Regents hear pleas for no tuition hike

150 show for meeting at UofA

By KEN BROWN and KRIS MAYES
State Press

About 150 students gathered at UofA Wednesday to give personal testimony on their struggles in paying for college in what was the first of three open hearings pitching a tuition freeze to the Arizona Board of Regents for next year.

"I am not the typical student affected by tuition hikes," said Derek Lewis, a UofA sophomore chemical engineering major. "They (typical students) are either at their job right now or praying for their next paycheck."

A tuition freeze is one of three options before the regents, an alternative to two other plans that would increase tuition $263 and $525 per year for non-residents. The latter two plans have yet to address resident tuition.

The regents gave a 30-minute presentation on tuition and funding issues, and then listened for more than two hours as students told their heartfelt stories of financial need.

UofA history senior Pamela O'Brien brought her 4-year-old daughter to the hearing, telling the regents that a tuition hike without increased financial aid would make it impossible to continue at the university.

"We live on $5,000 a year — that's below poverty level," she said. "(Last year's $50 increase) may not seem much to you, but to me it means half of my monthly grocery bill."

Lee Knight, student body president at UofA, said the regents seemed to take the students' pleas to heart.

"I think it's really important for the regents to see the people they affect," she said. "It's important to see names and faces and to hear their stories."

Students made aware of alcoholic influence

By KRISTINE HART

Heather Lusch said it was "so hard to stand there and look at the coffin."

"All I could do was ask myself why he died of something so stupid, something that never should have happened," said Lusch, her voice cracking. "His head flew forward so hard, and then back again, and his brain stem just snapped."

"He was still breathing, but he was dead — his brain was severed," Lusch said about her cousin, John Watkins, an ASU architecture major who was killed when a drunk driver slammed into the back of a friend's car parked on the side of a Maryland highway in July.

Lusch stopped to write her story on a card at "The Wall," a portable bulletin board covered with multicolored note cards. It is one of several displays at the Cady Mall Octoberfest, a Chi Omega sorority and ASU Student Health presentation to promote National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week. ASU is one of more than 3,000 colleges participating nationwide.

The event, which will end Friday, also features alternative beverage sampling and a bartending class. The message of the presentation is to drink in moderation.

During the week, students like Lusch have written and read stories on the wall about alcohol — and how it has impacted their lives.

"This is so sad," said Laura, a junior education major who asked to not be identified, reading an orange note card. "They're all so sad."

Laura said she works in a hospital and sees the vials of blood taken from people who have been arrested for DUI.

"They (the vials) usually start coming in around nine or 10 o'clock on weekends," she said. "Sometimes there are so many."

"Alcohol was everything -- nothing else mattered. It became an obsession."

--Chris Morrill, art major

Junior Chris Morrill, an art major, put his own story up on the board. Morrill said he started drinking in high school but didn't have a problem with it until he attended college at the Rochester Institute of Technology.

"Alcohol was everything — nothing else mattered," he said. "It became an obsession."

Morrill said he now attends a rehabilitation program and has been dry for 16 months.

"I don't crave alcohol anymore," he said. But Morrill said he still sometimes craves marijuana. "The smell brings back memories."

"I just have to walk away."

Officials practice for stadium beer sales

By KEN BROWN
State Press

ASU officials simulated a typical beer sales setup Wednesday to prepare for a two-game experiment which will allow alcohol consumption in Sun Devil Stadium for the first time in its history.

The regents held the practice at a press conference designed to prevent confusion at this Sunday's Phoenix Cardinals football game against Atlanta — the first half of an experiment mandated last month by the Arizona Board of Regents.

Stadium patrons will have their choice — one beer at a time — of Miller Light, Miller Genuine Draft or Foster's beer, which will be distributed at 13 locations on the lower level concourse.

The Miller beers will cost $3 per 14-ounce cup, and Foster's will sell for $4 in the same size cup. Sales will begin when the stadium gates open and continue until the beginning of the third quarter of the game.

"We felt that if we're going to serve alcohol for the first time, we'd better explain how we plan to do it so there wouldn't be a big circus," Stadium Manager Tom Sadler said. "Not that it won't be on Sunday anyway."

The experiment is intended to serve as the initial step in settling nearly three years of controversy over whether the current alcohol policy, which allows drinking in the skyboxes but not in the stands, is discriminatory.

Although fans cannot take alcohol into the general seating areas, television monitors will allow them to watch the game while drinking.

An additional 80 security employees will help ensure beer patrons keep their drinking in the lower concourse and remain peaceful — two concerns of people who spoke out

English TAs seek benefits for all assistants

By MARGO GILLMAN
State Press

A committee representing English teaching assistants will seek in-state tuition waivers for all teaching and graduate assistants statewide, its leader said, despite previous plans to focus only on its department.

"We've decided to support the Graduate Student Association's efforts to get waivers for all TAs and GAs," said Jeff Martens, who heads the Ad Hoc Committee of the Graduate Students in English Association. "We realize they share some of our concerns."

The committee acted independently of the Graduate Student Council when it planned to stage a rally Sept. 26 to support tuition waivers only for English TAs.

As a result, the GSA withdrew its support of the committee, and the committee refused to collaborate with GSA.

The rally was canceled after committee members met with administrators, who advised them to work with the entire TA population.

Martens said the decision to rejoin forces with the Graduate Student Council was introduced in Resolution 2 of a three-part proposal passed at a GSEA meeting last week.

GSA Director Scott Mathews said he is confident the committee "will work with us."

"They don't see themselves as unique anymore," he said. "Before, they were tied up in their own department, but now they've seen what's going on in the University."

The committee will present the resolutions to Milton Glick, senior vice president and provost, and Art Carter, dean of Student Life, at a meeting Oct. 30.

If GSEA fails to pursue the issues at hand, Martens said, the committee will "take matters into our own hands."

"We have a time line," he said, adding that they requested an administrative response by Dec. 1. "We don't want to have to wait around any longer until our problems are addressed."

The other two resolutions are centered solely on English TA issues, Martens said.

Resolution 1 is asking that English TAs receive a raise in stipends, equivalent to the highest paid TAs, who are in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

It also calls for a drop in the English TA workload from four to three classes each year.

"The teaching load is more important than the money," Martens said. "We want to be able to teach and do our own work the most."

"But the raise would allow me to teach one class, hold one class and handle my own classes," he added.

Resolution 3 requests Glick and Carter to respond to their plan by Dec. 1.

Mathews said the administrative deadline request is "inappropriate."

"I don't believe in pushing deadlines," he said. "It's a complicated process, and people are working on it."

"You have control over your own deadlines but not over other's. The pressure will only make it harder to work together."

Although he has not been informed of the resolutions, Glick said the request for an administrative response will be met.

"We will certainly let them know by Dec. 1 what we've learned," he said. "But I don't know if we'll have answers for them."

Glick said he is not familiar enough with the other resolutions to make comments.

"Improving things for graduate and teaching assistants is a goal we all have," Glick said. "But I can't predict what will happen and when it will happen by."

GSEA President Jesse Swan said GSEA is confident that the administration will speedily assist the TAs.

"They have been very responsive and sympathetic to us ever since we approached them," he said. "I can't imagine that solutions won't be made."

"But if it takes a while, we'll continue to press the issues — until they come to the forefront."

Gunman slays 22, then kills self

Texas massacre worst mass shooting in U.S. history

KILLEEN, Texas (AP) — A man smashed a pickup truck through a restaurant window Wednesday and fired on the lunchtime crowd with a high-powered pistol, killing 22 people in the deadliest mass shooting in U.S. history, authorities said.

The gunman later killed himself in a restaurant bathroom, police said.

The man shouted, "This is what Bell County has done to me!" before opening fire on customers and employees at Luby's Cafeteria.

At least 20 others were wounded, hospitals reported. One Luby's employee, Maria Serna, 41, was treated for hypothermia after she hid in a restaurant freezer for 2½ hours, unaware it was safe to come out, said Metroplex Hospital spokesman Ricky Seiler.

The restaurant, part of a chain of 151 cafeterias in nine states, is particularly popular with older people. It was jammed with lunchtime patrons Wednesday, including some who were there for "Boss's Day" celebrations, witnesses said.

Killeen Police Chief F. L. Giacomozzi said he didn't know what prompted the rampage. There was no immediate explanation of what grievance the gunman had against Bell County, where Killeen is situated. Another witness, Angela Wilson, said he yelled about Belton or Dayton. Belton is 15 miles from Killeen, and there is a Dayton near Houston.

News reports Wednesday night identified the gunman as George Hennard, 35, of Belton, but police wouldn't confirm that.

In just minutes, the gunman turned a corner of this suburban central Texas town into a bloody, warlike scene, where police and emergency crews rushed about with bodies and the wounded, and shocked survivors sat shaking and comforting each other on the pavement outside.

Six hours after the shootings, bodies remained in the restaurant. A refrigerated truck had pulled up outside. Victims were to be transported to Parkland Hospital in Dallas for autopsies.

The gunman fired rounds from a semiautomatic weapon for about 10 minutes, then shot himself in the head, said Lauren Chernow, a department of public safety spokeswoman.

Wilson, 24, who had just arrived for work, said she was among about 100 people in the cafeteria when the blue pickup shattered the plate-glass window.

Giacomozzi said the gunman was wounded by police, but he was unsure how many times he was hit.

Sheldon Smith, a porter at Luby's, said that after the gunman shouted out his anger at Bell County, a man he had run over was shot as he tried to get up.

"Then he pointed toward the line where the service was and he started shooting down the line," Smith said.

Killed were 14 women, eight men and the gunman, Giacomozzi said. None of the dead were children.

Police inspect the interior of Luby's Cafeteria in Killeen Texas, where a gunman smashed a pickup truck through the front window Wednesday during lunchtime killing 23 people, including himself, with semi-automatic gunfire.

The gunman wielded a Glock 9mm semiautomatic pistol, said Mike Cox, a department of public safety spokesman. The Austrian-made gun usually carries a 17-round magazine and is commonly used by police departments.

"I was at the counter. I was pretty close to the man," said Vickie Large. "I saw his face and he started shooting everywhere. He was mad."

"I was scared," she said. "He didn't say nothing when he was shoot'ing."

"He was killing people everywhere. He didn't care who," she said.

The gunman reloaded his weapon and kept shooting, witnesses said. Giacomozzi said the gunman had at least one pistol but he didn't know the caliber.

The death toll surpassed the July 18, 1984, slayings in San Ysidro, Calif., when James Oliver Huberty opened fire at a McDonald's restaurant, killing 21 before he was fatally shot.

Once the shooting started, the gunman "was firing at anything he could shoot," said Sam Wink, another witness. He told CNN the gunman had "tons" of ammunition.

"He looked right at me and pointed the pistol," he said. "I thought I bought the farm, but a lady close to me got up to run. He turned and fired at her and I immediately scrambled to my feet and got to the back of the building."

The police chief said he didn't know how much ammunition the man had, but that he "wasn't out of bullets when the officers got there."

Wink ran through a broken window at the back of the restaurant, he said. Giacomozzi said someone had smashed the window, allowing several people to escape.

Bush wants change in confirmation process

WASHINGTON (AP) — After a brawl that left scant joy in victory, President Bush vowed Wednesday to push for a changes in the Senate's confirmation process, while Democrats said he must share the blame for the spectacle that Clarence Thomas's nomination became.

Bush

"There's general agreement around the country and certainly in the Senate that the present process is not fair," Bush said, a day after Thomas' confirmation to the Supreme Court, by two votes to spare, ended one of the most bitter and inflammatory nomination battles ever.

Thomas was expected to take his seat at the court on Monday. Officials said he may visit the White House this week to take an oath to uphold the Constitution. He must take a second, judicial oath, probably Monday morning at the court.

Bush said he would present his ideas on changing the process fairly soon. "I owe the people my observations and more importantly some suggestions to improve the process," Bush said.

But the president himself was the target of complaints in the Senate. Some of the Southern Democrats who provided the crucial votes to confirm Thomas said Bush had a one-sided view of the Senate's constitutional advice-and-consent role: he asked for the consent without the advice.

"We need to strengthen the advice, as well as the consent process," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga. "When senators have legitimate concerns about nominees, the president must take those concerns seriously, not simply take the position that each nominee warrants unqualified support for political reasons."

Sen. John Breaux, D-La., who like Nunn voted for Thomas, also said Bush should consult senators before sending them his nominations.

"Very little advice on this nominee was sought by the White House, and that's why they got very little consent," Breaux said on CBS' "This Morning" program. "I think we have to improve both ends of those processes in order to improve the system."

Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., who opposed Thomas, introduced a non-binding "sense of the Senate" resolution saying that in future nominations the president should conduct informal, bipartisan consultations with some members of the Senate before making his selection.

Croatia arrests scores for spying; fighting continues

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — Croatia has announced the arrest of dozens of people on suspicion of spying for the Yugoslav army or plotting terrorism in the nearly 4-month-old civil war.

Officials of the secessionist republic released no names and few details of the alleged fifth column.

The arrests, first announced in a toughly worded Interior Ministry statement late Tuesday, came at a time of increasing frustration in Croatia at its inability to retake about one-third of its territory captured by Serb guerrillas and the Serb-dominated army.

More than 1,000 people have died in the fighting that began shortly after Croatia and neighboring Slovenia declared independence June 25.

Scattered clashes continued Wednesday, despite a Soviet-mediated agreement in Moscow by the presidents of rivals Serbia and Croatia to halt the violence and step up negotiations. Croatian media reported nine people were killed.

The army and Serb guerrillas have surrounded a Croatian town, Ilok, near the Serbian border, and its 20,000 citizens and refugees have been cut off from the outside, Croatian television reported.

The agreement Tuesday followed the presidents' meeting with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev. Eight previous European Community cease-fire attempts have failed to halt the fighting.

Leaders of Croatia's ethnic Serb minority want no part of an independent Croatia, but Croat officials say the issue of Serb autonomy is a smokescreen for Serbian attempts to absorb parts of Croatia in a land grab.

Croatia's deputy interior minister, Zdravko Zidovec, said in a telephone interview Wednesday that no information on the spy arrests would be made public until an investigation is completed. Lawyers said the investigation could take six months.

Tuesday's statement said the Interior Ministry had uncovered a "commando-terrorist and spy group" that involved 62 people. It accused intelligence units of the Yugoslav air force of running the group's activities.

It said a few of the suspects are outside of Croatia and could not be detained. However, the rest were arrested, it said, without giving numbers.

The statement said the group's aim "was to prepare and execute concrete terrorist actions, especially in the Zagreb area."

"Discovery of this commando-terrorist and spy group confirms the fact that the Yugoslav Army, through its counterintelligence service, was directly engaged in destruction of Croatian constitutional-legal order and democratic leadership," the statement said.

Think before you drink this week

Of the more than 3,000 college campuses coast to coast which are participating in the eighth annual National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, ASU surely needs it as much as anyone.

On reputation alone, ASU could use the influence of the week. Regardless of reputation, alcohol abuse undoubtedly exists at some level at each of the 3,000-plus schools — being prevalent at most of them.

The issue of alcohol abuse on campuses has grown through media circles and college officials to a point where it may be finally reaching the urgency status it requires. Alcohol abuse can severely affect everyone from the alcoholic to a person who may get in a car with a drunk driver.

All students alike should be cognizant of the issue at hand and make an effort, if possible, to participate in activities on campus. Students must make the effort to learn what they can do for themselves. Bodies like Tempe police can only do so much to help students teach themselves and learn about alcohol abuse.

Learning about your beer intake will directly help you more in the long run than learning about your oxygen intake in some class.

Dr. Edward H. Hammond, the national chairman of Alcohol Awareness Week, as well as Fort Hays State president, delivers a solid message to students with the three points he hopes to get across. These are all important and relative to any ASU student in some capacity:

- Students need to have respect for the law, including drunk driving, riding with a drunk driver and drinking underage. The latter may go in one ear and out the other of many students, but the others are critical.
- Students must become responsible for themselves and their decisions.
- Students should respect their peers to promote responsible behavior in the way of not permitting friends to drink and drive.

So try to at least take these principles to heart and not see this week as a way to drink four beers and try to walk straight in a campus demonstration. And when you celebrate the end of Alcohol Awareness Week, don't drive.

Lessons to be learned from Thomas debacle

Scody Shearer
North American
Syndicate

One has to blame President Bush's staff for not checking Clarence Thomas' background more carefully before suggesting that he be nominated to the Supreme Court. If Thomas' nomination is defeated, some heads ought to roll at the White House.

But no one should be surprised in the least that the Bush White House has exhibited poor staff work. Employees associated with the Bush operation have been known for sloppy work. Take the case of Sen. Dan Quayle. In doing research on his background, no one discovered that he had a file full of unsubstantiated allegations within the Drug Enforcement Administration regarding cocaine use. How could anyone have overlooked this and not fully investigated such charges?

As inept as the White House staff has been, no group can quite match the incompetence of Sen. Joe Biden's Judiciary Committee crew. Here is a group of politically appointed staffers who failed to investigate University of Oklahoma law professor Anita Hill's sexual harassment charges against Clarence Thomas last September. This group also advised Sen. Biden not to postpone the committee's vote on the nomination because Hill's charges weren't serious enough. How did the committee know if the charges were serious when they hadn't been fully investigated? Is this committee full of amateurs or what? Why didn't they send an investigator out to Oklahoma to interview Hill?

Of course, Sen. Biden deserves much of the blame in this entire episode. He has been less than forthright. Biden, for example, told his committee staff not to investigate Thomas' character. He said the committee's investigation was about what Thomas believed, not who he was.

What is wrong with Sen. Biden? Is he worried about his own character being investigated? Why didn't he let the committee discover evidence that Thomas retaliated against fellow EEOC — Equal Employment Opportunity Commission — members who criticized the agency? Or that Thomas had improperly billed the government for a trip to Boston?

It is understandable that passions inside and outside of Congress have reached a fever pitch over the Thomas nomination. Everyone I talk to is furious about the entire episode because of the high level of incompetence and hypocrisy displayed by government officials.

I suspect part of the problem has to do with arrogance among White House and congressional staffers. To them, sexual harassment is something applicable to someone else.

Anyone familiar with behavioral patterns on Capitol Hill or in the White House knows that these sites often resemble one of Hugh Hefner's garden parties.

The question of the hour is whether the boys in power will ever catch on. The days of fixing local parking tickets and hitting on attractive females are over.

Anyone who has spent much time here realizes that White House staffers and congressional lawmakers often follow the beat of a special "ruling class" drummer. Maybe the Thomas nomination, as painful as it has been, will send a warning throughout America that questionable personal behavior by powerful individuals will no longer be tolerated.

to the editor Letter

Salzman doesn't keep student concerns in mind

Dear Editor:
I extend my thanks to Mr. Larry Salzman for his feeble but well-intentioned efforts to explicate the TA tuition waiver issue. I know Larry only had the students' best interests in mind when he suggested that the regents should identify any disgruntled "bad TAs" and graciously "show them the door." However, I'd like to take the liberty of commenting on some of Larry's flaccid logic in hopes of clarifying some key points.

First, the English TAs aren't asking for any "special privileges" or "administrative favors" at anyone's expense, they're asking for wages commensurate to their responsibilities. While the English TAs protested without participation from other departments, the long-term goal is to involve TAs across the campus. The English TAs recognize and appreciate the fact that TAs throughout the campus provide an immeasurable contribution to the University. We hope all TAs will get involved with their respective organizations and attend the GSA meeting scheduled for Oct. 30.

Secondly, as for the "spectacle" of the TAs protesting and shamelessly "degrading" the "responsible members of the English department," the fact that members of the faculty were there to support the TAs should dispel any misguided notions that it was a "tantrum" thrown by self-centered extremists. If any group of concerned individuals protesting what they consider to be unfair conditions appalls Larry, then maybe he should consider taking a U. S. history course to remind him that our country has a long and distinguished history of civic and political activism.

Thirdly, if the so-called "tantrum" gives Larry an "insight into the thought process of the next generation of English professors," then maybe he'll generously volunteer to mediate and resolve the issue before all the "good TAs" are driven off by the "bad TAs."

Finally, I have to give Larry credit for rightly identifying how the TAs grossly paraded their "terrible circumstances" in order to plead their case. After all, what "self-respecting human being would submit to a system that rewards needs rather than ability." My only regret is that Larry didn't take it a step or two further: forget the TAs, let's cut student financial aid, public assistance, private and public loan institutions, and international relief once and for all. I mean, aren't we all just a little tired of supporting these freeloaders?!

Sugarless Tooth decay marks days of brushing freedom

Three months ago, I had a toothache. Sixteen shots of Novocain later, I have eight new fillings in my mouth.

I also may have to stand on the street with a "Will work for dental payments" sign.

It all stems from a trip to our family dental guru, Dr. Blodgett, when I was in kindergarten. My parents were told I had "rampant tooth decay." My never-fail trick of wetting the toothbrush and eating Crest instead of brushing had been exposed.

The decay allegedly ravaging my mouth changed my life permanently.

The ride home was long and silent. My parents continued to shun me for a few days, but that was the least of the punishment.

Supervised brushing began immediately. The hygiene gestapo was ruthless, making sure every cuspid, bicuspid, incisor and molar received the plaque removal needed to quell the rotting of my chops. Rancid, green pseudo-mint flavored flouride rinse was included in the dentist's prescription for prompt recovery. I was devastated when Super Sugar Smacks were replaced with Cheerios and my favorite grape Kool-Aid mysteriously disappeared from the refrigerator.

My life was a living, sugarless hell.

My Easter basket didn't include chocolate rabbits and jelly beans. Instead, I got enough Trident gum to satisfy the entire waitress staff at Mel's Diner.

There was no end in sight, even after Dr. Blodgett declared I was victorious in the war against plaque.

Naturally, after being repressed for 13 years, I was anxious to start living again. College offered the opportunity to indulge in sugar-coated cereal, powdered Hawaiian Punch mix straight from the can and an occasional Snickers bar or 12.

I was completely liberated only after flinging the final bottle of putrid mint-o-green flouride rinse from my fourth floor window.

I knew I was living on borrowed time, and I was forced to cash in my chips this summer after having a toothache for three days.

I met the man, who eventually would receive more of my money than even Citibank Visa. He confirmed my worst fears.

"Three cavities," he said.

He looked at me and shook his head. I could swear my mother was in the room. Her prediction echoed off the walls, "You won't be happy until all of your teeth rot and fall out," she prophesied.

Somehow I wasn't as gleeful as she thought I'd be.

It took six shots of Novocain before the drilling started. I began to worry when I saw blood on Dr. Provost's rubber gloves. During the procedure, he dropped another bomb.

"You have two more cavities," he said. I gasped, nearly swallowing the miniature Hoover in my mouth.

A month later, I was under the needle again. Only four shots were administered this time, but an X-ray uncovered additional bad news.

"Three more cavities," he said.

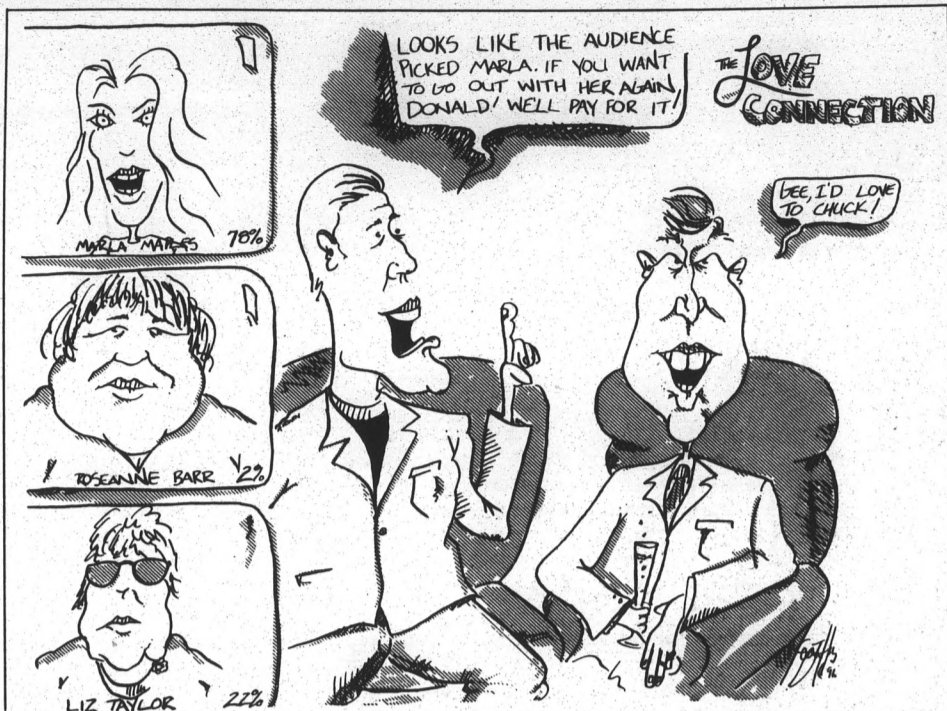

I replied by drooling on my white blouse.

Last week, I saw the dentist for my final appointment. He gave me six shots. "This will feel like a little pinch," he said as the cool needle penetrated my gums. I flinched and cursed the day I abandoned the flouride rinse.

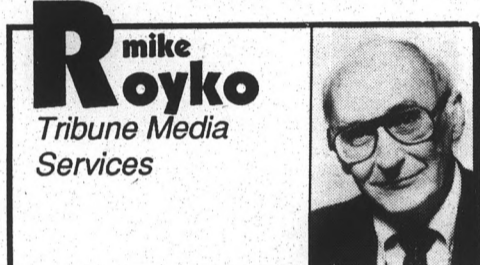

I also wondered why he only addressed me when his smelly rubber gloves were in my mouth.

With the stench of latex on my face, I rushed to the drug store and rewrote the doomed fate of my molars.

I shamelessly admit I enjoy the zippy cherry cough drop flavor of my newly-purchased flouride rinse.

Pittsburgh Pirates court opponent's factor disaster

It was a year ago, almost to the day, that I was the target of widespread ridicule and derision. Oh, the hooting and jeering I endured.

That was the day, shortly before the World Series began, that the headline above my essay declared: "A's might as well throw in the towel."

As that headline indicated, I had written that the Oakland A's did not have the remotest chance of winning the series.

Some of my sports writing associates and many readers thought it was the most idiotically funny thing they had ever seen.

Didn't I know, they asked, that the mighty A's were overwhelming, unbeatable, incomparable and were creating a dynasty? They had won the previous World Series in four straight. They had just won their playoff series in four straight. They were like Desert Storm.

Or, in the words of Ben Bentley, host of the Sportswriters TV madhouse: "Could the A's be the greatest team in history?"

We all know what happened next. Not only did they lose, but they didn't win one game. They were crushed and humiliated, and they haven't been the same since.

So here we are, once again approaching the World Series. And once again I caution the experts: Don't sneer at a mysterious force that is so powerful it defies all odds, all logic, and can change the course of baseball history.

I'm referring, of course, to the amazing Ex-Cub Factor.

For those who may be unaware of it, the Ex-Cub Factor works this way:

Since 1946, 14 teams have entered the World Series with three or more former Cubs on their rosters.

As with Oakland last year, some of these teams were thought to be superior to their opponent. Others weren't that strong. But bulge of bicep, fleetness of foot, managerial cunning, experience, poise — none of it mattered.

All but one of the Cubs-tainted teams lost. That's what happened last year. The Oakland A's had three ex-Cubs. They lost in four straight games. One year earlier, when they had only two ex-Cubs, they won in four straight games. Strange, eerie and terrifying.

So what does that tell us will happen this year? It tells us that if the brawny and cocky Pittsburgh Pirates get past the upstart Atlanta Braves, the Pirates will be doomed.

That's because the Pirates, in an act of suicidal folly, put four ex-Cubs on their roster. No other team in the playoffs has the curse of even three.

You would think that by now, no team would defy the Ex-Cub Factor. It hasn't been a secret.

It was discovered in 1981 by a Ron Berler, a Chicago writer, teacher and baseball stats nut. He sounded the alarm, but did the experts listen? No, they sneered and said it had no scientific validity; it was just a silly, meaningless coincidence.

That's what they said when the Boston Red Sox had a certain victory within their grasp. Then Bill Buckner, one of their three ex-Cubs, let that fatal ground ball dribble it all away.

And that's what they said before the unbeatable Oakland A's, with their four ex-Cubs, turned to mush.

Naturally, the ex-Cubs become indignant when it is suggested that they might be responsible for disaster.

A reporter mentioned the Factor to Gary Varsho, one of the four ex-Cubs on the Pirates. He dismissed it, saying: "No one around here brings it up or thinks about it."

Naturally, he'd say that. If managers ever come to accept the virtual certainty of the Factor, no ex-Cub would be able to find work. They might have to file discrimination complaints with the federal government. But even the bureaucrats might hesitate to take action when they looked at the evidence.

Nobody knows why the Ex-Cub Factor is so devastating. It isn't that the ex-Cubs are terrible players. Some are remarkably good, such as Dennis Eckersley, of the A's, who became a big star after he left the Cubs. Of course, he might have been a big star with the Cubs if he had ever experimented with pitching while sober.

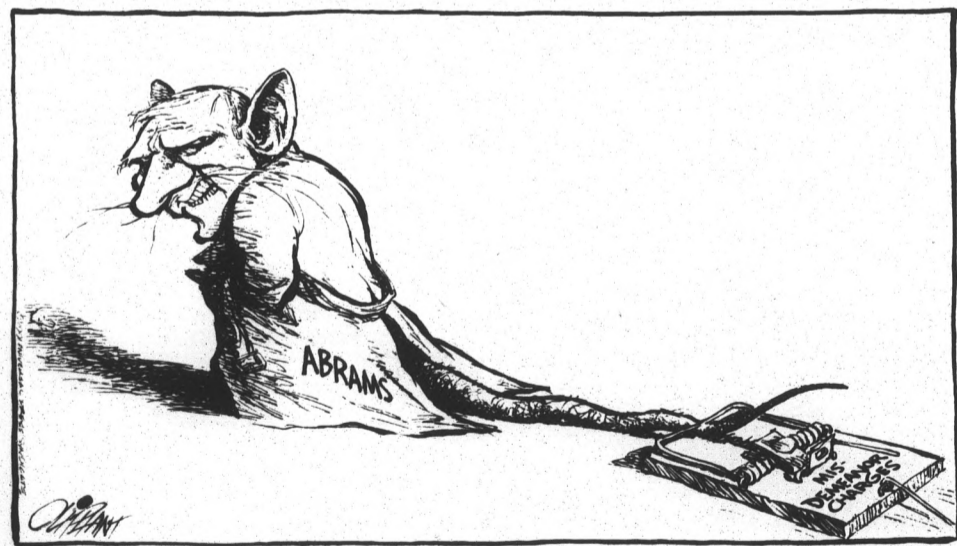

Some students of the game believe that having once been Cubs gives players something called "Cubness," which means that in their hearts they know they're losers.

But this theory doesn't hold up. If a team has only one of two ex-Cubs, their Cubness doesn't appear. Which is why Toronto, with mighty Joe Carter, an ex-Cub, isn't afflicted. Only when there are three does the Factor kick in.

Which has led some scholars, such as Dr. I. M. Kookie, the noted expert on lots of stuff, to theorize that it is not a curse but a virus that becomes active only when there are three carriers in the same dugout.

If this is true, one would think that the government would have launched a research program to isolate this virus and find a cure.

But as Dr. Kookie says: "There would be a taxpayers' revolt. With all the other problems in the world, why spend good money to find out why Cubs are losers? It's something we have to live with. Like the new old saying goes: 'Two Cubs are company, three's a complete disaster.'"

Seville disregards women's rights

Dear Editor:
In regards to the blatantly misogynistic letter of Mr. Jay Seville (Oct. 16), the only display of ignorance here is made by him. He scoffs at a booth that does not resort to sickening passersby with vile pictures. He scoffs at a booth that does not bring religious biases into the issues. He scoffs at the pro-choice booth that simply offers the freedom for a woman to do what is right for her individual situation. Need I remind you that freedom is what this country is founded on.

The pathetic hypocrisy Mr. Seville speaks of is in his own statement that he wants a woman to be able to do what she wants providing she abides by the laws he forces upon her. The days of communism are behind us, Mr. Seville. Stop trying to keep women imprisoned in your self-concerned, self-righteous, uneducated discipline. If, however, you insist on quoting "facts," perhaps you can dig deep into your library of colluded "facts" and share with us the location of the nearest hanger sale.

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents on Wednesday:

- Two males not affiliated with ASU were approached by police at the Faculty Administration Building where they were skateboarding. They were advised of trespassing and told to leave the area.
- A thief stole a blue Trek bicycle, valued at $250, from the north side of the Life Sciences Building.
- A thief stole a white Trek bicycle, valued at $250, from Palo Verde Main.
- A thief stole a white 1984 Toyota pickup truck from Lot 59. Estimated loss is $5,500.
- A thief stole a Sanyo AM/FM radio cassette deck from a 1984 Jeep parked on the first level of the parking structure at University Towers.

- A thief was arrested, cited and released after he removed the front tire from a Huffy bicycle.

Tempe police reported the following incidents on Wednesday:

- A man was arrested for domestic violence assault after he punched his wife at their apartment on the 6000 block of South McClintock Drive.
- A man punched through the front window of his girlfriend's apartment on the 500 block of South Hardy Drive. He was arrested for criminal damage.

against the experiment at a regents meeting last month.

"Beer introduces a new element in crowd behavior," said Paul Ward, ASU legal adviser. "The occupancy of the stadium is the same, but the dynamics are different."

Sadler estimated the cost of Sunday's experiment at $54,000 but added that next week's will cost half as much. He said he expects the University to recover all costs through beer revenue.

Ward said, "The bottom line is that it will not be subsidized by taxpayers."

Although the regents said they do not expect the experiment to solve drinking inequities in the stadium, they expect to use its results to develop a better plan.

Cardinals Vice President Joe Rhien said complaints against the experiment have dwindled but added that he is still concerned with the opinions of football fans.

Alcohol was prohibited entirely from the stadium until 1989 when the regents approved its sale in the newly constructed skyboxes.

Because the skyboxes are more expensive and less accessible to the public than general admission seats, some critics — including Arizona Liquor Board chairwoman Kay McKay — said the policy was "elitist."

The conflict resulted in a series of legal battles between the liquor board and former superintendent Hugh Ennis, which eventually wound up in the hands of former Attorney General Bob Corbin.

Shortly after his appointment last summer, current Liquor Superintendent Mark Mazzie suggested a meeting to change the policy, a move the regents and Cardinals management agreed to try this season.

State leaders discuss fiscal woes

By RICHARD RUELAS
State Press

The major players in Arizona's university system gathered to brainstorm for methods of communicating their fiscal woes to the Legislature and the public.

"We need to be more creative on how we communicate our message," said Arizona Board of Regents member Eddie Basha. "The phrase, 'united we stand, divided we fall,' is fast becoming a reality."

Basha put together a "State of the Universities" meeting to address the problem of dwindling state appropriations coupled with rising enrollment.

The panel, which consisted of 34 leaders from ASU, UofA and NAU, met Tuesday at the ASU Downtown Center.

Basha presented statistics that showed state appropriations of the three universities, expressed as a percentage of the general fund, have decreased more than 4 percent over the last 14 years.

Meanwhile, the last decade has seen a 15 percent increase in enrollment systemwide.

Basha said that the decline in enrollment at ASU and UofA will be "short-lived," as Arizona strives to graduate 90 percent of all high school students.

That increase from the current figure of 69 percent will be "a burden" on the university system, he said.

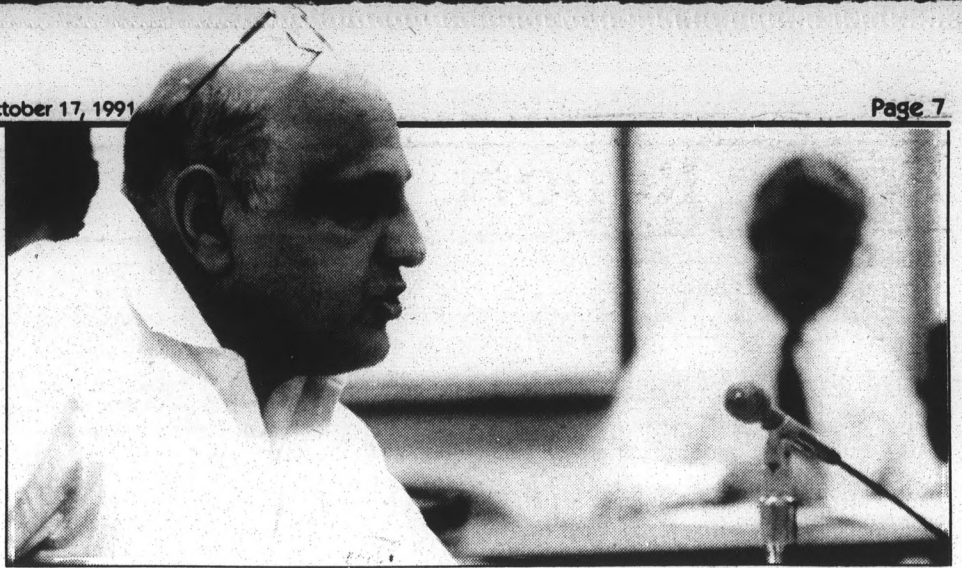

ASU President Lattie Coor said the combined efforts of the three universities, brought on by the budget crunch, can be "extraordinarily useful" for changing the way Arizonans think about higher education.

"Public policy is usually shaped by crisis. But if we wait until we have a crisis, we will have lost already," he said.

The unified front is the best way to present their joint problems, Coor said, adding that he prefers a single board of regents to the three committees proposed by Gov. Fife Symington.

Basha said, "(Symington) can make 15 committees if he wants to, and there will still be a necessity for all of us involved in the education process to work together."

Regents Executive Director Molly Broad said "complacency is our biggest hurdle to overcome."

Tamara Wofford/State Press

Regent Eddie Basha presents statistics showing appropriations of the state's three universities to a panel of 34 university officials Tuesday.

"There is a general feeling that higher education is in pretty good shape relative to ... other priorities," she said.

Unless the public and the Legislature take appropriate measures, "they simply are not going to find universities have the dollars to provide the services Arizona has come to expect," Broad added.

Suzanne Pfister, associate director for public affairs for the regents, warned that "it's students enrolled now whose children will feel the impact" of lower funding.

Brent Brown, ASU vice president for University Relations, compared the assembled panel to the Cady Mall evangelists.

"We're zealots and we're converts. We think we have a message to get out," he said, adding that listening to the public is an important part of the process in order to avoid being shunned.

Tuition

But Regent Don Pitt said he would view the entire tuition picture before arriving at a decision.

"I recognize that there are always going to be heart-wrenching cases, but you can't design the entire tuition structure to those cases," he said. "I try to separate emotion from information."

Pitt also hinted at waiting on a tuition decision until after the Joint Legislative Budget Committee reaches its university budget conclusions, a move supported by House Appropriations Chairman John Wettaw, R-Flagstaff.

Arizona Students Association Executive Director Randy Udelman said he was especially pleased with this year's turnout, which was larger than last year's hearings with all three Arizona student bodies.

"We had more students and very compelling stories," he said. "Those are the kind of things I hope they listen to."

The regents will host two hearings next week - Tuesday at NAU and Thursday at ASU. Times and locations have not been announced.

Current annual tuition is $1,528 for in-state students and $6,394 for non-residents, numbers that represent the lowest dollar increase since 1984 when compared to the previous year.

Student leaders from all three universities remain hopeful that this year's 3.9 percent decrease in the cost of education figure will favor the no-increase option.

But regent officials say a freeze would result in a $2.4 million shortfall in tuition revenues.

ASA officials, however, said the reduction amounts to less than one-half of 1 percent of the Arizona university system budget.

"We have a very reasonable proposal," Udelman said.

Steve Jordan, budget analyst for ABOR, said declining enrollment, coupled with a tuition freeze, also would mean a smaller university budget.

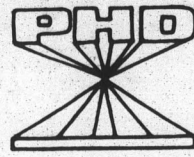

"Absent a legislative offset, you are going to have to make reductions in your budget," Jordan said.

Board policy allows the regents to increase non-resident tuition until it pays for the cost of education over three years for ASU and UofA, and over five years for NAU.

The cost of education is a three-step process that estimates per-student expenses of Arizona universities, based upon this year's anticipated state revenues and last year's full-time student enrollment.

With a tuition freeze, out-of-state students at ASU would pay 93 percent of their educational costs.

At the same time, tuition increases are limited by a board policy that requires the regents to set mandatory in-state fees in the lower one-third of those charged by other states.

Program teaches community interaction

By MARSHA MARDOCK
State Press

ASU President Lattie Coor told a pioneering group of Campus Community students he hopes the newly designed program will bring students together as a "college within a college."

"I expect that we will learn how students can interact on this campus as human beings so that size does not stand in the way of the richness of personal interaction — academically, intellectually, personally and in ways that connect the classroom to the larger world," Coor said.

"The second thing I expect is a meaningful experience for each of you that will add significantly to your experience at ASU."

Coor spoke to Professor Miguel Montiel's public service class, which is part of the Campus Communities Program.

The pilot program emphasizes student involvement in community service with the aim of helping the students build a relationship with the Valley community.

The class examines issues that divide and connect the community.

The students read the works of Tolstoy and contemporary authors and discuss them in the context of community.

"The task is to teach ourselves to discuss some of the enduring questions using the Socratic method," said Montiel, interim director of the program.

Three components of the pilot program are public service, an interactive classroom course and campus residents living in Best Hall.

Montiel said because the students will live together and take a variety of classes together, many departments of the campus will be involved.

"What that means is that at one level, we have to develop the linkages among the various units of the University to work together to develop this idea.

"The other part is community service, and that requires organizing the various possible agencies," he said.

Montiel said the community service aspect of the program is now under way.

"Each of the students will be placed in a separate state agency, and (they) will all do a needs assessment," he said.

"Our intent is to set up an infrastructure — both outside the University in terms of public service and also in terms of developing the plan to make this a successful program."

Coor said he wanted to center the program around public service to aid the community, to better students' understanding of the need for public service.

Craig Lewandowski, an accounting major, said he was attracted to the program because of the diversity of the people in it.

Sean Openshaw/State Press

ASU President Lattie Coor speaks to a public service class Wednesday.

"What was really appealing about this was that it had a central theme that was not tied to one particular college," he said.

"You can sit down and talk about public service with people who are from all different aspects of the University, who have just one thing in common, which is wanting to learn about this particular subject," Lewandowski said.

The Campus Communities Program, which is supervised by the Honors College, was formed in an effort to warm up the impersonal atmosphere of the ASU campus.

Broadcast major Nancy Clark said there is already a sense of community between the students in the class.

"I feel like I've met more people in this class and gotten to know them than I have at the entire University in five years," she said.

The program's advocates hope to establish "communities" for students who have interests in foreign language, environmentalism, music, global awareness and visual and performing arts.

LANSDALE, Pa. (AP) — A woman who reported finding broken glass in a box of cereal after her daughter cut her lip will be charged with creating a hoax, authorities said Wednesday.

Marietta Oscapinski, 35, claimed on Oct. 7 that she found the glass in a cereal box after she noticed her 2-year-old daughter, Chelsea, bleeding the night before.

But Oscapinski later admitted her daughter had hidden pieces of a broken dish in the cereal, said District Attorney Michael Marino.

The mother said she recognized the glass, but reported it as a product tampering because she was involved in a custody battle for another child and thought an accidental injury would harm her case, Marino said.

A store pulled all boxes of the cereal from its shelves while the case was being investigated.

Oscapinski was expected to surrender Thursday to face charges of making false reports to authorities, Police Chief James Hansley said.

BULLISH BRYAN

Sun Devils' Hooks invest in future at outside linebacker

By DAN ZEIGER
State Press

ASU outside linebacker Bryan Hooks lists monitoring stocks as one of his favorite hobbies — and it's a possibility that his football experience would help him negotiate through the bustle of a market exchange floor should he become a broker someday.

Chances are a 6-foot-4, 255-pound frame wouldn't hurt, either.

"I like to follow the bull market," Hooks said. "I have a few investments, but I'm not doing too well right now because some of it is in Circle K. And we all know what's going on there. But it's kind of fun."

While Hooks might not be pleased with the relative silence of his stocks recently, the junior has gained plenty of attention on the field with bullish performance on defense. He made his biggest impact last week, a 24-7 Sun Devil victory over Oregon State in which he had the best game of his ASU career.

Hooks compiled seven tackles, which matched his combined total from the first four games of the year. Of those stops, five of them were unassisted, and he also recorded three tackles for 12 yards in losses.

To ensure that the Beavers were fully aware of his presence, Hooks capped the day off by causing one fumble and recovering two others.

"I felt it was my best since I've been here, and the coaches feel the same way," Hooks said. "I thought I was mentally ready for the game, and that helped me stay as focused as possible. We went up there and things seemed to work out the right way."

The performance was what Hooks and the coaching staff had in mind when he was moved to outside linebacker from the defensive line during the spring. The change didn't prove to be that big of an adjustment for Hooks, as his role in the team's basic 3-4 alignment is similar to that of a rush end.

"The biggest reason we made the move is because we wanted a better stabilizing force on the tight end," Sun Devil outside linebackers coach Lovie Smith said. "We thought it would be an easy move for him to make because his duties are essentially the same as they were before."

Hooks said he was so enthusiastic about the move that he lost 25 pounds during the off-season by increasing workouts and not giving in when friends urged him to join them for a late-night fast-food run.

The willpower has paid off for Hooks, where at linebacker he is afforded more chances at the ball carrier when offenses run towards the outside. That point was evident on Saturday, as OSU often came his way with its running out of the option.

"When you face an option-running team, they go to the outside a lot, and that's an outside linebacker's responsibility," Hooks said. "It basically depends on what the offense does. If they go around the ends, then you'll be in a position to make a lot of plays."

While Hooks' move from the line to linebacker has been a vital transition, it was nothing compared to the adjustment he had to make in his life when he was only 15.

He had returned home from spending the night at a friend's to find his father, William, lying down and saying that he wasn't feeling well. His family took him to a hospital where he died of a heart attack four hours later.

Hooks said the loss of his father was a hard hit from reality that has taken a while to get used to.

"It was really tough to deal with because you never anticipate that kind of thing happening," Hooks said. "Sometimes I can get really depressed because I always wish that he was here. But I know things happen for a reason, and I can't explain losing my father — I sometimes wish somebody could."

"I can remember when I was a freshman in high school, I could look up in the stands, and he'd be there. Shortly

Senior Phil Mickelson was ASU's high finisher at the Red River Classic in Dallas, tying for sixth place.

Men's golf falls to 4th; Mickelson ties for 6th

By AMY SLADE
State Press

After the ASU men's golf team won its first tournament of the fall last week, Sun Devil coach Steve Loy said he was not convinced his team was ready to win a national championship.

He was right. In a considerably weaker field than in the Ping/Golfweek Preview, ASU finished fourth at the Red River Classic in Dallas on Tuesday, 14 strokes behind No. 4 Arkansas.

"I think we are one of the top teams, but we need a lot of work and maturity to be ready for Nationals (in June)," said senior All-American Phil Mickelson, who struggled in the opening rounds of the tournament with scores of 73 and 74 but had a final round of 5-under 67 to lead the Sun Devil charge.

Mickelson finished the tournament at 2-under 214 and in a tie for sixth place, his 21st consecutive top-10 finish.

"I didn't play well at first, and when you shoot 36 holes that first day, you know it's going to be a tough tournament," Mickelson said. "But it was nice to come back and shoot a 67."

Mickelson said the team did not play its best but came back in the final round to leave the tournament on a high note.

"The team, as a whole, has plenty of room for improvement," said senior All-American Brett Dean, who finished in a tie for 25th after he posted a three-day total of 3-over 219. "We have a month off, so we have lots of time to work on what we need."

The Sun Devils, who were in seventh after two rounds, do not have another tournament until Nov. 15-17 in Hilton Head, S. C., at the GolfWorld/Palmetto Dunes Invitational. The rest of the Sun Devils also had trouble repeating some of their earlier exploits. Redshirt freshman Todd Demsey, who had finished in the top 10 in all three of his previous collegiate tournaments, ended up in a tie for 21st place after he posted rounds of 70, 73 and 75.

"In the back of my mind, I'm disappointed about where I finished," Demsey said. "I had trouble driving the ball, and I missed some short putts in the final round."

Demsey added that there were strong winds in the morning round, but since everybody was forced to play under those conditions, it was not a factor in the outcome.

Freshman Trip Kuehne, playing in his hometown, finished in a tie for 26th place as he posted rounds of 73, 74 and 73.

"It was fun playing in front of all the guys from my high school team and my coach," Kuehne said. "Not only did I get to perform in front of them, but I got to see and visit with them as well."

Kuehne said he stayed at home one night before the tournament began, along with the rest of the team, but stayed at the hotel during the tournament so he could concentrate on his golf.

"I was kind of disappointed in the way I played," Kuehne said. "I wanted to impress them."

Wrestlers Taylor, Anderson lead by example as co-captains

Duo uses fire and ice approach to help team deal with long season

By LORENZO SIERRA, Jr.
State Press

On the USS Sun Devil, there are two captains navigating the ASU wrestling team to the beginning of the season.

After last year's NCAA Championship, seniors G. T. Taylor and Mike Anderson were chosen by Coach Bobby Douglas to serve as co-captains for the upcoming season.

Last year, Taylor and Anderson both earned All-America honors with seventh-place finishes at the NCAA Championship. Both wrestlers took second at the Pac-10 finals — Taylor at 167 pounds and Anderson as a heavyweight.

Even their records were somewhat similar. Taylor finished the regular season at 27-5-2. Anderson's mark was 29-7-2.

That is about where the similarities end and each wrestler's distinct personality takes over.

"I'm not a very vocal leader," Taylor said. "I'm not one of the guys who likes to be in front of the team. Mike's role is more up front. He's 6-foot-8 and 240 pounds. I think Mike's image, physically, has an impact."

Anderson and Taylor's fire-and-ice approach to their duties as co-captains has resulted in the ideal captain in two bodies.

"I think that's a real good balance," Taylor said. "You have his physical menacing with my subtleties."

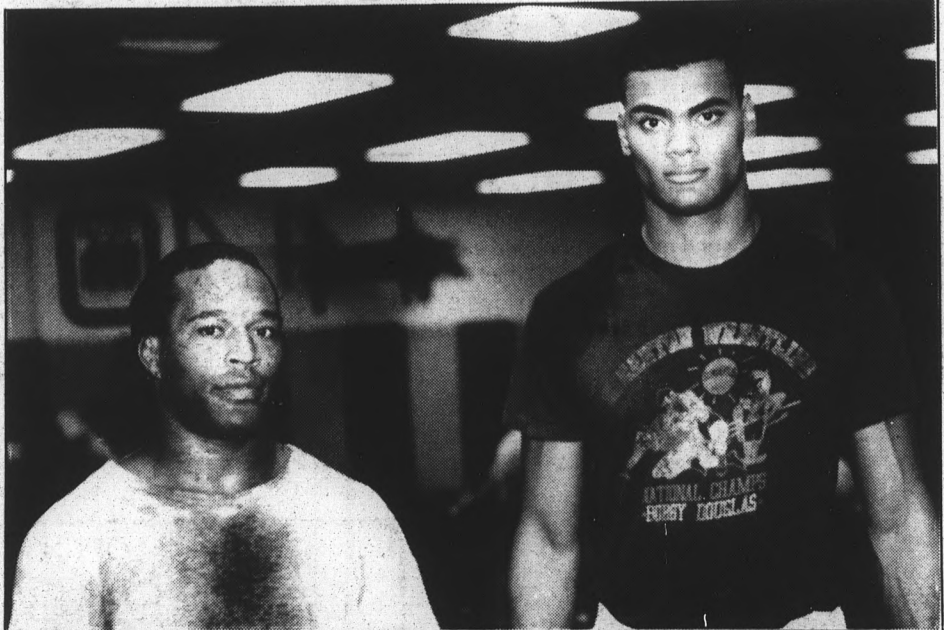

The physically-imposing Anderson sees the pairing of himself and Taylor as beneficial to the program.

"It will probably work out for the best," Anderson said. "If things need to be said, I'll say them. If guys feel like 'Mike is yelling at me,' and I'm not really yelling at them, they can go to G. T."

Taylor uses his ability to get by his younger teammates.

"I'm more of a guy that likes to speak with my actions," Taylor said. "I'm a silent leader."

Hooks

afterward, I would see my mother up there without him, and it would make me really upset."

Hooks said that his father has always continued to play a big role in his life.

When he was nominated for homecoming king in his senior year at Marcos De Niza High School in Tempe, he put down his dad in the blank next to "biggest hero/role model" on the candidate questionnaire.

"I still talk to him all the time," Hooks said. "I know that he can't answer back, but I know he can hear me. I just thank my mom a lot, because without my father, she has had to take care of things and play the role my father would have played."

Hooks' mother, Blanche, is a teacher at South Mountain High School in Phoenix and is the most important person in his life. In fact, he chose ASU over UofA after coming out of Marcos De Niza to remain closer to home.

"She means a lot to me, and that is one of the reasons I came to ASU," Hooks said. "She's had to be a single parent, and I wanted to stay and give her support the way she has given it to me for all this time. She's done a good job of that."

ASU Notes

•ASU senior tackle Mike Ritter, who sprained his left ankle against OSU, returned to practice and did "almost everything," Coach Larry Marmie said.

Ritter should be able to play Saturday against Washington State.

•Junior kicker Mike Richey was limited in work Wednesday because of soreness, but Marmie said it should not affect his playing status.

Co-captains

In the final matches last season, Anderson served as captain.

With Douglas out of town often fulfilling his Olympic coaching commitments, Anderson and Taylor have had to give a little extra to help training and conditioning coach Thom Ortiz.

"We're in basic supporting roles to help Thom with drills and practice," Taylor said. "We also keep the team motivated."

The experience of Anderson and Taylor have come in handy for Ortiz.

"If some of the kids get out of line, they'll help them," Ortiz said. "Coach Douglas designated them captains, and I think that was a wise choice."

In the wrestling room, Taylor and Anderson remain intimidating in their own way. Taylor is able to practice with several wrestlers because there are several wrestlers his size. Anderson, on the other hand, has few partners because of his dimensions.

"We don't have anyone to work out with him (Anderson)," Ortiz said. "All the guys are smaller than him, and he's crushing them."

Even though Anderson acknowledges his physical prowess, he feels he has his lighter side.

"It's not like I hold a big stick over anybody," Anderson said.

What kind of day will tomorrow be? To find out what the stars say, read the forecast given for your birth sign.

FOR FRIDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1991

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19)
Power plays and one-up-manship are the key words in financial dealings today. In the social sphere, though, you will meet with love, friendliness and affection.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20)
Neither you nor your partner seems willing to give in at present. Your reasonable ways, however, open doors for you in your career. Watch judgment in money matters.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20)
Don't take the bait. Someone is trying to get a reaction from you by being difficult, probably in connection with work. Good news comes from a distance.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22)
Quiet times alone with a loved one are your best bet for happiness now. Don't let envious types try to disrupt what you have going for each other.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22)
Interfering friends can upset your plans now and a relative can be somewhat trying. A hitching post of normalcy can be found in a loving tie.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22)
Though you will make a good impression on those you contact in business today, beware of wolves in sheep's clothing. Keep things on the up and up.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22)
Romantic trips prove idyllic in terms of love given and received, but in financial dealings beware of unscrupulous types who will try to take advantage.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)
Loved ones shouldn't be competitive with each other. Accent cooperation and participate in the joys of family living. Work together as a harmonious unit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)
Let love rule your day. Don't permit small resentments to take hold, especially in connection with job interests. Partners have much to share with each other now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)
Financial prospects improve, but don't be neglectful of details on the job. A rule or ruin type can spoil the romantic prospects of some of you who are unattached.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)
You may meet an uncompromising person in career concerns. The accent now is on loving ties. You'll enjoy an evening out to some place special together.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to Mar. 20)
Try to be less critical of a family member. Accent the positive in your dealings with this person. Don't let those proverbial little things get your goat.

YOU BORN TODAY are both independent and cooperative. Often you have administrative talents and you may be drawn to politics and government service. Your personality is usually an asset to you in business. You enjoy public life and work well with groups. You may have a special talent for music or acting. Periods of hard work for you are sometimes followed by stretches of indolence. Birthdate of: Fannie Hurst, writer; Melina Mercouri, actress; and Pierre Trudeau, Canadian politician.
