Shouts of support

Sun Devil fans cheered loud and often during most of Thursday night's game against UCLA, as ASU looked to capture a bid in the NCAA tournament. ASU led early, but a late second-half surge by UCLA put the Bruins on top, defeating the Sun Devils 77-74.

Regents confer with protestors over tuition hike

Students: Stronger financial aid must accompany possible increase

By MARK M. MACIAS
STATE PRESS

Students from Arizona's three public universities spoke via satellite Thursday to the Arizona Board of Regents about proposed tuition increases, saying students cannot afford further hikes.

The student body presidents from ASU, UofA and NAU were the first students to speak at the meeting. Each stressed to the Board that financial aid must be increased if tuition is raised for the 1993-94 academic year.

Associated Students of UofA President Danny Siciliano said by raising tuition, many people will be excluded from furthering their education.

"This is my last time up at bat and I'm not afraid to tell the truth," Siciliano said.

"If we aren't careful with what we do about financial aid and if we don't set aside enough money (for financial aid), we may be putting a sign out in front of the university that says 'Poor people, you're not welcome here. Middle income people, unless you're ready to mortgage your future, you're also not welcome here.'"

Tom Godden, Associated Students of ASU director of state relations and Arizona Students Association delegate, presented ASA's proposed increases of $150 per year for residents and $440 for nonresident students in the 1993-94 academic year.

"It's impossible for the university budget to be fully funded," Godden said. "These are unprecedented increases, but we want it guaranteed that this (money) will go directly to the universities."

ASA is a statewide group that lobbies state agencies on behalf of students from Arizona's public universities.

ABOR consists of Regent President Andrew Hurwitz and regents Eddie Basha, Rudy Campbell, Esther Capin, Arthur Chapa, John Minger, Donald Pitt, Douglas Wall and student regent Rhian Evans.

Gov. Fife Symington and Superintendent of Public Instruction Diane Bishop are also members by virtue of their offices.

About 20 people showed up for the three-hour session at ASU, but only four students spoke directly to Hurwitz.

Salary increases unlikely for 1994

Tuition waivers stable according to budget estimate

By TAMMY MESA-SIERRA
STATE PRESS

The likelihood of additional University appropriations has relieved the threat of eliminating employee tuition waivers, but the increase would not accommodate salary raises for 1994, ASU President Lattie Coor said Thursday.

During a speech at the State Capitol this week, Sen. Bev Hermon, R-Tempe, announced that university appropriations will likely exceed original legislative estimates by $19.2 million for the next fiscal year when the budget is finalized this month.

She added that the revocation of employee tuition waivers recommended by the Joint Legislative Budget Committee in its original 1994 projections will not occur.

"Not many people were truly concerned with doing away with the tuition waivers, and this too will pass," Hermon said. "It simply won't happen."

ASU President Lattie Coor commended Hermon on her "strong support of tuition waivers", but said the appropriation increase is insufficient to plan for any salary increases other than the $1,000 approved for all state employees last year.

The revised recommendation absorbs the original proposed cut of $11 million for the university system, and results in a $2.5-million increase over last year's budget for ASU.

But Academic Senate President Dick McGaw said that in light of the new figures, faculty and staff "fully expect a cost of living and merit increase for 1993-94," in addition to retention.

Panaccia addresses issue of gays in military

Former sergeant speaks from experience

By KATE DEELY
STATE PRESS

A former U.S. Air Force staff sergeant who was discharged from the service for "coming out of the closet," spoke at the ASU Memorial Union Thursday night.

Tom Panaccia appeared on ABC's Good Morning America on July 23, 1992 and told the nation, for the first time, that he was gay. He was given an honorable discharge on Oct. 10, 1992 after an Air Force hearing which discounted all of his achievements because he violated policy, which said "homosexuality is incompatible with military service."

"I was a criminal all of the sudden," Panaccia said. "I was discharged, not because I broke a law, I was discharged because I broke a policy."

Panaccia, who served in the Air Force for almost 12 years, said he realized, after much battling, that he was gay about 18 months ago.

"For a great part of my adult life, I didn't know I was gay," said the 28-year-old Panaccia. "It is not something that I just woke up one morning and decided."

"About 18 months ago, I reached a heightened state of awareness where I could not deny that I was gay. It got very painful, and I could not put it back in the closet," Panaccia said. "I wasn't able to accept myself. I wasn't able to accept I that I was gay and nothing was going to change (being gay)."

Panaccia said he needed to do something about it and show people who he really was, even if it would jeopardize his career.

He said after doing some research he found that there have been approximately 16,000 people quietly "booted out" of the military because they are gay, because it violates military policy.

"They are blank faces. You never see them, you never get an understanding of who they are or what they are about," he said. "I didn't want to do that. I knew it was important for the American public to see the face of a gay man."

Panaccia said he stumbled upon the opportunity to appear on Good Morning America and "come out of the closet." He said it was the chance he'd been looking for: to use the show as a "forum" and the best service he could ever offer to both the Air Force and the United States.

"I wanted, for the first time in my life, my performance in the military to actually stand for something," he said. "And for the first time in my life, I actually believed in myself."

Panaccia added that no one knew about his sexual orientation until he said it on the air.

Landfill supplying Salt River garbage to be moved

344 tons of trash removed from area; Cleanup efforts successful, director says

By S. TALBOTT SMITH
STATE PRESS

While Tempe finished cleanup efforts on the garbage-strewn banks of the Salt River Friday, the landfill in which the problems originated will be closed and moved.

Jim Jones, Tempe public works director, said the nine-day cleanup, which netted 344 tons of garbage, went smoothly despite hazardous waste problems.

Jones said medical waste found along the banks of the river was collected and disposed of by a hazardous waste team from the Tempe Fire Department in conjunction with BFI Inc., a waste disposal company. Jones was uncertain how much medical waste was removed from the river.

He said non-hazardous waste was transported to Butterfield Landfill by the Waste Management Company at $19 per ton, costing a total of more than $6,500. The cost of the cleanup itself, which includes the cost of labor and equipment used on the banks of the river, was not available, Jones said.

Jones said the city will seek reimbursement for expenses incurred in the cleanup, likely from the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

The agency, which declared an area extending from the White Mountains in the east to Yuma in the west a disaster area as a result of flood and subsequent landfill waste problems, is expected to review applications for reimbursement later this spring, Jones said.

The garbage ended up on the banks of the river in Tempe and Phoenix after heavy winter rains forced Salt River Project officials to release large amounts of water from upstream dams.

The rising flood waters eroded a portion of the Tri-City Landfill, which is located at the intersection of McDowell Road and the Beeline Highway on the Salt River Pima-Maricopa Indian Reservation, east of Tempe. The Indian community manages the landfill.

Landfill officials announced the closure of the garbage dump last week, adding that it will be re-opened at another location.

Jones said the city will not seek reimbursement from the cash-strapped Indian community, saying that it would be a "fruitless effort."

In the past, Tempe used the Tri-City landfill for its household garbage disposal until worries over whether the landfill could stand up to a heavy flooding forced the city last year to select Butterfield Landfill as its current waste site. Mesa and Scottsdale continued to use the landfill despite those concerns, although Scottsdale officials switched landfills after the recent flood mishap. Mesa city officials continue to use Tri-City and plan to move dumping to the new site when it opens.

Tri-City's per-ton dumping rates were considerably lower than rates offered by Butterfield and other area landfills. After moving to Butterfield Landfill, municipal garbage removal rates rose in Tempe as a result of those increased dumping rates.

Tri-City's rates currently stand at $14 per ton, but were several dollars cheaper when Tempe was forced to choose another site, according to Frank Mertley, community manager for the Indian enclave.

Mertley said rates will increase again once the facility moves to its new location, set for the area at the junction of the Beeline Highway, Gilbert Road and the Arizona Canal

Richard Komurek/State Press

Cleanup crews have cleared the trash caused by recent flooding from the banks of the Salt River, but have yet to reach areas in the middle of the waterway, such as this one near the Second Mill Avenue Bridge. The bridge was severely damaged by the floods.

north of Mesa. Mertley said the new landfill, which is one-half mile outside of the Salt's 100-year flood plain, will conform to all Environmental Protection Agency regulations.

Mertley said the old landfill will be closed by October, a requirement set by the EPA for all unprotected, old-type landfills. Mertley said the closure had little to do with the flooding.

Further measures will be taken at the old landfill site once it is closed to protect it from any future floods. Mertley said a "hard bank" will be built around the landfill's exposed edge and a two-foot cap will bury the dump to facilitate plant growth, which will help break the landfill down over the years and prevent it from becoming an eyesore.

Jones said Tempe has a three-year contract with Butterfield, which expires in Dec. 1995. He said the city will reconsider using the new Tri-City site when the Butterfield contract expires.

The banks of the river are expected to remain clear, Jones said, unless the state's weather takes a turn for the worse as it did in December and January with the heavy rains. If that should happen, flows through the Salt would have to reach virtual catastrophic proportions before more trash could escape the landfill.

Tri-City landfill officials said a newly-constructed dike can withstand river flows of more than 100,000 cubic feet per second (CFS). Currently, 14,500 CFS is flowing in the Salt as it makes its way past the landfill and through Tempe.

Flows at the height of flooding in January reached 124,000 CFS, but are not expected to reach that level again even as melting snows from the eastern part of the state make their way westward into metro Phoenix this spring, according to a SRP spokesman John Egan.

Egan said flows at their maximum will likely not exceed 60,000 CFS, and will only reach that level if a major tropical storm dumps warm rains on snows in eastern Arizona. Odds are, he said, that the snows will melt slowly and flows will remain at around 5,000 to 15,000 CFS. He said flows will continue for at least a month.

Reno becomes first female U.S. attorney general

Nation's top law enforcer approved by 98-0 count; tough issues lurk ahead

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Senate confirmed Janet Reno as attorney general on a vote of 98-0 Thursday, making her the first woman ever to occupy the post and providing fresh leadership to a Justice Department that was still headed by a Bush holdover.

"It's an extraordinary experience and I hope I do the women of America proud," Reno said at the White House, where Clinton asked her to stop by after the vote that finally filled out his Cabinet. "I'm elated," Clinton said. "That may be the only vote I carry 98-0 this year."

Applause broke out in the normally decorous Senate chamber when the vote was announced, making Reno the government's top law enforcement officer.

A host of problems, ranging from a terrorist bombing in New York to questions about the FBI director in her own department, await the 54-year-old south Florida prosecutor. She is expected to be sworn in next week.

Reno told reporters the federal government also may look into the Florida slaying of Dr. David Gunn, who was shot outside a women's clinic, reportedly by an abortion foe. A day earlier, the Justice Department had said it did not appear federal authorities had jurisdiction to investigate.

"That is a horrible and tragic crime and we want to do everything we can to pursue an appropriate federal response," Reno said. "We're going to explore it and do everything that is appropriate under the circumstances and move as carefully and as vigorously as possible on it consistent with a balance between federal and state efforts."

On the Senate floor, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said, "President Clinton should be commended for taking yet another step in opening new opportunities for women and minorities."

Reno's cakewalk through the constitutional advise-and-consent process closed the book a Clinton Cabinet-selection process that got under way not long after his election last November.

Clinton's difficulties filling the job of attorney general — the failed nomination of Zoe Baird and the withdrawal of federal judge Kimba Wood from consideration — have delayed any major policy reviews at the Justice Department.

"I would submit that President Clinton — albeit not the first time at bat — has hit a home run," said Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del.

The Senate confirmed Reno just a day after the Judiciary Committee approved her nomination. Normally, there must be a three-day waiting period before the full Senate can act, but that was waived.

The agency has been run, since Clinton's Jan. 20 inauguration, by Bush administration appointee Stuart Gerson. "I just saw Mr. Gerson's letter of resignation," Reno told reporters.

Reno, who will be the first Democrat to head the Justice Department in 12 years, is expected to make many policy changes.

But the standoff between federal agents and an armed religious cult in Texas and the FBI's investigation of the World Trade Center bombing will force her to focus her immediate attention on day-to-day enforcement of the nation's criminal laws.

Reno also will review an internal Justice Department report that raised questions about whether FBI Director William S. Sessions should remain in office.

The report, released as a parting shot by Attorney General William P. Barr, cites personal trips that Sessions and his wife took aboard FBI aircraft and the director's use of a "sham arrangement" to avoid paying taxes for use of a government limousine.

As overseer of the enforcement of immigration laws, Reno will be an important player in formulating administration policy on Haitian refugees.

While running for president, Bill Clinton condemned as inhumane the Bush administration policy of intercepting Haitians who try to sail to Florida in search of political asylum.

But as president, Clinton continued the Coast Guard blockade while searching for a long-range solution. The Justice Department defended the Bush policy before the Supreme Court.

Conservatives and liberals expect Reno to pursue more aggressive enforcement of civil rights and environmental protection laws.

"I would speculate there will be large changes rather than small," said Michael W. McConnell, a University of Chicago law professor who worked in the Justice Department during the Reagan administration.

Reno will formulate administration positions on crime legislation and gun control. Clinton has promised to sign the so-called Brady Bill, which would require a five-day waiting period for handgun purchases to give police a chance to screen out convicted felons.

Reno is expected to use the Justice Department's Office of Justice Programs to help finance local experiments for dealing with family violence and alternatives to jailing some offenders.

"As DA's go, she is far from a classic law-and-order DA," said Burt Neuborne, a New York University law professor and civil libertarian. "This is a DA who is championing (pre-trial) diversion, who worries about perpetrators and reforming them, who doesn't just worry about deterrence."

As evidenced by questioning during her confirmation hearing, Reno also will be drawn into the debate over limiting appeals that state prisoners can file in federal court to challenge their sentences.

UN aid gains access to Muslim enclaves

But efforts meet with violence, confusion

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUZLA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The United Nations gained access Thursday to embattled eastern Bosnia after days of bargaining with Serbs, but its rescue efforts apparently broke down in confusion and violence.

A radio report from the heart of the battle zone claimed villages were left in flames by Serb missiles and some mothers were forced to leave behind their children before fleeing into the hills. "Somebody has to stop this right now," said the appeal.

In Paris, meanwhile, international mediators confronted new obstacles in peace talks with Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic.

The U.N.'s top general in Bosnia tried to reach besieged Srebrenica after one of the vehicles he was traveling with hit a land mine. A long-planned U.N. convoy carrying 80 tons of emergency aid also was stalled outside the region, according to the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Belgrade.

U.N. vehicles reached another enclave,

Konjevic Polje, but could not complete their rescue mission after a dispute with Muslims.

Bosnian Serbs reportedly had granted permission for the evacuation of civilians after talks with the head of U.N. troops in Bosnia, Gen. Philippe Morillon. But they said men must be treated at Serb hospitals.

UNHCR spokeswoman Lyndall Sachs said a group of U.N. peacekeepers, most of them British soldiers, was detained Thursday by "hostile Muslims" in Konjevic Polje. The Muslims were believed upset by the Serb refusal to include wounded men in the evacuation, as U.N. officials had insisted.

A small relief team from Doctors Without Borders reached Srebrenica, where no aid convoy has reached in three months, but had to leave much of its medical supplies at Serb checkpoints, the humanitarian group said in Brussels, Belgium.

Thousands of people were fleeing to Srebrenica from Konjevic Polje, where scores were reported killed in an overnight attack. Refugees from previous fighting have already swelled Srebrenica's population to 60,000.

Bosnia radio reported the town was under attack "from all sides," and local officials were appealing to leaders in Sarajevo "to do everything possible to save thousands of lives."

The appeal, relayed by ham radio to Sarajevo, said Serb forces had fired incendiary missiles, igniting homes and giving residents little time to flee.

Reports relayed from the area could not be confirmed.

Mothers seeking to make the mountainous trek to Srebrenica sometimes couldn't carry along all their small children and were forced to choose only one, leaving others behind, the appeal said.

When refugees arrive in Srebrenica, the appeal said: "There's no place we can put them under a roof ... They end out on the streets."

Delighted residents of the besieged eastern Bosnian city of Gorazde tear at the covers of a U.S. airdrop package of food and supplies early Tuesday.

Clinton promises billions to ease pain of military budget reductions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — Looking to wean the nation off Cold War military budgets, President Clinton on Thursday promised help to people and places hurt by deep Pentagon cuts and a new round of base closings.

He also pledged to spend billions of dollars to promote civilian uses of military technology.

"The world's finest makers of swords can and will be the world's finest makers of plowshares," the president told enthusiastic workers at a Westinghouse Electronic Corp. plant, one day before the scheduled announcement of a new round of base closings.

Clinton plans to ease the pain of military cuts with a five-year "defense conversion" budget of $19.6 billion, a fraction of the $112 billion he plans to slash from the Pentagon budget during the same period.

Republicans said the conversion program won't provide enough help to victims of Pentagon cuts.

"I think it is a political effort to try to cover and make excuses for the incredible slashing that they're doing in this Pentagon, because they don't have the guts to cut anywhere else," said Rep. John Kasich, ranking Republican on the House Budget Committee.

"I don't pretend that this will be easy, and all of it will take some time," Clinton said. "But the choice we face is between bold action to build a stronger and safer and smarter America or continuing to cut defense with no appropriate response or with one that is too localized and too limited."

Clinton's first-year budget contains little new money, and most of the programs announced Thursday have been on his agenda since the presidential campaign. But the Westinghouse plant — with its electric cars and high-tech civilian radar system — was a fitting backdrop for unveiling his repackaged defense conversion program.

Nearly 4,500 plant employees have been laid off since 1991, but company officials said hundreds of jobs were saved when the firm began using its technology to create products for civilian and military uses.

Clinton wants to use federal money to help more defense-oriented companies develop similar "dual-use" technology programs.

Wowed by the high-tech projects on display at the plant, Clinton stared at the inside of an electric van. "I love it," he said.

President Clinton confers with Defense Secretary Les Aspin, right, during a tour and speech at the Westinghouse Electric Systems Group facility in Linthicum, Md. Thursday.

A twin-engine surveillance plane shown to Clinton was used by the FBI for two days this week to monitor the site of the cult standoff in Waco, Texas, company officials said.

The first money for Clinton's package comes from a $1.4 billion appropriation approved by the Congress last year but not spent by the Bush administration. Reiterating a promise he made last month, Clinton said he will take another $300 million from other federal programs to make $1.7 billion available for defense conversion in the fiscal year that ends Sept. 30.

Of the money to be spent this year, $845 million will go to "dual use" programs; $637 million will help workers, military personnel and communities hurt by defense cuts, and $185 million will be spent on new technology.

In the next five years, Clinton hopes to spend $5.2 billion on displaced workers and military personnel; $4.7 billion on dual-use programs, and $9.6 billion on new technology.

Included in the $637 million going to people and communities this year, $150 million is for training workers; $112 million is for severance pay and health insurance for members of the National Guard and reserves who leave the military; and $10 million is for early retirement of military personnel.

STATE PRESS Boos & Bravos

BOO — to Associated Students of ASU Elections Coordinator Andy Leonard, a well-meaning student government official who blundered big-time this week. Leonard heightened ASASU's image as a folly-ridden operation when he threw out petitions filed by several prospective candidates, one of which was only four signatures short of the needed 150. Reacting to criticism about his rigid policy, Leonard said, "We have to go by the laws set by the executive committee. I can't go fudging with that. I have to stick with the exact numbers." The problem is, if they stick with the original numbers, there may be no more ASASU for lack of participants.

BRAVO — to the large turnout of students at the state Capitol on Monday to urge legislators to boost university appropriations in the upcoming fiscal year. It looks as if their presence made an impact, as the lawmakers responded by returning to the schools $19 million in recommended budget cuts. It goes to show that when students marshal their collective voice and turn out in force to make it heard, things really do happen. Power to the students.

BOO — to the Tempe Police Department for its lethargic attempt to deal with crime near campus. In the latest incident, it took days before police grasped the real extent of assault victim Lang-Sheng Yun's injuries, at which time they finally upgraded the charges against his assailants. In addition, police dragged their feet on labeling the attack racially motivated, instead insisting that the victim was nothing more than a "classic victim," and that race was not a factor because no slurs were uttered in the attack. It's so good to know our men and women in blue are on the case.

BRAVO — to the Sunday Evening Society for remaining adamant in their pursuit of reform at ASASU. After the ASASU Supreme Court turned them away last week, the Society had every right to throw in their hats out of utter disgust for that group's filibustering. But instead, they took their case to the University administration, hoping that another avenue for change could be found. Let's hope they succeed.

BOO — to the engineers and planners of the $25 million Goldwater Center for Science and Engineering. It turns out that most of the building shakes when air conditioners are turned on, rendering useless some of the more sensitive research being conducted in the center. Nothing's more embarrassing than a new building that quivers when you turn on the A.C., except maybe a new engineering building that quivers when you turn on the A.C.

ASASU elections: a call to service

Imagine the student government of ASASU being overthrown by radical elements residing within the campus community.

Stay inside your dorm rooms and apartments, store up food and water, and stay close to your radios and televisions for the latest information.

This is what it would sound like if people became so unhappy with the way ASASU functions, that they resorted to violent and drastic means to get their point across.

However, it appears that hardly anyone cares about the student government.

But even worse than individuals not caring about the student government, is the fact that almost no one, except Andy Leonard and the candidates who gained the proper number of signatures to be placed on the ballot, want to make the effort to change anything.

When the initial candidate deadline left five colleges unrepresented in the Senate and one executive office empty, ASASU decided to extend the deadline.

After a large increase in the number of prospective candidates for ASASU, we see that as of Thursday, March 11, there are still senate positions left partially filled.

Nineteen candidates dropped out as a result of failing to turn in the number of required signatures to get on the elections ballot, which means that the same number of candidates are running as in years past. Andy Leonard, the ASASU elections coordinator is having a difficult time generating interest in the ASASU elections.

ASASU will be sponsoring one forum for the presidential candidates, two forums for the vice-presidential positions, executive, activities, and campus affairs.

This is good.

I think that if the students know the people who are running, then they would take an interest in the outcome of the election.

They may pick up the newspaper and see what the candidates stand for, they may stop one of the candidates and ask them a question and they may even vote in the general election on March 31 and April 1.

ASHAHED TRICHE

Columnist

But, if students don't come out to the forums and don't participate by voting in the elections, then in the beginning of the Fall 1993 semester, we will begin hearing the moaning and groaning of souls who claim that ASASU is unresponsive to students.

Even if you are someone who doesn't usually vote in national elections because you don't feel like your vote makes a difference, your vote in the ASASU elections actually does.

For example, in each of the past three years, between 1,500 and 2,500 ASU students voted in the ASASU elections.

That is a small minority of the campus population.

Now according to the Lesbian and Gay Academic Union, approximately 10 percent of the 43,000 students here at ASU are homosexuals.

So if all of those allegedly homosexual students vote in a block for the same candidate, 4,300 students would cast their vote in favor of one candidate. That number of votes would be enough to crush any competition in the ASU elections.

A candidate who could mobilize the gay vote would be unstoppable.

A candidate who could mobilize the students who live on campus would run away with the elections.

A candidate who could mobilize the people who would like for the tram to run all the way to the Memorial Union would be a powerful political force.

The individuals who have taken responsibility for their student government should be commended, however if they are simply seeking office to boost their resume, or satisfy their thirst for power and control (I won't mention any names) we should be ready to listen to the same old song from our ASASU friends.

We've had enough people who used ASASU offices for those reasons.

If any ASASU official doesn't do his job, doesn't attend senate meetings, doesn't introduce new legislation to the senate, doesn't listen to his constituents, then off with his or her head, figuratively speaking, of course.

Then in the future, if we find any more tyrants in the upper levels of ASASU, they will be overthrown like most governments that are unresponsive and ineffective.

Those are the options.

It can happen.

Editor:

This letter is to bring to your attention that the Muslim Students' Association of ASU condemns the bombing of the World Trade Center. At this early stage it has not been established who has committed this atrocity or what was the motive behind it.

Mr. Mohammed Salameh is allegedly the prime suspect in this bombing. We would like to comment that if in fact a Muslim individual or group had any role in the bombing, they acted on their own and against Islamic principles that assure the safety of civilians, even in times of war.

As Muslims, we are outraged by violence against civilians wherever it occurs: whether in New York or in other parts of the world. Therefore, we would strongly urge the State Press to stop using terms like "fundamentalist Muslims" or "Islamic fundamentalism" in association with hostile actions.

The labels wrongly imply that Islam condones hostile actions. This is analogous to labeling David Koresh's Branch Davidians a "Christian fundamentalist" group, and thus implicating all Christians of the ongoing crisis in Waco, Texas.

The State Press being an objective news source for faculty, staff, and students, should in fact remain so regardless of the nature of the news story.

Homosexuality not linked to genes

Editor:

I am writing in response to Robert Stratman's response, or should I say sermon. I disagree totally on his views.

To start, Stratman claims that homosexuality is genetic and he states "ask any professor in molecular biology or genetics." Mr. Stratman, there has of yet never been a study which has been conclusive in determining homosexuality to be genetic.

In fact, if you ask professors of psychology familiar with sexuality and learning theory, you will find that there are hundreds of studies indicating homosexuality is a learned process. Sometimes learned without conscious awareness.

In fact, you will find some of the studies conducted by gay experimental psychologists. If you are interested in some good literature, Hayden Library has a good book by Joseph Nicolosi titled, "Reparative therapy of the male Homosexual." I don't condemn or judge anyone or insist they change, but you should be aware that there are choices available that apparently you are not aware of. Which brings me to my second point.

You condemned Mr. Kerrigan for passing judgment on others, when you yourself were passing judgment on him. You denigrate all religions as cults. Do you realize that human beings have an innate drive to maintain consistency and a feeling of control in their lives?

Religion is one method humans have of achieving this. In any case, have you considered that perhaps religions don't tell people what to believe, but rather inform them of eternal truth? If you open yourself to different views, you could never know whether the stories and "myths" from thousands of years ago should affect what you do today.

Has human nature changed so drastically from thousands of years ago? In the billions of years the earth has existed and in which man has been on the earth, a thousand years is nothing on the evolutionary schema. So, Robert, stop passing judgment on people due to some mind controlling views and think before you write next time.

Constructive dissent aids diversity

Editor:

I read Mr. Grundon's March 5 column with interest. One of Mr. Grundon's central points is certainly correct: the vast majority of members of the campus community — students, staff, faculty and police — are not all "brutal racists." Moreover, I am sure that Mr. Grundon's theory of individual rights will find support among many members of our campus community.

However, I found some assertions made by Mr. Grundon to be factually misleading. Indeed, I have observed that issues of free speech, political correctness and multiculturalism are so emotionally charged that critics often succumb to the temptation of bending the facts to make a point. That is unfortunate, because our most provocative issues call for cool heads, clear thinking and a careful use of facts.

For example, Mr. Grundon criticizes Art Carter and the Campus Environment Team for failing to support Mr. Grundon's theory of individual rights in an upcoming forum. Quite the contrary, Tim Tong, chairman of the CET, has invited Mr. Grundon to submit a proposal for inclusion in the forum.

On March 1, I had breakfast with Timothy Tong and Art Carter. At that breakfast, Mr. Tong told me that he had already spoken with Mr. Grundon about such a proposal. Moreover, all at the table readily agreed that a presentation opposing multiculturalism would be consistent with academic freedom and could be a constructive addition to the forum.

That doesn't mean that any proposal submitted by Mr. Grundon would be automatically sponsored by the CET or any other organization. However, the point is that the CET chair has committed himself to a test of educational quality and not political exclusion.

Mr. Grundon also had some less than glowing comments about the black students in the Alpha Drive incident. However, the official DPS report makes it clear that the four black students involved in the major brawl that night were victims of mistaken identity and were taken into custody partly "for their own protection." Although the U.S. Justice Department cleared the DPS of wrongdoing, it is not surprising that the black students who were attacked, who fought back and who were then taken into custody felt unfairly singled out.

With respect to Mr. Grundon's comment about fraternity members, I don't know what the "average fraternity guy" stands for, but I have worked with some fraternity members who made great efforts to build mutual respect between men and women and between members of different cultures.

Having said this, I was gratified to read Mr. Grundon's last line in which he assures us that we have not heard the last from him. That's great because debates about multiculturalism and individual freedom are healthy for our campus. We should all strive to advance the debate fairly and accurately.

Davidians talk to Bacchus

Looking up from his newspaper, Slat Grobnik shook his head and said, "You ever wonder if God has a drinking problem?"

A what?

"You know, if he goes on benders once in a while, really gets tanked up."

No, I have never wondered about that or given it a passing thought, and I don't think it is an appropriate topic of conversation. I don't even know why you would ask such a question.

"OK, I'll tell you why. I'm reading the paper about this guy in Texas who shot it out with the federal agents."

Yes, the leader of the Branch Davidians, a rather violent religious sect. What about him?

"Well, he was going to surrender. But then he said he talked to God and God told him not to, so he's going to stonewall it for a while."

What does that have to do with your question about God's drinking habits?

"Lemme go on. Now I look at another story in the paper, and I read about people who are worried about the national debt. So some of them are sending their own money to Washington to help cut it."

Yes, one can make a donation of that kind. So?

"So this. There's this woman in North Carolina, and she's putting the arm on her friends to send in some dough, and you know why she's doing it?"

A misguided sense of patriotism, I assume.

"No, she's in some religious group and she says, here, I'll read it to you, she says, 'The Lord talked to me about it and I asked what should I do, and that's what he told me to do.' Now, I ask you, can you picture that?"

Picture what?

"God looking down and telling some woman in North Carolina: 'I know you and your friends work hard for your money, but here's what I want you to do. Everybody chip in a few bucks and send it to Washington to reduce the deficit so Congress don't have to cut out some of the swindle projects they put in for their lobbyist pals.' Does that sound like something somebody sober would say?"

You should put your questions to an expert on such matters — a theologian or maybe a bartender.

"And if he was sober, would God say to that guy in Texas: 'Look, young man, don't surrender to those federal agents. You got enough good ammo to hold them off for another week, so do it.'"

Obviously, that would not be rational advice. But you can't attribute two separate incidents to heavenly imbibing.

"I'm not. But it's part of a pattern. I look at the news, and I see people all over the world doing crazy things because they say God wants them to. You got Israel and the Arabs, and both sides say God is on their side. Then you look at the countries around India, and they're going at each other because they say God wants 'em to do it. Same thing in Bosnia. And you're saying you don't see a pattern?"

What kind of pattern?

"A guy gets loaded, and the next day he says, 'Oh, boy, did I say that? I told them to have a war? I told 'em to shoot it out with the feds? I told them to send their money to Washington? I think I better go on the wagon.' Except with God, time not being too important when you got eternity to play with, the binge could last 50 years before the hangover sets in."

I suppose if you believe all the individuals, the religions and the nations that attribute their action to God, one might think that booze could be the problem. Or even a malicious sense of humor. But I really doubt it.

"Well, it's just something to think about. See, there was a time when I thought that maybe God was a bookie."

A what?

"A bookie. You know, someone who takes bets."

What gave you that idea?

"You mean you never noticed? All you had to do was watch TV and every time somebody would win a championship, the star of the game would go on TV and say something: 'I guess the good Lord wanted me to score that touchdown.' Or some fighter would knock head halfway to the balcony and then he'd say, 'I just trusted in God.' So I started thinking, why would God want one big bunch of clunks to beat another bunch of clunks? Or one palooka to deck another palooka? And the only thing I could figure was that God was making book and wanted to cover the spread or something."

That sounds unlikely.

"I know, because every bookie I know stays sober because he's got to be careful with his odds. So if God is a boozier, he can't be a bookie or he'd lose a bundle."

Look, I don't think either of your theories are credible. Nor would most theologians.

"Why not?"

Because the more reputable ones believe that God lets us determine our own destinies.

"You mean God is sort of an innocent bystander?"

I suppose that is one way to put it, yes.

"Then I'm right about God being a boozier after all."

What makes you think that?

"Because sitting up there watching what goes on down here would be enough to drive anyone to drink."

Government takes loss selling Keating's ranch

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A water-rich desert ranch once owned by Charles Keating Jr.'s Lincoln Savings sold for $3.2 million, 9.3 percent of its listed value at the federal agency that inherited the failed Irvine-based thrift.

The 13,542-acre Crowder Water Ranch is about 100 miles west of Phoenix in Arizona's La Paz County, where land once fetched high prices from people seeking rights to underground water.

The high prices sank as Arizona moved toward barring cities from buying rural land for water rights, a law that passed in 1991.

The Resolution Trust Corp., the cleanup agency for failed S&Ls, said Wednesday that Crowder was purchased by William and Carol Cramer of Anaheim.

The $3.2 million sales price was $31.2 million less than its value as carried on the RTC's books. And it was only about 3.5 percent of what Keating once maintained the property was worth.

Crowder Water Ranch figured prominently in Keating's federal trial, which ended with his conviction on 73 racketeering, fraud and conspiracy counts in January. Crowder was one of several properties whose value Keating was accused of inflating through sham sales, kickbacks and side deals.

Lincoln's Amcor Investments subsidiary sold a one-third interest in the ranch on September 30, 1986, to Keating protege C.V. "Jim" Nalley III, for $20 million. Keating had spent just $11.7 million assembling the entire property in 1985 and 1986. Amcor and Lincoln booked a $15.2 million gain.

To reach the $20 million, Nalley paid $5 million and borrowed $15 million from Lincoln.

The same day, Lincoln subsidiaries bought Nalley's stock in a real estate company for $3.5 million — cash prosecutors said went straight into his down payment. Lincoln later indirectly loaned him the final $1.5 million, they said.

Keating allegedly promised secretly that Nalley would never have to pay interest on the $15 million note, and to buy out his interest at a profit later.

Nalley never made a cash interest payment, agreeing instead to cut his stake in Crowder. In January 1989, when values for Arizona real estate and especially water ranches were plunging, Keating bought Nalley's remaining 25 percent stake for $7.5 million and cancellation of the $15 million note.

That would suggest a total value for Crowder of $90 million or more — 28 times its purchase price by the Anaheim couple.

Lincoln was seized 3/4 months after Keating bought out Nalley. Regulators estimated the bailout cost to taxpayers at $2.6 billion.

Keating, who headed Lincoln's parent firm, American Continental Corp. of Phoenix, is serving a 10-year sentence on California state fraud charges. Sentencing on his federal conviction is scheduled for April 26 in Los Angeles federal court.

He is being held at a federal prison in Tucson, Ariz., where he is preparing to defend himself against a civil racketeering lawsuit brought by the RTC.

POLICE REPORT

ASU police reported the following incidents on Thursday:

- A male student reported his license plate stolen from his vehicle while it was behind 714 Alpha Drive. Loss is $10.
- A male student told police someone stole the stereo from his car while it was parked in Lot 51. Loss is $1,200.
- A male employee said he lost one key belonging to the University. Loss is $5.
- A white 1987 Mazda B-2000 truck was stolen while it was parked in Lot 11. Loss is $4,000.
- Police approached a male not affiliated with the University while he was riding his skateboard near the Business Administration Building. He was advised of ASU trespassing policies and left the area.
- A male not affiliated with the University was injured while playing basketball at the Student Recreation Center. The Tempe Fire Department treated the subject at the scene. He was transported to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital by a friend.
- A student had his black Diamondback Outlook bicycle stolen from outside his room at 414 Adelphi Drive, where it was left unsecured. Loss is $300.
- A man not affiliated with ASU was approached on West

Lawn while creating a disturbance at a rally. The subject left the area.

• The intrusion alarm was activated at the Hayden Library by custodial error. The building was secure and the alarm later reset.

• A female not affiliated with the school was arrested, cited, and released for driving on a suspended license at Rural and Broadway Roads.

Tempe police reported the following incidents on Thursday:

• A woman was arrested for shoplifting from the WalMart, 1380 W. Elliot Road. Store security saw the woman shove $7.78 worth of sunflower seeds down the front of her pants. The woman told officers she forgot her wallet, so she took them.

• Police were called to the Apache Hilton, 2091 E. Apache Blvd, for a robbery. Two roommates were sitting in the parking lot and left the door to their room open slightly. Someone entered and exited the door with $100 worth of merchandise. The two men were in the parking lot the whole time.

Campbell, Basha, ASU President Lattie Coor and Steve Jordan, deputy executive director for financing and planning for the regents.

ASA also recommended that state legislatures appropriate more funds to Arizona's three public universities. In January, Symington recommended a $2.2-million cut in ASU funding and the Joint Legislative Budget Committee suggested a $2.3 million cut. That is $23.2 million less than ASA is requesting.

Both proposals are only guidelines for the finalized fiscal year 1994 budget. The Legislature will submit its budget to Symington on Tuesday.

The Council of Presidents for the Board of Regents appointed a workgroup to outline alternatives for tuition rates and the group recommended tuition increases in the range of $100 to $500, based on out-of-state enrollment figures, which could bring in an extra $6.8-million to $23.2-million increase in gross revenue.

Jordan justified the tuition increases by stating ASU was reported the sixth lowest in tuition rates in the workgroup report.

Mark Courtney told the regents that ASU's tuition can't be compared to the national average because the report doesn't account for the cost of living.

"In my mind, it's inappropriate to justify an increase by saying the national average is much higher," Courtney said. "Students work their tails off to pay for tuition. It's not feasible to work and maintain a B average."

Editor's note: It was incorrectly reported in Wednesday's edition that the tuition meeting was to occur that evening. The State Press regrets the error.

tion of the tuition waivers. They plan to take their case to the Arizona Board of Regents as early as next week.

McGaw added that the $1,000 increase is a product of last year's legislative session and has no relation to merit pay increases.

The Arizona Legislature approved a $1,000 pay raise for all state employees last year, but budget restraints have prevented ASU from fully implementing the raise. The first $250 of the raise will be added in April, but there are no set plans for the remainder.

"Annualization is simply financing a decision made the previous year," McGaw said.

"There is no proposal for a pay increase on the table at the Legislature, and I see no sign that there will be this year," Coor said.

Fred Amaro, a member of the Classified Staff Council, protested the possibility of losing his tuition waiver at a rally for higher education this week and called Hermon's announcement a "victory," but insufficient without a commitment to provide for salary increases.

Amaro is using his tuition waiver to earn a degree in sociology and said its revocation would have been a pay cut. Currently, the tuition waiver allows faculty and staff to enroll in six credit hours per semester for a $28 registration fee.

McGaw and Amaro are planning an on-campus rally for April Fool's Day to protest the lack of salary increases over the last five years. They expect support from the administration.

"Lattie has told us that the salary issue is his number-one priority in lobbying the Legislature," Amaro said.

and he only told his parents and brothers and sisters about it a few hours before he appeared on the show. He said his family understands and accepts him for who he is, yet he has received a variety of feelings from friends.

"I am not necessarily a gay man, I am a man who happens to be gay," Panaccia said. "I am no different than any other man, I just have an attraction to the same gender which is much more profound." He said it is more than physical attraction, and he is not a "sexual predator."

Panaccia is in the middle of a lawsuit against the Air Force, charging that the gay ban is unconstitutional.

"The ban is not based on any kind of empirical data and basic Pentagon policies are based on empirical data," he said. "This ban is based on prejudice." He said although there are some prejudiced policies in the military based on physical limitations, being gay is by no means a "physical limitation."

"Being gay is not a limit, being gay is a state of being, it is not something you can change," he said.

He said with or without the ban there are still thousands of gay men and women in the military, and there always will be.

Mark Freeze, Panaccia's attorney, said within the next week they will be filing a motion for summary judgement at the Arizona Federal District Court. He said this will either bring the case to court or have the judge make a court ruling.

"We are asking the judge to rule that the ban is unconstitutional," Freeze said.

He said with the Clinton Administration opposing the ban, there is a possibility that they will get the ruling they desire.

"Money is not what we are after," Freeze said. "We are after a decision saying (the ban) is unconstitutional and a order reinstating Tom in the Air Force."

PEOPLE

By SCOTT WILLIAMS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Is there hope for Indiana Jones on television?

The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles returns from hiatus as The ABC Saturday Night Movie in a gorgeous, two-hour special titled, Indiana Jones and the Mystery of the Blues.

It's set in Chicago's early 1920s, when war-weary young Indiana is working his way through the University of Chicago and plunges straight into the heart of the Jazz Age, Prohibition and the Roaring '20s.

The young man Indiana (Sean Patrick Flanery) is working as a waiter in a bistro where clarinetist Sidney Bechet's jazz band headlines. Indiana loves jazz, and we even get to hear the racy classic, Handyman.

During the first hour, the Creole jazzman Bechet (Jeffrey Wright) reluctantly befriends young Indy, who learns the hard way about racial segregation. We tend to expect that kind of didacticism in historical drama.

Young Indiana goes one better, though, letting Bechet and his sidemen instruct "Jonesy" in the fundamentals of jazz — what another character, a contemptuous whitebread fratboy, dismisses as "brothel music."

Bechet calls for Turkey in the Straw and takes the traditional reel through the changes, first in straight time, then in Afro-Cuban style, then ragtime, Dixieland and finally swinging elegantly into New Orleans jazz.

"You got to know exactly where you are in the music," a sideman (Damon Whitaker) tells Indiana, "and you got to know where everybody else is, too." That's probably the single most important insight a non-musician can get about jazz improvisation. Indy's musical education is an integral part of the story line.

This kind of context, where "race music" is juxtaposed with the racist, corrupt Chicago of the 1920s, is a cultural message that transends commercial TV. Anyone could understand it.

The second hour's tone is lighter, bringing us the "mystery of the blues" and showcasing Indiana's nerdy college roommate, Eliot Ness (Frederick Weller) — yes, THAT Ness — and Indy's war correspondent pal, Ernie Hemingway (Jay Underwood). Yes, THAT Hemingway.

The three young men tear up Chicago when Indy's boss is killed in an apparent gangland hit, and there's an exciting shoot-'em-up and chase sequence and a wonderfully sneaky, surprise payoff for viewers young and old.

Saturday's special also features Harrison Ford, the mature Indiana of the films, who is trying to protect a precious Indian artifact from thieves. Ford's is a cameo role, but it's nice to see his blessing on the TV series.

The puzzle of The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles is that its predecessor, the George Lucas-produced film series, has been box office magic since Raiders of the Lost Ark in 1981.

On TV, however, young Indiana and executive producer Lucas have failed to find a big audience, despite the considerable time, talent, money and loving care that has been lavished on the series since its debut just over a year ago.

Why? Could The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles be too good for television?

In a perverse way, yes. Young Indiana may fail because it is too demanding of its viewers.

Americans are not simpletons, but Lucas' series requires them to be tuned in to the actual people and events that have created the 20th century. Young Indiana isn't about television and contains no references to TV culture.

Bruins block tourney hopes

UCLA pulls away in game's final moments; cold shooting hurts ASU

By BRIAN CHARLES
STATE PRESS

In a hard-fought battle that see-sawed back and forth the entire evening, the ASU men's basketball team might have seen their NCAA possibilities vanish Thursday night in a 77-74 loss to the UCLA Bruins at the University Activity Center.

The game came down to the final seconds, but the Sun Devils (17-9 overall, 10-7 Pac-10) were unable to capitalize on a UCLA turnover, as pressure from the Bruin defense did not allow ASU to get off the tying shot.

"It was a real hard-fought game," Sun Devil coach Bill Frieder said. "I thought our kids played well. We didn't play particularly well at certain times. We had our chances to extend and put the game away in the second half — we just didn't get it done."

Cold shooting and missed lay-ups were major problems for the Sun Devils. ASU sharpshooter Stevin Smith, the Pac-10's leading scorer, was unable to get on track, connecting on only four of 17 shots from the field and including four of 15 from three-point land. Smith finished with a team-high 16 points.

As a team, the Sun Devils shot 33 percent from the floor in the second half.

"We just didn't get it done," Frieder added. "The bottom line is that down the stretch, we didn't knock down the big baskets we had to knock in. In big games, you have to have your shooter shoot well, and we didn't have it."

The Sun Devils started the game at a much slower and more controlled pace than their usual style dictates, as they used a good portion of the shot clock to set up shots. Freshman Ron Riley got the Sun Devils going early, hitting a jumper and a three-pointer early.

But the Bruins (21-9, 11-6) opened up a 23-17 lead at the eight-minute mark, keyed by Bruin guard Shon Tarver.

ASU would then go on their first big run of the night, reeling off 11 unanswered points to take a 28-23 lead.

The Bruins then went on their own run, putting down eight points in a row to regain the lead. Bruin point guard Tyus Edney then extended the Bruins' lead to 36-32 at halftime with a three-pointer in the closing seconds.

In the second half, a technical foul on coach Jim Harrick got ASU going. After a second technical on Harrick resulting in

Women achieve upset triumph

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

The ASU women's basketball team upset No. 15 USC 64-55 Thursday night at the Los Angeles Sports Arena.

After Thursday night's action, the Sun Devils (17-9 overall, 10-7 Pac-10) are now tied for third place in the Pac-10 with Washington, with California one game behind in fourth.

The victory is crucial toward ASU's hopes of returning to the NCAA Tournament. UW and Cal are competing with the Sun Devils for two tournament bids, assuming that the Pac-10 receives four bids and conference leaders Stanford and USC will each receive one.

ASU was led by guard Stacey Johnson, who scored 21 points to lead all scorers.

Key to the win was fouls, as ASU stayed out of foul trouble, while getting Trojan center Lisa Leslie to foul out after 29 minutes of play.

The Sun Devils travel to Westwood to take on UCLA (12-14, 7-10) Saturday afternoon. After that contest, ASU waits for the Tournament seedings to be announced at 4:30 p.m. on Sunday afternoon.

Wrestlers' quest for national title about to peak

By JAKE BATSELL
STATE PRESS

Next week's NCAA Championships will signify a multitude of firsts for the ASU wrestling team.

Coach Lee Roy Smith will be coaching his first collegiate championship event. Sun Devils Shawn Charles and Ray Miller are attempting to be ASU's first four-time All-Americans. Five ASU wrestlers will be making their first trips to the national meet.

But the fifth-ranked Sun Devils bear no uncertainty in their first objective for the three-day event, which will take place March 18-20 at Iowa State University in Ames, Iowa. They want to capture a national title.

"Everything that we've done thus far has been to be at our best and to do our best at the NCAA Championships," Smith said. "I believe we're ready to put it all on the line."

Eight Sun Devils will compete in the tournament: Charles (126 pounds), Marco Sanchez (134), Steve St. John (142), Jeff Theiler (150), Markus Mollica (158), Miller (167), Pat Lynch (177) and Dan Henderson (190).

"Team-wise, I believe that all eight members are prepared to contribute to a team championship," Smith said. "They're prepared and they're healthy."

Charles and Miller — both seniors ranked tops in their respective weight classes — have attained All-America status each of the past three years. And while both said they would welcome becoming ASU's first four-time All-Americans, individual honors aren't their primary focus.

"I think about (becoming a four-time All-American), but my long-term and all-time goal is to win a national title," Charles said. "If everybody goes out there and takes care of their job and wrestles to their ability, I think that we could come out with the NCAA title."

Trojans invade Packard

By GREG SEXTON
STATE PRESS

After going winless in four of its last seven contests, the 15th-ranked ASU baseball team will look for redemption against No. 21 USC tonight through Sunday in a three-game series at Packard Stadium.

Tonight's game is scheduled to start at 7 p.m., while the Saturday and Sunday games are both slated for 1 p.m.

There is no single explanation for the rut the Sun Devils (16-7-1 overall, 2-3-1 conference) now find themselves in, but in their past two match-ups — one three game set at the University of California and a single game earlier this week against Notre Dame — ASU has been abnormally dry at the plate, and errors have prevalent in the ASU defense.

Up until the Cal series, in which the Sun Devils dropped two and tied the last, ASU had been hitting .350. Since then, the team average has dropped to .329.

"I think, obviously, we are not swinging the bat like we were earlier in the season," said ASU coach Jim Brock. "We got off to a great start, but of late we haven't been as productive."

Brock attributed the meager Cal series to poor weather and a lack of pregame workouts. The final game against the Golden Bears was called due to darkness and incoming fog. During the Notre Dame loss, the Sun Devils were slipping in the field and couldn't combat the Fighting Irish stellar pitching.

USC (8-11, 3-3) will present its own hurdles for ASU. Namely, junior right handed pitcher Grant Vermillion (1-1, 2.35 ERA). The Trojans also have two throwers that boost decent numbers — Mike Collett and Tony Nieto.

At the plate the Sun Devils will have to tame USC catcher Casey Burrill, who is hitting .493 and has tagged eight home runs and 21 RBI. Also on fire at the plate is shortstop Gabe Alvarez, who is swinging .406 with 3 bombs and 15 assists.

"They have an all-world player in Alvarez and we know Burrill is hitting extremely well," Brock said.

But ASU will counter with its own plate frenzy. Leading the Sun Devils is junior catcher Paul LoDuca (.413) and Doug Newstrom (.398). On the mound for ASU, Brock will stick with the rotation of southpaw Kevin Rawitzer (2-1, 2.17 ERA), Marc Barcelo (5-1, 2.01) and Newstrom (1-0, 4.00).

Big weekend in store for ASU gymnastics

Women aspiring for Pac-10 crown

BY SHAUN RACHAU
STATE PRESS

ASU women's gymnastics coach John Spini will have all his weapons assembled with hopes of winning a conference championship when the Sun Devils compete in the Pac-10 Championship tonight in Palo Alto, Calif.

Spini and the sixth-ranked Sun Devils will try to win their first conference championship since 1986, when ASU captured the Pac-10's and went on to finish second at the NCAA Championships.

"We would like to win a conference championship," Spini said. "We are going up there to do just that."

All year, the current Sun Devil team has drawn comparisons to the 1986 team because of its depth in talent. The Sun Devils have been competing four quality all-arounders during most of the season, and three women have contributed a total of four perfect scores in their routines. Sophomore Tina Brinkman and freshman Jenny Ester have each scored a 10.00, with sophomore Dana Lister accomplishing the feat twice on balance beam.

"We are looking good with our depth chart and looking good with the team's attitude going into (tonight's) meet," Spini said.

Spini said this is the best the Sun Devils (8-1) have looked all year, because he has been resting certain women the past two weeks in order to compete tonight.

Against Florida two weeks ago, Spini only competed Brinkman in a few events, taking her out of the all-around because she needed rest. Last week at Stanford, Spini kept Brinkman, Ester and freshman Katie Freeland out of the all-around, leaving junior Debbi Bryan as the only all-arounder.

By resting Brinkman, Ester and Freeland, Spini has been frequently changing the lineup. But unlike 1986, when Spini said apprehension occurred among teammates when he changed the lineup, there have been no hard feelings between the women this season.

"I've pulled people in and out of lineups without anyone getting upset," Spini said. "I'm sure people want to compete, but they sure haven't made a big deal about it. They have stepped up when I have needed them."

One move Spini has made in the lineup has been adding freshman Jennifer McKenna on balance beam.

McKenna competed for the first time last week after being out all season because of an ankle injury. She scored a 9.40 in her beam routine and said she hopes to do better tonight.

"I hope I get better than a 9.40," McKenna said. "I won't worry about the pressure though. I know the team is always behind me because I am just coming back."

Although Spini believes the Sun Devils have a shot at winning the Pac-10 championship, he knows Oregon State, UofA and UCLA will also have a shot.

"We will not be able to use the excuse of somebody being banged up (if ASU doesn't win it)," Spini said. "I think any four of the teams can win on any given day."

Men's squad entertains Illinois

BY JAKE BATSELL
STATE PRESS

Students may have their last chance tonight to see the ASU men's gymnastics team in action, as the Sun Devils host Illinois at 7:30 p.m. at the University Activity Center.

Tonight's meet and the home finale on March 19 against Air Force will be the final matches in the UAC for the Sun Devils. The men's gymnastics program will be eliminated from the athletic department after this season, along with archery and badminton.

ASU coach Don Robinson said the Fighting Illini should pose a formidable test for his Sun Devils.

"Illinois already has beaten us once at the UCLA Invitational," Robinson said. "But I think we can beat them. We score about the same as they do."

Softball drops doubleheader

BY MICHAEL BRANOM
STATE PRESS

The 19th-ranked ASU softball team suffered a doubleheader sweep at the hands of non-conference opponent Northern Illinois Thursday night at Sun Devil Club Stadium.

The Sun Devils fell 5-4 in the first game, as the Huskies took advantage of an off-night from ASU starting pitcher Amber Tintsman.

In the nightcap, Northern Illinois won 2-1 behind a strong pitching performance by Tracy Meade, who out-dueled Sun Devil starter Mona Nard.

In the first contest, Tintsman had an uncharacteristically shaky outing, allowing five runs, three earned, on nine hits and two walks in 6 innings pitched.

After ASU (10-10) scored three runs in the first inning of the opener, it was limited to two runs and nine hits over the next thirteen frames.

"The first game, first inning, we have intensity, then we get runs and think it is easy and lose our intensity," ASU coach Linda Wells said. "Later, when we are trying to fight back and get it back, you can't play in and out of a game like that."

"We struggled a little with the bat," short-stop Tammy Lohmann said. "We would get on, but we could never bring that person around."

Track teams head for indoor finals

BY SHAUN RACHAU
STATE PRESS

ASU track and field coach Len Braxton knows what it will take for the men's and women's teams to win a national championship today at the NCAA Indoor Championships in Indianapolis.

Although the Sun Devils will bring one of the largest teams to Indianapolis, qualifying 12 individuals overall, Braxton knows that quantity will not necessarily win ASU the national championship.

"You don't need a lot of people at this meet," Braxton said. "You need quality. You can win the meet with 30-40 points."

Last year at the Indoor Championships, Stanford's women's team won the national championship with 28 points, after two women finished second in their events.

"It doesn't take a lot of points to win this thing because it is so spread out," Braxton said. "If you have those individuals that rise to the occasion, you will do well."

For the women's team, Braxton believes Kim Toney and Sharett Garcia — qualifiers in the 800-meter run — both have a shot at becoming national champions in their event. Toney and Garcia are ranked seventh and eighth in the nation, respectively.

The women's 1600-meter relay team also has a chance at a national title. The team, comprised of Shanequa Campbell, Janice Nichols, Tayo Akinremi and Lade Akinremi, is currently ranked fourth in the nation and its best run has been 38.67 seconds. The best run in the nation is 38.10 seconds.

According to Braxton, the men's team has two chances at winning national championships in Nick Hysong (pole vault) and Gabe Beechum (high jump).

Hysong held the nation's highest pole vault mark until last weekend, when two people jumped higher.

ASU wrestler Shawn Charles, the top-ranked wrestler in the country at 126 pounds, is eyeing a national title. He and 167-pounder Ray Miller could become ASU's first four-time All-Americans.

Miller agreed.

"The All-American thing, I think, for me and Shawn is something that neither one of us have really considered at this point, because we're past that stage," he said. "The only thing me and Shawn are looking for right now is a (team) national title. Anything less would be a disappointment."

Challenging the Sun Devils will be Penn State, Nebraska, Iowa and Iowa State, who take up the top four rankings in the nation. Smith also labeled Ohio State as a primary foe.

ASU boasts a pair of fifth-ranked wrestlers in Mollica and Lynch, while Sanchez is ranked seventh in his weight class.

The Sun Devils took the Pac-10 Championship on Feb. 1. Smith said the conference title should give ASU a boost in confidence against the stellar field of opponents.

"We're drawing not only on the conference championship, but the whole year, in the fact that everything we've done all year is going to pay off for us now," Smith said.

Sanchez, who took third at the NCAA's last season, said the Sun Devils are on track for a peak performance at the NCAA's.

"We've been working systematically at that goal — real systematically, like a machine," he said. "We've got all eight parts going, it doesn't look like any parts are breaking down, and the training is going excellent, so we're in a position to do it."

Miller said he has no doubts that the Sun Devils can bring home a national crown.

"They (other teams) have been in position all year, but we're moving up," Miller said.

"Yeah, we have a hell of a shot at it. And I mean that sincerely."

Weekend water action plentiful

BY SCOTT DAVIS
STATE PRESS

While most ASU students will be relaxing by a pool for Spring Break, the ASU men's and women's swimming teams will be hard at work getting ready for the NCAA Championships.

The men's squad will be the first to go into action, when they take part in the Sun Devil Qualifier today at the Mona Plummer Aquatic Center at 3 p.m. The Sun Devils will be attempting to qualify members for the upcoming NCAA Championships in Indianapolis, which take place from March 25-27.

The ASU women's swimming team will be in Minnesota competing in its NCAA Championships over the break. The Sun Devils will be at Minnesota from March 18-20.

The ASU diving team will also be in action over Spring Break. The men's and women's teams will host the Zone E NCAA Diving Championships at MPAC this weekend.

The men and women will be competing against 16 other schools in a last effort to qualify for the NCAA Championships. Stanford, UCLA and UofA are expected to offer the toughest competition.

USC, UCLA visit Tempe for women's tennis rematch

BY SCOTT DAVIS
STATE PRESS

The ASU women's tennis team will start the second half of its Pac-10 season this weekend with match-ups against USC and UCLA today and tomorrow at the Whiteman Tennis Center.

The Sun Devils (8-5 overall, 1-3 Pac-10) will face off against USC today at 1:30 p.m., before going head-to-head with UCLA tomorrow at noon.

ASU lost to both schools earlier in the season, and will be the underdogs once again. ASU coach Sheila McInerney said her squad will have to play tough in order to achieve victory.

"We have to go out there and play well," McInerney said. "If we play well, we have a chance to win both matches."

The Sun Devils will depend on a strong home court advantage over the weekend. They have played exceptionally well at home this year, losing only once to top-ranked Stanford. McInerney said that staying at the WTC has its advantages.

"When you don't have to travel, there are a lot of advantages," McInerney said. "We normally play better at home. I think most teams do."

USC is coming to ASU with an impressive 9-1 record. They beat the Sun Devils in their prior meeting, 5-4 on Feb. 15. The Trojans will be led by freshman Suzanne Italiano and sophomore Petra Schmitt. Italiano is currently ranked 31st and Schmitt is ranked 69th.

UCLA will come into Tempe with a 5-5 record and a young and talented team. The Bruins will depend on the leadership of freshman Keri Phebus. Phebus is ranked 12th in singles and 23rd in doubles. She plays doubles with another freshman, Jane Chi.

Kori Davidson, ASU's top singles player, will accept the duty of taking on Phebus. Davidson, ranked 45th in singles, lost her previous encounter with Phebus in straight sets, 7-5, 6-1. Davidson said she expects to beat her opponent this time around.

"I think I can beat her if I hit my shots well," Davidson said. "Last time, I felt I couldn't beat her. I didn't have much confidence."

The Sun Devils are coming off of two shutout victories over Washington and UNLV last weekend. This weekend's match-ups will offer much stronger competition. McInerney said the team is confident for the matches.

"They're excited and ready for the weekend," McInerney said. "We've beaten these teams before."

Devils

his ejection from the game, the Sun Devils went on a 22-10 run and opened up an eight-point lead.

The Bruins shot an incredible 68 percent from the floor in the second half, and took the lead for good from the Sun Devils with 2:37 left to play.

ASU was forced to play catch-up the rest of the way. After forward Dwayne Fontana hit a lay-up and closed to within three, the Bruins gave ASU an opportunity to tie the game after a pass went off Bruin forward Mitchell Butler's leg.

The Sun Devils then got the ball back with 16 seconds left to play, but it would end up being a play that will haunt ASU for some time. As Smith brought the ball up court, Petruska got free, deflecting Smith's pass to Wun Versher.

As players from both teams hit the floor, Versher eventually came up with the ball, but time had expired before he could get a shot off.

"The pass was there," Versher said. "I just couldn't get my hands on it - it got away from me. I wasn't expecting the pass, I thought Hedake (Smith) was going to set up for the three."

Despite not having their coach on the bench, UCLA were able to execute their game, a fact that Bruin assistant coach Mark Gottfried said was the key to their win.

"All five must play for us to be effective," Gottfried said. "And all five played tonight. We have great players led by Tyus Edney, who is the coach on the floor. This shows what kind of a team this is and what kind of a job Coach Harrick has done."

Edney was able to produce despite ASU applying pressure on him all night. He finished the night with 17 points and four assists. Edney also was a perfect four of four from the free throw line.

ARIES

(Mar. 21 to Apr. 19)

A private talk bodes well for your financial interests. Business progress is assured now. Social life is favored tonight, but you may be disappointed in a friend.

TAURUS

(Apr. 20 to May 20)

Try not to let a business worry keep you from enjoying today's lovely chances for happy get-togethers with friends and meaningful moments with a loving tie.

GEMINI

(May 21 to June 20)

Give others enough time to mull over what you have to say now. Dealings with those in authority go well, but you may not get immediate feedback. Be patient.

CANCER

(June 21 to July 22)

Enjoying something new in the way of entertainment puts new life into your relationship. Try not to dwell on a financial concern. Weekend getaways are favored.

LEO

(July 23 to Aug. 22)

A partner may not be in the best of moods today. Discussions relating to property, family and financial interests are especially favored now.

VIRGO

(Aug. 23 to Sept. 22)

Delays at work could get you down, but an impromptu outing with a romantic companion will lift your spirits. Partnership interests are highlighted.

LIBRA

(Sept. 23 to Oct. 22)

Spur-of-the-moment shopping is favored today. An extra expense may arise now in connection with children. Money developments on the job are quite positive.

SCORPIO

(Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)

Things go very much your way today. The accent is on fun pursuits and travel. Going out for the evening is favored over home-based interests. Enjoy life now!

SAGITTARIUS

(Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)

It is a day to tie up loose ends and to dispense with unfinished tasks. You will accomplish a lot now, but the evening hours may be anti-climatic. Catch up on rest.

CAPRICORN

(Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)

Don't let a money concern diminish your appetite for entertainment today. It is a day of popularity for you. You will have good times at a social gathering.

AQUARIUS

(Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)

Rise to the occasion and capitalize on today's opportunities for getting ahead in life. Don't sell yourself short. You have good judgment in money matters.

PISCES

(Feb. 19 to Mar. 20)

It is the perfect day for visiting friends or going away for the weekend. A surprise invitation comes now. Some receive helpful information from an adviser.

YOU BORN TODAY are creative, and self-expressive. You have promotional skills and have a strong leaning toward the arts. Usually, you are successful in getting your creative work before the public. In business, you are drawn to large enterprises and sometimes to businesses related to the arts. Your talent with the written and spoken word makes you a good writer and a fine teacher. Birthdate of: Jack Kerouac, writer; Edward Albee, playwright; and Liza Minnelli, singer.
