Students may forfeit ASA representation

Board disagrees on effectiveness of lobbying group

By MARK M. MACIAS
STATE PRESS

ASU students could lose representation in a statewide legislative lobbying group because the University's student leaders cannot reach a consensus on the benefits of membership with the body.

Arizona Students Association delegate and ASU student Rossie Turman said ASU's student leaders want to pull out of the lobbying organization because board members cannot agree on whether the group is effective in its mission to relay educational issues to state lawmakers.

Traditionally, ASA has lobbied the Arizona Legislature on issues relating to University budgets and tuition levels on behalf of Arizona's 97,000 university students.

"I don't think we have a consensus on the board this year," Turman said. "Whether we're in or out of ASA, (the problems) have been beneficial to us."

"The problems with ASA have helped us, because it forced us to think about the possibility of life without ASA."

Although Turman would not elaborate on specific problems with ASA, he verified that ASU student leaders have discussed doing their own lobbying during the next legislative session.

But Jennie Garcia, ASA delegate and NAU student body president, said ASU leaders are solely basing their position on an erroneous belief that the organization does not work.

"One reason I've heard (for ASU's desire to pull out of ASA) is that it is an ineffective organization," she said. "However, I disagree with that view, and I know everyone else within ASA would say the same thing."

"ASA has been one of the most effective and one of the most constant organizations over the past few years."

Garcia added that ASA would be "drastically affected" by ASU's possible pullout, because it is the largest school included in ASA.

"We are a state student lobbying body, and we cannot do that without one of the main campuses in this state," Garcia said. "I think it would really hurt our efforts (toward) being effective, because we need the numbers and push behind us in order to get things passed — not only in the Arizona Board of Regents, but also in front

The Dalai Lama of Tibet, Nobel Peace Prize laureate, will make his first Arizona appearance at 6 p.m. tonight at the University Activity Center.

"He has a tremendous following here," said Lee Carlile of Arizona Teachings Inc., the organization responsible for the Dalai Lama's visit. "There are a lot of people who care about him here, and he cares very much about them. Arizona figures very prominently."

The Dalai Lama is the national and spiritual leader of Tibetan Buddhists. Tibet, located in mainland China's southwestern region, was once an independent country but is now under Communist control.

According to Arizona Teachings officials, the Dalai Lama is expected to speak on overcoming anger with patience. Tickets are $15 each, $12 for students.

The Dalai Lama will also be giving lessons Saturday through Wednesday in Tucson, where he will speak twice a day and then entertain questions every evening.

Council may end 3-year dearth of after-hours permits

The Tempe City Council is reconsidering an after-hours permit for Club Encounters, 919 E. Apache Blvd. City officials think teen masses will avoid Mill Avenue if busied at the club.

By JOY E. BEASON
STATE PRESS

Discussion slated for tonight's Tempe City Council meeting could lead to the end of a three-year citywide void in issuing after-hours permits to nightclubs.

No after-hours permits have been granted by the council since 1990. But recent Mill Avenue overcrowding on Fridays following a local club's "Teen Nite" has provoked the council to consider giving that club approval for a permit.

In February, Club Encounters, located at 919 E. Apache Blvd., applied for a permanent after-hours permit. After receiving numerous complaints from neighboring businesses and residents, the council unanimously voted against issuing a permit.

"Club Encounters was given a one-night after-hours permit for New Year's Eve," said City Attorney David Merkel. "It was not a smashing success."

The club has recently "been catering to two different crowds," said Merkel.

"Teen nite is Friday night, and a 21-and-older crowd comes out on Saturday night," he said. "After the club closes on Friday night, the crowd finds their way to downtown Tempe."

Once the crowd moves downtown, Merkel said problems are created, particularly in the area of the Jack in the Box restaurant at 721 S. Mill Avenue.

Merkel said Jannice Cotton, owner of Club Encounters, has contended that the teen night must be continued in order to help business. Cotton has said that, if granted an after-hours permit, she will not have to continue the teen night event.

In order to have "after-hours," an establishment must apply for an after-hours permit and it must be approved by the city council. The current ordinance states that no business may re-apply for an after-hours permit within one year of a denial from the city council, which would prohibit Club Encounters from applying again.

However, if the city council gives special permission to a business, an exception can be made, according to the ordinance.

Officials from the City Attorney's office said there are instances where a re-application may be in the best interests of the public.

Attempts to reach Cotton were not successful.

Tempe Vice Mayor Neil Giuliano said if Club Encounters is able to re-apply for a permit, he would have to consider how "neighborly" the situation would be.

"I am not of the opinion that after-hours are inherently evil and ASA Executive Director Pat McWhortor said he has not been informed from anyone within ASU that the school is contemplating a pullout.

"I'm not sure what reasons would be given for this action," McWhortor said. "I haven't been given any official indication from (ASU's student government) about what that reason would be. We have had some discussion about the effectiveness of ASA and how we're moving forward on issues, but that would be the extent of it.

Lewis added that he is in "full favor" of the council having control over the issue.

Around Arizona

New killer bee swarm found

TUCSON (AP) — A swarm of Africanized bees was discovered about three miles from the spot where dog was stung to death by a the aggressive "killer bees" in June, state officials said Wednesday.

It was the 10th swarm of the bees found in Arizona.

The bees were caught in a trap west of Interstate 10 along the Santa Cruz River on Aug. 23, state Agriculture Department spokesman Keith Curtis said.

The department announced the latest find Friday, but the location of the "killer bees" wasn't released until this week.

This swarm of about 400 bees is a pioneer swarm, leading the advance into the state, Curtis said.

Courtroom gun ban delayed

PHOENIX (AP) — A policy that would require law-enforcement officers to give up their guns inside Maricopa County Superior Court buildings has been delayed until at least Thursday.

The policy, which would require officers to check their guns in lockers at courthouse entrances, was to have gone into effect Tuesday.

Presiding Judge C. Kimball Rose said court officials had received a "significant amount of correspondence" from lawmen who oppose being disarmed.

Rose said the gun ban will go into effect Thursday unless discussions reached by the judges lead to a change.

The policy, adopted by a judges' committee in January, would allow only sheriff's deputies assigned to courthouse security to carry weapons.

It was adopted because of worries that officers might be overpowered and their guns taken. The committee also was concerned that an officer involved in a nasty divorce might bring a weapon to court.

'Rolling blimps' make it big

PHOENIX (AP) — Riding around in everyday traffic, motorists are assaulted by billboards, banners and buildings carrying advertising.

But a bus? How about a bus with a fin on top?

Signs on buses are nothing new, but the latest in technology has created an advertising tool sometimes called a "Rolling Blimp." The whole side of the bus, windows and all, is covered with a picture.

"The impact of the painted buses is greater than any other form of outdoor advertising," said Tom Reardon, market manager of Transportation Displays Inc. here.

$15,000 government rebuild

A conservative think tank named for Barry Goldwater wants Arizonans to outdo Vice President Al Gore, so it's offering $15,000 in prizes for the best plans to restructure state or local government.

A day after Gore announced his plan for "reinventing government," the Goldwater Institute announced its "Reinventing Government Competition."

The contest was in the works before word got out of Gore's chore, and it's a coincidence the names match, said Jeffrey Flake, the institute's executive director.

But he did acknowledge some influence from the Democratic vice president: The institute moved up announcement of the contest, originally planned for Sept. 15, "to use the media attention that was already there to promote it."

The institute, named for the conservative former senator and presidential candidate from Arizona, is offering $15,000 for ideas to restructure Arizona state or local government to improve efficiency and save tax dollars.

Congress OKs tuition-service plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate gave final approval Wednesday to a $1.5 billion compromise version of President Clinton's plan for students to earn college money in exchange for national service.

The 57-40 vote, mostly along party lines, gave Clinton the first all-new program of his administration. The bill now goes to the White House for his signature.

Clinton said the vote was "in the best sense of reinventing government." He praised the Senate action as "yet another opportunity for change for the American people."

The program could be up and running by next June, said Eli Segal, who heads Clinton's Office of National Service. The legislation goes into effect on Oct. 1.

The legislation fulfilled Clinton's campaign promise to create a domestic version of the Peace Corps, in which young people could serve their communities while earning money to help pay for college.

The bill was supported by 51 Democrats and six Republicans while four Democrats and 36 Republicans opposed it.

Senate Republicans, who had successfully stalled the measure earlier this summer, fought it to the end.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., the Senate Republican leader, accused the White House of sending conflicting signals by creating a new program at the same time it is proposing government reorganization with an emphasis on saving money.

"On the one hand, President Clinton says national service will be the centerpiece of his administration and on the other hand that he wants to reinvent government," Dole said in a floor speech. "Well, we think when we talk about reinventing government we're talking about less government, less new programs."

But Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., who helped guide the bill to passage, accused Republicans of painting an inaccurate picture of the legislation.

"The fact that our colleagues misstate fact time and time again ... may be persuasive to some people but it does not represent accuracy, veracity or truth," he said.

He said if the program did not work, Congress could scrap it.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., who led opposition to the legislation, argued that the bill is "fraught with ... overlapping programs, unnecessary legislative requirements and cumbersome bureaucratic structures."

The body of German tourist Uwe-Wilhelm Rakebrand lies next to his rented car Wednesday after he was killed by a gunman.

Man shot dead while wife reads 'bump-and-rob' survival rules

MIAMI (AP) — Uwe-Wilhelm Rakebrand had just arrived from Germany for a vacation with his wife. While he filled out his car rental contract, a videotape playing every five minutes in the background gave tourists tips about avoiding street crime.

Don't become another victim of the highly publicized violence targeting tourists in Florida, the rental office video said. Don't stop for the "bump-and-rob" ploy.

Less than five miles away, as the 33-year-old Rakebrand drove a new red Toyota toward a Miami Beach hotel early Wednesday, the car was rammed twice from behind by a van.

Safety pamphlet in hand, Rakebrand's 27-year-old wife told him to keep going, police said.

But when he did, a single shot fired from the van shattered the driver's window and hit him in the back. The van sped away.

Police had no idea why the Rakebrands were targeted and had no suspects.

"Vicious. Brutal. Disgusting. Horrible. Pick a word," said police spokesman Angelo Bitsis.

It was the eighth slaying of a foreign visitor to Florida in a year.

"We are completely outraged," said Liz Clark, a spokeswoman for Alamo Rent A Car, which rented the car to Rakebrand. "There is absolutely nothing the victim could have done to prevent this crime."

The killing brought swift reaction from the German government and the White House.

"Obviously, it's tragic, violence against foreigners as well as violence against Americans," White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said. "It's something that the president is very concerned about."

Germany's foreign ministry repeated its warning that tourists have rental cars delivered to their hotels rather than pick them up at Miami

Panel asks for quick RU-486 consideration

WASHINGTON (AP) — An abortion pill widely used in Europe but forbidden in America should be rapidly evaluated by the Food and Drug Administration for sale in the United States, a panel of experts said Wednesday.

A committee of the National Academy of Sciences said the abortion pill RU-486 has been so extensively tested in France, Britain and Sweden that the FDA should consider it without requiring further clinical trials in the United States.

Researchers also should experiment with RU-486 for other uses, including as a "morning-after" pill and as a treatment for breast cancer and brain tumors, the NAS report said.

Abortion politics kept RU-486 off the U.S. market during the Reagan and Bush administrations, but President Clinton in January called for research into the drug. The academy received funding from the private Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation to evaluate the science and the clinical uses of the drug.

More than 60,000 women have used RU-486 for abortions in Europe. The NAS report said that health officials there have found the pill in combination with another drug to be "a safe and efficacious medical treatment for early pregnancy termination."

European studies demonstrated that the pill could prevent pregnancy when taken up to 72 hours after unplanned or unwanted intercourse, or after a contraceptive method such as a condom has failed.

Because of the European experience, the NAS report said, an extensive U.S. drug trial such as the FDA normally would require "does not appear necessary" for the abortion use of RU-486 during the first trimester of a pregnancy.

U.S. clinical trials were recommended, however, on using RU-486 for second-trimester abortions. The committee said these studies should focus on dosage and side effects, such as pain, bleeding, infection and the surgery required if the drug fails.

Additionally, the committee recommended

R.I.P., ASA

The Arizona Students Association is in trouble again, after ASU's delegation threatened Wednesday to withdraw from the organization.

Hey, stop the presses. It's only the fourth time our publicly-funded student council — or Associated Students of ASU, as they like to call themselves — has threatened to sever ties with the group.

The first attempt came in 1987 because of a tiff between student leaders from the campuses of ASU, NAU and UofA. In 1990, a disagreement over the selection of that year's student regent sparked another threatened split. Greg Mechem, that wacky former ASASU president who saw a conspiracy behind every ASA decision, led the last valiant but ill-fated 1991 pullout attempt.

(For the record, NAU threatened a pullout in 1978, but no one really noticed.)

Student Body President Rossie Turman won't say why he and his goofy band of sidekicks want to pull out this time, apparently part of his reverse glasnost policy, but knowing ASA, the move is probably warranted.

ASA has done little recently for the students of any campus, while UofA's delegation has managed to strong-arm its way into controlling the group in most statewide efforts.

ASU will hardly feel the effects of a pullout. In addition to having its own state relations department, the efforts of the others two schools, particularly tuition negotiations, will continue to benefit ASU's students as much as the its sister schools.

More importantly, a pullout will serve as a much-needed wake up call to the stuffed shirts at ASA.

What started out as a lobbying organization has become a tin soldier army of junior politicians trying to puff up their resumes by pandering to regents and state lawmakers.

Nothing else could explain last year's pathetic tuition negotiations, which resulted in a $250-$350 tuition increase in exchange for a series of vague promises officials had already expressed interest in pursuing anyway.

And on top of that, ASA officials draw some cozy salaries at students' expense. Their operating budget comes indirectly from students, which, by the way, is another sticking point with ASA.

ASA's budget is approved by the regents, a group ASA is supposed to be lobbying. Could this be more "Munger logic:" Your budget comes from the saps you ask to be gentle with the budget ax? No wonder ASA's budget was dramatically increased by the regents after ASA acquiesced to the record tuition hike.

This time, let's hope the ASU delegation actually follows through and yanks support for the top-heavy lobby group. It may teach those wanna-be bureaucrats at ASA a lesson about how much they need the cooperation of all three campuses to survive.

If current ASA officials prove as thick-headed as previous administrations, we offer these parting words:

Goodbye, good riddance, and good luck maintaining any semblance of credibility in your lobbying efforts.

Elders' new condom crusade preaches gospel of teen sex

Condoms. Lots of them.

Hundreds of millions of dollars worth of contraceptives will be the newest addition to the public school curriculum, if Dr. Jocelyn Elders has her way.

And, by the time this column is printed, the good doctor should have already been confirmed as the most recent appointee to the position of U.S. surgeon general.

Yes, from the same bureaucratic agency that finds it necessary to put a warning on every package of cigarettes, our nation's most prominent public health official plans to revamp the government's approach toward premarital sex.

Not surprisingly, the new administration disagrees with the current policy that promotes health, responsibility, and respect — in other words, abstinence before marriage.

A new proposal has been developed by the Department of Health and Human Services that calls for a redirection of millions, maybe billions, of dollars into clinics that serve in or near public schools. This new attitude arises from politicians (like Dr. Elders) who feel that what our country's 35 million teen-agers need in school, more than anything else, is a large, expensive dose of sex education and birth-control counseling.

According to Dr. Elders, "We need to teach our children more than just 'no'. And we need to teach them, you know, if they get into problems, to be responsible."

So our most recently appointed national health official is getting ready to spend as much as seven billion dollars a year in support of clinics associated with our public schools to supply every 10- to 19-year-old with an unlimited amount of condoms.

Although the appropriateness of contraceptive distribution within public schools is titillating enough to keep this column going, it isn't the primary topic that needs to be discussed.

There is a deeper issue here that needs to be addressed: it has become undeniably obvious that our public schools are in extreme danger.

Of course, this is old news. It doesn't shock too many readers that the quality of education in the United States is declining.

WADE SWANSON Columnist

Many explanations have been offered for the poor performance. Blame has been leveled against such random targets as television, students' attention spans, and even the curriculum itself. Although these factors may contribute to the deficiencies, none of them adequately explain the real problem that is so clearly illuminated by Dr. Elders' proposed prophylactics purchase.

The real problem is that our nation's schools have ceased to be centers of learning and have become custodial institutions.

No longer are public school instructors and administrators simply responsible for teaching students. With all of the problems teen-agers carry with them today, American society has forced its educators into becoming overworked and underpaid babysitters.

Since these troubles didn't arise overnight, a simplified solution cannot be proposed. But this much is strikingly clear: the problem in our schools is not about education, it is about learning.

To redeem our schools, students must rediscover the pleasure and rewards of learning. This goes for all of us, kindergarten through the university. No longer can junior-high students expect to be passively entertained by their instructors. No longer can college students expect to sit through four years of multiple choice exams and not only be handed a diploma, but also have a secure, comfortable job placed in front of them on a corporate silver platter.

On the other hand, our instructors must reclaim the art of teaching. Yet until they are given the respect they deserve (this includes a decent monetary compensation), our schools will only continue to decline.

Lastly, and perhaps most importantly, parents must acknowledge that they also have responsibilities to the educational process.

This is precisely why it is so ridiculous to burden our public schools with the duty of purchasing and passing out condoms. Will the government ever stop placing schools in the position of tax-subsidized day care centers?

Inevitably, as the government demands that the public school system takes on the role of parent more and more, less and less learning will take place in these institutions.

Yet Dr. Jocelyn Elders seems to see a greater significance in condoms than in education.

And who can blame her? Condoms are so much easier to distribute.

Wade Swanson is a senior religious studies major. His column appears on Thursdays.

Civil rights: A movement that's still on the move

"I have a dream ... that one day my children will be judged not by the color of their skin but by the content of their character..."

It seems like an eternity since Martin Luther King uttered those immortal words.

It was 1963. Everywhere, minorities were being denied basic rights due solely to their race.

Cut to 1993. In Washington, marchers returned to the streets to commemorate the 30th anniversary of the famous civil rights march. Has anything changed since 1963? Has the dream of Dr. King come to fruition? Well ... yes and no.

Certainly, the nation has made great strides forward. No longer can anyone be denied their rights due to their ethnic background. Theoretically, everyone is equal in the eyes of the law.

However, it is obvious to most that we have not achieved our goal of a color-blind society. Racism still seethes within the hearts of Americans, just as strongly as it did in King's day. Today's racist is simply more covert.

Americans hardly have a monopoly on racism. In fact, America is somewhat tame in the state of her race relations.

If you thought Los Angeles was bad, you should check out Bosnia-Herzegovina. In that embattled nation, Croats, Serbs, and Muslims are fighting a violent three-way civil war in the name of "ethnic cleansing." This isn't exactly unusual behavior for them. They have fought among each other for centuries.

Admittedly, the Los Angeles riot was bad. But Sarajevo has been undergoing such violence for two years, not just two days.

America is indeed an enigmatic nation. Where else could such a multitude of ethnicities co-exist without degenerating into civil war?

Things are hardly paradise, though. Racial violence is constantly flaring up, reminding us of the disease which still infects us.

We saw it when Rodney King was brutally assaulted by four Los Angeles police officers. Or when Reginald Denny was dragged from the cab of his truck and nearly killed by rioters. And it is certainly evident in the case of Christopher Wilson, who was soaked in gasoline by two men and set aflame.

In each case, the victim's only offense was the color of his skin.

DAVID STROW
Columnist

But racism is not just a black and white issue. Virtually every ethnic group is despised by a fragment of every other ethnic group.

You are probably aware of this. Chances are that you have had the misfortune of being the target of someone else's racism.

And worst of all, the incident does not stay confined to just the victim. The racist arouses feelings of hate and resentment in his victim. The victim feels a need to retaliate for this affront. So more often than not he will retaliate against a totally innocent person, continuing the cycle of racism.

Here at ASU, racism abounds.

Letter writer Jason Weinstein recently pointed out the most visible expression of racist behavior on our campus: racist graffiti in the restrooms.

I have seen several examples of this, most notably in the Language and Literature building. Last year, I saw one stall that was literally covered in some of the most obscene racial slurs I have ever seen, directed at every race under the sun.

The authors of this garbage probably thought that they were being tremendously witty when they penned these slurs. Folks, I've seen your material. I'm not impressed.

Anyone with such shallow views has absolutely no business attending a place of higher education. A true scholar would never make such stupid assumptions about a group of people based solely on their skin color.

But most prejudice is not so blatant. Usually it is quite subtle.

It rears its ugly head when we voluntarily segregate into ethnic cliques, when we look suspiciously over our shoulder at a stranger because he's one of them, or when we whine and cry about how (fill in the blank) get all the breaks in this country and I can't get a break because I'm (your race here).

This is the most prevalent form of racist behavior. Usually, we don't even recognize it in ourselves.

Let's face it. Almost every one of us is infected by racism to some degree. Even if we think that we are completely free of prejudice, we still harbor deep-seated stereotypes about other races.

Want to rid the world of racism? First rid it from yourself. No one is immune; hatred is a common denominator of every race.

You are going to come across racists out there. There is no way to avoid them. Don't let their disease become your own. Don't return the hate that they have unleashed on you.

Racism must end one person at a time, as each person finds the courage to break racism's vicious cycle.

Only then will the dream of Martin Luther King come to pass.

Swanson should take a look at the man in the mirror

I was appalled at the ignorance Wade Swanson portrayed in his recent column "Jackson a victim of success; 'Thriller' purchase didn't help." His writing certainly shows why he is not a journalism major. The only good journalism he showed was that his type size was the same as the rest of the page.

As of Sept. 2, 1993 — the date Swanson's column was published — Michael Jackson was an innocent man. No evidence had been found and the only word that the charges could be called were allegations. How pathetic. Talk about being "utterly out of touch with ... reality." Maybe Swanson should go look in the mirror.

I also thought the fact that he felt personally responsible for putting "the pop superstar in the place he finds himself today" was a bit erroneous. Of course people put him there. Who the hell do you think put Madonna where she is? Or Prince? Or Bon Jovi? Or Phil Collins? Or any one of the other hundreds of popular artists? Hmmm?

When a person buys a tape or CD, there are not strings attached. There isn't anything saying "If you buy my tape I promise that the media won't ruin my image." Celebrities don't have control over the media. If that is what he thinks, Swanson is the person living in "Fantasyland."

I do understand that the article was an opinion column, but printed opinions should be based on fact, not fiction.

Wimps of the world, unite!

I was deeply moved by Jessica Klinger's article published Sept. 8. Her impassioned defense of feminism and its forgotten heroines has inspired me to take up the gauntlet on behalf of my own people. We are the most stigmatized, ridiculed group in America — perhaps the only group which can be openly despised with impunity and full social acceptance.

I speak, of course, of the WIMPY MALES. We have always experienced chronic and well-founded feelings of inadequacy at the world's playing fields, parade grounds and card tables. Now, in this age of empowered women who celebrate their rejection of traditional roles with dragon tattoos and developed biceps, we experience penis envy vis-a-vis the opposite sex. We badly need a voice to guide us. Because many of my passive, ectomorphic brethren are afraid to speak out and brave society's scorn, I am proud to be the first to officially present the Wimps Manifesto.

First, I declare the term "wimp" a degrading one. For this new age of heightened sensitivity, I propose that the term "GeSpEc" (gentle-spirited ectomorph) be used.

Second, I challenge the nation's "cultural elite" to find a new character type to replace the hapless GeSpEc as the buffoon in popular television shows. My fellow GeSpEcs and I are outraged to find ourselves grotesquely characterized each night in the forms of Seinfeld's George Costanza, Married ... With Children's Bud Bundy and Crossfire's Michael Kinsey.

Third, I urge the world medical community to begin a search for a genetic link to GeSpEcness. If gays deserve one, then damn it, so do we.

Finally, I urge my "closeted" GeSpEc brothers, whereof I spoke earlier, to "come out" and declare themselves as such. If society learns that many of its most prominent members can't swing a baseball bat, hold down a shot of Cuervo or find a G-spot, the stigma attached to these deficiencies will fade like the self esteem of a GeSpEc watching American Gladiators.

Arise, brothers (but don't hurt yourselves)! Let GeSpEc respect become the buzzword of the nineties. To all you GeSpEcophobes out there: nyah, nyah, nyah.

“ QUOTABLES ”

“When I saw the school, and especially the classrooms, I thought, ‘This is a joke.’ There are three children sitting on one chair. When I look at the children in the classroom my heart breaks. I imagined the first day of school for my daughter completely different. This is too sad.”

— Mirsada Dibrinin, whose daughter Amila was beginning first grade, as children in Sarajevo began another school year in the city under siege.

“Her dedication to improving the lives of all Americans, especially the children of America, won her the strong backing of a bipartisan majority of the Senate.”

— President Clinton on Senate confirmation of Dr. Joycelyn Elders to be surgeon general.

She called it ironic that the Senate was considering the legislation a day after Clinton presented his "reinventing government" plan to streamline the federal bureaucracy and cut costs by $108 billion over five years.

"We have lost a tremendous opportunity ... to lead the way in reinventing government," she said. "We chose to take the old tried and true way."

But Sen. Harris Wofford, D-Pa., countered that the National Service program was an "innovative public-private partnership" that is "part of a process of reinventing government, not by more government but by igniting citizen action and citizen responsibility."

Congressional Democrats had hoped to hand Clinton a new program before they began a month-long recess in August, and the national service bill had been their best hope. The House adopted the compromise, but the bill got bogged down in the Senate.

Supporters have argued that the program would benefit communities across the nation while helping some middle class students afford college educations. Opponents have said it is too costly and the money would be better spent on existing college aid programs.

Under terms of the compromise, students who complete two years of community service work can earn $4,725 a year to apply toward college tuition. Clinton initially proposed $5,000 a year.

Participants also would receive living allowances of at least $7,400 a year and health-care and child day-care benefits.

The plan allows 20,000 participants in the first year, 33,000 in the second year and 47,000 in the third year, assuming an average annual cost per participant of $15,000. Spending would be limited to $300 million in the first year of the program, $500 million in the second year and $700 million in the third year.

Clinton, who made national service a cornerstone of his campaign last year, originally wanted a far more ambitious $9.5 billion, five-year program. His plan would have allowed 25,000 participants in the first year and 150,000 by the third year.

Senate Republicans held out for a two-year pilot project costing about $800 million, but were unable to maintain solid support for that position.

International Airport. Travel advisories will be re-examined because of the latest attack, the ministry said.

More than 400,000 Germans travel to Florida each year, including about 250,000 visiting the Miami area.

Rental cars in Florida in the past have been easy targets, marked with special license plates, bumper stickers and window stickers.

But rental companies this year have been removing those distinguishing features and Rakebrand, an agriculture engineer from Adendorf, Germany, was driving a car without any such markings.

The precautions were no help.

"That's what makes this one so alarming, because these people did everything they could to protect themselves," said Gary Stogner, spokesman for the Florida Division of Tourism.

The name of Rakebrand's wife was not released, and Bitsis wouldn't comment on reports that she is four months pregnant.

Gov. Lawton Chiles, in Miami for hearings, changed his schedule to meet with the German consul general. He said he was "just so distressed I don't know what to say."

An eight-agency task force has made 210 arrests in the Miami area since the last tourist killing in April.

Highway signs directing tourists between the airport and beach have been added. Travel groups and rental car agencies are distributing safety brochures to visitors; Alamo's brochure comes in six languages.

Tourism is Florida's biggest business, and with 40 million visitors generating $31 billion last year, travel industry leaders were worried. Visitation from overseas was up 21 percent in the first quarter.

"Under extremely difficult circumstances, we hope to communicate that Miami is a caring community, and this tragic and senseless act is not a reflection of the people of Miami," said Merrett Stierheim of the Greater Miami Convention & Visitors Bureau. His association offered an $11,000 reward.

German Consul General Klaus Sommer spent much of the morning with Rakebrand's wife.

"It's a shame for Miami," he said later. "This overshadows the image of this beautiful part of this country."

that RU-486 be studied for use in regulating the menstrual cycle and for treatment of two female pelvic disorders, endometriosis and fibroids. The committee also said that RU-486 shows promise in the treatment of breast cancer, brain tumors and of Cushing's syndrome, a disorder of the adrenal gland that can cause mental disturbances.

The report was prepared by a group of seven experts selected by the Institute of Medicine. The institute is affiliated with the National Academy of Sciences, a congressionally chartered private organization of distinguished scientists and engineers. Its advice is not binding on any government agency.

RU-486, or mifepristone, is in a class of drugs called antipro-gestins. It is manufactured by the French firm Roussel-Uclaf. Other companies make antiprogestins, but RU-486 has been the most extensively tested.

Antiprogestins work by blocking or inhibiting the action of progesterone, a natural steroid hormone that is essential for maintaining pregnancy. When used in combination with another hormone, prostaglandin, the drugs cause an embryo to be expelled from the uterus.

Although RU-486 has been used in Europe since the early 1980s, Roussel-Uclaf did not promote its introduction into the United States during the Reagan and Bush administrations, both of which opposed abortion.

Shortly after he took office, Clinton signed an executive order calling for research in the United States on antiprogestins. And last April, Roussel-Uclaf announced that the Population Council, a non-profit U.S. organization, would sponsor an FDA application for RU-486.

Though European studies suggest RU-486 is generally safe, experts have cautioned that the drug has to be used under medical supervision. The academy committee said that the drug has caused side effects, including heart attacks in a small number of patients. As a result, Roussel-Uclaf does not recommend it for patients who smoke or who have heart conditions.

Men's rape- awareness group draws sparse crowd

Organization aims to increase males' assault awareness

By MELANIE K. SELCHO
STATE PRESS

A meeting called to develop a men's anti-rape group at ASU flopped on Wednesday, as only one student was in attendance.

Casey Self, program coordinator for Residence Life and adviser to the group, said he and a student attempted to start the same kind of group last year with a low turnout.

"Our goal is to get people educated about what men can do to stop rape," he said. "Men commit most rape and abuse, but most people who speak and attend meetings are women. It seems taboo (for a man) to get involved."

Charles Silver, a graduate communication student who started the group, said he and Self will meet today to discuss ways to increase interest in the group.

"We might talk about doing a co-ed group, but I don't know if we'll pull more men into it that way," he said.

Silver said he started the group after researching flirtation for his master's thesis and dissertation, when he discovered both positive and negative aspects of flirting.

"Ethically, I felt responsible to do something," he said.

Bill Keith, a junior business management student and the only non-organizer in attendance, said he came because he wants to increase men's awareness about rape.

"There are certain things women can do to protect themselves, but there are things men can do to prevent it — just being aware and smart about it," he said.

Silver said the purpose of the group is to get men comfortable with discussing rape among themselves, and to find ways of preventing rape without telling women what to do.

Kathleen Ferraro, associate professor of women's and justice studies, said the lack of interest in men's rape prevention groups can be attributed to a sense of denial some men have about rape.

Ferraro added that most men say they would never hurt a woman, but 20 to 60 percent have told researchers they would rape a woman if they would never get caught.

"Not all men are rapists," she said. "But men need to take responsibility for the fact that it is men who rape, and not be defensive in discussion."

Despite prior disinterest, Ferraro said men's groups are essential to stopping violence against women.

"It's the only way it's going to stop," she said. "(Rape) is a male behavioral problem that men need to solve."

Ferraro said most preventative measures have burdened women, telling them what to wear and how to be safe at night.

However, the majority of rapes committed on college campuses are committed by someone the victim knows, Ferraro said.

"Women from age birth to death are raped — it's not because of their physical appearance," she said. "(Rape) is an act of power and dominance not motivated by lust."

Ferraro said men's groups that have succeeded in the past have always had the philosophy that it is the responsibility of men to prevent violence, not women.

WORK SMARTER. NOT HARDER.

Engineering student? Smart. Math or science major? Also smart.

On tests, you probably run equations over again to make sure they're right. So you're working harder.

You don't have to do that anymore. Not when you use the TI-68 Advanced Scientific or TI-85 Graphics Calculator, with their last equation replay feature — and many other smart functions.

We've spent years with students like you and educators like your professors to develop the TI-68 and the TI-85. That's why they're so highly recommended.

For engineering students, the TI-68 solves up to five simultaneous equations, has complex number functions and offers formula programming.

The TI-85 builds on the power of the TI-68 by adding a wide range of graphing capabilities. Math students can handle calculus problems more easily. And technical students can see the functions for a better understanding of problems. The TI-85 also handles complex numbers. Matrices. Vectors. Lists. Strings. Plus, it offers a powerful one-equation SOLVER.

Try a TI-68 or TI-85 at your local TI retailer today. And start working smarter. Instead of harder.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Wednesday:

- Three ASU students and another woman were talking on Monday morning in a parking lot at 1717 S. # Virginia court decision outrages ASU activists

Ruling against lesbian mother fuels campus ire

By MARK M. MACIAS
STATE PRESS

ASU women's activists were outraged Wednesday by a Virginia court's ruling on Tuesday that gave a lesbian's mother custody of her 2-year-old grandson after declaring the mother an "unfit parent."

Dawn Bates, faculty adviser for ASU's Lesbian and Gay Academic Union, said she was saddened when she first heard that the lesbian mother lost custody of her son.

"I think this is a blatant case of discrimination," Bates said. "I think this child had two loving parents, and he was taken away from them. I think this is indicative of the kind of oppression that lesbians and gays have to deal with every day.

"Cases like this are decided every day, and they're not always decided in this manner. There are lesbians who get to keep their children, even though the issue of lesbianism comes up in the trial."

Denise Heap, president of the East Valley's Chapter of the National Organization for Women, said she views the Virginia court's ruling as an "aberration."

"I'm extremely disappointed that the Virginia court would basically reverse 15 years of legal decisions with child custody," Heap said. "Sexual orientation is not the issue. It's the behavior of the parent toward the children, it's having two loving parents. That is the issue."

But not everyone agreed that the Virginia judge displayed an act of discrimination.

Jill Steinger, a senior business major and member of the Baptist Student Union, said the judge wasn't discriminating against homosexuals, but was instead displaying his conservative views.

Steinger said she expected a case like this to arise at some time, because "homosexuals are gaining their own stand."

"I think the law is going to start including other lifestyles," Steinger said. "I think there are going to be a lot more cases like this one. I think that a lot of people are going to stand up and start fighting for (child custody, despite homosexual behavior)."

Carolyn Diepstraten, chair of the ASU Chapter of NOW, said she thinks the mother who lost custody should appeal the decision to a higher court.

"If a woman is a good parent and she's raising that child well, I don't think her lifestyle should be used against her," Diepstraten said. "It's a form of discrimination."

According to San Francisco's National Center for Lesbian Rights, U.S. courts have given 100 homosexuals parental rights since 1985, labeling such custody as "same-gender adoptions."

Computer software's role to grow in ASU classes

English professor replaces text with floppy disk

By JAMES FRUSETTA
STATE PRESS

Costly textbooks and boring lectures could become obsolete by the end of the decade as ASU enters the "information revolution," allowing students to interact with their educational material.

English professor Paul Privateer has taken the first step toward implementing such a system at ASU by devising a floppy disk for all Humanities 110 courses. The disk replaces the traditional humanities textbook with an interactive computer program and several novels.

"The reason I use the disks is that it does two things," Privateer said. "It creates opportunities for critical and intellectual interaction with course materials, and it brings in a diversity of information that textbooks can't."

Privateer says that the new technology assists faculty in teaching cognitive methods of thinking, as opposed to the memorization of lists of facts.

"Are we teaching in terms of memory storage, or we teaching methods of thinking?" Privateer asked.

Stephen Hustedde, a senior support systems analyst in the Department for Information Technology, said the use of computers in the classroom is rapidly expanding at ASU.

"For example, the School of Nursing is developing (a computer-interaction course) for Nursing 119, in which you play a character from birth to death — a role-playing simulation on health," Hustedde said.

Hustedde added that most academic departments are examining the potential of interactive technology, and several professors already use computers to supplement or complement traditional textbooks and lectures.

Multi-media teaching is not new, said Faculty President Bill Arnold, but recent technology makes the utilization of computers easier and more useful.

"Historically, we have used media," Arnold said. "I can remember 25 years ago using 16mm film with the same sort of approach, where I would show three scenarios, allow students to pick one, and then show the correct and incorrect scenarios."

"The advantage of computers is you can have more decision points and go a lot further than a static film."

Privateer developed the "Odyssey" program now being used for all of sections of Humanities

Brian Fitzgerald/State Press

Dr. Paul Privateer sells a package of three Macintosh disks and several books to students in his Humanities 110 class.

110. Privateer, who is also a member of the National Governor's Taskforce for Re-evaluation of Higher Education, said interactive media is more convenient for students.

"It's been my experience that students are much more energized and collaborate with each other when using the software," Privateer said.

High school teacher convicted of having sex with students

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — A former high school teacher was convicted Wednesday of sexually abusing three of his students in school.

The Anne Arundel County Circuit Court jury deliberated slightly more than two hours before finding Ronald Price, 48, guilty on seven counts of sexual abuse.

Before the verdict, Price admitted he had sex with two students, and told the court he now realized that was wrong.

Price, who taught at Northeast High School in Pasadena, a Baltimore suburb, could be sentenced to 76 years in prison.

The trial began Tuesday with graphic testimony from three former students who said Price had sex with them as often as seven times a week, usually on school grounds.

The students, one of whom said she had just turned 15 when she first had sex with Price, testified about performing sex acts on a catwalk above the auditorium, in the football stadium press box, in classrooms, storage rooms, the library, dressing rooms and a hallway.

Price, a social studies teacher who also served as a drama club adviser and girls softball coach, resigned shortly after he was indicted last May. The case attracted national attention after he appeared on several tabloid-style television shows, saying he had sex with seven students over the last 20 years.

One of those students was Price's wife, Patricia, the only other witness called by the defense. Mrs. Price, now 25, said she had an affair with Price when she was 17.

"I was 17 years old. I knew what I was doing," she said.

Neither Price nor his attorney contested the three counts of unnatural and perverted sex practices and one count of fourth-degree sex offense with a child under age 16.

Testifying Wednesday, Price admitted he had sex with two students, but denied allegations by a third woman that they had an affair while he was her drama club adviser.

When asked if he thought it was wrong for a teacher to have sex with students, Price replied: "I do now."

During his closing arguments, defense lawyer Timothy Umbreit said that Price was innocent of the three counts of child sexual abuse because the students were not in his care when the acts took place.

Prosecutor William Mumford told the jury that Price "is not just guilty of poor judgment. He is not just guilty of loose morals."

All of the former students said they loved Price at the time and willingly engaged in sex acts with him, but Mumford said consent in this case "is just not a defense."

"Adults just do not have sex with children. We do not give children that choice," he said.

Since Price's arrest in April, two other Northeast teachers have been charged in unrelated cases with sexual abuse of students.

Texas commission ponders harrassment

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Will "honey" get your secretary's goat? How about "sweetie" for the switchboard operator?

Bexar County commissioners want to ban sexual harassment at the courthouse, as soon as they figure out what it is.

The sexual harassment debate in many parts of the country often focuses on such issues as unsolicited advances or demands for dates.

The debate in San Antonio this week focused on terms of endearment.

The county's personnel director, Mary Jo Vargas-McCabe, presented commissioners with a proposed policy Tuesday providing for disciplinary action or termination of county employees who violate sexual harassment rules.

Ms. Vargas-McCabe said that addressing people as "honey," "sweetie," "girl" or "boy" could be construed as sexual harassment.

But Commissioner Paul Elizondo came to the defense of "honey."

"It's a common practice in Texas, particularly in this area," he said.

Commissioner Walter Bielstein added: "It's the tone in which it is said."

Elizondo said he wouldn't find it offensive if a woman called him "honey" or "sweetie."

Commissioner Robert Tejada observed that Commissioner Helen Dutmer, who wasn't present Tuesday, refers to most women as "girls."

"I don't think she means anything offensive whatsoever," Tejada said.

Ms. Vargas-McCabe said it's acceptable to call people "honey" if they don't object.

"It's sexual harassment only if the person feels it is offensive to be called 'honey,'" she said.

Elizondo told the youthful personnel director: "Someone your age might find something offensive that someone my age would not."

County Judge Cyndi Krier noted that "honey" or "sweetie" have been involved in sexual-harassment court cases.

"What we're saying is, watch out. These words have gotten other people in trouble," she said.

Commissioners decided to discuss the proposed policy again after county legal adviser Cynthia Malone researches legal definitions of the terms.

Nearly half of American adults lack literacy skills needed for workplace

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly half of adult Americans read and write so poorly that they are unable to function effectively in the workplace, according to a report released Wednesday by the Department of Education.

Education officials stopped short of using the word "illiterate" to describe even those at the lowest ability levels, saying many have rudimentary reading, writing and math skills.

"In many ways Americans are better educated than ever before, but the demand for skills is continuing to rise," said Deputy Education Secretary Madeline Kunin. "It's a question of keeping pace, and that's where we're not succeeding."

The 90 million people with poor literacy skills represents 47 percent of the nation's 191 million adults.

"The number is shocking but that doesn't surprise me," Education Secretary Dick Riley said after revealing the survey results.

He noted that many of those with low reading, writing and math skills also live in poverty.

The study, by the Education Department's National Center for Educational Statistics, showed that those functioning at the higher skill levels were more likely to be employed, work more weeks in a year and earn higher wages than those at the lower levels.

For instance, those functioning at the lowest of five proficiency levels reported working an average of 18 to 19 weeks in 1991, while those at the highest three levels reported working on average between 34 and 44 weeks.

Also, those with the lowest level skills earned a median weekly salary of $230 to $245, compared with $620 to $680 for those at the highest level.

According to the study, 90 million adults function at the lowest two proficiency levels, 61 million have middle-level skills, and 34 million to 40 million are at the two highest proficiency levels.

The study results were based on interviews conducted in the first eight months of 1992 with more than 13,000 adults age 16 and older. They were randomly selected to represent the adult population in the nation as a whole.

In addition, about 1,000 adults were surveyed in California, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas and Washington state. They chose to participate in a special study designed to provide state-level results, which were not provided.

Also interviewed were 1,100 inmates from 80 federal and state prisons.

Participants were tested and scored in three areas: prose, document and quantitative. The prose score was based on ability to locate information in written text like newspaper articles or instructions. The document score was based on ability to locate facts in complex materials and combine it with prior knowledge to generate new information. The quantitative score was based on ability to glean mathematical information from documents.

The study, ordered by Congress, also showed that:

- As many as 40 million of the nation's 191 million adults possess the lowest level of skills, meaning they can total an entry on a bank deposit slip, locate the time or place of a meeting or form, or identify a piece of specific information in a brief news article. Many of the respondents were unable to complete even those tasks.

- An estimated 50 million have the skills to calculate the total of a purchase, determine the difference in price between two items, locate a particular intersection on a street map and enter background information on a simple form.

- An estimated 61 million adults can decipher information from long or dense texts or documents, while an estimated 34 to 40 million possess the highest skills required for the most challenging tasks.

- Young adults — those 21 to 25 years old — surveyed last year showed literacy skills 11 to 14 percentage points lower than those in the same age group participating in a 1985 survey.

The report blamed the change in part on the shifting demographics of the population group, particularly the number of people speaking English as a second language.

- Older adults were more likely than middle-age and younger adults to show limited literacy skills. The report said older adults were less well educated than younger age groups.

- Blacks, American Indians and Native Alaskans, Hispanics and Asians were more likely than whites to have performed in the lower two of five proficiency levels. Asians and Hispanics were more likely to have learned English as a second language.

Medical personnel pick up the body of slain commuters near Johannesburg Wednesday following a shooting.

Gunmen kill 21 in Johannesburg

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Gunmen firing automatic rifles killed at least 21 black commuters and wounded 25 others in two separate attacks Wednesday night, police said.

Attackers in two mini-vans pulled up alongside a line of hundreds of commuters and began firing wildly, leaving dead and wounded the length of a 70-yard parking lot.

Three hours later and a few miles away, gunmen standing on a street corner fired on a passing taxi-van. Police gave conflicting reports on the casualties at each site but said at least 21 people died and 25 were wounded in both incidents.

The attacks followed a landmark agreement reached Tuesday by black and white groups that will end white-minority rule. Political violence has soared as negotiations on reform proceed, and Wednesday's attack was similar to several others that coincided with major steps forward.

Broken glass and blood covered the parking lot outside the small shopping mall in the Wadeville industrial area outside Johannesburg.

Police Brig. T.J. Koekemoer said all the victims were black and were attacked by several gunmen, also black, who then fled in their vehicles.

"This is absolutely senseless," he said, noting the victims were from various townships and did not represent any particular political group.

Police Maj. Eugene Opperman said it was well-planned. "The minibuses stopped at each end of the parking lot. They were basically cornering the people," he said.

Panicked people, some wounded, fought their way into a nearby butcher shop to escape, leaping over the counter for shelter.

"They just shot everybody standing there," said Timothy Radebe, 41, who was hospitalized with a bullet wound in his side.

Across the hospital ward, David Nokgathi, 48, said he kept running even though a bullet went through his right foot.

"I never fell down," he said. "I thought they would finish me off."

Taxi vans are a major mode of transportation for blacks. Attacks on black commuters have been part of the political violence that has killed thousands of blacks in recent years and hindered reforms toward ending apartheid.

Wednesday's massacre came a day after black and white negotiators agreed to set up a transitional council to help run the country until the nation's first multiracial election, planned for April.

There has been an increase in violence since negotiators set the election date in July.

Police blame the violence on a power feud between the African National Congress and the rival Inkatha Freedom Party. But the ANC, the nation's leading political group, says groups opposed to the planned elections instigate violence in a bid to destabilize the country and stall reforms.

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — The Godfather of Soul himself is coming here next week to help townsfolk dedicate the James Brown Soul Center of the Universe Bridge.

Brown said he may even write a song about it. "I hope the bridge is used like my music to reach across the gap between generations," Brown, 60, said Tuesday from his office in Augusta, Ga. "No telling what God has in store for me." The bridge was named when City Manager Harvey Rose invited townspeople to compete for a $100 savings bond by submitting names for the $1.5 million span across the Yampa River. A screening committee narrowed the 57 entries down to five that were historically correct, plus an honorable mention for the anonymous James Brown entry. Residents chose that one 7,717 to 7,459 over the New Stockbridge.

"People have a right to a choice," Brown said. "And I thank them for choosing me." It will be Brown's first trip to Steamboat Springs. He won't perform at the dedication.

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — The world knows that Mia Farrow no longer thinks very much of Woody Allen, but she says in an interview published here that she wasn't wild about his films, either.

"I mean, Woody's films were all so — insular," she said in an interview published in the Irish Independent. "He had his own family of actors, and everyone knew his movies took up most of a year. So I never got the chance to do anything else," Farrow said. She was in Ireland for the filming of "Widow's Peak," directed by John Irvine and co-starring Natasha Richardson and Jim Broadbent.

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Ginger Rogers has settled an invasion of privacy lawsuit she filed over greeting cards, just in time for a local film festival honoring her work.

Rogers, famous for her dance routines on film with Fred Astaire a half century ago, sued last year over birthday cards sold at a Madison bookstore that bore what she said was an unauthorized likeness of her.

Her attorney, Edward Marion, said Wednesday that the publisher cited in the lawsuit, Portal Publications of Corte Madera, Calif., settled out of court. A confidentiality provision was placed on terms of the settlement, Marion said.

The $1.95 card depicted film celebrities including James Dean, characters from the "Wizard of Oz," King Kong, Humphrey Bogart, and Rogers and Astaire.

Marion said Rogers, 82, would attend the film festival being presented next week by the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

NEW YORK (AP) — James Michener says he wasn't always a sensitive man, but he's working to become one.

Writing in the September issue of "New Choices for Retirement Living," Michener, 86, offers some advice for young people. He said being brave and sensitive are among the absolutes in life.

"Be brave: Bold new ideas are always needed. Be sensitive: I grew up in a fearfully macho world, and I'm not too old to exorcise that evil inheritance; younger men can avoid it, and young women should insist that they do."

The author of 40 books including "Tales of the South Pacific," "The Bridges at Toko-Ri," "Hawaii" and "Mexico" now teaches at the University of Texas and at Eckerd College in St. Petersburg, Fla.

"In another 10 or 12 years, I suppose I'll begin to slow down," he writes.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Director Herbert Ross, known for such films as "The Turning Point," "Steel Magnolias" and "The Goodbye Girl," is staging his first opera, Puccini's "La Boheme."

The popular romantic tragedy opens Thursday at the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion for seven performances, said Tom Jacobs, spokesman for the Los Angeles Music Center Opera Company.

"I direct in theater, and because of my background in ballet, I think musically. The challenge is to meet this fusion of drama and music that the opera represents," Ross said recently during rehearsals. Ross, 67, was a dancer in the 1940s, then choreographed and directed on Broadway. He came to Hollywood in 1964.

Ross and his wife, Lee Radziwill, sister of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, will join an opening night audience Thursday that includes Whoopi Goldberg, Kathy Bates, Kirk Douglas and William Friedkin.

GRANTS PASS, Ore. (AP) — Universal Pictures decided it wasn't worth $250,000 a day to wrangle with environmentalists over filming part of Meryl Streep's new movie on the premiere rapid on the Rogue River.

Rather than risk delays in shooting on location at Blossom Bar, the movie company announced Tuesday it will continue shooting "The River Wild" on Montana's Kootenai River.

Environmentalists argued that Universal's plans to build scaffolding along the river, bring in up to 150 people a day, and run frequent helicopter and jetboat trips violated the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act.

The Chamber of Commerce in the town of Gold Beach lamented losing almost $3 million that Universal would have spent on lodging, meals and other services.

In the movie, Streep plays a former whitewater guide who takes her husband and son to a wilderness river. While there, criminals take them hostage.

Sports Briefs

Pac-10 names Players of Week

Southern California wide receiver Johnnie Morton, who pulled in a school-record 15 receptions in the Trojans' 49-7 rout of Houston, was named Pac-10 Offensive Player of the Week Tuesday.

The 15 catches by the senior from Torrance, Calif. is the second-highest single-game reception total in conference history, second only to the 19 caught by Ron Fair of Arizona State.

Defensive honors went to Eric Zomalt of California. The strong safety had 10 tackles in the Bears' 27-25 upset of UCLA.

Oregon State punter Tim Kollas was named special teams player. He averaged 46.5 yards in 10 punts during his team's 27-16 victory over Wyoming.

Mack signs with Spurs

Forward Sam Mack, whose checkered career brought him briefly to ASU, has signed a new contract with the San Antonio Spurs.

Terms of the agreement, announced Wednesday, were not released.

The 6-foot-7 Mack averaged 3.6 points and 1.1 rebounds in 40 games for the Spurs last year.

Mack, who played at the University of Houston, was one of two rookies on the roster last year. He missed 13 games, including the last eight of the regular season and playoff games against Portland and Phoenix, with a strained left foot.

Kile hurls no-hitter

Darryl Kile, a low-budget starter on a multimillion-dollar staff, pitched baseball's second no-hitter in five days, leading the Houston Astros over the New York Mets 7-1 Wednesday night.

Kile, backed by excellent plays from third baseman Ken Caminiti and shortstop Andujar Cedeno in the seventh inning, threw Houston's first no-hitter since Mike Scott clinched the NL West championship with a 2-0 victory over San Francisco in 1986.

Kile (15-6) struck out nine and walked one. His gem came just after Jim Abbott pitched a no-hitter for the New York Yankees against Cleveland on Saturday. Seattle's Chris Bosio pitched the other no-hitter in the majors this year, against Boston on April 22.

Suns sign Mackey

The Phoenix Suns signed first-round draft pick Malcolm Mackey of Georgia Tech to a multi-year contract, the team said Wednesday.

The team did not release financial terms of the contract per club policy.

Mackey, the 27th pick overall in the June draft, averaged 15.6 points, 10.2 rebounds and two blocks a game for Georgia Tech his senior season. He averaged 13.3 points and 9.3 rebounds in four years, all as a starter.

He ranks as the school's career leading rebounder and second in blocked shots behind John Salley, who now plays for the Miami Heat.

ASU's Morgue d'Algue adds extra firepower for Sun Devil repeat hopes

BY SCOTT DAVIS
STATE PRESS

The last thing ASU women's golf coach Linda Vollstedt expected after winning last season's NCAA Championships in Athens, Ga. was another all-American to add to the roster.

She already had a first-team all-American in Wendy Ward and a second-team all-American in Emilee Klein. So what could make the Sun Devils any better?

How about junior all-American transfer Kristel Morgue d'Algue, formerly of Furman University.

Morgue d'Algue, a first-team all-American last season and an honorable mention all-American as a freshman for the Paladins, announced in April she would be leaving Furman for ASU.

She said she wanted to wait until the last possible moment to break the news of her transferring.

"(Furman) wanted to conserve me," Morgue d'Algue said. "(LPGA touring pro) Dottie Mochrie said out loud I was leaving. What she said blew (the surprise)."

Morgue d'Algue added that she was bored with Furman.

"I was tired of being there," she said. "It's a very small school and the weather wasn't great. I wanted to go somewhere exciting."

Vollstedt knew of Morgue d'Algue's hopes of transferring before the announcement was made in April. She contacted Vollstedt prior to her decision and asked her how to go about transferring.

"I told her how to proceed and we did it from there," Vollstedt said. "I stayed in the background and waited for everything to take place. I was happy when (Furman) did (release) her."

It will take an exceptional program to excite Morgue d'Algue. Furman finished the season sixth in the NCAA's, so she didn't have too many options.

Morgue d'Algue started right at the top with ASU. Besides, she already knew fellow Sun Devil Linda Ericsson from the European tour.

After contacting Vollstedt, Morgue d'Algue was then faced with the task of telling Furman's president and director of athletics.

"The president of Furman was very understanding," she said. "They treated me really well and were very nice to me."

Morgue d'Algue has been involved with golf since her childhood days growing up in France. Both of her parents are members of the French National Team in the World Cup. Morgue d'Algue said her greatest experience in the golfing world was her participation in the World

Sun Devil golfer Kristel Morgue d'Algue, a transfer from Furman University, hopes to contribute to this year's team. ASU won the NCAA Women's Golf Championship last May, and the Sun Devils look to repeat. Morgue d'Algue brings experience as a first team All-America pick.

Newly acquired Cardinal long snapper Pat Beach practices his snaps as holder Steve Beuerlein waits to spot the ball.

Phoenix ends search for long-distance snapper, ink Beach to 1-year deal

BY MIKE BRANOM
STATE PRESS

It was a changing of the guard that most Cardinal football fans will not notice.

The Phoenix Cardinals said hello to their new long snapper Pat Beach Wednesday afternoon. Less than 24 hours earlier, the Cardinals said goodbye to Kani Kahuai, their old long snapper.

Kahuai had been having problems doing his job, throwing away two punt snaps for safeties and botching two others in the past three games, and so Phoenix let him go.

It mattered little that the Cardinals' media guide describes Kahuai as "regarded by many as the finest long snapper in pro football." He could not do the task required of him and now he is gone. This is the business of football.

Beach, recently let go by Philadelphia, worked out for Phoenix on Tuesday and pleased the Cardinal brass enough to be signed to a contract that evening. This is also Cup as a 17-year-old.

Once Morgue d'Algue came to the United States and Furman, her presence was immediately felt.

During her two seasons for the Paladins, Morgue d'Algue won the Furman Invitational. She also placed 11th at the NCAA's her freshman year. Last season, Morgue d'Algue slightly improved during the NCAA's, finishing ninth.

For the upcoming season, Morgue d'Algue is hoping to continue with her dominating play. She said she is hoping to be a first-team all-American for the second straight season and is also looking to finish in the top five during the NCAA championships.

More important to Morgue d'Algue is the team concept. By doing nothing but adding to ASU's chances of repeating as national champs, Morgue d'Algue is pumped up for the season to begin.

"I really want to win NCAA's a second time," Morgue d'Algue said. "As a team, we have the potential to win every single tournament."

By transferring to ASU, Morgue d'Algue said she will already be improving one of her weaknesses, hitting the ball longer.

"Most of the girls here hit very long," Morgue d'Algue said. "That's what I want to improve."

If she can increase her distance, Morgue d'Algue could become a potent weapon for the destined-to-be No. 1 Sun Devils.

"She is a seasoned player with some tremendous experience," Vollstedt said. "Coming in with all of those credentials, she is definitely going to help the team."

the business of football.

All of this raises two interesting questions: Why does a highly-regarded long snapper suddenly lose his touch and what kind of person becomes a long snapper, anyway?

To answer the second question first, a team's long snapper is a fellow who is really no different than a running back, linebacker or any of his other peers.

"If this is what I can do to play football and contribute, then this is my position of choice," said Beach, who saw some action as a tight end for the Eagles last season. "I mean, I'm not as quick and mobile as I used to be, as far as playing tight end, but I still have a pretty good skill that I think is marketable and it's something that I can contribute to the team with."

"(To be a long snapper), obviously you have to have the physical ability, but it's also a mental thing," Cardinal special-teams coach Pete Rodriguez said. "You know what's expected of you and you have to go out there and perform under pressure."

For Beach to be hired, Kahui had to be fired first. Kahui, an 11-year veteran, has been around the NFL long enough to know that his waiving was not personal, but just part of the job.

"Right or wrong, (the Cardinals) had to do something about the situation," Kahui said. "It's happened two weeks in a row now and they're in a situation where they need to win some ballgames."

"If I knew (what happened to Kani), I would've helped him," Phoenix coach Joe Bugel said. "I don't know what happened to him. I think he's the only guy who can work through that."

Perhaps a quote from Kahui contained in the media guide sums up the job and fate of the long-distance center.

"You can never win a game as a snapper;
