stores and gun shops in black neighborhoods so that blacks will spend their money on alcohol, thus killing themselves, and if that doesn't succeed, the gun stores will sell them the weapons to finish the job; The United States is still an apartheid state; The police are in on the conspiracy, along with most whites as well.

Those at the meeting who felt this way incorrectly interpret their own observations and do not understand that the source of many problems they face stem from our humanity rather than color.

With the exception of the first allegation, there is not one document anyone can produce that will hold up any of these claims.

There has been a study reported in a black newspaper about the government's involvement with the HIV virus, but a close look at the study would be necessary in order to make a sound judgment.

The other claims fall apart upon closer examination: Drug producers will sell drugs to anyone. There are drug problems in almost every country in the world. The Russians (I almost said Soviets) have been experiencing a sharp rise in drug-related crimes. Greed knows no bounds.

The notion that blacks have been singled out for drug abuse erodes when this simple truth is acknowledged.

Some at the meeting felt liquor store owners who line their shops up next to each other in the black neighborhoods are in on the conspiracy. They reasoned that blacks who live in these areas are more susceptible to alcoholism since booze seems more accessible to them than to others who live in nicer neighborhoods, as liquor stores aren't as densely packed together in white neighborhoods (supposedly).

There are those who will sell anything to anyone, and if there is money to be made in these neighborhoods selling Schlitz Malt Liquor, there will always be people who will set up shops to meet that demand. That applies to drugs, alcohol, guns, anything.

Implications of government officials, officers or agents in the drug trade can be accounted for for that same reason: greed. If some DEA agent with a wife, two kids, and a mortgage feels that his $34,000-a-year salary is not worth the risk he undertakes by pursuing the private armies of dangerous drug cartel kingpins, and he rationalizes that he might as well take his share of the loot since the trade will persist despite anything he could ever do, the enticement of money (especially if he is in financial trouble) can overwhelm him.

If he takes part in the trade, there will not be someone who will revel in the thought of the lives he will have a hand in destroying, but as someone who fell prey to greed and his own rationalization of the situation he finds himself in. As far as our apartheid status goes, there are not racially-biased laws left on the books. The United States can claim some of its residents as racists (show me a country that can't), but it certainly doesn't have racist laws. There is a big difference. This is no South Africa.

When I'm at home in Chicago passing through the projects at night on my way somewhere, and I look at the conditions these people have to live in, where it's so bad most cars don't stop at red lights at night out of fear (real or imagined) of being attacked, I try to think of any possible hope these people might have. One hope I have is that successful people who grew up in those neighborhoods will come back to help. Someone who is respected has to care.

Jaime Escalante cares about his students who live in the barrio areas of Los Angeles. He knows the only way to break the cycle of poverty is through education.

Where does this leave us with our friends at NAACP? If the people whom I sat with at those meetings think that slinging conspiracy allegations at whites will help them achieve their goals, they will soon learn otherwise. What distresses me is that the real losers of the battle will be those who were never part of the fight in the first place — those in the projects and the ghettos of the cities who need assistance and encouragement. Every successful reconstruction in history has occurred only when the community restores its own pride by helping each other.

Fighting always drains valuable resources. It's much easier to find someone to hate whom you can pin the blame on than to reasonably look at a problem — which may involve asking tough questions and listening to equally harsh answers. Ask Hitler.

Let it be known that there were those who vocalized their wish to stress the importance of education and encouragement. Such persons should be praised and supported. I only hope that those who wished to look for enemies will soon realize the folly in their words and decide to direct their energies into constructive endeavors with the others so that one day The Dream may finally — mercifully — be realized.

I'd give anything to see that day.

Lots would be chaotic without parking fees

Dear Editor:

When it comes to the subject of parking, the ignorance of people like Ms. Kamasinski astounds me. Suggesting that there be no fee for parking is ludicrous! Imagine what trying to find a parking spot would be like if there was no charge. Everybody and their brother would drive to campus. Even those people that live within walking distance would hop in their vehicles and drive. If that happened, the hopes of finding a place to park would be about as realistic as convincing the regents to lower your tuition.

Parking restrictions in the surrounding neighborhood serve the same purpose. How would you like to live just south of campus and have hundreds of cars roaming the street in front of your home every morning in search of that elusive parking spot?

Having to pay for parking encourages people to find alternative means to get to school. Many students and faculty (including myself) bike or walk to campus. Others take a bus, and still others car pool. All of these options help reduce air pollution and vehicle congestion in the Valley. So, Ms. Kamasinski, if you have a problem with paying $50-$100 for the privilege of polluting the air we breathe and clogging up the streets that we drive on, I suggest that you look into the many alternatives that you have available to you.

Cultural education should start with children

Dear Editor:
I agree with Dr. Michael Winkelman's article in the Sept. 11 issue of the State Press that states ASU students need more culture. However, I feel that the cultural diversity course would also be beneficial to the community.

I would like to see cultural diversity courses taught to our children in the early stages of their education. I propose by educating our children early, they would have a better understanding of why America is such a diverse and interesting place to call home. Hopefully, by the time they are students in college their views will not be as narrow-minded as Christopher Stroud's. Christopher Stroud does not feel cultural diversity courses should be a requirement. I feel these courses would benefit our communities because the education of our children will hopefully minimize the racial unrest in our country.

If the community has a better understanding of the ethnic groups that make up their great country, they will benefit from this by being able to live and work in greater harmony with their fellow Americans. Why should we expect non-Anglo groups to understand our culture when we do not attempt to learn or understand theirs? Cultural diversity education is very important to our community because I believe Dr. Winkelman when he said, "Democratic trends indicate that within the next 20-50 years, the non-Anglo ethnic groups of the United States will form the majority of our nation."

The laws of our land sometimes force Americans to accept issues that we, as a community, may not understand or agree with. However, as we learn to accept the norms of society, so do we learn at a young age that punishment will follow unacceptable behavior. We have more racial unrest in the undereducated segments of our society, thus proving that education must be the best educator for most social problems. So, if we do not wish to be educated in cultural diversity then I feel that we must accept racial unrest.

Martin Luther King Jr. was a clergyman who advocated racial brotherhood in the '60s and was jailed many times for his participation in protest marches. King wrote a letter from the Birmingham (Ala.) jail to his fellow clergymen of Birmingham in response to a public statement made by them. King was actually referring to the police officers' inhumane treatment of Negroes when he said, "They did on two occasions, refuse to give us food because we wanted to sing our grace together." However, I feel that this is a good example of people not understanding or appreciating a culture of a non-Anglo group. It was their culture that made them want to sing grace together. To prevent this from happening again, I feel that not only ASU students need more culture but that cultural diversity courses would be beneficial to the community.

Teenage sex the root of American AIDS epidemic

S Cody

North American

WASHINGTON — Seven years ago, public health officials in San Francisco made a controversial, but wise decision. They closed down the last of the city's predominantly gay public bathhouses, where men went for anonymous sex. They did so because the bathhouse owners had failed to monitor or expel persons who engaged in unsafe sexual practices.

But now, as a recent San Francisco Examiner investigation has revealed, there are dozens of new private sex clubs that have opened in the Bay area that serve as secure places for gay men to have sex. Is it conscionable for any private club to permit unsafe sex practices? Does anonymous sex between heterosexual or homosexual couples automatically mean unsafe sex? Does the final responsibility for monitoring private sex clubs rest with public health officials or the participants themselves?

The gay community in San Francisco says it has learned how to protect itself from AIDS, and recent statistics prove them right. The rate of new HIV infections has plummeted among gay men. Public health doctors in the Bay area say this reversal has been the most dramatic behavior change in public health history.

Regardless of how public health officials in northern California contend with a surge of new private sex clubs, the need to discover how teenagers and adults behave sexually and why, is more urgent than ever before. But, unfortunately, the nature of the subject matter lends itself to political posturing of the worst sort.

Last week the U. S. Senate debated the fiscal year 1992 Labor-HHS appropriation bill for the National Institutes of Child Health and Human Development, which included a paltry $7 million to conduct a nationwide survey of teenage sexual practices.

Not to fail his conservative constituents, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N. C., claimed that any scientific sampling of one's sexual behavior was inherently flawed because only perverts are interested in responding to such kinds of questions. In a stentorian voice, Sen. Helms read some graphic, sex-related questions aloud in the chamber that had been excluded from a previously defeated federally-funded teenage sex survey.

"What kind of parent would answer them?" bellowed Sen. Helms. "How degrading can we be in the awarding of the American taxpayers' money? Are we going to pay for garbage like this?"

Before concluding an Academy Award-winning performance, Sen. Helms couldn't resist taking a shot at the scientific community. He said any federally funded survey of adult or teenage sexual practices was automatically flawed because the "avidly pro-homosexual members of the scientific community" only asked questions of "sexual deviates" and "perverts" like themselves, thus invalidating any study.

Of course, Sen. Helms should be ashamed of himself for such a juvenile performance. And so should President Bush and Secretary of Health and Human Services, Louis Sullivan, who've buckled in to conservative forces within the Republican Party and defeated a series of attempts in recent years to fund surveys on adolescent and adult sexual behavior.

In the meantime, private sex clubs are flourishing as the period of AIDS mourning begins to subside. At the same time, AIDS cases among teenagers have increased about 40 percent in two years. Like it or not, teens are more sexually active than ever before. Half of girls have had sex by age 17. The same holds true for boys by 16. And yet, only one-third of all boys use condoms. Of most concern to public health officials is that 80 percent of boys and 50 percent of girls change partners within 12 months.

Opponents of scientific sexual research believe that studying sexual behavior only encourages it. The conservatives say that funding sex education programs that promote abstinence is the only way to go.

Like most public health officials, I wish that everyone practiced safe sex. But that is not reality, which is why Congress and the scientific community must cooperate in dealing with all ramifications of AIDS because it is destroying so many people's future. And this involves funding that gets to the basic root of why risky sexual behavior takes place. To close one's eyes to the real health problems of America, however distasteful, is the epitome of ignorance.

Coor to select board for women's commission

By MARSHA MARDOCK
State Press

Coor

ASU President Lattie Coor is expected this week to appoint members to ASU's first permanent Commission on the Status of Women.

The move is in response to the first of 49 recommendations made by the Arizona Board of Regents Commission on the Status of Women. The report, which was delivered to Coor in June, will go before the regents for approval Oct. 18.

The commission was created in October 1989 to define a vision for women in Arizona universities by the year 2000 and to recommend actions to achieve that vision.

"I will try to have it ready to go early next week," Coor said.

Coor, who received recommendations to form ASU's commission last week, said the report will have two major effects on the University.

"First, it really shapes the major issues that the University should be paying attention to and puts them in a way that the entire community can see them," Coor said.

"Secondly, it will provide a forum by which we can continue to examine the issues, not only to progress toward the goals but to explore other issues as they emerge in the future."

Christine Hall, assistant vice president and provost for Academic Affairs at ASU West and member of the regents commission, said the list submitted to Coor contained administrators, faculty, students, and men and women representing various ethnic groups.

Separate committees came up with the regents' 49 recommendations in three main areas:

- The equity area, which includes gender equity, retention, salary equity and recognition.

- The career development area, which includes evaluation and workloads, professional development and advancement, tenure and promotion, and faculty associates.

- The campus climate area includes family support, diversity and a safe working environment.

The commission also made general recommendations for areas of all-around concern.

The ASU commission will suggest strategies for implementing the recommendations of the regents commission.

Members of the commission also will make their own studies on issues affecting women, particularly some of the areas the regents commission did not examine, such as issues for women students, women with disabilities and black women.

The commission will give Coor an annual report and serve as a focal point for various women's groups on campus.

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents on Monday:

- Two men not affiliated with ASU were arrested for disorderly conduct in front of Sun Devil Stadium.

- Four men not affiliated with ASU were involved in a fight at Sun Devil Stadium.

- Three male ASU students and two men not associated with ASU were caught by police while fighting in front of Ocotillo Hall, 401 E. Apache Drive.

- Two ASU students were arrested, cited and released for being minors in possession of alcohol in Parking Structure 3.

Tempe police reported the following incidents on Monday:

- A man fishing at Kiwanis Lake, 6111 S. All-America Way, reported that his fishhook became snagged at the bottom of the lake. Upon pulling the line loose, he found what appeared to be a patch of human hair and blood. Police divers searched the man-made lake, but found nothing.

- An unknown person telephoned the manager of the Jack in the Box, 721 S. Mill Ave., and said, "We planted a bomb in the restroom." The business was evacuated and the interior checked, but no explosive devices were found.

- A Tempe woman was found dead in her apartment by neighbors. Friends told police she had been on a drinking binge during the weekend.

- A Tempe man was arrested for indecent exposure after residents at the Coronado Apartments, 1865 E. Broadway Road, reported him walking around the complex naked. The man said he and his wife had been praying to God for three days.

- A 53-year-old man was arrested by an undercover officer for sexual abuse and public indecency in the bathrooms at Kiwanis Park, 6111 S. All-America Way. The suspect approached the officer while masturbating and grabbed the officer's groin with his free hand.

- A 59-year-old man was arrested for public sexual indecency after an undercover officer spotted him masturbating in the urinal in a Kiwanis Park restroom.

- A 41-year-old man was arrested for indecent exposure at Kiwanis Park. The suspect was arrested by an undercover officer after he pulled down his pants and exposed his penis to the officer.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

BEFORE TRUSTING YOUR FUTURE TO ANY COMPANY, ASK FOR SOME LETTERS OF REFERENCE.

You put more than just your savings into a retirement company. You put in your trust and hopes for the future, too. So before you choose one, ask some questions. How stable is the company? How solid are its investments? How sound is its overall financial health?

A good place to start looking for answers is in the ratings of independent analysts. Three companies, all widely recognized resources for finding out how strong a financial services company really is, gave TIAA their top grade.

IN THE FINAL ANALYSIS, TIAA IS LETTER-PERFECT.

TIAA received A+ from A.M. Best Co., AAA from Standard & Poor's and Aaa from Moody's Investors Service. These ratings reflect TIAA's reliable claims-paying ability, exceptional financial strength, superior investment performance, and low expenses. With its guaranteed rate of return and opportunity for dividends, TIAA is one of less than ten companies, out of 2,200 nationwide, that received these highest marks.

CREF. FOUR MORE LETTERS EVERYONE SHOULD KNOW.

For further growth potential and diversification, there's the CREF variable annuity with four different investment accounts to give you the flexibility you want as you save for the future.

Together, TIAA and CREF form the nation's largest private retirement system, with over $95 billion in assets and more than 70 years of experience serving the education community. For over one million people nationwide, the only letters to remember are TIAA-CREF.

Report to affect years of ASU policymaking

By MARSHA MARDOCK
State Press

The first recommendation by the Arizona Board of Regents Commission on the Status of Women will become a reality next week, but the other 48 will likely take years to implement, University officials said.

"We're trying to stage the recommendations over a period of years because it is a vision for the year 2000," said Susan Malaga, assistant vice president for Business Affairs and head of the committee of ASU representatives.

"So the ones that require a lot of resources may take several years before we're actually able to put some of those things in place," she said.

University President Lattie Coor will appoint members to a permanent commission on the status of women at ASU next week, fulfilling the regents commission's first suggestion.

The commission recommended that all senior administrators, deans, department heads and supervisors attend sensitivity awareness programs to educate them on gender bias, sexual harassment and other equity issues.

Ruth Jones, chairwoman of the political science department and member of the tri-university commission, said the recommendation will be controversial.

"I think that is something the Faculty Senate will take a lead on, and rightfully so," Jones said. "It's not that they oppose the concept, it's that it calls for tremendous resources because it takes skilled people to do that kind of training."

Malaga agreed, adding, "Not only will we need staff to conduct the sensitivity awareness programs, but it would require people to take a substantial amount of time off of normal responsibilities to attend the programs."

Although the commission examined issues such as crime, safety and child care, which will affect students as well as faculty, the commission decided not to focus on women student issues.

"In terms of whether there are visible differences to students in the next few years, I'm not sure that they would see it as much as the faculty and staff might," Malaga said.

Salary equity is one of the most important issues addressed in the regents' report, she said.

"In fact, I think that that will probably be one of the ones that women on the campuses will want to have addressed as soon as possible," Malaga said.

Jones said the plight of women on campus is "clear."

"It's clear that women are by and large in the lower rungs of status at the University, and they're at the lower rungs of pay," she said.

Another area of interest for Malaga is performance evaluations.

"We've asked for a balancing of teaching, research and community service in terms of recognition, performance evaluations and salary performance," she said. "Women tend to bear a disproportionate share of the service and aren't recognized for that."

Jones said the recruitment and retention of women throughout the University is an important issue to her.

"If we are going to have role models, if we're going to get more women into engineering and business, if we're going to get women into high academic professional positions, if we're to have a strong clerical force, if we're going to have administrators that show that higher education is a partnership of men and women, then we need women visible in all those positions," she said.

Malaga said she was not surprised by the data the commission generated.

"I think many of the things (the commission reported) were things that many of us have known intuitively to have been true."

She added that the data generated by the report will lend credence to that common knowledge.

For example, women had received only one of 50 Regents Professor awards, which is the highest award a professor can get.

"That was shocking to us," Malaga said. When the regents commission brought the issue to light last year, five women received the award, she added.

"I think that that's a very important example of where, if you bring things to the right people's attention, you really can make some changes," Malaga said.

ASASU Finance Committee submits budget bill for approval

By MARGO GILLMAN
State Press

The Associated Students of ASU Senate will "most likely" pass ASASU's $823,800 budget bill tonight, a student leader said.

Finance Committee Chairman Alex Bouzari said the committee will present its final budget recommendation, derived from a series of hearings with college council and club presidents, for senate approval.

"We did a very good job," said Bouzari, a senator for the College of Business. "I believe it will pass because we have a high credibility among senators — they know we've worked hard."

ASASU's annual budget calls for $696,800 from student fees and $127,000 from ASASU fund-raising. It helps support 24 clubs and committees and the 11 college councils.

ASASU Executive Vice President Christian Hageseth said he "completely supports all of the committee's decisions."

"Some of the changes were very surprising to me, initially," he said. "But Alex explained everything and the justifications are reasonable. They're making good use of the money."

Bouzari said the budget is facing "the most amount of change in years."

If the budget is passed, college councils will experience a 35 percent increase in funding, he said.

"We cut from programs falling under the campus affairs and activities divisions, simply because some of their programs are inefficient," Bouzari said.

"And ASASU cannot expect to reach out to students if it doesn't increase college council funding."

Campus Affairs Vice President Alison Davis and Activities Vice President Amy Golden declined to comment, saying they are not familiar with the finalized budget.

"Some people I'm sure will be unhappy with the cuts, but we're doing what we believe is necessary," Bouzari said.

"We are giving more oxygen to the heart — more money to the services, rather than salaries."

College of Engineering and Applied Sciences Sen. Clay Haden said the committee did everything in the "best interest of students."

"Generally, the college councils have been untapped resources," he said. "The extra money should help them to increase involvement."

He said the committee spent more than 50 hours researching and auditing each club and council.

"None of our decisions were taken lightly," he said. "We spent an adequate amount of time on it, and all of our decisions were unanimous."

The Senate also will vote on amendments proposed by the Government Operations Committee, which would require a unanimous vote for ASU to pull out of the Arizona Students Association.

University Club committee to meet

By MARSHA MARDOCK
State Press

The University Club committee will meet at 1:30 p.m. today at Dixie Gammage Hall to discuss the long-awaited and hotly-contested dining and lounge facility for faculty, staff and community members.

While some faculty members and administrators look forward to the club's expected opening this winter, student leaders have complained in the past that tuition money will eventually be required to finance the venture because of insufficient faculty interest.

ASU began renovation of the 80-year-old Fine Arts Annex in January 1991.

"Every faculty club requires hundreds of thousands of dollars, and I'm not sure they'll have it in a few years," said former ASASU President Matt Ortega, after construction on the club began in January.

Current ASASU President Greg Mechem did not return phone calls.

To be a club member, faculty and staff must pay a $300 renovation contribution, a $25 initiation fee and $12 each month in membership fees.

Community members must pay a $300 renovation fee and a $200 membership fee.

Corporations or businesses with at least three club members must pay a $750 renovation fee and a $500 membership fee.

University funding will be repaid if advocates of the club can meet their goal of 600 members and attract 100 members each subsequent year for five years.

ASU Faculty Senate President Alan Matheson said the memberships are important because the University "has to be assured that the club is going to be paid for by the memberships."

Matheson said he expects the membership goal will be met, so the committee is not considering how they are going to fund the club if there is not the expected membership.

Membership declined slightly during the summer because of departing staff, Matheson said, adding that he did not know the exact membership figures.

"We're not even going to look at that because we are sure that they're going to have enough campus and community membership to push it over," Matheson said.

Matheson said the funding issue is misunderstood.

"They (student leaders) have misunderstood the concept because they have been fearful, as I understand it, that the payment on this club would have come from bonding money, which would be supported by student tuition," Matheson said.

"But the students are paying nothing on this building. The reconstruction costs are coming from private or other funds and will not come from student funding at all," he said.

ASU President Lattie Coor has maintained that no tuition money will be used to pay for the facility.

Another issue that has concerned student leaders in the past has been the liquor issue.

The Arizona Board of Regents approved liquor sales at the club, and many students feel that allowing faculty to drink on campus while students are prohibited from drinking constitutes a double standard.

"I support the concept of a place for faculty and staff to socially meet, but I don't support alcohol there. It would be a double standard," said Ortega in January.

An on-campus restaurant for faculty was first proposed in 1986 and was to support itself through membership fees. However, the club turned to the University for money after inadequate membership made funding impossible.

The Arizona Board of Regents appropriated $1.9 million of University money to the club in January 1990 but stipulated that a donation campaign be initiated to reduce costs to the University.

Coor required that $500,000 be raised from private sources before renovation could begin — a goal that was met in December.

The club will have dining and lounge facilities and a meeting room. A parking lot also is included in the construction bid, for which the Student Health Center's parking lot will be redone and expanded. Student leaders in the past have argued that the new parking lot should be available to students as well as club members.

"(The parking lot) will be taking green space away from the campus, and it won't even be for student use," Ortega said.

Meanwhile, Matheson said he expects more faculty to sign up when the club opens and added that many people are reluctant to join before the club becomes a reality.

"I think it's wonderful that you've got several hundred who have responded to something that didn't exist," Matheson said. "When they realize that this very beautiful edifice is on campus and open and they know they're going to have this fine convenience for them, I think they'll respond."

Levine said, alleging that the person alluded to the fact that "elections were coming up soon."

"I think if one area of the budget is cut, it's fair other areas get cut," Levine said.

Ruben Alvarez, the Chicano-Hispano coalition representative for the MCAB, said he took particular exception to Levine's comment that "(the MCAB representative) wanted money besides what was allocated to him — and that's what he got."

Alvarez, who urged Coronado to ask for an apology, stressed the purpose for the MCAB representative/M.E.Ch.A. member at the Senate budget hearing was to request that MCAB funds remain unscathed by cutbacks, not to request additional money.

"Extortion is a very serious accusation, and she better have proof someone was extorting," Alvarez said. "I've talked to Maria Elena, and I've suggested to her that she demand an apology."

"It's not that she's outspoken, but the preconceptions people will get (from Levine's comments) are very misleading," he said. "She slandered M.E.Ch.A. as an organization and MCAB."

rise in the level and quality of student services.

Arizona's students were hit by a 3 percent increase in tuition last year — $50 for in-state students and $450 for out-of-state students.

In 1983, in-state students at the three universities were asked to bear a 20 percent increase in tuition.

ASA Director Randy Udelman said last year's tuition hike has resulted in a reduction in student services and a 69 percent increase in un-met student financial assistance.

Udelman said he expects the same could happen again this year.

"Because we've received no assurances that it won't happen again, we're asking for a zero percent increase in tuition,"

Udelman said.

He added that the newest lobbying ploy seems to be having the desired effect.

"It's a good opportunity for the students to interact with the regents," Udelman said. "They have maintained regular contact."

The concept, however, is not a new one. ASA informally utilized the personal matching system during budget talks with the Legislature last year.

Former student Regent Danny Siciliano said he advised ASA on possible pairs for this year after the organization decided to make the program a formal part of their tuition strategy.

"It's always been done informally, but never like this," Siciliano said. "There will be a lot less false positioning as a result."

PITTSBURGH (AP) — David "Ace" Daniels regards his tattoo-covered body the way a curator considers his gallery.

"My tattoos are an art collection," he said. Daniels said tattoos are no longer just inky reminders of past romances and the preserve of "drunken sailors and fallen women." They have become a form of art, worn by everyone from hippies to yuppies.

"We feel like we're living galleries, living canvasses," said Daniels, 50, who runs a tattoo studio in Richmond, Va.

The canvas that is Ace Daniels was first etched with a needle at age 13 and is quickly filling up. Tattoos run from his wrists to his shoulders, cover his back and chest and drop down both legs. Figures peek from the collar of his shirt. A small skull sits by the corner of his left eye.

Bob Montagna, a tattooist from Malaga, N.J., said his craft is one of the world's oldest art forms. It dates to the day one caveman poked another with a charred stick and left a mark, he said, and has been part of most of the world's cultures ever since.

"It's ancient. It's ancient as time," Daniels agreed. The practice has evolved from simple "hearts and roses and daggers and skulls" to "photo-quality portraits," Daniels said. He said many tattooists are trained in classical and fine arts.

Cross country earns 5th place ASU gets 'learning experience'

By MICHAEL FLORES
State Press

Something to build on. ASU distance runner Todd Lewis summed up Saturday's performance by himself and the rest of the men's cross country team at the Aztec Invitational in San Diego as just that — a learning experience.

"It went pretty good for some of us, not so good for others," the senior said. "It gave us a good measure of how we stack up against other teams and what we need to do to improve."

While not ecstatic about his performance Saturday, Lewis said he was pleased with his third-place finish among collegians. Lewis was the top finisher for an ASU men's team that finished fifth in the 11-team field.

He improved on his fourth-place finish at the Aztec in 1989, a season in which he posted three top-10 finishes. He redshirted last season but seems to have picked up where he left off in 1989.

"Individually, I was decent, not great," he said. As for the team's fifth-place finish, he called it a good learning experience for some of the younger runners on the team.

Junior college transfer Bryan Stone finished 19th for the Sun Devils. Distance coach Ken Lehman had called Stone one of the team's "pleasant surprises" during the preseason, and he did well to live up to Lehman's expectations in his ASU debut.

The rest of the Sun Devil men finished as follows: Dave Harkin, 34th; Jim McCreery, 42nd; Chuck Belcher, 58th; Troy McKay, 87th.

San Diego State University alumnus Mark Clayton won the 8,000-meter event in a time of 24 minutes, 40 seconds. Lewis' time was 25:25.

"We don't feel we did our best," he said. "With some improvement, we'll have a shot at beating those teams. Since this was only our first meet, I think we'll improve a lot faster than they will."

Lewis also pointed out that it is difficult to be in the best possible shape at this point in the season.

Due to injuries, ASU ran only three women Saturday in the 5,000-meter race over the same course. It was not able to qualify for a team score.

Leading the way for the women was junior Sharette Garcia, who placed 15th. Junior Trish Huffmaster placed 23rd, freshman Christie Masson placed 71st and fellow frosh Cali Masson finished 98th.

Kristin Wellman and Jennifer Dander did not participate because of injuries.

Women's golf has 2nd after Oregon 1st round

From staff reports

The ASU women's golf team is in second place after the first day of the Oregon Invitational in Vancouver, Wash.

The Sun Devils are six strokes off the pace of UCLA after an opening-round score of 308 on Monday.

ASU junior Tricia Konz shot an opening-round 75 on the par 74 layout to lead the Sun Devils. Konz is in a second place tie in the individual standings.

Freshman Wendy Ward, who is playing in her first collegiate tournament, posted a first round score of 77, good for a fifth place tie.

Other ASU golfers include senior Julie Shepard (80), sophomore Tracy Cone (82) and senior Kim Millies (84).

The tournament continues through Wednesday.

Hill preaches self-reliance as key to collegiate swimming

By MARK R. DOUD
State Press

To say that ASU women's swimming coach Tim Hill has had a little success in his career would be accurate, but a whale of an understatement for this shark.

After eight NCAA Hill top-10 finishes in the last 10 years, Hill has established himself as one of the best coaches in the country. He has 39 All-Americans at ASU to his credit and 47 All-Americans at Southern Illinois University, where he coached before coming to Tempe. He's had at least a dozen with Academic All-America honors at ASU.

The main ingredient for a swimmer, according to Hill, is to believe they can continue to improve.

"One key to good team success is self-reliance," he said. "When you get to this level of swimming and you get to be 18 or 19 years old, you need to start asking, 'Why are you doing this? What do you want to get out of this? And what do you need to do to get better?'"

Hill's approach seems to be working, having coached all of his teams to top-20 finishes in his 11-year career.

"Self-reliance means you know that they're motivated, so you don't have to oversee everything they do," he said. "As a coach we have to have some guidelines so we can operate as a team, and yet you like to leave some flexibility to deal with people."

Hill knows about dealing with people. As a college student at George Williams College in Downers Grove, Ill., he had a job in social work, where he found himself working on the South Side of Chicago with street gangs called The Black Stone Rangers and Disciples.

"When the riots in Chicago occurred in 1967, I interviewed a lot of people in poor social and economical conditions," he said. "That's when I decided to leave social work and got back into physical education and coaching."

The calling to coach young people had actually come early on in his life, Hill said. "In about junior high I decided that I wanted to work with young people," he said. "I wanted to teach. At the YMCA I was in 'leader school,' working with 8- or 9-year-old swimmers by 8th grade."

Hill's auspicious career began to unfold when he coached YMCA teams for four years in college. He then worked as head coach six years with the Metro-Aquatic Program and the Sarasota, Fla., "Y" Sharks, where his teams won many state AAU titles and were among the nation's elite teams.

Moving back to the Midwest, Hill became head coach of the Joliet, Ill., Community Swim Association and finally landed at SIU in 1980.

While at SIU, Hill led his team to ninth-, seventh- and fifth-place NCAA Championship finishes in 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively. He coached 12 swimmers to the 1984 Olympic trials and had two reach the finals, and his 1981 USA men's long course team finished No. 6 at nationals.

His work in 1985 got him nominated for the NCAA Coach of the Year honors.

"Every swimmer had great years, and we had few injuries," he said. "The girls were very hungry."

ASU's tradition, including nine women's national titles, hard work and being consistently good, are keys to rebounding from the 13th-place NCAA finish of last season, Hill said.

"More than anything else is to get each person to realize their individual work ethic," Hill said. "To get them to establish and prioritize their goals and break it down into workable units to achieve those goals. Then we'll see about a top-10 finish."

Nebraska keeps rolling

Cornhuskers continue tradition of top rushers, top-20 rankings

By DARREN URBAN
State Press

There are two certainties to Nebraska football every season:

- The Cornhuskers will rush the football, often for big yardage totals.

- And they will be ranked in the top 25, something that is not too astonishing, especially considering Coach Tom Osborne's 179-42-2 record in 19 years at NU.

Yet every season, the Cornhuskers are accused of not being able to win the "big one," whether it be in a bowl game or a regular season game versus a ranked opponent. Nebraska has lost six straight to ranked teams.

"I guess it depends on your definition of a big game," said Osborne, whose team plays ASU Saturday at Sun Devil Stadium. "Statistically, I think we've won about 57 percent of our games against ranked teams we've played in the last 18 or 19 years."

"I think we've won about two-thirds of the time when somebody's ranked below us nationally, and a third of the time if someone's ahead of us. I suppose if you look at all programs everywhere, there are a lot of them that won't come out that well."

No matter how the Huskers have fared in the past, there is no doubting the strength of the NU program, an island of national prominence within the relatively small metropolis of Lincoln.

Memorial Stadium, home of the Huskers, is the third-largest populated place in the state of Nebraska, after Omaha and the rest of Lincoln, on game days.

Off to another strong start this year and after demolishing Utah State and Colorado State by a score of 59 points and 71 points respectively, NU hit another bump in the road to earning respect. A 36-21 loss to No. 5 Washington this weekend in Lincoln slowed the Husker charge a bit.

"(The team) felt bad about the loss, but we're going to respond well," Osborne said. "I don't think anyone's going to quit at this point."

The Washington game did not completely disappoint Osborne, who said his squad's offensive pace was nothing to ignore.

"I think we did a fair job offensively (against the Huskies)," Osborne said. "If you get over 300 yards and 21 points on them, you haven't done too badly. But we certainly could have done a few things smoother."

The meat of the NU offense remains, as always, the run, despite rumors to the contrary during the off-season. Their rushing attack has piled up an average of 427 yards a game, led by Derek Brown's 396 yards.

Despite the lofty totals, Osborne said the running game would be even better with currently injured fullbacks Scott Baldwin and Omar Soto at full strength.

But it is the emergence of Brown, who has gained 100 yards in each of the three games, which has been the biggest bonus for Osborne. The sophomore has already eclipsed his season total of rushing yards from last year.

"He's really responded well," Osborne said. "He's very durable and quick and has good strength for his size. He's not a real big power back, but he weighs close to 190 pounds and has great lateral movement. He's played very well."

The other key to the Husker running attack is the offensive line, which averages 288 pounds and is aided by a 30,000-square-foot weight room on the NU campus. Osborne said his men up front are definitely better than the 1990 version.

"I think it's a good offensive line," Osborne said. "I think the jury is still out on them, but I suspect they may be one of our better ones."

The Huskers' plays are run by a quarterback tandem, with both Mickey Joseph and Keithen McCant getting playing time. It was McCant who received most of the snaps on Saturday.

"They've both played well," Osborne said. "Both are good runners, good throwers and both are seniors who know the offense pretty well. They're good athletes who can run well, and they both have good speed."

NU's defense has been vulnerable. The Huskers have surrendered 445 yards a game and have had some mental breakdowns in the Washington game. That, coupled with the strong rushing performance by ASU this season, has caused some concern for Osborne and his young troops.

"We've got some good players there, and we feel like in time, we'll be a good defense," Osborne said. "But we've got a lot of young players there, and they just didn't handle the Washington offense as well as we hoped they would. So I guess overall, we've got mixed reviews — some good, some bad."

Snyder 'giddy' with start

By The Associated Press

BERKELEY, Calif. — California Coach Bruce Snyder cautions that actions speak louder than words, but he admits a 3-0 start and a top 25 ranking has him feeling "kind of giddy."

"The talking about it is fun," Snyder said. The Bears are off Saturday and then play UCLA at Pasadena on Oct. 5. ABC-TV will show the UCLA game to a split-national audience.

After an absence of 14 years, California was No. 24 in the Associated Press top 25 poll last week and No. 20 this week.

"I don't see anything bad in it," Snyder said Monday. "We welcome the national notoriety. We're trying to enlarge our recruiting base and this will only help."

Cal's 23-21 come-from-behind win over Arizona on Saturday at Tucson, Ariz., gave the Bears their first 3-0 start since 1979 and made them winners in their Pac-10 Conference opener.

Snyder said the club's performance was flawed by three turnovers and a number of untimely penalties, but said he was proud of the drive that started at the Bears' 3-yard line with 2:02 left and led to sophomore Doug Brien's game-winning field goal as time expired.

Cal will use their time off to let a few minor injuries heal. Fullback Greg Zomalt suffered a strained knee, backup tailback Lindsey Chapman sprained his right ankle, inside linebacker Jerrott Willard banged up a shoulder and cornerback Jody Graham pinched a nerve in his neck against Arizona.

Snyder said he expects all of them to be healthy for the UCLA game, along with starting center Steve Gordon, who missed the last two games after injuring a knee in the opener against Pacific.

Meanwhile, Snyder is enjoying the present.

"I'm kind of giddy like everybody else, but it's achievement that's important," he said.

Marmie keeps ASU injured players practicing

From staff reports

ASU football coach Larry Marmie said Monday that the Sun Devils are trying to keep their slightly injured players in as much participation as possible, while allowing them to get healthy at the same time.

ASU's walking wounded from its 32-25 victory against USC last Saturday include fullback Kelvin Fisher (groin); tailback Mario Bates (shoulder); and defensive linemen Bryan Hooks (knee), Greg Kordas (ankle) and Pat Mason (neck).

Each of the players practiced except Fisher, who Marmie said came out for some jogging before the workout and then left to be further examined by team trainers.

Marmie added that Fisher said he was not as sore as he had been during the weekend. His status is day-to-day.

"I'm encouraged by everyone," Marmie said. "Hooks, Bates, Mason and Kordas were able to do some things. We want to get them as well as we can and get them some work, but also protect them from any contact."

Wallerstedt tops Pac-10 list

By The Associated Press

WALNUT CREEK, Calif. — Washington quarterback Billy Joe Hobert, ASU linebacker Brett Wallerstedt and California placekicker Doug Brien were named Pac-10 Players of the Week on Monday.

Hobert led Washington to a come-from-behind 36-21 victory over ninth-ranked Nebraska. He completed 23 of 40 passes for 283 yards, passed for one touchdown and ran for two other scores.

Wallerstedt led the Sun Devils' defensive effort in ASU's 32-25 upset victory over then-No. 22-ranked USC. He had 16 tackles, including 14 unassisted stops.

Brien capped Cal's comeback 23-21 victory at Arizona by kicking the winning field goal from 32 yards as time ran out in the game.

PLAYING HOOPS

Wheelchair Suns overcome disabilities on court

By MICHAEL FLORES
State Press

You can find them at the Student Recreation Complex on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. They're there to play basketball. The first thing you notice is what a diverse group of individuals they are, ranging in age from their mid-teens to their mid-40s, all coming from different backgrounds. Each has his own reasons for being there.

Watching them prepare for the evening's practice serves as a reminder of what they do have in common, a similarity which ultimately brought them together as teammates.

They are the Samaritan Wheelchair Suns, and for the next five months they will be competing against other teams from Arizona and California in the Southern California division of the National Wheelchair Basketball Association.

The team, sponsored by the Phoenix Suns and Good Samaritan Hospital, is in its fourth year of existence.

The Wheelchair Suns receive a lot of exposure because one of their players is 43-year-old Neal Walk, who played five seasons with the Phoenix Suns in the early 1970s.

Sports trivia buffs might remember him as the second player chosen in the 1969 NBA draft after the Suns had lost the coin flip for the first pick, Lew Alcindor. Alcindor later changed his name to Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

As a 6-foot-10 center, Walk's strengths were his large frame and his long arms, which he would use to grab rebounds by the dozens. He was left paralyzed in 1987 after surgery to remove a tumor from his spine.

Now, he sports a graying beard and uses those long arms to grab rebounds for the Wheelchair Suns.

Walk also works for the Suns' organization in community relations. He gives speeches to Phoenix youngsters about coping with disabilities, describing his duties as "anything that brings the team closer to the community."

He feels that the Wheelchair Suns help to accomplish that.

The team is coached by Dennis Awtrey, another former Sun. In his first year coaching wheelchair basketball, Awtrey admits he is still trying to gain a better understanding of the game.

"I've got to learn their game," he said. "They tell me which strategies will work and which won't... and I listen."

Wheelchair basketball is much less structured than traditional basketball. It is also surprisingly physical. Sometimes it can resemble bumper cars, with players pushing each other around the court in an attempt to establish position.

As the players go through their shooting drills under his watchful eyes, it's apparent that Awtrey doesn't like what he is seeing.

"You're here for our worst practice," he said. "They're all in the twilight zone tonight."

Awtrey has great respect for his players as far as what they can do on the court and what they have had to overcome off the court. It is this reason why Awtrey has high expectations.

"Some of these guys have been playing for eight or nine years," he said.

He also pointed out that winning is not as important as allowing all 12 players the opportunity to participate.

"Of course they're not all going to contribute," he said, "but they'll all play."

Suns

As the team begins to scrimmage, it is obvious that Awtrey does not have to worry about getting 100 percent effort out of his players.

They play the game with the same determination to succeed that seems to permeate their entire lives.

The teamwork concept is evident as they go through their motions. Walk grabs a rebound under the basket, quickly accelerates up court, and with a nifty behind-the-back pass, feeds the ball to teammate Gary Ven John for a layup.

"Nice pass," shouts Ven John, a senior psychology major at ASU. He has been with the Suns since their inception in 1987. He has been playing wheelchair basketball since 1979 and says he enjoys it because "it's fun, it's good exercise and it gives me something to do."

Ven John is in his 40s, with thinning, shoulder-length hair and a mustache. He bears a striking resemblance to Ron Kovic, the character portrayed by Tom Cruise in the movie Born on the Fourth of July.

Ernie Smith, in his second year with the Suns, is the self-proclaimed power forward on the team, vowing to roll over anyone who gets in his way. Even in a wheelchair, he's a large man and appears quite capable of backing up his threats.

"That's my style," he said with a laugh. "No mercy."

First-year player Bruce Stultz can attest to that. He found himself in the wrong place at the wrong time as he and Smith collided violently at mid-court. Stultz was sent sprawling across the floor. Seemingly disgusted for having allowed this to happen to himself, he quickly pulled himself into the chair, turned and wheeled up court to continue playing.

"It gets pretty physical out there," he said.

The Suns play their home games in the SRC and urge ASU students to attend. The first game is scheduled for Oct. 26 at 1 p.m., and admission is free.
