Sunday Evening Society persists to reform ASASU Group to push special election

BY MARK M. MACIAS
STATE PRESS

Members of the Sunday Evening Society will talk to ASU administrators today about challenging a decision by the Associated Students of ASU Supreme Court that voided a special election on a proposed constitution.

Luke Tigaris, who, along with Jim Ryan, defended the Sunday Evening Society at a Feb. 18 hearing, said the two will turn in a list of reasons for appealing the court's decision.

"We're going to turn in a document supporting our appeal," Tigaris said. "We're pursuing the legal aspect of whether or not students have the right to choose their form of government. We feel it is a fundamental right, and we have new evidence to support that."

"I'm very confident that the administration will be in our favor, (but) even if they're not, we're prepared to go beyond (the administration)."

Sunday Evening Society members had turned in petitions demanding the special election three weeks ago, but several ASASU senators challenged their validity after hearing that those who gathered signatures failed to attach copies of the petition to signatures sheets.

The court used the challenge to decide whether the procedure itself was the proper method of replacing the constitution. It ruled the proposed constitution an amendment, which meant that it could not be introduced through a petition drive.

Leon Shell, associate vice president of student affairs, said no one has challenged an ASASU Supreme Court decision in 15 years.

"This is totally new territory," Shell said. "We haven't really had substantive matters that have been referred beyond the

Faculty, staff join students in rally against budget cuts

State implored to consider actions

BY TAMMY MESA-SIERRA
STATE PRESS

ASU faculty and staff members are joining in with students and taking their grievances over continuing University budget slashes to the State Capitol today.

A crowd expected to reach over 1,000 will participate in a Budget Rally for Higher Education at 4:30 p.m. in an effort to encourage the State Legislature to grasp the potential impact of state budget reductions on the University, according to Academic Senate President Dickinson McGaw.

Legislators are currently mulling over budget proposals from Gov. Fife Symington, the Joint Legislative Budget Committee and University administrators which turn into an overall cut for ASU of approximately $11 million for the next fiscal year.

But Tom Godden, director of Associated Students of ASU State Relations, said it's really a "$40 million problem when coupled with mandatory expenditures such as enrollment growth."

"It's a fairly intensive effort," Godden said. "The next two weeks are very critical for us to make a difference (in budget decisions)."

Godden said he has been receiving positive feedback from legislators who are heeding the cries of the University community over the possible cuts and their consequences.

"There's a lot of money to be had (from the state), and we're so close to getting it," he said.

Godden said he has heard rumors that ASU could actually get an increase in funding in the amount of $8 million to $13 million if lobbying efforts persist.

But the efforts are not being led solely by student leaders who have an interest in tuition increases. Many faculty and staff members are "sickened" over the problems that face them with additional budget cuts, said classified staff member Fred Amaro.

Both McGaw and Amaro expressed a growing dissatisfaction with a lack of significant salary increases over the last five years, problems with their health insurance, the proposed one-day work furlough and the possible termination of employee tuition-waivers.

Amaro said many staff members are now fearing they won't even get the $1,000 salary increase approved by the Legislature for all state employees.

The University approved $250 of the increase to be apportioned this year, but there

Senator: Democrats would support education

Republican Patterson addresses budget allotment at MU luncheon

BY JUDD T. WILLIAMS
STATE PRESS

More money would likely be allotted for higher education and the overall budget if voters had elected a Democrat-controlled State Legislature in November, a Republican state senator said Friday.

"If the Democrats had won election, appropriations for everything would be higher this year," said Sen. Tom Patterson, R-Phoenix, speaking to about 30 ASU faculty and staff members at a luncheon in the Memorial Union Cinema.

Patterson is the Senate's majority leader this session. Gov. Fife Symington has proposed a $2.2-million cut for ASU's main campus budget for next fiscal year and a $774,000 cut for ASU West, while the Joint Legislative Budget Committee suggested a $3.4-million cut for ASU and a $1.3-million increase for ASU West.

Patterson said the 41st Legislature, which is Republican controlled, is in favor of limited government and low taxes, which he said translates into long-term growth.

Even though both proposals call for big cuts, Patterson said the universities will actually be appropriated a greater amount, because lawmakers recognize higher education is a priority and there will be money to carry over.

Patterson said Democrats generally favor more government and higher taxes, which he said is a short-term approach.

Patterson said he would allot more money to the universities than to health and welfare if it were left up to him alone, because, being an emergency room doctor, he has little regard for entitlements.

"Social programs would be relatively disadvantaged," Patterson said of his funding philosophy, adding the universities would get budgeting priority.

"I'm oriented to the future," he said. "I (am) very much a proponent of prioritizing university spending."

Patterson also spoke at length about his position on the casino gaming issue that the Legislature just decided against in their first special session.

If Las Vegas-style gaming were allowed in Arizona, the state would lose tax revenue and the balance of wealth would greatly shift, Patterson said.

"(Gaming) could not be confined to the reservation(s)," he said. "There was a very great likelihood that Arizona could have become a casino gambling state within a few years."

NAFTA: Prosperous trade or environmental disasters?

Critics disagree over probable outcome of recent trade agreement

By CHRIS DRISCOLL
STATE PRESS

PASTOR

To some, the North American Free Trade Agreement holds the promise of unfettered trade and commerce that could launch a golden age for the entire continent. They say that the increased tri-national trade will result in increased standards of living for every North American.

To others, NAFTA spells disaster for the great majority of North Americans. They say workers in the United States and Canada will face hundreds of thousands of lost jobs due to factories closing down and moving to Mexico.

Meanwhile, they say, U.S. and Canadian companies will exploit Mexican workers, who make about one-tenth of the average wages their neighbors to the north make.

Furthermore, the critics say, NAFTA will turn Mexico into a toxic dumping ground for companies that move there to avoid the more stringent regulation of industrial waste in Canada and the United States.

NAFTA's critics often end with this warning: "NAFTA will make the rich of all three countries ever richer, while the poor become ever poorer and much of the middle class will join them."

These issues and many more were examined Saturday at a Symposium titled "The United States-Mexico Free Trade Agreement: The Promises, The Realities," at the ASU College of Law. The event was sponsored by the Chicano/Latino Law Students Association and the Justicia y Derecho Law Journal.

Congressman Ed Pastor, D-Ariz., opened the conference with a keynote address on his expectations for the coming debate on NAFTA in the U.S. Congress. He said he expects President Bill Clinton to send his administration's recommendations for the "enabling legislation" and "parallel agreements" to Congress in about a month.

The "enabling legislation" will change old laws or create new ones which will help NAFTA function, and the "parallel agreements" are treaties that address criticisms of NAFTA that the leaders of the three countries agreed to deal with only as separate issues not included in the trade agreement.

NAFTA's goal is to eliminate all tariffs and laws that stand in the way of free trade in North America over the next 15 years. If approved this year by the Canadian Parliament and the U.S. and Mexican Congresses, the agreement would forge the continent's 380 million people into the largest common market in the world.

Former president George Bush negotiated the agreement last year with Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari.

Clinton promised during his election campaign to address outstanding environmental and worker protection issues while committing his support to NAFTA. Since he took office he has not revealed his plans, but many of NAFTA's critics in the U.S. and Mexico see the passage of the treaty as inevitable and they are pinning their hopes for improvements on the president and Congress.

Alberto Szekely, one of the speakers at Saturday's symposium, is research director for the International Transboundary Resources Center at the University of New Mexico School of Law, a career ambassador with the Mexican Foreign Service and a member of the Permanent Court of International Arbitration at the Hague.

Szekely, who also advises Mexico's leading environmental groups, said that while Mexico has perhaps the best environmental-protection law in North America, many businesses see an advantage in the current lack of enforcement of the law passed in 1988.

"Unfortunately, the environmental language included in the treaty is merely declaratory," Szekely said. "All of the so called 'green language' doesn't include any rights or obligations. It's not enough to say, 'and when you do this, you should think of not affecting the environment,' that's not enough."

He said environmental groups in all three countries should be congratulated because the finally succeeded in creating enough pressure for the three governments that it was agreed a tri-national commission on the environment would be created.

Any real changes that address the environmental and worker protection problems of the treaty will ultimately have to come from the U.S. Congress and President, he concluded.

Mulroney of Canada has decided to leave office in order to give his conservative party a better chance in National elections that must

UN officials: Evacuations weeks away

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUZLA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Aid officials said Sunday the evacuation of wounded refugees from Muslim enclaves in eastern Bosnia could be weeks away despite a mission to the area by the commander of U.N. peacekeepers.

Heavy shelling by Serb artillery was reported at Srebrenica, the Muslim-held town that took in about 5,000 refugees from the Cerska enclave when it was overrun by Serbs last week.

U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali said a failure of the warring factions to accept a peace accord might mean U.N. members would have "to send troops on the ground" to try to force a settlement. But he also said that it was more important for now to pursue negotiations.

There are no signs the United States or other major powers are inclined to commit troops to fighting in the inhospitable terrain of Bosnia's mountains. Boutros-Ghali said it was unlikely a U.N. offensive could be mounted without U.S. participation.

Peace talks at U.N. headquarters in New York recessed Saturday, but mediators said they planned to resume discussions later this week.

In Washington, Sandy Berger, a deputy national security adviser, said the United States hoped to increase pressure on Yugoslavia by tightening enforcement of U.N. trade sanctions.

The members of the European Community planned a meeting Monday to discuss calls by the United States and Germany for stronger sanctions. But officials said it was unlikely any action would be taken while the U.N. peace talks continued.

Gen. Philippe Morillon, the commander of U.N. troops in Bosnia, said after returning to Sarajevo from eastern Bosnia on Saturday that the people in Srebrenica were desperate and that the area would become a focus of relief efforts.

Hours later, U.S. Air Force cargo planes parachuted 37 tons of food and nearly 1 ton of medical supplies in the area, said officials at the Rhein-Main Air Base in Germany where the flights originate. It was the seventh straight day of the U.S. airdrop.

A Bosnian woman says a Muslim prayer for the dead Sunday at a park turned into a cemetery in Sarajevo. U.N. refugee workers found thousands of wounded Muslims trapped in battle-torn pockets of eastern Bosnia Saturday, and a doctor said dozens were dying daily of sickness and hunger.

As many as 35,000 people could pour out of besieged eastern enclaves if U.N. officials negotiated safe passage to Tuzla, U.N. aid official Anders Levinsen said. Bosnian Serb commanders have blocked evacuation for a week.

Asked about prospects for a breakthrough in talks about an evacuation, Levinsen said: "Personally I'm not very optimistic. It could be two weeks."

He said officials "have had no success in negotiations with the local (Serb) commanders. ... They're awaiting orders from the top."

Morillon had said he expected to meet with top government and Serb commanders on Monday. But Cmdr. Barry Frewer, a U.N. spokesman in Sarajevo, said Serb military leader Ratko Mladic and Sefir Halilovic, the commander of Bosnian forces, had not given final commitments to attend.

On Saturday, U.N. relief workers reported locating 2,200 wounded and sick Muslims in embattled pockets in or near Cerska. Officials also said more than 11,000 people, mostly now in Srebrenica, southeast of Tuzla, had requested evacuation.

Izumi Nakamitsu, a U.N. spokeswoman in Tuzla, said Simon Martell, a World Health Organization doctor in Srebrenica, reported that 20 to 30 of the wounded were dying daily.

Sarajevo radio, monitored by British Broadcasting Corp., said Srebrenica came under heavy mortar and artillery attack Sunday. The report said more than 100 shells landed in the area, and at least one person was killed.

The wounded and others seeking evacuation were found after Morillon set out for the Cerska region Friday on a mission to secure Serb agreement on safe passage. But he appeared to have failed.

U.S. Marines in Somalia mourn apparent suicide

Death lifts toll to 7 in Somalia aid operation

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — U.S. Marines on Sunday mourned the death of one of their comrades, an apparent suicide.

Officials said they would not release the Marine's name until his relatives were notified. He apparently shot himself to death on Saturday night.

Six other Americans have been killed in the Somalia aid operation, but they all died in hostile action.

"It makes the loss, for some people, a little harder to accept," said 1st Lt. Steven Kaegebein, who was the soldier's commanding officer.

In Washington, Deputy National Security Adviser Sandy Berger said the United States hoped to have a resolution before the Security Council next week to transfer Operation Restore Hope to U.N. peacekeepers.

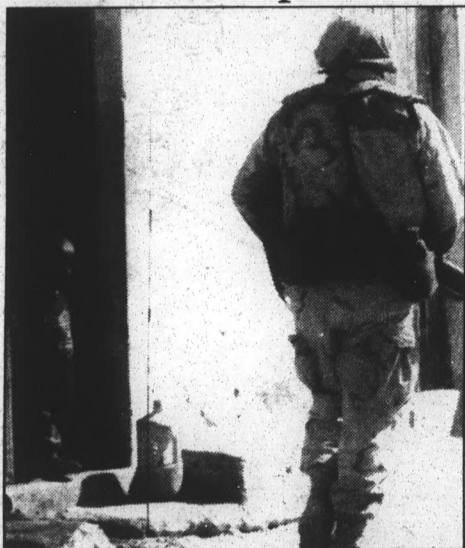

"It will enable us to continue to withdraw American soldiers and eventually turn this over to basically a U.N. operation," Berger said in an interview on CNN's "Newsmaker Sunday."

U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali said the handover date was expected to be May 1.

When former President Bush sent American soldiers to Somalia in December to guard relief shipments to starving Somalis, he said he hoped most would be out by President Clinton's inauguration, on Jan. 20. But continued lawlessness in Somalia forced officials to push back the departure date.

Boutros-Ghali told ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley" he hoped the removal of the U.S.-led coalition troops will be done gradually and that some American soldiers would remain in the country as part of the U.N. peacekeeping operation.

Defense Secretary Les Aspin, interviewed separately on the program, said the United States would keep from 3,000 to 5,000 troops in Somalia to provide logistical support for the U.N. force.

A Somali child watches a U.S. Marine patrolling his neighborhood in Mogadishu. Marines on Sunday mourned the apparent suicide of a fellow Marine in Mogadishu.

There are currently 13,985 U.S. soldiers and 14,017 troops from 22 other countries. American troop strength reached a peak of 24,883 on Jan. 26.

Marine Col. Fred Peck, the U.S. military spokesman, said about 500 more Americans were expected to leave in the next two days.

In other developments Sunday:

- The United States turned over operational control of the Baledogle district to forces from Morocco. Only three of the nine districts — Mogadishu, Bardera and Merca — remain under U.S. control.

- Kismayu, where Belgian forces assumed control on Friday, continued to be the scene of clashes between supporters of two rival warlords, Col. Omar Jess and Mohamed Said Hirsi, also known as Gen. Morgan.

Negotiations in Waco take turn for worse, agents say

Standoff enters 9th day

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WACO, Texas — The leader of a heavily armed religious cult holed up after a gunfight with federal agents is becoming irritable and has rejected proposals to end the week-long standoff, an FBI agent said Sunday.

David Koresh harangues negotiators in lengthy telephone discussions that range over his childhood and religious beliefs, and he says he is concerned his side of the Feb. 28 raid is not getting to the public, said agent Bob Ricks.

He also has started playing loud music at the Branch Davidians' compound near Waco, and they appear to be recordings of his own music, the agent said.

Authorities say Koresh maintained again that he is waiting for a message from God before he will leave the compound with his more than 100 followers.

"We offered him what we thought was a reasonable compromise with an item that was of most concern to him," Ricks said. "And the offer included from our side was the total release of all the people inside. And that offer was rejected."

He did not reveal details of the rejected deal.

Agents of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms raided the cult's compound to serve search warrants and an arrest warrant for Koresh on illegal weapons charges. Four agents were killed, along with possibly 10 cult members.

Officials believe the cult was tipped off and that the agents "walked into an ambush," Stephen Higgins, director of the firearms bureau, said on CBS' "Face the Nation."

One of the agents, a former Special Forces soldier with extensive law enforcement experience, got a look into the cult's armory before the government forces retreated, he said.

"He said he'd never seen more arms in a room than he saw in that room that day," Higgins said.

Authorities are prepared to wait "for a long time" to ensure there are no more deaths or injuries, he said.

Koresh has released 21 children and two elderly women. He says 90 adults and 17 children remain in the compound.

Ricks said Koresh has even rejected proposals that he earlier demanded.

The negotiators have detected in Koresh "a state of irritability ... that pops up almost without notice, and then he will go back to a calm period of religious discussion."

At one point, Koresh refused to release a 6-year-old girl after she told authorities she wanted to leave, Ricks said. He then rejected a delivery of milk that previously had been demanded, he said.

Koresh also claims a videotape of the children who have been released was blank, Ricks said. Parents in the compound wanted the videotape as proof that the children were well, he said.

Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agent Greg Gelder of Detroit keeps watch in the fields near the Branch Davidians compound outside Waco, Texas. The standoff between federal officials and members of the Branch Davidians and its leader David Koresh is in its 9th day.

SLIM chance for ASASU

Judging from their nearly feverish willingness to adopt a plan for an audit, members of the Associated Students of ASU executive committee have finally come to their senses.

Though their metamorphosis comes too late to save an attempt by the Sunday Evening Society to reform business at ASASU, group leaders under fire for their unwillingness to change have suddenly become very tractable.

So much so that when former student Regent Abedon Fimbres approached the group on Thursday with a proposal to bring in state auditors in a much needed attempt to restore credibility to the group, ASASU College of Public Programs Sen. Anne Medina quickly signed on.

"We have the opportunity and we should jump on it — right now," Medina said.

Jump on the bandwagon is indeed what ASASU finally managed to accomplish Thursday, perhaps realizing that the train of reform came dangerously close to leaving the station without them once, and it would be poor politics to allow that to occur again.

And so the committee passed the resolution calling for the institution of Fimbres' plan in record time, foregoing the usually painstaking and irrelevant debate that accompanies most of the group's decisions.

The plan calls for ASASU to form a committee comprised of between five to eight campus members, which will in turn work closely with the state Office for Excellence in Government. The state program is operated by Gov. Fife Symington's Project SLIM and aids state agencies in cleaning up their acts.

In the case of ASASU, advice would be offered on issues ranging from management to fiscal responsibility and planning, both of which are clearly necessary.

What is even more promising about this latest development in the war to reform ASASU is that its instigator is someone not easily brushed aside, leaving considerable hope that, this time, ASASU will be forced to carry through.

Fimbres has accrued considerable knowledge on student government and the universities and will be a formidable opponent for anyone who attempts to block future progress in reforming ASASU.

Perhaps the saddest chapter of this labored march toward change on the third floor of the MU came when ASASU refused to recognize the right of students to demand reform and get it. By turning away the Sunday Evening Society and its 2,000-plus signatures calling for change, the group eroded a considerable portion of its own credibility.

The heavy hitters will move in and get the job done in the aftermath of that defeat, but it is a memory that will be difficult to erase.

Clinton wants service with a smile

President Clinton has a grand vision. But doesn't he always?

Looking ahead a few years, he sees a vast army of idealistic, fresh-faced young people performing acts of goodness all over America.

They will be in the big cities, helping the police patrol the streets and persuading gang members and dope heads to mend their ways.

They will be in medical clinics immunizing children or knocking on doors to remind forgetful parents that their kids could really use vaccinations.

They will be in the schools, helping teach the three R's or acting as big brothers and sisters, mentors and role models.

They will be at the bins, recycling waste, fighting pollution and saving our environment.

Of course, they won't be doing this out of the goodness of their young hearts. It's one of those "what's in it for me" deals, which is a legitimate part of the American way.

As Clinton said: "Imagine an army of 100,000 young people restoring urban and rural communities in return for education and training."

That's the payoff: national service in exchange for higher education, job training, student loans and whatever other goodies Clinton and Congress decide to toss in.

It sounds like a good idea. Young people should do something useful, even if it's only taking out the garbage.

At least about half of it sounds like a good idea. That's the half that has the young people earning what they get. And earning it up front, just as people do in regular jobs.

In describing his plan, Clinton compared it to the old GI Bill, which provided military veterans with educational opportunities.

The GI Bill was a remarkably successful program. But it had a catch. First you had to be a GI. Only after you had been a GI did you qualify for the benefits.

Actually, that's the way things work in most of the real world. If you take a job, first you do the work, then you receive a paycheck. The GI Bill worked on that principle: duty first, the payoff comes later.

In contrast, we've had many years of a student-loan program that worked the other way.

With student loans, first you borrowed the money from a bank. Then you went to college or a trade school. When you finished school and went to work, you repaid the loan.

At least, that's the way it was supposed to work, and it did for

MIKE ROYKO

Tribune
Media
Services

the majority of the borrowers.

But there were also thousands of young people who failed to repay billions of dollars in loans.

That didn't bother the schools, because they got their tuition whether the student learned, slept through class or dropped out.

It didn't bother the banks, because the loans were guaranteed by the federal government, everybody's generous pal.

One outfit it did bother was the government's General Accounting Office, which said the program was such a far-flung, hopeless mess that it was impossible to monitor.

Clinton hasn't been specific about how his national service program will work. Will these young people perform national service first and get the reward of education or job training later? Or will it be the other way around, with the reward up front? Or maybe both at the same time? We don't know. Maybe he doesn't know either and is waiting for Hillary to decide.

I suppose lawyers could draw up contracts that would require the young people to put in their year or two of national service after they've finished their schooling.

But what if some of them welch on the deal? It would be impractical to drag them out on the street and say: "Here, patrol this tough neighborhood with that policeman," or "Get in there and recycle that trash dump." Genuine enthusiasm is needed for such work.

In that case, they could be sued. But that would just provide more job opportunities for lawyers, and Clinton is already keeping many of them busy.

Then there is the question of who will administer the program. Obviously, the federal government is going to provide the money, which makes sense. Who else can legally print the stuff?

But Clinton says he doesn't want a lot of bureaucrats running it. Instead, he will turn to, among others, community organizations.

That brings back faint memories of Lyndon Johnson's Great Society. One of LBJ's programs gave large sums of money to do-gooder community organizations, which were supposed to help street gangs redirect their youthful energies into positive activities.

But the street gangs had their own ideas of positive activities. So they graciously thanked their benefactors, grabbed the money, and used it to redirect larger drug profits into their pockets. The gangs didn't have any MBA's, but they knew an economic opportunity when they saw it.

Well, I'm sure that in time Clinton will have answers to all of these questions.

Just stay tuned to MTV.

Letters to the editor

Student confused by mixed message on deaths

Editor:

I read the March 1 opinion page of the State Press with great confusion. The editorial defended Dr. Jack Kevorkian's euthanasia practices and the right to die. Then, next to the pro-euthanasia column was an editorial cartoon portraying Kevorkian as a supporter of Charles Manson and (presumably) a murderer. From this, I can infer that the State Press is pro-life, pro-choice, supports Kevorkian's views on euthanasia and regards him as a ruthless murderer and an abortionist.

I cannot support the State Press' view on this issue, as I have no idea what it is. To run these two contradictory views on the same page seems to mean that you are unwilling or unable to form an opinion about euthanasia and Kevorkian's actions.

While I appreciate the need to present dissenting views, I was disappointed that you did not take a firm editorial stance on such an important issue. As a college paper, the State Press has a duty to present a strong opinion on important and controversial subjects to stimulate campus discussion. By not taking a stand on euthanasia, the State Press has let down its readers and neglected one of its duties.

SRP's greed for water at fault for Gila flooding

Editor:

Enough is enough. State Press cartoonist Bryce Morgan has finally reached the pinnacle of both ignorance and arrogance. For readers wondering as to which particular piece in Morgan's unyielding stream of tripe I am referring, it is the cartoon of March 2 depicting a stereotypical "environmentalist" complete with headband and love beads and unconcerned about the tragic flooding along the Gila River.

The very core of Morgan's argument stinks of faulty logic and blatant disregard for common sense. Also, it is obvious that this "journalist" hasn't been reading the newspaper very long.

Allow me this opportunity to shed some light into the dark, empty corners of Mr. Morgan's brain. I will break this down step-by-step so that he can follow.

Flooding on the Gila is due in large part to the same flooding of the Salt River (tributary to the Gila) that tore down Mill Avenue's bridge. When the bridge fell, the Salt was running at 115,000 cubic feet per second. At approximately the same time the Gila was running at 5,000 cfs.

"Flooding" on the Salt (flooding here means any time there is water in the river) was caused by a combination of unusual events. The first was a quirk of nature, the wettest January in Arizona history.

The other is man's fault. Salt River Project had to maintain an unusually low water level for the ongoing construction at Roosevelt Dam. The raising of this dam was intended to increase water storage capacity and, ironically, improve flood control.

In its short-term greed for water, however, SRP ignored past experience and failed to provide a backup for their diminished flood-control capacity at Roosevelt Lake. Had it lowered the system's other lakes they would have had room to store some of the flood water and at least soften its blow. But when the rains came SRP had no choice but to open the gates. SRP gambled and the farmers downstream lost.

Morgan seems to be vaguely proposing a renewed push to build Orme Dam. I doubt he cares that Orme Dam would wipe out the last remaining stretch of an invaluable riparian ecosystem, or for that matter cares to understand why riparian zones are important, but I hope he can at least fathom this simple logic.

Fortunately, Morgan has splattered ink into his self-righteous eyeball enough times (this is the graphic equivalent of sticking one's foot into one's mouth) that few, if any, take him seriously anyway.

Justice system and media not guilty of racism

Editor:

Ashahed Triche's column published in the State Press ("Media manufactures racial enmity") seems to suggest that there is a plot by the media to flame racial tensions by purposely portraying blacks as criminals and gang members.

For some reason, Mr. Triche thinks that a misrepresentation by a USA Today reporter, suggesting that a group of gun-toting black men en route to a "guns-for-jobs program" are actually "hard-core, criminal gang members," is indicative of the whole media being a bunch of white racists. I can't see how this story indicates anything more than the fact that this particular reporter was too lazy to find a group of real hard-core gang members to use for his photo. If USA Today endorsed such shenanigans, it wouldn't have fined and suspended the reporter.

Neither does the whole Rodney King incident in any way even suggest that there is a racist plot in either the news media or the criminal justice system. If the media was run by a bunch of racists, they would have suppressed the Rodney King video to protect the white police officers. Exactly the opposite is true — the news media showed us the beating video over and over again, ad nauseam, seemingly telling us how bad of a society we are to allow such things.

Finally, the not guilty verdict in the first Rodney King case in no way indicates any sort of racism in the criminal justice system. As far as I can tell, the prosecutors tried their hardest and put forth an effort far exceeding what is normal for a criminal prosecution.

But, few Americans should be surprised that our criminal justice system affords many rights to criminal defendants. All elements of a crime must be proved beyond reasonable doubts, and one element the prosecution had to prove in the Rodney King trial was that the policemen were not justified in using the force that they did in order to apprehend a dangerous criminal.

Some readers think may think it is not very likely that the police were justified in using such force. But if the jury has any doubts as to whether or not the defendants were indeed justified in using the force that they did, they are instructed to find in favor of the defendants.

Our criminal justice system protects the rights of those accused, and defendants who we may think are as guilty as sin go free all the time. A great many of the beneficiaries of our system's presumption in favor of innocence are black, and no doubt, in many of these cases, the victims are white.

We just don't hear about those cases because they're ordinary, and therefore not newsworthy. And in that sense, Mr. Triche is right. The media does distort race relations. But, the distortion is in the direction opposite of the one that Mr. Triche suggests. It is stories in which blacks are wronged by whites, as in the Rodney King incident, that the news media goes out of its way to report.

IN CASE YOU MISSED IT...

Monkey business

Gov. Fife Symington, in what was possibly the strangest act of his whole political career, showed up in the Phoenix Suns gorilla suit to sign a proclamation honoring the Suns before the state Legislature last Thursday.

Strange coincidences No. 1

In the same week that the state Legislature was deliberating on lowering the minimum level for auto insurance, former U.S. Sen. Barry Goldwater was involved in a rear-end accident when his younger brother, 80-year-old Bob Goldwater, failed to brake for slowing traffic. Maybe we will see some real insurance reform when the individual who was rear-ended realizes that he was hit by a gold mine and starts to develop all manners of incurable back and neck disorders at Goldwater's expense.

Strange coincidences No. 2

Every year a computer virus known as Michelangelo strikes DOS based machines on March 6, the Renaissance artist's birthday. This year the event coincides roughly with IBM's announcement that it is moving 180 jobs from its firm in Tucson to Boulder, Colo.

Turning a prophet

David Koresh, leader of the Branch Davidian sect in Waco, Texas, has retracted his claim that he is Jesus Christ and is now merely claiming to be a prophet. Cult insiders claim that Koresh is trying to get into a lower income bracket and avoid Clinton's proposed tax increases.

QUOTE/UNQUOTE

“Reinventing government.”

— President Clinton's name for a new program asking individual Americans to write to Washington and provide suggestions for cost-cutting measures.

“For all you do, this shot's for you — Arizona Execution 1993”

— Statement on the front of T-shirts worn by state prison detention officers Darrell Steinbrecher and Neil Emore.

The officers were selling the shirts, which featured a dripping syringe, at the Arizona State Prison at Florence during the execution of John George Brewer. The officers have been reprimanded.

“Messiah”

— The title on David Koresh's business card. Koresh, leader of the Branch Davidian sect in Waco, Texas, has claimed to be an incarnation Jesus Christ.

POLICE REPORT

ASU Police reported the following incidents over the weekend:

- The fire alarm was activated at the Engineering Research Center by a steam machine. The responding officer found the area secure and the alarm was reset.
- A male ASU student was contacted at Hayden Library after it was reported he was cutting articles out of a newspaper. The man was advised against such actions in the future.
- An ASU employee reported his black, 1985 Pontiac Fiero was stolen while parked in Lot 17. Loss is $2,900.
- A male ASU employee reported several electronic items were removed from the front desk of the Sonora Center. Loss is $342.
- A female ASU employee reported that someone removed three ASU keys from a file cabinet in Life Sciences Building C-Wing. Loss is $3.
- A man unaffiliated with ASU reported his white 1993 Pontiac Grand Prix was stolen while it was parked in Lot 3. Loss is $18,800.
- A male ASU student was arrested for possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia on the northwest side of the MU. The student was later released.
- A male ASU student was arrested, cited and released for being a minor in possession of alcohol and for possession of a false identification card on the north side of 706 Alpha Drive.
- A female ASU student reported her white 1984 Oldsmobile was stolen from Parking Structure 5. Loss is $7,000.
- A female ASU student was contacted at the east side of Palo Verde Main residence hall while drinking. The student was advised of drinking in public and left the area.
- An ASU student reported someone did $400 worth of damage to his vehicle while it was parked in Lot 59.
- Two male ASU students were contacted at Ocotillo residence hall for a noise complaint. Police discovered and impounded a brown pipe and small amount of marijuana.

Tempe Police reported the following incidents over the weekend:

- A Phoenix man entered Bank of America, 619 S. Mill Ave.

and began yelling at the tellers. He said that Valley National Bank had stolen $15,000 from him and he wanted Bank of America to reimburse him. At one point, the man climbed over the teller counter and into the teller's bay. The man made it to the manager's desk where he was contacted by officers. He struck one of the officers in the chest with his forearm and was then arrested and charged with aggravated assault and disorderly conduct.

• Police were called to the Modern World Adult Book Store, 1810 E. Apache. Employees earlier told an extremely intoxicated man to go home to keep out of trouble. The man instead went outside and urinated on the west side of the building. The man was taken to Tempe City Jail and booked.

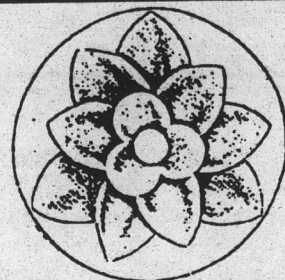

• An unknown male suspect telephoned the Wal-Mart, 1380 W. Elliot Road, and said there was a bomb that would go off at 9:45 p.m. The caller said, "If you don't want hundreds of people to get killed, you'd better evacuate the store." The store was then evacuated.

A police sweep for suspicious devices "met with negative results." The Wal-Mart manager said other stores in the Phoenix area have had recent bomb threats.

• Store security at Smitty's, 5100 S. McClintock Drive., observed a man take a bottle of shampoo concentrate and leave the store without paying for it. Security detained the man outside the store. When police arrived, the man was asked by an officer to explain what happened. The man reportedly said, "There's nothing to say. I stole it." When asked how much money he had, he said, "None." The officer then asked if he entered the store with the intent of stealing the shampoo concentrate. The man replied, "Yes."

He was transported to Tempe City Jail and booked.
 • A Mesa Votech student was contacted as he was getting out of a car at 564 S. Allred Drive. The officer reportedly smelled a strong odor of burnt marijuana and saw two small pieces of burnt marijuana cigarettes in the car. The student was placed under arrest for possession of marijuana and was transported to Tempe City Jail for booking.

THE GREAT INVOCATION

From the point of Light within the Mind of God
 Let light stream forth into the minds of men.
 Let light descend on Earth.

From the point of Love within the Heart of God
 Let love stream forth into the hearts of men.
 May Christ return to Earth.

From the centre where the Will of God is known
 Let purpose guide the wills of men -
 The purpose which the Master knows and serves.

From the centre we call the race of men

EXPERIENCE THE EXTRAORDINARY . . .

Have you ever wondered what it's like to participate in an Archaeological Dig? Between May 17 and June 25 a Field School sponsored by the Center for Spanish Colonial Archaeology in cooperation with the San Diego Historical Society and Arizona State University, will be excavating the ruins of the vanished Spanish military fortress of San Diego in California. You can spend six weeks unearthing an important chapter of American history (fee includes room, board and instruction). Six units of ASU university credit are available for an additional fee. Only a limited number of spaces are still available.

Aspin voices intent to choose fairly in closing bases

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Les Aspin said Sunday he will try to be fair to all regions of the country when he announces next week what he said will be "the mother of all base closing lists."

Aspin, interviewed on ABC's This Week with David Brinkley, declined to say how many bases he will recommend for closure, although senior Pentagon sources say the services have presented him suggestions for closing about 30 major military installations.

"We are under law to proceed with another round of base closings here in 1993, and this is going to be the mother of all base closing lists," Aspin said.

"We have the suggestions from the services. We need to integrate them and balance them and make sure that we're fair to the various regions of the country," he said.

The list, which Aspin must submit to the independent Base Closure and Realignment Commission by March 15, is highly political because tens of thousands of jobs and billions of dollars in local revenues are at stake.

Aspin said he probably will deliver his list to the commission next Friday.

The commission will examine the proposed closures and hear testimony about them before deciding to accept or change the list by June 30.

After examination by President Clinton, the final list goes to Congress, which must accept or reject it as a package.

The same procedure was followed in 1988 when Congress approved 35 base closings or reductions in size recommended by the commission and in 1991 when Congress accepted 38 such recommendations.

Senior Pentagon officials said Saturday that the Navy has proposed closing more than a dozen major installations and the realignment of another half-dozen.

They said the Army offered up eight to 10 bases for closing while the Air Force suggested about half a dozen sites.

Despite certain opposition from lawmakers on Capitol Hill whose districts are affected, the closings are considered crucial to Clinton's plans to cut $122 billion from defense spending over the coming years. The Pentagon is also under orders to reduce the number of active duty personnel from 1.8 million at present to 1.4 million by 1997, and cut 95,000 civilians from the 1 million non-uniformed workers in the Defense Department.

ASASU Supreme Court to the administration.

"(However), the Supreme Court is the legitimate appropriate body to rule on these matters."

ASASU adviser Gary Kleeman said the administration has been reluctant in the past to overrule a Supreme Court decision.

"Associated Students is part of the University, (so) we're subject to all the rules and regulations of any other department in the University," Kleeman said. "I'm sure things can be appealed up the line to Dr. Shell and (Vice President of Student Affairs) Christine Wilkinson."

Tigaris, who was running for ASASU president, said he is dropping out of the ASASU elections so he can divert more time to overhauling the current form of government.

"I feel there are some fundamental flaws in the current (ASASU) structure, and I don't think there is anything I can do (as president) under the current structure that will make a long-term difference," Tigaris said. "The best chance I have of making a long-term difference is continuing with the student initiative and pursuing it from that end.

"I don't think I could be an effective president if I was spreading my time between doing the duties of the president and trying to continue to reform the (student) government."

PLAYBOY'S PHOTOGRAPHER IS HERE AND INTERVIEWING

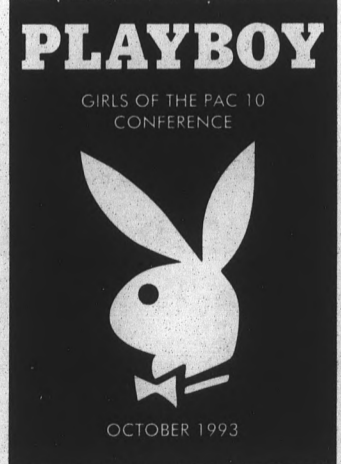

Playboy's photographer is now interviewing female students attending Arizona State University for a fall pictorial, Girls of the Pac 10 Conference.

This celebrated annual pictorial features a different college conference each year, and has become one of the most popular and talked-about magazine features in the country. Since Playboy's first college pictorial 16 years ago, nearly 15,000 coeds coast-to-coast have tried out. Many have gone on to become Playboy Playmates, actresses and models.

If selected, you will be paid a modeling fee, be interviewed by the media, be featured at autograph sessions and have the time of your life with the celebrity status you will gain from your appearance in Playboy.

To qualify, you must be 18 years of age or older and registered as a full- or part-time student at a Pac 10* University. Interested students may call to attend the interview sessions taking place at the location listed below.

Use of taxes upsets legal director

PHOENIX (AP) — The director of a non-profit legal-advocacy group is irate over a newspaper report that almost two dozen top Maricopa County officials and aides are issued cars at taxpayer expense despite a projected $13 million budget shortfall.

The Arizona Republic reported Sunday that 21 elected county officials, aides and top county managers also get free gasoline from county pumps, maintenance and use of a county car wash.

"I can't imagine that they get away with this," said Tim Hogan, director of the Arizona Center for Law in the Public Interest. "This is absurd. What an abuse."

The newspaper said records show the county has spent about $280,000 to buy the 21 officials' vehicles, which are unmarked.

Hogan said issuing top officials unmarked cars violates a state law that severely limits the use of such vehicles.

"They're elected officials. I thought they were supposed to be known," Hogan said. "That's why they were elected. Why they even get cars to take home is beyond me."

County officials said the cars are used only for official business and are unmarked for security reasons.

Jim Bruner, chairman of the Board of Supervisors, said he has no doubts that the individuals receiving the cars are using them for "legitimate county business."

However, there is no procedure in place that would detect abuses, said Jack Shomonta, the assistant county manager who oversees the car assignments.

The Republic said the county's elected officials have had cars at their disposal since the mid-1980s and the practices have been routinely approved each year.

In addition to the supervisors, elected officials who are assigned county cars are the treasurer, assessor, schools superintendent, clerk of Superior Court, county attorney and sheriff.

"I continued the tradition that was established before I got here," said Treasurer Doug Todd, who took office in January. "I take it as part of my salary. I pay taxes on it. It's not a perk. It's not a freebie."

Supervisor Tom Rawles rejected the offer of a county car when he took office in January and has proposed slashing the number of county-issued cars.

Undergrad: School is different second time around

Re-Entry Connection in basement of MU serves as hangout

BY DONNA HOGAN
STATE PRESS

Theodore Stone, a single parent and ASU computer engineering undergraduate, says college is a different world the second time around.

Stone said he hangs out in the basement of the MU in the Women's Studies Center, where he finds people like himself — members of a loosely-organized group called the Re-Entry Connection.

Nearly one-fourth of ASU students are over the age of 30. Many are married and have children, careers and a host of other responsibilities that the typical undergraduate will not deal with for years.

"I get a moment of sanity," Stone said. "There's companionship, camaraderie. We come down here to talk about issues."

Lois Roma-Deeley, coordinator for the adult re-entry program at ASU, said people in the student-run Re-Entry Connection form strong bonds.

"Conversation goes from teachers and classes to spouses and children," she said.

One of the group's goals is to raise $10,000 for a scholarship endowment fund. After two and a half years it's more than halfway there.

Roma-Deeley said there are about 30 scholarships available to re-entry students but eligibility is limited to full-time undergraduates. Even with the limitations, she said she gets at least 200 applications for the funds.

The Re-Entry Connection hopes a "Lucky Clover Silent Auction" scheduled for Wednesday will put the endowment fund "over the top."

More than $4,000 in prizes has been donated by local businesses and students, including weekend getaways at Las Vegas hotels, restaurant gift certificates, a football signed by all the Phoenix Cardinals, and a baseball signed by Reggie Jackson.

Stone, whose education is paid for by the Veteran's Administration, donated a Panasonic answering machine and a computer software package to the drawing.

"I don't have a lot of bucks but there are people who have less than I do," he said.

Lisa Clark, chairwoman for the fund-raiser, said she wrote at least 700 letters to businesses asking for donations and was overwhelmed by the response.

"I just went through the yellow pages," she said.

Clark, who is married and the mother of four children, is a senior psychology major, works on two independent study programs and has an internship with the women's studies program.

"I juggle time," she said. "My husband is very supportive."

Clark said sometimes family time means enlisting her brood to help with her ASU activities. Last fall three of her children helped sell Indian fry bread to raise money for the Re-Entry Connection scholarship fund.

"Everybody does what they have to do to support the program," she said. "Some sit here and answer the phone, some do peer advising and some sit on the mall selling fry bread."

be held before November. His current low popularity is in part attributed to his strong support for NAFTA against the stiff opposition of the socialist New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party.

Carlos Salinas de Gortari, Mexico's president, will also not be running in his country's upcoming election because of a one-term limitation for the Mexican presidency.

With the other two leaders' lame-duck status, Szekely said any changes in the treaty are dependent on Clinton and the U.S. Congress.

"It will all depend on what the real intentions are behind Mr. Clinton's demand for an environmental parallel agreement," he said. "If he uses it as a back door to get from Mexico commercially what he wanted to get in the free traded context, it will lead nowhere."

He said that many think that Vice President Al Gore will influence Clinton in the direction of negotiating for a true trilateral environmental commission with the teeth to do the job. If so, he said there is still hope.

Sheryl L. Santos, associate professor of multicultural education in ASU's College of Education, spoke to the conference on the possibilities increased relations between the three countries will present for a new model of multilingual, multicultural education.

"We need to move away from the deficit model of bilingual education, which is an assimilationist model, that just takes Mexican children and teaches them English," she said.

Twenty-first century education will have to teach children about many cultures and more than one language for them to be ready for the more highly integrated global world of the future, she said.

Andres Vazquez, the director of Justicia y Derecho Law Journal and a member of the Chicano/Latino Law Students Association, was an organizer of the event in the College of Law's Armstrong Hall.

He said that because of the differences in the U.S. law, derived from the British system, and Mexican law, derived from the Latin system, new mechanisms will have to be created to settle disputes between the three nations' businesses and individual citizens.

Now Hiring

The State Press City Desk is hiring a full-time reporter to cover the ASU administration. This is a good opportunity for those who can write, report and know AP style, and do it all under deadline pressure. If you fit the bill, pick up an application in the basement of the Matthews Center. Deadline is March 12, 1993. No phone calls, please.

Join the fight against hunger. Here's your weapon.

Now each time you use the Card, you help buy a meal for a hungry person.

Our goal? To help buy 1,000,000 meals* for America's hungry. And you can take part just by using the American Express Card.

You see, each time you charge a purchase to the Card between March 15 and April 30, 1993, you help pay for one meal.
The more purchases you make, no matter how big or small,
the more meals you help provide. It's that simple.

To make it all work, we've teamed up with Share Our Strength, a nationwide non-profit organization fighting to end hunger. They're doing it in some very resourceful ways.

For example, most restaurants have extra food at the end of the night, but they don't always know what to do with it.

SOS does. They see to it that the food is delivered to those who need it. In fact, they've mobilized more than 5000 restaurants to join the fight against hunger, here in the U.S. and around the world.

So remember, now one of the most valuable reasons to use the Card isn't for what you can get, but for what you give.

If you're not currently a Cardmember, but would like to apply, please call us at 1-800-365-AMEX.

The American Express® Card.

When you reach for it, you reach out to help others.

"Most of the staff are thinking 'Where's the beef? Are we going to get it or are we not going to get it?'" he said.

Amaro has been an ASU employee for six years and is working towards completing his degree in sociology by attending classes during his lunch hour and at night.

"I'm concerned that I'm going to lose my tuition-waiver and this is the only way I'm going to achieve upward mobility," Amaro said.

"I don't want to be a classified person making $16,000 a year and working at ASU for the rest of my life," he added.

Both Amaro and Godden said they expect a large turnout not only from students, staff and faculty, but also from alumni, business leaders and parents associated with all three state universities.

"Everyone needs to put their spring break planning and midterms on hold and take the time to go down there, because our future is being jeopardized," Amaro said.

Flood cost assessed at up to $200 million

YUMA (AP) — Damage in Arizona's flood-ravaged farm areas could total $150 million to $200 million, according to the state's agriculture director who toured the region on Saturday.

Agriculture Director Keith Kelly met with farmers, produce shippers and bankers to discuss a recovery plan, and said his estimate excludes the investment in trying to protect Yuma County's infrastructure or of rebuilding damaged transportation and irrigation systems.

The section of southwest Arizona produces more than $100 million worth of lettuce a year and accounts for three-quarters of the nation's winter crop.

Kelly said a recent study by ASU and UofA researchers concluded that farming, ranching and associated agribusiness generated about 10 percent of Arizona's economy.

He said $7 million to $10 million in crops had to be abandoned in flooded fields in Yuma County. Including future crops that can't be grown because of the flooding, crop losses could reach $60 million by year's end, he said.

Yuma County, one of the country's richest produce regions, has been ravaged by the swollen Gila River which began overflowing its banks two weeks ago after record rains in January and February.

The river crested Thursday and left area residents facing thousands of acres of flooded fields, dozens of ruined homes and a county split in half by bridge closures.

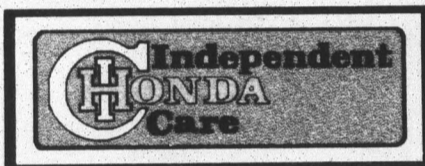

Herb Guenther, administrative assistant to the Wellton-Mohawk Irrigation and Drainage District, said about 15,000 of the district's 65,000 acres of farmland along 50 miles of the Gila has been flooded.

Keep up with the action! Poll: Voters back 'Brady Bill'

BY STEPHEN DEMORATZ
STATE PRESS

Arizona voters support a federally-imposed waiting period before handgun purchases by a 5-to-1 margin, according to a poll conducted last week by KAET-TV (Channel 8).

While the so-called provisions of the "Brady Bill" is supported by 80 percent of state voters, 16 percent are opposed to the idea and four percent are undecided.

The KAET-TV poll was conducted by telephone interviews and has a 5.5 percent margin of error in overall results.

Arizona does not currently require a background check on firearm buyers, nor does it require a gun to be registered. The only rules for firearm handling in the state and Tempe apply to those under 18, who must have a notarized parental permission slip to carry a handgun.

It is legal to walk in public places with a weapon if the gun is holstered on the hip in plain view. Last year, guns were prohibited from city buildings.

ASU pollster Bruce Merrill, who conducted the survey, said the support for the handgun control was seen throughout all demographic and attitudinal variances of the state.

"It's hard to get 80 percent of Arizonans to agree on anything," Merrill said. "Yet this is one issue where there is a strikingly broad consensus."

More than 75 percent of registered Republicans and Mormons, traditionally conservative voter subgroups, supported the waiting period. In addition, 72 percent of current gun owners said they favored a waiting period that would check the criminal record of a possible firearm owner.

Tempe Chief of Police Dave Brown said he supported a waiting period that would allow a background check of the customer.

"I think it would be better to keep guns out of peoples' hands who should not have them," Brown said.

He said the frequency of crimes that are commonly committed with a firearm, such as bank robberies, homicides and assaults, could drop if a waiting period was mandated by the Federal Government.

He said he hoped the check would not effect legitimate animal hunters who hunt for sport and food.

"I do not want the check to take sporting rifles out of people's hands," said Brown, who calls himself a "hunter and outdoorsman."

David Velk, manager of Phoenix's largest gun store, Shooter's World, said he supported a mandatory background check of all potential handgun buyers, but felt the Brady Bill is not the correct procedure.

Velk said that if a city's police department was barraged with applications and did not have the adequate personnel to process the applications within the Brady Bill's mandated 7-10 days, there would be no recourse against the police department.

"In some places, there could be an indefinite wait to buy a gun," he said.

Velk supported an immediate, on-site check by the gun store instead of the Brady Bill.

He said in some states, gun stores are required to call a 900 number that checks the police record of the customer while in the store. The check costs $2-$5 and takes 2-3 minutes.

He said the waiting period would endanger the lives of people who needed a gun for immediate protection. An example would be a person who feared for his or her life and was not eligible for police protection.

If people wanted to buy a gun for immediate protection, Velk said, the Brady Bill could lead to a possible danger because they "would not be able to protect themselves" while waiting for the paperwork to be processed.

Italian prosecutor Di Pietro's 'Clean Hands' well received

ROME (AP) — His likeness appears on T-shirts, coffee mugs and Mardi Gras floats. Admirers scrawl his name on the walls of buildings and add the plea: "Make Us Dream."

So popular has Antonio Di Pietro become that 8 million viewers recently tuned in to watch him on television. He outdrew Tom Cruise and Sophia Loren on competing channels.

Di Pietro's mother has contributed to the legend, often quoting her son as saying, "The law is my mission."

As the most visible of the prosecutors uncovering four decades of systematic corruption that reaches into Italy's political and business elite, Di Pietro also is under increasing assault from those most threatened. They accuse him of tactics worthy of the Inquisition and the Gestapo.

The government has said the investigation could damage the economy irreparably. Socialist Prime Minister Giuliano Amato approved decrees last week that would decriminalize all past, present and future violations of laws regarding political party financing.

All the prosecutors in Operation Mani Pulite (Clean Hands), including Di Pietro, said in a statement Sunday they "directly opposed" the measures, which need presidential and parliamentary approval to become law.

But even if the government succeeds in legislating amnesty, the 42-year-old prosecutor and his colleagues already have achieved spectacular results in the probe.

Dozens of Parliament members are under investigation. Their wrath exploded last week when Enzo Carra, a leading Christian Democrat charged with perjury, was taken into a Milan court in handcuffs and chains, then placed in a defendants' cage.

Not even Salvatore Riina, the reputed Cosa Nostra boss, was subjected to such treatment.

"The magistrates say that jailing has produced results, but the Gestapo also achieved results," said Arnaldo Forlani, former leader of the Christian Democrats.

Di Pietro was born into a poor southern farm family and went to Germany as a migrant worker to earn money for his education. Little of his background, except tenacity, suggested he would one day do battle with captains of politics and industry.

After returning to Italy and attending a Milan law school at night, he worked as a police officer and passed an exam to join the judiciary as a deputy prosecutor.

Operation Clean Hands began in February 1992 as a sting operation in a low-level corruption case. When the trail pointed to then-Prime Minister Bettino Craxi's Socialist party, there seemed to be no turning back.

The magistrates were helped by a changing political climate that saw voters punish traditional parties in general elections two months after the first arrests.

Since then, there have been nearly 900 arrests of politicians, business people and local officials. At least 1,000 others are under investigation and arrests are made daily.

Di Pietro does not seem like the usual crusading magistrate. He rarely talks to reporters, although he allows TV cameras outside his office in Milan's Fascist-era courthouse to capture his image for the nightly news shows.

He and his colleagues have denied newspaper reports that they put politicians and businessmen in cells with AIDS-infected drug dealers and transsexuals to scare them into talking. After giving full confessions, most are released without bail to await trial.

In Carra's case, Di Pietro had the politician removed from the cage. On Friday, the government suspended three policemen for putting him in chains.

If politicians are troubled by their treatment, they should be aware that another Di Pietro is in the wings.

Newspapers carried photographs last week of the prosecutor at the graduation of his son Cristiano from the police academy, where he ranked first in his class for investigative technique.

Mexican border becoming barrier

SAN LUIS (AP) — A tattered chain-link fence is being torn down to make way for a solid steel wall along the Mexican border here in an effort to curb crime, drug traffic and illegal immigration, authorities said.

U.S. Border Patrol officials said similar barriers are planned for Nogales, Douglas and Naco.

Some San Luis residents have dubbed the 10-foot-high barrier the "tortilla wall" because of its smooth, flat, steel panels that are one-eighth of an inch thick.

"The wall is a bad statement," said former San Luis Mayor Elias Bermudez, who has friends and family on both sides of the border. "There's no way I can have a good relationship with my neighbor if I build a wall that's tall and dark enough so I can't see or speak with my neighbor."

"It might help stop crime a little bit," said San Luis Mayor Tony Reyes. "But it's an ugly thing. It splits us people apart."

"We don't expect to please everybody," said Border Patrol spokesman Steve McDonald. "But this fence is a relatively inexpensive, practical response to issues such as cross-border crime, illegal immigration and drug trafficking."

Federal officials said the wall is aimed at blocking drug smugglers, funneling them away from urban entry ports toward remote areas where they are easier to track.

They said the barrier may also help curb illegal immigration and border crime, which has jumped dramatically in cities such as Nogales and Naco since 1990.

Nogales Police Capt. Miguel Baldenegro said records show that 90 percent of crime in the city is committed by illegal aliens.

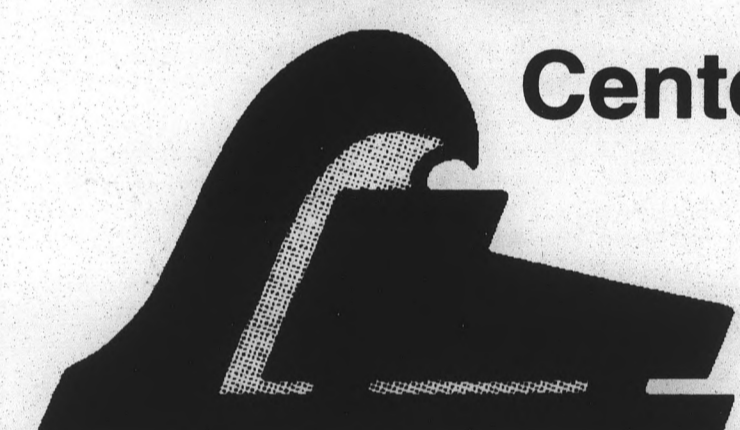

Naco Sheriff John Pintek said his city is plagued by border crime and federal efforts to upgrade the fence can't come soon enough.

Most materials come from military surplus stocks, but officials said the patrol's cost is $70,000 for posts and cement.

Tucson Border Patrol requested the barriers for Nogales, Naco and Douglas in December 1991, McDonald said.

PARIS — Cyril Collard, a writer who made a highly acclaimed acting and directing debut in his film about coping with AIDS, died Friday of complications from the disease. He was 35.

Collard, one of the first French artists to make his fight with AIDS public, died in suburban Versailles, said his agent, Claude Davy.

Collard's death came four days before Monday's Cesar awards ceremony, where his film Savage Nights is up for seven Cesars, the French equivalent of the Oscars.

The movie has drawn 900,000 viewers since opening in October. It has become a cult film in France, with its portrayal of the pain of confronting and coping with acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Adapted from his semi-autobiographical book of the same name, published in 1989, the movie recounts the story of a young bisexual and the choices forced on him after learning he is carrying the HIV virus. The film turns especially on his relationship with the woman he loves.

Collard directed the film and took on the starring role after it was refused by numerous actors.

The movie takes place in 1986, the year Collard learned he had the HIV virus.

Culture Minister Jack Lang said Friday that Collard "filmed his own drama to try to exorcise the inescapable, the unacceptable in a hymn to life and love."

Savage Nights has been nominated for best film, best first film and best director at the Cesar awards. It also is competing in four other categories.

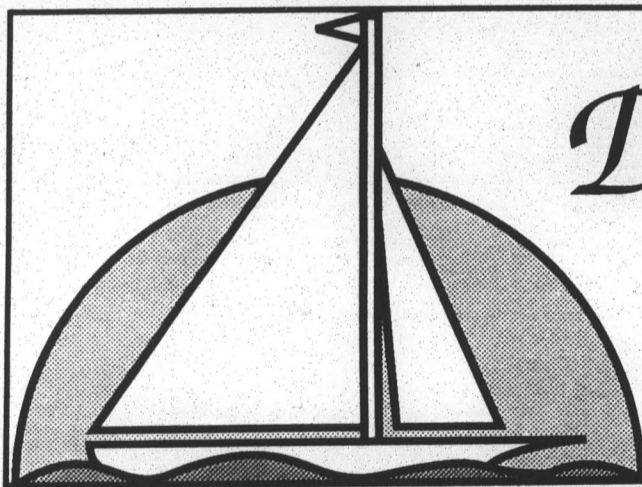

Born Dec. 19, 1957 in Paris, Collard studied math and physics before turning to writing, music and film. His first novel Love Condemned came out in 1987.

Collard composed part of the original music for Savage Nights, and composed songs for some noted groups, including the popular Douce France for the band Carte de Sejour. He also made a number of short-length films.

He was to be cremated Wednesday at Pere Lachaise Cemetery.

Details of survivors were not immediately known.

ASU's NCAA tourney chances threatened by 79-74 loss to Cal

BY MICHAEL BRANOM
STATE PRESS

What could have been a chance for the ASU women's basketball team to make a good impression on the NCAA Tournament selection committee turned into dashed hopes for the Sun Devils, as California handed them a 79-74 loss Saturday night.

The defeat, combined with Washington's defeat of UCLA, puts ASU in a tie for fourth place with the Golden Bears, with the Huskies a half-game ahead of the two.

No. 9 Stanford and No. 15 USC remain tied for first place, four games ahead of the Sun Devils.

Sources within the Cal program differ on whether the NCAA will choose four or five teams from the Pac-10, but ASU coach Maura McHugh thinks that only four schools from the conference will be invited. This will pit ASU, Cal, and UW against one another in battling for two tournament spots.

"I would be very, very surprised if (the selection committee) takes five," McHugh said. "I would say definitely four."

Despite the turn of events, McHugh does not feel that next weekend's road trip to Los Angeles has changed in importance.

"Even if we won two (this weekend), we could not go waltzing off to LA, saying, 'We can lose and still get in,'" McHugh said.

"It all comes down to a two-game season and we have to pull it out," senior center Lisa Salsman said.

The Sun Devils (16-9 overall, 9-7 Pac-10) have now dropped three games in a row, making this their longest losing streak of the season.

The game itself was one of runs, as each team alternated between streaks of domination and ineffectiveness.

The Sun Devils came out of halftime on fire, going on a 20-7 run in a 5:28 span to give them an 11-point edge.

Over the next five minutes though, Cal outscored ASU by 13 to erase the Sun Devils' streak.

The Golden Bears (17-8, 9-7) held the Sun Devils at bay throughout the rest of the game, forcing ASU to foul in order to stop the clock.

This tactic did not work, as Cal was perfect from the line over the last three minutes, sinking all eight foul shots attempted. In the second half, Cal shot 73 percent from the free throw line.

Ironically, the Golden Bears entered the weekend as the worst foul shooting team in the Pac-10, going 63 percent from the line.

Cal point guard Milica Vukadinovich nailed ASU's coffin shut in the final seconds, hitting all four free throws in two one-and-one situations. She led all scorers with 21 points, on 7-of-10 shooting from the field and 6-of-7 from the line.

"Personally, I was ready to step up and rise to the occasion," Vukadinovich said.

Salsman and Ryneldi Becenti led the way for the Sun Devils. Salsman scored 20 points before fouling out with 3:20 remaining in the contest. Becenti added 16 points and 11 assists in her last home game at ASU.

Sun Devil Notes:

Off-guard Stacey Johnson scored eight points on 3-of-10 shooting, breaking her streak of double-figure scoring at 19 games.

Brian Fitzgerald/State Press
Senior point guard Ryneldi Becenti grapples with a Cal player for the rebound as center Lisa Salsman looks on. Becenti and Salsman played in their last home game as Sun Devils, but dropped a 79-74 loss to the Bears.

Sun Devils take pounding from Golden Bears, 91-67

Associated Press
Sun Devil forward Dwayne Fontana attempts to snare a rebound from California's Alfred Grigsby in Saturday's 91-76 loss. Cal jumped all over ASU early, which was just one of several factors that lead to the Sun Devils' demise.

Nothing goes right for ASU in blowout loss; must respond against L.A. schools for berth

From staff and wire reports

The ASU men's basketball team is still licking its wounds from last Saturday's painful loss to California, 91-67. In a game that saw its worst nightmares come true, ASU was outmatched and overpowered in every possible aspect.

"We were bad," ASU coach Bill Frieder said after his team was mauled. "And they're just excellent. That's a real talented basketball team."

Lamond Murray scored 22 points on 10-of-12 shooting and California used a 26-2 first-half scoring tear to wipe out Arizona State Saturday at the Oakland Coliseum.

California (17-8, 10-6), moved into a second-place tie with Arizona State (17-8, 10-6) in the Pac-10. The Bears, who upset No. 3 Arizona 74-71 Thursday night, are now 7-1 under coach Todd Bozeman, the former assistant coach who replaced Lou Campanelli in February.

Arizona State, the Pac-10's top scoring team at 82 points per game, missed 21 of its first 24 shots and was outscored 31-8 over the first 13 minutes and 25 seconds.

Murray added eight rebounds, two blocked shots and three steals. Jason Kidd had 11 points and 10 assists, six rebounds and three steals. Center Brian Hendrick added 16 points and eight rebounds.

California shot 58.5 percent from the floor, connecting on 38 of 65 attempts.

The Sun Devils, whose four-game winning streak ended, held one lead in the game — 6-5 — after two Stevin Smith 3-pointers erased a 5-0 Cal start in the first two minutes.

Over the next 11 minutes, Cal gave up one basket — an inside jumper by Lester Neal. Before and after that hoop, the Bears put together two 13-0 streaks and ran the Sun Devils out of the stratosphere with a relentless transition game. Hendrick's lay-in finished off a fast break with 6:55 remaining to put Cal up 31-8.

Cal built a 51-26 halftime lead on 55.3 percent shooting (21 of 38), while Arizona State hit just 10 of 36 shots (27.8 percent) in the half. The Sun Devils finished the game shooting just 33.3 percent (23 of 69).

The lead never fell below 23 points. It reached as high as 32 points, 72-40, following an inside jumper by Alfred Grigsby with 11:00 remaining.

Dwayne Fontana topped Arizona State with 17 points, while Smith — the Pac-10's leading scorer at 20.6 per game — was held to 16 points on just 5-of-16 shooting. Neal led all rebounders with 13, including eight on the offensive board.

Women's gymnastics gets past Stanford

BY SHAUN RACHAU
STATE PRESS

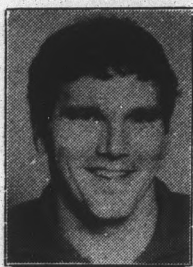

The ASU women's gymnastics team will have an advantage over other teams participating in this Friday's Pac-10 Championships in Palo Alto, Calif.

That is because last Friday the sixth-ranked Sun Devils faced Stanford — hosts of the Pac-10 Championships — and won decisively 193.50-191.85.

Although the Sun Devils (8-1) did not perform in Maples Pavilion, site of the championships, they did compete on the same equipment that will be used Friday.

"I'm hoping it is an advantage," Coach John Spini said. "That was one of the reasons we did it, to get up there and get used to the situation."

Spini went with a new lineup against Stanford (5-6) Friday, taking freshmen Katie Freeland and Jenny Ester out of the all-around competition. Spini said they both needed the rest to compete in the Pac-10 Championship, and Ester reportedly had some soreness in her back.

SPINI

Another change in the lineup was the emergence of freshman Jennifer McKenna, who competed in the first meet of her college career. McKenna had been out the entire season because of an ankle injury.

McKenna only performed on the balance beam, and scored a 9.40. Spini said her dismount was low, but the routine itself was great.

"It was nice to see Jen (McKenna) do so well after sitting out all year," Spini said. "Two of the tricks she did, she had not trained yet. She just did them cold because we didn't want to take a chance in bruising that foot."

Overall, the Sun Devils were led by sophomore Tina Brinkman. Brinkman placed first in both vaulting (9.90) and floor exercise (9.90) and tied for third on uneven bars (9.80).

Debbi Bryan, ASU's only all-arounder, took second in the all-around (38.10) behind the Cardinal's Hillery Anderson (38.80).

Sun Devil Dana Lister tied for first on balance beam (9.80), and Ester tied for first on uneven bars (9.90).

Men take 4th at UCSB

BY SHAUN RACHAU
STATE PRESS

ASU men's gymnastics coach Don Robinson will be hoping to pull his team together in the next two weeks in order for the Sun Devils to qualify for the NCAA Western Regionals on April 2 and 3.

Robinson said he is optimistic about qualifying for the Western Regionals, after a fourth-place finish in Friday's UC-Santa Barbara Invitational.

The Sun Devils scored a 270.85 in the eight-team tournament.

"I really don't know (about qualifying for regionals)," Robinson said. "I think we only have two more meets left to qualify for regionals."

In Friday's UC-Santa Barbara Invitational, Robinson said the Sun Devils had problems on one certain event for the second consecutive meet. The big problem for the Sun Devils this meet was the pommel horse, on which the team only scored a 43.70.

"It seems like each time we go out, we miss one event or the other," Robinson said. "If we ever get our act together, we should do really well. We do really well in about four or five events, and then that one event gets us."

Penn Invitational showcases top tennis talent; ASU unable to get by Tennessee, Pepperdine

By SCOTT DAVIS
STATE PRESS

The ASU men's tennis team fell victim to the dreaded underdog syndrome over the weekend with a pair of losses in the Penn Invitational held at the Whiteman Tennis Center.

The 25th-ranked Sun Devils (3-6 overall, 1-2 Pac-10) were trampled by No. 17 Tennessee and No. 4 Pepperdine. They lost both matches by a score of 5-1.

ASU was never able to get a firm grip on Saturday's confrontation with Tennessee. Five of the six singles matches were determined in straight sets.

Bruce Haddad, ASU's top singles player, suffered a rare straight set loss to Tennessee's Chris Woodruff, 6-3, 6-4. It was only Haddad's second straight set loss of the year.

"Haddad didn't play bad," ASU coach Lou Belken said. "Woodruff is the best player we've seen all year."

Eric Brunner was the only Sun Devil to achieve a victory against Tennessee. In a battle of southpaws, Brunner, ASU's No. 2 singles player, needed three sets to knock off Chris Haggard, 6-3, 2-6, 7-6. Brunner used a strong forehand in the third set to fight off the strong serve and volley styles of Haggard.

Against Pepperdine, the Sun Devils continued to struggle. Belken said it was a situation where his squad may have been outmatched.

"Pepperdine is a really talented team," he said. "There are some positions we are very young in. They may be a little better than us."

Haddad was ASU's sole winner of the day. He went head-to-head with Charles Auffray, currently ranked 14th in the nation in singles. It was a see-saw battle in which Haddad needed three sets to put Auffray away.

Holding a 5-2 lead in the second set, Auffray became frustrated with himself. Haddad used this to his advantage and took control of the match. Haddad won, 6-3, 2-6, 6-1.

Peter Jeschke, ASU's No. 4 singles player, was faced with the difficult task of taking on Ari Nathan, a member of Pepperdine's top doubles team. It was a battle of Jeschke's backhand against Nathan's forehand. Nathan was able to fight off the sharp backhand of Jeschke in straight sets, 7-5, 6-3.

"I haven't been working on the things that I need to win," Jeschke said. "I need to work on my intensity a little more."

ASU will return to action today with a match-up against Notre Dame. Notre Dame lost to Tennessee yesterday 5-1, and Belken said he expects a very good test from the Irish.

"Notre Dame will be a good indicator of what type of team

Sophomore Eric Brunner and the men's tennis team hosted the Penn Invitational this weekend. ASU dropped both of its matches.

we are," Belken said. "It will show how tough we are." By defeating Notre Dame, Tennessee clinched the championship in this year's Penn Invitational with a record of 3-0. The winner of today's contest will clinch third place, behind Pepperdine, who finished 2-1.

With No. 1 single player Kori Davidson out with an inquiry, sophomore Joelle Schad stepped up and took over the top reigns for the Sun Devils. Schad responded to the challenge with two singles wins and two doubles wins as well.

ASU women's tennis goes undefeated in weekend play

By SCOTT DAVIS
STATE PRESS

The ASU women's tennis team produced a pair of goose eggs this weekend with shutout victories against Washington and UNLV at the Western Reserve Sports Club.

The Sun Devils (7-3 overall, 2-3 Pac-10) defeated Washington 9-0 on Friday and UNLV 6-0 on Saturday.

ASU faced off against the Huskies without its top singles player, Kori Davidson. Davidson, ranked 38th in the country in singles, was forced to sit out the match because of a severely sprained toe.

Joelle Schad took over top billing for the Sun Devils and knocked off Washington's No. 1 player, Lisa Proctor, 4-6, 6-1, 6-1. Schad also teamed up with Pam Cioffi in No. 1 doubles. Together, they knocked off Proctor and Kim Frost, 6-3, 6-4.

ASU coach Sheila McInerney said the loss of Davidson had no drastic effect on the Sun Devils.

"With seven kids, everybody has to be expected to play," McInerney said. "They went out and responded well."

However, Davidson returned to action against UNLV, and ASU was able to post another shutout.

WEEKEND ROUNDUP

Baseball drops two games to California

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The ASU baseball team was unable to continue its winning ways this past weekend, dropping two games to the Golden Bears before having its third game postponed due to darkness.

In the first of the three-game series on Friday, ASU lost 2-1 after Bears shortstop Geoff Blum broke a 1-1 tie in the seventh inning when his sacrifice bunt scored left fielder Jonathan Petke.

The Sun Devils scored their single run in the sixth inning when first baseman Doug Newstrom singled in Bill Dunn. Cal scored its first run also in the sixth, when ASU pitcher Kevin Rawitzer's balk scored Mark Palfalvi, who had reached base on a hit by-pitch.

Rawitzer allowed three hits, one run, struckout five and walked four. Dax Winslett (2-2) took the loss for ASU and Bear starter Matt Toomey got the win.

Saturday's contest featured Cal battling back from a 4-3 seventh-inning deficit to upset ASU 7-5.

Bears pitcher Mike Cather (1-3) got the win, striking out six and allowing seven hits and four runs. ASU's Marc Bercelo (5-1) took his first loss of the year, giving up six hits, five runs, two earned and four strikeouts.

Cal was able to come back via ASU errors. In the seventh inning the Sun Devils had three errors and they finished with a total of seven.

The Bears scored two runs in the seventh and added two more in the eighth when Andy Tarplay hit a two-run homer off ASU reliever Mike Fenton.

Newstrom and Brian Lootens both had two hits for ASU.

ASU plays Notre Dame tonight at 7 at Packard Stadium and then the Sun Devils will host USC for a three-game series starting Friday.

Softball takes four of six in Arizona Classic

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The ASU softball team won four of its six games at the Arizona Softball Classic in Tucson this weekend.

The No. 19 Sun Devils (10-8 overall, 4-2 Pac-10) were eliminated from tournament play when Washington handed them a 6-3 loss on Saturday.

Highlights for ASU included an awakening of the offense, as it scored 32 runs. This accounted for an average of over five runs per game, and a 5-0 blanking of fifth-ranked Cal State-Fullerton.

The Sun Devils opened play in the Classic in impressive fashion, with an 8-1 win over Northern Illinois and a 11-0 thrashing of Ohio State.

ASU's first loss in the Classic came Friday, as No. 4 California came out on the winning end of a 4-0 white-washing. The Sun Devils shook off the loss to come back and shut out the No. 5 Titans.

On Saturday, ASU came up with another 5-0 shutout, this time over the Wildcats of Northwestern.

The Huskies eliminated ASU on Saturday afternoon, exacting revenge for the Sun Devils' doubleheader sweep of UW last Tuesday.

ARIES (Mar. 19 to Apr. 19) Despite a minor difference this morning, this is a favorable day for the achievement of work goals. Innovative methods bring success. Tonight accents reading and studying. TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) The interests of children and romance are highlighted now. Couples feel close to each other and may plan a romantic holiday. Group activities are favored. GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) You may receive career recognition today or may be offered a new assignment. Home improvements, family concerns and dealings with bankers are favored. CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Morning hours could bring mixups in communications. You may engage the services of a new adviser. Partners are on the same wave length. Dating is a plus. LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22) Disagreements may occur about the use of joint assets today. New chances for financial gain arise through the job. Meetings with accountants and tax advisers are favored. VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22) A compromise may be necessary early in the day, but otherwise things go very much your way now. There is an accent on fun pursuits and heart-to-heart talks. LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) You will get a sudden inspiration to make some changes at home. A partner will be hurt if you withdraw into yourself. Business talks are substantial and produc-
