Mitchell retains mayoral post

2 city council seats still under contention

By D.J. BURROUGH
State Press

Incumbent Tempe Mayor Harry Mitchell retained his seat in Tuesday's primary election and a new political newcomer was elected to the city council. Harry Mitchell, a 51-year-old Tempe High School teacher who has held the office of mayor since 1978, resoundingly retained his post by receiving 78.6 percent of the more than 8,900 ballots cast for mayor.

"I feel very good about it," Mitchell said of winning his eighth term. "It always feels good to win, particularly when there has been such a backlash across the nation regarding incumbents."

Mitchell said he hoped the high percentage was a sign from Tempe citizens that the city was being governed well.

Legislature opts for 2% reversionment

By CHRIS DRISCOLL
State Press

University officials reacted Tuesday with solemn relief to the Arizona Legislature's plan to balance the 1992 state budget by cutting most state agencies, including ASU, by 2 percent.

The budget-balancing plan, in the form of four separate bills, passed the House and Senate Monday, a week into a special session called by Gov. Fife Symington.

"The 2 percent level is what we were prepared for," said George Cathcart, director of ASU's News Bureau. "We are relieved to just be able to go ahead and implement it at this point. We have, in fact, already started implementing the reversionments."

Cathcart said the possibility of more layoffs at ASU still exists, not only from cuts to the current budget, but also from an estimated $5 million shortfall in tuition collections and from proposed cuts in the fiscal year 1993 budget.

Alan Carroll, ASU director of Fiscal Planning and Analysis, said the Legislature's final proposal was not as severe as it could have been.

"We're pleased with the outcome," he said, "if you could compare being pleased with knocking your head against the wall and then stopping."

The original proposal from Symington's office made in January would have cut ASU's budget by 3.2 percent, which would equal more than $5.8 million.

The Legislature's budget office, the Joint Legislative Budget Committee, countered in February with a proposal for a 2 percent cut to the state's three universities, which comes to $3.6 million for ASU Main and $549,000 for ASU West.

Senate Majority Leader Alan Stephens, D-Phoenix, said the final plan was much closer to the JLBC's original proposal than it was to the governor's recommendation.

ASU President Lattie Coor, responding in February to both plans, said, "While (the JLBC) recommendation would cause additional pain at ASU, it certainly comes closer to our expectations."

Coor said that the governor's plan was "simply astonishing," and that he was dismayed by the governor's proposal to "visit more than 50 percent of the total state budget reversion on the universities."

The bills have been sent to the governor's office for his signature. John Hays, the governor's legislative liaison, said Symington signed one of the bills on Tuesday.

ASU helps seek marrow match for Phoenix boy

By MARGO GILLMAN
State Press

To most people, Chad Pyper appears to be a perfectly normal 3-year-old boy from Phoenix.

Friends and neighbors will tell you the child harbors a cheerful disposition and enjoys teasing and playing with everyone he encounters.

On the surface, very few recognize that Chad suffers from Hunter's syndrome, a rare genetic disease that results from the lack of an enzyme, which prevents him from disposing waste.

But Terry Stewart, a neighbor of the Pyper family, said symptoms of the illness will be apparent if Chad fails to receive a bone marrow transplant before his fourth birthday in December, when the disease likely will spread to his brain, causing irreversible damage.

Bone marrow transplants have been performed on hundreds of patients suffering from about 30 different types of diseases — mainly leukemia — since 1987.

Wes Phillips, marrow donor coordinator for the Scottsdale branch of the United Blood Services of Arizona, said the marrow is extracted from the back of the donor's hip with a syringe and the use of general anaesthetic.

"No incision is made — the primary risk is the anaesthesia," he said.

Although Chad was diagnosed as having the disease about a year ago, Stewart said the Pyper family hasn't been able to find a bone marrow donor match for Chad.

This prompted Stewart, and other neighbors, friends and members of the family six weeks ago to establish Friends of Chad Pyper, a committee of about 100 members that seeks donors and contributions to help Chad find a successful match.

"If people don't stand up and take notice, he's gonna die," Stewart said. "We've had an incredible response so far, but we still haven't found a donor — and statistics show that 9,000 people in this country are waiting for donors, and half of them are children."

Stewart added that 24 people die each day because they can't find matches.

To assist the committee, Billy Graham, an ASU senior business management major, said ASU will conduct a special blood drive on April 13. They hope to acquire at least 300 donors willing to have their marrow typed through a simple blood sample, and donate the marrow if a match is made with Chad or any other patient in need of a transplant.

Graham said he and fellow classmates are organizing the event as a group project for an LIA 494 leadership skills course.

"I saw a special about Chad on TV and thought we could help out somehow," Graham said.

Although details of the event are still being finalized, Graham said, "The actual blood test is real simple — and I think students will be pretty receptive to it."

ASU to begin search for permanent provost

By SHANNON LOUGHRIN
State Press

A search committee to permanently fill the ASU West provost seat will be formed within the next week, as Ben Forsyth, ASU interim vice president of Business Affairs, begins his temporary duties in the position.

Forsyth, who was named by ASU President Lattie Coor last week as interim provost pending Board of Regents approval, said he will not seek the permanent position.

Forsyth will take over July 1, replacing current Provost Vernon Lattin. Forsyth will continue his duties at ASU Main, with ASU Main Provost Milt Glick taking over some of the responsibilities of the Business Affairs office.

The committee will begin screening applicants in the fall, and the new provost is expected to assume the post in January.

"We won't have a search completed for a permanent provost until January at the earliest," Coor said. "The search committee I will be forming will start the process, but it takes a long time."

Forsyth will spend a few days a week at ASU West, while using the rest of his time to fulfill his position at ASU Main, a period Forsyth said "will certainly be a juggling act."

Glick said he would make the two jobs easier for Forsyth by assuming his responsibilities in strategic planning and the Fiscal Planning and Analysis office.

"He'll keep most of his responsibilities, and I'll pick a few things off his plate that fall," he said. "I think he has quite a lot of experience both here and at the University of Vermont. I think he'll help facilitate the growth and organization at ASU West."

Forsyth said he is looking forward to the temporary position, but hopes a new provost will be chosen soon.

"Hopefully, the search won't go past the first semester," he said. "It's not really what I want to do in the long run. I really feel that other people would probably be better suited for it, and it's not the way that I, personally, would like my career to go."

"But I am looking forward to it. I think it will be an exciting venture."

Forsyth's lack of desire to remain in the permanent position was one factor in his temporary appointment, according to Coor.

"I wanted someone who would not be a candidate for the position, so that the search can go on its way," he said. "I think he is a very experienced administrator who understands that campus and will keep the whole momentum going out there."

Coor said the selection process will be a long and involved process because of the great responsibility the provost has at ASU West.

"The provost at ASU West is in charge of all the operations on the campus," he said. "So, in addition to being the chief academic officer as in the case of Provost Glick here, that officer kind of runs that campus so that Business Affairs and all of the support services that tend to report to other vice presidents at this campus report directly to him there."

Coor said the committee will look for someone "who really has a lot of academic and administrative experience, and the ability to be in charge of a major growing campus."

"ASU West continues to grow rapidly," he said. "I'm particularly interested in someone who can really provide leadership to the academic programs on that campus."

Sean Openshaw/State Press
Ben Forsyth, ASU West's new interim provost, plans to fill the position only until a permanent provost can be chosen.

Brown upsets Clinton in Connecticut

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Challenger Jerry Brown scored a startling upset over Bill Clinton in the Connecticut presidential primary Tuesday night to slow the front-runner's march toward the Democratic nomination.

President Bush swept easily, as expected, to Republican victory with two-thirds of the vote over dormant rival Patrick Buchanan and the nagging protest vote.

The Democratic verdict, 38 percent and a 3-point victory for Brown, was a surprise stall in the Clinton campaign despite the Arkansas governor's claim that he'd expected it to be a tight contest.

The Connecticut upset instantly raised the stakes in the New York primary, the next major contest, two weeks away. Clinton can't afford more trouble there.

Brown said he'd won Connecticut because "people want change, I'm a vehicle for that."

"This thing is now coming to New York and this will be the battle of where the party's going," Brown said in Brooklyn, N.Y. He said he'd been doubted, ignored and ridiculed for his anti-establishment campaign.

Brown said he would "keep this campaign moving all the way back to the convention."

But Clinton still holds a commanding delegate lead of more than 7 to 1 over Brown. And he and Brown were each winning 21 delegates in Connecticut, under an apportionment system based on congressional district vote shares.

Democratic National Chairman Ronald Brown said Clinton is still on track toward the nomination. "It's not over til it's over, but I don't see anything in the results today that dislodges Bill Clinton from what appears to be a patch toward the nomination," Brown said.

Clinton, in West Orange, N.J., said before the polls closed that "people don't want this process to be over."

"They sure don't want it to be taken away from them and I don't either," he said. "I've always expected it to go through to New Jersey and California" on June 2.

Clinton's remarks put the best face on the unexpected outcome, but the mission of any presidential campaign is to foreclose the process by winning it as swiftly as possible.

Brown, asked whether he had slowed Clinton's momentum, said, "The people have slowed it down."

Democratic pollster Geoff Garin said that while Clinton could afford the weak showing in Connecticut, a series of setbacks would be more damaging. "This raises the stakes an awful lot for Bill Clinton in terms of the New York and Wisconsin primaries two weeks from now."

"Voters still have questions about him and he needs to deal with those questions," said Garin. "And having Brown constantly after him won't make that easy."

Victory seemed almost certain for Clinton, when Paul Tsongas, his closest rival, quit the race last Thursday, saying he couldn't afford to continue.

De-icing fluid not effective for jet, two experts say

NEW YORK (AP) — The de-icing fluid used on a USAir jet half an hour before it crashed in a snowstorm normally wouldn't protect against ice for that long, two experts said Tuesday. A manufacturer of the fluid estimated it would be effective for no more than five minutes.

But John Lauber, head of a National Transportation Safety Board team investigating the crash that killed 27 people Sunday night, cautioned: "It's too early to jump on any pet theory."

How long the fluid works depends on the temperature, fuel, and the kind of wing, Lauber said at a news conference Tuesday night. He said he didn't think five minutes was a reasonable figure.

"There's no single number one can use to say how long a de-icer works," he said. He wouldn't elaborate on a possible range.

Lauber said investigators have talked to workers who did the de-icing, but haven't determined if it was done properly. If ice builds up on the wings a plane has difficulty getting the lift needed for takeoff.

Lauber said evidence indicates the plane was travelling the correct takeoff speed — 128 to 130 knots — and the wing flaps were in the proper position.

The pilot, who died in the crash, had the plane properly de-iced at 8:29 p.m. and again at 8:59 p.m. before taking off at about 9:30 p.m., USAir president Seth Scofield said Monday. Scofield said the interval between the last treatment and takeoff was "well within standard operating procedure."

But the de-icing fluid used, known as Type 1, "just won't

South Korean conservative party suffers surprise defeat

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — President Roh Tae-woo's conservative party acknowledged Wednesday that it suffered a surprise defeat in South Korea's general elections and failed to retain majority control of parliament.

The election reflected strains in the government's traditional alliance with big business, which has been resisting efforts to increase public control over one of the world's fastest-growing economies.

The powerful founder of the Hyundai corporation, who formed a party just one month ago and campaigned to stop government meddling in business, won 25 seats.

"We watched the election results with shock and disappointment, but we will humbly accept the people's will," said Kim Yoon-hwan, secretary general of the ruling Democratic Liberal Party.

Although the voting comes during negotiations with Communist North Korea on nuclear weapons inspections and eventual unification, it was not expected to affect South Korea's approach to the talks.

But it could lead to more pressure on the government to speed up political reforms. The results were a "complete defeat" for the government, opposition leader Kim Dae-jung told jubilant supporters.

With 99 percent of the votes counted for National Assembly elections, the Democratic Liberals led in 115 of the 237 single-member districts, four seats short of a majority, KBS Television said.

To form a government, Roh's party is likely to try to merge with an opposition group or entice independent candidates into its fold, as it did after the last general election, in 1988.

The results indicated lower than expected support for the ruling party as it prepares for the presidential election this fall to replace Roh, whose single five-year term ends next February.

Candidates of Kim's opposition group led in 75 districts and a month-old party founded by maverick millionaire Chung Ju-yung had 25 winners, KBS said. Independent candidates led in 21 districts, and a candidate from a minor political party won one seat.

Election officials said 72 percent of 29 million eligible voters cast ballots.

Tuesday's vote came nine months after the ruling party easily won nationwide municipal elections.

Since then, it has been hounded by allegations of corruption and vote-rigging, and business leaders — who blame an export slowdown and high inflation on inconsistent government economic policies — threw their support to Chung's Unification National Party.

The economy is expected to grow at least 7 percent this year but had a record $9.6 billion trade deficit in 1991.

Failing proposal

There are more minuses than pluses in the Academic Senate's pending decision to institute pluses and minuses into ASU's grading system.

The system recommends delivering a more even-handed brand of academic justice. It will offer pluses or minuses to students grades depending on where their scores fall within the given grade range.

Supposedly, this will reflect student abilities more accurately by rewarding those with an 89 percent score with a B+ and those who skate by with an 80 percent with a B-

The plus or minus will add or subtract GPA points from a neutral grade.

The system appears logical, that is, until logic is applied to the system.

If ASU begins stratifying each grade level in thirds, what has it done but allowed for three times the subjectivity and arbitrariness in the grades?

If a student receives a 79 percent in a class, missing the B by one point, he or she doesn't have much recourse. The student deserves a C by the score he or she earned. Even given one point, the student still rests at the bottom of the next grade level, and in those situations, the benefit should be given to the teacher.

Take the same one-point gap and apply it to the plus or minus system. A student receives an 83 percent, earning a B- and missing a neutral B by one point.

When a professor offers a test and evaluates the score, the evaluation process is somewhat subjective (especially if we are dealing in essay tests).

If a professor hands down a grade of 83 percent, the message is that the work is well above average. Who is to say that the work wasn't actually worth an 84 percent? It is doubtful that any professor could rationally justify the difference between a grade of 83 and 84 percent within a group of essay tests.

If the plus and minus system is passed, we might as well extend it to plus-plus and minus-minus, or plus and minus cubed.

In the end, all this grading system will eliminate is fair grades and all that it will introduce is a greater degree of professors' arbitrary whim.

'CAN HE DO THAT?'

Tsongas should speak his mind

Paul Tsongas is being praised for making so gracious a withdrawal speech. But he'll get no praise from me. I'm tired of hearing politicians stand up and pretend to be good losers when they must surely be filled with bile. And I wish they would spit it out.

Since he wouldn't do it, I'll dash off a speech for him: "I am withdrawing. It is clear that I cannot win the nomination, even though it should be obvious to anyone with more than an ounce of brains that I was the best candidate. Unfortunately, those with less than an ounce of brains are in the majority."

"My campaign failed because, frankly, it was too practical, honest, made too much sense and didn't pander to enough voters."

"You noticed that I didn't promise to cut your taxes. Of course I didn't. That would be stupid. If I cut taxes, we'd go deeper in debt. Then I'd have to raise taxes to help cover the juice we're paying on all that debt. Did you appreciate my candor? No, you'd rather have someone tell you that he is going to make it possible for you to buy three more Happy Meals at McDonald's and to hell with the future."

"I said I wanted to raise the price of gasoline and use that money to improve the environment and make us less dependent on foreign fossil fuel."

"But you would think I was talking about eating your children. The fact is, gasoline costs less today, in real dollars, than it did 30 or 40 years ago. And when you factor in the better mileage than you used to get in the old gas hogs, you've already got a terrific deal."

"Do you know what they pay for a gallon of gas in Canada, in Europe, in Japan, just about anywhere else in the developed world? But you don't hear them whining."

"They said I was pro-business, and I am. But some people made that sound like I believe in child labor or making workers buy spoiled food at the company store."

"I know that it is difficult for some of the unreconstructed lefties in our party to understand that this is not the 1960s and that all businesses and all business people are not evil.

"It works this way. The first obligation a business has is to make a profit. That way, the business stays in business. If the business doesn't make money, eventually it goes out of business. Then instead of a building in which people have jobs that allow them to support their families and pay taxes so they can have schools and cops and firemen and parks, there is an empty building with bums living in it."

"When that happens, the lefties say that society has failed the bums and we must do something for them, so they raise taxes and create programs to make life better for bums. Then the government hires more bureaucrats who really don't do anything to help the bums, except make studies and issue reports that conclude that we must have more programs, so they can have more studies and issue reports."

"All of which could be avoided if we had done something to keep the business competitive in the first place. But if I mention that I want to help business expand and compete in the global economy, a lot of you think I am a tool of Wall Street. OK, have it your way. And when the bums move into the empty businesses in your neighborhood, call my opponent."

"Another reason I lost is that I'm not a pretty boy and I talk funny. So what? Have any of you looked in the mirror lately? Or have you tried to debate anything besides how much money a baseball player should make? So where does a country full of people who can't utter one sentence without mumbling 'uh, yah know?' or 'OK?' every second word get off calling me Elmer Fudd? But I shouldn't be surprised. You elected a movie actor who couldn't say 'Good morning' without a TelePrompser."

"So I want to thank all of those people who voted for me and contributed to my campaign. While you have not experienced the thrill of victory, you have the satisfaction of knowing you're not dimwits, either."

"As for those who prefer some glib, position-hopping, pretty-boy back-slapper, you have a good chance of getting what you deserve."

"The trouble is, the rest of us will get it, too."

"Now I am going to return to private life, make as much money as I can, and if someone mentions public service to me, I'll tell them to try the self-serve pump at the gas station."

Successful campaign

Dear Editor:

"Don't count your chickens before they hatch!" This is a phrase that I have heard since I was in kindergarten. Such old clichés don't mean a thing until they apply to a real-life situation. For me, I came up a few chickens short of a victory in the 1992 ASASU election — 50 chickens to be exact.

Granted, I am sad and disappointed over the results. What saddens me the most is that so few students had any interest this year in the entire elections process. On March 4 and 5, only 2,600 people took the time to vote in the election. The following week, only 1,400 people recast their votes for the run-off election. The hardest part of the campaign process this past month was trying to convince people that they should care and take the two minutes required to punch a few holes on the ballot. I spent $500 on signs, posters and fliers for publicity. I also gave over 45 speeches to about 6,000 students on this campus. I thought for sure that more than 5 percent of the students would vote.

No matter what the results, I want to thank all of the people who helped and supported "our" campaign. Our work was a team effort from day one, and although it didn't pay off in victory, there are so many other things we can be proud of. Look at all the things we accomplished: We fund-raised $400 of the $500 of campaign expenses, we did a survey of students on our own and collected 410 results, we pulled together a strong campaign platform, we hand-painted eight large wood signs and posted them around campus, we got endorsements from the State Press and the Engineering College Council, we encouraged 1,000 of the original 2,600 voters to vote in our favor, and most important, we had a fun time. Please be happy with all our successes, and don't let 50 votes stand in the way of our pride.

Israeli prejudice

Dear Editor:

Mr. Dan Shueftan, a lecturer on Arab-Israeli affairs, recently spoke on campus. The numerous bigoted and blatantly inaccurate remarks he made with regard to Arab and Islam demand clarification.

It has finally become unacceptable to blatantly discriminate against blacks, Asians, Hispanics and Jews. Yet, by the tone of Schueftan's comments, it appears that discrimination against Arabs and Muslims is not only acceptable, but justifiable. Mr. Shueftan's racist remarks included statements such as, "A peaceful resolution between Arabs and Israelis is beyond the capability of Arab culture." The State Press article (3/11/92) commented, "Throughout the speech, Schueftan advocated an Israeli policy of retaliation and antagonism against Arabs, saying 'meanness' is the only way for Arabs to realize Israel will not be undermined."

Shueftan further commented that, "In the Arab world, you have a reality of inherent instability and a very high level of violence." He further asserts that, "This instability and violence has determined the history of the region, and I don't think the reality can change." In fact, the conflicts, instability and violence are a reality of the region shaped by Western imperialism, which created artificial boundaries in a previously unified geographic region, and the history of the Middle East shows that the creation of the Jewish state is the cause of such conflicts.

Shueftan tries to justify Jewish tyranny by saying, "The Jews can't expect the Arabs to treat the Jews better than they treat each other." Anyone who delves into the matter with historical honesty will see that not only can the Jews expect to be treated well by the Arabs, but history is full of examples of Arabs in particular and Muslims in general not only welcoming the Jews to live among them, but even protecting them, as was the case during the Spanish Inquisition and during the Crusades, and even as recently as during the Nazi persecution of Jews, who found refuge in the Muslim Arabs of Morocco. Countless Jews fled Eastern Europe to the protection of Muslims and Arabs in North Africa, Turkey and even in Jerusalem.

Shueftan revealed the true attitude of the Israeli government toward international law and peace in the Middle East. In a comment directed toward Arabs, he said, "If you mess with us we will break your face, regardless of international opinion." Shueftan and his government's disregard for international opinion clearly shows that Israel is committed to violate the human rights of the Arab populations of all the territories it occupies in spite of condemnation by impartial and than under the rule of any other group? In fact, it is a basic tenet of Islam to treat Jews and Christians with kindness, compassion and respect, and when under a Muslim government they are to be allowed freedom of religion and protection against foreign enemies.

To compare Islamic government, referred to by the Israeli-coined and despised word "fundamentalism," to the South African repressive regime, a keen ally of Israel since the 1976 Voster agreement, is but an attempt to lessen the oppression inflicted on the non-whites by apartheid and confuse the reader about what Islam stands for.

Mixed heritage

Dear Editor:

Lorenzo Sierra Jr., your article was very well written and I can understand where you are coming from. The fundamental that you miss and other people miss, including whites, is that it is a black and white issue.

I am of mixed heritage, as are most Americans. My grandparents came directly from Italy, so I can trace that part of my ancestry as can many other European Americans. Since I am dark and my mother is black, I am automatically considered black in America and am happy to be so.

No matter who you are and where you come from in this world you have another place to call home, except for black or African-Americans. Even the Creoles and blacks in Latin and Central America can call Columbia, Panama and Brazil home primarily because of cultural assimilation and a native tongue, Spanish.

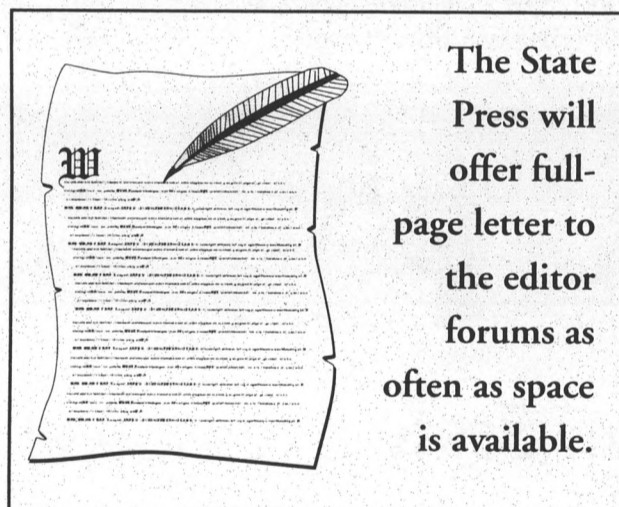

If you are a Mexican you can go to Mexico, if you are French you can go to France and if you are Native American you are home, even though you are not treated like it. The point being is that we as black Americans have no place to call home except America, as we do not speak any African language or have African culture let alone look African.

Thus, the reason it is a black and white thing in America is the staunch refusal of America to recognize that we as black or African-Americans have more claim to America with its violent history than anyone here, except for Native Americans.

If more Americans were like you, Lorenzo, and would fight for education for all children, we wouldn't be in the position we are today.

Each race has its own unique cultural problems, and as long as we keep acting like there is no compromise and understanding, the powers that be will continue to divide us and destroy our world.

objective elements of the international community. In fact, Israel has received more condemnations by the United Nations than any other country.

Shueftan then attempted to justify his aggressive comments by telling the audience that, "The overall Arab-Israeli conflict lies at the heart of the strife, one that Americans do not understand." He further commented, "These are American terms (compromise, etc.) that are not very applicable to Middle Eastern realities." In fact, the Arab-Israeli conflict is not hard to understand. Israel is occupying Arab land and expects the Arabs to be happy about it. The ideas of justice and fairness are not American, or Western terms for that matter, they are universal concepts. If they can be applied in America, they can be applied in the Middle East only if Israel is willing to abide by them. Shueftan seems to care less about such universals when it comes to Israeli injustices.

During his speech Shueftan said that many Arab people "demand Muslim fundamentalism, which is repressive to the point where South Africa looks like a liberal paradigm." Here, Shueftan equates Arabs and Muslim fundamentalism, whatever that means, to extend his racist and insulting remarks to Muslims at large. Need he be reminded that throughout history, Jews enjoyed superior treatment under Muslim rule

This photo of Rodney King, taken three days after his March 3, 1991, videotaped beating, is one of three introduced into evidence by the prosecution Tuesday. Not previously seen, the photos were supplied by King's civil attorney Steven Lerman and admitted over objection from defense attorneys.

Steven Lerman, attorney for Rodney King, takes the oath before giving testimony Tuesday in Simi Valley, Calif., about news photos the prosecution plans to use as evidence during the trial of four Los Angeles police officers charged with assaulting King.

President approval rating drops in poll

PHOENIX (AP) — President Bush's approval rating has dropped dramatically since October, according to a newspaper's poll of Arizona voters.

Bush's rating fell from 70 percent, to 46 percent among Maricopa County voters taking part in the poll, The Phoenix Gazette reported Tuesday.

The poll was based on telephone interviews conducted March 12 through March 15 with 396 registered voters in Maricopa County. The respondents were among a group of 500 contacted by the paper in October to respond to a yearlong series of polls.

The margin of error for the poll overall is 5 percentage points, the paper said.

Republicans responding to the poll ranked their preferences this way: Bush, 68 percent; James Buchanan, 15 percent; unspecified candidate, 3 percent; David Duke, 1 percent; undecided, 13 percent. This part of the poll had an error margin of 7 percentage points.

The state GOP selects its delegates to the party's national convention in meetings May 30.

Arizona hasn't voted Democratic in a presidential election since 1948.

Bush's will open a Phoenix headquarters this week, said state GOP Chairman Jerry Davis, who said the president isn't taking a win for granted.

"We recognize we have to work," Davis said.

"Obviously, we would prefer that the number still be in the 70 percent range . . . with the perception of the economy and some of the problems that have been going on, 46 percent is not a horrible rating," Davis said of the poll.

La Guardia crash

last that long," Richard Adams, a retired Federal Aviation Administration official whose expertise is aircraft icing, said Tuesday.

Gary Bradley, who chairs a professional engineering committee on aircraft icing, agreed: "In a snowstorm similar to La Guardia, where the snow was falling at about 1½ inches an hour, probably the fluid would not have lasted and it would have had to be re-de-iced."

Depending on the manufacturer, Type 1 "has a holdover time . . . of a little under a minute to about five minutes," said Iris Charms, a spokeswoman for Octagon Process, an Edgewater, N.J., company that makes Type 1 and another cold-weather protectant for airplanes, known as Type 2.

Type 2 prevents the formation of ice for at least 30 minutes. But it's not allowed in most instances at La Guardia because of fears it will make the runways too slippery.

FAA spokesman Fred Farrar said it is up to the pilot to determine how often a plane needs to be de-iced before takeoff.

Twenty-four people survived when Flight 405 crashed at the end of the runway and skidded into Flushing Bay.

Eighteen people died of drowning, four died from head or torso injuries suffered during impact and four from thermal or burn injuries, medical examiner's spokeswoman Ellen Borakove said Tuesday. One victim had burns, blunt impact and thermal injuries.

At the airport Tuesday, flatbed trucks carted pieces of the Fokker 28 jet to Hangar 5, where three dozen people analyzed them.

There were many crushed, twisted, mangled or charred bits, plus four recognizable pieces: the front of the fuselage, including the cockpit, the four-seat first-class section and a row of three coach seats; one wing; the tail; and an engine. Airline magazines remained intact in the pockets of the blue first-class seats.

The Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which runs La Guardia, allows the Type 2 de-icing fluid at La Guardia only on planes being stored for a long time at a gate.

Once a plane leaves its gate, the Type 2 fluid must be removed. Port Authority officials worry that Type 2 — which is about 300 times thicker than the Type 1 fluid — could make runways slippery if it falls off the wings, said Jim Muldoon, general manager for aviation services.

But because it lasts longer, Type 2 is especially useful at busy airports like La Guardia where delays are common, said Joseph T. Lee, a spokesman for Arco Chemical, a Newtown Square, Pa., company that makes both types of fluid.

"Where the plane is caught in a taxi position and takes a long time to take off, Type 2 gives you a wider safety margin," Lee said.

Since 1968, snow or ice has been cited as a contributing factor in 14 major accidents, said Bradley, who is affiliated with the Society of Automotive Engineers.

In each, "Type 1 was either applied and the time between application of the fluid and takeoff exceeded the fluid's ability, or in some of those cases, the airplane was simply not de-iced," he said.

Type 2 is used at only about a dozen airports in the United States, although it is the preferred de-icer in Europe.

The Airline Pilots Association has long pressed to have de-icing done near the runway, right before takeoff, rather than at the gate. But FAA spokesman Farrar said that would involve either a permanent structure or trucks on or near the runway, a possible hazard to planes trying to take off and land.

Bank merger still faces review

PHOENIX (AP) — The biggest banking merger in U.S. history may be a "done deal" as far as federal regulators are concerned, but it still faces one additional hurdle in Arizona: approval by the state Banking Department.

The Federal Reserve Board approved the merger of BankAmerica Corp. and Security Pacific Corp. Monday, creating a banking colossus that will be the second largest in the country, and either the first or second largest in Arizona. Opponents, who succeeded in delaying but not blocking the merger, expressed disappointment but not surprise that it ultimately was approved.

"The fed's always been more concerned with bank mergers than with consumer issues," said Martin Shalloo of ACORN, the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now.

Because Bank of America Arizona and Security Pacific Arizona both are state-chartered institutions, the deal will have to be approved by state banking regulators.

Judy Seymour, director of the state Banking Department's division of deposit institutions, said she expected a decision "in the next few weeks."

She said the decision will be based on applications filed by the two banks, and that there would be no public hearings or opportunity for opponents to intervene.

However, Ms. Seymour said the Banking Department would have access to all of the testimony taken by the Federal Reserve Board during a series of public hearings in Arizona and other Western states affected by the merger.

She said she did not know what would happen should the merger of the state banks be rejected.

"It hasn't happened in the past," she said. "I don't know what the legal procedure would be at that time."

Others have suggested that the banks simply would give up their state charters, placing them beyond the regulatory reach of the state Banking Department, and depriving the department of the hefty fees it collects from the state-chartered institutions.

Betty Reiss, a BankAmerica spokeswoman in San Francisco, said she "really couldn't speculate right now" on what steps the banks might take if state officials were to reject the transaction.

Ms. Reiss also noted that BankAmerica Corp.'s acquisition of Security Pacific Corp. technically is still pending because the U.S. Justice Department has 30 days to challenge it on antitrust grounds. The Justice Department already has said it has found no grounds to challenge the merger, and Shalloo said it is not likely that ACORN or other consumer groups that opposed the deal would mount legal challenges.

"It's a done deal as far as we're concerned," he said. "There's no way that we have the resources to go up against BankAmerica."

Although opponents were unable to stop the merger, Shalloo said they did succeed in getting many of their concerns addressed by the Federal Reserve Board.

The approval included "95 pages of conditions that will impact the availability of credit," he said.

Among the conditions is a requirement for Bank of America to improve its lending record in low-income and minority communities, "which is what we were after in the first place," Shalloo said.

Ms. Reiss said it would take about a year for the merger to be completed, and she said customers would be contacted before any changes are made in their accounts.

Bank of America has promised to sell 49 branches and $2.4 billion in deposits in Arizona, making way for another bank to open in the state. David Hanna, chairman of Bank of America Arizona, said the divestiture would result in creation of the fourth- or fifth-largest bank in Arizona and a strong, viable competitor.

Judge reverses order in U-Haul libel case

PHOENIX (AP) — A ruling in a libel case between members of the family which controls U-Haul sets the stage for another legal confrontation over book authors' rights to withhold information about their sources, an attorney says.

U.S. District Judge Roger G. Strand reversed himself Monday and lifted an order which allowed author Ronald Watkins to avoid giving a pre-trial interview in the libel case.

Strand's ruling eventually could result in contempt proceedings against Watkins, said his attorney Guy B. Price.

"My client has been very clear that he will not disclose his confidential sources, nor the information that they have given him," Price said Tuesday. "He will go to jail, if necessary, to protect those sources."

Strand's ruling was based on the Arizona Court of Appeals' Jan. 23 decision that Arizona's "shield law" applies only to print and broadcast journalists, not book authors. The shield law protects journalists from having to disclose sources.

At Watkins' request, Strand in December issued a protective order barring plaintiffs in the U-Haul lawsuit from compelling Watkins to give a pretrial deposition and produce notes and other materials.

However, the judge Monday decided to lift the order during a review requested by the lawsuit plaintiffs in the wake of the Court of Appeals ruling.

Watkins, who is not a party in the libel suit, is writing a book on the Shoen family's battle over control of U-Haul International Inc. and the unsolved slaying of family murder Eva Shoen in Telluride, Colo., in August 1990.

The Court of Appeals ruling concerned another author, Dary Matera, who is working on a book about Joseph Stedino, the police operative in the "AzScam" political-corruption investigation.

In that case, an attorney for one of the AzScam defendants sought a pretrial interview from Matera.

The Arizona Supreme Court on March 17 declined to review the Court of Appeals ruling, thus letting it stand. Dan Barr, Matera's attorney, told The Phoenix Gazette a decision would be made this week on whether to appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Price argued unsuccessfully before Strand that facts in Watkins' case are substantially different from that of Matera, whose testimony was sought in a criminal case in which the rights of a defendant are deemed to have at least equal weight as those of a journalist to withhold information about sources.

Also, while Matera wasn't claiming confidentiality regarding information obtained from Stedino, Watkins' sources included individuals promised confidentiality, Price said during an interview.

Richard M. Amoroso, an attorney for the plaintiffs in the libel case, said Strand's ruling "speaks for itself."

"The court's ruling is correct under the law," he said.

Amoroso also disputed Price's argument that the plaintiffs' attempt to gather information from Watkins was merely an attempt to impede publication of the book.

"That's a frivolous thing for him to say," Amoroso said.

Without having had a chance to question Watkins, Amoroso said he couldn't assess how important the deposition would be toward proving the plaintiffs' case.

"All I'll say is that we'll find out through his deposition what Mr. Watkins knows," Amoroso said.

No date has been set for a deposition for Watkins, who likely would refuse to answer any questions about his sources if he appears for the pretrial interview, Price said.

The plaintiffs' lawyers could seek a court order to compel Watkins to answer questions about his sources, but a new legal challenge could then be mounted in either the District Court or federal appeals court on constitutional grounds not covered by Strands' ruling, Price said.

Eva Shoen, who was found shot dead in a family cabin on Aug. 6, 1990, was the wife of Samuel "Sam" Shoen. Sam Shoen, a leader of the family's so-called "outside" faction, was at odds with a faction led by E.J. "Joe" Shoen, head of the "inside" faction which controlled Amerco, parent company of the rental company.

The libel suit filed by Joe Shoen and a brother, Mark, in October 1990 alleges another brother, Michael, and their father, U-Haul founder Leonard S. Shoen, made defamatory statements falsely labeling them as possible suspects in the killing.

No trial date has been set, Amoroso said.

Watkins' previous books include High Crimes and Misdemeanors about the impeachment and removal of Gov. Evan Mecham and Evil Intentions about a 1981 kidnapping and murder of a Phoenix woman.

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents Tuesday:

- Three hundred dollars worth of damage was done to the walls of the sixth floor of Manzanita Hall.
- An ASU employee's car was damaged by the gate arm at the entrance of Parking Lot 8. Estimated repair cost is $300.
- A Panasonic videocassette recorder, valued at $269, was stolen from the Architecture Building.
- The fire alarm at Palo Verde Main was set off by overcooked food.
- An senior student was advised of disorderly conduct by police after she tried to enter a class she had been barred from for disruptive behavior.
- A student's Elmer Soprano Saxophone, valued at $2,500, was stolen from the Music Building.
- A sophomore business student and a woman not affiliated with the University were advised of trespassing after they were seen parked in the east practice fields at 3 a.m.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Tuesday:

- A rash of robberies continued at Fun Services, 1938 E. Broadway Road, as two brown teddy bears were stolen early Sunday morning. The thieves got in by breaking the front door window using a soccer-ball-sized rock, causing $350 in damage and setting off the alarm. They took the bears from a display in the store and fled through the exit, leaving a trail of six bears leading to the business' east parking lot.
- Gary Gustafson, owner of the business, said teddy bears were also stolen on March 13, in the same fashion, adding that the thieves "don't get much of anything. When that alarm goes off, they take off." He said he figures that students from nearby Connelly Junior High School are committing the thefts since they "bypass our computers and go for the teddy bears," but police have no evidence pointing to any suspects.

- Shelby Jean Hansley, 51, was arrested and charged with possession of marijuana after a quantity was found in her trailer at 1847 E. Apache Blvd., and several plants were found growing outside.

- Two vehicles were stolen within an hour and a half, and within a mile of each other, along Rural Road Sunday afternoon. A 1985 Chevy Silverado pickup, belonging to an ASU art professor, was stolen from the parking lot of Smith's, 3255 S. Rural Road, while the professor's wife was shopping inside. The truck is black, with aluminum rims and a four-wheel-drive camper shell, and is valued at $15,000. A white 1989 Pontiac Grand Am, valued at $10,000 was stolen from the parking lot of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel Church, 2121 S. Rural Road. That car belongs to an employee of the Maricopa County Attorney's office.

- A 26-year-old Chandler man was arrested after he attempted to leave Zia Records, 105 W. University Drive, with three Ohio Players cassette tapes, valued at $22.47, in his pants pockets. The tapes had the protective magnetic strip removed from them that would have set off the store's alarm at the exit.

Tempe police cash in on 'innovative' work

By RICHARD RUELAS
State Press

The Tempe Police Department has been awarded a $185,000 grant from the federal government to continue its efforts to fight drug abuse in a neighborhood along Apache Boulevard.

Citing the "innovative neighborhood-oriented policing" practices of Tempe police, the U. S. Justice Department awarded the money that will allow the "Beat 16" project to continue until July 1993.

Roger Austin, spokesman for the Tempe police, said the project focuses on the area north of Apache Boulevard and east of McClintock Drive.

Austin said that area is economically depressed and has experienced cultural problems, both of which have led to friction between police and citizens.

"What we've tried to do is change that," he said. "Rather than running things like we have throughout the rest of the city, we have specific officers assigned to that beat."

Since the program started a year ago, the assigned officers have been attempting to make themselves known to the citizens of the neighborhood, Austin said.

"They've gone out and gone on door-to-door canvasses of that area, introducing themselves, saying, 'I'm part of this community too,'" he said.

The grant money will, among other things, pay for upkeep of the community police station in Beat 16.

Located at Escalante Park, Austin said the station facilitates communication between residents and police, "instead of the people in the area feeling they are separated from the city and city facilities."

Part of the $200,000 awarded in the last government grant, in January 1991, went to a neighborhood cleanup project, Austin said.

The money comes from the Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Assistance.

Arizona court confirms execution dates

PHOENIX (AP) — The Arizona Supreme Court has confirmed an April 6 execution date for Donald Eugene Harding and has set dates for two others convicted of murder.

The high court also issued a warrant of execution for Donald Edward Beaty, setting May 22 for his death, and for Robert Wayne Vickers, setting May 29 for his execution.

The warrants were recorded on March 19.

Harding's execution, once set for early January, had been stayed pending an appeal that included the claim that brain damage suffered at birth made it difficult for him to resist violent emotions.

In a 3-2 decision, the court denied his appeals March 17, including rejecting his request for a new mitigation hearing and commutation to a sentence of life in prison. Two justices said the case should be returned to trial court for mitigation consideration in light of the new evidence concerning his brain damage.

Harding was sentenced to death for killing businessmen from Mesa and Tucson in a Tucson hotel. He also was convicted of a third murder and was sentenced to death in that case as well.

Vickers' execution had been set for June 21, 1991, but was stayed pending appeal which the court denied on Jan. 21. He has been sentenced to die for the 1978 murder of a cellmate in the state prison at Florence, and for the 1982 slaying of a death row inmate.

Beaty, whose execution once was set for June 14, 1991, but was stayed pending appeals to the state and the U.S. supreme courts, was sentenced to death for the murder of 13-year-old Christy Ann Fornoff of Tempe, who vanished while collecting payments for her newspaper route. Her body was found later near trash containers at the Tempe apartment complex at which Beaty was a janitor.

Arizona court rules defendant can withdraw plea in bargain

PHOENIX (AP) — A defendant who believed he had been promised a lenient sentence in a plea bargain must be allowed to withdraw his plea if the sentence exceeds what he expected, an appellate court ruled Tuesday.

The Arizona Court of Appeals sent Raul Francisco Diaz's case back to Maricopa County Superior Court with an order that he be allowed to withdraw his plea if he still wants to.

The appellate court also overturned the sentence of one year in Maricopa County Jail and three years' probation.

Diaz had pleaded guilty to possession of marijuana, but believed he was doing so under the condition it would be treated as a misdemeanor rather than a felony for sentencing. In that event, the sentence would have been less than that which the trial court actually imposed.

The appeals court said the documentation of the agreement was ambiguous. "An ambiguous plea agreement, interpreted in a way to materially disadvantage the defendant, cannot be enforced," Judge Jefferson L. Lankford wrote.

A judge's sentencing discretion can't be confined by plea agreements, but the judge must permit a defendant to withdraw if the sentence is to be of greater severity than that to which the defendant agreed, Lankford wrote.

In a dissent, Judge Levi Ray Haire, said the majority made "several assumptions supported by neither the record nor the actual plea agreement," and as a result, reached an erroneous decision.

Noriega's wife arrested

MIAMI (AP) — Ousted Panamanian leader Manuel Noriega's wife was arrested for shoplifting, police said Tuesday.

Felicidad Noriega, attending her husband's drug trial Tuesday, dismissed the incident as being blown out of proportion and refused to discuss it in detail.

"There was nothing," Mrs. Noriega said. "It's just rumors."

Mrs. Noriega, 46, was arrested Friday at a Burdine's department store and charged with grand theft, said Metro Dade police spokesman Patrick Brickman.

She and a friend were accused by store security officers of taking buttons valued at $305 off clothing at the store in Dadeland Mall, south of Miami. The grand theft charge stemmed from damage to the clothing, valued at $1,200.

Felicidad Noriega

Mrs. Noriega was booked into jail and stayed 12 hours before being released on $1,500 bond.

Tempe election

Mitchell was challenged by two first-time candidates, 22-year old Warren Apel, an ASU alumnus, and 21-year-old Al Gold, an ASU broadcast production major.

Apel, who received 15.8 percent of the vote, said that although he was disappointed to have lost, the campaign gave him "name recognition" and the experience would help him prepare for future political races.

"I learned a lot about campaigning in the last six months," Apel said. "Don't be surprised if you see me run in the 1994 election."

Gold received 5 percent of the votes cast for mayor.

Political newcomer Dennis Cahill, a 53-year-old masonry contractor, received 60 percent of the votes cast for city council seats, the highest percentage of the six candidates.

Cahill said he was "overwhelmed" by the high level of voter response to his campaign.

"It is humbling to have that many people believe in me," he said. "It makes me want to work even harder."

Cahill said he would work to reform the city process for getting voter referendums on the ballot and would push to increase voter turnout.

"It is very important to me to make it easier to get referendums on the ballot," he said.

With councilwomen Pat Hatton and Barbara Sherman both choosing not to run for re-election, the race for the three council seats by the six candidates was more active than the mayoral race.

In the primary elections, if no candidate for a council seat receives a majority vote, then the two candidates receiving the most votes will face each other in a general election May 12.

With only one candidate obtaining a majority, the top four vote-getting candidates will compete for the remaining two council seats in the May general election.

Two-term councilman Don Cassano, the sole incumbent vying for one of the three available council positions, failed to obtain a majority but did garner enough to place him on the ballot in the general election. Cassano received the second highest number of votes, with 49.2 percent.

Joseph Lewis, a 25-year-old self-employed businessman, also qualified for the general election with 31.6 percent of the vote.

First-time candidate John Waters, a retired Tempe Union High School District superintendent, obtained 44.7 percent of the vote, which will place him on the May ballot.

"It's been a good experience. It's been a lot of work," he said. "I have met an awful lot of people. I've had a lot of support from the people in the town, many of whom I had no idea were supporters."

Chuck Malpede, who has failed on two prior attempts to win a council seat, will also have a place on the general election ballot. Malpede received 40.7 percent of the vote.

Charles Kirkland, a 25-year-old businessman, received 26.8 percent of the vote, the lowest number of the candidates, and did not qualify for the general election.

Voter turnout was light, with fewer than 11 percent of Tempe's 85,501 registered voters casting ballots.

Budget

The bill the governor signed would increase payroll withholding for state taxes to make up for an expected shortfall as a result of President Bush's plan to decrease federal withholdings.

"The governor is going to Washington and he won't be back until Friday," Hays said. "In the meantime, the other bills will be analyzed and a recommendation will be made to the governor when he gets back."

The governor was forced to call the special session when an estimated $58,681,500 deficit developed in the current year's budget.

Stephens said the cuts were difficult to make, but added that the newest bills make up "a much better proposal than the original proposal the governor sent the Legislature."

He pointed out that the final version did not cut as much funding from the universities and other educational institutions in the state.

Oh no!

Child

"You would have a great feeling of accomplishment if you were selected to do the transplant."

Phillips said the marrow-typing procedure involves three primary steps.

"The donors have to sign consent for each stage, and they can always back out of program," Phillips said.

The first stage of typing will enter donors into the National Marrow Donor Program, a network of marrow donor, collection and recruitment centers, he said.

If preliminary matches are found after the first set of tests, potential donors are asked to sign another consent form and donate three additional tubes of blood that are subjected to further testing.

Donors whose samples continue to match after the second stage are called back for a final stage of typing, which verifies that the sample is compatible with the patient and is free of viruses such as hepatitis and HIV.

"If they pass all of the tests, a physical examination is scheduled for the donors along with a 2½ hour information session," Phillips said. "And they will have to wait 72 hours before deciding if they want to do it."

"Then the date is set and the patient is notified of a donor."

Stewart said the Friends of Chad Pyper will pay the $50 fee that accompanies each initial marrow typing test for 300 students.

"We realize that students won't have the money, and somewhere down the road we would like to have the money to come back and have more people tested," she said. "But most importantly, people need to realize that the procedure is not painful."

"After the anaesthetic wears off, (donors') butts will be sore, as if they had fallen down on the ice, but that's quite a ways from what the conception is. And most donors have expressed that the experience of being able to help save a life is like winning a grand prize — it's a wonderful feeling."

● WASHINGTON (AP) — It's a classic story of good against bad, David against Goliath, Republicans vs. Democrats.

And it's written by Marilyn Quayle, wife of Vice President Dan Quayle, and her sister, Nancy Northcott.

So guess who are the good guys and who are the bad. "Obviously" the sisters' politics figured heavily in the outline of the book, Quayle said in an interview. "You've got the Republican senator, who's the good guy, and you've got the Democrats that are bad, and communism is still bad."

In their thriller, Embrace the Serpent, to be published April 3, the president is an Ivy League Democrat, obsessed by style over substance, and unwilling until nearly the end to believe that the Russians are plotting with Arab extremists to take over Cuba after Castro's death.

The book describes this Democratic president and the Democrat-controlled Congress as having "little understanding of either defense or security."

The authors lament: "If only they could understand the long-term implications of their actions and vote accordingly. If only the SDI were in place now and in its entirety," they said in reference to the anti-missile Strategic Defense Initiative.

It takes a Republican senator — a black from Georgia whose wife is a pediatrician and whose dog is named Justice — to dig up the evidence to persuade the president the Russians are up to no good, to support a Cuban patriot as the new Cuban leader and thwart a threat to the United States.

Quayle and Northcott depict the U.S. intelligence capabilities as inept. They write: "Rumors of Castro's death had reached the United States, but American intelligence agencies had been so crippled by the micromanagement of Congress that little concrete information was available."

Yes, more politics, Quayle said, but also a warning that "if we as a nation don't keep our intelligence capabilities open, we can be manipulated."

The media, which generally have not been favorable to Quayle, the vice president, also take a big hit. The executive editor of the largest paper in Washington, D.C., the fictitious Washington Herald, is clearly biased, haughty and arrogant. And he's sleeping with an important senator's wife to boot.

But don't look for any graphic sex scenes.

"It didn't need it," Quayle said.

"Our brother told us in the beginning that Louis L'Amour has sold millions of books, and he never had a sex scene in any of his books," she said. "So we figured if it worked for Louis, it would work for us."

The women maintain that they didn't use any inside information for the book.

"It's stuff that anyone, if they take the time, just like (espionage novelist) Tom Clancy has done in all his books," can find, Northcott said. "All in our book is available to the public if you're willing to search and dig."

In fact, Quayle said, they didn't use the Library of Congress or write to any government agencies, "because we didn't want to have any question that we had used government sources." They relied on the public library in Northcott's hometown of Tullahoma, Tenn., Cuban-American friends, newspapers and a slew of books, some by former Cuban political prisoners.

One of the things they obviously enjoyed in writing the book was that, because it was fiction, "we could make it happen the way we wanted it to happen," Northcott said.

One tidbit they had fun with is in the second paragraph of the book, where Castro is described lighting a cigar, "a physician-prohibited cigar he allowed himself only at these meetings" of top Cuban officials.

But Castro quit smoking in 1985.

"He supposedly stopped, but we decided he sneaks," Quayle said. "To all appearances he had quit ... another failure of our espionage system."

Utah center Paul Afeaki blocks a shot by ASU forward Dwayne Fontana in the Sun Devils' 60-58 loss to the Utes in a second round game of the National Invitation Tournament on Thursday night at the University Activity Center.

Defeat by min-Ute margin signals end to Sun Devil season

Utah comes back to eliminate ASU from NIT

By DARREN URBAN
State Press

The ending to the ASU men's basketball team couldn't have been more indicative of the topsy-turvy roller coaster ride the Sun Devils took all season long.

A heartfelt effort, but just a little short when it counted.

With the game all but in hand, ASU scored just one point in the last three minutes, and Utah snatched a 60-58 win from the Sun Devils in front of 7,264 at the University Activity Center and ending ASU's NIT ride in the second round.

"We had a great opportunity," Sun Devil coach Bill Frieder said. "It's just the last three possessions we did not get the ball where we needed it."

With ASU (19-14) nursing a one-point lead and holding possession, the Sun Devils attempted to run some clock with under a minute left.

But senior point guard Lynn Collins made one of his patented dribble drives into a trap in the corner, and his attempt to float a pass out front to Mario Bennett was picked off by the Utes' Byron Wilson. Wilson was fouled on the ensuing fast break, and made both free throws with 25 seconds left.

After a timeout, sophomore guard Stevin Smith dribbled some time off as the Sun Devils cleared the middle. But Smith couldn't get around Jimmy Soto, and his heave from 22 feet out missed left, and ASU was done.

"(Soto) was on me pretty tight," Smith said. "I jumped over him and — you can't make them all — it didn't go in."

Ironically, the Sun Devils, with a home crowd to back them up, came out blazing, doing everything right at the start. The Sun Devils hit their first five shots from the field, building a 14-6 lead as Bennett smoked the Utes for nine points in the run.

But as Frieder promised, Utah coach Rick Majerus changed things up, going to a zone defense that took some of the momentum away. The Utes (22-10) would switch back and forth from zone to a man-to-man throughout the half, but ASU couldn't shake its shooting woes, and Utah used a 10-0 run to take a 26-25 lead.

"They did what they wanted to do, and they did what they had to do," Frieder said.

When Bennett picked up his third foul with over two minutes left, the Sun Devils looked to be in serious trouble.

In stepped sophomore guard Stevin Smith, who with 4.7 seconds left took a missed free throw length of the court to hit a 3-pointer at the buzzer to give ASU a one-point edge at the half.

Foul trouble began to catch up with the

Big effort from frosh helps ASU Cruz to victory

On just 3 days of rest, Newstrom goes distance

By DAN ZEIGER
State Press

Although common sense dictates that it would be awfully hard for him to hit a baseball with a bag over his head, Jacob Cruz felt tempted to do so when he stepped up to the plate earlier this season.

The way the ASU freshman outfielder had been hitting, he said anything would have helped.

"I was almost ashamed to go up to bat displaying an average of something like .100," Cruz said. "It put a lot of pressure on me. When I finally began hitting my weight, I started to feel a little better."

Unless he woke up this morning 150 pounds heavier, Cruz isn't hitting his weight anymore. His 5-for-5 performance Tuesday at Packard Stadium led the Sun Devils to a 12-5 victory against UC-Santa Barbara and took care of that.

After his offensive deluge, Cruz — who had gained a reputation as a sparkling defensive player but a struggling hitter — saw his average rise from .167 to .348 and his confidence grow just as much.

"I'm getting a lot more confident now that I'm starting to get in the lineup every day," Cruz said. "And this will definitely help. I thought I would have a pretty good game . . . because I felt like nobody could get me out today."

Cruz said he began feeling more sure of himself after a stern talking-to by ASU coach Jim Brock, who had been pleased with the youngster's work in right field but none too happy with his efforts at the plate.

"I won't go into what I said or the decibel level that I said it at, but I basically challenged him to play to his potential and work harder," Brock said. "I felt he needed to have more of a positive attitude and just go at it."

Cruz also collected three RBI, with two of them coming during a five-run fourth inning by the 10th-ranked Sun Devils. Antone Williamson started off the frame by hitting the first home run of his college career to give ASU a 1-0 lead, and five batters later, Cruz stepped up with runners on second and

Miller exemplifies guts at NCAA wrestling finals

Despite injury to knee, junior gets 2nd place in class

By MICHAEL FLORES
State Press

Overcoming adversity is vital to athletic success. That has been the story of the ASU wrestling team's season.

Never was that better displayed than by the performance of junior Ray Miller at the NCAA Championships this weekend in Oklahoma City.

Miller, one of five Sun Devils to qualify for nationals this season, wrestled his way to a second-place finish in the 158-pound weight class, earning All-American honors for the third straight time.

Ordinarily, such a showing would be expected from Miller. He entered the tournament with an impressive 25-5-1 record after capturing his second Pac-10 title Feb. 29, and looked to be invincible.

But what makes his feat more astounding is the fact that two weeks before the tournament, Miller partially tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee during practice.

For many wrestlers, that would have meant the end of their season — possibly their career.

"For some people it would," assistant coach Thom Ortiz said. "But not Ray Miller."

"Courageous" was how ASU coach Bobby Douglas summed up Miller's performance. "Considering he should not have even gone, he was phenomenal."

The decision to allow him to wrestle was made late last week by team physician Dr. Steven Zonner, with input from Miller and Douglas.

"We wouldn't have let him wrestle if there was any great chance of permanent damage," Zonner said. "The fact that the knee had good stability and showed very little swelling after it happened were good signs that it wasn't too severe."

For Miller, there was never any doubt that he would compete.

"I made up my mind once and for all that I was going," he said.

Sporting a bulky protective knee brace, which also served to limit his mobility, Miller won four matches (including a 6-5 victory over second seed Tom Ryan of Iowa) before being defeated by Pat Smith of Oklahoma State in the finals.

Miller could easily use the injury as an excuse for not winning the title — and most people would understand.

Miller doesn't buy that. Asked whether he was content with second place considering his handicap, he replied to the

"I feel I still could have won," he said of his 3-1 loss to Smith, an old rival from their high school days in Oklahoma. "So, no, I'm not really satisfied."

Douglas felt otherwise.

"Ray was a great inspiration to the rest of the team," he said. "I was proud of him and the rest of the guys."

The victory gave Smith his third national championship at 158 pounds and meant Miller will have to wait until next year.

For now, Miller awaits word on the knee. He will undergo arthroscopic surgery to determine the extent of the injury and to remove damaged cartilage.

"We'll be able to make a better evaluation then," Zonner said.

Miller remains optimistic.

"I don't think that I tore it up much more at nationals," he said. "I felt some pain and discomfort, but it's feeling much better now."

"I hope the ligament is still intact," he continued, adding that it would mean four to six weeks of recovery if that is the case, as opposed to four to six months if reconstructive surgery is required.

The nationals was the tournament that Miller and his teammates had looked forward to throughout an otherwise forgettable season. That was where they intended to make their presence known.

ASU finished sixth as a team — near Douglas' expectations.

"We had our difficulties this season," Douglas said. "Particularly in dual meets. But we expected that to happen. Therefore, we decided to concentrate on doing well at the nationals. That's what you get known for. Winning national championships. Looking back, I think we took the correct approach."

Iowa captured the national team title, its second straight and the 13th in school history. Penn State finished second, followed by OSU, Iowa State, Ohio State and then ASU.

Hawkeye twin brothers Tom and Terry Brands each won titles, Terry's second and Tom's third. Terry (35-0) defeated Sun Devil junior Shawn Charles in the 126-pound finale while Tom was named the tournament's outstanding wrestler after winning at 134 pounds.

Charles' second-place finish earned him All-America honors for the third time. He finished seventh at last year's nationals.

"Charles wrestled very well," Ortiz said. "(Terry) Brands was just too tough. This tournament should serve as a springboard for Shawn. With Brands (a senior) gone next year, look for Shawn to dominate."

Another gutsy performance was turned in by Marco Sanchez. The ASU junior was upset in the second round 2-1 by Mike Moreno of Iowa State, but then ran off six straight victories in the consolation bracket to finish third at 134 pounds. He earned All-America honors for the first time.

"Marco showed a lot of heart to come back like that," Ortiz said. "It would have been easy for him to quit. Instead he took the longest route possible for third place."

Mike Anderson ended his ASU career by also earning his first All-America mention. The senior easily won his first two matches, then lost in the quarterfinals. He advanced through the consolation bracket to the finals, where he lost 3-2 to Clarion's Kurt Angle.

"Anderson's best days as a wrestler are still ahead of him," Douglas said. "He's still gaining experience. I think he'll be more successful in international style (wrestling) than he was in collegiate."

With Miller, Sanchez, Charles, 1990 All-American Wayne McMinn and tournament qualifier Mickey Nunez all returning as seniors next season, Douglas is optimistic.

"We already have a slogan for next year," he said. "We're baack."

third.

The freshman stroked a single to right, scoring pitcher Doug Newstrom from third and center fielder Todd Steverson from second. He then came home when second baseman Bill Dunn took a 1-2 offering from UCSB's Travis Rodgers and lost it behind the left-field fence for a two-run homer that made the score 5-0.

The Sun Devils (20-9) collected one run in the fifth and two more in the sixth, but they only held an 8-5 cushion after that inning because the Gauchos came back with five runs of their own during the two frames.

UCSB got three of those runs on errors by Dunn, who brutally offset his home run with three fielding miscues on the day. In the fifth inning, Gaucho shortstop Danny Lane came home from third when Dunn misplayed a ground ball, and another error in the next stanza resulted in two more runs.

After designated hitter Chris Johnson and second baseman Dave Waco pounded RBI singles to cut the ASU lead to 6-3, Newstrom — who was also pitching — retired two batters before getting catcher Jeff Elder to hit a grounder to second.

But the crowd of 1,028 was shocked when the ball went through Dunn's legs and brought in two UCSB runs. The count stood at 6-5 until the Sun Devils got the pair back in the bottom of the sixth.

But Dunn would eventually be off the hook when ASU clinched the game by scoring four runs in the bottom of the eighth.

With one out and ASU runners on first and third, UCSB reliever John Stuart unloaded a wild pitch to Newstrom that scored Sun Devil shortstop Kurt Ehmann from third and advanced catcher Jim Henderson from first to second.

Newstrom then singled to right to bring Henderson home from second and subsequently scored on a base hit by first baseman Todd Cady. ASU's last run was hit in three batters later by — who else? — Cruz, whose seeing-eye single brought Steverson home from third base.

The winning pitcher was Newstrom, who went the distance while giving up only three earned runs and striking out six. Despite pitching on only three days of rest, Newstrom was hit hard only during the Gauchos' four-run sixth.

"I didn't feel very good today, coming off only three days of rest," Newstrom said. "I didn't have any of my best stuff, but I wanted to go the whole game if I could. If it's close, I feel it's my game, and I really wanted to come away with a win."

The victory leaves Brock only three wins short of 1,000 in his career. The 21st-year coach could reach the milestone on Sunday if his team sweeps a three-game series against UCLA beginning on Friday at Packard Stadium.

ASU Notes

•ASU third baseman Antone Williamson was named the Six-Pac's Player of the Week on Tuesday. During a three-game series with Notre Dame this weekend, Williamson was 9-for-11. He has gotten on base in all but two games so far this season.

•Brock said that Dave Robson, who has been out of action with a back strain due to the grind of catching every day, could be back in time for the beginning of a three-game series with UCLA on Friday.

Sun Devils midway through the second half. Bennett, after ripping off another nine points in the early moments of the second stanza, got his fourth foul at 12:23, and junior center Lester Neal kept playing after receiving his third a minute later.

But after a 16-4 run gave Utah a six-point lead, Frieder could wait no longer, and put Bennett back in at the 9:14 mark, and the effect was immediate.

The freshman All-America hit a 3-pointer, then blocked a shot leading to a Jamal Faulkner jumper off a fast break.

Faulkner, enigmatic as his season has been, also provided a taste of what Frieder has been expecting of him all along.

The sophomore drilled three shots during a 15-3 ASU run, and ended his season on a personal positive note despite the loss.

"Jamal came in and made some big baskets," Frieder said. "He'd deserved a lot of credit if we had gotten through this one."

Bennett parlayed his two half-openings into a game-high 24 points, while Smith added 16. Wilson led Utah with 16 points.

Ironically, the Sun Devils knew by halftime that a win would give them another home game Friday night, a chance to meet Rhode Island, a 81-80 double overtime winner over Boston College.

Now, the Utes will have that honor.

"I just hate to see it end like this," Smith said.

While Frieder was obviously disappointed, he said a second-round NIT finish gave him hope for the future.

"I think we took what could have been a real tough, disastrous season and we turned it around," Frieder said. "We turned it into a pretty exciting season and a pretty good season."
