Community questions police investigation

Brutal beating of student concerns many

By S. TALBOTT SMITH
STATE PRESS

About 60 members of the ASU community and the Phoenix area gathered in the MU Tuesday, grilling Tempe police representatives over their handling of an investigation into the brutal beating of an ASU student.

Those who attended the meeting charged Tempe police with being "insensitive" to the concerns of the local Asian community. Nearly 10 campus and Phoenix area Asian groups met to voice their concerns to police.

Lang-Sheng Yun, a 29-year-old graduate engineering major, was allegedly attacked at 11:30 p.m., Feb. 26 by three assailants while he was biking home from campus along University Drive just east of Rural Road.

Yun left the hospital last week after two operations were performed to close cuts above his eyes and repair broken bones in his nose and cheekbones.

Carol Scheetz, public information officer for Tempe police, said nothing investigators have uncovered reveals that the incident was racially motivated.

"It doesn't meet hate crime criteria because there were no racial slurs," Scheetz said.

But several people urged police not to rule out the possibility that the attack may have been racially motivated.

"There's a whole dimension of sensitivity missing here," said John Dong, an activist for Asian concerns in Maricopa County.

Yet Al Reed, one of three detectives assigned to the case, said investigators are keeping "an open mind to everything."

"It's physically obvious that (Yun) wasn't just struck, but struck violently," said Tao Jin,

Tentative budget increase is encouraging, Coor says

President: More funding will not deter tuition hike

By TAMMY MESA-SIERRA
STATE PRESS

The State Legislature's tentative university appropriation increase of $19.2 million over original estimates "has a lot of encouraging signs," but it won't deter an inevitable tuition hike, ASU President Lattie Coor said Tuesday.

Sen. Bev Hermon, R-Tempe, announced at a rally for higher education Monday that funding for the three state universities could climb from the original proposal of $521.3 million to $540.5 million for the 1994 fiscal year.

The original figures came from the Joint Legislative Budget Committee, but were indicative of an $11.7-million cut from 1993, so the new figure only results in appropriations $7.5 million higher than last year's budget, Coor said.

The final budget is expected to be finalized by late March.

Coor said the universities originally requested $29 million more than the JLBC recommendations, so there is still a "critical budget problem."

For ASU, the new figures represent a $2.5-million recommended increase over last year's budget.

"We will still have to make cuts at all three universities, but the magnitude would have been far more severe (with the original proposals)," Coor said.

Coor would not commit to a tuition-increase figure, but said a $200 hike is being considered and will not be reduced as a consequence of the JLBC's revised recommendations.

ASA to hold public hearing regarding tuition rates

Students can speak out at meeting with Regents

By MARK M. MACIAS
STATE PRESS

The Arizona Students Association will hold a public hearing Wednesday night for students who want to speak to the Arizona Board of Regents about tuition rates.

Tom Godden, Associated Students of ASU director of state relations, said the hearing will be conducted as a video conference in the Business Building.

"The students are pretty much going to control the forum," Godden said. "(Students) can get up there and say 'Hey I can't afford tuition.' (the Board of Regents) is planning on letting everyone speak who wants to."

"This will allow all the students to say the good things about (tuition) increases and the bad things. Students can also say where they think the money should go."

ASA is a statewide group that lobbies state agencies on behalf of Arizona's 97,000 students.

Regents spokeswoman Suzanne Pfister said the purpose of the hearing is to receive input from students regarding proposed tuition increases.

"We briefed the regents about what to expect and to make sure they are prepared to conduct the hearing," Pfister said. "We want to give the students an adequate opportunity to state their case and to discuss what the various tuition options are."

The ABOR froze tuition last year because of cuts in appropriations from the Legislature, saying students should not receive cuts in service while paying more in fees.

This year, tuition revenues are expected to be separated from the money universities receive from lawmakers, which according to university officials will make any tuition hike "meaningful."

The Council of Presidents for the Board of Regents appointed a workgroup to outline alternatives for tuition rates.

The workgroup recommended tuition in the range of $100 to $500, based on out-of-state enrollment figures, which could affect university revenues.

The workgroup is projecting a $6.8 million to $23.2 million increase in gross incremental revenue from the tuition hike.

The workgroup members from ASU include Vice President for Student Affairs Christine Wilkinson, Director of Fiscal Planning and Analysis Alan Carroll and ASASU President Scott Maasen.

On Feb. 15, ASA recommended to the Board of Regents tuition increases of $150 per year for residents and $440 for nonresident students in the 1993-94 academic year.

ASA also proposed that 33 percent of tuition revenues generated from the hike be set aside for financial aid. If the regents approve the proposal, student leaders estimate that the student financial assistance program will receive $4.8 million, the largest one-year increase in recent years.

Current tuition for students at Arizona's three universities is $795 for in-state students and $3,467 for nonresidents.

Costa Rican conference includes discussions on human rights abuse

By DONNA HOGAN
STATE PRESS

Limited media coverage of mass rapes in Bosnia are because "gender violence" is an often-ignored area of human rights abuses, an ASU justice studies student said Tuesday.

Jody Horn, a member of the ASU contingent to the Fifth Annual International Interdisciplinary Congress on Women, said the five-day conference in Costa Rica included four or five panel discussions that focused on human rights for women.

"I gained a better understanding of global women's issues," said Horn, who was one of a dozen ASU students and faculty presenting papers or sitting on panels during the seminar in late February.

Horn said it is necessary to "reconceptualize" traditional categories of human rights — to look not just at torture, but at sexual torture. In Bosnia, she said, women are being raped as a means to attack their men and to force reproduction.

Susan Deaton, who is working on her doctoral degree in educational leadership and policy, said human rights was the main theme for the conference, which also covered "ecology, history, health, women's migration and other issues."

"(The purpose was) to share a body of new research about women to form coalitions of action," she said. "This was not just ivory-tower thinking."

Deaton said she learned about grass-roots programs that are already addressing some of the worst abuses.

"In Brazil, it's almost seen as a male's right to beat up a woman if she provokes him," she said. Now some of the larger cities in that country have established all-women police stations to help women file complaints, she added.

Dorothy Garcia, an ASU graduate student, said she was most impressed by Latin-American women helping one another through grass-roots efforts.

"For women domestics (in some countries), part of their duties is to do sexual favors for the men of the house," Garcia said, but added that the women are banding together to pressure governments to intervene.

Deaton said women's economic rights have also been abused.

She said women are on the "bottom rung" in property rights, owning less than 1 percent, but farming more than 60 percent of the world's land.

Georgianne Baker, associate professor of women's studies and co-organizer of ASU's participation in the conference, said the University has a formal arrangement with the University of Costa Rica, official host of this year's event.

"ASU took a leadership role," she said. "It was a special opportunity for us to show support for the women's studies program there."

Baker said the two universities are already working together.

"We've got specific projects underway now, others in mind," she said. "We are exploring possibilities for outside funding."

King testifies for first time in beating trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Testifying for the first time about his videotaped beating by police, Rodney King calmly told a rapt courtroom Tuesday he woke up the next morning "wondering what did I do to deserve that type of pain."

My whole body was hurting me," King testified in the trial of four white police officers. "I was very confused. I know I had been beaten by police, but I wasn't sure about what happened, when it happened."

His dramatic testimony came more than two weeks after the beating, which gripped the world and eventually plunged the city into three days of deadly riots.

King, 27, never testified in the officers' earlier trial on state charges stemming from the March 3, 1991, beating. The officers were acquitted on most of those charges, sparking the riots.

Under questioning by Assistant U.S. Attorney Barry Kowalski, King said he had seen the videotape "just a little over 10 times."

"It's sickening to see it," he said. "It makes me sick to my stomach to watch it."

King, speaking calmly and slowly, had trouble answering some questions from Kowalski. Defense attorneys objected-several times to Kowalski's questions as being too leading.

King said he remembered waking up in the jail ward of Los Angeles County-USC Medical Center the morning after the beating.

"Physically I felt horrible, in lots of pain. I just was wondering what did I do to deserve that type of pain," King testified.

But he added: "I know for sure I was attacked by police officers."

King acknowledged that the night of the beating he had been drinking while watching a basketball game on television, and he admitted to speeding — going about 75 mph to 80 mph — when he was driving before he was pulled over.

A convicted robber who served jail time, King said he was afraid he would be going back to prison.

"Mr. King, why didn't you pull over for that police car?" Kowalski asked.

"I was on parole, and I was scared of going back to prison," King answered.

But King denied taking PCP or smoking marijuana before the beating.

Earlier, a defense error allowed prosecutors to bring out damaging testimony.

The defense had set the stage for King's testimony by asking the judge to let the jury hear testimony from King and doctors that King tested positive for heroin and cocaine in the months after the beating.

But when doctors later took the stand, no drug questions were asked.

And in a disastrous stumble on cross-examination, defense attorneys opened the door to damaging testimony by Dr. Charles Aronberg, chief of ophthalmology at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center.

The line of prosecution and defense questioning led to this response by Aronberg, who had said he believed King's multiple facial fractures were caused by baton blows:

"My examination indicated they were localized blows. Someone suggested it could be from a fall to the pavement. That is out of the question."

The defense has claimed King was never intentionally hit in the head.

Aronberg also said some of King's bones were struck so hard they "were reduced to a powder-like substance like sand, the fractures were so many."

Defense attorney Michael Stone acknowledged outside court that opening up that testimony was "one of the classic screw-ups."

King, a high school dropout and convicted robber, became a symbol to many of the effects of police brutality after an amateur photographer videotaped his beating by police officers in suburban Lake View Terrace.

The four officers are accused of federal civil rights violations in the beating of the black motorist following a highway chase. Two are accused of clubbing King while he was on the ground and a third allegedly stomped on him. The fourth — a sergeant — is accused of failing to stop the beating.

Attorney general hopeful pledges to be tough, fair

Smooth sailing expected at hearing for Reno

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Janet Reno promised to blend tough law enforcement with respect for people's rights Tuesday at a smooth confirmation hearing that both Democrats and Republicans predicted would lead to her approval as America's first female attorney general.

Miami's chief local prosecutor for 15 years, Reno described herself as a no-nonsense person who lived by the credo: "Don't pussyfoot, don't equivocate, don't talk out of both sides of your mouth."

For members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, an especially welcome quality seemed to be that she was non-controversial. "You have no idea how happy we are to see you here today," said chairman Joseph Biden, D-Del.

President Clinton's first nomination for the top Justice Department job, Zoe Baird, was withdrawn after criticism of her having illegally hired aliens as household help. The president then dropped federal Judge Kimba Wood from consideration because she also had hired an illegal alien to be her child's nanny — though she had broken no laws in doing so.

Reno, 54, seemed nearly free of personal controversy and Biden scheduled no other witnesses for the confirmation hearing. Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the ranking Republican on the committee, said the panel might vote on her nomination this week.

"Having read every page of your FBI report, I am impressed with your credentials and what you've done with your life," Hatch told her. After the hearing ended, to resume Wednesday, he told reporters: "She's come through this process very well."

Reno declined to answer reporters' questions, but smiled broadly as she left the building. White House aide Ricki Seidman, who helped shepherd the nominee, said the hearing couldn't have gone better.

He and Biden both said rumors that she had been pulled over but never charged with drunken driving were checked by the FBI and committee investigators and proven unfounded. Hatch called them a "hate-mongering campaign."

When asked about accusations that she was loathe to prosecute public corruption cases in Florida, she said she had passed some on to federal prosecutors because the court rules were more favorable in that system. She said she did this despite advice that it would be "political suicide."

"When I took office I saw that there was enough to do and you didn't have to claim credit for everything. And you should do it the best way possible and stop worrying about the credit," she said.

Her answers seemed to please both liberals and conservatives.

"I wish you well on the bench. I predict you'll be confirmed. I expect to vote for you," Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., told her.

At the midway break, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, gave a thumbs-up. "She was OK," he said.

In the hearing, the committee concentrated on eliciting her opinions on legal issues likely to come before her and the Congress.

Reno said she wanted to apply nationwide the lessons she's learned fighting crime in the Miami area, including working with ex-offenders, families and children to try to prevent violence.

But, she said, "I think it's imperative to understand that you will not have success ... (without) threat of reasonable punishment and unless you can ensure that punishment can be carried out."

On the subject of illegal drugs, she said, "if you confirm me ... the president of the United States is going to have an attorney general that doesn't back away from vigorous enforcement against traffickers, against anybody who deals in this human misery."

"Janet is part social worker, part crime fighter," said Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla., one of the Florida lawmakers who introduced her to the committee.

A personal opponent of the death penalty, Reno said she still has sought it in many cases under Florida law. She stopped short of endorsing a Republican bill to end most death-row appeals which delay execution, but she agreed with Thurmond on the value of swift justice.

"We've sought the death penalty. We've gotten the death penalty. And to find those people still in prison without that penalty carried out after 10 and 13 and 15 years makes a mockery of the justice system," she said.

Reno reiterated for the committee her support for federal gun controls, especially to halt the spread of high-powered "assault weapons." She peppered all her comments with tough talk toward criminals of all stripes.

"I want to let people know that crime doesn't pay," she said when Metzenbaum asked her about white collar crimes.

Reno said she would try to insulate herself from politics.

"If they try to politically influence you, corruptly influence you, I think you have to — I don't know how you gracefully throw a senator out the door, but ..." she said to a burst of laughter.

Clinton, Mitterrand say Russia needs quick aid

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton said Tuesday he will try to mobilize swift Western help for Russia in an effort to keep its endangered political and economic reforms on track. He said the crisis cannot wait until a seven-nation summit in July.

Adding his support for a proposed emergency meeting of the Group of Seven (G-7) major industrialized nations, Clinton said it was "important for us to try to move aggressively to give the Russians the means to restore some economic growth and opportunity and preserve political liberty."

French President Francois Mitterrand, joining Clinton at a press conference after an introductory meeting, voiced his own support for an emergency G-7 summit.

"There are problems, specifically in Eastern Europe and in Russia, that are urgent," Mitterrand said.

Former President Nixon, who met Monday evening with Clinton to discuss Russia, met separately Tuesday with Republican and Democratic senators to urge more U.S. aid to Russia and other states of the former Soviet Union. Congressional sources said Nixon made the trip to Capitol Hill because Clinton asked him to make a special appeal to GOP senators.

In a brief corridor interview, Nixon said he believes U.S. aid can decide "whether political and economic freedom survive" in Russia and the other former Soviet republics.

The idea of an early G-7 summit has drawn opposition from Tokyo, host for the next scheduled annual meeting of the United States, Canada, Germany, Britain, France, Italy and Japan. Tokyo does not want anything to steal the thunder from its July summit, and it also has a long-standing territorial dispute with Russia over four islands.

"The important point I'd like to make is I don't believe we can wait until July for the major countries of the world who care about what happens in Russia ... to move," Clinton said.

Still, Clinton left open the possibility that aid for Russia could be dealt with at a lower level, such as finance or foreign ministers. G-7 finance ministers and central bank presidents are to meet in Washington in late April, and Russia's struggle is expected to be at the top of their agenda.

White House communications director George Stephanopoulos said a heads-of-state meeting was possible but was not the only way the issue could be dealt with.

Clinton and Mitterrand held talks in the Oval Office and met again over lunch. In between, they appeared at a joint news conference in which Clinton said the West needs France's leadership. Mitterrand said Clinton's "fame has already encompassed the world several times."

In other news:

"Clinton said they agreed it would be a mistake for France to increase its troops in Bosnia or for the United States 'to introduce troops to become embroiled in the conflict' in the absence of a peace accord. However, he said the United States would be interested 'in being part of a United Nations effort to secure the agreement.'"

"Clinton said that despite his criticism of French and other European subsidies to Airbus, the European commercial jetliner company, he has no plans to try to renounce a U.S.-European agreement negotiated by the Bush administration that confers U.S. support for the planes. "The agreement must be honored and strictly adhered to," he said.

Tuition may take a hike

Sometimes success can be a double-edged sword.

And if they're not careful, ASU students could find themselves feeling the knife when the Arizona Board of Regents take up talks this week on the forgone decision to raise tuition at the state's three universities.

On Monday, students won a hard fought battle to prevent further cuts to university appropriations when a deal was struck by legislators to nix $19 million in proposed budget cuts to the schools.

On the same day, however, regents sounded off an ominous message: the agreement could make them more amenable to a large-scale tuition hike on students, whom they apparently presume will be placated by the Legislature's willingness to fund the universities at the same level they presently enjoy.

As one deposed U.S. President once warned, students watch your wallets, because the regents are in a spending mood.

Regent President Andy Hurwitz indicated, as he has in the past, that students should brace for talk about a tuition increase of $200 or $300 for out-of-state students.

Such a hike would represent the largest in state history, and is well above the increase recommended by the Arizona Students Association, the state student lobbying organization.

ASA has agreed that a hike is inevitable, but contends that any escalation should not go higher than $150 for in-state students.

The danger represented in the present scenario is analogous to a trickle turning into a stream, turning to a raging river: once the current flowing in a single direction achieves a certain strength, it is difficult to turn back.

Nearly every official involved in the tuition-setting process now professes support for a tuition hike and usually follows it up with a statement of deeply felt regret and sympathy for those who will be hit hardest.

Sadly, no one is suggesting that the increase should not occur at all.

Without dissension, students can only expect the worst: they will not only bite the bullet this year, but they undoubtedly will eat it whole.

There is no reason to debate the dire straits our universities find themselves in, nor is there any doubt that Arizona students have until today received a relatively good deal on education.

But students have very suddenly been set up as the state's wellspring of revenue, and there appears to be little standing in the way of that source being siphoned dry before the year's end.

Sports integral part of University

Considering the tumultuous events the ASU Athletic Department has gone through this year, it's not surprising that sports at ASU have had to endure an incredible amount of criticism. The decision to eliminate three sports from the program was controversial, and the legal entanglements of several athletes have been downright embarrassing.

But a select, hypercritical few have taken the department's recent misfortunes as an opportunity to universally condemn collegiate athletics as a whole. Some have even suggested that the Intercollegiate Athletic Department be cut, in order to reallocate money to other academic areas of the University.

First of all, it needs to be understood that intercollegiate athletics at ASU is self-sufficient. The $11 million sports brings to ASU each year stays within the department to cover expenditures. If athletics were eliminated at ASU, the revenue it generates simply would not exist, so the $11 million could not be spread among various academic programs as has been suggested.

But facts aside, the suggestion to cut the entire athletic program is absolutely preposterous.

Cut athletics altogether? Well, if it's going to happen at ASU, the action might as well be extended to the other public schools in the state. Eliminate those cumbersome interscholastic athletic programs in the high schools — they're a waste of time. Come to think of it, how about banishing Little League baseball?

Sports furnish immeasurable benefits to the University community. Media coverage of athletic events provides a window to the University across the country. When most people in America think of ASU, visions of maroon and gold and Sparky come to mind. It's safe to say that a vast majority of ASU's 43,000 students first heard of ASU via Sun Devil athletic teams.

Without sports, ASU would not be a member of the Pac-10

JAKE BATSSELL

and would not be affiliated with institutions of academic notoriety such as Stanford and Cal-Berkeley.

Without sports, there would be no donations to the University from the Sun Devil Foundation, an athletic-based, grant-making organization that sponsors 40 academic scholarships per year for ASU students and started the Excellence in Engineering program with a $1.25 million grant in 1980.

Without sports, ASU would unquestionably be a University of significantly less academic quality.

But the monetary benefits athletics provide aren't even the central issue here. Sports at the collegiate level provide opportunities for students who would otherwise not be able to attend college and obtain an education.

Lester Neal and Wun Versher, two seniors from the Sun Devil basketball team, both grew up in violent, gang-infested neighborhoods. Their basketball talents gave them the chance to come to ASU, and both are now on their way to graduating. Athletics provided Neal and Versher with an education, and now both of them can take their knowledge back to their communities and attempt to improve them. Had it not been for sports, this wouldn't have happened.

It's time for the "dumb jock" stereotype to come to an end. Tuesday afternoon in the Ventana Room of the MU, the Eighth Annual Maroon and Gold Scholar-Athlete Tribute took place, honoring 185 Sun Devil athletes who achieved at least a 3.0 grade-point-average in 1992. These are the same athletes that have been labeled "academically incompetent."

Athletics don't steal from education. They significantly contribute to it. I learned just as much from my athletic experiences in high school as I did from reading textbooks or taking quizzes.

Sports teach athletes to work within a group, to deal with defeat, to strive for success and to develop self-discipline. Those who have never been involved in athletics can't relate to this, but current or former athletes can testify that competing in athletics has played a momentous role in strengthening their character.

It's easy to take potshots at ASU's athletics program in light of its recent misfortune. But when considering the kaleidoscopic benefits that athletics provide, eliminating sports at ASU would be a catastrophic tragedy.

Colorado amendment restricts special rights

Editor:

I generally would not submit my opinions to the media. However, as a former resident of Colorado Springs, Colo., and having listened to the growing onslaught of erroneous propaganda directed towards the state in which I resided for over 14 years, and its citizens, many of whom are still my family and friends, I will make this exception.

Before groups such as the ASASU, or anyone else for that matter, jump on the "hate state" bandwagon created by special interest and advertised by mass media, they should thoroughly scrutinize the amendment both for what it is and for what it is not.

The recent passage of Amendment 2 would signify, upon its enactment, that homosexuals would not be granted special rights because of the simple fact that they are homosexuals (stay with me on this one).

What this implies is that heterosexuals, constituting the majority of our society, do not, nor should not, receive special rights above and beyond those in which homosexuals receive, based solely upon their sexual behavior. Indeed, there are no such laws which grant special rights to heterosexuals. If this is true, then in a matter of equality, the same should hold true for homosexuals.

The amendment does not in any way attack or deny the constitutional or civil rights and liberties of anyone. And while the attorneys, representing both the state and the special interest's agenda, debate this fact over an unforeseen period of time in a quagmire of bureaucracy, the only people whose constitutional rights are being infringed upon are the majority of voters in Colorado.

The amendment was placed on the ballot, and the people of Colorado have voted. As with any election, there are those whose votes represent the views of the minority. Yet, if we are to continue to exist as a civilized and democratic society, we must follow the discretion of the plurality.

Unfortunately, I am reminded of the most recent presidential election. I voted for someone other than Bill Clinton, and yet I am expected not only to abide by the policies of his new administration, but to "pay my fair share" for them as well. Yet, these are the rules of democracy in which I choose to live.

Despite what has been printed, the citizens of Colorado are not all heathens, bent on the suppression of those who deviate from the masses. The majority are hard-working, law-abiding people who have had the courage to vote in favor of a bill and to stand up for their rights for the betterment of their state, in spite of any threats and hostility by those who dissent.

Before the rest of us are so quick to condemn an entire state, and "punish" its men, women, and children by threatening their very livelihood, we must ask ourselves: Is this truly a nation of the people, for the people, and by the people?

CET promotes cultural diversity and free speech

Editor:

This is to clarify an issue raised by Mr. Anthony H. Grundon in his March 5 article on multiculturalism.

Mr. Grundon stated, "Art Carter and the Campus Environment Team are currently sponsoring events at ASU, the Shaping Arizona Forum, to promote multiculturalism. But they are not supporting events to promote the opposite: the theory of individual rights."

Let me point out that I received a telephone call from Mr. Grundon on Feb. 26, 1993. He asked if the Campus Environment Team (CET) would sponsor a program to present a different view on multiculturalism.

I informed him that it was CET's mission to protect free speech rights as well as to promote an environment that valued diversity. I invited him to submit a proposal to CET to seek funding for his program. I further explained the procedure and schedule that CET was working with in considering funding requests. To date, I have neither heard from Mr. Grundon again nor received his proposal.

Let me also point out that CET has a history of sponsoring events where opposing views are heard.

For example, slightly less than a year ago, CET sponsored the debates between Mr. Dinesh D'Souza and Professor Charles Calleros, and between Ms. Linda Chavez and Professor Paul Bender. Mr. D'Souza and Ms. Chavez, both nationally known activists, articulated against affirmative action. The debates were attended by hundreds of students.

It is certainly not accurate to say that the University administration or CET attempts to psychologically condition the campus community to a particular view on multiculturalism.

In closing, I would like to reiterate that the invitation to Mr. Grundon to submit a proposal for his program still stands, and I strongly encourage him to do so before funding runs out for this academic year.

SRC needs to accommodate all students' tastes

Editor:

I think that the Student Recreation Center staff is trying its very best to provide the student body with a comfortable work out environment.

After a brief period of moderate decrease, however, the volume of the radio in the weight room is again loud to the point of distortion. Obviously, some people like their radio loud and that's fine with me. On the other hand, I also think that it is not necessary that some people's preference should be incompatible with or should completely overrule the comfort and preference of other people as it does now. The SRC building has enough room for everybody, wouldn't you agree?

I think that the great service that the SRC already provides could be further improved by expanding the weight room to the adjacent portion of the lobby area directly in front of the ground floor racketball courts. The radio and the TV could be left off in that portion of the lobby and a set of the equipment from the weight room could be moved there.

This would allow easy and equal access to all the equipment at all times plus it would afford every individual the option of working out in whatever environment is most comfortable to him or her.

There would also be other advantages to such a change. The main weight room would gain more space for the exercise and stretching mats, which are always at a premium and some of which are currently obstructing the weight room's fire exit.

Another advantage would be that some of the Lifestep and Lifecycle equipment could be moved back into the main weight room for those who would rather be able to use them there.

Furthermore, even more people could get the maximum enjoyment out of their workout than do now and the many people who now listen to their own headphones while using the equipment in the lobby and upstairs would still be able to do so.

The SRC staff has redistributed the equipment many times before in the effort to provide the best service possible to the users of ASU's fine health and fitness facility and I am sure that no student would object to this further improvement.

Baldly speaking, studies are sick

The day had hardly begun when half a dozen gloom-spreading co-workers asked if I had seen the latest scare story from the medical world. They thought it would be of special interest to me.

By now, you've probably heard the report because it's one of those short items that are perfect ear-grabbers for radio and TV news shows and take little space in a newspaper.

But if you missed it, here is the latest jolt of health terror.

It appears that really bald guys under the age of 55 are four times more likely to have heart attacks than men who have hairy skulls. Or so some doctors claim in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Those who have mild baldness are still more likely to keel over, but in fewer numbers. Those with only a receding hairline are in no greater danger than the mop tops.

Why should baldness have anything to do with heart attacks? The doctors say it might have something to do with male hormones, but they aren't sure.

Of course they aren't sure. Whenever they come out with one of these reports, they're never sure why. They just toss out some statistics, scare the hell out of a few million men, then go off to poke and probe another sample group.

Maybe next week it will have something to do with the relationship between flat feet and suicide or small chins and choking to death on hot dogs.

Besides, this latest report doesn't apply to me. True, I do have a tendency toward not having much hair atop my head. But this report has to do with men under 55, a sorrowful birthday I've already drowned.

At least, I assume it doesn't apply to men over 55. Or maybe they just didn't ask, figuring we're going to croak from something or other anyway, so why bother?

Or maybe they asked some older guys and were told: "Mind your own damned business. I'm sick of hearing about your stupid studies."

Most older guys feel that way. We were in our 30s when the medical world started this binge of telling us what not to eat, drink or do.

It started with eggs, bacon, butter and most other dairy products. That led to steaks, pork chops, ribs and anything else that might taste good.

Don't smoke. Don't drink. Wait, you can drink. But only one or two glasses of wine because another study showed that could be good for the heart.

Then they said jog, run, get that heart pumping. But when thousands of people started getting gimpy knees and feet, they said stop running. Just walk fast.

And like a fool, I listened to them. And all that did was make me feel guilty for not striving for physical perfection. The guilt, in turn, brought on stress, which will probably shorten my life more than a couple of fried eggs and bacon.

Now I no longer listen. When I see a headline that says: "Medical findings say men who slouch have ..." I turn the page. I don't care what their findings are. Will slouching turn me into a troll or a gnome? I don't care.

Ever since I declared my emancipation from science-induced fear and dread, I can take one of my irregular physicals and my conversation with the doc now goes something like this:

"Hmmm, your weight. Since the last time you were here, it appears that you have gained ..."

"Oh, shut up. You could use a little meat on your scrawny bones. You wouldn't last 30 seconds in a barroom brawl."

"About your blood pressure, it is ..."

"Stuff it. If my blood pressure is up, it's because I had to sit in your waiting room 25 minutes past my appointment reading dull magazines that are two years old. It's that sort of indifference that will bring on socialized medicine, so blame yourself."

"About the smoking ..."

"I'll tell you about the smoking. I wouldn't accept an invitation to the White House even if Hillary hadn't banned the weed. Who'd want to sit around and talk to a bunch of policy wonks anyway?"

"And the liquor intake ..."

"What a mope. You don't intake liquor. You drink it."

"Other than that ..."

"Other than that, give me the bill. I want to go get a pork shank and a beer."

One of these days, I'm going to go public with my scientific study.

It has to do with doctors secretly buying up all the chicken and turkey farms, fishing boats, and controlling interests in the companies that make jogging shoes.

Is that true? Well, probably as true as bald guys getting more heart attacks.

POLICE REPORT

ASU police reported the following incidents on Tuesday:

- The fire alarm was set off at Engineering Research Center A-Wing by a faulty smoke detector. The officer found the area secure and the alarm was reset.
- An ASU student reported his red Diamond Back mountain bike was stolen from the south side of 615 Alpha Drive, where it was secured to itself with a U-lock. Loss is $400.
- A male ASU employee reported that someone took his backpack from Life Sciences Building C-Wing. Loss is $75.
- Another employee reported that someone stole an answering machine and a hand drill from Life Sciences Building C-Wing. Loss is $200.
- One more employee reported another answering machine and a calculator stolen from Life Sciences Building C-Wing. Loss is $100.
- A men's Trek 850 bicycle was stolen from the south side of the Anthropology Building, where it was secured with a cable and key lock.

- A man not affiliated with the University reported that someone did $500 damage to an elevator at Manzanita residence hall.
- An ASU student reported her wallet was stolen from the first floor of the MU. Loss is $6.
- Police checked on a female at the Towers Apartments, where she had become ill. She was treated at the scene and taken to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital by ambulance.
- A male ASU student had his backpack stolen from Hayden Library. Loss is $150.
- The fire alarm at Palo Verde Main was set off by burnt food. The officer found the area secure and the alarm was reset.

Tempe police reported the following incidents on Tuesday:

- Police tried to contact a man at 623 E. LaJolla Drive for trespassing when the individual grabbed hold of an officer and refused to let go. The man was maced, which had no effect. The man continued to struggle, so the officer struck the man several times with a baton in the left leg. The man eventually released the officer and was arrested.

Police had the man treated for two lacerations on his left shin. The officer had a knot on his left shin which did not require treatment.

• A "very intoxicated man" tried to buy a 12-pack of beer from 7-Eleven, 1310 E. Broadway Road, after 1 a.m. When he was told it was too late to buy alcohol, he bought a pack of gum and walked out with the beer anyway.

An officer observed the man leaving the store and saw the 7-Eleven employee chasing after him. The officer questioned the man and he was told he was under arrest for shoplifting.

The man said he'd paid for the gum, but couldn't remember if he'd paid for the beer. He was taken to Tempe City Jail and booked.

- Someone stole a jackhammer from the bed of a pick-up truck while it was parked at 1314 W. University Drive. Police have no suspects.

• Police were called to Walgreens, 925 W. Baseline Road, after store security saw a man take a travel iron off the shelf and shove it down the front of his pants. The man then selected a small sewing machine and concealed it in his jacket. The man then went through checkout and purchased some candy. When questioned by officers, the man said he took the items because he had no money and he was going to try and sell them. He was taken to Tempe City Jail where he was held to see a judge.

• Police arrested a man for indecent exposure after he unzipped his pants and exposed his penis to a cab driver in the 5600 block of South Rural Road.

Salt River cleanup efforts a success, city officials say

By STEPHEN DEMORATZ
STATE PRESS

Tempe's effort to clean up the mess caused by this winter's flooding on the banks of the Salt River has officially ended, and city officials say they are pleased with the federal-assisted effort.

The city's public works department reported that the project successfully cleaned the Salt River banks of all trash that had floated into the city from the Tri-City Landfill, located at the junction of McDowell Road and the Beeline Highway.

The landfill's banks were eroded by the heavy rains and flooding which have plagued Arizona since the beginning of the year.

Tempe Public Works Director Jim Jones said he is pleased with the work done by city employees, who collected over 344 tons of trash from the river's banks. More than 1,500 work-hours were expended during the cleanup, which took nine working days.

"I believe our river banks are cleaner now than before the flood," Jones said. He added that there was already some trash on the ground before the flooding, but now the trash accumulation is "next to nothing."

"A lot of the trash was small pieces of lumber and housing shingles," Jones said. "Basically, anything that could float could have been washed up."

Jones said the rest of the Valley planned on waiting until May to clean the banks of the Salt River. He said he did not understand this reasoning.

Gov. Fife Symington has asked Arizonans to volunteer their time to clean the bank, but hazardous medical waste has threatened the health of volunteers, forcing officials to use city workers, Jones said.

The medical waste was pointed out by members of the Tempe Fire Department and then handled by the proper disposal personnel.

Once the river is dry, the remaining trash that is expected to be in the middle of the river bottom will once again be retrieved by city workers. Jones expected the trash pileup to be larger and may require some mechanical means of removal.

Jones said he does not believe the banks will be re-littered with trash, and the city employees will not be asked to become environmental garbage men until the river bottom stops flowing.

"I did not see any trash flowing in the river when the project was completed," Jones said.

He added that unless there is a great increase in water discharges from the up-river dams, that the banks of the river would remain clean.

John Egan, Salt River Project spokesperson, said he did not expect the water releases to greatly increase for the remainder of the spring.

"There is no way to tell what type of weather we will have, but the water releases will be in the five-figure area," Egan said, meaning around 10,000-15,000 cubic feet per second (CFS).

Currently, SRP is releasing 14,500 CFS into the Salt River from the Granite Reef Diversion Dam. When the second Mill Avenue Bridge partially collapsed on Jan. 8, the Salt River was flowing at a rate of 124,000 CFS.

A dike was built after January's flooding to run off excess water flow. In addition, the current trash is not being added to because the Tri-City Landfill has been closed.

Attack

president of Chinese Students and Scholar Friendship Association, an ASU organization. Jin, who is a friend of Yun, said he was bothered by the fact that police didn't know the extent of Yun's injuries, even a week after the attack.

Police recently upgraded the assault from a misdemeanor to a felony after it was discovered that Yun suffered broken bones. The initial report, a misdemeanor assault filed by the officer who responded to the incident, listed several bumps above Yun's eyes and a bloody nose as his injuries, although the officer reported that the extent of the injuries was uncertain at the time. Yun was unable to speak with police immediately following the attack because of his condition.

Meeting goers also expressed concern over the number of days it took investigators to contact Yun for an interview. Yun was not contacted until seven days after the attack and was not interviewed until Tuesday, according to investigators.

"I want to know why it takes so long for police to contact the victim," Dong said.

Scheetz stated it is not normal departmental procedure to contact the hospital where the victim is to get an update on his or her injuries.

Jin said the police's handling of the investigation and of alleviating Asian community member's concerns has been "frustrating and very upsetting."

But Scheetz said the city is "putting a lot of resources into (the investigation)."

Several students and community leaders questioned whether police were putting less importance on Yun's attack because he is Asian.

Scheetz said the case has been handled no differently than any other case. However, she made clear that the department is putting added emphasis on the case to alleviate safety concerns Asian students have following the incident.

Others questioned how such a violent incident could have occurred on University Drive, where there is so much pedestrian and automobile traffic.

Scheetz said Tempe has most of its officers concentrated in the area around ASU's campus because of the area's high population. Yet she said Tempe "is well below what is considered the standard" for police coverage. She said the police department does the best it can with the limited manpower it has.

Still, Irwin Tang, a 22-year-old Phoenix man who attended the meeting, said Tempe police have "severely mishandled this case and are now trying to make up for it" by holding a meeting with Asian community members.

"There is something structurally wrong with the way this city or any other city in America handles this type of situation," Tang said. "We have to take this above the police to higher levels of government and we have to take it to the people."

"The police are not going to help," Tang said.

Madeline Ong-Sakata agreed, saying that she would like the Asian groups to be able to speak with police superiors in an attempt to affect policy such as the decision not to contact the hospital to update Yun's condition. Sakata, a member of the Chinese-American Citizen's Alliance, arranged for a representative from Maricopa County Attorney Richard Romley's office to attend the meeting.

Mary Lee Stegen, a criminal investigator for Romley, said at the beginning of the meeting that her office is "looking into" the case. She offered no further details as to the extent of that office's involvement.

Scheetz said little or no follow-up information has been obtained by police and investigators which hinders the investigation's progress.

Police listed only one witness to the attack and have said that vague descriptions of the assailants are the only thing they have to go on in the investigation. The witness only saw two assailants, a stocky black male with short hair and a shorter white male with a pony tail. The witness said the two looked like they might have been ASU students.

Yun said there were three attackers, one black male and two white males. His recollection of the incident has been hampered since he passed out after he was first hit.

Reed described Yun as the "classic victim," being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Scheetz said she hopes the community will continue to work with police in the case.

"Our main priority is the safety of our citizens," Scheetz said. "We want them to feel comfortable living in the city and going to and from school."

A coalition of seven Asian student organizations remained after Scheetz and the two detectives left to discuss setting up a fund for Yun.

According to Penny Lee, co-chair of the Asian Coalition, part of the money will be offered as a reward for the capture of Yun's attackers and the rest will be used to help Yun with his medical expenses.

Tuition

"My view is we still need a tuition increase to manage the budget problem," he said.

Arizona Board of Regents President Andy Hurwitz said the revised appropriations are "very good news", but agreed with Coor's assumption that a tuition hike will likely occur.

"I'm confident there will be an increase and compared to increases in the past, relatively substantial," Hurwitz said.

The $200 figure being discussed by administrators, if passed, would represent the largest tuition hike in the history of ASU.

Hurwitz said ABOR does not have a figure in mind, but the matter will be voted on as soon as the budget is passed by the Legislature and signed by Gov. Fife Symington.

Hurwitz said he does not anticipate a problem with the Legislature approving the revised appropriations in light of subcommittee approval. But Symington will have to sign the budget, and he originally requested a 2 percent cut from last year's university appropriations.

But Pat McWhorter, executive director of the Arizona Students Association, was not so enthusiastic about the new figures.

McWhorter said the original JLBC proposal created a $44 million cut to the universities when considering mandatory expenses such as those incurred with enrollment growth.

"The bottom line is we started with a terrible proposal that asked the universities to take a $44-million cut," McWhorter said. "Obviously, we believe this is a far superior proposal over JLBC's original numbers, but now they're asking us to take a $25-million cut instead of a $44-million cut."

McWhorter said ASA will still support a tuition increase in the tentative amount of $150 for in-state students and $290 for out-of-state students to help make up the deficiency, but only if the additional revenues will be used to implement new academic programs and improve the financial aid system.

"Clearly decoupling is an important component to be sure additional revenues raised through tuition increases will stay within ASU," McWhorter said.

Hermon said the decoupling measure would be attached as a bill to the final budget before it is voted on.

Decoupling would allow the universities to separate revenues received from tuition from those received in state appropriations.

ARIES

Mar. 21 to Apr. 19

You keep things to yourself now and may be liable to express your thoughts in the wrong way. You or a close tie is especially sensitive now.

TAURUS

(Apr. 20 to May 20)

Distractions, interruptions and a moody coworker are potential obstacles at work now. You will be on top of things later in the day.

GEMINI

(May 21 to June 20)

You should not gamble or take financial risks today. Misunderstandings and hurt feelings mar pleasure interests now. A familiar haunt is your best bet for fun.

CANCER

(June 21 to July 22)

Strain may exist today between you and an in-law. Minor domestic troubles could upset your daily routine. Things will be back to normal tonight.

LEO

(July 23 to Aug. 22)

You will find a partner very supportive now. Getting others to understand you may be difficult today. Guard against woolgathering on the job.

VIRGO

(Aug. 23 to Sept. 22)

You will handle the daily routine at work with efficiency and will end the day with a feeling of accomplishment. A host of minor expenses could crop up now.

LIBRA

(Sept. 23 to Oct. 22)

You will need to pay extra attention to details on the job today. A partner is sensitive now and needs reassurance. Going out tonight is favored over home-based entertainment.

SCORPIO

(Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)

The privacy you seek won't come until after working hours. Today could bring minor upsets and changes in plans. You probably won't be in the mood for socializing now.

SAGITTARIUS

(Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)

You seem besieged today by friends with a host of problems. Unfortunately, coping with their idiosyncracies may be somewhat draining. Tonight is more satisfying.

CAPRICORN

(Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)

Singles may be crossed in business for much of the day. The evening hours bring a sense of accomplishment. A relative who feels neglected craves your company and understanding.

AQUARIUS

(Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)

Double-check everything when making travel plans. It is one of those days when little things could go wrong. Tonight finds you in a philosophical frame of mind.

PISCES

(Feb. 19 to Mar. 20)

Be careful that you don't misplace a credit card or something else of value. It is definitely not a day to loan money to others. Practice sound fiscal habits.

YOU BORN TODAY are more independent and authoritative than the typical member of your sign. You can succeed in business for yourself and have executive talents. You work best when interested in your job. You often stand out from the crowd as a person who does his or her own thing. Both the professions and the arts are likely to appeal to you. PEOPLE

BY FRAZIER MOORE

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Last November's Dateline NBC report on General Motors pick-up trucks demonstrated at least one thing: When NBC News stages a crash test, it really crashes.

Of course, news chief Michael Gartner has been running a demolition derby with his division's people and reputation since he took the wheel five years ago. From Dateline's recent on-air mea culpa to the Jane Pauley-Deborah Norville Today debacle in 1989, from correspondent Arthur Kent's noisy departure and the cheesy I Witness Video to chronic low ratings for most of its fare, small wonder the once-proud NBC News is pretty banged up.

This might be a good time to recall a better time, a much better time, perhaps the best time for NBC News. It was the 1960s, and a big reason was David Brinkley.

He has been at ABC News since 1981, and he has flourished there, particularly on his Sunday morning salon for newsmakers, This Week With David Brinkley.

But visit with him in his office at ABC News' Washington headquarters, and before long the talk drifts back to the glory days at the old NBC News.

Then, Brinkley was teamed with Chet Huntley, co-anchoring NBC's weeknight newscast. They were yin and yang. Huntley was stone-faced and god-like. Brinkley was boyish, witty and spoke as if he had a mild case of the hiccups.

"I didn't like the signoff, 'Goodnight, David,' 'Goodnight, Chet,'" says Brinkley, smiling at the memory. "Neither of us liked it. Two guys on the air saying good night to each other didn't look quite right."

Viewers disagreed. The signoff — and the team — were instantly part of the culture. (On his office wall is a 30-year-old New Yorker magazine cartoon showing two parrots with a sign that says "$150 a pair." The pet shop clerk tells a wavering customer, "Madam, would you ask NBC to break up Huntley and Brinkley?") and Brinkley led NBC as it covered the decade's space shots, assassinations, riots and other breaking news with an almost compulsive thoroughness. The unofficial byword: "CBS plus 30" — meaning, we stay on the air at least 30 minutes longer than our rivals.

Beyond their nightly newscast, Huntley

But time passed. Huntley retired, then died. Brinkley had a falling out with his bosses, and gratefully moved on to ABC News, a late bloomer finally making a name for itself (thanks in part to Brinkley).

Today, at 72, Brinkley is still a gentleman armed with suffer-no-fools bluntness, a man who not only ignores such mischief as tabloid TV news or political forecasting but wears his lack of interest as a badge of honor ("You might as well ask me about tap dancing," he snaps. "I don't know anything about that, either").

And with his famously tart sensibility intact, he still comes across as a confirmed cynic — though not, he insists, to himself.

"No, I think I'm s-s-s-skeptical," he says, drawing out the word in fine Brinkley fashion. "That's the product of having lived in Washington for a long time, and having seen the private facts as compared to the public facts. Some s-s-skepticism is required in this city. I don't believe you could survive without it."

Survive he has, a singular presence whose standing was further certified in December when he received a Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest civilian honor.

"But I didn't create anything," says this pioneer of his half-century in the business. "I just got here early. I'm not being modest. It just happens to be the truth."

Maybe. But give him credit, lots of it, for staying on the job. For seeing what's important. For cutting through what isn't.

"Network TV news is immeasurably better than even 10 or 15 years ago," Brinkley says, "but the business remains rather simple. People go and find out what is happening, and then tell what they have seen. That's all a reporter ever did."

"I think it's a very honorable thing to do."

Badminton awaits finals

By SCOTT W. DAVIS
STATE PRESS

The ASU badminton team is heading to Washington D.C. for Spring Break, hoping to sweep through the best collegiate competition for the ninth straight year.

The Sun Devils will be competing in the Collegiate Nationals from March 19-21 in an attempt to bring home 30 consecutive national titles. Since 1984, ASU has claimed every men's, women's and mixed national team title available.

"We are going into (Washington D.C.) to expect to win," ASU coach Guy Chadwick said. "Things can get in the way if we have a bad performance or somebody gets hurt. We're conscious of both."

ASU will be traveling to the Collegiate Nationals with a healthy team, with the exception of No. 2 men's player, Stefan Lundstrom, who suffered a slight hamstring injury last week. Chadwick said he hopes Lundstrom will be ready to make an impact.

IMMEDIATE CONTRIBUTION

Freshman shortstop Lohmann producing for ASU softball

By MICHAEL BRANOM
STATE PRESS

On a team filled with new faces, freshman Tammy Lohmann is making a sudden impact at shortstop for ASU softball.

Before the season began, Sun Devil coach Linda Wells said that Lohmann had all the tools to make it at NCAA Division I level.

Wells certainly hit the bulls-eye with that prediction.

Lohmann currently leads ASU with 15 runs scored, is second in on-base percentage (.508) and stolen bases (5), and is third among batting leaders (.306).

Don't think that Lohmann is inexperienced or scared just because this is her first year in the collegiate ranks. Lohmann was a four-year letter-winner at Katella High in Anaheim, Calif.

"College ball is kind of like the travel ball that I played during the summers," Lohmann said. "(College) has a little steeper competition, but I'm not intimidated at all."

Others have noticed the grace under pressure that Lohmann displays on the field.

"She is a very mature player," Wells said. "She does some freshman things, but as a player, she is very mature."

"She doesn't seem to show any pressure, either on defense or at bat," senior tri-captain Cheri Keller said.

Not only is her offense and poise drawing kudos, but Lohmann's defense is marked for praise as well.

"She is an instinctive player," Wells said. "She knows where to be to make the play."

An excellent example of her heady defense came in the first game of last week's doubleheader against Washington.

A Husky baserunner was attempting to steal second base. Lohmann took catcher Wendy Johnson's throw standing up, and the UW player slid into the bag.

Sun Devil shortstop Tammy Lohmann has made an immediate impact on the ASU softball team in her freshman year. Lohmann is currently third on the team in batting average (.306) and leads the Sun Devils in runs scored.

UCLA forward Ed O'Bannon (31), 1991's most highly touted high school recruit, has had a solid season for the Bruins this year. ASU faces UCLA at 7 p.m. Thursday night at the University Activity Center in a game with major NCAA Tournament implications.

O'Bannon fulfilling potential

Forward to lead UCLA in pivotal Thursday matchup with ASU

By BRIAN CHARLES
STATE PRESS

In 1991, there was no high school basketball player more highly recruited than UCLA's Ed O'Bannon. National Prep Player of the Year, California Player of the Year, McDonald's High School All-American, and a host of other accolades signified O'Bannon's prowess. Letters from interested coaches poured in by the bag load.

O'Bannon ultimately opted to attend UCLA. And while most freshman athletes have had a hard time adjusting to the flow of the collegiate environment, O'Bannon has fit in just fine, as he leads the Bruins in scoring and is eighth in the Pac-10 with a 17.0 point average.

O'Bannon will lead UCLA (20-9 overall, 10-6 Pac-10) against ASU in a battle of second-place teams at 7 p.m. Thursday night at the University Activity Center. The winner of the game will have the inside track on an at-large NCAA Tournament bid.

O'Bannon said he actually welcomed the attention and notoriety during his recruiting experience.

"It wasn't hard — it was actually a lot of fun," O'Bannon said. "In high school, that's what you want to happen. You want to have some hype about yourself. I didn't see it as hard pressure to deal with, I actually thought it was a challenge."

After choosing to attend UCLA after he learned that UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian and his Running Rebels team would be barred from the NCAA Tournament, O'Bannon encountered his first challenge, as a torn anterior cruciate ligament put O'Bannon on the bench for his entire freshman season. O'Bannon made his debut 15 months later, and has been on fire ever since.

At 6-foot-8, 215 pounds, O'Bannon's athleticism and court awareness make him a threat in almost all aspects of the game. A proven scorer, O'Bannon has also integrated a more aggressive defensive scheme into his game, but still feels he has to improve his game.

"To be honest, I need to work on all phases," O'Bannon said. "But to get into specifics, I think it would have to be my perimeter game and my perimeter defense. Both definitely have to improve, as well as my strength."

Nevertheless, O'Bannon — who is also eighth in the Pac-10 blocked shots (0.9 per game) and fifth in field goal percentage (53.9) — has the ability to light up the court at any time. That is one trait that Sun Devil coach Bill Frieder isn't looking forward to seeing.

"O'Bannon is capable of a career game, because he is so talented," Frieder said. "He has so much more size than our guys in there."

Frieder got an earlier look at O'Bannon when the Sun Devils dropped a close 89-85 loss to the Bruins in Pauley Pavilion on Jan. 9. In that game, O'Bannon had 24 points and 11 rebounds and was a key part in the Bruins' ability to pull away from ASU.

TURN TO O'BANNON, PAGE 12.

Lohmann

To those watching the game without the benefit of television replay, it appeared that the baserunner slid, then stopped two feet from the base and was tagged out.

However, fans who were watching ASPN's telecast saw Lohmann firmly plant her leg to block the bag. The would-be base-stealer slid right into Lohmann's leg, halting her progress. Lohmann's veteran play halted what could have been a big inning for UW.

"That comes from the experience of playing," said Lohmann, the first female athlete in Anaheim history to have her jersey retired.

"Playing travel ball for four years, I've played against a lot of the players I see here."

Another result of Lohmann's experience and on-field consistency is that her fellow freshmen can look to her for leadership.

"That is exactly right," Keller said. "I think a lot of people are looking to her for leadership."

Lohmann, though, doesn't see things that way. She prefers to think of herself as another new face, trying to help the team stick together.

"I think all of us freshmen try to call upon each other," she said. "We all help each other, because we all know that we are in the same situations together."

O'Bannon

O'Bannon was a force in the paint in the two teams' earlier meeting, and Frieder says that the Sun Devils will have to concentrate on O'Bannon and not permit him get into a rhythm.

"We have to cheat off of some people to help on Ed, work to keep him off the boards and just try to keep his numbers down," Frieder added. "He's having a nice season and he's a great player, and we really need to do a good job on him."

While O'Bannon won't be the only threat the Sun Devils will have to face, the Bruin forward is currently on a hot streak, scoring 22 points last week against Washington and recording his fifth double-double (double digits in both scoring and rebounding) of the season against Washington State.

Atheletes honored for academic success

ASU coaches, faculty and administration honored 185 Sun Devil athletes Tuesday for their academic efforts in the Eighth Annual Maroon and Gold Scholar-Athlete Tribute.

Each ASU athlete achieving a 3.0 or higher cumulative or semester grade-point-average in 1992 was recognized during a luncheon in the Memorial Union's Ventana Room.

Special recognition was given to four Sun Devils earning 4.0 grade-point-averages: sophomore Christine Jeffrey, swimming; freshman Scott Kortmeyer, baseball; senior Eric Strachan, track and field; and freshman Michaelene Tetteh, track and field.

CBS has no say in team selections for NCAA tourney, chairman says

By DOUG TUCKER
AP SPORTS WRITER

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The $1 billion that CBS paid for rights to the NCAA tournament gives it no voice whatsoever in picking or matching up the field, says the chairman of the selection committee.

At the same time, Tom Butters agreed people naturally assume the committee attempts to enhance tournament ratings.

"In the four years that I've been associated with the tournament, it has never once come up," Butters said Tuesday in a conference call. "I can assure you it will not come up this year, either. You can always look and say, 'I bet that was done to enhance TV.' But it just simply isn't the case. It is not an issue, and it will not be an issue."

The committee will begin marathon meetings Friday morning seeding the bracket and selecting the 34 at-large entries to go with 30 automatic bids that go to the winners of conference regular season races or postseason tournaments. The tournament pairings will be announced Sunday evening at the end of a weekend of closed-door deliberations.

The nine committee members do not approach their task lightly, Butters said.

"It's serious business because it affects a lot of lives and a lot of programs and a lot of kids," said Butters, athletic director at two-time defending champion Duke. "To take it anything less than serious would be inappropriate."

Olympian Tom Reidy. Reidy is looking to continue his perfection during the Collegiate Nationals. He has swept men's singles and doubles and mixed doubles in his three prior appearances.

Reidy will be teaming with Jennifer Whyte for the first time in mixed doubles. Chadwick said this newly-composed squad may need to iron some things out if they are to win the championship.

"They've had a chance to practice with each other the last couple of weeks," Chadwick said. "I think they'll be OK."

Reidy and Whyte's toughest competition may come from their own teammates. Lundstrom and Andrea Andersson could pose a serious threat to the favorites.

"Mixed doubles is a toss-up," Chadwick said. "Tom's experience would give him the favor."

Andersson will lead the way for the ASU women's squad. She was the 1992 women's singles and doubles national champion.

Navajo Scholarships

Salt River Project operates the Navajo Generating Station on Navajo land near the Utah-Arizona border. We believe higher education is critical in preparing people to fully participate in the Nation's developing economy.

The SRP/NGS Navajo scholarships are designed to encourage academic excellence by helping Navajo students pay for some of the most important education expenses including tuition, fees, books, and room and board. In some instances, summer employment is also available.

These competitively awarded scholarships are available for junior level students and above. Specific award amounts are determined by the Scholarship Committee according to demonstrated need and funding availability.

For information, contact the financial aid office or Mr. Jim Kindred, Salt River Project, Navajo Generating Station, P.O. Box W, Page, Arizona 86040. Application deadline: April 1, 1993.
