MU workers steamed over Marriott cuts

BY MARK M. MACIAS
STATE PRESS

Employees for the MU's Marriott Food Service said the company is laying off more than 75 people this week, mostly higher-paid employees, but Marriott's general manager said fewer than 30 people will be released and all will be given a job opportunity at another location.

One Marriott employee, who requested anonymity in fear of losing a potential summer job offer, said he was given a two-day notice after working 15 years for the company.

"My record here has been excellent," the former employee said. "I've never had phony sick days. They claim they're losing money because less students are eating (in the MU), but they're already down to bare-bones. With these 75 people being laid off, it's going to be worse."

Robert Dreger, general manager for Marriott at ASU, said the company is not targeting higher-paid employees, but is eliminating positions that a company evaluation recommended.

"As our revenues and customer accounts have decreased over the years, our labor costs have increased," Dreger said. "In this situation it's a little more dramatic than it has been in the past."

"If there's a loss somewhere, you have to make cuts somewhere. With tuition increasing, we can't always pass the costs on to the customers."

With the exception of those who work at McDonald's, all MU workers are employed by Marriott. Dreger said around 350 people work for Marriott in the MU.

Dreger added that everyone who is laid off "will be given a full week's notice."

Yet Amador Cerda, who has been employed by Marriott for 4 years, said he was notified Tuesday that Wednesday would be his last day of work.

"I asked (the supervisor), 'are you doing (the firing) by seniority?'" Cerda said. "He said 'well, seniority is the last thing we think about.'"

"I never missed a day of work. They told me to go to the office to find out about another job. I'm gonna go because I need the job."

Excluded coalitions stage festival

Events aim at promoting inclusiveness

BY DONNA HOGAN
STATE PRESS

Four ad-hoc coalitions excluded from a multi-cultural celebration planned for mid-April are holding their own two-day cultural festival on campus this week.

Groups representing women, gays, disabled and Jewish students organized the "alternative" program which kicked off Wednesday with music from the Peggy Murphy Band, and a "wheelchair basketball challenge."

Event coordinator Denise Heap said that the four campus ethnic coalitions were also invited to participate when their festivities were scrubbed, but none did. Three of the four ethnic coalitions have other major events scheduled for the same week.

"The purpose of multi-culturalism is inclusion, not exclusion," Heap said. "We asked to be included in the original multi-cultural week but the MUAB voted to exclude us."

"We envisioned this week as being as inclusive as possible in the true spirit of multi-culturalism."

The Campus Environment Team provided $1,000 for publicity but flyers were late getting out and the events were tucked back in the Student Services Courtyard, away from the main traffic of campus.

Attendance was sparse. The lawn before the stage was dotted with only about 15 small groups of festival-goers. But of those students who stumbled on the celebration, most stayed to enjoy the music or try out a wheelchair.

"We heard the music then heard why it was going on so we decided to stay," said Sandra Gomez, a senior in business management, who sat on the lawn chatting with a friend.

Jay Ernster, a junior in agri-business, tried to play basketball from a wheelchair.

"It's humbling and it's enlightening," he said. "That's legs for those people. It's incredible to enter that world and realize the freedoms — and the restrictions."

Regents vote today on tuition rates for 1993-94

BY TAMMY MESA-SIERRA
STATE PRESS

The Arizona Board of Regents is slated to vote today on an anticipated tuition hike that could reach a record 14 percent climb for the 1993-1994 academic year.

The regents, meeting at the ASU Downtown Center, are scheduled to vote upon the tuition recommendations made by student leaders and the presidents of the three state universities, ABOR President Andy Hurwitz said. The body will also finalize financial aid figures for next year.

ASU President Lattie Coor is recommending the largest annual tuition increase in the history of the state, equaling $250 for residents and $350 for non-residents.

UofA President Manuel Pacheco submitted an identical recommendation, while NAU President Eugene Hughes recommended a $250 resident increase and a $300 non-resident increase.

ABOR spokeswoman Suzanne Pfister said resident tuition rates of $1,590 annually are currently identical at all three state universities. Non-resident rates of $6,996 annually are identical at ASU and UofA, but NAU non-residents now pay $6,946.

The regents are not required to set identical tuition rates among the universities.

Hurwitz said the regents do not yet have specific figures that are ready for a vote, but will hold an open discussion and then vote on a proposal.

"I think it's fair to say the numbers the regents have in mind are the numbers of the students and the presidents," he said.

The Arizona Students Association recommended a $150 resident increase and a $296 non-resident increase after successfully achieving a tuition freeze last year.

While open discussion will take place and student leaders are expected to be present, Hurwitz said student testimony will probably not be accepted because of the lengthy tuition hearings held earlier this semester.

However, the current student regent from NAU, Rhian Evans, will participate in the discussion. Evans has gone on record as supporting the ASA recommendations.

Coor announced his recommendation late last week after meeting with student leaders to discuss the numbers and how they were derived.

Student challenges age policy on bus discount

Claims student rate is not clearly listed on Mesa brochures

By JOY BEASON
STATE PRESS

An ASU re-entry student said she was denied a student bus rate by the city of Mesa because of an age requirement that is not printed on a service brochure.

Karey Sizemore, a 34-year-old communications student, said she started riding the bus in June of 1992 to go to summer school at ASU. She went to buy a monthly bus pass as advertised in the "Mesa Sun Runner Rider's Guide."

The brochure lists the prices of the passes as $28 for general public and $14 for students. Because Sizemore is a full-time student at ASU, she said she expected to pay the student price, but was denied.

She was told that students were required to be under the age of 19, although the brochure does not specify any age requirement for student fares.

"Tanya Collins (special program director of the city of Mesa) said 'I know the brochure is misleading and ambiguous, but we meant for it to say was 19 years old or younger,'" said Sizemore. "It is like they are saying they are guilty but are not willing to do anything about it."

She sees it as false advertising and age discrimination.

"Not all college students are 19 years old and younger," she said.

She asked for a refund and for the brochure to be reprinted clarifying the age requirement of students.

"I want restitution and for them to reprint the brochures immediately," she said. "People are getting ripped off by the city of Mesa — what kind of example is that?"

She has filed complaints with the city of Mesa, a city council member, the Better Business Bureau and the Attorney General's office.

"I am taking a wait and see attitude," she said.

According to Collins, the city of Mesa is already acting on one of Sizemore's requests.

"We are revising the brochure within the next couple of weeks," she said. "It will take another month before the new brochures will go out."

Even so, Collins said the age requirement will not change and Sizemore will not get a refund.

"It is a regional requirement that is consistent throughout the Valley."

Collins said she consulted the city attorney about the refund and "he doesn't feel as if that is something we should do."

Other students disagree.

"I think that is ridiculous," said Jill Ledbetter, a communications student who works with the re-entry student center. "As long as she had her student ID, there is no reason to deny her the students' rate."

Christine Lash, student director of the re-entry students center, said students like Sizemore have a hard enough time already.

"I have been with re-entry students for eight years — I have seen the struggle," said Lash, who is pursuing her master's degree and was a re-entry undergraduate student.

"To have people say that you are not really a student invalidates the whole experience. Re-entry students end up paying taxes to the people who are telling them they are not valid."

Lash said re-entry students make up a substantial part of the college campus and are only increasing in numbers and should be recognized as students.

"Thirty percent of students at ASU are over the age of 25, 9300 students. There is a sizable population of adults coming back to college nationally."

"We are not going away. Re-entry students will continue to be a part of our campus."

S. African officers fire on protesters

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — In an outpouring of black rage, millions of workers went on strike Wednesday to protest the slaying of black leader Chris Hani. At least four people were killed and hundreds wounded as blacks battled police.

The worst clash was in the black township of Soweto, where police fired on marchers outside the main police station. Hospital spokeswoman Adri Potgieter said three people died, five were critically wounded and 259 suffered minor wounds.

Police claimed they fired because protesters were hurling rocks, but witnesses said most of the crowd was calm and had started to leave the area.

Among the dead was African National Congress official Sam Ntobane, the black group said.

Police and soldiers fired shotguns, rubber bullets and tear gas at looters who rampaged through shops in Cape Town and torched vehicles. A hand grenade exploded and injured 10 soldiers, and medical officials said a man was killed and about 150 people were wounded in the looting.

Looting also broke out in Durban and Pietermaritzburg in Natal province and in Port Elizabeth to the south.

Hani, head of the South African Communist Party and one of the ANC's most popular leaders, was assassinated outside his home Saturday. A white right-winger has been charged in the murder.

Across much of the country Wednesday, mourners expressed their sadness by attending peaceful memorial services and marches, heeding the ANC's call for a one-day strike.

"It was one of the best-attended stayaways ever," said economist Miekie Dames. Business groups said as many as 75 percent of the nation's 6 million black workers were on strike, meaning a possible $160 million loss to the economy.

Black and white leaders are struggling to prevent anger over Hani's killing from derailing talks on ending apartheid and giving the black majority the vote. The government and the ANC have said they will press ahead with talks.

"We could have ended up with a much worse situation," said ANC Secretary-General Cyril Ramaphosa. He warned that if negotiations did not speed up, "worse could happen."

President F.W. de Klerk called Wednesday night for a meeting with ANC president Nelson Mandela as soon as possible.

He said an additional 3,000 troops and police would be sent to combat unrest, bolstering some 23,000 on the streets Wednesday.

"What happened in South Africa today cannot be tolerated in any civilized country," de Klerk said.

In Washington, the State Department advised U.S. citizens to postpone non-essential travel to South Africa until after the mourning period, scheduled to end Sunday.

Two whites were shot and killed and another injured Tuesday night in the Transkei black homeland, police said. Two black men were killed Wednesday in shooting incidents in Johannesburg that were not clearly linked to the Hani protests.

At one of the biggest memorial services, about 20,000 people squeezed into Soweto's small Jabulani Stadium, where Mandela pleaded for calm.

"I appreciate that our young people are very angry because their hero has been killed," he said as the crowd surged dangerously toward the small stage. But "to return to violence only means more innocent people are going to continue dying."

In the crowd, people waved banners condemning the governing National Party and de Klerk.

In Cape Town, hundreds of youths broke away from the main protest rally and began looting shops.

"No peace! War! War!" they chanted while running down glass-strewn streets as vehicles and trash bins were set on fire.

Several bystanders were hurt in the melee as soldiers and police fired buckshot and rubber bullets.

Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu, looking distressed, was led away by aides as Red Cross doctors at the scene picked pellets from the backs of the wounded and bandaged bloody limbs. Later he said that while most marchers were well-behaved, ANC leaders "have to take the blame" for the damage.

Police Capt. Craig Kotze of the Law and Order Ministry accused the ANC of not controlling the crowd. "We impose law and order. We can't afford another week of this kind of activity," he said.

White workers watched from windows and rooftops as black protesters marched through downtown Johannesburg.

Clinton weighs national sales tax

Levy would pay for health care coverage for uninsured

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The White House acknowledged Wednesday it is considering a national sales tax to raise money for its health-care reform package but insisted that was only one of many options.

President Clinton first raised the idea of a so-called value-added tax in February but immediately discarded it, insisting, "It is not now under consideration. If we start considering it, I'll tell you."

The idea was back in the spotlight on Wednesday after two top administration officials volunteered the tax as one way to pay for extending health-care coverage to the uninsured.

Alice Rivlin, deputy director of the Office of Management and Budget, told manufacturing group that a general sales tax "is clearly a possible candidate" and has much to offer.

A day earlier, Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala said in an interview with USA Today that "certainly we're looking at a VAT ... but all of this would be phased in."

Hillary Rodham Clinton, who chairs the administration's health care task force, brushed off a question Wednesday about the sales tax as she met with Hispanic health professionals to discuss the plan.

With the administration hoping to unveil its health-care plan next month, the president is beginning "to go through with the task force a very wide range of decisions" on key aspects of the package, said White House spokesman George Stephanopoulos.

He said Clinton's advisers had "cast a very wide net" in looking at ways to finance health-care reform but the president had made no decisions.

"If a decision is made to go forward with something like that, it's certainly something the president will explain and justify, but no decision has been made along those lines," Stephanopoulos said.

Ira Magaziner, coordinator of the health-care reform task force, has said repeatedly there are at least 20 options under consideration for raising new money, including higher "sin taxes" on tobacco and alcohol, and taxing benefits for insurance that covers more than the basic health package.

Rivlin, speaking at a breakfast meeting of the National Association of Manufacturers, said it was clear that extending health care to the uninsured was "going to take some more resources and a VAT or a general sales tax has a good deal to recommend it, especially to an economy that wants to emphasize investment ... and therefore the notion that you tax consumption makes sense."

She added that such a tax can hit hardest on the poor and "has to be offset or designed in some way that it is not too painful to the lowest-income groups."

Attempts at peace apparent success; LA murders down

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — A police show of force, the mustering of troops and pleas for peace during deliberations in the Rodney King beating case apparently have made the streets safer: Authorities on Wednesday reported a dip in the murder rate.

"I don't know if we can say death took a holiday, but it looks that way," said Scott Carrier, a spokesman for the county coroner's office, which handles an average of five murders daily.

Stung by criticism it was slow to react to unrest after innocent verdicts in the state trial a year ago, law enforcement officials have put hundreds of additional officers on the street. National Guard troops were training at armories as the jury deliberated charges that four officers violated King's federal civil rights when they beat him March 3, 1991.

A police presence has been noticeable on the streets since deliberations began Saturday afternoon.

There were some murders reported over the weekend, however the Sheriff's Department, which handles unincorporated parts of Los Angeles county, said no murders were reported since early Monday.

"The high police presence can contribute to this," Deputy George Ducoulombier said.

The Los Angeles police said it didn't yet have statistics, but the coroner's office, which handles the entire county, reported no homicides in the 24-hour period ending Wednesday morning.

Capt. Patrick Froehle of South Central's crime-ridden 77th Street Division, just a mile from the flashpoint of last year's riots at Florence and Normandie avenues, said officers were pleased with the drop in slayings.

"It may have something to do with more police on the streets. Then again, it may have to do with other things," Froehle said.

Curtis Owens, executive director of the African American Community Unity Center, said community peace efforts also were helping.

STATE PRESS Editorial

Excluded groups unite

There's no worse feeling than knowing that your friends are having a party and you're not invited. While members of four ad hoc coalitions representing gay, Jewish, disabled and women's groups celebrated their unity on campus yesterday and continue to celebrate today, their members must be feeling a hint of that disappointment.

The party in question was a multi-cultural awareness celebration planned for the middle of this month. Originally, the event was to include the Black African Coalition, the American Indian Council, the Asian American Coalition and El Concilio, a coalition representing Hispanic students. These groups were involved with planning a public event to bring a diverse group of students together to open lines of communication and facilitate future cooperation.

Unfortunately, other groups that could have benefited from the event were not invited to share in the multi-cultural event. According to Denise Heap, the four ethnic coalitions voted against allowing the ad hoc coalitions to participate.

In reaction, four coalitions were formed by the groups who felt left out, and an alternative multi-cultural week was proposed. Oddly enough, the original event was cancelled by the ethnic coalitions and the alternative celebration remains. The slight of being excluded from an event designed to celebrate positive differences between people also remains.

Although organizers for the original multi-cultural week cited a need to focus on communication specifically between the ethnic coalitions, these difficulties exist between all minority groups on campus. Everyone would have benefited by the inclusion of these organizations, who undoubtedly share a similar interest in education and celebrating their heritage.

Ironically, had the original multi-cultural event gained the support of these energetic groups, then it might have survived, and ASU students would have been treated to a larger celebration.

However, the alternative multi-cultural week will continue through this Friday, providing students with an opportunity to learn about members of our society who are often overlooked. Hopefully they will not be overlooked next year.

Not guilty does not mean innocent

As the final preparations are made, and the jury in the Rodney King civil rights trial deliberates, the nation watches and waits for what is one of the most anticipated verdicts in the history of the American judicial system.

Guilty or innocent is the question, but is it really a difficult question to answer?

Even if Briseno, Powell, Wind and Koon are found not guilty, they surely are not innocent.

The word innocent, as defined by the American Heritage Dictionary, means uncorrupted by evil, sinless, not dangerous or harmful.

According to that definition, are the four men innocent?

I definitely believe they delivered blows to King with the intent to cause physical harm.

I definitely believe that the four officers, especially Powell, who delivered the most blows, are dangerous.

Anytime you club someone, the way they clubbed King, you are wrong. The officers, in addition to using poor judgment, also showed a lack of respect for the lives and rights of others.

The officers may actually walk away totally cleared of all the charges against them. If that does take place, a city of 3.6 million will go up in flames as a result of fury and frustration.

I don't care how many national guardsmen are on the corners practicing for the enactment of the King Alfred Plan, something bad is going to take place. Conflict and confrontation in this situation is inevitable, and the players have already been put in place for the game of death.

Everyone is seemingly asking for peace, but isn't it ironic that the people who are called in to keep the peace are fully armed with the weapons of war.

The message being sent is "Might always makes right."

Willie Williams, the chief, might as well change their motto from "We Serve and Protect" to "We Club and Break Necks!"

The guards are instructed by their commanding officers to "Use any means necessary to protect themselves, or any other citizen if they are in threat of human death."

I wonder if those were the same instructions given to Powell, Briseno, Wind and Koon on the night of March 3, 1991.

That was open house night for the L.A.P.D. That was an evening of entertainment sponsored by the department, and the theme was, "We treat you like a King."

ASHAHED TRICHE

Columnist

Frustration, anger, fear — all of these are natural emotive responses. But the people of Los Angeles must be prepared to suffer the consequences of their actions.

This time, if they take to the streets in violent protest, they will be giving the law enforcement officials, the L.A.P.D. and the National Guard the legal right to take their lives or take them to jail.

Everyone is at risk. And it is not just a California problem. If you recall, in late April and early May of last year, civil disturbances broke out on numerous college campuses all across the nation.

All over America, people will be affected by the verdict. It may be one of guilty, or it may be one of innocence. We may see all of them get off with a slap on the wrist. I would like to think that at least Powell, the world record holder for most blows delivered within 30 seconds, will get some type of punishment. But then, you never know.

These four men are guilty, even if the prosecutors fail to prove it in a court of law. They are guilty of insensitivity, use excessive force, have poor judgment, and abuse authority.

We live in a society where might is usually right, but when the people are unhappy and they rise up, it has been shown throughout history that when justice prevails, firepower is unimportant.

And anyway, even if the four officers are found guilty, does that mean that all of a sudden there will be an end to police using excessive and unjustifiable force?

What will happen to all of the people who have lost family, friends and loved ones because of police brutality? Will it lessen their pain?

What about all of the police officers who really are civil servants, making a serious attempt to serve and protect? Will it make their jobs any easier?

Maybe if we get rid of all the "bad cops," then we will be able to easily identify those officers who are not abusing their authority.

It has been said before, and it will continue to be said.

Before you can make way for the peacemaker, you must get rid of the peacebreaker.

What has happened over the past eleven months?

Have the people of L.A. been preparing for the War of Armageddon?

Have the police been preparing for the apocalyptic battle between good and evil?

Have gun owners practiced their shooting skills?

Have families stockpiled water and food in their houses in anticipation of this conflict.

Will anything even happen if the four are acquitted?

And if they are, what is the next step.

We will wait and see.

Letters to the editor

Greeks provide ample reasons for positive image

Editor:

This letter is in response to Tonnvane Wiswell's editorial "President Pick Ends ASASU Era." Miss Wiswell criticizes Greek students for organizing themselves to go and vote. She also describes Greeks as "notorious" for not attending class and "groupthink."

Miss Wiswell has done an excellent job of stereotyping Greek students. Miss Wiswell mentioned that she was unaware of Greek involvement in the election.

She is obviously unaware of some other facts about the ASU Greek students. ASU Greek students raise over $120,000 for local charities and donate thousands of man hours each year. ASU Greeks are also "notorious" for having strong campus involvement (60% of Devil's Advocates, numerous senators, the new V.P. of Student Activities, members of REACH, START — and the list goes on).

I would also like to point out to Miss Wiswell the high involvement Greeks maintain as alumni. Greeks typically donate more money, time and effort as alumni than any other organization on campus.

Miss Wiswell has also labeled a clearly positive effort by Greeks to get involved as "groupthink". This label of "groupthink" is not consistent with the facts. Over 1,500 Greeks participated in the election and Mr. Stevens received approximately 1,200 votes; therefore Greeks proved that they do have minds of their own.

I encourage Miss Wiswell to set her preconceived notions of Greek students aside; then she will realize that Greeks are trying to make a positive impact on our campus. Greeks have made a conscious effort to channel their energies in a positive manner. Their commitment to involvement deserves recognition, not scorn.

Trams offer students a service worth fighting for

Editor:

As most of the student body is aware, ASU's administration is preparing to replace the tram system which currently serves the parking lots with a much less convenient bus system. In response to this, Deborah Itule-Long and myself are, with the support of ASASU, preparing a massive petition drive to save the trams.

Several thousand students, staff, and faculty use the trams each day. Their current routes through the perimeter lots offer convenient service to a location near the center of campus. The proposed bus routes will simply circle campus with lower accessibility to students using the perimeter lots.

The tram service is a necessary part of ASU life, and not just for the thousands of students currently riding the trams each day. For those of who don't currently use the trams, they may come in handy in the future. Those of you living in residence halls now may park in the perimeter lots in future years. Those of you currently using other methods of transportation or other parking areas may also use the perimeter lots in the future.

The tram system is something that needs to be kept in place. This is just a dramatic example of one of ASU's most popular services being cut despite tuition increases. Students should not fork over more cash while receiving fewer services.

This afternoon a meeting will be held from 1:00 to 2:00 in the Pinal Room, which is room 215 on the second floor of the Memorial Union. We need volunteers to help us in our petition drive, which will start next Monday and continue for two weeks. If you can give even an hour of your time or would be willing to circulate a petition among your friends, please come to this meeting or stop by one of the tables next week.

Students cannot afford to be apathetic about the tram issue. If we don't send President Coor a dramatic message about how much we want to see the tram system kept, when you come back to classes next fall an inconvenient bus system will be in place.

That is why I am asking for the support of tram riders, of residence hall residents, of the Greek system, of classified staff, of faculty, and of every other individual with a place on the ASU campus. This is not a time for apathy; this is a time for action.

Students taken for a ride by new bus proposal

Editor:

My home state is Massachusetts, where Michael Dukakis caused a major deficit problem. The major deficit caused cut-backs in jobs and an increase in taxes. In addition, the education system suffered greatly.

Today I looked in the newspaper and recalled the budget cuts of Massachusetts again when I read an article which stated that ASU's tram service is going to disappear because of the state deficit.

The loss of the tram service will cause problems for the students and take away a unique characteristic of campus. First of all, many students are accustomed to this system because it has been around since 1978 — fifteen years. Students will have to learn new procedures and make new schedules for their travel time and destination.

Second of all, the tram service gives the school a special characteristic. It makes this university unique. For instance, the tram service was a part of this campus that I distinctly remembered after I had first visited ASU for orientation.

If this unique tram system is abolished, the new Tempe bus system which will take its place will be more time-consuming. The trams that exist are easy to enter and exit because they do not have doors. With the new bus system, more time will be required for people to enter and exit because there are only two doors. This will make it necessary for people to wait for their turns to get on and off of the bus.

Bike racks will also be provided by these buses. This will be helpful to the students who have classes far apart from each other, but this will also require more time to take the bikes on and off of the racks.

Besides the fact that the buses will require more time, the buses will not even provide the convenience of going into campus. The tram service travels from lots 59 or 40 to Orange Street, and drops students off at the turn-around near the ASU Book Store. The new bus service will travel completely around campus. It will not enter Orange Street, which brings students into the heart of campus. Because these buses will not enter campus, they will cause the students to walk to the bus stops on the outskirts of campus.

In retrospect, it is easy to see that there are more complications involved with the new bus system that will replace the tram service in the fall.

At the present time students are showing they want to keep the tram service by starting a petition drive. As of March 30, more than 400 signatures supporting the tram service were collected that will be presented to the Tempe City Council.

Hopefully, the effort shown by the students will persuade the Tempe City Council to keep the tram service of ASU.

Military doesn't need to be fair

I'm surprised nobody has raised a fuss about one of the most blatant examples of discrimination in the military services.

No, I'm not talking about the ban on gays, which is being thoroughly explored by Congress, the White House and the nation's talk-show hosts.

And not women in combat, either. That has already become an issue, with some feminists demanding that women be equal opportunity occupants of foxholes.

I'm talking about age discrimination — judging someone not on what he can do but how many years have passed since his birth.

Most people probably don't know it, but if a person is 36 years old, he will be rejected by all branches of the military.

Think about that. If you are a sports fan, you know that there are superb athletes who are 36 or older still excelling in just about every professional sport.

There have been boxing champions 36 or older; baseball home run kings and speedy infielders, fleet wide receivers and terrifying linemen, slam-dunking basketball stars, and many others.

You can go to gyms and health clubs all over America and find men 36 and older who are perfect physical specimens. They run miles every day, pump iron or practice delivering a death-dealing toe-kick to an imaginary foe's nose.

If you walked up to them and said: "You are old, too old, you geezer," some might twist your head so that you could look down at your spine. Yet, if one of these Arnold Schwarzenegger look-alikes went to a recruiting office, that's what he would be told.

The patriot could even say, "In my younger days, I was a Marine, so I am already a trained killer; and I have since obtained advanced degrees in government administration, military history, international relations; and I am a licensed helicopter pilot, a paramedic, have 20-15 vision and every tooth in my head is my own. Please, let me defend my country."

To no avail. The rules say that 35 is the age limit, and that is that.

Is that fair? Considering how sensitive we have become to all forms of discrimination, it doesn't appear to be. But that is only one of the many ways the military discriminates.

If you have asthma, you will be rejected, even though it can be controlled medically. They will turn you down if you have too many allergies, which can also be treated. If you are real skinny, that might please your physician, but the recruiter will show you the door. You can be too tall or too short. (I should probably say differently heighted.)

Yet, I haven't heard any protests by the National Organization of Patriotic 36-Year-Old Perfect Physical Specimens. Or the National Organization of Patriotic Asthmatics and Allergy Victims, or the National Organization of the Differently Heighted.

They haven't protested because most people would think they were silly and would laugh at them, which they would deserve.

That's because most people know that the military is not in the fairness business. Nor is it meant to be a sociological playpen for pressure groups and professional cause-seekers.

As a career combat officer once told me: "The military does one thing: kill people and break things."

"You are a part, so you gotta fit into the equipment. If you don't fit into the other parts, you're not acceptable."

So it doesn't matter that you might be the world's most heroic, perfectly coordinated, physically splendid 36-year-old. They have to have an age limit, and 35 is it.

Of course, there is some logic to the limit. If you enlist at 36 and plan to make a career of the military, you might not be combat-spry in 20 years.

On the other hand, if you come in at 17 or 18, you'll still be a young guy when the 20 years have passed.

And while asthma and allergies are treatable, the military would rather not have you wheezing and sniffing if you are assigned to the point in enemy territory.

While this might seem obvious to people with an ounce of common sense, it doesn't seem to sink in to the feminists and liberal males (none of whom have ever been on latrine duty) who are yammering on TV about the right of women to serve in combat roles.

Open gaiety in the military and now females in combat.

I knew President Clinton didn't want to serve in the military. But is it now necessary to see how much he can goof it up?

- A student was contacted at Manzanita Hall while he stated he could not move his right arm or his neck. He was transported to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital for treatment.
- A student reported his chrome GT Avalanche bicycle stolen from 406 Adelphi Drive, where it was secured to itself with a U-lock. Loss is $499.
- A student reported his pink GT Tequesta bicycle stolen from 406 Adelphi Drive, where it was secured to itself with a U-lock. Loss is $499.

- A female student was arrested, cited and released for hit and run in Parking Structure Five.
  - A student had his license plate stolen from his vehicle while it was parked in Parking Structure Four. Loss is $5.
  - An employee reported that someone vandalized the antenna on her vehicle while it was parked in Parking Structure Two. Damage is $40.
  - The fire alarm went off on the fourth floor of Manzanita Hall, set off by steam. The area was found secure and the alarm was reset by electricians after the steam cleared.
- Tempe Police reported the following incidents on Wednesday:
- A Chicago man was arrested after he tried to mail 1 1/2 pounds of marijuana from Mr. Ship N' Check, 940 E. University Drive, to a person in Indiana.
  - An unknown man committed criminal trespass after he entered Wendy's, 2704 W. Southern Ave., after the restaurant was closed and went to sleep on the dining room floor. The manager said the man was not in the restaurant when she locked up at 1:15 a.m., but was on the floor when she returned to open the store at 6:15 a.m. The man ran when he saw the woman opening the restaurant.

Someone stole a potted plant from the front porch of 1897 N. Ventura Ave. The unsecured plant was in a one-foot tall terra cotta pot.

Police are looking for a man that peered into a woman's window through the blinds at her apartment. The woman told police she heard a noise in the back yard and when she looked out she saw the man's face next to the window, and she noticed he was masturbating. The man fled before the police arrived.

Someone damaged the front yard grass at 904 S. Wilson St. The lawn was torn up in two sections approximately 15 feet long and two feet wide, which police say is consistent with a vehicle losing traction in the grass.

Coor is defending the magnitude of this proposal, by guaranteeing that all of the new ASU buildings will be opened and efforts will be made to initiate some of his undergraduate initiatives.

But Coor is also citing a $16 million budget deficit as a major catalyst in the proposed tuition hike. He said $5 million will be slashed from that deficit through cuts in administrative and student services, but the remainder will have to be made up through increased tuition revenues.

The regents will also discuss possible changes in the current financial assistance programs.

Both the student and presidential tuition proposals are qualified with projected increases in student assistance.

diving accident, said the disabled are a minority group and have to fight for rights like any ethnic groups.

"By the ADA (American with Disabilities Act) mandate there's a lot of things that are supposed to be done but aren't unless we bring attention to them," he said.

Kathleen Wong, a graduate student who teaches intercultural communications at ASU, said multi-culturalism has many faces now and labeling groups frequently causes exclusions.

"Multi-culturalism has been defined by traditional groups," she said. "But the categories are never that simple."

She said, for example, that there has been a traditional relationship between feminists and the gay/lesbian community, but there's been an exclusion of ethnic minorities in those groups.

Wong said that, in reality, all groups have a mixture of labels among their populations.

"The way we live our lives is much more complex (than the traditional view)," she said.

"Celebrating the Connections," as the organizers titled the festival, continues today with flamenco dancers, a skit per-

Heap said the program will conclude with a panel on hate crimes discussing "violence against (minorities), from harassment to bashings to murder."

She said Associated Students of ASU President-elect Rossie Turman, former Lesbian Gay Academic Union leader David Jefferies, and a Rabbi from the local Jewish community will join her on the panel, which meets at 3:30 p.m. in the MU.

Architecture school could see desired name change

Senate to review proposal at meeting on Monday

By JUDD T. WILLIAMS
STATE PRESS

The ASU Academic Senate will introduce a motion Monday to approve a name change for the College of Architecture's Department of Planning to the School of Planning and Landscape Architecture, college officials said.

MEUNIER

John Meunier, architecture dean, said the new name is part of the college's five-year strategic plan.

"Eventually we wanted to have three schools," Meunier said. In 1987, the college had one school, architecture, and two departments, design and planning.

Meunier said the name change will have little effect on students now in the department.

"In terms of day-to-day (operation) it won't change anything very much," he said. "It will make it easier to recognize (within the industry)."

Frederick Steiner, planning department chair, said another reason for the change is because the college would like to see its new landscape architecture degree gain accreditation.

The planning department is already accredited, Steiner said.

"The names of the other units in the college are school," Steiner said. "Name is important for accreditation."

The name change first must be approved by the Academic Senate, which will hold the motion over until next fall, because Monday's meeting is its last for this academic year, said Senate President Dick McGaw.

If the motion passes the Senate in the fall, it will be forwarded to the Arizona Board of Regents for approval before taking effect.

The Senate motion has been discussed by its Curriculum and Academic Programs Committee before being forwarded to the full Senate.

Accreditation team returns to campus for routine report

By KATE DEELY
STATE PRESS

It is time again for outsiders from across the nation to come in and evaluate just how good an academic institution ASU is.

A 10-member team from the North Central Association will return after a visit in 1983 to "re-accredit" ASU's main campus. NCA evaluates universities around the nation — specifically in the West — and has been responsible for evaluating ASU since 1931.

The team consists of administrators from different universities who will evaluate all aspects of the University, including curriculum, research activities, physical facilities, services, administration and community outreach activities.

Brian Foster, dean of the graduate college and chairman of University accreditation, said the process occurs every 10 years to continue the University's "accredited" standing.

"The NCA's criteria is that the University is accomplishing what its goals are," Foster said. "Your own mission is your criteria."

He said that in preparation for accreditation, ASU put together a self-study report which evaluates every aspect of the University. The team reads the report and uses it as a list of criteria to meet. However, he said the NCA does not have set guidelines for accrediting universities because each university is different.

After evaluating ASU, the team's members will tell the NCA's Commission on Institutions of Higher Education whether ASU deserves continuing accreditation.

Larry Mankin, a special assistant to the president, assisted in putting together the self-study report. He said the report was structured by looking at recommendations from the last accreditation in 1983 to see if they were met. The report also included any other changes at the University in the last ten years.

He said the purpose of the association's visit is simply to certify that "what we say is what we do." And, Mankin added, the answer to that is a "definite yes."

During the three day visit the team will be speaking to administrators, faculty and students giving both recommendations and accepting input. Foster said because this is an accreditation for the entire University, the team members will be looking at everything from academic programs to University maintenance.

ASU President Lattie Coor said University administration has put a lot of work into preparing for this accreditation and the self-study has been helpful for the University to identify characteristics needed for the accreditation.

He added that it is a very "strong" team coming to the University to do an intense and helpful job.

Students and faculty will have an opportunity to meet with members of the accreditation team April 19 from 1 p.m. to 2:30 p.m. The student meeting will take place in the MU North Gold Room, and the faculty meeting will take place in the MU Pinal Room.

Environmentalist assails NAFTA proposal

By CHRIS DRISCOLL
STATE PRESS

If the North American Free Trade Agreement is implemented in its current form it will drag environmental, labor and health standards down to the lowest common denominator, a Green Party USA National Council member and author said Tuesday night.

Michael Feinstein, author of a book titled Sixteen Weeks With the European Greens made the comments during the first of two public events scheduled by the Maricopa County Green Party this week in opposition to NAFTA.

"When an individual country or city or region wants to have higher environmental, health or standards that's considered to be a barrier to trade and you can bring the violator to some court and contest it," Feinstein said.

Feinstein spoke at the Catholic Newman Center on University Drive and College Street.

NAFTA is a treaty between the United States, Canada and Mexico that, over the next 15 years, would lower all tariffs and eliminate many other laws considered to stand in the way of free trade between the three countries of North America.

NAFTA was signed in December by Former President George Bush, Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, but it still faces approval and development of "enabling legislation" and "parallel agreements" in the national legislatures of the three countries before it goes into effect.

It would create the largest common market in the world out of North America's 380 million people.

Even though supporters of NAFTA are trying to convince people that the treaty will be different in that regard, more sensitive to the will of localities on environmental standards for instance, the bodies set up by NAFTA to decide whether environmental standards constitute barriers to free trade will be stacked with pro-corporate people, Feinstein said.

"You're not going to have representatives from the environmental organizations and people from labor organizations."

Larry Salzman, a representative of the Students of Objectivism at ASU said his group opposes NAFTA for a very different reason than that of the Green Party. They see NAFTA as an unnecessary document that will only get in the way of free trade. He said the three North American nations should simply remove all trade barriers and let business owners go about their business.

As for international bodies set up to discuss environmental or other related issues, Salzman said current laws against murder or property damage are sufficient to protect the environment.

Suzanne Kyer/State Press

Michael Feinstein pauses during an address Tuesday at the Catholic Newman Center on University Drive. Feinstein's speech focussed on the dangers inherent in the proposed North American Free Trade Agreement.

cient to protect the environment.

Students of Objectivism, a group that advocates the ideas of Ayn Rand, will compete with the Green Party tonight. The objectivists along with Associate Students of ASU Political Union will host a talk by George Reisman, professor of economics at Pepperdine University, on the topic "The Toxicity of Environmentalism" at 7 p.m. in the Business Administration Building Room C-116 ASU Main.

NEW YORK — Lena Horne, 75, will make her debut with the JVC Jazz Festival this summer, singing songs of Billy Strayhorn.

Impresario George Wein, announcing the June 18-26 festival here Monday, said, "What a thrill to have Lena Horne after all these years."

"I've tried so hard to get her on a festival. She never was available. This means a lot, particularly with the tribute to Billy Strayhorn who was such a close friend of Lena's. She hasn't been singing in recent years. Now she's got the urge to sing again."

Another highlight, Wein said, "will be (trumpeters) Wynton Marsalis and Jon Faddis playing together. They're going to do old Louis Armstrong big band things. The arrangements were transcribed from the records of the '30s. That will be the nucleus. They're going to update them."

Wein said, "One of the needs we have in jazz at the moment is stars. We don't have young stars. So we're trying to pick people who might be the stars of the future. (Tenor saxophonist) Joshua Redman, we're putting on the program with Wynton and Jon. He's about 21. He graduated from Harvard with honors, a history major. He's the kind of young man you want to get; besides his musical brilliance he has a head about him."

The only tribute concert this year will be to band leader Art Blakey.

Wein said, about pianist Keith Jarrett, also making his festival debut, "We wanted him. He was doing his own thing most of the time. He's one of the few who has a name that can come close to filling a hall."

Performers returning to the festival include singer Betty Carter and pianist Horace Silver. "Betty has been in Europe the past four or five years," Wein says. She and the Gerry Mulligan Quartet will appear opening night at Carnegie Hall. Silver will headline a benefit for Jazzmobile on closing night.

The Tito Puente Big Band, with Celia Cruz, will perform the second night, June 19, at Carnegie. Anita O'Day, Cassandra Wilson and Marano and Monteiro will sing that night at Town Hall.

Lena Horne, accompanied by the Ellington Band, with Bobby Short as host, will perform June 20 at Avery Fisher Hall. That afternoon, Illinois Jacquet and his big band will give a free concert at Damrosch Park.

Forty-five years after Wein appeared as a pianist with Max Kaminsky and Pee Wee Russell at the Ken Club in Boston, in 1948, he will headline a concert. June 21 brings "After 45 Years: George Wein and the Newport All-Stars" to Town Hall. Surprise guests are promised.

"Wynton and Jon" will be at Avery Fisher Hall June 22, the same night that Candid Records will record a Town Hall concert of music by Charlie Parker and Thelonious Monk.

The Art Blakey tribute from people who were in his band will be June 23 at Avery Fisher Hall, the night that singers Mel Tormé and Cleo Laine will be at Carnegie and the Charles Lloyd Quartet, a success last year, will be at Merkin Concert Hall.

Keith Jarrett's concert will be at Carnegie on June 24. George Shearing, the Count Basie Band and prominent instrumentalists will dedicate a program to Birdland, the jazz club which nurtured the talents of many jazz musicians. "A Lullaby for Birdland," named for a tune Shearing composed, will be June 25 at Carnegie.

That same night, Grover Washington and Michel Camilo will perform at Avery Fisher Hall and the Jazz Explosion Superband with Larry Carlton, Stanley Clarke, Billy Cobham and Najee will be at the Beacon Theater.

The final night, June 26, will bring, from Brazil, "the Musical World of Gilberto Gil" to Avery Fisher and Horace Silver to Carnegie.

Waterloo Village in Stanhope, N.J., will have its jazz picnic June 18 and 19 and there will be two days of jazz at the Saratoga, N.Y., Performing Arts Center June 26 and 27.

Undergrads should resist NBA draft

With the NCAA tournament over and the NBA draft approaching, the riches and fame of professional basketball are no doubt beckoning collegiate players to forego their final years of eligibility and declare themselves eligible for the draft.

Some have already given in to the temptation. Jamal Mashburn, Anfernee Hardaway and Shawn Bradley are among this year's undergraduates that have chosen to skip their final collegiate years and head directly to the NBA. Two members of Michigan's 'Fab Five' — Chris Webber and Jalen Rose — are also rumored to be mulling over the same decision.

It's certainly an enticing dilemma. These players have two choices. They can be paid to play basketball, earning thousands of dollars per game and ensuring financial security for themselves and their families. The other option is to remain in college, performing as an amateur and balancing a strenuous practice schedule with an equally demanding load of classes.

The choice is clear. They should stay in college.

The first reason is one of simple principle. When recruited out of high school, these players made an agreement with the universities they chose to attend — play basketball for the school, get a free education. Instead, many have used the schools for exposure and decided to fly the coop. By not fulfilling their four years of eligibility, undergraduate players who enter the draft have broken their word with their universities. College teams are often left in disarray as a result of the premature departures of their blue-chip performers.

DEMSEY'S DOMINANCE

ASU sophomore Todd Demsey has asserted himself as the top-ranked player on the Sun Devil men's golf team.

Top-seeded ASU golfer swinging with success

BY SHAUN RACHAU
STATE PRESS

While coaching at the USC for the past 13 years, ASU men's golf coach Randy Lein has seen many of the finest professional and amateur golfers in the nation.

Lein coached 13 individuals to All-America honors as head coach at USC, and now six of his former Trojans are on the PGA Tour. The 13-year-PGA member is also a noted golf clinician and has written numerous articles for golf publications.

But amid all the talented pro and amateur golfers Lein has watched, he said he has seen nobody better than Sun Devil golfer Todd Demsey.

"I've seen an awful lot of talent and I've had some very good players," Lein said. "I think Todd, in my own mind, is as talented as any player I've seen since I've been coaching."

In his first two seasons on the Sun Devil golf team, Demsey has lived up to Lein's billing, earning second-team All-American and first-team All-Pac-10 honors as a freshman last year.

Demsey, one of only two sophomores on Golfweek's preseason first team All-American list, is the only member of the third-ranked Sun Devils to win an individual title at a collegiate tournament this season, and was named the Ram/Golfweek Amateur Player of the Month for February.

Further, Demsey qualified as an amateur to compete in the PGA's San Diego Buick Open with teammate Keith Sbarbaro in February and leads the team with a 72.32 average.

The reason why Lein said he has so much praise for the redshirt sophomore is because of his "very athletic, fluid, natural-looking" golf swing.

"You take your Scott Verplanks, your Bob Tways and all the other players I've seen play in college golf, and I haven't seen a better swing," Lein said.

Demsey adopted his swing from Carl Welty, a PGA tour pro in San Diego, and has been working with him for the past eight years in developing it.

"He has helped me out quite a bit," Demsey said. "My iron shots, which would relate to my swing, are probably the best part of my game."

Demsey has had to bring his game up a notch this season after three-time NCAA Champion Phil Mickelson graduated last year and sophomore preseason All-American Trip Kuehne was lost for the season because of

Wildcats upend men's tennis

UofA registers 5-2 triumph

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The ASU men's tennis team ended Pac-10 play on a sour note Wednesday, dropping a 5-2 decision to UofA in Tucson.

At the top seed, the Wildcats' Randy Baldemor picked up a win after ASU's Bruce Haddad withdrew after the first set, which was won by Baldemor, 6-3.

The Sun Devils (6-13 overall, 2-8 Pac-10) were handed a pair of defeats at the No. 2 and No. 3 slots as well. UofA's Matt Holt defeated Eric Brunner 6-2, 7-5, while Brandon Hearn bested the Sun Devils' Peter Jeschke 6-3, 3-6, 6-3.

Chris Gambino picked up the first victory for ASU with a 7-5, 7-6 triumph over Greg Prudhomme. Sun Devil Paul Reber followed with a 6-2, 6-2 win over Chris Jenkins.

Matt Foote of UofA registered a 6-3, 6-1 victory over ASU's Tyson Bond.

The Wildcats clinched the victory after one doubles match. The tandem of Holt and Hearn defeated the Sun Devil duo of Haddad and Brunner, 6-1, 6-1.

The loss gave ASU a split in the season series with UofA. The Sun Devils earned a 5-1 win over the Wildcats on Feb. 18 at the Whiteman Tennis Center.

The Sun Devils will next be in action from April 22-25 at the Pac-10 Individuals in Ojai, Calif.

Hot Suns scorch Timberwolves

Phoenix collects 60th win

By MEL REISNER
AP Sports Writer

Dan Majerle scored 12 of his 25 points in the fourth quarter Wednesday night, helping Phoenix hold the Minnesota Timberwolves at bay for a 98-84 victory, their record 60th of the season.

Cedric Ceballos had 23 points and 13 rebounds, offsetting the absence of injured forward Charles Barkley from the lineup for the second straight game.

Richard Dumas, who has been alternating with Ceballos at small forward, joined Ceballos as a starter for the first time and scored 22 points.

Doug West paced Minnesota with 27 points, and Christian Laettner scored 20.

It was the seventh straight loss for the Wolves, fifth on the road, and left the 4-year-old franchise 0-16 against the Suns. Phoenix and Chicago are the only teams that have never lost to Minnesota.

Phoenix rookie Oliver Miller had three of his four blocks in the second quarter, when the Suns held the Wolves to a season-low 13 points and took a 51-39 halftime lead.

The Wolves trailed 68-59 entering the final quarter and never got closer than seven points, reaching that deficit at 88-81 when with 2:42 remaining.

Majerle, who hit 5 of 7 3-pointers and hit two without a miss in the last quarter, gave Phoenix a 90-81 lead with two free throws, and the Wolves could not recover.

Minnesota coach Sidney Lowe was ejected with 6:43 left in the third period after picking up his second technical of the quarter.

Minnesota outscored the Suns 10-4 in the last three minutes of the first quarter to tie it at 26. West, who had 15 points in the first period, tied it with eight seconds left.

But the Wolves went the first 6:56 of the second quarter without scoring a field goal, and the Suns went on a 14-1 run.

Danny Ainge made it 40-29 with a technical free throw after West complained too much when he was called for a charging foul.

Majerle sank a 3-pointer just before the halftime buzzer, giving the Suns their biggest lead of the first half at 51-39.

The NCAA is quickly evolving into a farm league for the NBA. Players arrive, develop the necessary talent, and when they're ready, it's on to the pros. This is entirely inconsistent with the purpose of intercollegiate athletics. College sports are intended to be a venue through which an education is obtained. Today, the case is becoming exactly the opposite.

The money will still be there a few years down the road for these collegiate superstars. But the college experience is something you can't put a price on. Along with the degree comes camaraderie with fellow students and enriching personal experiences that help build independence and maturity.

As seductive and lucrative as the NBA market can be for undergraduate players, they ultimately would be much better off opting to finish out their final years of collegiate eligibility.

The worst they can get out of it is an education.

Cardinals closer to nabbing Montana

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Phoenix has emerged as the frontrunner in the bidding for Joe Montana, who must decide if he prefers to play for the Cardinals or remain a backup quarterback to 49ers starter Steve Young, according to a published report Wednesday.

The San Francisco Chronicle reported that the 49ers told Phoenix they are willing to accept the Cardinals' offer of a first-round draft choice in exchange for Montana. The decision to stay or go rests with Montana, who has said he doesn't want to back up Young, the NFL's MVP last season.

"Our situation with the 49ers has been settled," Cardinals owner Bill Bidwill told radio station KTAR in Phoenix. "Now it's a matter of discussing with the agent whatever conditions we might have between the Cardinals and Joe Montana."

Bidwill acknowledged later in Tempe, Ariz., that he couldn't predict what Montana would do despite the optimistic signs.

"I couldn't estimate how it looks for Phoenix," Bidwill said. "I believe the Chiefs are in the picture; I hope the Cardinals are in the picture."

The Detroit Lions said Wednesday they've changed their minds about talking to Montana.

"It's difficult to turn down a future Hall-of-Famer in Joe Montana, but I really like our young quarterbacks," coach Wayne Fontes said in a written statement.

A phone call to Montana's agent, Peter Johnson, was not immediately returned, and Bidwill said he was told Johnson would not be in his Cleveland office Wednesday.

Bidwill said he had spoken with Johnson by telephone earlier in the day.

Bidwill said he is offering the 20th pick, one of Phoenix's two first-round selections, to San Francisco.

"We've had a number of conversations with the 49ers concerning any potential compensation if Montana came to the Cardinals," Bidwill said. "We've discussed a number of scenarios, and I believe we've come to some sort of agreement with them."

The Cardinals owner, who said he has never before gotten as involved in a player transaction, also said the Cardinals want to see Montana work out before closing any deal. No date for a revisit has been scheduled.

After visits last week to Kansas City and the Cardinals, Montana made it clear he preferred playing in Kansas City.

There, he would work with offensive coordinator Paul Hackett, a former 49ers assistant.

But the Chiefs reportedly aren't willing to give up the first-round draft pick the 49ers are seeking.

Repeating the stance he's held since the end of last season, San Francisco coach George Seifert told the Chronicle Tuesday he still wants Montana in a 49ers uniform but stressed that Young is the starter.

However, he left the door open a crack, saying Young conceivably could play himself out of a job.

"It doesn't bother me to say Steve Young's the starting quarterback, but it bothers me when people take that to mean that, no matter what he's doing, it won't change," Seifert said. "That's not the case."

Lions executive vice president Chuck Schmidt said he was happy with Rodney Peete and Andre Ware battling for the starting quarterback slot. But he added the draft choices Detroit would lose for signing Montana "would have been severely disruptive to our program."

And Demsey has responded in outstanding fashion, playing consistently and finishing among the top 10 golfers in five of the eight tournaments he competed in.

Despite all the added pressure and having so much success as a sophomore, Demsey said he does not feel any pressure for the remainder of the season and the next two years.

"I really don't look at it in that way (as pressure)," Demsey said. "I'm always trying to improve and I feel I have a lot of

One of Demsey's goals for his final two years at ASU, besides turning pro, is to win an individual and team national championship.

"I feel we have as good as a chance as anybody in the country to win a national championship this year, and especially next year," Demsey said. "But as long as my game keeps improving, I'll be happy."
