Division, drugs caused damage to Theta house source says

By Maxwell Higgins
State Press

Alleged drug use became a dividing point among Theta Delta Chi fraternity members, leading ultimately to five months of unpaid rent bills and $300,000 in damage to the house last weekend, according to an anonymous caller claiming to be a current member of the fraternity.

Earlier reports of drug paraphernalia found in the house were supported by David Swain, interim assistant dean of Student Life. There was a small amount of paraphernalia, including a bong, found in one room, he said.

The fraternity's president, Mark Bailey, was scheduled to release a statement on the incident Thursday night, but it never materialized. Attempts to contact him later were unsuccessful.

Thursday morning, the anonymous caller told the State Press that the fraternity had been placed on social probation four semesters ago by the Greek Relations Board after police witnessed members smoking marijuana on the roof of the house.

Interfraternity Council President Reagan Dunn confirmed that Theta Delta Chi has been on social probation periodically in the last few years, but he said he could not recall the circumstances.

The anonymous caller claimed that internal conflict emerged between alleged drug users and members who wanted to clean up the fraternity's image.

"It was because of that the standards started to decrease," he said.

"We got that big debt with ASU. Nobody cared — people would smoke pot up on the roof. People who would say, 'No, you shouldn't smoke pot on the roof' — those people were criticized and ostracized."

Asked about the destruction of the house, the source said, "They just had the attitude that, 'If they (ASU or another fraternity) are going to come into our house — our house — we're going to not make it easy for them.'"

Packed parking

The still crowded Parking structure #4 in mid-afternoon Thursday testifies to the difficult task facing students attempting to find a parking place.

Decals oversold; luckless parkers ticketed

By GARIN GROFF
STATE PRESS

An overselling of ASU parking decals by as much as 33 percent crammed cars beyond Lot 4's 2,600 vehicle capacity this week, causing frantic students to park in unspecified areas and receive tickets for obstructing traffic.

"All of our lots on campus are oversold," said Linda Riegel, assistant director of parking and transit.

In the first four days of this week, 71 citations were issued for Parking Structure 4, which Riegel said is this year's most overcrowded structure.

Riegel could not say how many tickets were issued for obstructing traffic. Such citations cost $18-$25.

Riegel said fewer permits were issued this year for Structure 4 in an attempt to alleviate the same overcrowding problem that occurred last year in the structure.

But "we didn't crank it down enough," she said.

"It's kind of like deja vu. It's something we didn't want to experience a second time."

Liz Coury, a 20-year-old sports medicine major, said she was 10 minutes late to class Wednesday afternoon after spending 45 minutes looking for a parking space in the four-level structure.

Coury said she is upset that she sometimes has to park on the uncovered level after she paid $105 to be in the structure because she didn't want her car to be in the sun.

"We're talking a hundred dollars for covered parking, and I had to park on the top. I think it's kind of unfair for people who did pay $105 for covered parking and (they) end up on the top."

Students who have early morning classes said they did have

Awareness prevents victimization

By GREG SEXTON
STATE PRESS

Heidi Bolstad says she is not phobic about becoming victimized. But then again, she's not naive either.

The 25-year-old is an English major at ASU. She knows that there are some safe places around ASU and Tempe, but she knows there are other more ominous areas.

Those dark, empty places are the ones that she stays away from to avoid becoming a victim.

"I am not scared of people or anything," Bolstad said Thursday afternoon, sitting in the netted atrium of the Social Sciences building.

"ASU is not like New York, where someone gets killed every 10 seconds or whatever, but I am aware of my surroundings. I just try to be sensible, and I use common sense to stay clear of any potential problems."

Bolstad said she knows that Tempe's partying, college-town image can pose many potential threats for ASU students, both on and off campus.

Given recent crime statistics for ASU and the Tempe area, students have reason to worry.

According to the 1993 year-to-date Tempe Police Uniformed Crime Report, which reflects crimes reported through July, there have been 41 sexual assaults, 124 robberies and 313 thefts in Tempe this year. Crime is up 6.6 percent this year, according to Tempe police.

An abduction

Like many other students, Bolstad is well aware of last spring's abduction of ASU student Theresa Hetherington. And it still scares her.

Hetherington was abducted last Feb. 2 from parking lot 59, just east of Sun Devil Stadium. Her captors took her to a field in Gila Bend, where she was beaten, maimed and left for dead. During her tragic ordeal, her kidnappers severed most of her right ear.

While police are still actively investigating the case, it remains unsolved.

And as the memories of the case linger on, so too do the fears of countless ASU students.

"After the Hetherington case, I immediately went out and bought some mace," said Tricia Farwell, a 22-year-old public relations student at ASU.

"Just in case something happens, I want to be ready."

For both Farwell and Bolstad, the biggest fear is rape.

"I think that is the worst thing that could happen," Farwell said. "It is a violation of the worst kind."

Said Bolstad, "Men don't realize that women walk around with this constant fear. It takes away any sense of power and security."

Athletic department officials violated a contract with the Associated Students of ASU for seating at Sun Devil football games by issuing new athletic ID's, said the then-president of ASASU.

Dave Braaten said the imposition of a $1 late charge and a $15 lost fee violated the predetermined agreement because it raised the price of the tickets.

... It was made known that teachers whose classes conflicted with the ASU-UCLA football game were able to cancel them without fear of retribution from the University.

The then-academic vice president said that there was no provision for class dismissals.

The University did not approve the idea of canceling classes, but it had not officially condemned it either.

Students unimpressed by changes

By JAMES FRUSETTA
STATE PRESS

Some ASU students say they are unimpressed with ASU President Lattie Coor's undergraduate initiatives to date, despite administrative satisfaction with early returns.

"Class sizes still are very large and it's still hard to get the class you want," said Edward Gomes, an ASU junior. "A lot of the classes you want to get into, you have to get an override for, and the professors haven't been too cooperative about them."

Coor outlined his undergraduate initiatives in January. Included in the goals was a guarantee of course availability as sequentially needed. Coor also committed to the improvement of recruiting, advising, course selection, scheduling and financial aid.

Although he stressed the slow nature of improvement, Coor was pleased with some early successes.

"From the data we see now," Coor said, "if a student registers before the last flurry, he or she now has a much better chance of getting a class."

Coor added that the University has emulated "Eastern Airlines, where if a plane was full, they'd schedule another plane. If a class is full, we try to offer another class."

But improvements aren't apparent to everyone.

"Classes are a lot larger than I expected," said Shawn Gaylord, a junior political science major. "Registration lines were very long."

One common complaint is the overall lack of quality of advisement.

"The counseling here (is a problem). The business school here is the only department that really helps its students," said Sharynn Bro, a sophomore psychology major. "But every other department that I've encountered ... they don't help you, they just hand you the program of study and say, 'Fill this out' and 'take a couple of classes.'"

"I know there's a lot of students who really don't know what (classes) to take ... and you can't graduate because you didn't fulfill all your classes," she added.

University officials acknowledge a need for improvement, but point out previous successes.

"In-touch registration is only in its second year, and it is light-years from where it was," said Coor.

Faculty Senate President Bill Arnold observed a difficulty in planning a University course schedule that accommodates ASU's wide variety of students.

"Of the 400 students I've talked with, in only two cases were the classes needed actually not offered," Arnold said. "Classes are offered, but it's difficult to accommodate every student."

Arnold plans to speak with 1,000 students to receive feedback from ASU's undergraduate population.

"From the students I've heard from, there are three main problems," said Arnold. "Parking, advising and faculty availability."

But administrators are confident that students will witness improvement in the areas defined by the undergraduate initiatives.

"We've made some impressive strides," Coor said.

And some students were pleasantly surprised by the new semester.

"My classes are pretty small — my math is the biggest, with only 40 people," said freshman journalism major Milanka Elfimenko. "I kind of expected bigger classes."

Around Arizona

Arizona given upbeat economic forecast

PHOENIX (AP) — With 41,000 new jobs this year, Arizona's employment picture will continue to improve, state analysts say.

The state's employment will grow about 2.7 percent in 1993, even more favorable than it appears in light of what is happening in other states, acting Department of Economic Security Director Linda Blessing said Wednesday.

The construction work force should grow 6.6 percent this year and 7 percent next, creating 3,600 jobs, Blessing said.

"That may not sound like a lot, but it certainly runs counter to the trend in other states, notably California and Massachusetts, and to the record in Arizona in recent years," she said.

Next year's projected growth will be the largest since 1987.

The projected growth figures are slightly lower for Maricopa County but higher in other parts of the state.

In Maricopa County, 1993 growth is expected to reach 2.5 percent and 3.1 percent in 1994.

Man gets 3 years for fake IDs

TUCSON (AP) — A judge has sentenced a man to three years in prison for making fake identification cards for college students, who used the bogus IDs to buy alcohol and obtain credit cards.

Derrick Berry Fontenot, 24, was also ordered Wednesday to pay $1,700 restitution to department stores after pleading guilty to one count of forgery.

Although 90 percent of the cards, which included fake drivers licenses, were used for alcohol purchases, some were used to get department store credit cards and then not make payments, Chief Deputy County Attorney David White said.

Fontenot had been indicted on eight counts of forgery and one count each of theft, conspiracy, fraud scheme and artifice and participating in a criminal syndicate.

White said the prison term was appropriate.

"If he was selling IDs to people who are underage and who would drink and drive and kill people, I don't think that (sentence) is excessive," White said.

Republicans want extension for mandatory auto insurance

PHOENIX (AP) — House Republican reaction to a proposed compromise on mandatory auto insurance was mixed as said it didn't go far enough despite providing an 18-month extension.

Previous proposals called for a 5-year extension of the law that will expire Jan. 1 unless the Legislature renews some form of it.

State Rep. Greg Patterson, R-Phoenix, presented a compromise Thursday worked out with Sen. John Wettaw, R-Flagstaff, for possible action at a fall special session.

The measure discussed in the Republican caucus Thursday included making uninsured motorist insurance optional, reducing liability limits, making all insurers offer monthly premium payment plans and providing part-time insurance for stored vehicles.

Similar proposals failed in the regular session early this year, and House members indicated there aren't not votes to pass the proposal now.

NAU researcher halts project because of hantavirus fear

FLAGSTAFF (AP) — A Northern Arizona University researcher has halted his exploration of ancient plant life because of fears of exposure to the deadly hantavirus.

Peter Koehler had been searching for ancient plant evidence by chipping at petrified pack-rat droppings.

Hantavirus, which has killed 20 people, mostly in the Southwest, is thought to be transmitted through deer mouse excrement.

UN group finds fear in Mostar

MOSTAR, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — U.N. workers on the first aid convoy to reach this besieged city found fear, misery and emaciated Muslims living in the cellars of shattered buildings.

They emerged to cheer the longed-for shipment of food and medicine that would help them through the next few days.

In Mostar's Muslim enclave, exhausted, bone-thin people huddled 100 to a cellar for protection from shelling. Many buildings were riddled with holes from shellfire. Thousands of people have been surviving on meager handouts from three public kitchens.

"People are hungry," Emina Jakic said bluntly. She works in one of the kitchens, handing out mostly rice, mashed potatoes and on rare occasions vegetables.

For those wounded by shelling or sniper fire, prospects are bleak. Until the arrival of the convoy, the hospital had no medicine.

The hospital itself is under constant sniper fire. A large sign on one of its walls warns: "Careful, Snipers!"

Dr. Zlatko Guzin said the hospital had one day's supply of blood left and had also run out of oxygen.

Guzin, who is among those tending to the 30 to 40 newly wounded who arrive daily, said he has lost 22 pounds during the siege and sleeps in the hospital because he is afraid to return home.

Sheik pleads innocent in bombing

Supporters in a rage over arrest

NEW YORK (AP) — Amid heavy courtroom security, the Muslim sheik accused of masterminding the World Trade Center blast pleaded innocent Thursday to concocting a campaign of bombings, kidnappings and assassinations in the United States.

Fourteen co-defendants entered the same plea during a hearing at federal court in Manhattan exactly six months after the Feb. 26 bombing. The appearance was Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman's first as a defendant in the alleged conspiracy.

After the sheik's followers in Egypt threatened to retaliate against the United States "if any harm occurs" to him, the courtroom was wall-to-wall with plainclothes security and streets outside were lined with police.

Prosecutors feared that other members of the terrorist cell remain free. "Whether or not we've identified the major players, obviously there's a concern that there may be others out there that we don't know about," said

Matthew Fishbein, chief assistant U.S. attorney. "These are violent people who have demonstrated they successfully completed bombings and planned others."

The sheik was charged Wednesday with orchestrating a terror network that bombed the World Trade Center, killed militant Rabbi Meir Kahane and plotted other bombings, kidnappings and assassinations, including that of Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak.

The suspects walked into the courtroom handcuffed and in single file. Abdel Rahman, wearing sunglasses and a red hat, was the last to enter.

None spoke during the hearing; some greeted family members in the court by saying "Peace be with you" in Arabic.

The indictment returned Wednesday charged the suspects with plotting a "war of urban terrorism" against the United States.

It also charged El Sayyid Nosair with the murder of Kahane, although Nosair was acquitted of state charges in the Nov. 5, 1990 slaying. And it detailed plans to attack U.S. military installations, murder FBI agents and

Study predicts lifting ban won't hurt military

WASHINGTON (AP) — An independent study commissioned by Defense Secretary Les Aspin last April and made public Thursday recommended that gays be permitted to serve openly in the military — a conclusion Aspin eventually rejected.

The study by the Rand Corp., a research group with longstanding ties to the Defense Department, cost $1.3 million.

After President Clinton told Aspin last winter to prepare a draft executive order "ending discrimination" in the military on the basis of sexual orientation, Aspin ordered two reports, one by a group of senior military officers and the other by Rand.

Neither report had been made public before.

The Clinton administration policy, announced July 19, was built on the recommendations of the officers' report, which stated that while sexual orientation is a private matter, openly declared gays should be barred from the military.

"All homosexuality is incompatible with military service," the officers' summary report, dated July 1, said. "The effect on combat effectiveness is not limited to known homosexuals."

The Rand report, by contrast, concluded that while concerns about the possible effects of permitting homosexuals to serve are not groundless, "the problems do not appear insurmountable, and there is ample reason to believe that heterosexual and homosexual military personnel can work together effectively."

Clinton faced unanimous opposition to lifting the gay ban from the six members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the president's most senior military advisers.

The Rand study said the scope of problems envisioned by critics of lifting the ban had been exaggerated.

"Open homosexual military personnel are likely to be rare, at least in the foreseeable future," Rand said. "Homosexuals in the military will be under enormous informal pressure to 'stay in the closet,' even without any explicit requirement to do so."

Liberal Democrats in Congress had demanded that the Pentagon release the Rand study before the House and Senate consider next year's defense budget, which includes language legal-

Hostage crisis ends, but problems remain

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — A week-long hostages crisis that raised fears of renewed civil war ended peacefully Thursday with rival rebel groups heading towards different hideouts after releasing their remaining captives.

The crisis ended as suddenly as it had begun, but it did little to defuse the violence that has been plaguing this Central American nation for decades, caused by rampant poverty and heavy-handed politics.

One group of former Contra rebels, who have rearmed, seized dozens of hostages — mostly sympathizers of the leftist Sandinista movement — in the northern city of Quilali on Aug. 19.

Pro-Sandinista rebels armed with assault rifles retaliated hours later by seizing the headquarters in Managua of the National Opposition Union, a loose coalition of 14 parties whose candidate Violeta Chamorro won presidential elections in 1990.

All in all, about 70 hostages were held in both places, including Vice President Virgilio Godoy, who was held by the Sandinistas. Slowly, each group released their captives through the mediation of Roman Catholic Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo and former President Daniel Ortega, a Sandinista leader.

Hundreds celebrated for hours in the streets of Managua when Godoy and four fellow conservative leaders were released shortly before midnight Wednesday.

"Long live Godoy!" the crowd shouted. The celebration continued until dawn.

Boos n' Bravos

BOO — to the recent trashing of the Delta Theta Chi house, which came after fraternity members were evicted by the University to make roof repairs.

While no one has yet been charged with any crime, several fraternity members have stepped forth — not to defend themselves or apologize for anything they're being accused of — but to dispute the amount of damage.

While we're at it, boo to fraternity and sorority members who have rushed to point to the coverage of the damage as proof of a State Press conspiracy to destroy the Greek system. The thought of not covering the story is ludicrous. Like it or not, charges of that magnitude are news, regardless of whether the people involved make a positive impact at other times.

Most have defended their fellow Greeks without giving a second thought to whether the actions were right or wrong in the first place.

BRAVO — to the ASU researchers who worked on the Thermal Emissions Spectrometer that took the fateful trip on the Mars Observatory. Although the mission failed and the Observer has either been shot down by Martians or is still floating toward the asteroid belt, the women and men who worked for so long and so hard on the project should be commended.

BOO — to ASU Parking Services for overselling parking spaces. Assistant Director Linda Riegal admitted that her department oversold parking permits from 25 to 33 percent this year, because fewer students will use the spaces as the year drags on.

The argument sounds good on paper, but tell that to the 18 students per day who receive tickets for trying to find alternate spaces — all because University officials screwed up.

It's bad enough that students have to pay $105 to park a mile away from campus. Now some are finding that those fees don't even guarantee them spaces.

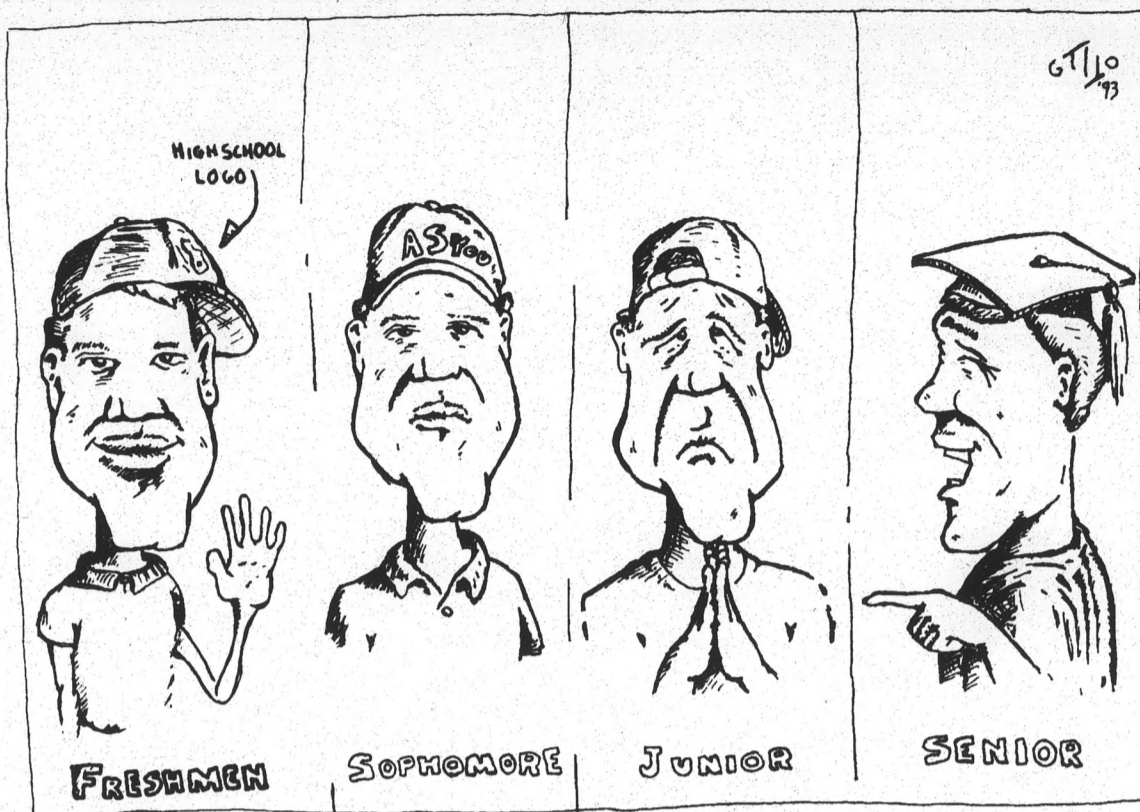

ASU owes ticket appeals, parking sticker refunds and a big apology to a whole lot of students.

BRAVO — to ASU officials for sticking by their decision to admit convicted felon James Hamm into the law school. Although some may feel the school may have erred in originally accepting Hamm, officials have displayed real courage in refusing to back down on the matter, despite threats from lawyers, state lawmakers and even Gov. Fife Symington.

BRAVO — to James Hamm himself, for having the will and the guts to try to give back to the community he took so much from. He has paid for his crime with 18 of the most valuable years of his life and he deserves a second chance. He wants to better himself through education and, by all means, he should better himself. He owes it to himself, and he owes it to the community that spared his life. Good luck, Mr. Hamm.

Too many students spoil society

Conventional wisdom holds that the world would be such a better place if only more people had a college education. Think again. The truth may be just the opposite.

A college education is not necessary for most jobs. I've never had a single job where anything I learned in my undergraduate school was of any relevance.

So why do studies show that college graduates earn more money? Two reasons:

One, college graduates are more intelligent than non-college graduates. They are not more intelligent because of college. They were more intelligent before entering college, and are still more intelligent when they graduate.

Intelligent people gravitate toward higher education, and institutions of higher learning admit applicants based on such things as high school grades and SAT scores, both functions of one's intelligence.

Two, employers discriminate against non-college graduates. They discriminate for two reasons.

One is social snobbery. They will also discriminate against you if you wear a cheap polyester suit to the job interview.

Another reason is there are so many college graduates these days that employers can afford to discriminate. Back when few went to college, if companies demanded that their salesmen had college degrees they'd never hire any salesmen.

People go to college because they want to earn more money, it's the socially acceptable thing to do and it's affordable because someone else is paying for it.

These are pretty good reasons for going to college. This writer does not suggest that anyone currently enrolled in school drop out. For the majority of readers, it is certainly to your advantage to complete your education.

The purpose of the column is to point out the possibility that society does not benefit from its current emphasis on formal education. Hundreds of thousands of college graduates have received their diplomas only to discover that there are no jobs available.

MICHAEL KANTOR
Columnist

This is a clear indication that our nation is turning out more college graduates than needed.

Why are so many people going to college these days? Because someone else is paying for it! That someone else may be the student's parents. But often, it is government. For example, tuition at ASU is only a small fraction of what it costs the state of Arizona to give you your education. Furthermore, the federal government spends all sorts of money on grants and loans to students and universities.

Some readers at this point are no doubt jumping up and down in their seats thinking that there is a fourth reason why people go to college, and that fourth reason is more important than the three I've previously mentioned. These readers are thinking that they went to college to learn.

My first answer is that it is a fallacy that one can learn only in a formal classroom setting, or that no learning takes place on the job.

When it comes to learning practical job skills, there is probably no better way to learn than by doing.

Secondly, I strongly suspect that the vast majority of college students are not really interested in learning.

Even in law school, where you would expect the students to be more intellectual, my suggestions that the lectures of a certain flamboyant Civil Procedure professor would be much more enlightening if one spent extra time preparing for his class are often met with a blank expression, suggesting that the listener is wondering why he would want to spend any extra time preparing for class if such time spent is not likely to improve his grade.

Needless education can be damaging to our nation's productivity. We pay for such education twice.

Once when our hard-earned tax dollars are used to pay for it, and once again through all the lost productivity — people who could be working and contributing to the economy instead of wasting four years or more of their life not learning anything useful.

Michael Kantor is a second-year law student at ASU. His column appears on Fridays.

"Why are so many college students going to college these days? Because someone else is paying for it! That someone else may be the student's parents. But often, it is government."

Law & Disorder

Law school makes mockery of ASU

BY JAMES MCGREGOR
GUEST COLUMNIST

Today, more than ever, members of the legal profession are concerned about their social reputations. However, they seem more concerned about controlling the jokes about the profession than with controlling the quality of those allowed in the profession, such as the case at ASU.

In the fall of 1992, I returned to my home state of Arizona with a few years of engineering experience and the goal of entering the joint MBA/JD program, a graduate business and law program at ASU. After completion, I had planned to open my own practice in Phoenix to provide both business and legal services to the small business community in an effort to help them remain competitive in the growing global economy. Unfortunately, my plans were cut short by the questionable admissions policies of the College of Law.

I have GPA and LSAT scores around the median of those accepted by the law school, a prosperous career, a clean past, and a goal of helping the business community and general public of Arizona. In addition, I am enrolled in ASU's MBA program, which is ranked in the top 40 MBA programs in the country by Business Week and the top 50 by US News and World Report. Yet, even though the law catalog states that "...the Colleges of Law and Business offer graduate students a program in Law and Business Administration that will lead concurrently to the degrees of Juris Doctor and Business Administration," I quickly learned that the College of Law does not and has not supported this program. Despite this, I applied to the College of Law for the fall 1993 class and was placed on a waiting list, just to be later denied like so many others. Then to add insult to injury, I learned from the Arizona Republic that the College of Law had admitted James Hamm, who had just been paroled after serving 18 years in prison for committing murder during a drug deal. I can only assume that this is what is meant by "blind justice" or "the questionable ethics of lawyers."

The admissions department has defended its decision by justifying Hamm's admission by citing that he scored in the 96th percentile of the LSAT. In addition, others have supported the decision by saying that Hamm should be given a second chance. However, should this second chance be supported by taxpayers' money, and should it be in a profession that necessitates integrity and is not known for giving second chances?

To answer these questions, you need to consider Hamm's past and future contributions to society.

- First, consider the fact that James Hamm has spent the majority of his life as a juvenile or in prison, which means he has been a drain on society and has paid little in taxes. However, for 18 years the taxpayers paid for his living expenses and his undergraduate education while he was in prison. In addition, Hamm has Arizona residency, which will require the taxpayers to fund the majority of his legal education if he attends a public institution, such as ASU.

- Second, he has little or no chance of being admitted to the state Bar based on his past conduct and conviction. This will limit him to his current paralegal abilities in the legal environment.

- Third, his goal is to support a prisoner rights advocacy group. How much of a benefit will this be to society? What about the rights of the victims of capital crimes? Is this someone that the public wants to be setting criminal policy?

Even with the explanation given by the College of Law, I am still quite baffled how Hamm was admitted. With the extensive application required by the college, one would assume that admittance into the law program would be based on an individual's college education, work experience, community activities and goals. If this is so, was James Hamm the best qualified candidate? Will his legal education benefit society the most, or were better qualified candidates overlooked just because of his LSAT score? When considering others and myself who applied, I think the law school made a grave mistake.

I have several feelings regarding the matter:

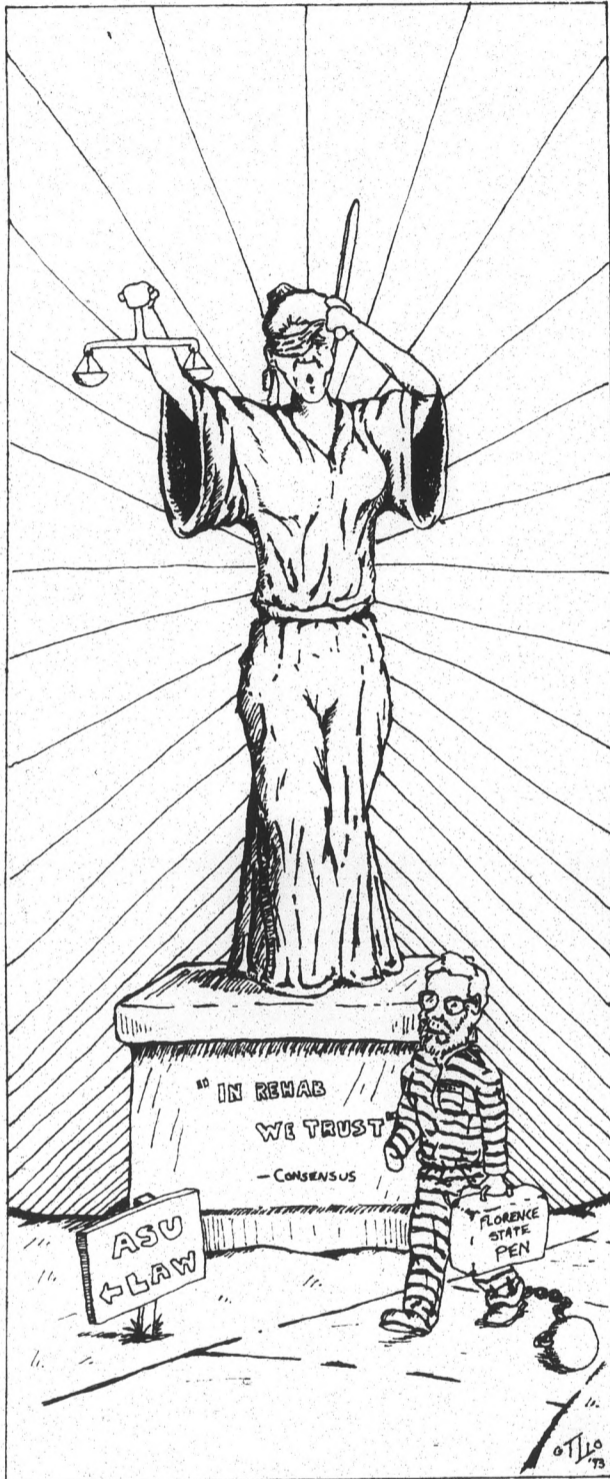

- First, I feel that Hamm's LSAT score is misleading when you consider that his social responsibilities have been minimal. Thus, he had more time to study for the LSAT than most of us can afford.

- Second, I feel that the taxpayers should not be required to support a legal education for James Hamm when it will be of little benefit to the general public and when better qualified applicants were overlooked.

- Third, I feel that the College of Law has jeopardized the reputation of the law program, its students, its alumni, the University and the legal profession.

I have also been informed that these feelings are shared by the governor's office, the attorney general's office and many alumni. This is an insult to the taxpayers, to all the students of the University (especially those currently enrolled in the law program) and to the alumni. I would encourage everyone to inform Lattie Coor, the president of ASU, at 965-5606 and Richard Morgan, the dean of the College of Law, at 965-6188 of their opinions.

Although improvements in Arizona's universities seem to be slow, this may encourage those in charge to consider the effects of their decisions on the students, the taxpayers, the alumni and society as a whole.

Hamm deserves second chance

BY CHUCK HADD
GUEST COLUMNIST

If you've read the story on James Hamm's admission to law school in Monday's State Press, you already know where I stand. I'm a friend of Hamm. We met in prison 14 years ago. I had just arrived with a mandatory 5-year sentence and a lot of bitterness. The lack of it in Hamm was one of the first things I noticed about him. I got to know Hamm better in time. I also got to know more about his crime, in bloody detail, than any account you might have read in the media.

Yes, it was a deliberate, planned murder and all the more base because it lacked any emotional context. It wasn't done in anger. It wasn't done for revenge or some convoluted, goofy notion of honor. The motive was simply a mathematical calculation — a monetary sum divided between two trigger men and an accomplice who would drive the getaway vehicle.

The victims were from Missouri. They had come to Tucson with $1,500 in cash, but no real dope connections — just big-bucks dreams spawned by the prohibition of marijuana. They were criminals, technically speaking, but harmless. And they were very naive, country boys with Christian upbringings. Seventeen years later, their family members would be contacted regarding their killer's application for a commutation of sentence. They would not object.

Hamm's own background was similar. He had attended a Christian college in Kansas. In prison, he was known as "Country" Hamm. And if this was all I knew about him, I wouldn't be standing by him now in the midst of yet another media frenzy.

Ours is a genuine friendship, based on mutual understanding and respect. It's based on integrity and character, not image and status. It's the latter that concerns Dan Cracchiolo, the lawyer who started the flap over Hamm's admittance to law school. It's not Hamm's crime that bothers him. It's the legal profession's image.

Along with the image concerns, his letters to ASU administrators noted his willingness to hurt the school financially if he didn't get his way. The implied threat of this mode of thinking is characteristic of prison gangs. If Cracchiolo is concerned about the profession's image, he ought to look in a mirror instead of just at what Hamm did 18 years ago, and nothing about him since.

The PR-conscious Cracchiolo sent copies of his letter to newspapers. This, of course, started political opportunists from the governor on down crawling out of their nests at the chance to stick themselves on a sensational headline like grease-stained refrigerator magnets.

As his friend, my impulse was to go on the attack, pick apart their bogus objections and rub their hypocrisy in their faces. And I gathered up stone for the attack, including a memo-letter from former Arizona Chief Justice Frank Gordon to state judges and conversations with some lawyers I know, one a recent graduate from ASU's law school. Perhaps another day. But going on about the attack, even in print, isn't the sort of thing Hamm would want me to do on his behalf. It says something about his character. So do the past 18 years of his life, beginning right when he was arrested.

At the time of his arrest, Hamm had no criminal record or violent history. At 26, he had never even been arrested before.

Charges against the accomplice, who had introduced the victims to Hamm and co-defendants, were dropped in exchange for his cooperation with the police. But no guns were ever found. Nor were there fingerprints linking Hamm and his co-defendants to the crime. The case against Hamm hinged on the testimony of an accomplice who was a known speed abuser with a criminal history. You don't have to be a lawyer to see the possibility of winning in a jury trial.

Hamm's lawyer suggested another option, that he testify against his co-defendant in exchange for a lesser charge. Considering Hamm's background, the prosecutor would probably agree, the lawyer said, even if the co-defendant went ahead and pleaded guilty on his own. Hamm could be out of prison, possibly in 12 years.

Hamm told his lawyer that he would plead to first-degree murder instead, regardless of how his co-defendant pleaded.

Years later at the hearing, Hamm would explain the decision.

"I was doing my best to hang onto my sanity," he said, "terrified that I would end up going around the bend for the rest of my life." Hamm knew he would be forever lost, he said, "unless I openly accepted responsibility for what I'd done and began to face myself."

However, Hamm demanded one thing before pleading guilty.

A fourth man had also been arrested as a suspected accomplice to the murder. But Hamm insisted that he would not plead guilty until charges against the fourth man were dropped. The prosecutor agreed.

The plea bargain stipulated a 25-year to life sentence, pursuant to Arizona law. At that time, Arizona law allowed a commutation hearing, which Hamm could apply for after serving a mere seven years, and once every seven years thereafter. That he didn't apply for it until he felt he was ready says something about his character.

Hamm's pre-sentence report indicated no assets, no liabilities and no income. It was scheduled five days before Christmas.

Judge Robert Buchanan pronounced the sentence.

Today, Buchanan recalls that Hamm seemed genuinely remorseful.

"I told him to do the time well," Buchanan said. "Evidently he has."

Becoming an easy victim

Tempe Police spokesperson Sgt. Al Taylor said in order for students to avoid becoming victims, they need to be aware of their environment and pay attention to what is happening around them.

Taylor stopped short of calling students "easy victims," but said some may lack "real world" experience that might prevent victimization.

"I hate to tag students," Taylor said. "I think most students who go to ASU are pretty intelligent people.

"But also, coming out of high school and maybe being away from home for the first time, they are not real experienced in the people who want to take advantage of them.

"I think to a certain degree, a little bit of it is naive behavior. You know, they think, 'Someone else is a victim, and I'm not.' That's when you run into trouble. They become complacent about crime until they become a victim and then they learn the hard way."

Bill Bess, director of ASU Department of Public Safety, said his department has seen crime fluctuate on campus over the past three years. However, as shown in the 6.6 percent rise in crime in Tempe, crime numbers are up.

Alcohol significant in student-related crimes

Taylor said alcohol is a prevalent factor in crimes against students.

"Awareness is probably one of the best prevention tools around, but when people start drinking, it affects that awareness," Taylor said. "In Tempe, obviously, we are pretty hard-nosed about issuing DUIs and, generally speaking, as the alcohol consumption among students goes up, most common sense goes down."

Taylor added that many sexual and aggravated assaults in Tempe occur outside of nightclubs, or in other areas where alcohol is involved.

ASU is not the only school plagued by crime. It is a concern for many other members of the Pac-10, the 10-school conference that ASU belongs to.

While ASU has the highest enrollment of any Pac-10 school, it has the fifth highest campus crime rate, according to a recent study released by the FBI.

UofA, UCLA, California and USC had higher crime rates than ASU in 1990 and 1991, as shown in the FBI Uniformed Crime Report.

"It's not the students, it is the opportunity for more crime to occur (around campuses)," said Carol Sheetz, Tempe Police spokesperson. "I would say any person who is not paying attention and does not take precautions is an easy victim."

"The thing with students is if you are totally preoccupied, if you are not paying attention, you make a real easy target. But it is preventable. It's not like we see every day many, many students being battered and left in a corner. It is not that bad. But if your mind is preoccupied, you can walk right into problems."

The important three

Sheetz said to avoid becoming a victim, she usually tells people to keep three things in mind: Evaluate your own inner and mental strength, make decisions based on those feelings and know your limitations. Sheetz recommended that victims assess the environment they are in, ask, 'Would screaming help?' and, if so, yell commands at the person.

Finally, Sheetz says evaluating the assailants and one's own capabilities is a good idea.

"You should ask yourself, 'Can I outrun them? Can I yell loud enough to scare them away?' And even, 'Can I take them?'"

One area where Sheetz is cautious regards using various types of weapons. Mace and guns are effective, she said, but there is a drawback.

"You need to know that it can be used against you," Sheetz said. "When used properly, any weapon is effective, but you have to know what you are doing."

ASU crime on the rise

In 1990, ASU DPS reported one rape; in 1992, it jumped to six. Also in 1990, there were 20 aggravated assaults on campus. In 1992, that number rose to 28.

Larceny and theft also increased from 1,026 in 1990 to 1,081 in 1992. But vehicle theft and robbery numbers are down.

Bess said ASU DPS gives special attention to rape and acquaintance rape.

To prevent becoming a rape victim, ASU DPS suggests:

- Don't drink too much. One drink can affect judgment.
- Say "no" like you mean it.
- Don't hitchhike.
- When possible, always travel with someone.
- Stay in well-lighted areas.
- Lock all car and house doors.
- Park in well-lit areas.
- Use common sense — if something doesn't look right, it probably isn't.

The Tempe Police Department offers a free sexual assault prevention class once a month. Sheetz, the Tempe

Police spokeswoman, said the classes reap positive benefits.

"What we do is put people through scenarios," Sheetz said. "We have them walk (around) the police building — with guides — and we present them with a variety of situations and we see how they react."

"At the end, we show them what they should have done to avoid being a victim. The feedback I have gotten from the men and women who have gone through the class is that they felt like it was very helpful."

Sheetz said if anyone is interested in the class, she advises calling the Tempe Police Department at 350-8305. Classes fill up fast, so she advised calling on the first day of the month to ensure a place.

There are ways to stay safe on campus, and most of the suggestions are based in common sense. One popular program is the student government-sponsored Safety Escort Service (SES).

Safe and smart

The program offers ASU students an escort Monday through Thursday nights from 7:15 p.m. to 12:15 a.m., though SES officials said there are plans for expanding the hours and days this semester. Call 965-1516 for more information.

Bess said more of the blue-light emergency phones are being installed on campus. There are about 150 such phones on campus right now, and Bess said the average response time to calls is one to three minutes.

But Bess said the best safety precaution is your gut feelings.

"Trust your instincts," Bess said. "It's better to be safe than sorry. Safety consciousness is needed to reduce the risk of crimes occurring on students."

SES expects busiest year ever

BY GREG SEXTON
STATE PRESS

The Safety Escort Service (SES) — a program escorting ASU students to their cars or dorms — will be in more demand than ever this semester, according to the program's director.

SES director Larissa Nelson said her office has been flooded with calls so far this semester, but added that better equipment and more volunteers should be able to handle the increasing need.

"This year, the goal is to get more volunteers and also to get more publicity out," Nelson said of the student government-funded program.

"There is a need. A lot of people worry about being a victim, and they are scared of what might be lurking behind the bushes."

Nelson said another goal this year is to expand the service to seven days a week and possibly to extend the hours. The service is offered Sunday through Thursday, from 7:15 p.m. to 12:15 a.m.

ASU Department of Public Safety reports that in 1992, there were six rapes on campus and 28 aggravated assaults. Over the past three years, ASU DPS reported a total of seven rapes, 13 robberies and 71 assaults.

"We have a lot of people who are regulars, and they tell us they don't feel safe," Nelson said. "But we want to get to those who may not know about the service."

Nelson said SES has one dispatcher, and the escorts will soon be equipped with two-way radios. The escorts also wear bright yellow T-shirts and carry flashlights.

Tempe police spokeswoman Carol Sheetz said programs like SES help prevent students from becoming easy targets.

"Doing things in pairs can do a world of good," Sheetz said. "We tell people that whenever possible, do things in pairs and if not, let someone know where you are going and when you will be back. Those types of things are real important."

Call 965-1516 for more information on SES.

not have trouble finding spaces, but found the lot usually was packed when they returned to their cars in the afternoon.

Riegel said she expects the structure's overcrowding to end by the end of next week, based on past studies of parking patterns.

"We've never had a problem after the first two weeks of classes," Riegel said.

About 25,000 parking permits have been issued this year even though there are only 18,000 spaces, Riegel said.

Riegel said parking lots are routinely oversold from 25 to 33 percent to keep fees from rising and because demand for parking is spread throughout the day.

Drivers with permits for Structure 4 can also park in Lots 40 and 44, which are located directly north and south of the structure, Riegel said. Signs have been ordered, which will be posted at each of the structure's three entrances to notify drivers of the other lots.

An enforcement officer has been in the lot this week to issue citations and direct students into Lots 40 and 44.

Thousands of Muslims thronged to the 19-truck convoy as it rolled into Mostar's Muslim enclave early Thursday, some smiling at the thought their ordeal had ended. Others banged on truck windows and asked for cigarettes and chocolate.

The Muslims, cut off for two months and under attack by Bosnian Croats, also welcomed the convoy for the protection it might offer from Croat shelling.

After unloading the drugs, powdered milk and food, the U.N. workers found themselves caught between Croats who had tried to prevent them from entering the city and hundreds of Muslims who mobbed the convoy to keep them from leaving.

"If you leave, they are going to massacre us," cried one Muslim woman.

Some carried signs reading: "Why did the world forget us?"

"You're our guarantee," read another sign carried by a Muslim who felt the presence of U.N. workers would deter attacks.

Rag-tag soldiers fired into the air and moved a bus onto the road to block the convoy's exit.

Cedric Thornberry, a top U.N. officer for the region, threatened to stop all humanitarian aid to Bosnia unless the trucks were allowed to leave.

The day before, it was weeping Croat women who had blocked the convoy 10 miles west of Mostar and demanded the trucks be searched for arms.

It marked the first time prosecutors had tied the whole package together, laying out the workings of a terror group that operated for at least four years prior to the Feb. 26 blast that killed six and injured more than 1,000 at the Trade Center.

The United Nations, a federal office building, and the Holland and Lincoln Tunnels also were targeted by the group, the indictment said.

Abdel-Rahman, who has repeatedly denied any involvement in the terrorism, was identified as a "Godfather"-like boss, responsible for settling disputes, approving plans and detecting government surveillance.

In Egypt, followers of the sheik issued a statement Thursday warning that they were prepared to strike back over Abdel-Rahman's arrest. The sheik, fighting deportation, has been in jail izing a restrictive policy on gays in the military.

The House and Senate are expected to consider the defense budget when Congress returns from its August recess the week of Sept. 6.

Faced with vigorous opposition from the military and some lawmakers, Clinton abandoned his campaign pledge to lift the ban outright and instead announced the policy that makes few changes to the existing prohibition.

Clinton's policy ends the practice of questioning recruits and service members about their sexual orientation, and states that homosexual orientation is not a bar to service unless manifested by conduct.

In addition, commanders and agencies cannot begin investigations whose sole purpose is to determine an individual's sexual orientation.

However, the military will continue to discharge service mem-

"They are feeding the Muslims, who are then killing us," shouted Anica Golamac, 59, before the convoy negotiated past.

Before the war, Croats and Muslims lived together in peace in this southwestern city, each comprising about 42 percent of the population.

Croats now control most of the west bank of the Neretva River, which bisects the city, and 55,000 Muslims have been forced into an enclave on the eastern bank. The U.N. convoy also dropped off 90 tons of relief supplies on the Croat side.

Amid warnings from the U.N. that Mostar's Muslims faced starvation, the U.S. Air Force on Wednesday began airdropping food and medical supplies into the city.

Initially allies against Bosnia's Serbs, the Croats and Muslims have fought bitterly for control of Mostar. The Old Bridge which crosses the Neretva River is now heavily damaged from shelling.

But some feel the Muslims and Croats can settle their differences, and that peace can once again come to this city that was renowned for its carpet bazaar and other vestiges of Ottoman domination.

"I could live together with the Croats again," said Maja Memic. The 36-year-old economist was expelled by Croats from her west bank home and is living in a packed cellar that has only one toilet for about 100 people.

"I realize this is only a war madness," she said.

since surrendering to federal authorities on July 2.

"We will take revenge on all U.S. interests and citizens, either in Egypt or outside, if any harm occurs to Sheik Omar," said a statement from three main Egyptian radical groups — al-Gamaa al-Islamiya, or the Islamic group; the Vanguard of Conquest; and the Jihad, or Holy War.

Abdel-Rahman, 55, was negotiating with federal authorities last week for deportation to Afghanistan rather than Egypt, said his immigration lawyer, Barbara Nelson.

The preacher, who spoke often at mosques in Brooklyn and Jersey City, N.J., will now stay in the United States to face criminal charges. The outspoken foe of Egypt's secular government has lived in self-imposed exile here since 1990, a year after his acquittal on charges stemming from anti-government riots in Egypt.

bers who engage in homosexual acts, state that they are homosexual or bisexual or marry or attempt to marry someone of the same sex.

Both the House and Senate Armed Services committees, in their versions of the defense budget, adopted a policy that is more restrictive than Clinton's. It would, for example, allow more investigations of service members suspected of being gay.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., a senior member of the House Armed Services Committee who had called for the report's release earlier this summer, said the Rand study is "such a clear, ringing endorsement of the president's position."

"I wonder why they were so afraid to let it come out," she said in an interview.

Kathleen deLaski, a Pentagon spokesman, said the report was not made available earlier because it had not been put into its final published form.

City Council approves fee plan

By JOY E. BEASON
STATE PRESS

Tempe city council voted unanimously in favor of a proposed ordinance to impose fines on Tempe residents who bring fire fighters or police officers out to check on falsely set off alarms.

The measure was approved by a 7-0 vote.

The ordinance was proposed and passed Thursday night to be "stricter" on offenders in order to prevent false burglar and fire alarms from costing the city millions of dollars per year. After receiving a fourth false alarm, the resident or business owner will pay a $100 fine.

The fine is based on the man-hours spent responding to the false alarm.

Committee announces finalists for head of NAU

By MARK M. MACIAS
STATE PRESS

The NAU presidential search committee has cut its candidate list down to seven and will interview today and Saturday in hopes of replacing former NAU President Eugene Hughes.

The 20-member presidential search committee will interview Great Lakes Colleges Association President Carol Guardo, Northwest Missouri State University President Dean Hubbard, Texas A&I University President Manuel Ibanez, Western Oregon State College President Richard Meyers, Southeastern Louisiana University President Warren Smith, University of Nebraska Executive Vice President Lee Jones and American Association for Higher Education Director Clara Lovett.

Regent Eddie Basha, search committee member, said NAU's new president must be knowledgeable because the University is vital to the Flagstaff community.

"We need someone to perpetuate what NAU has developed," Basha said. "The president must be supportive of the vast opportunities available in the field of telecommunications. NAU is pivotal to the social, economic, cultural (and) educational life of that community."

Basha said the committee hopes to present a list of three candidates to the ABOR "no later than Jan. 1."

Regent Arthur Chapa said he is looking for a president that holds the same University goals that Hughes held.

"We need to make sure that whoever this person is that we hire, is committed to maintaining the special mission that NAU has," Chapa said. "Part of the mission of (NAU) is the outreach it has to rural communities, including the Indian Reservation. (Hughes) and his staff were committed to that and I am going to make sure that the relationships that he built up with the community colleges and with the Navajo tribe and other tribes is maintained.

"(The appointed president must) have that special kind of feeling for the differences between (NAU) and ASU and UofA. We need to have someone that is committed to (maintaining the difference).

Regent Rudy Campbell said the president who is chosen must be an "all-around person (that is) well qualified by experience, education and character."

"I guess the perfect person is what we're looking for," Campbell said. "It's like a marriage — you want the person to be perfect. (The NAU president) must have experience running an institution and he must have the degree requirement, which is a (doctorate)."

Meyers, who has already visited NAU, said it is too soon to say whether he would accept the presidential post, but he hopes Saturday's interview will give him information that will help him decide.

"Certainly, with the number of candidates that (NAU) has had, they have had ample opportunity to pick out someone who fits exactly what they want," Meyers said. "I feel very honored to be in (NAU's) short list, knowing that there were over 170 people (in the running for president)."

Smith said NAU is very similar to the campus that he currently presides over, but it is still "too early to tell" whether he can accept the position.

"The information that has been sent to me describes a very exciting campus with a lot of opportunities ahead of it," Smith said. "It's an attractive position, but I'd have to weigh it carefully with the respective position that I have."

Hughes, who was NAU's president for 12 years, resigned from his post June 30 to become president of Wichita State University. He cited Arizona's tight university budget as the main reason for his resignation.

ASU alumnus sits on City Council

Youngest official encourages participation in city politics

By JOY E. BEASON
STATE PRESS

A 1988 ASU alumnus is taking the perspective of his peers to the Tempe City Council as the group's youngest member.

Joseph Lewis, 27, was elected to office when he was 25, and he says he's vowing to look out for the issues his peers are concerned with.

Some ASU students said they feel better knowing there is someone their age on the City Council, making decisions that affect them.

"It enables them (city council members) to see different points of view," said Natasha Neal, a construction engineering major. "We make up such a large population."

"Since we make up a third of the population, that is big chunk and our voices should be heard," said Josh Long, a communications major.

However, Lewis said ASU students could do a better job of extending influence on city government.

"If they wanted to, they could decide who is elected to city council," he said.

According to Lewis, because ASU's 40,000 students comprise a large part of Tempe's 140,000 residents, the population on campus could have more control over what happens in Tempe. But most students, as well as other voters, do not take the time to go to the polls for city elections, Lewis said.

Although Lewis received his bachelor's degree in political science, he said he never expected to get into politics.

"How often do you pursue a career that has to do with your major? I really enjoyed the political science curriculum, but I didn't think I would get into politics."

Lewis said he decided to get involved with organizations within the city as a result of his nine-year-old audio/visual business. He joined the Chamber of Commerce and other organizations before running for office.

"I became more and more involved ... I found out what Tempe has to offer, and I believed I could have a positive impact," he said. "I wanted to be one of the individuals making a difference. I feel I have a lot to offer ... a lot of energy."

Lewis said he went to city council meetings every Thursday before running for office. In his first campaign, he came in last in the primaries.

ASU graduate Joseph Lewis is the youngest member of Tempe City Council.

Lewis touts a preference to city government as opposed to federal and state, because "you can see what you accomplish every day."

Because he has only been in office for a year, he said he is not sure where his political career will go.

While Lewis claimed he is happy in Tempe, he said he's "not discounting the possibility of moving on."

He credits constituents' suggestions for programs he has brought to the Council and have been implemented, such as the 24-hour hotline and the landlord identification program.

Lewis suggested that political science majors who are interested in running for office get involved.

"Get involved in a community ... all types of different groups, anything. ASU is a good place to start."

"The more people you know, the more impact you will have. You don't know what it is like until you get the real world experience."

POLICE REPORT

A dean referral was filed by ASU DPS Wednesday after ASU professor Myron Goldstein allegedly threw a set of master keys at student Damian Parkinson Monday afternoon in Room 218 of the Physical Sciences Building, police said.

Parkinson, who was working the front desk, attempted to confront Goldstein about the incident and was refused by the professor, police said.

Police said other employees at Physical Sciences told Parkinson that Goldstein had thrown keys at a female worker earlier in the day.

Parkinson and his supervisor Marlene Salvato were told by police that assault charges would not stand and that a referral to the dean was the only option.

Salvato told police that the incident stems from Goldstein's complaint that the Math

Department must hold his keys.

ASU police reported the following incidents Thursday:

- A campus telephone was destroyed Wednesday in Room 105 of the Social Sciences Building. The damage is estimated at $100.

- A wall in the third floor bathroom of the Business Administration Building was damaged Wednesday causing $50 damage.

- An ASU student witnessed a unknown man destroying a lamp post Wednesday on the north side of Old Main. Damage is estimated at $700.

- Two ASU students were arrested Wednesday night after throwing a chair and destroying a light at the Church of Latter Day Saints at 950 S. McAllister Ave. The students were turned over to Tempe police.

- A camcorder bearing ASU identification was found by a Tempe resident and turned over to ASU DPS Wednesday. The camcorder is esti-ated at $600.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Thursday:

- A 25-year-old Phoenix woman was arrested Monday after police seized 60 pounds of marijuana from her rented vehicle at I-10 and Baseline Road. Police received a tip that the woman would attempt the transport to southern Arizona.

- A 17-year-old Mesa youth was arrested last week when he made a prank call to the prayer line at Channel 21 from a Tempe residence. In his call to the prayer line, the suspect allegedly stated that he wanted to kill himself. Police investigated over concern for the man's welfare. Upon realizing the prank, the youth was arrested for false reporting.

- The Taco Bell at 2602 W. Southern Ave. was robbed Wednesday night by a masked gunman. The man approached employees as they were leaving for the night and demanded they open the floor safe. Because of a time lock system on the safe, the burglar took $121 in change and ripped the phone off the wall before departing.

- Police arrested three Phoenix residents Wednesday night at the Circle K at University Drive and McClintock Drive when police broke up their drug deal. Police found a red condom containing crack cocaine behind the seat of the truck after a search.

- A 18-year-old Phoenix man was arrested in the parking lot of 740 W. University Drive Wednesday after police found a unholstered, concealed pistol under his seat. Friends told police that the man is a Wet Back Power gang member.

NEW YORK (AP) — Lips are zipped about the reported nuptials of Spike Lee to lawyer and Sarah Lawrence grad Tonya Linette Lewis.

USA Today and the New York Post reported that the two, seen together frequently at basketball games, plan to marry Oct. 2 at Riverside Church in Manhattan.

"We have no information to give about Spike's private life," said a woman who answered the telephone at Lee's production company in Brooklyn. She wouldn't give her name.

Lewis, 32, is a 1991 graduate of the University of Virginia law school and a 1988 graduate of Sarah Lawrence College. After law school, she went to work for a Washington, D.C., law firm.

NEW YORK (AP) — Remember David Letterman's "Brush With Greatness" bit on NBC? Well, watch for "Celebrity Encounter" on his new CBS show.

About 400 people were in the audience Wednesday when the gap-toothed one taped his first late-night show for his new network.

Though "Late Show With David Letterman" makes its debut Monday, the taped program won't be broadcast for a few weeks.

Since NBC made a fuss about Letterman taking some of his signature gags with him to the Ed Sullivan Theater, he had to slightly alter names. Hence, his running bit about bumping into celebrities got a new name and his Top 10 list is now "The Late Show Top Ten."

The guest on the taped show was David Brenner, who Letterman said was the last comic to appear in the theater when it was home to "The Ed Sullivan Show."

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — An AIDS activist who spoke at the Republican National Convention was picked Thursday by Miss America Leanza Cornett for the pageant's $50,000 Woman of Achievement Award.

Mary Fisher, a Florida artist who has the virus that causes AIDS, urged an end to partisan politics in the search for a cure. She also called during her convention speech last year for greater tolerance of people with AIDS.

"I'm honored and grateful for the award," said Fisher, the mother of two. "More than that, I'm hopeful that this means institutions we've identified with true Americana ... are recognizing the tidal wave of AIDS and beginning to address the epidemic candidly."

Cornett spent her year as Miss America talking about AIDS and met Fisher then.

"She's the most compassionate woman I've ever met and she's more deserving of this award than any woman I know," Cornett said.

Fisher said she will use the money for a non-profit organization she founded to raise awareness of the disease. The award will be presented during the Sept. 18 telecast of the Miss America pageant, when Cornett passes the crown to the 1994 winner.

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Bob Hope's wife, Dolores, collected an honorary degree from Creighton University while in town for the dedication of a new student center at the Jesuit school.

She thanked the university during an appearance Wednesday, saying she needs all the degrees "I can get to catch up with Bob."

The 52,000-square-foot student center was named for the late V.J. and Angela Skutt. V.J. Skutt was chairman emeritus of the Mutual of Omaha companies until his death in February. He was a 1923 graduate of Creighton's School of Law.

The center, which was completed in 1987, was funded largely through gifts from Mutual of Omaha. Mrs. Hope was a longtime Mutual of Omaha board member.

PETERSBURG, Va. (AP) — When Kareem

Abdul-Jabbar left the polish of the basketball court for the glare of the silver screen, the transition was relatively easy.

After all, he'd been acting during much of his 20-year NBA career.

While playing for the Milwaukee Bucks and Los Angeles Lakers, he appeared in at least a dozen movies and television shows, including "Airplane," "Fletch," "Troop Beverly Hills," "Mannix" and "Emergency."

His first summer job in college was for Columbia Pictures in the mailroom.

"Going to UCLA and having connections in Southern California didn't hurt, he said while taking a break from a television movie for which he is the co-executive producer.

He said he doesn't feel that basketball interfered with a possible movie career.

"I had the most opportunity in basketball, and the most talent. I really didn't see myself as an actor," he said.

Now, he only plays basketball when his son asks for help.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar Jr., 17, plays for the Brentwood School in Los Angeles. "I don't know if he's going to be in the NBA, but he'll be a good college player," his father said.

Fired referee suing Pac-10

A basketball referee, who was released by the Pac-10 last May after he said some referees "should be weeded out," has filed a lawsuit demanding his job back and more than $1 million.

The lawsuit, filed by Tom Harrington of Chico, Calif., against the Pac-10 and two conference officials was reported Thursday by the Tucson Citizen, the newspaper which published Harrington's original comments.

The suit, filed Aug. 16 in California's Contra Costa County, accuses the conference, Commissioner Tom Hansen and Pac-10 supervisor of officials Booker Turner of deprivation of the right to freedom of speech, defamation of character, fraud and deceit, and intentional infliction of emotional distress.

Lambright to coach Huskies

Longtime assistant Jim Lambright has been given a four-year contract to succeed Don James as head football coach of the Washington Huskies.

Athletic Director Barbara Hedges announced the move Thursday, four days after Washington was handed a two-year bowl ban by the Pac-10 for violating NCAA rules. James resigned in anger Sunday to protest the severity of the bowl penalty.

Lambright, 51, was appointed by Hedges as James' successor that night, but the length of his contract was not immediately determined. Hedges had to work out details with the school's president, Dr. William Gerberding, who was in Colorado.

Hedges said Lambright will receive a base salary of $150,000.

Suns sign Ceballos

Cedric Ceballos, the league leader in field goal percentage last season, signed a five-year contract Thursday with the Phoenix Suns.

The 6-foot-6 forward made $350,000 last season, and club president Jerry Colangelo would not disclose the new salary.

"He has a love and a passion for this game, and I'm not concerned about him having a long-term security blanket because I know that Ced loves the game and he's going to work harder to achieve," Colangelo said at a news conference.

Ceballos, drafted No. 48 in 1990, shot 57.6 percent last year, and averaged 12.8 points and 5.5 rebounds a game last season, more than doubling his averages for rebounds, steals and blocks from the previous year.

Coleman out for season

Vince Coleman, accused of throwing a powerful firecracker at fans, will not return to the New York Mets this season, and the team president vowed Thursday the outfielder "will never wear a Mets uniform again."

Coleman will remain on "administrative leave" — effectively, suspended with pay — until his hearing Oct. 8 in Los Angeles on a felony charge of possession of an explosive device, President Fred Wilpon said.

But Coleman, who still has one year left on a four-year, $12 million contract, "will not play here again as a Met," Wilpon said. Wilpon did not detail how the Mets would get rid of Coleman after the season.

ASU volleyball players, Christine Garner, left, and Leanne Schuster, gained valuable experience by competing against the best the world had to offer this summer while playing for U.S. national teams.

DOUBLE TROUBLE

Garner, Schuster compete on national teams over summer

By PAUL J. MATTHEWS
STATE PRESS

After five months of intense practices, rigorous travel and the demands of a full class schedule, most athletes welcome the off-season and the rediscovery of a social life.

But for ASU volleyball players Christine Garner and Leanne Schuster, last summer meant the opportunity to take their talent to a national level and compete with some of the world's best players.

Garner was one of 130 women that spent three days in Colorado Springs, Colo., vying for a spot on the U.S. team to compete in the World University Games in Buffalo, N.Y. At the end of the tryout, Garner was one of 12 women selected for the team.

But two weeks into practice, three women from the USA national team were brought in to provide some experience to the team competing in the World University Games, causing Garner to be bumped down to the USA national "B" team.

"I felt I could have competed (at the World University Games)," Garner said. "My defense was really good, but my hitting could have been better."

"I got to compete against the German national team as well as their national "B" team. As far as getting experience, it definitely gives you an advantage. I got to see what the next level is like."

Garner attributed her drop to the "B" team to a "lack of experience." She said it was difficult to acquire chemistry with the setters, since half of them were cut and there was no time to practice in a game situation prior to the two-week tour.

"She has the competitive desire, the athleticism and the strength to put the ball away at the national level," ASU coach Patti Snyder said. "She just needs a couple more years to hone all

Long road ahead for Sun Devils

Snyder displeased with team's scrimmage

By SHAUN RACHAU
STATE PRESS

After the completion of a two-hour controlled scrimmage Thursday night at Sun Devil Stadium, Coach Bruce Snyder was quite assured that his team has much to accomplish before the Sun Devils' season opener Sept. 4 vs. Utah.

"I don't know that anything (pleased me)," Snyder said. "I'd like to make excuses for them, and tell them that they're tired and that was why they didn't look very good to me, but I don't want them to hear that."

Although Snyder said that he has not yet given himself the luxury to look at Utah's game film, the first-string offense and defense practiced against formations similar to what the Sun Devils will see in their first game.

"It was new stuff and it was a new format," Snyder said regarding Thursday's scrimmage. "We've always scrimmaged against each other, rather than against an opponent team, so there is enough newness to give them an excuse to look bad."

Snyder is expecting to face the most talented group of wide receivers when the Sun Devils face the Utes. But because Utah's quarterback is new this season, Snyder said the Utes will probably center their attack around the running game.

Despite the criticism of Snyder, a number

The play of sophomore tight end Steve Bush and the rest of the tight end corps will be crucial to the fortunes of ASU's running and passing games.

Bush claims starting job in 2nd season at ASU

This is the fourth story in a series previewing the Sun Devil football team.

ASU assistant coach Dick Arbuckle did not have to find a starting tight end to replace the departed Bob Brasher during the Sun Devils' 10-day preseason camp.

Sophomore Steve Bush had already claimed the starting job prior to the team's departure for Camp Tontozona Aug. 11.

"I think just based on the fact that Steve was with us all during spring and fall camp, it established him as the starter at this point," Arbuckle said. "He's got a full season of experience under him and he's progressed. He's truly a veteran at this point."

Both senior Brian Ryder and Bush were listed as the Sun Devils' starting tight ends

9 freshmen to shore up losses on women's swimming squad

Hill thrilled about recruits, expects leadership from returners

By SCOTT DAVIS
STATE PRESS

Despite losing three starters from last season's squad that finished No. 9 in the nation, ASU women's swimming coach Tim Hill is happy and for good reason.

To minimize the losses of all-American backstroke Ana Azevado and four-year butterfly specialist Betsi Hugh, Hill signed nine highly-recruited freshmen.

In the breast stroke, the Sun Devils added freshmen Cynthia Janssen and Sarah Kovachs to team up with sophomore Beata Kaszuba, who was a second-place finisher last season in the 100-yard breast stroke at the NCAA Championships. Janssen, a three-time all-American at Oak Hills High School in Cincinnati, qualified for the 1992 Olympic Trials in the 200-meter breast stroke.

"I'm pleased with our breast stroke," Hill said. "We think Janssen will be real strong. (Kovachs) can also help us at the Pac-10 level."

Hill didn't waste any time finding a replacement for Azevado at backstroke, as he landed Gretchen Verdoorn from St. Charles, Ill. During her high school career, Verdoorn was a three-time all-American and ranked second nationally in the 100-meter backstroke.

"The loss of Ana will affect the team," Hill said. "Verdoorn has the potential to swim equal to or better than Ana."

In order to keep his nine freshmen motivated both mentally and physically, Hill will rely on the leadership and experience of his returning swimmers. He said he expects his two co-captains, Candice Fuller and Sara Goggin, to especially handle this task.

"Candice does a really good job guiding people and getting people going," Hill said. "Sara is a hard worker and a real spirited person."

The Sun Devils will also expect leadership responsibilities from their returning NCAA qualifiers. Included in this group are Chris Jeffrey, last season's third-place finisher at the NCAA's in the 400-yard individual medley, and Becky Hackiewicz, who finished eighth in the mile.

"All of our returning people should contribute from a leadership standpoint," Hill said. "I feel Chris, Joanne (Currah) and Beata coming back after the NCAA's has a real positive impact on the team."

Hill said he is also expecting improvement from sophomore Susie Fawcett. An honorable mention all-America in the 100-meter breast stroke during high school, Fawcett saw limited action last year because of a strained ligament in her arm.

"I think Susie will be a lot better this year," Hill said. "I think she can be an NCAA scorer. It will depend on the strength of her arm."

With nine new freshmen and numerous other returnees, the upcoming season is not guaranteed to be a walk in the park. Hill said the entire Pac-10 conference has improved since last season.

"We're going to have to improve our speed and relay situation," Hill said. "My goal is to have everyone on the team have at least one lifetime best time."

the skills."

Garner said she was drained after four weeks of practice and two weeks of touring with the national "B" team.

"I'm a little shaky right now, trying to get back and focus," Garner said. "I think I am mentally tired a little bit."

Leanne Schuster, a preseason All-American selection, was a starter on the East team at the U.S. Olympic Festival this summer. She was one of 500 women that tried out for the four 12-woman teams throughout the country.

"You're playing with higher caliber athletes," Schuster said. "It definitely raised the level of my game. I played the best defense I ever played."

The 10-day festival was held in late July and provided Schuster with the opportunity to meet athletes from a variety of Olympic sports.

"It was a really good experience," Schuster said. "There was so many different sports. We had a lot of fun."

Fatigue has not been a problem for Schuster, who keeps herself in shape by playing two-person outdoor volleyball during the summer.

"I think if you're playing indoor all summer you're going to get tired of it," Schuster said. "Playing outdoor helps my game and I don't get bored with the indoor game."

going into preseason camp, but Ryder failed to pass his physical due to a dislocated shoulder he suffered against USC last season. Junior college transfer Matt Nelson will back up Bush until Ryder is given clearance to resume contact drills in practice.

Being one of only five true freshmen that played last year, Bush gained valuable experience on offense and special teams. He saw an increased amount of playing time in the latter part of the season against Washington State after Brasher and Ryder were lost for the season because of injuries. He played in most of the California game and started against UofA.

In his first season, Bush had two receptions for 17 net yards, including a 22-yarder against Cal. He had one kickoff return vs. Oregon for nine yards and scored on a two-point conversion from quarterback Grady Benton against Oregon State.

"Bob Brasher was second-team All-Pac-10 last year and played in the East/West Shrine game, and I really think that Steve has that potential," Arbuckle said. "He's a good hard worker and very dedicated to football. We see him progressing, because he's certainly not as good (now) as he is going to be."

Arbuckle said he expects Ryder to be back and healthy by the Sun Devils' Sept. 18 game at Louisville.

"He has played a lot of football and has started before, so he is a proven commodity," Arbuckle said. "But Bryan will fit into the picture; we just don't know where at this point. He's definitely going to fit in because he is a proven player."

Nelson, who was a first-team All-Western States Football League selection as a sophomore last season at Ricks College, reported to preseason camp 10 pounds lighter and set numerous ASU tight end weightlifting records. He saw limited action in spring drills because of a broken finger he suffered in the third practice.

Arbuckle said Nelson should see playing time this season in one of the many offensive sets the Sun Devils will use their tight ends in. ASU uses a two-tight end formation and a "muscle" formation, which has three tight ends on the line in goal line and short-yardage situations.

"We rely on our tight ends to be both very good blockers and to play an important role in our passing game," Arbuckle said. "They have to be versatile and they have to have the size and the strength to block at the line of scrimmage like an offensive lineman. But by the same token, they have to have the quickness, speed and ability to catch the ball up the field."

of Sun Devils turned in good performances Thursday night.

Tailback Mario Bates had five carries for 80 yards and two touchdowns, scoring on runs of 39 and 10 yards.

Also at running back, Derrick Land had 11 carries for 88 yards and one touchdown, while freshman Michael Martin had seven carries for 22 yards and one touchdown.

Land's performance Thursday night proved to the coaching staff how good of a preseason camp he is having.

"In the two weeks, at (Camp) Tontozona and here, he has proven to me that he can run the football," Snyder said about Land. "Now, what he needs to do is become a complete back."

"He's got great speed and he hits the holes very quickly, but there are still things that he needs in his game. But right now if he was in a game, I wouldn't feel any hesitancy by giving him the ball."

At quarterback, starter Grady Benton was perfect, completing nine of nine passes for 154 yards. He directed five touchdown drives and had one completed pass called back because of a penalty.

Freshman Jake Plummer completed five of eight passes for 53 yards, throwing a 32-yard touchdown pass.

Keith Poole led all receivers with two receptions for 63 yards and a 32-yard touchdown. Carlos Artis had two receptions for 35 yards, and Johnny Thomas had two catches for 34 yards.

On defense, rover Jean Boyd returned a fumble 60 yards for a touchdown.

Defensive end Shante Carver and cornerback Lenny McGill did not participate in the scrimmage. Carver attended a night class and McGill had a tender hamstring.

With game week next week, Snyder is expecting practices to pick up in intensity.

"I would suspect that come Monday, we'll start to get our legs under us and start to have a little more zip and pop and chatter and all that stuff that gives you an indication on how you're team is getting ready," Snyder said. "Right now, they are going, 'Will this ever end?'"

"They've been through training camp and we've pushed them hard this last three days. But it is a hard game, and it is a hard thing that we're attempting to do."
