Lawrence threatened with impeachment

Grounds being compiled by two ASASU senators

BY S. TALBOTT SMITH
STATE PRESS

Embattled Associated Students of ASU Activities Vice President Kate Lawrence will face impeachment at a future Senate meeting if she continues to exercise "poor leadership," two ASASU senators said.

"If she continues to run her department the way she has run Homecoming, then we're going to have problems," said Stephanie Phillips, senator for the College of Liberal Arts.

Phillips and College of Education Sen. Roxanne Franco said the charges they would bring against Lawrence are the "illegal" firing of Homecoming Director Tracey Kieselbach, a failure by Lawrence to serve in the best interests of students, a poor effort at leadership and presenting a poor image of ASASU.

Both senators are members of the Homecoming Committee that was shaken up last week when Kieselbach was fired by Lawrence just two months before Homecoming.

"They are simply allegations that are unfounded," Lawrence said in response to the charges. "Other than that, I have no comment."

Franco and Phillips are organizing a list of impeachment grounds against Lawrence and are in the process of enlisting support from senators and members of organizations that are upset with Lawrence's actions.

"We are a Pac-10 school and we can't even get a decent Homecoming because of little funding and bad leadership," Phillips said. She added that the Homecoming Committee has been building on past successes and had hoped for a better

Homecoming this year.

"Kate Lawrence has caused so many problems that it has stunted that growth," Phillips said.

"For 65 years, Homecoming has succeeded at ASASU, but because of one person we're having all these problems."

Franco and Phillips said they were informed Wednesday by newly appointed Homecoming Director Ron Fimbrez that Lawrence was considering removing them from their volunteer positions because of a possible conflict of interest with their positions as senators. According to Fimbrez, Lawrence reconsidered her decision Thursday, allowing Franco and Phillips to remain.

Lawrence confirmed that Franco and Phillips will retain their positions.

Fimbrez, who served as assistant director under Kieselbach, was appointed to the director position by Lawrence after Kieselbach was fired.

Franco said she is also concerned over Lawrence's

Students can halt issue of personal information

Vital statistics released, sold to those who ask

BY VICKI CULVER
STATE PRESS

Students who do not want their names, phone numbers, addresses and other personal information published in next year's student directory or sold to outside agencies have until 4 p.m. today to complete a form that would ensure their privacy.

The deadline coincides with that of the printing deadline for the directory.

According to the guidelines of the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974, University policy permits the release of directory information about any student who has not indicated that it should not be released, said Bonnie Wilcox, assistant registrar.

In addition to name, address and phone number, releasable information includes date and place of birth, citizenship, degrees and awards received, residency status, academic level, major, college, weight and height of members of athletic teams, and most recently attended institutions.

Sean Marcy, a junior English major, said he probably will not have the time to get to a Registrar's site to fill out the form. He said that ads that have been running in the State Press encouraging students to "know their rights," are misleading.

"They say that releasing the information is our choice, but it really isn't because you have to take steps to prevent it," he said.

"It is very ridiculous that we have to do something to keep it from being released. They should contact us and ask us if we want it released."

Marcy said his biggest concern is that his name will be sold to outside agencies who will then call him and send him junk mail incessantly.

Wilcox said that while it is within the registrar policy to sell student information, no arrangements have been made for the upcoming year. She said sometimes campus clubs sell names to large companies as a means of raising funds.

Wilcox said while the option of not releasing personal information has always been offered to students, a heightened campaign to raise awareness on the option was put into effect this year. She added that privacy concerns have been more of an issue with college students recently.

Cara Hadley, a sophomore English major, said privacy is a big concern of hers. She added she considers publishing of personal information a violation.

Faulkner's chances not shot

Possibility of play on another team remains up in the air

There was a time when Jamal Faulkner could have played basketball for any college in the nation.

A highly touted prep player who led his high school team to a New York state championship in 1989, Faulkner was courted by numerous college scouts, all offering him a free ticket out of his dangerous Brooklyn, N.Y., neighborhood.

But now, after Faulkner's arrest for probation violation and his subsequent dismissal from ASU's team, it is uncertain if and where the star 6-foot-7 forward will play again.

"He can't do anything until he knows more about his situation," said Lynn Archibald, ASU assistant basketball coach. "There are some schools that don't start until the end of September that he could possibly get into."

"You have to realize Jamal is not dead. All he has to do is get back into another good system and follow it and things will work out for him."

Faulkner was arrested Sept. 5 for allegedly assaulting his ex-girlfriend at her Tempe apartment. His arrest came less than 72 hours after he was released from jail, where he served six days of a 30-day sentence for violating a previous probation.

If Faulkner is convicted of criminal trespassing, a Class 6 felony, he could face up to a year and a half in jail.

On Thursday Judge Steven Sheldon of the Maricopa County Superior Court set a probation violation hearing for Sept. 17. Faulkner appeared before Sheldon on Thursday and denied he did anything to violate his probation.

Bush puts forth economic plan

DETROIT (AP) — President Bush on Thursday laid out a repackaged economic manifesto less than two months before election day, suggesting a 1 percent across-the-board tax cut would be possible if Congress followed his spending recommendations.

Bush also proposed cutting the pay of federal officials making more than $75,000 a year by 5 percent, saying "Americans have tightened their belts and so should better-paid federal workers."

And he promised to slash spending at the White House by a third — if Congress would pare its own operating budget by as much.

Bush set as "a grand goal" the nearly doubling of the nation's $6 trillion economy, to $10 trillion, "by the early years of the next century" — an ambitious target considering the slow economic growth of the past few years.

Democratic presidential rival Bill Clinton quickly dismissed the proposals as "more of the same," adding up to big tax cuts for the rich, little for average wage-earners and harder times for Medicare recipients, disabled veterans and others receiving benefits likely to be cut to pay for the lower taxes.

"We've tried this for 12 years," he said in a videotape beamed to TV stations. "Now, two months before the election, the president repackages it."

The Treasury Department said a 1 percent reduction in the tax rate would be worth $5 a week — $261 a year — to a typical four-member family earning the median income of $43,000 and claiming itemized deductions. That represents a 6.5 percent reduction in the family's $3,909 tax liability, said spokesman Rich Myers.

Bush's plan was unveiled as the White House struggled to explain the president's tax statements of a day earlier.

A day after Bush told a New Jersey audience "I went along with one Democratic tax increase and I'm not going to do it again — ever, ever," presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater insisted that Bush was not repeating his famous broken pledge of 1988: "Read my lips — no new taxes." Battered by bad news in the polls and on the economy, Bush's newly repackaged economic plan was an attempt to deflect criticism that he hasn't focused enough attention on the economy. "I know that times have been difficult, very difficult, for many Americans," Bush told the Detroit Economic Club. He suggested his "agenda for change" was superior to that of Democratic challenger Bill Clinton, whom he trails in all major national polls.

"The world that we knew as children, no matter your age, will never be the same," Bush said. "America will change — that's our destiny. How it will change will soon be decided."

During a question-and-answer period, he said he would debate Clinton although the Bush campaign so far has refused to accept a bipartisan committee's proposal for three presidential debates.

"I'm not a professional debater. I'm not an Oxford man," chuckled the president, himself a Yale man.

He gently mocked Clinton's debating style, saying, "I think he is good at that. I mean, he's got more statistics than there are problems."

Bush's economic speech was accompanied by release of a 29-page booklet entitled "Agenda for American Renewal." The booklet was to be offered free to Americans by Bush in a five-minute campaign ad focusing on the economy.

The ad, including an 800-number to get the booklet, was airing on major television networks Thursday night.

Although the booklet bears a blue cover and resembles a budget document, it was printed by the Bush-Quayle '92 campaign. Aides stressed that its proposals do not amount to formal recommendations to Congress.

And Bush himself noted that his suggestion of a 1 percent tax cut was "just an example" of what could be accomplished if Congress would go along with $130 billion in spending cuts he said he'd already recommended.

At the Republican convention last month, Bush promised an across-the-board tax cut in a second term along with spending cuts to help pay for it — but offered no details.

New elements of Bush's package include:

- The idea of the 1 percent cut in income tax rates. Bush said such a cut could be financed by the $132 billion in spending cuts over five years. Some of these budget savings would come from the president's proposed freeze on mandatory benefit programs other than Social Security.

- A 5 percent cut in salaries of federal employees making over $75,000 a year.

- White House aides said 54,100 workers could be affected — but not postal executives or military brass. Nor Bush's own $200,000 salary — set by Congress.

- An offer to cut the White House's operating budget by 33 percent, if Congress does the same. The fiscal 1992 legislative branch spending bill contained $2.3 billion; the White House budget was $189 million.

- A promise to recommend a streamlining of government agencies and bureaus in a second term.

- Proposals to negotiate free-trade agreements with the new democracies of Eastern Europe, as well as expanding open-trade ties with Latin America and Asia.

Lawyers' ethics questioned

BY MARK NEUZIL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — The bullet-riddled body of the millionaire's estranged wife was found in the basement of his suburban home. Her boyfriend's corpse lay near the door out to the garage, at the end of a trail of blood.

But following the Aug. 5 killings, public attention quickly shifted from the crimes themselves to the activities of the lawyers for the prime suspect, Russell Lund Jr., husband of victim Barbara Lund.

According to police and court documents, after Lund's lawyers learned of the killings, they:

- Waited until the next day before telling police someone had been shot.

- Checked Lund into a psychiatric ward under an assumed name and didn't tell police where he was.

- Brought in a private detective who gave police a blood-spattered handgun that authorities believe was used to kill Mrs. Lund and her boyfriend, former Iowa state senator Kevin Kelly. Police say part of the gun may have been wiped of fingerprints.

But while the lawyers' moves became a controversial topic of newspaper columns and radio call-in shows, legal experts say their actions were not only legal but were grounded in their professional duty to represent their client.

LUND

The lawyers were under no legal obligation to tell police about the shootings. The American Bar Association's rules of professional conduct forbids a lawyer from revealing information obtained from a client without the client's permission, unless the information might prevent the client from committing a crime.

"Sometimes those rules fly in the face of what non-lawyers' morality would dictate," said Stephen Simon, a criminal justice professor at the University of Minnesota.

"Your intuitive sense of what is just in a particular situation is often outraged by the ethics of the legal profession," said Vivian Weil, director of the Center for Study of Ethics in Professions at the Illinois Institute of Technology in Chicago.

"The attorney has no obligation to report a crime," Weil said. "The thinking is that clients will be forthcoming to attorneys, and the presumption would be the lawyers would counsel the client to turn himself in."

Lund's lawyers have declined to comment on their actions or other aspects of the case.

"We've been notoriously close-mouthed on this case and there is a reason for that," said one of the attorneys, David Roston.

Lund, whose father started a chain of up-scale grocery stores in the Twin Cities area, was charged with two counts of murder on Aug. 29, 24 days after the shootings. He was released Wednesday after posting $200,000 cash against a $12 million bond. A judge approved his release on the condition that he be kept under 24-hour watch in a secure psychiatric ward.

House post office scandal escalates

BY LARRY MARGASAK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A federal grand jury, signaling an expanded investigation of the House Post Office, charged Thursday there was a broad conspiracy between post office employees and "legislative officials" to defraud the government.

The three-count indictment named only one defendant: former House Post Office chief of staff Joanna G. O'Rourke. But it said she conspired "with other persons, known and unknown" to "perform personal and campaign services for members" of the House, including cashing their checks.

The indictment for the first time revealed that the grand jury is investigating the House Post Office's delivery of campaign checks from city postal boxes to the member's offices. The post office employees are congressional political appointees — not U.S. Postal Service workers — and they are not supposed to do campaign work on government time.

And the conspiracy included use of a taxpayer-financed express mail account to send "personal items" to one lawmaker's home district, the indictment said.

The personal items were delivered to the House Post Office "by the staff of the member, with the instruction that the items be sent by Express Mail," the indictment said.

The lawmaker's office was not identified, and there was no indication in the indictment that the congressman had knowledge of his staff's activities.

One source familiar with the probe, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said the office involved was that of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

STATE PRESS Editorial

No new ... whatever

It sure sounded like a promise. In a campaign stop Wednesday in Middletown, N.J., President George Bush said that he would not raise taxes during his next term, if re-elected.

"We do not need to raise taxes in this country. I found out the hard way: I went along with one Democratic tax increase and I'm not going to do it again. Ever. Ever."

Not a whole lot of ambiguity to be found there.

But yesterday, White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater sure tried to inject some.

"It wasn't a pledge, no. He was saying, as he's said before, that he wouldn't make that mistake again."

Well, let's see, maybe we missed something the first time.

Nope, the quote still reads: "We do not need to raise taxes in this country."

Well, Mr. Fitzwater?

"Our position is that Bill Clinton already has pledged to raise taxes. We don't think we need to make a pledge," Fitzwater further explained.

Actually, the truth is the Bush campaign could not afford to make another pledge, for fear of having it broken like the now infamous "Read my lips" pledge of 1988.

That broken promise has cost Bush a lot in the integrity department as voters for the most part blamed him for — in Bush's words — the "lousy economy."

Last night, Bush bought time on all major networks to pitch his economic message directly to the people. According to his campaign press secretary Torie Clarke, the speech was going to include lots of talk about jobs and the United States' place in the world economy.

In short, the same jargon we've already heard and no promise about taxes.

That is not what the American people want to hear. What they do want to hear is Bush's pledge of lower taxes. The Middletown crowd cheered wildly when they heard this year's version of the promise.

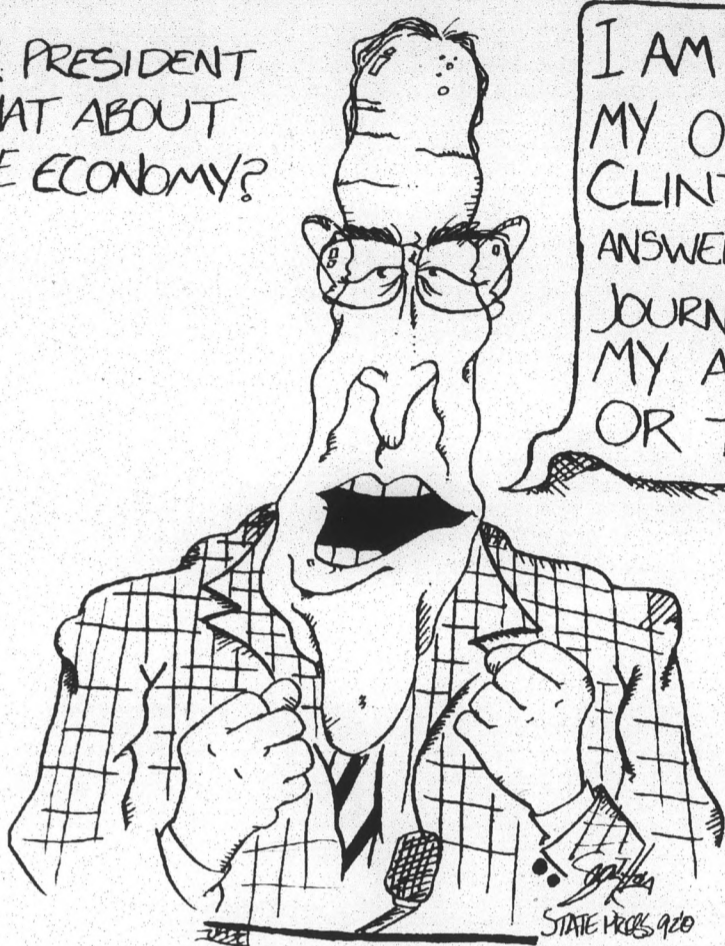

As November inches closer, the Republicans are inching closer to saying and doing what the polls tell them to do, seemingly abandoning their publicly announced principles.

This week, Vice President Dan Quayle was shooting a promo spot for the reruns of "Murphy Brown" on an independent television station in Los Angeles.

Sure, it's a funny spot, but where did Quayle hide all those family values he holds so dear to his heart to film the commercials?

Bush has said that he would do anything to get elected. His surprise statement Wednesday showed that he will at least live up to that promise.

MR. PRESIDENT
WHAT ABOUT THE ECONOMY?

Time to topple top-heavy ASASU

If actions speak louder than words, student government officials have given the campus an earful.

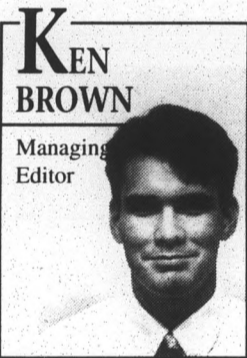

In case you haven't been keeping up with the latest calamity-in-the-making on the third floor MU, your representatives in Associated Students of ASU have cooked up a budget that could prove the most revealing expression of the group's real concerns that has come along in a long while.

Despite budget cuts that slash more than $32,937 from student activities, $35,528 from programs and $4,182 from the College Councils, ASASU plans to spend $342,053 on administrative costs — money used for the sole purpose of keeping the organization's structure intact and its employees on the student payroll.

Simply put, it's nearly half of the group's total budget spent on salaries and staples.

ASASU President Scott Maason, while diplomatically acknowledging that the sum may seem large to the uneducated outsider, said it helps the group function more effectively. He's right in the sense that the figure is small by some standards, but $342,053 would go a long way for most students here.

As just one example, it could pay the tuition of 300 in-state students with money to spare.

KEN BROWN
Managing Editor

Besides, if students are paying more than $300,000 for the model of efficiency demonstrated by ASASU, they deserve a refund.

But ASASU's problems go much deeper than this week's budget dilemma. They gnaw into the very core of the group's current structure — one that should have been replaced years ago by something genuinely representative.

Students who think student government serves as an independent voice to the administration had better prepare themselves for an unanticipated jolt of reality. Every decision made by ASASU must pass the group's adviser, Gary Kleeman, Vice President for Student Affairs Christine Wilkinson and ASU President Lattie Coor for approval.

That would be analogous to a Congress that could face veto power from George Bush, Dan Quayle and Chief of Staff James Baker — only students didn't elect Coor and Wilkinson.

But no one with any power in ASASU is interested in serving student needs more than preserving its decaying shell. While ASASU's student activities and services face the hatchet of declining revenues, student leaders continue to justify its administrative costs, hiring people and stapling papers, if only for the sake of hiring more people and stapling more papers.

The actions of students, too, speak volumes. More than 90 percent of last year's campus population chose not to vote in ASASU elections.

If anyone in ASU's administration or student government has a fragment of courage or a hint of student sentiment, ASU will see a dramatic restructuring — and even the elimination — of ASASU as it now exists.

Needless to say, I'm not holding my breath.

Residents extend an open invitation to Umoja

This is the second of a two-part series written by Charles Calleros, a professor in the College of Law, regarding cultural diversity.

CHARLES CALLEROS

Guest Columnist

I was disappointed that the Aug. 28 State Press editorial singled out the new African-American culture hall, Umoja Hall, as a symbol of racial separatism on campus.

In its response to this editorial, members of Umoja Hall extended an invitation that we should not ignore: Come to Umoja Hall and see for yourselves.

So I did. Having no previous contacts with Umoja Hall, I made some inquiries, leading me to speak on the phone to a resident, Keysah Smith, who invited me to drop by last Friday evening after work. I decided to look around to see what evidence I could find of racial separatism or cultural sharing.

A few feet away from where I parked my car at Umoja Hall, posters announced to the general public a barbecue and party scheduled for the Sunday evening of Labor Day weekend. A few feet beyond that, I saw the door ajar on a ground floor dormitory room. Inside, five black students lounged comfortably, apparently winding down at week's end. One of them was Keysah, who took me upstairs to meet Lynn Bowers, a black woman who had taken a leadership role in planning activities for Umoja.

Lynn opened a drawer and pulled out a sheet of paper with a handwritten list and other notes. Topping the list was a note that fund-raising was needed to get a computer for the study hall. Further conversation confirmed that members of Umoja Hall use their sense of community to encourage academic success. Lynn and Keysah said that residents often knock on the doors of their neighbors in the evenings and encourage them to break away from their TV sets to get to the study lounge, sometimes to work in study groups. Keysah suggested that the sense of cultural community at Umoja made it less awkward to ask other students for academic help or to encourage them to take their own studies seriously.

Other planned academic events focused more specifically on African-American culture and history: a program in which students would prepare and post reports on African-American leaders, a speakers program featuring local entrepreneurs and the formation of a media library from which the residents could periodically screen videotapes on African-American culture, history or politics. The last program is already underway.

Lynn said she also hopes to organize community service projects, a common sort of philanthropic activity for fraternities and sororities, but rare for other residence halls. Lynn stated that Umoja Hall had generated sufficient energy and cohesiveness among its members to make such service possible.

I asked Lynn and Keysah about the fears of racial separatism. After all, wouldn't racial tensions be further eased if members of different ethnic groups were scattered among each other, working productively together? Their response was grounded in the reality of a black student population that makes up only about 2 percent of a predominantly white student body.

Keysah said that they would not have come to ASU if they believed in black separatism: By choosing ASU, they opted to attend classes in which all but a tiny handful of their classmates represent other races and subcultures. To maintain a sense of security and belonging in such an environment, however, they appreciate having a community base that can provide support and relaxation.

That sense of support was critical to Lynn's choice among several campuses to which she was admitted. She rejected Fordham because it did not have any community base for African-American students. Indeed, she would have gone to a predominantly black college had ASU not offered the sense of community promised by Umoja Hall.

I thus understood that Umoja gives Lynn and Keysah a secure base from which they daily interact with white culture on campus. But I asked about more direct interaction between Umoja and members of other ethnic and cultural groups. Lynn was quick to point out that her program ideas were designed not just to help black students celebrate their ethnicity but also to share African-American culture with others on campus. Thus, the video screenings, speakers programs, and other educational events will be open to all members of campus and advertised in the State Press when possible. Better yet, a student from another ethnic background can immerse himself or herself in African-American culture by residing at Umoja. One such student is Jason, a white Umoja resident of Yugoslavian and Irish descent. When I knocked on his door, he was relaxing with a black male friend and his Puerto Rican girlfriend.

Jason said that he was steered to Umoja by an ASU undergraduate admissions counselor who thought that Jason's interests would be compatible with the theme hall.

Jason is not a typical product of Anglo-American culture. He grew up amidst people of color. He says that he is "white way to the heart" but that he enjoys experiencing and learning more about black culture. He feels welcomed and quite comfortable at Umoja. He, like the others, is periodically encouraged by neighbors to put in time at the study hall.

Jason is also bemused by his friends, some of whom have stopped calling on him since he moved to Umoja. He wonders if they feel intimidated or alienated by the notion of an African-American community on campus; or perhaps they simply resist the idea that American culture includes a variety of subcultures. This leads Jason to suggest that non-black students without his multi-cultural background might need some time to adjust at Umoja, to allow them to overcome their own predispositions about African-American culture. But Jason thinks that any person who is genuinely curious about African-American culture should consider residing at Umoja.

Or, at the very least, visit Umoja and accept Lynn Bowers' offer to share her culture with the campus community. If we do, far from the bastion of racial separatism, Umoja will instead be a model for diversity and sharing. It is within our power to help decide which.

Lynn and Keysah said they would welcome your requests for information. Call Lynn at 784-8664 and Keysah at 784-0014. Attend an event, see Umoja for yourselves, and draw your own conclusions.

If you are openly hostile to the idea of an African-American theme hall and your mind is closed, Umoja probably has little to offer to you. However, if you are genuinely curious, avail yourselves of the learning opportunities that Umoja will offer.

Letters to the editor

'Boos and Bravos' — student style

Editor:

BOO — To ASU's Department of Public Safety police officers for issuing a trespassing warning to three men not affiliated with the University after witnessing them attempting to steal student's bicycles on campus!

Next time handcuff them (the thieves ... although seeing bike cops in this situation is tempting) and bring them down to Cady Mall for a public flogging at high noon.

These officers are a bigger joke than Bill Frieder trying to speak English.

BOO — To Kate Lawrence for placing her own name on several ASASU volunteer committees, when she is a paid employee of the organization, thus leaving interested students turned away at the door.

If the activities vice president is so concerned about the well-being of ASASU, maybe she should encourage outsider involvement and stop stretching herself so thin between trying to do the job for which she was elected, criticizing her Homecoming director, and attempting to serve on seven committees outside of her position as veep.

BRAVO — To Residence Life for taking the first positive steps toward improved race relations on campus since the doomed "13-point plan" that emerged as a reaction to the riot that occurred in front of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon house a few years back. Projects like Umoja Hall shouldn't need a group of militant students wearing face masks to storm a campus building to be created.

Campus living environments that explore cultural heritage are long overdue on this campus and should be taken advantage of by the ignorant as well as those who consider themselves "well rounded" and "open minded."

Too often racist comments can be heard on this campus about Asian math teachers or Middle-Eastern students who put themselves through school by working at the computer labs. Let's not limit this "cultural diversity" to a black and white issue ... it goes much deeper than that.

BOO — To Lattie Coor for appointing Charles Harris and two other jock stra-err ... "athletic supporters" to a committee to investigate themselves. Jerry Tarkanian should have had it this easy.

The NCAA is going to have a field day with ASU. The Sun Devil Athletic Department will be examined and publicized for how to run a respectable program ... not!

Hey Lattie — borrow a quarter sometime and buy a clue. Why aren't any students involved with investigating these jokers?

It's about time the football and basketball teams follow the example of their counterparts in the rest of the athletic department — like the water polo player who runs the Safety Escort Service.

The University gives these scholarship athletes much more than four quarters, yet many of them still couldn't rent a dollar's worth of clues on how to be a respectable person in society (let alone a roll model to their fans).

BRAVO — to Ken Brown for exposing the ASASU Senate for what it often is ... a clique of users and egotist who abuse the system to their own agenda, not what's best for the student body.

Many of them see their positions as an expressway to a full résumé and ignore the opportunity for positive change — like taking over Marriott and the book store and running things themselves like other universities (i.e. cheaper prices for students while still turning a profit back to the Associated Students general fund — see UCLA and Cal State Chico).

The sad fact is that 95 percent of the campus community couldn't care less about how the MU's third floor goes about wasting six-hundred-some-thousand dollars a year.

Something's bugging ASU

Editor:

I am a first-year graduate student and newcomer to Arizona, as I originally hail ("snow" may be more appropriate) from Wisconsin. Half a year ago in the eyelash-freezing gusts of mid-January, I pictured an environment conducive to life, learning and the pursuit of rays. I envisioned ASU. What I did not imagine or even consider, however, were the bugs.

Bugs! Insects! Vermin! Crawling beetles from hell seem to rule the inner malls of campus just as the sun sets. Here "the very witching hour of night" begins not on the stroke of twelve, but just after dinner. In just two weeks I have been witness to the entire class insecta, all within the span of a walk from Hayden Library to Apache Boulevard. Granted this is a desert state, and deserts are perhaps more fit and cosmologically intended for such creatures, but this sheer volume versus the laissez faire of other human passers-by strike me as horrifically ironic.

In fact, the larger and more abominable of all of these critters seem to abide just along the extremities of the College of Business buildings. Given the modest number of resemblances between a beetle and a business major (as Kafka would undoubtedly agree), the correlation between number and habitat makes a bit of sense. But what about the "king beetle?" (No, not John). You've surely seen him — he resides just under the groves a few strides south of the Hayden Library arch.

Then he'll strike, blazing for your moccasin with wanton, frenzied and malicious hunger — and you had better be wearing socks, incidentally. Does his presence suggest that librarians may be the largest (though most solitary) roaches of all?

I, then, propose that we not only take cautions to avoid these "darlings" underfoot, but also adopt these beloved creatures as our true school mascot. Forget the "Sun Devils" (how often do you actually see a real one, logos excepted?); we should be the "Arizona State Night Roaches." In fact, we could have our "King Roach" mascot named "Bugs." That would give students a true reason to use the now-trite favorite conversation starter of "What's up?"

Not an issue of black or white

Editor:

Ashahed Triche is right, at least partly. Umoja Hall is not segregation, it's separation. Do you really think that we are from different cultures? You and I share a common culture — we're both Americans.

Yes, diversity exists but I am willing to bet that the our lifestyles are nearly identical. After all, the way we live makes up our culture.

Black hats with X's on them and medallions with the African continent on them do not a culture make. I am tired of this pseudo-African culture that has sprouted up.

Africa is a very large place so you group the peoples together by the melanin in their skin, throw in a little "Fight the Power" philosophy and KA-BOOM ... my buddy Ashahed appears and attempts to make me feel guilty for the crimes of some white folks. I have never met against some black folks Ashahed does not know.

Racism exists, I cannot deny that fact. We will never make serious inroads into destroying it as long we sit around inventing differences between us.

Ashahed wants you to believe we're so different, and so does this guy who wears a white sheet and a dunce cap named Tom Metzger.

Ashahed and Metzger are going to continue squawking, "Us, us, and them, them," but we don't have to believe them. I tend to believe Michael Jackson. "It doesn't matter if you're black or white."

POLICE REPORT

ASU police reported the following incidents on Thursday:

- Six live-animal traps were stolen from Palo Verde Main. Estimated loss is $300.
- A resident in Best Hall reported that someone threw an orange at her dormitory window and broke it.
- A black Omega and a gray Schwinn bicycle were stolen from the bike racks at the Cholla Apartments. Both bicycles were secured with cable locks. Estimated loss is $230.
- A red Trek bicycle was stolen from the Engineering A wing, where it was secured to itself with a U-lock. Estimated loss is $850.
- A blue Monterrey bicycle was stolen from the bike racks at the Business Administration Building, where it was secured with a U-lock. Estimated loss is $99.

Tempe police reported the following incidents on Thursday:

- A man was arrested and charged with shoplifting at Kmart, 1330 W. Baseline Road, after store security observed him remove a pair of hiking boots from the garden section of the store and push them under a fence into the parking lot. The suspect then went outside the store and picked up the boots.
- A man was arrested and charged with misdemeanor assault and motor vehicle theft after he grabbed his ex-girlfriend and pushed her to the ground before taking her keys and fleeing in her car at the 200 block of east Lemon Street. Police later recovered the car at the suspect's mother's house in Scottsdale.
- An ASU student reported that a thief sneaked in the back door of her apartment and stole her purse from the kitchen table. The woman told police that she heard a noise in the kitchen and when she investigated she saw a man running out the door with her purse. The suspect fled the scene in a 1973 Ford Galaxy.
- A man was arrested for indecent exposure after a woman reported that he got out of his car totally nude when she drove by him in the 900 block of east University Drive.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

Can't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning.

By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferral and give your money time to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month beginning at age 30 and you can accumulate over $192,539* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $227 each month to reach the same goal.

Even if you're not counting the years to retirement, you can count on TIAA-CREF to help you build the future you deserve—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research put TIAA-CREF at the top of their list for retirement planning. Why not join them?

decrease in Homecoming funding. Lawrence, as activities vice president, directly oversees funding for Homecoming and other areas such as the Lecture Series and the Multi-Cultural Awareness Board.

"The Homecoming budget was cut by 40 percent," Franco said. "Facing a 10 percent overall budget cut within (ASASU) — I don't see how that could be justified by any means."

"I don't think she is acting in the best interest of the students to cut a budget that involves so many thousands of students."

Lawrence said, "Everybody's budget got slashed," and added she thought there was no problem with Homecoming committee members as far as the reduced funding was concerned. Most of the cuts occurred during executive budget committee meetings where the budget was created, she said.

Proposed figures for a Homecoming budget, which are currently being studied by the Senate along with the rest of the ASASU budget, show more than an $11,000 drop between the current proposed budget and the interim budget approved over the summer.

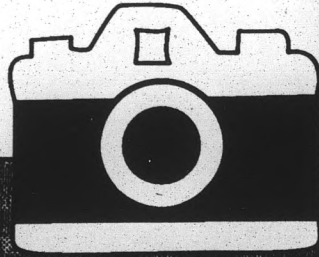

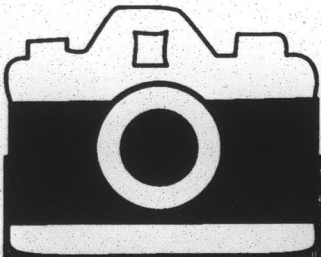

Franco and other Homecoming Committee members at both ASASU and the Alumni Association contend that Lawrence has shown little interest in or knowledge of Homecoming and rarely shows up at committee meetings.

"She has not bothered to show up for Homecoming meetings," Franco said. "She has no concern about Homecoming. I know she's against it in general. She's uninformed about Homecoming because she chose to be that way."

However, Lawrence asserted that she has a class during the time the meetings take place and is unable to attend. She added that she "can't possibly attend every meeting. That's why I have a director (of Homecoming)."

"I happen to be a student first," she said.

According to ASASU bylaws, at least half the Senate would have to vote in favor of the impeachment for it to be considered. However, the bylaws require at least a three-fourths vote of the Senate in order to convict and remove an executive from office.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Hunter S. Thompson says he expects Democrat Bill Clinton to win the White House this year. But if President Bush is re-elected, the gonzo journalist is moving to Paraguay.

Thompson, best known for his dispatches from the 1972 presidential campaign for Rolling Stone magazine, collected in the book "Fear and Loathing on the Campaign Trail," addressed a literacy group's fund-raiser Wednesday night.

He met recently with Clinton.

"I expect to win this time," said Thompson, a bottle of scotch and a garbage can filled with ice at his side.

"If we don't win, we're going to move Rolling Stone to Paraguay and have a colony down there," he said. "It's got the worst points of both (Brazil and Argentina) and none of the best. There's no place like it in the United States except maybe west Texas."

Thompson also suggested the nation's literacy rate has worsened during the Reagan-Bush years.

"It's been 12 years of the most oppressive, red neck, stupid ... greedhead politicians in this country," Thompson told about 100 people at the fund-raiser in his hometown of Louisville for the Kentucky Foundation for Literacy.

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Imprisoned televangelist Jim Bakker is asking forgiveness "for preaching a gospel emphasizing earthly prosperity."

Bakker's letter to former followers renouncing the philosophy that led him astray is the first public sign of a new Bakker, his attorney, Jim Toms, told The Charlotte Observer in an interview published Thursday. Previously, Bakker had apologized only for hurting those who trusted him, Toms said.

Toms said Bakker, who once owned Mercedes-Benz sedans, a 58-foot houseboat and vacation home in Gatlinburg, Tenn., isn't just turning over a new leaf for a hearing this fall seeking to get his sentence reduced.

"He isn't writing it to the judge," Toms said. "He's writing what's on his mind and heart."

Bakker, 52, is serving an 18-year sentence in Minnesota for bilking followers of $158 million. He earns 12 cents an hour helping clean his unit at the Federal Medical Center in Rochester, Minn.

"There is no way ... you can equate riches or material things as a sign of God's blessing," wrote Bakker, recently divorced by his wife of 30 years, Tammy Faye.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle has some company when it comes Murphy Brown. The chairman of the Miss America pageant says the fictional television newswoman lacks the "wholesome" image it takes to be crowned Miss America.

And he doesn't think much of Madonna, either.

"Madonna is certainly not someone we would even want to be a role model for our program," said Leonard C. Horn, chairman of the Miss America Organization, told The Associated Press on Wednesday. "I think the image she projects is definitely unwholesome."

Quayle criticized the Murphy Brown character for having a child out of wedlock. The pregnancy would also have kept her from competing in the Miss America pageant.

A contestant must be an American citizen, 26 years old or younger, single — and she must never have been pregnant.

"We're looking for wholesome young women," Horn said.

"Miss America is the visualized American maiden." Andrew Ship, of Warner Brothers Television Publicity, which handles the "Murphy Brown" television show, said he did not have an immediate response.

Madonna's spokeswoman, Liz Rosenberg of Warner Records in New York, was not available for comment.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Comic Howie Mandel says he now makes money doing the things he used to do for free in school.

"I was a problem (in school)," he said in an interview published Thursday in the Nashville Banner. "But everything I've been punished for, hit for, or expelled for, is what I get paid for now."

"I was just being me. Whatever I do now is what I was. And now it's considered professional."

Mandel, who performs Sunday night in Nashville, does about 150 concert dates a year. His comedy show "Howie" aired this summer on CBS-TV.

ASU sophomore golfer Todd Demsey will be one of the stand-outs on the Sun Devil men's golf team this season. Demsey had nine top-10 finishes last season.

Is there life without Phil? ASU's Demsey thinks so

Sun Devil sophomore says team has depth

By KELLEY STOVER
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Todd Demsey is confident there will be life for the ASU men's golf team without former ASU star golfer Phil Mickelson.

Demsey, who lived under the shadow of Mickelson, perhaps the most heralded golfer in ASU history, said that despite being sad to have his teammate depart, he is also looking forward to having his day in the sun.

"Without Phil it's a totally different team," said Demsey, who posted nine top-10 finishes last season. "This year we are deeper. We have more good players. Of course we will miss him, but I am excited about this year's team."

And when the men's link action begins to unfold this weekend at a tournament hosted by the University of Colorado, Demsey will be well-prepared to begin a banner season with the Sun Devils. He finished last year's home competitions with a tie for second place in the Sun Devil Thunderbird Classic. He ended behind fellow Sun Devil Mickelson.

Mickelson, who rewrote the record books at ASU, finished his term in the collegiate ranks and has since signed a multi-million dollar endorsement deal.

Meanwhile, Demsey has been busy working on his game all summer, playing in several tournaments across the country and abroad in Japan. After playing in New York's Porter Cup Amateur Tournament, he went on to win the California State Amateur Title.

He then played the Western Amateur in Michigan in which he stumbled in the quarter-finals.

Demsey, whose average card last season was just a shade above 72, is expecting the Sun Devils to fare well in the season opening Colorado tourney. Although Demsey is coming off a sinus infection that kept him from practicing since Tuesday, he feels his game is going well.

His play has also been slightly hampered by a back injury he suffered while playing in Japan, but physical therapy has prevented it from interfering too much with his game.

ASU finished last season with an impressive No. 2 national ranking, which Demsey termed "disappointing," and said this year's preseason ranking should be "near the top."

Additionally, with the loss of ASU golf coach Steve Loy, who left to become Mickelson's personal manager, the team has been working under interim coach Todd Rolfes.

"Coach Loy did a lot of great things for the program, but I'm looking forward to the new coach," Demsey said. "I look at it as a positive."

A new men's coach is expected to be

Men's link action begins, without head coach

Sun Devil's make trek to Rockies with interim coach

By JOHN REZNICK
STATE PRESS

The men's golf season is ready to go, but they are still without a true coach.

Interim coach Todd Rolfes leads the ASU team into action this weekend, marking the start of the 1992-93 season.

The Sun Devils play their first tournament at the Fox Acres Country Club in Red Feather Lakes, Colo. The tournament will last through the weekend.

The University of Colorado plays host to a strong field of teams that includes ASU, Arkansas (the defending tournament champion), USC, Colorado State, Southern Methodist, Houston and East Tennessee State.

Rolfes said five of his players will make the trip. They include Todd Demsey, Trip Kuehne, Chris Stutts, Larry Barber and Cade Stone.

Among the five, Rolfes said he expects Demsey, a sophomore, to emerge as the team leader this weekend and for the rest of the season.

"When you go into the preseason and you look back at what we had a year ago, Todd Demsey stands head and shoulders above the rest at this point," Rolfes said. "He's the only returning All-American that we have."

Demsey served notice to the collegiate golfing community last season, when, as a freshman, he had nine top-10 finishes in 15 tournaments and owned an impressive 72-stroke season average.

The sophomore comes into the new season fresh off a victory this past summer in the California State Amateur Tournament.

"He (Demsey) has just picked up where he's left off," Rolfes said. "He's played under par in practice and you just look for great things from him."

Kuehne, another sophomore and Demsey's roommate, should be another team standout. A highly sought-after prep out of Dallas in 1991, Kuehne had an impressive freshman campaign. He posted a 74-stroke season average along with a top-10 and four top-20 finishes.

Few would doubt the contributions Demsey and Kuehne bring to the squad, but Rolfes added the team will get contributions from many others.

"One thing that we have this year that is different from last year is that we have seven, eight, maybe nine guys who can play at any one time," Rolfes said. "We're really deep

Bates remains bright spot for Sun Devil run game

By JAKE BATSELL
STATE PRESS

It's difficult to salvage a bright spot from a 31-7 defeat, but ASU found one Saturday night in tailback Mario Bates.

Bates, a 6-foot-2, 207-pound sophomore, weaved his way in and out of the Washington defense en route to 214 rushing yards and an 80-yard touchdown run.

"I feel like I did some good things (against Washington)," Bates said. "but I feel like I did some things that I need to correct for this upcoming game."

While Bates felt that there was room for improvement, Sun Devil coach Bruce Snyder seemed content with Bates' performance and his efforts thus far in the season.

Snyder, who has coached the likes of Dan Fouts, Eric Dickerson and Ahmad Rashad, said that Bates has the potential to someday be included in that company.

"They (great running backs) all have a great self-image about, 'If I get the ball enough, I am going to get the ball into the end zone five times.' He (Bates) has that. And it's not from a selfish standpoint. It's confidence."

One thing that sets Bates apart, Snyder said, is visible enthusiasm. Snyder once coached a player he described as "a great back, but he would almost sneak out onto the field. And he never, ever, lived up to his potential."

However, Bates is a different story.

"When we play, watch Mario run onto the field," Snyder said. "It's like he's saying, 'I'm going to do my thing now. I'm gonna go run, and feel good about it.'"

Bates' 80-yard touchdown run on Saturday earned him this week's AT&T Long Distance "run play" award for NCAA Division I. AT&T has donated $400 to the NCAA's Degree Completion Scholarship Fund as a result of Bates' effort.

No stranger to awards, Bates rushed for 4,836 yards on 626 carries in his prep career at Tucson Amphitheater High School, both Class 5A state records. Bates was named 5A Player of the Year by local media in his senior season, and was also one of the most highly recruited running backs in the nation.

Instead of going through a redshirt season like most freshman athletes, Bates found

ASU tailback Mario Bates said he did "some good things" in the season opener against Washington. The Sun Devils lost 31-7 but Bates ran for 214 yards and an 80-yard touchdown. He was given the AT&T "run play" award for his efforts in the Husky game.

named within a few weeks.

It's no secret where Demsey's green success lies. The 20-year-old psychology major said he practices between 25 and 30 hours a week.

Since picking up the game at the tender age of 10, his playing has become "almost second nature."

The sophomore San Diego native has posted some impressive achievements since coming to ASU. Demsey was named a second-team All-American last year and he was a constant in the higher echelon of the scoring cards last spring.

And now that Mickelson is out of the picture, Demsey will aspire to make his own presence be known as ASU's premiere golfer.

He added he hopes to join the pro circuit after graduation.

Although Demsey will be one of the leaders as far as the scoring goes, he doesn't see himself as the team leader.

"It's more of a team effort," he said.

and that's a great thing — knowing that every time we tee it up, we're going to have five guys who are playing very good at that time."

Rolfes said he never has been to Fox Acres but has heard about the course's layout from some of his players.

"It's certainly a golf course that we're going to have to respect," Rolfes said, describing the par-71, 6,230-yard course.

Kuehne said the Colorado air is what concerns him the most about Fox Acres.

"Certainly, the altitude is going to play a factor (on how the golf ball airs) and it's something that we'll have to work with," said Kuehne, referring to the course's high elevation.

Rolfes, the team's assistant coach last season, takes over the reins left by former coach Steve Loy. Loy resigned his position after last season to become the personal manager for former Sun Devil golfer Phil Mickelson. Mickelson currently competes on the PGA Tour.

himself implemented into the offense immediately. Throughout the course of the year, he gradually found more time in the Sun Devil backfield, culminating in a 169-yard performance in the emotional 37-14 streak-ending victory over UofA.

"I had to make an adjustment as to not wanting to start; just play, and try to get accepted as a player," Bates said. "Then I had to make the adjustment to play hard, in practice and in the games, each play."

Bates' decision to attend ASU came as a mild surprise, given his Tucson ties and the fact that older brothers Michael and Marion both opted to attend UofA. But Mario, the youngest of the three, has always followed his own prerogative.

"I never wanted to be like my brothers, because I hated it," he said. "I never wanted to follow in their footsteps."

Snyder feels that Bates has already established his own identity; all that is left now is consistency.

"Mario, at this level, hasn't done it week after week," Snyder said. "Week in, week out, that really is the test."

"That's the thing that is the test right now, I think, for Mario. Not athleticism, or speed, or vision. It's, 'Will he do it every week?'"

However, Snyder remains optimistic Bates can live up to the task.

"I would say he's off to a pretty good start to prove that," Snyder said. "He just hasn't done it yet."

X-Man goes to Boston

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics launched their first bold strike of the post-Larry Bird era Thursday, snatching Xavier McDaniel from the New York Knicks, adding sass and shooting to a team that needs both.

"We're not going to sit back and wait for things to happen down the road," Boston coach Chris Ford said. "We want to compete this year."

Twenty-three days after Bird retired, the Celtics signed McDaniel, an unrestricted free agent, to a five-year contract, with three years guaranteed, after he grew impatient with the Knicks' negotiating pace.

The Celtics "did it in one day," McDaniel said. "It was taking New York nine months." David Falk, agent for the big-talking small forward, said he thought the Knicks weren't convinced when he told them that McDaniel had received "very strong interest" from two or three other NBA teams.

He said it wasn't fair to receive an offer from another team, like the one the Celtics made Wednesday, and take it back for the Knicks to top.

"I think (the Knicks) perhaps wanted a clear indication that the bomb was about to drop," Falk said. "I think they're very upset ... understandably so. They lost their second best player."

"It's disappointing," Knicks president Dave Checketts said. "But 'X' decided that he didn't want to be here. We had been negotiating in good faith and wanted him to be part of what we're building here. They never gave us the opportunity to pay him more, which we would have done. He went to Boston and made a quick decision."

At a cost of $500,000, McDaniel bought out the last two years of his Knicks contract, worth $3.6 million, last Jan. 15. Falk said McDaniel wanted a better deal with the Knicks or another team.

The value of his Boston contract was not announced.

After Bird retired Aug. 18 because of back problems, the Celtics had $1.65 million from his salary to use in signing a player without violating the salary cap. They gave it all to McDaniel.

In seven NBA seasons, the 6-foot-7 McDaniel has averaged 19.1 points and 6.8 rebounds per game and hit 49.3 percent of his field goal attempts. He averaged 13.7 points and 5.6 rebounds last season but improved to 18.8 points and 7.2 rebounds during the playoffs.

McDaniel's feistiness is a Boston need now that Bird, their fiercest performer, is gone.

"I'm never going to be able to fill his shoes because he's probably the greatest player that ever played in the league," McDaniel said. "The only thing I can do is give the same type of effort."

"He's another scoring threat to help replace some of the scoring that's going to be lost," Ford said. "He's a guy who can bring the intimidation factor to our team."

"He also has the capability of posting up and scoring (and) hitting his jump shot."

He also likes the running game, the style Ford prefers, although he doesn't fill Boston's need for a power forward.

McDaniel said it wasn't important that his physical style rub off on his teammates.

"They can let me handle those type of (confrontational) situations," he said. "If you hit me, you've got to expect nine or 10 of them back. That's the way I play. I just play extremely hard."

"I want to be somewhere where I feel that I'm going to be wanted and appreciated," McDaniel said.

IF YOU WOULD LIKE TO SPONSOR THE HOROSCOPES, PLEASE CALL 965-6555!

For Friday, September 11, 1992

ARIES

(Mar. 21 to Apr. 19)

A romantic flirtation doesn't count for much. Business interests are favored now. Creative types meet with success. Quiet times are best tonight.

TAURUS

(Apr. 20 to May 20)

The day favors creative work and getting together with friends. An interruption interferes with routine on the job. Tonight brings you a social success.

GEMINI

(May 21 to June 20)

You may add a decorative touch to your home today. An important business project is brought to completion now. Evening social plans may not turn out as expected.

CANCER

(June 21 to July 22)

There is a focus now on travel, education and in-laws. What a partner has to say today inspires you. Unexpected company could drop by. Pleasure interests are favored.

LEO

(July 23 to Aug. 22)

Intuitive promptings bring you gains on the job. Financial concerns are important to you today. Someone at work flirts with you. Accent domestic life tonight.

VIRGO

(Aug. 23 to Sept. 22)

An unexpected expense could arise now. Couples will want to share a romantic evening out on the town. You are determined to make your dreams come true.

LIBRA

(Sept. 23 to Oct. 22)

Financial gains come through work interests today. Some begin a home improvement project now. A relative seems unpredictable. Tonight finds you in a working mood.

SCORPIO

(Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)

It is a day of remarkable creativity for those engaged in artistic work. Impromptu travel is likely for some of you. Tonight accents friendships and festive occasions.

SAGITTARIUS

(Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)

You will buy something unusual for the home when shopping today. A career project is at a turning point. Friendship and money do not mix.

CAPRICORN

(Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)

Weekend getaways are favored now. You are good at getting your thoughts across to others today. You will meet with some differences of opinion.

AQUARIUS

(Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)

There is a private or secretive note to your financial dealings today. Travel plans are subject to change. Career strivings meet with success now.

PISCES

(Feb. 19 to Mar. 20)

You will sparkle socially today. You could meet with an unwanted attraction. Focus on partnership concerns tonight. Travel is favored now.

YOU BORN TODAY are sensitive, creative and often high-strung. You work best when inspired and are blessed with artistic talents. Though you can succeed in business, you are usually much happier in a field where your imagination is allowed free play. Both financial and emotional security are important to you. Try not to let your temperament undermine your accomplishments. You are capable of work that is ahead of the times. Birthdate of: D. H. Lawrence, writer; Jessica Mitford, writer; and O. Henry, writer.
