ASU's ATO given 2-year probation

By ANDREW FAUGHT
State Press

The ASU chapter of the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity has been handed a two-year probation by its national office for mistreatment of pledges.

A report released Monday by ATO's national office said that pledges were ordered to perform calisthenics and were not allowed to sleep through the night.

Among its sanctions, the national chapter, which is based in Champaign, Ill., annulled the traditional pledge program, whereby students must earn the right to become active members.

In addition, it suspended all "social activities at which alcohol is present" until the spring semester and ordered the chapter to cosponsor a hazing workshop.

The notice comes more than a month after the national organization began its investigation into alleged hazing at the ASU chapter.

According to the report, "pledges were forced to take part in 'lineups,' where initiated members would question pledges in a demeaning fashion."

Leaders of the ASU chapter did not return phone calls.

On Aug. 12, one ATO pledge was hospitalized and treated for dehydration as a result of performing extensive yardwork at the off-campus fraternity house, 1403 E. Eighth St.

The ASU Student Code of Conduct defines hazing as any activity that has the potential to "cause undue mental or physical fatigue or distress, or to cause mutilation, laceration or bodily injury."

Meanwhile, the fraternity may face additional penalties from ASU. If Student

Slow membership drive not to impede Club plans

University Club proponents said Tuesday that a current shortfall in faculty and staff membership will not delay plans to open the long-awaited facility.

The dining room and lounge for faculty and staff is expected to open in January, but Club advocates still are short of their 600-member goal.

"We're at about 500 members, the reason being that we haven't had a campaign in the last year," said Lonnie Ostrum, former president of the Club's Board of Directors.

"We need to do a good job this fall to ensure that we reach that 600-member level," Ostrum said. "And I feel pretty good about it."

Lex Akers, president of the Club's Board of Directors, said the membership drive had been put on hold until Club construction was near completion.

Associated Students of ASU Executive Vice President Christian Hageseth and his roommate were involved in a brawl on College Avenue Monday night.

Hageseth said he and roommate Sean Stone were attacked by four men as they were returning home from grocery shopping.

Hageseth told Tempe police the incident started when a woman drove her vehicle out of a driveway without looking both ways and nearly struck them.

After they dodged the car, they continued to walk when a man in the passenger seat leaned out of the car window and asked the two if there was a problem, Hageseth said.

"We just told him that his girlfriend almost hit us, and (she should) watch where she was going. Then he

Regents 'relieved' by report's arrival

By KEN BROWN and KRIS MAYES
State Press

The Arizona Board of Regents responded to an Auditor General's report Tuesday that criticized its request to the Legislature for additional funding and the authority to delegate responsibilities.

Regent Andy Hurwitz, who said the board had already identified the problems outlined by the Auditor General's office, called the report a "relief."

"It was very helpful to us," Hurwitz said. "We knew we had budget problems. We knew we had auditing problems. And we knew we had problems with efficiency."

The report, which was leaked to local media Aug. 29, criticized the board for wasting time on trivial matters rather than focusing on policy issues, oversights in university budgets and violations of Arizona's Open Meeting Law.

On Tuesday, the report was officially submitted to the Legislature. It is less critical than the leaked draft because the Auditor General's office reviewed the draft with regents to correct possible misconceptions.

A spokesman for the office declined comment, saying the report would not be considered a "public document" until its official release.

The audit also referred to comments made by unnamed regents criticizing their own preoccupation with "minutiae that take away from the board actually getting work done."

It cited an instance where "not too long ago the board spent three hours on a campus skateboard policy."

The regents said they agreed with most of the report, which suggests legislation to allow regents to pass some of their less crucial duties to university officials.

The report also suggested the addition of more budget staff to give the regents greater authority over university budgets.

"I think the Auditor General's report is correct, but I don't know if the funds will be available," said Regent President Donald Pitt. "It's most difficult to assess what the Legislature will be able to do with providing more audit staff in a year when finances are still tight."

"Our audit is really no different than any others. Audit reports are designed to target what can be improved."

Although the report states that the Council of Presidents has repeatedly violated the state's Open Meeting Law, it conceded that recent mission changes made by the council exclude it from further scrutiny.

The council, made up of the three state university presidents, is not designed to be a policy-making body, but it often influences the regents' decisions.

"The new operating procedure, as amended by the minor pen-and-ink changes... sets forth a vastly different organization," the audit states.

"There is no emphasis on group decision making and no

ASASU approves budget; orientation service takes cut

By MARGO GILLMAN
State Press

The Associated Students of ASU Senate approved an $823,800 ASASU budget Tuesday, despite one executive leader's discontent with cuts to a student service.

ASASU Vice President of Campus Affairs Alison Davis said the committee's decision to decrease funding of the Student Orientation Service by $518 is "unacceptable" for a service that "has reached so many new students."

Davis said that the SOS was started in 1988 "so that the student government would be more involved with incoming students."

Davis said it has "already" assisted new students this year when its members worked at "Ask Me Booths" and participated in orientation programs such as "Student Partners and Academic Review Week" — a series of nine seminars designed to help new students adjust to University life.

The cuts will affect production of the service's publications, workshops and "Ask Me" buttons.

Finance Committee Chairman Alex Bouzari said the committee implemented the cuts because it will make the service "more efficient."

"We agree with the goal of the service," said Bouzari, a senator for the College of Business, "but not in the way it utilizes its funding."

Davis said the cuts will have the greatest impact on the service's "Ask Me" button campaign.

She said administration, faculty and staff members have worn the buttons in an effort to show support for new students and to serve as a "quick identifier of a source of assistance."

College of Engineering and Applied Sciences Sen. Clay Haden said the service can easily manage the cuts by recycling its buttons each year, instead of printing up "new ones with cute little designs."

"I don't think we should reward or promote waste," said Haden, also a member of the Finance Committee. "A new design is not a valid reason when we're facing a budget crunch and other areas like college councils could put the money to greater use."

But Davis said there have not been enough buttons to supply student demand.

"To say we don't need anymore is insane," she said. "We were about 300 buttons short of what we needed this semester. And we've tried to recycle them, but people just lose them."

"I agree with the recycling idea," she said.

The $823,800 budget will help fund 24 clubs and committees and the 11 college councils. It calls for $696,800 from student fees and $119,860 from ASASU fund raising.

In other action, the Senate voted to return amendment proposals requiring a unanimous Senate vote for ASU to withdraw from the Arizona Students Association to the Government Operations Committee for further review.

no fairy tale!

What people commonly believe about something doesn't always correspond to reality. Take the value of eyeglasses for instance. Ask someone how much a pair of quality, fashionable eyeglasses should cost and you'll probably get a price anywhere from $100 to $300. Do you know what makes up much of that cost? It sure isn't those small pieces of plastic, glass and tiny screws. You'd be surprised to learn how much of that price is the retailer's mark-up.

Back to reality
We're one of the nation's largest chains of eyewear stores, with over 130 locations throughout seven western states, so we buy our frames and lens blanks by the thousands. At very attractive volume discounts. And because we sell thousands of pairs each week, we don't have to make a killing on each pair we sell. So we're able to sell a pair of quality eyeglasses—complete with single vision plastic lenses—for just $59. And additional pairs, same prescription and visit, for just $39. Most bifocals just $10 more a pair. And, believe it or not, our low price glasses are as well made—or better made—than those you'd pay considerably more for elsewhere.

Doctor's Comment

"Your eyeglass prescription not only determines the focusing power of your lenses, it also includes a measurement of your eyes for the distance between your pupils. That is so your eyes will see through the lenses at the correct spot. But this only works when your glasses are properly adjusted to your face. Be sure to have your frames adjusted regularly, so your glasses can do the job they were designed to do."

Iraqi troops again detain U.N. team

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Iraq on Tuesday detained 44 U. N. inspectors for the second day in a row and accused them of being CIA spies as the crisis over Iraqi compliance with U. N. cease-fire terms appeared to be coming to a climax.

Troops surrounded the inspectors, who parked their cars in a circle to protect themselves and the videotapes of documents said to show details of Iraq's secret nuclear weapons program, its foreign suppliers and top Iraqi directors.

The U. N. Security Council late Tuesday demanded that Iraq immediately release the weapons inspectors, but in a television interview from Baghdad, the chief inspector said there was no sign Iraq was lifting the siege.

President Bush condemned Baghdad's "unacceptable behavior," and warned Saddam Hussein not to "miscalculate" as he did during the Gulf War.

"We don't want to see any more anguish inflicted on the Iraqi people, but overriding that is the international community's determination that these resolutions be fully complied with," Bush said in New York.

Underlining U. S. displeasure, a senior Pentagon official said 100 Patriot missiles and 1,300 troops would be sent to Saudi Arabia to ease that nation's concern over rising tensions in the Persian Gulf region.

And the 15-member Security Council unanimously adopted a statement insisting that Iraq release the inspectors and allow them to take whatever documents they feel they need.

Council statements do not carry the weight of resolutions, which may be enforced under international law. The council was expected to wait for Iraq's response before deciding whether to accept U. S. offers of helicopter gunships and warplanes to accompany U. N. inspection teams in Iraq.

Late Tuesday, Iraq sent a letter to French Ambassador Jean-Bernard Merimee in which it agreed to allow U. N. inspectors to use helicopters for their inspections, a major demand of the Security Council, said British Ambassador David Hannay said.

But in a telephone interview from Baghdad at about 8 p.m. EDT, chief inspector David Kay said the Iraqi still surrounded the inspection team.

Iraq sent another letter to Merimee on Tuesday complaining about the behavior of the inspectors, in particular Kay, who is an American.

At a news conference in Baghdad, Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz accused the team leader of being "an officer of the U. S. intelligence service," the official Iraqi News Agency reported.

Kay called the charge "completely ridiculous and untrue." Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams called it a "ludicrous allegation."

As for Iraqi charges that they had had "trouble" from his team, Kay said, that if his team had a problem "it is because we are very close to finding out the true scope and nature of the Iraqi program."

On Monday, Kay's U. N. team was detained for 12 hours in a Baghdad building after finding what they said was evidence that Iraq has been trying to develop nuclear weapons. Iraqi troops seized the papers, and although some were returned early Tuesday, U. N. officials said key documents were missing.

Jack Mann wipes away tears during a press conference in Damascus Tuesday following his release by Islamic extremists in Beirut. Mann, kidnapped May 12, 1989, was one of 11 western hostages being held.

Pro-Iranian kidnappers free Briton Jack Mann

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — In another breakthrough in the hostage crisis, kidnappers freed 77-year-old Briton Jack Mann on Tuesday after holding him for 865 days, and a Shiite Muslim leader said an American hostage may soon follow.

Walking painfully and stooped over, Mann was led by officials into a packed news conference at the Syrian Foreign Ministry, where he angrily denounced his captors for chaining him and ordering him around.

"This morning I started another dreadful day. . . . I wondered how many more months I've got to stay. . . . I wondered how much longer, how much longer, how much longer. Wondering how many more months I've got to stay here," the white-haired, former World War II pilot said in a hoarse, anguished whisper.

"My voice has gone after 2½ years of chaining, of saying: 'Do this, do that. Don't do that!' or 'Be quiet!'" Mann said, banging his hand on a table to illustrate the orders from his kidnappers.

Asked if he had any news of the other hostages, Mann said, "None at all." He started to continue, but British Ambassador Andrew Green interrupted.

At one point, Mann began a long explanation of how he was kidnapped in Beirut, but Green again cut him off when he started to meander. Mann sat quietly while officials made speeches.

As he was led from the room, he appeared dazed and disoriented by the bright television lights.

Two hours later Mann, looking frail but cheerful, he was reunited with his wife, Sunnie, at the ambassador's residence and they left for the airport for a six-hour flight to England.

Earlier Tuesday, Prime Minister John Major of Britain said he had heard that Mann was "a little unwell," and a 10 Downing Street spokesman had said the government was "disturbed" about reports of Mann's health.

Salvadorans reach accord on reconciliation issue

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — El Salvador's government and leftist rebels agreed Tuesday to the guerrillas' incorporation into a new national police force, a crucial breakthrough in the talks to end the 12-year civil war.

The rebels had demanded incorporation in the armed forces as a way to ensure their safety and that of their followers, and to secure an active role in reforming El Salvador's violence-plagued security forces.

The five commanders of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, or FMLN, were to have signed a communique on the police issue with President Alfredo Cristiani. But the commanders said late Tuesday that they were making such progress toward a comprehensive peace pact that they had decided to forego the communique and push on with negotiations.

Unresolved issues include purging the army of human rights abusers, judicial reform, the timing and extent of amnesties for crimes, and the use of the new national police force to curb the notorious right-wing death squads.

Under Tuesday's agreement, El Salvador's constitution will be amended to separate the national police from the Defense Ministry, which is currently in charge of all the country's security forces.

The political independence of the new police force, which will be partly composed of FMLN officers and opposition political figures, is intended to make it free of the army's influence, and thus able to safeguard the public, diplomats said.

The FMLN had originally sought incorporation into the army, with its officers inserted right up to the command level, but the Salvadoran government rejected that idea.

Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar instead proposed the creation of the new national police force as a compromise.

CIA officials say they told Gates of Iran-Contra suspicions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two senior intelligence officials testified Tuesday that in 1986 they clearly laid out for CIA director-designate Robert Gates evidence pointing to a White House diversion of money to Nicaraguan rebels.

The testimony by acting CIA director Richard Kerr and senior agency analyst Charles Allen differed from Gates' assertions that he couldn't recall being told of a White House role in the possible diversion.

The question of what Gates knew about the 1985-86 diversion of money to the Contras from U. S. arms sales to Iran has been at the heart of the debate by the Senate Intelligence Committee on whether to confirm Gates. Week-long testimony has failed to turn up any evidence that would stand in the way of President Bush's nominee, and confirmation is still considered likely.

Gates

But at the start of the second week of testimony, Allen's and Kerr's recollections pointed to several discrepancies.

Gates has told the committee in sworn written responses to its questions that "to the best of my recollection, Mr. Allen never mentioned to me or speculated that anyone in the U. S. government, including the . . . White House" was involved in the diversion, which occurred despite a legal ban on U. S. aid to the rebels.

Allen told the panel that he had met with Gates on Oct. 1, 1986, and again on Oct. 7 to express his growing concern at increasing signs that a diversion was occurring. "Mr. Gates appeared startled and disturbed that the White House would involve itself in such dubious activity," he said.

Gates specifically expressed concern at the role played by White House aide Oliver North, Allen said. Allen, one of a handful of people who were in North's confidence from the start of the Iran-Contra affair, said Gates told him he had always admired North but that "this was going too far" if indeed a diversion was under way.

Before going to Gates, Allen took his suspicions to Kerr who was then CIA's director of analysis. Kerr testified that he passed on Allen's suspicions to Gates, probably in August, including the role North was believed to be playing.

"I clearly mentioned this to Bob Gates, as well," Kerr said. Gates, in response, "expressed surprise" but "indicated that it would not surprise him to find that Ollie North was involved in such activity," Kerr said.

Gates has testified he doesn't recall the conversation with Kerr. Kerr said he believes Gates, and pointed to the fact that he devoted only one or two minutes to Allen's suspicions during a conversation that included other topics.

Pressed by Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., about what he had told Gates, Allen said, "It was clear that I implied the chain went from North to Adm. Poindexter," President Reagan's national security adviser.

Allen also differed with Gates on the amount of information he had conveyed to him about the suspected diversion during the Oct. 1 meeting.

Mechem disconnects students

Associated Students of ASU President Greg Mechem isn't as accessible to students as he once promised to be. It seems as though he has made the ascension to his third floor office with quite some ease.

The guy who stood out on Hayden Library's West Lawn last spring promising that his "door will always be open," had his phone number changed last week — to an unlisted number.

The guy who once promised to have open forums on the library lawn to keep the ASU student body informed is now complaining he can't find a microphone.

"It's a matter of getting a room, time, students to show up; that is my concern and it's more easily said than done. I have priorities concerning the task at hand," Mechem told State Press reporter Margo Gillman.

He hasn't even returned dozens of the State Press' phone calls for the past three weeks.

Mechem told Gillman: "Every available opportunity that I have had to rationalize in a consistent, responsible manner, I have contacted the State Press with reporters whose messages come to my desk and addressed the issues at hand as best as possible," Mechem said.

Maybe Mechem is mad that the press commented on his ASASU withdrawal bluff, but constructive criticism comes with any political office. It's our job.

Mechem's own executive assistant, Craig Welandowski, said: "He (Mechem) verbalizes his thought process, talks through his problems, talks through decisions. Because of this, he's viewed as being indecisive."

In other words, yes, he does say some pretty stupid things, but the press doesn't have to print it.

Oh yes we do.

He did act indecisive, and the student body had a right to know he was tiptoeing through the tuition tulips.

But Mechem couldn't take the criticism. So now he's being a recluse, keeping himself shut off from the 43,000 students he promised to serve.

Sure, everyone deserves to have some privacy, but it's almost too convenient a time for Mechem to become a hermit — during tuition talks.

We tried to reach Mechem to ask him why he hasn't been keeping in touch with ASU students — but he couldn't be reached for comment.

GREG MECHEM'S NEW AVAILABILITY POLICY

ATO grounded from phone

ASU's Alpha Tau Omega fraternity just got a grounding from its national organization. Daddy must have taken away phone privileges as well.

ATO has been placed on two years' probation because of alleged hazing in August that resulted in a trip to the hospital for one pledge. The national frat discovered that pledges were the subject of verbal harassment, demands for calisthenics, lack of sleep and work not performed by members.

ATO's papa took away its pledge process, alcohol privileges until spring and instituted a minimum 2.25 GPA requirement, among other mandates. Some members may even lose their membership.

But ATO must have lost its communication skills as well. Upon the announcement by the University of ATO's temporary suspension, which is still pending, ATO representatives promised that they would be forthcoming and open about any information that is found in the hazing investigation as it becomes known.

After a State Press editorial concerning hazing, ATO treasurer Brian Sbrocco pledged that ATO would be even more cooperative with providing any new developments in the national fraternity's review.

No word.

So how does the information about ATO's probation become public? It was leaked, not brought forth or publicized, to The Arizona Republic.

When ATO members were contacted by the State Press Tuesday for a reaction to the charges and reasoning on why it did not make any information available as promised, they, of course, did not return phone calls in the spirit of "open communication."

Won't take cultural class

Dear Editor:

This is in response to Kevin Myer's letter regarding "cultural diversity" courses in the Sept. 23 issue.

Kevin, I know you have provided us with some wonderful names; however, dropping your names and your quotes does nothing to convince the average level-headed, free-thinking college student that you are right. If Mr. McInerney did indeed say that he couldn't see "the merits . . . of Afro-American studies and women studies," he was right! There is no need for a "cultural diversity" course for one who does not want to be culturally diverse! Though that may knock you for a loop, because of its POLITICALLY INCORRECT VIBRATIONS, it is the truth. People have a right to think, however wrong their thinking might seem to you and your liberal rights activists. What is a university, set up for the sole purpose of free thinking and higher education, doing requiring classes that spawn thought policing? We are supposed to be the elite, the thinkers of America. And as thinkers, we must be free. Don't even attempt to tell me that a required "cultural diversity" class will allow one to expand one's thinking freely. Forcing students to take such courses will only bring them to bite back, becoming even more closed-minded and spiteful than before.

You closed your letter by saying that if we did not agree with the University's policies, that we should change them. If we could not change them, perhaps we should change our views. If we choose not to change our views, then maybe we should change universities.

Where did you think this up?

First, I am a student here, and the policies are supposed to benefit me, not to hinder me in my course of study.

Second, suggesting that I should change my views is a vain attempt on your part at policing my thoughts. You're beginning to sound like your "cultural diversity" class professors!

Third, never tell an American citizen that his thoughts are not welcome at a university, or anywhere for that matter! That in itself is UNAMERICAN! My thoughts will not be policed by a university. A state university has no right to require a course crawling with the "thought police."

As a student, I pay real money to attend ASU, and I don't consider it my privilege as you do! I consider it ASU's privilege to have my business, along with forty-some thousand other students. Anywhere in this country, when I pay someone for a service, they gladly do it the way I want them to do it. I expect ASU to do the same! I pay ASU for their services (teaching), and they jolly-well better give me the services I want, the way I want them. I can broaden my mind on my own time. I do not need, nor do I want to take a course in Afro-American or women studies when I have many other required courses to take. Hence, I will remain a student at ASU, and I will not take a "cultural diversity" course!

Cultural understanding combats racism

Dear Editor:

I am a Hispanic living in the United States for the last eight years, having chosen to learn the American culture. As a result, my life has been greatly enriched; I am happier with myself and with the people around me. My interest in the culture of black people is enabling me to delight in their success and feel for their problems.

Certainly, a great majority of the ASU white student body can make good use of the awareness courses, not so much for them to fraternize with us, but to enhance their personal lives and contribute to make ASU a better place to study. Racism segregates and intolerance promotes hate. It is only through the understanding of each other that we will be able to build bridges of cooperation, communication and friendship.

Puff, puff Dope smokers learn lesson about freedom

The door slammed with a secure finality that made two teenage friends and my innocent adolescence shudder.

The first time one becomes incarcerated reminds an individual of life's boldface reality. Perhaps respect for the law, in the simplest terms.

Freedom is swiftly removed. If you've not shared the experience, then please take my advice. It's not the occurrence one speaks proudly of.

Despite the advances of time, that memory is still quite vivid. Almost like yesterday. Shackled through that Cook-County process of lockups, paddy wagons (excuse the Midwesternese) and the a.m. court appearance, minus a toothbrush, was thoroughly humbling.

BUSTED!!!! No ifs, ands or buts.

My friends and I had possessed three joints of marijuana, and now we were paying the price.

The time our trio spent within the fourth floor of police HQ seemed to be an eternity, on State Street — this day's not-so-great street. Fingerprints, mug shots, and then the ultimate humiliation, your parents in 9 a.m. court.

It all became the deplorable schedule of being a drug offender.

We were released into our parents' custody. And I surely know two of us haven't revisited that sobering penal existence.

Yet when I spoke Tuesday with Scott Holland, the ASU chapter president of NORML (National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws), I couldn't escape that recurring 1970s flashback.

When I was smoking pot, back as a 16-year-old kid, drug laws, society's viewpoint and marijuana itself were much different than today. Especially here in Arizona.

In my lengthy conversation with Holland, I kept wondering if by chance his phone might be tapped. Or if Arizona's national role-model-of-a-drug-enforcement program, "Do Drugs, Do Time," might be keeping lists of NORML members.

The State of Arizona's methods of dealing with law-breakers — most specifically drug offenders — makes this Illinois boy cringe. This month's Van Halen concert was a true sample. To me, Arizona law enforcement is synonymous with George Orwell's Big Brother.

Enhancing my doubts regarding our democracy, Holland gave me the details of Zero Tolerance, Arizona's harsh penalty for possession. One seed, one minuscule fragment of a leaf, even a cigarette paper with cannabis resin and you're going to jail. There is no doubt.

Again, my memory's cell door slammed loudly.

"October 4th. It's a Friday," reminded Holland. "We're conducting an awareness seminar on campus from noon to 2 p.m. There will be speakers, T-shirts and reading material — all about the misconceptions and distortions of marijuana."

I marked it down and will show up. I'm also curious about who else shows up.

Holland brought up Jack Herer's book, "The Emperor Wears No Clothes." A book written on the history of hemp and the plant's benefits.

It was strangely informative and bordering on pro-pot propaganda. I then contrasted it with a documented report on the hazards of marijuana entitled, "Keep off the Grass."

It was nearly as one-sided as "The Emperor."

But what did catch my eye was the foreword by, of all people, Jacques Cousteau.

The wisdom of the hallowed French diver crept in with his concerns of external pollution, as well as internal (body) pollution.

"Furthermore, I believe that we need to keep all our senses constantly at their maximum keenness if we are to enjoy and take full advantage of our short participation in the miracle of life."

Thanks, Jacques.

And let's not forget participation in the miracle of FREEDOM either.

Rec center too costly for alums

Dear Editor:

I am writing this letter in protest of the excessive membership fees the Student Recreation Complex is charging ASU alumni. Not only are the alumni membership fees high compared to other athletic club facilities in the area, but they are also out of reach of many recent graduates.

I contacted several clubs in the Tempe area and found monthly membership fees that average $30 a month with a one time start-up fee of $55 to $150.

Unlimited access to the SRC, on the other hand, costs alumni $600 a year, with a $60 fee for those wishing to pay in six installments. Limited access is $75 a semester, but the hours under this plan are unreasonable for people who work full time.

There are many graduates who remain in the University vicinity, have friends who are still studying at ASU and who wish to continue to be part of and be involved with the University community. Belonging to the SRC and participating in its activities is a viable means for continuing this contact, but the cost is a serious deterrent.

Also, many recent graduates like myself are struggling with post-graduation finances.

In short, I feel that the current alumni SRC membership fee practice needs to be re-examined. There must be more affordable means for alumni to continue their membership and thus be able to participate in the many programs the SRC offers.

With all their other problems, now Soviets don't know what to call each other.

They have referred to each other as "comrade" since the 1917 Revolution. Comrade had a friendly, common ring to it, even when Comrade Stalin was having millions of his fellow comrades killed or executed.

But now that they've dumped communism, comrade is out. The problem is that after all those years, habits are hard to break, and they don't have new words to replace the old.

Obviously, they could use Mr., Mrs., Miss or Ms., but that's so formal. They would become like the English and have to take laxatives. And in the free, open society they hope to build, there should be variety and informality.

And that's where we could help. There isn't another country in the world where people have as many terms for each other.

Just off the top of my head, I can think of a couple of dozen ways I've been addressed at different phases of my life, and in varying circumstances.

Take "bud" or "buddy."

There's the traditional, "Hey, buddy, can you spare a fella a few coins?"

But Southerners use "buddy" better than anyone else. You can be a "good buddy" only five minutes after meeting someone in the South. And 10 minutes later, you graduate to being an "ol' buddy." And if you are short, you might be labeled "biddy-buddy."

A Southern introduction can go like this: "Hey, ol' buddy, I want you to meet my good buddy. Good buddy, shake hands with my biddy-buddy."

Then there's "mac," which seems to endure in New York. The last time I was there, I was called "mac" several times. "Hey, mac, move it, huh?" "Hey, mac, where you wanna go, make up your mind, huh?" Or "I don't know where that is, mac; why don't you go somewhere else?"

When young, you might be "kid" or "lad" or "sonny" or "junior." Then you move on to "young fella" or "lad." Then it becomes "dad" or "daddy-o" or "pops."

Finally, you reach the point when some kid or lad or young fella calls you "gramps," which is why you should carry a heavy cane to thump his head for the impertinence.

"Bub" used to be popular. I like "bub," but you don't hear it much anymore, unless you wear bib overalls and hang out with Indiana's jet set.

I once had a boss who called everybody "chum." I thought he was being friendly. But it turned out that he couldn't remember names, so he called everyone "chum." Even his own kids. They didn't know what their names were until they started school.

"Pal" is useful for that, too. Whenever I run into someone whose name I don't recall, I give him a slap on the shoulder and say, "How ya' doin', pal?" That usually works, but sometimes it isn't appropriate, such as the time a guy responded: "I'm not your pal. I haven't been your pal since you wrote a column saying that I was one of the biggest thieves in City Hall and should be in jail." So it's worth the effort to remember names.

I gather from recent movies in which young people shoot each other like grouse, "bro" or "blood" or "homeboy" are popular in some circles. But I'm not sure how well they'd translate into Russian.

If they ever develop an economy, the Russians will begin owning cars. And when that happens, they will learn to jump stop signs, cut each other off, tailgate, creep-block intersections, swing left before turning right and all the other things that raise the blood pressure of their fellow man.

So they'll need words for that, too. The most popular can't be printed here. Or even used with dashes. It refers to part of one's backside.

But high on the motorists' list of informal greetings is "----head." (If used with dashes, I believe that is permitted in a newspaper, so long as you remember to put the dashes in the right place.)

A woman who teaches a preschool class, made up of children who are driven to school by their mother, says that even the least verbal of the tots knows "----head" after only three or four trips to school. And those whose mothers often drive in heavy traffic have usually picked up several words I can't use with dashes.

And speaking of mothers, that is a wonderful, ancient word that has taken on a wide range of modern meanings and uses. In its most elaborate variation, it's disgusting, and those who use it should have their tongues torn out. But now otherwise decent people are heard to say: "I can't figure out the instruction manual for this mother," or "I must have hit that mother 250 yards."

But I don't think we should try to teach the Russians that until they have mastered the proper use of "----head."

You may have noticed that I have not used any terms for female persons. That's because I can't think of any that are acceptable. There was a time when one might call a female person "doll," "sweetie," "babe," "cutie," "honey," "gal," "darlin'" or one of my all-time favorites, "sweetpatootie."

But if you use any of these words now, the female person will become furious. And if you react to her anger by saying: "Hey, li'l gal, did anyone ever tell you that you're beautiful when you're mad?" as John Wayne said in about 25 movies, you could be dragged before the National Board of Insensitivity Inquiry and ruined forever.

Or even worse, she'll call you a ----head.

Probation

Life rules that the chapter violated University Code of Conduct hazing provisions, it could face long-term suspension of individual members or of the entire organization.

ASU officials have temporarily suspended the fraternity, pending the results of an independent investigation.

Charlene Cole, assistant dean of Student Life, said the University likely will render its final decision in three to four weeks. In the meantime, Cole said she needs time to organize all the elements of the issue into a presentable case.

"What we're trying to determine right now is who has jurisdiction over it," she said. "Should it be something that goes before the Greek Review Board or the University Hearing Board?"

Cole said that decision on who will hear the case will be made in the next few days.

University Fraternity Adviser Larry Kontz said it is too early to speculate on the fate of the fraternity because Student Life officials are still compiling information.

Kontz said he is vehemently opposed to any dangerous initiation rites within the Greek system.

"That is probably one pillar I stand on," he said. "I just don't put up with it. I take it very seriously. Last year, I did eight different programs on risk management and hazing."

Club

"We knew they needed the focus of the Club," Akers said. "I think the real selling point is the facility."

The Club will be housed in the newly renovated, 80-year old Fine Arts Annex on the north side of campus.

Akers said more faculty have not joined the Club because it is not open yet.

"It takes a lot of belief to go ahead and invest in something that's not even there," he said. "Once they see it and they start having lunch there, it will sell itself."

Student leaders and other members of the campus community have argued that the Club, proposed in 1986, would not be able to financially support itself.

Akers said regardless of membership numbers, the Club will meet its financial obligations.

"We're not going to run the Club at a deficit," Akers said. "We can't do that. We will make sure that either we get enough members so that we meet our financial obligations, or we will have to raise the various rates that we charge to cover the expenses."

Ostrum said the Club, as a part of ASU, likely will receive some money from the University.

"I would expect that there will be some subsidy," he said. "The revenues that the Club generates may not meet all of its expenses."

Ostrum said the Club will be important to faculty and deserves to be subsidized by the University.

"Faculty members pay parking fees just like the students pay parking fees," he said.

"They buy things at the bookstore just like students buy things at the bookstore. They eat at the union just like everybody else does, and if they're going to subsidize some things for students, it doesn't hurt to subsidize some things for faculty."

Associated Students of ASU President Greg Mechem, like many of his predecessors, said he is concerned about Club funding.

"Someone will have to pay for that public institution, and that would naturally come out of public funding and revenue generation," Mechem said.

He said the funding for construction came from Physical Plant funds, investment income and private donations.

Meanwhile, the Club's directors said renovation and membership fees must be collected by Jan. 31.

"The charter members paid $125 and are owing the rest," Ostrum said. "In fact, we are getting ready to send out to collect the rest of the money."

Payroll deduction is an option for faculty and staff, Ostrum said. The amount of money deducted from a member's paycheck will vary depending on the amount the member owes.

Faculty and staff members will pay a $300 renovation fee, a $25 initiation fee and $12 in monthly dues.

United Way makes push for new goal

By RICHARD RUELAS
State Press

The United Way is hoping ASU students' previous generosity will help "make a little magic" this year. "It will take some magic to make problems disappear," said Steve Patterson, campus coordinator for United Way, expanding on the 1991-92 campaign theme.

This year's campus goal is $225,000 — $30,000 above last year's goal.

Patterson said he hopes momentum from the "tremendous" last year, which raised $207,000, will carry over for the "real challenge" this year.

The ASU chapter received a challenge to increase funds by 9 percent after the Valley of the Sun United Way projected its needs for the upcoming year.

Last year 40 percent of faculty and staff gave some funds, Patterson said.

The United Way is discussing options for student participation. Although the bed races of the last two years will not be repeated, Patterson said, "We're trying to figure something that will be even better."

"We understand the typical, poor, starving students — many need to be on the receiving end of United Way, not on the giving end," Patterson said.

The campaign will start with a motivational luncheon today, including ASU President Lattie Coor's address. A $10 donation is requested from participants for the meal. If interested, contact Patterson at 965-4980.

jumped out of the car and said, 'You got a f--- problem with me,' Hageseth said.

The man began to verbally assault them, according to Hageseth, and then Stone and the man began fighting.

"I got hit a bunch of times and so did my roommate, but we hit back when we could," he said.

The fight grew when two friends of the man and Hageseth's brother and a friend joined. After allegedly damaging bicycles belonging to Hageseth and Stone, two men left the scene.

Tempe police arrested the two men who remained after hearing from witnesses.

Police reported the two men were intoxicated.

Hageseth said he and Stone plan on prosecuting all four of the men if the other two can be found.

"We're going to do everything we can to find out who they are because the people who got away are the ones who caused damage to the bikes, and I'm almost positive the two guys arrested know who the other guys were," Hageseth said.

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents on Tuesday:

- A thief stole a white electric cart from the north side of Sun Devil Stadium. The cart, which belonged to Marriott, was valued at $6,000.
  - An ASU student was injured in the Student Recreation Complex and taken to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital.
  - A resident of McClintock Hall accidentally broke a window in one of the rooms. Estimated damage is $70.
- Tempe police reported the following incidents on Tuesday:

•A man exposed his penis and masturbated in front of a woman at a walkway on 30 W. Carter Drive.

The suspect pulled his shirt over his head to cover his face before turning around to expose his penis to the victim as she walked in his direction. The suspect is a white male, 5-foot 8-inches tall, 20 to 30 years of age weighing between 175 and 185 pounds. He was wearing a white T-shirt, light green shorts and tennis shoes.

•A man dropped his pants and exposed his buttocks to a female at a walkway on 30 W. Carter Drive.

The victim said he may have exposed a frontal view of his genitals, but she refused to look in his direction after realizing what he was doing.

The woman said the incident happened early last week, but she decided to report it after she learned that "the same guy" had exposed himself to another female in that area.

Heidi Foglesong and Patti Kirkpatrick have paired up on KTVK-TV, Channel 3, for Arizona's first two-woman newscast.

The leading ladies of local news

Foglesong, Kirkpatrick see past the two-woman newscast

by Richard Ruelas

Arizona's only female news anchor team wants the Valley to look past their gender.

"I really hope that people get beyond looking upon this as two females anchoring a newscast," said 31-year-old Heidi Foglesong, half of KTVK-TV, Channel 3's newest 6 p.m. pair-up. "Basically, I think people are watching us because they enjoy us.

"If they don't like you, they'll turn the channel whether you're male or female."

Patti Kirkpatrick, Foglesong's 35-year-old co-anchor, said that "hopefully the novelty of a two-female team will wear off, and people will just tune in because they like the job (we) do."

Kirkpatrick was promptly picked up by Channel 3 in July after being fired by KPNX-TV, Channel 12. She premiered as anchor alongside Foglesong on Aug. 20.

"When I became available . . . there really was no opening here and they created one," she said. "What they did takes guts and aggressiveness — other stations with more conservative outlooks wouldn't have dared try it."

Bill Miller, Channel 3 station manager, said Kirkpatrick was hired because "our research showed she was one of the top people in the market, and she'd be a terrific addition to our staff."

Since her hiring, the "ratings have been incredible," Miller said, adding that except for two nights, the 6 p.m. newscast has been top-rated every evening since Kirkpatrick and Foglesong teamed up.

Kirkpatrick said her job change has "been a very public thing."

"(It's) not like you can just go in, clean out your desk and leave," she said, adding that she "was shocked to see my picture on the front page of the morning paper."

Kirkpatrick has "no hard feelings" about her dismissal from Channel 12 and said she feels "great fondness and not even a shred of bitterness" about her years there.

"It was a business move on their part, and I did what I had to do. And they did what they had to do," she said. "That having passed now, I can get back to the business of living and working, and having a normal life."

Channel 3 didn't have a lot to lose by hiring Kirkpatrick, said Frederic Leigh, associate director of the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Telecommunication.

"They were doing pretty well as it was. Patti was available, and they were smart to pick her up," he said, adding that "to my knowledge" this is the first pairing of two women on a prime time newscast.

Both Channel 3 and Channel 12 should experience increased ratings because of the shift, Leigh said.

"They'll be tuning to (Channel) 3 to see Patti work in that situation and tuning to (Channel) 12 to see Jineane Ford — how she looks and how she's doing," he added. "(Channel) 3 has the numbers, and it will be kind of hard to tell what impact Patti has."

While Foglesong and Kirkpatrick have heard of similar pairings across the country, Foglesong said that "because it's not done very often, in many ways it's a first, regardless."

There has been a surprising lack of negative reaction to the new anchor team, Kirkpatrick said.

"Arizona's a conservative state, and one might expect — anticipating what we're going to do — that there might be some negative response," she said. "But so far it's been overwhelmingly positive."

Foglesong said the role of women in broadcasting is changing.

Sedona festival offers choice jazz

by Mark Jas. Tynan

Sedona 1991 Jazz On The Rocks Festival
Saturday, Sept. 28

Verde Valley School Amphitheater
Performances run from 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Lineup: Jon Faddis with the Keith Greko Trio, Tuck & Patti, Doug MacLeod Band, Count Basie Orchestra directed by Frank Foster with vocalist Chris Murrell and special guest vocalist Nancy Wilson

Tickets can be purchased at all Dillard's ticket outlets or with a credit card by phone at 1-(800)-638-4253.

The sweet sounds of jazz will heat up Sedona on Saturday with the arrival of the 10th Anniversary Jazz On The Rocks Festival.

One of the festival's feature performers will be world renowned jazz trumpeter Jon Faddis, who will perform with the Keith Greko Trio. Anyone who has heard this California native blow his horn cannot deny his immense talent, style and unparalleled ability for musical communication.

Taking a break from a practice session in his New York home, Faddis explained over the telephone his past experience with the Greko Trio.

"I played with Keith and the Trio last year in Sedona, and it was a lot of fun," Faddis said. "I've played with (Greko) a couple of times before, but I really love playing in Sedona."

Greko lives in Arizona and has played with a host of jazz heavy hitters, including Faddis, Louie Bellson, Clark Terry, Bud Shank and Joe Williams.

While growing up, Faddis listened first to Louie Armstrong, but soon Satchmo lost the youngster's favoritism to another jazz legend, Dizzie Gillespie.

Faddis said that although he has imitated and looked up to Gillespie for years, he is now trying to go beyond what his mentor has done. Having just parted ways with Epic Records, Faddis is in the process of looking for a new record deal.

"Epic isn't really very interested in jazz, and I don't want to work with a record company that isn't interested in jazz," Faddis said. "So we decided that it would be best for both parties if I moved on."

Regarding his hopes and plans for the future, Faddis said he has goals both musically and personally.

"I want to improve my jazz piano playing," the trumpeter said, laughing. "I'd like to have my own big band someday. It's something I've always wanted to do."

"Speaking about life, it's very hard to be specific because it

"The fact that they are allowing two women to anchor a newscast really is a sign of progressiveness — where they are looking at somebody for their qualifications and their appeal. Change is good," she said. "It keeps you on your toes."

Kirkpatrick appreciates the more personal style of management at Channel 3.

"I'm pretty committed to staying here. That's probably a stupid thing to (say) from a career leverage standpoint, but I don't care," she said. "You hear things about the larger markets that are disquieting — the kind of politicking that goes on, and it's not my cup of tea."

No such politicking goes on at Channel 3 between Foglesong and Kirkpatrick. "Fortunately, yes, for the world, on record, Patti and I really do like each other — it's not faked," Foglesong said.

Kirkpatrick added, "There's some sort of expectation that we will be catty, threatening and intimidating to each other. (But) neither of us is that way; neither of us fits that prima donna-type role. We're pretty down-to-earth people."

Foglesong said it's comforting not to feel that threat. "We are egless — unless (Kirkpatrick) looks too cute. Then it's like, 'Where's my ego?'"

Foglesong — a mother of 8-month-old twins, Jamie and Heather — has been at Channel 3 for nine years ("In television that's a long time.").

After graduating from NAU ("The best school in the state for hands-on experience — none of this theory crap.") she worked for the NBC affiliate in Flagstaff for a year and a half. She started at Channel 3 as production assistant in 1982, going on to do weather and environmental reporting before she was teamed with Cameron Harper as news anchor in 1986.

"For some reason, no one remembers me when I bombed on the weather," she said.

Foglesong attributes her longevity to her "hometown roots." "People saw me from the beginning, when I wasn't very good, and they saw me grow up on television," she said. "If you come into someone's living room every single night, I think you have to have a pleasant personality. We can talk journalism and everything, but when you're on television people have to like you."

Kirkpatrick graduated with a journalism degree from Principia College outside St. Louis and has been in television news for 12 years, anchoring, reporting and producing in Minnesota, Montana and Kentucky.

In Kentucky, Kirkpatrick was "being groomed for management." "So when I got the offer from Channel 12, it was with the idea that I was really changing my career direction," she said.

As far as Channel 3's 6 p.m. newscast goes, Foglesong said station management is "committed to giving this a try, and longer than just when the novelty wears off."

And if it doesn't work out?

"Patti and I might be doing weather again," Foglesong said.

Kirkpatrick warned that the "one thing you can be certain about in this business is the certainty of change at one point or another."

is very personal. There are things in my life that I think I've been running away from, and I need to learn how to face up to them — I guess that's why I'm in therapy."

While Faddis' life may be troubled, if anything, his hardships have made his music better. It might just explain why Faddis' trumpet playing is so emotional and intense.

Many speculate about where jazz is headed in this decade, but Faddis' thoughts are pretty down-to-earth.

"I think we've been seeing, and will continue to see, a blending of styles, concepts and techniques between the various genres of music," Faddis said. "There's little pieces of jazz mixing with rock and classical with jazz — it goes on and on. I think that music in general will continue to change and contort itself to fit in with the new generations of listeners that are coming to the planet.

"That doesn't mean that old styles will disappear, just that they won't be as much in the spotlight as they have in the past."

In keeping with the times, Faddis said he does listen to some rap, citing Young MC and MC Hammer as two of his favorites. However, he doesn't really listen to any other "pop" music — he prefers classical and, of course, first and foremost he listens to jazz.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Specialists intrigued by a woman's upside-down writing found she's really a lefty who developed the unusual style, so she could see what she was writing.

Sue Colaizzi, 43, a tax accountant, turns tax forms and other documents around and writes upside down. Her clients sit across from her and read the forms as she writes.

"It was far easier for me to write that way from the very beginning," Ms. Colaizzi said. "My teachers tried to get me to write right-side up, but they finally gave up."

Typically, left-handers cover their writing with their left hand as they write. Many left-handers rotate their paper in some fashion, so they can see what they're writing.

"It's not uncommon to see these kids rotating the paper 90 degrees," said Gregory Slomka, a neuropsychologist at Allegheny General Hospital. "With Sue, we saw the ultimate logical extension of this. She rotated the paper until it was completely upside down."

Tests by specialists in neurology and psychiatry showed she was a true left-hander; she spontaneously used her left hand, left eye or left leg in various tests.

GIANT STRIDES

Montgomery uses work ethic to keep improving at tailback

By DAN ZEIGER
State Press

ASU tailback George Montgomery firmly believes the philosophy that nothing in life comes easily and that those who stay ahead are the ones who continue to work hard and not remain content with past accomplishments.

So it should come as no surprise that when asked the reason for his rushing success in the Sun Devils' victory against USC last weekend, the sophomore said his is simply looking to even greater things.

"That game is over with now," Montgomery said. "It's time to concentrate on the next game. I thought I had a great game, but the whole team had a good performance, too. I really can't say how we did so well, and that won't help us this week anyway."

Although it might be difficult improving on the 22 carries for 136 yards and two touchdowns he compiled in the 32-25 ASU win on Saturday, Montgomery said he is never satisfied with what he has done in the past.

It is the same attitude he has exhibited since arriving at ASU from Calumet High School in Gary, Ind., two years ago.

"Anything worth having is also worth working for," Montgomery said. "Nothing in life comes easy — nothing at all."

Montgomery said he remembered at preseason camp, highly-touted new arrivals Jerone Davison and Mario Bates posed serious competition for his starting tailback spot. He was also returning to the lineup after missing the final two months of last season with a stress fracture in his leg.

But the challenge was nothing new.

Montgomery found himself in almost the same scenario last year with Leonard Russell, the heralded junior college transfer who was expected to carry the Sun Devil running game for two years. But Montgomery impressed enough in practice to start ahead of Russell in the first two games of the season.

ASU coach Larry Marmie did not announce that Montgomery would start until kickoff of opening night, which made for plenty of speculation as to whether he would be ahead of the celebrated Russell on the depth chart.

"I don't think that it's something you learn from," Montgomery said. "But it makes you start to work harder. In the situation, you learn to compete more and push a little. You work harder at your position, and I think it helped me as a player and person."

But his season abruptly ended when pain from what were thought to be nagging shin splits became too much to bear three weeks into the season. A further examination on his leg revealed the stress fracture, and Montgomery said he knew the time needed to heal would be agonizingly long.

"It was very frustrating — mentally more so than physically," Montgomery said. "Physically, you know you're hurt and that there is nothing you can do about it, but mentally — to look out there and see someone else playing in your spot is tough."

Russell would start the rest of the season by exhibiting the talent expected of him at the beginning of the year. He decided to enter the NFL draft as a junior and was selected by the New England Patriots in the first round.

Marmie has said he is not sure Russell would have won the starting job if Montgomery had not gotten hurt. But although he has the achievement of beating out the first back taken in the draft at the start of the season, the humble Montgomery doesn't hang his hat on it.

"I can't base my performance by Leonard Russell (comparative standards)," Montgomery said. "He's a great

Swim coaches see school as biggest priority

Johnson, Hill seek self-reliance

By MARK R. DOUD
State Press

Getting student-athletes to perform at an extremely high level is the job of ASU swimming coaches Ron Johnson and Tim Hill, but compromising the student for the athlete in order to reach that plateau is not on the program.

"We're real emphatic," Hill said. "We sit the freshmen or new people coming in and say their

No. 1 priority has to be academics. If you get into a hole first semester, you put yourself in a really bad position."

Hill said a talk is given by an assistant coach at the start of the season. After that, grades are monitored on an individual basis.

"Someone on the staff will sit down with one of the girls and help her," Hill said. "They'll say, 'Here's what you need to do to get this done.'"

To the average student on campus, this might be interpreted as an unfair advantage for athletes.

"We're not trying to do it for them," Hill said. "We have tutors, but we're trying to say we think we can help you."

Hill said getting help for athletes that need it in time is the key.

"If you don't ask for help, a lot of times we don't pick up on it until maybe October, and that may be too late for some people," Hill said. "After the first year, if you're 2.2 (GPA) and you want to go to graduate school, you may as well kiss it goodbye."

The results of keeping "tabs" on the athletes has been good, but not perfect.

"We've lost a few," Hill said. "Some of them were very good students. We had a couple come out from good prep schools out East that didn't make it."

Not making the grade can be costly from the athlete's perspective.

"A couple of years ago I had girls that were struggling at midterm," Hill said, "We took them out of the morning practice. If they continue to have problems, I don't take them on the road. That usually gets their attention real quick. The meet is the fun part, that's the

Wrestling recruits may be best ever for national power at ASU

St. John leads group of national champions

By LORENZO SIERRA Jr.
State Press

Throw the crystal ball in the trash basket, shred the tarot cards and disregard the lines in your palm.

To predict the future of the ASU wrestling team, all you have to do is take a look at what may be the best recruiting class the successful program has ever seen.

Included in the class of 1991 are four high school national champions.

Pat Lynch, Mark Mollica, Scott Schluchter and Steve St. John lead the list of Sun Devils who will propel the wrestling program to the top of the rankings in the mid-1990s.

Training and conditioning coach Thom Ortiz feels the newest members of the team may outshine his class. Ortiz was recruited in 1985 with Zeke Jones and Dan St. John. The trio was the nucleus of a team that won a national title in 1988 and finished second the next two years.

"They're better prepared for college than Zeke, Dan and I," Ortiz said. "I think they will all be national champs."

If any or all of the quartet become national champions, it will be nothing new.

Lynch won the high school national championship three times in the 178-pound division. Of all the recruits, Lynch has traveled the longest distance to come to ASU, winning his titles at Ocean City High School in Ocean City, N. J.

"I love the area," Lynch said. "It's got a real good balance between wrestling and academics."

As for the future, Lynch hopes to outdo the class of 1985.

"We should win it (the national title) a couple of times," he said.

To win the title a few times, the Sun Devils will have to get four good years out of the four freshman, including Mollica.

While at Walsh Jesuit in Akron, Ohio, Mollica won the 171-pound national championship and the junior national title at 165 pounds.

"I like the atmosphere here; everybody is really nice," Mollica said. "I came here mainly because of wrestling and (coach) Bobby Douglas."

Currently, Douglas is in Bulgaria as part of his job as U. S. Olympic wrestling coach. Douglas' absence has put extra responsibility on team senior co-captains G. T. Taylor and Mike Anderson to mold the freshmen.

According to Taylor, the foundation the quartet has makes his job easier.

"Those guys already have a solid base as far as making the transition to collegiate wrestling," Taylor said. "The deal is to build on top of what they have. Those guys are really great workout partners already."

During his career at Edmund High School in Oklahoma, Schluchter won three national high school championships — one at 98 and two at 105.

Originally, Schluchter signed on with Nebraska. After the coach who recruited him left for Oklahoma State, Schluchter said he decided to come to ASU because OSU's wrestling program is in trouble with the NCAA.

"We should be one of the top teams in the nation," Schluchter said.

T.J. Sokol/State Press

Sun Devil freshman wrestler Pat Lynch (left) duels with junior Ray Miller during practice.

Rounding out the quartet of recruits is Steve St. John, who follows the legacy of his brother, Dan. While a Sun Devil, Dan St. John won two NCAA titles, at 158 pounds in 1988 and 167 pounds in 1990. According to the younger St. John, Dan's shoes will not be hard to fill.

"I got bigger feet," St. John joked. While at St. Joseph's High School in Cleveland, Ohio, St. John won the 132-pound national high school freestyle title.

When the older St. John found out Steve was going to attend ASU, the three-time All-American had praise for his little brother.

"He said, 'You made it to Studsville,'" St. John said.

According to Ortiz, the team may redshirt all four wrestlers. The decision will be made when the Sun Devils approach opening day.

Perhaps the most traditional reason to come to ASU was given by St. John when he said:

"The spirit of wrestling lives here."

Weldon perfect at pivot for FSU but faces test Saturday

By The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Casey Weldon's record at Florida State is perfect since taking over as the Seminoles' quarterback in the middle of last year.

Weldon, the nation's top-ranked passer heading into Saturday's game at Michigan, has led Florida State to nine straight victories since replacing Brad Johnson last season.

"For me, that's my ultimate goal to win each game," Weldon said Tuesday.

Directing one of the nation's most explosive offenses, Weldon has completed 75 percent of his passes in victories over Brigham Young, Tulane and Western Michigan.

Since becoming a starter, he has completed 65 percent of his passes for 2,011 yards and 15 touchdowns. He has 628 yards, seven touchdowns and no interceptions this season.

Although he started in victories last season over Florida and Penn State, the biggest test is Saturday before 107,000 fans at Michigan.

"Hopefully, we'll go in there and live up to expectations," said Weldon. "We're going to try to score every chance we get because we know they're capable of it."

Weldon has done so well running the offense, he has been given additional play-calling latitude.

"I like the way he handles and works with our ball team," said coach Bobby Bowden. "He doesn't mind getting after them, but he knows how to handle them. He's very likeable."

Weldon was redshirted in 1987 after a highly successful prep career at tiny North Florida Christian High School located about five miles from the Florida State campus.

"He was the first great athlete we ever had here," said Vic Culley, Weldon's position coach in high school. "We knew right away he was a special athlete, but we didn't know what a big time athlete was until he had graduated."

reward."

For Johnson, the reward for getting good grades in high school is the opportunity to enroll at a four-year institution.

"If they can't get 700 on an SAT test, they ought to go to a junior college first and then go to a four-year college," Johnson said.

A recent NCAA ruling called Proposition 48 allows a student-athlete with entrance examination deficiencies to attend a four-year college, but lose their first year of playing eligibility.

"I think anybody that's Prop 48 should go to junior college," Johnson said. "Admission standards have been perverted so that we can accommodate Prop 48. We have an entire junior college system in place to take care of people like that. Why should we reduce our standards at four-year colleges?"

Swimming and the other less magnified sports have taken fallout from the "major" sports in Johnson's view.

Much attention tends to be focused on how far the role of coach goes concerning academic progress of student-athletes.

"Sometimes the media and people think we (coaches) have to be responsible to get athletes through academically," Hill said. "I agree with that to a point, but you can't hold people's hands and take them to class. You can cover all the bases. But does that really serve the purpose of what we're trying to do?"

Sun Devils 3rd at meet

From staff reports

The ASU women's golf team dropped to third place in the second day of the Oregon Invitational Tuesday, falling nine strokes back of leader UCLA.

The tourney, which is in Vancouver, Wash. and ends today, is the Sun Devils' initial match of the season.

ASU has shot a team score of 631. The defending national champion Bruins are on top with a 622, while San Jose State is in second, one stroke ahead of the Sun Devils.

Junior Tricia Konz is the top player thus far for ASU, firing a two-day total of 153, good for third place. UCLA's Jenny Park leads the individual standings with a 151, and the Spartans' Lisa Walton is second at 152.

STRAWMAN II

EPA estimates that Strawman II, its proposed extension of hazardous waste rules into the mining industry, would increase direct costs to produce copper by at least 120%. EPA has yet to report any problems with operations likely to effect human health and welfare.

Should Congress authorize EPA to issue regulations that so drastically impact mining economics without fuller justification?

Hear David P. Kimball, Phoenix environmental attorney, address these issues tomorrow, Thursday, September 26, at 12:30 p.m. in room 116, Armstrong Hall. Sponsored by the Environmental Law Society, College of Law.

Montgomery

back — I was just lucky to hold him off as long as I did. Who knows? With two more games, he could have easily passed me on the depth chart."

So with the experience of having already competed for playing time before this year, Montgomery retained his starting job and has justified the potential that was attached to his name last season.

Although he played solidly in ASU's season-opening win against Oklahoma State, Montgomery exploded at Troy thanks to effective blocking schemes and clever defense recognition by both the Sun Devil coaching staff and quarterback Bret Powers.

While a 43-yard touchdown in the second period was the longest run of his career, an 8-yard score just before halftime better fits the Montgomery mold. Unlike other tailbacks, Montgomery doesn't hesitate to lower his shoulder and run over a defender on occasion.

He did just that on his second touchdown, as he took a draw to the left side and barreled over USC safety Lamont Hollinquest on his way to the end zone. The score gave ASU a 25-10 halftime lead on its way to the spirit-lifting upset.

"I like to think of myself as a physical back — more than a slashing-type runner or a breaking back," Montgomery said. "But different things happen in different situations, and you have to adjust to them."

What makes Montgomery look forward to the rest of the season with added excitement is that his mother, Essie, has moved to Tempe from Gary and will get to see her son play live on a regular basis.

Montgomery said he hopes to continue to exhibit physical play — as well as impressive statistics — with his biggest fan now often in the stands.

ASU Note

Four of ASU's five injured players from Saturday's game — tailback Mario Bates (shoulder) and defensive linemen Bryan Hooks (knee), Greg Kordas (ankle) and Pat Mason (neck) — all practiced on Wednesday.

The other, fullback Kelvin Fisher (groin) jogged before practiced but left to be further examined by trainers. Sun Devil coach Larry Marmie said his status is still day-to-day.

What kind of day will tomorrow be? To find out what the stars say, read the forecast given for your birth sign.

FOR THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1991

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19)
Though the p.m. is favorable for dating, there may be some stresses and strains in a relationship before then. You may have mixed feelings about a possible trip.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20)
Partners are in-agreement about a business concern, but may differ about a home matter. Evening hours are favorable for romance and entertaining others.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20)
For a while today, you feel no one understands you, but by nightfall you'll be in perfect harmony with a romantic interest. Defuse tension on the job.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22)
It may be difficult to concentrate on one project today. A household or office appliance could need servicing. Business and pleasure mix to your advantage now.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22)
Social plans may be changed now, but the alternative will be to your liking. A home problem still concerns you. Evening is tailor-made for romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22)
You may not get as much privacy as you'd like now. A problem with a family member is resolved favorably by nightfall. Evening hours signal happy domesticity.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22)
Though tonight brings you a happy social times, earlier in the day you may have a difference with a friend about money. Some will meet with a new romance now.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)
Business negotiations may bog down for a while today, but you'll end up a winner. Accent charm rather than will power in your dealings with others.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)
You may have mixed feelings about a trip. Some have concern now about a matter of conscience. Personality is a plus tonight. Cultural interests appeal.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)
Business negotiations are definitely complicated now and you should engage in further research before committing yourself. Late-night promises fun times and romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)
You and a partner may differ about whom to invite to a party. Competitors in business are tricky. Evening hours find you happy in the company of friends and loved ones.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to Mar. 20)
A higher-up may be hard to convince now and a co-worker may be hard to get along with, but you'll rise over these difficulties to victory by the end of the day.

YOU BORN TODAY are intellectual, practical, and introspective. Usually you're a good money maker, but are more often found in the arts than business. You are ambitious and know how to commercialize your creative talents. Sculpture, literature, music, and theater are some of the fields which promise you fulfillment. Though idealistic, you usually have an eye out for the main chance. Birthdate of: T.S. Eliot, poet; George Gershwin, composer; and Julie London, singer.
