Basha drops groceries for governor's race

Regent to put off food-chain tasks

By TAMMY MESA-SIERRA AND MARK M. MACIAS
STATE PRESS

Arizona Board of Regents member and supermarket mogul Eddie Basha said Tuesday that he will temporarily step down from his normal duties as Bashas' chairman of the board to devote more time to a rigorous gubernatorial campaign.

"I am lightening my load considerably," Basha said Tuesday.

Basha added that he would still retain his title, but he would delegate the majority of work to his four sons.

"I am not resigning my position as chairman of the board, and I will play a part in the decision-making process, but I will be devoting the vast majority of my time to my campaign," he said.

Basha said his decision was prompted not only by the time requirements for campaigning, but also by his desire to remain active on the ABOR.

"I'm a very active member of the ABOR," Basha said. "My regents responsibilities will not be impacted one iota (by increased campaigning)."

Regent Andy Hurwitz agreed.

Hurwitz said by stepping down from his grocery store chain, Basha will likely increase his campaigning and still maintain a vital role on the ABOR.

"(Basha) has stepped out of day-to-day management and handed it over to his sons," Hurwitz said. "I assume he still has a title. I don't know if there has been a public announcement, but I know he has said it to any number of people that during his campaign, he is going to turn over the day-to-day management to his sons and family."

Hurwitz said he is confident Basha will remain a heavy participant in regents-related activities.

"I think he will make time for both," Hurwitz said. "I think he will make the time to perform his duties as a regent, the same way that those of us with other full-time jobs make the time to do it. I don't think that it is going to be a problem."

Although Basha said he does not value public opinion polls that show him well behind other governor-hopefuls, speculation has mounted that his campaigning would increase in response to his lagging position.

According to a KAET poll released Monday, Basha is trailing both Phoenix Mayor Paul Johnson and former Phoenix Mayor Terry Goddard, who are also contenders for the democratic nomination.

Goddard ran for governor unsuccessfully against current Gov. Fife Symington in 1990. After a very close race, it was decided in a post-November runoff.

Bob Grossfeld, Basha campaign spokesman, said a lack of time has been the only problem Basha has encountered during his campaign.

"If there is a problem, it's that there aren't enough hours in the day," Grossfeld said. "He wants to travel all around the state, seven days-a-week, 24 hours-a-day."

Computer center to awe, dazzle in open house

ASU now a junction in world-wide network

This story is the first in a three-part series on the Computing Commons facility on campus.

STATE PRESS

The Computing Commons — ASU's long-awaited entry in the race for technological supremacy — will flex its muscles for all to see today and tomorrow at an open house celebrating its new 24-hour operating schedule.

Tours, seminars, displays and new technological demonstrations — scheduled from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. today and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. tomorrow — promise to dazzle even the most computer-literate students. Officials have routinely touted the new facility as the most comprehensive assembly of academic technology at any university in the country.

Located just west of the ASU Bookstore, at the intersection of Orange Mall and Palm Walk, the $15.2 million Computing Commons opened earlier this semester — five years after construction began. The building was mothballed for a year while administrators searched for money to cover operating costs.

The four-story, 121,000 square-foot building houses over 1,000 computer workstations, including about 200 for individual student use and 200 more for classroom use.

Apple Macintosh and Ricon 486 PC workstations are spread throughout the central atrium on the first floor. From these, students can access Internet, the international "network of networks" which provides a plethora of opportunities for users including:

- perusing the holdings of over 350 libraries.
- glancing over President Clinton's latest press releases.
- talking to people all over the world on free individual E-mail accounts.

• accessing just about anything else that can be put into text. "This building gives us a renewed focus on serving students," said Skip Brand, management analyst senior at the Computing Commons. "A key feature is the network. It allows every desktop access to almost every on-line information resource on campus."

Brand is especially excited about today's unveiling of the network software program "Gopher," which he describes as "a tool for burrowing in Internet."

Essentially, Gopher is what makes Internet simple enough for most people to use.

Tempe City sales-tax vote passes

By Joy E. Beason
State Press

Tempe voters approved an increase in the local sales tax by a surprisingly healthy margin Tuesday.

Voters approved a 1-1.2 percent sales tax increase by a final count of 6078-2995. Funds from the increase will go toward manning new police and fire stations, as well as to offset budget cuts recently suffered by various city departments.

"I think this is a strong message as to where Tempe is going, and a strong message as to the allocation of limited resources," said Vice-Mayor Neil Giuliano. "It shows that the leadership of Tempe remains close to the community — we communicate what we need effectively."

Voter turnout for the special election was 11.1 percent.

City officials said they were impressed with the overall turnout, though disappointed with ASU representation at the polls. District Three — which includes ASU — cast only 64 votes: 42 in favor, 22 against.

"It would be nice if (students) took more of interest in what is going on in Tempe," Giuliano said. "We need to make a more strategic effort to capture the attention of the students."

Pollsters said they were pleased with voter turnout in other areas of the city. The heaviest turnout was in District 13, the area between Price Road, Southern Avenue, McClintock Drive and Baseline Road.

"It was a steady flow the whole day," said Sarah Seibel, a District 12 pollster.

City officials were surprised that the measure passed by such a considerable margin.

"These numbers are pretty amazing, that citizens would come out and vote for a tax increase," Giuliano said. "I don't think any other community could do this on a sales tax issue ... what the outcome of the election will provide is more important than the numbers."

"I am pleasantly surprised by the large margins," added City

Around Arizona

UofA faculty senate favors stiffer admission standards

TUCSON (AP) — The University of Arizona faculty senate has endorsed a proposal to adopt stiffer admission requirements at all three state schools, despite concerns about alienating minority and fine arts students.

The proposal, passed by an overwhelming voice vote Monday, would require foreign language study and an additional year of both math and science for admittance in to UA, Arizona State University or Northern Arizona University.

It is the work of the Tri-University Task Force on Undergraduate Admission Requirements, a panel established by the Board of Regents which oversees the three universities.

The task force also sent the draft of the proposal to faculty senates at ASU and NAU, the three university presidents, community college presidents and the State Board of Education, looking for reaction.

By the end of the year, the task force will present the measure to the Board of Regents for a vote.

Dissenters on the faculty senate included Marlys Witte, a professor of surgery, who said it would deter minority students from schools that could not afford to give extra courses to meet the increased requirements.

Shiela Pitt, an assistant art professor, said the requirements "would in effect eliminate" fine arts students who are not strong in math or science.

Carjack victim 'jacks' back

TUCSON (AP) — When a man walked up to 74-year-old David McDowell, pointed a gun at him and demanded his car keys, he got more than he bargained for.

McDowell hit him with his cane. "He saw us walking to our car and he must have thought we were easy picking," McDowell said as he recounted what happened Monday. "Well, he found out that this old man isn't dead."

McDowell said when he and his wife, Jule, were approached by the man, McDowell said, "I told him, 'You want what?'"

Then "he walks up less than three feet away and has a gun. He was so close I went wham! with the cane on the left side of his head," McDowell said.

McDowell said the man fled. Police later arrested Sean Caballero, 21, who was being held in lieu of $17,500 bond after being booked on suspicion of armed robbery.

Tomassoni claims innocence

PHOENIX (AP) — An 11-year-old girl who said she helped kill her adoptive mother now claims she's innocent and wants to stand trial for the shooting death, her attorney said.

Tammie Tomassoni's court-appointed attorney, Greg Clark, said Monday he plans to file a motion withdrawing the girl's plea agreement. In April, she pleaded guilty to reckless manslaughter.

The reasons for Tammie's change of plea are unclear.

"She's only 11 years old, and I am not sure she fully understands what happens at trial," Clark said. He was appointed her lawyer Sept. 1.

Tammie's case follows that of her 12-year-old sister, Kathryn, who was found guilty of manslaughter in July and was sentenced to a residential treatment center for the Feb. 5 shooting.

During Kathryn's trial, attorneys said the girls planned the slaying to escape their abusive mother, 61-year-old Lydia Tomassoni. Kathryn's attorneys said she admitted killing the woman at Tammie's urging.

Maricopa County Juvenile Division Judge Mark Armstrong will conduct a hearing Nov. 18 to decide if he should permit the plea withdrawal.

British tourist killed in Florida

Man is 9th foreign Florida visitor slain in 11 months

MONTICELLO, Fla. (AP) — Margaret Ann Jagger, bleeding from a bullet that grazed her chest and right arm, cried into the telephone, "He's dying! He's really dying! ... Please help!"

The British tourist's boyfriend had just been fatally wounded at an interstate highway rest stop in northern Florida, the latest in a series of attacks that are threatening the state's lucrative tourism industry.

Ms. Jagger, 35, and boyfriend Gary Colley, 34, who arrived Thursday in Orlando, pulled off Interstate 10 for a nap in their unmarked rental car early Tuesday. The rest area was well-lit. There were other people around.

Then two armed youths approached, knocked on the windows and demanded money. "They woke up and tried to back out and that's when they were shot," said Jefferson County Sheriff Ken Fortune.

Ms. Jagger called 911 from a phone booth nearby.

"There's blood all coming out of his mouth. And I think he's dying," she told an emergency operator. A tape of the call was played on CNN.

Colley, who lived with Ms. Jagger for about 12 years, was the ninth foreign tourist in Florida to be killed since last October. Early Thursday, a German honeymooner driving an unmarked rental car from the Miami airport to his hotel was shot to death in an apparent highway robbery attempt.

Although police said it appeared that Colley's killers were unaware he and Ms. Jagger were foreign tourists, Gov. Lawton Chiles suspended all tourist advertising for Florida — at home and abroad. One ad campaign had used the theme, "When You Need It Bad, We've Got It Good."

The governor also ordered beefed-up patrols at the state's 48 interstate highway rest areas, deploying 540 auxiliary officers from the Florida Highway Patrol, Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission and Marine Patrol. The officers have law enforcement powers as long as they remain in contact with police.

The state also was exploring ways to hire private security for a permanent 24-hour presence at the stops.

"We have to turn our outrage into determination," Chiles said. "Violence and brutality have no welcome mat in Florida."

Authorities found a car abandoned near a Tallahassee high school Tuesday that fit the description of the suspects' vehicle. Investigators were checking to see if it was the getaway car.

Chiles offered a $10,000 reward for information leading to arrests and convictions. He said he would ask President Clinton for a federal grant to expand Florida's violent crime task force.

The state's $31 billion a year tourist industry was still reeling from last week's killing of Uwe-Wilhelm Rakebrand, 33, an agricultural engineer from Adendorf, Germany, who had just arrived in Miami with his pregnant wife. Three people were arrested in that killing.

Israel, Jordan to wage peace

Rabin flies to Morocco to initiate diplomatic relations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The historic Israeli-PLO accord bore further fruits of peace Tuesday as Jordan and Israel signed a framework for negotiations and Morocco moved toward formal recognition of the Jewish state. Yasser Arafat, once condemned as a terrorist, was warmly received in Congress.

"We will continue now rapidly to break down the barriers between Israel and other nations," said an approving President Clinton.

Jordan and Israel signed an "Agenda for Peace" at a relatively low-key State Department ceremony. The agreement lays out a framework for future negotiations. Ambassador Fayez Tarawneh, who signed for Jordan, said he hoped it would establish an agenda for discussions and lead to "a comprehensive peace that will transform the lives of all our peoples."

The product of painstaking diplomacy, the pact could lead to settlement of the border between the two countries and launch joint efforts to harness water resources, protect the environment and develop the Dead Sea region. Negotiations would seek a "mutual commitment not to threaten each other by any use of force" or terrorism.

While that ceremony took place, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin was in Morocco for a surprise meeting with King Hassan II, who

3 former presidents push NAFTA

WASHINGTON (AP) — With three ex-presidents standing behind him, President Clinton signed supplemental agreements Tuesday that the White House hopes will overcome formidable opposition to establishing the world's largest free trade zone.

During an elaborate East Room ceremony, Clinton and former presidents George Bush, Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford attacked opponents of the North American Free Trade Agreement who they said are distorting the truth and playing on Americans' worst fears.

Carter used the bluntest language, zeroing in on Dallas billionaire Ross Perot, the agreement's most vocal critic, who has contended that it will put 5.9 million American jobs in jeopardy as U.S. companies seek cheaper wages and lax enforcement of environmental and labor standards in Mexico.

"Unfortunately, in our country now, we have a demagogue who has unlimited financial resources and who is extremely careless with the truth who is preying on the fears and the uncertainties of the American public," Carter said, drawing a standing ovation from the crowd of NAFTA supporters.

Perot spokeswoman Sharon Holman said the former independent

Keep giving peace a chance

Israel and the Palestinian thorn in its side are on the verge of what just six months ago would have seemed impossible; peace in the Middle East. But radicals from both parties are already threatening the process.

Israel took a major, if not unimaginable, step toward peace Monday with a treaty that would concede some degree of Palestinian self-rule in the occupied territories.

Some Israeli hard-liners oppose the move, and judging from the violence that broke out near the Gaza Strip on Tuesday, their hesitation is justified.

Less than 24 hours after the historic treaty, Palestinian militants attacked Israeli soldiers in two separate incidents, leaving two Palestinians dead and several Israelis wounded.

The incidents serve as an eerie reminder of the only other Arab-Israeli peace treaty, the 1979 Camp David Accord, orchestrated by former President Jimmy Carter and signed by former Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and then-Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

The 1979 accord, like Monday's agreement, came with strenuous diplomatic negotiations, U.S. intervention and heavy compromises on both sides.

As in Monday's treaty, the move was opposed by anti-Israeli radicals and some Israeli hard-liners.

And despite the assassination of Sadat shortly after, the Camp David accord remained in effect and served as one of the most significant events in shaping a Mideastern peace. With a little effort, the same will be true of Monday's agreement.

If Israeli leaders truly want a rest from the area's tumultuous past, they will have to look beyond the violent actions of the Palestinian aggressors and help them make the transition to relative self-autonomy.

If PLO members truly want a lasting autonomy, they will urge their fellow countrymen to stop their deadly and futile attacks. By interrupting the peace process with gunfire and explosions, they are only shooting themselves in the foot and giving Israel a reason to retaliate.

Let's hope a decade — long peace effort is not destroyed by the handiwork of a few maladjusted discontents.

Two people died in Tuesday's attacks. Many more could die if the region's leaders give up on peace now.

THE MENENDEZ BROTHERS - TWEEDLE-DUM AND TWEEDLE-DUMBER

True victims in Mendez trial are murdered mother, father

The fact that the two brothers shot and killed their parents in their own home is tragedy enough. The possibility that the may not receive the death sentence adds further dismay to this tale of unthinkable atrocity.

Erik and Lyle Menendez should be put to death quickly; no appeals, no stays of execution, and no pardon by the governor. Justice demands that they be executed with all due speed.

This is a tale of horror. This is a tale of defense attorneys who will do most anything to save their clients.

This is a tale of how our system of justice is increasingly facing the politics of victimism.

This is a tale that should shock the conscience of everyone who reads it.

On Aug. 20, 1989, in their Beverly Hills home, Erik and Lyle Menendez quietly slipped into the room where their parents were watching television. The brothers did not go into the room to have a nice chat with mom and dad; Lyle and Erik went into the room to do one thing — to shoot to death their mother and father.

The brothers accomplished their mission, leaving behind a murder scene that would cause even an experienced homicide detective to become sick at the sight of the carnage. Jose and Kitty Menendez were blown to pieces by a total of 15 shotgun blasts. Jose's head was nearly severed from his body. Kitty's body was almost unrecognizable; she had been shot even as she tried to crawl away on the floor.

This was a calculated, cold-blooded, and vicious murder. After the two brothers murdered their parents, they developed an alibi and then called the police. They pretended that they had returned home only to find their parents dead. A few days later, as if stricken by grief, they even bid their parents farewell during a touching memorial service.

Two months after the murder, Erik confessed the murder to his therapist. It was another five months before they were arrested. Erik and Lyle confessed to the murders only after the California Supreme Court ruled that Erik's confession to his therapist was admissible in court.

Now that they have confessed to such an unconscionable crime, they are claiming to be the victims of the crime. Their defense is that their father, Jose, had threatened to kill them if they made public the years of sexual abuse they had endured from him. They assert that they were both victims of sexual and mental abuse by their father.

So what? Yes, if they were in fact sexually abused by their father this is tragic. However, it does not warrant them blowing their parents away with a shotgun. There are other ways to deal with the situation. It is unthinkable that they claim to be the victims.

Where does this type of victimist defense come from? The two attorneys representing the brothers, Erik, 19 years old at the time of the slaying, is now 22. He is represented by Leslie Abramson, a fiery and very successful defense attorney. When asked to describe her, one attorney stated that "... I have no doubt that she would cut my heart out and eat it if that would suit her purpose." Lyle, 22 years old at the time of the murder, is now 25. He is represented by Jill Lansing.

These attorneys seem to be willing to do most anything to save the brothers from the death penalty. Abramson has only lost one client to the death penalty; let's hope that this is number two. It defies the imagination to hear that this "killers as victims" defense will even be heard in an American court of law.

The defense attorneys, in an attempt to legitimize the defense, assert that the brothers should not face the death penalty because they felt that they were in "imminent danger." What a farce! The imminent danger rule does not apply in this case; Kitty and Jose Menendez were sitting on their sofa watching a movie when they were executed. The only imminent danger that Lyle and Erik faced at that moment was the possibility of being excluded from viewing the movie!

Maybe the brothers wanted their parents fortune and could not wait for Father Time to take their parents. This is the contention of the prosecutors of the case. They hold that Erik and Lyle killed so that they could inherit their parents' $14 million dollar estate. The prosecution points to the fact that the brothers went on a spending spree after the murder.

Lyle bought a new Porsche, a restaurant in Princeton, N.J., and other "small" items such as a Rolex watch. Erik overcame his grief by, among other things, hiring a new tennis coach. Too bad they won't be able to take their worldly possessions with them when they are executed.

But that is where the potential tragedy lies; if this defense holds, as it very well may, then the brothers may be on the streets again one day. Why? Because juries, judges, and American society in general have been slowly embracing the idea that everyone is a victim of one sort or another. If Lyle and Erik are allowed to live, the court will be sending a clear message to future murderers — that it is OK to kill as long as you can show that you were in any sense a victim in the situation.

Where will this lead our system of justice? It will lead us to spare the life of a young man who brutally murders his boss. After all, this young man grew up in a crime ridden, and drug infested neighborhood. He has been and would continue to be oppressed in the real world; he is a victim. If this logic seems tenuous, think hard about the possible ramifications that this case has.

In the end, the victims in this case are Kitty and Jose Menendez. This case has two dead victims. It has two defense lawyers. It has two juries (the brothers are being tried separately). Let us hope that the juries will hand down the death penalty to both of these horrible murderers, lest there be two tragedies.

“Enough of blood and tears. Enough.”
 — Yitzhak Rabin, Israel's prime minister, at the signing of the PLO-Israeli treaty in Washington.

“My people are hoping that this agreement which we are signing today marks the beginning of the end of a chapter of pain and suffering which has lasted throughout this century.”
 — Yasser Arafat, the PLO leader, speaking in Arabic, at the White House signing ceremony.

Give a little of yourself, get a whole lot in return

Imagine being eleven years old again. Only this time, you're from a foreign country and you don't speak English. You've just moved to America.

DONNA SHALALA
 Guest Columnist

Everything is new and confusing. You can't read the street signs. You miss home terribly and don't have any friends.

That's how a boy named Jorge was introduced to our country in 1986.

He struggled for an entire year, barely talking to anyone. His grades dropped and he refused to go out and play. Jorge's mother thought only a miracle would restore his confidence.

Sometimes miracles happen.

Through a community service project sponsored by Georgetown University, Jorge became friends with a college student named Richard. For several years, they got together once or twice a week, sometimes reading English, sometimes playing soccer, sometimes watching movies.

Today, a high school graduate, Jorge speaks English so well that he is taking college classes at George Washington University. And Richard learned a lot about the culture and struggles of immigrant families in our country.

This is just one story, but it's emblematic of the good you can do by just spending time with someone younger. By taking a grade school student to the museum and encouraging her to become a scientist. Or by helping a child learn his times tables. You can open a window to a new world. You can create a miracle.

People who cease to have hope cease to be alive. Every 12 seconds of the school day, an American child drops out. Every 30 seconds, a child runs away from home. And every minute, a teenager gives birth.

These are silent, desperate cries for help — and indications of a lack of hope.

I'm convinced that the best way to prevent these tragedies is to shape positive attitudes.

Young people need an inner strength — a core of self-confidence and aspiration — to help them make smart choices in their lives. Your friendship, your time, can help someone else develop that strength. That's what happened with Jorge and Richard.

Charles Barkley was right about one thing: superstar athletes shouldn't be kids' only role models. Young people need examples who come from everyday life, whose accomplishments illuminate the potential within them. There can be only 12 players on the Dream Team, but there's always room for more doctors, more teachers, more engineers and more good citizens.

Join a Big Sister/Big Brother program and make a difference in a child's life, a child just like Jorge. Or volunteer through your local church or synagogue. Share yourself with someone who's younger; you'll make a lasting impression, learn a great deal about yourself and help build a better society. Not a bad bargain.

“Charles Barkley was right about one thing: superstar athletes shouldn't be kids' only role models. Young people need examples who come from everyday life, whose accomplishments illuminate the potential within them.”

Of course, volunteering isn't just about working with children. You can work with the elderly or disabled, clean up parks and neighborhoods or help build housing for low-income people. Look around. There's so much to be done.

And as you move through your college years, consider taking a year or two after college and being a part of the new National Service Program that Congress recently enacted at President Clinton's request. Watch the news about it in the coming months. The first group of participants will be going to work in the summer and fall of 1994. Think about it.

I revere the idea that one person, even acting alone, has the power to make our world better. Never forget Martin Luther King's message that “Anyone can be great, because anyone can serve.” We want you to be great. And our youth need you to be great.

Greenhouse effect still a mystery, not eco-dogma

Garin Groff's piece in Friday's State Press (“ASU Professor: Global warming trend natural, not catastrophic”) opens a can of worms. There is insufficient space here nor do I have the inclination to debate global climate change with a climatologist. I am an ecologist and have approached global warming largely from the effects side. In my graduate seminar on ecological effects of global climate change, we looked for and read many scientific papers on the issue. Prof. Balling's book “The Heated Debate” was perhaps the best presentation of what is a decidedly minority view. This does not mean he's wrong.

On the other side is the 1990 report of Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), which reports the results of a scientific assessment of the evidence for and against global climate change. The panel consisted of hundreds of scientists from 25 countries and its work was sponsored by the World Meteorological Organization and the United Nations Environmental Program. The conclusions of the IPCC differ greatly from Balling's; in short, the specter of global warming driven by an anthropogenic increase in greenhouse gases including CO<sub>2</sub> is underway, will likely intensify, and may have substantial ecological consequences. This does not mean it's right.

The global warming issue is marked by uncertainty. The IPCC report is maddeningly replete with cautious predictions, hedges, and probability statements. This is central to the scientific process. Scientists attempt to reduce uncertainty with objective analysis of divergent views, especially those that challenge the dominant paradigm.

Uncertainty, caution, and objective analysis of alternative hypotheses are not apparent in this report of Balling's views. Statements like “... you've got to be a flaming idiot just to say that a half degree of warming was caused by a buildup of greenhouse gases.” (attributed to Balling by Groff) are conspicuously absent from the IPCC report.

Many of the scientific controversies we face as citizens of a complex world have no exact solutions. We will have to make provisional judgments based on incomplete evidence and uncertain predictions. Because these are scientific issues, not a debate, we should look for light, not heat; objective treatment of alternative views; and conclusions that acknowledge their own uncertainty. It fortunately is not necessary to understand all the technical nuances of an argument to evaluate it as responsible science. I hope that those who read Groff's piece in search of a resolution to the global warming issue will continue to look.

has long taken a moderate position toward Israel. The meeting was expected to lead to diplomatic relations.

Rabin said it would not happen instantly. "But the fact that from Washington we are coming to Rabat and are meeting with the king perhaps is another step forward in everything that is linked to establishing relations," he said.

In Washington, a senior official said Secretary of State Warren Christopher had sent letters to some 10 U.S. embassies in Europe, the Middle East and Asia, suggesting the host governments "provide political and financial support" to the Palestinians.

The official said appeals had earlier been made to the European Community, Japan, Saudi Arabia and other Persian Gulf states.

Arafat, denounced in America for nearly three decades as a terrorist, said he was not ready to shuck his military uniform. But he was clearly relishing a new Washington role of good-natured statesman.

"I am not a chameleon," Arafat said, proudly asserting he still was commander-in-chief of a Palestinian army. However, he said at a news conference that when Palestinians get a state and control over East Jerusalem Jews would be welcome to keep living there.

Arafat met with Senate leaders who promised to review U.S. laws that bar financial assistance to the PLO because of its long history of terrorism against Israelis and Americans.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said Congress and the Clinton administration would pursue "the best and most appropriate way" to further the peace process.

Arafat then went to the National Press Club where he said that more than 1 million Palestinians in Gaza faced starvation. "We are in need, at least, of loan guarantees," he said.

At the same time, Arafat reaffirmed he intends to see a Palestinian state established and to take control of East Jerusalem, which he described as occupied territory.

"We know there is a problem, and we are not going to put our heads in the sand," he said. "No. We have to face all the problems. ... If there is a will we can find a way."

He said joint Palestinian-Jordanian committees were already working on a confederation of a Palestinian state with the kingdom headed by King Hussein.

On another issue, Arafat said he would not use force against Hamas and other Muslim radical groups to compel them to abandon violence. The problem, he said, would be dealt with through "democracy" within the PLO.

A few miles away, at the State Department, the agreement signed by Israeli and Jordanian diplomats kept the peace momentum going. Presiding at the ceremony, Christopher said the document was "a very important step toward that very comprehensive peace" between Israel and the Arabs.

He noted that it came just a day after "we witnessed the historic signing of the Israeli-Palestinian declaration of principles, an event that really has forever altered the contours and chemistry of the entire region."

The earlier accord gives the Palestinians immediate administrative control over Gaza and Jericho and calls for negotiations within two years on the future of Jerusalem and the PLO's quest for a state on Israeli-held land.

Israel's chief negotiator, Elyakim Rubinstein, said the agreement with Jordan was "yet another step in a long road to peace."

Rubinstein had opposed the accords with the Palestine Liberation Organization and flew here from Jerusalem only to sign the Jordanian agreement he helped put together.

Ambassador Tarawneh, who signed for Jordan, stressed that any final agreement would depend on accords between Israel and all its Arab neighbors.

"We are not negotiating a truce, we are negotiating a genuine peace ... that will last for generations to come," Tarawneh said. "We don't want to rush."

At the White House, President Clinton praised the fast-moving developments and applauded both the agreement for Palestinian self-rule and King Hassan's gesture toward Israel.

"I think the king has set an example" other Arab states will follow — "trying to establish a continuing dialogue," Clinton said.

Clinton, meanwhile, was receptive to the idea of finding aid for the Palestinians. He said a donors' meeting may be held to "put together the kind of package we ought to have."

The House passed a non-binding resolution praising Israel and the PLO and committing the United States "to supporting efforts to make this agreement a success."

There continued to be negative reaction as well:

- Protests in Israeli-occupied Gaza included an apparent suicide assault by one Palestinian on a police station and an attempt by another to stab a soldier. The assailants were killed, the first by blowing himself up, the second shot by Israeli soldiers.

- Israel's ultra-Orthodox Shas political party threatened to force a national vote on the accord with the PLO, and the Likud opposition bloc called for new elections.

presidential candidate would not respond to Carter's attack. "We're going to stay focused on the issues," she said.

The 2,000-page main trade agreement was completed in August 1992 by the Bush administration. It would remove virtually all barriers to trade and investment among the United States, Mexico and Canada over a 15-year period.

Clinton demanded three supplemental agreements on enforcement of environmental laws, worker standards and sudden import surges to correct what he saw as flaws in the main agreement.

Those supplemental agreements were signed Tuesday in separate ceremonies by Clinton and Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari.

Canadian Prime Minister Kim Campbell, who is facing a tough October election, signed the agreements without a public ceremony Monday night, her office said.

The White House had most of the Cabinet on hand along with 13 governors, four mayors, various business executives and Democratic and Republican leaders from the House and Senate.

Clinton, who was forced to pass his economic program without a single Republican vote, is counting on GOP support to offset widespread defections by liberals in his own party.

The president said that those who opposed NAFTA were playing on the "fears and insecurities that are legitimately gripping the great American middle class."

POLICE REPORT

Tempe police were involved in a high-speed pursuit early Tuesday morning, making three arrests and recovering a stolen border control vehicle.

Two officers attempted to stop the fleeing vehicle at the intersection of Rural and Baseline roads, reportedly on a hunch that something was not right. The driver did not heed the officers and sped away before stopping at 6200 S. Rita Drive, where all three occupants fled on foot.

One suspect was immediately apprehended at the scene, and another was caught by a K-9 officer. The driver remains at-large, but the two men caught identified him, and an arrest is pending, reports said.

ASU police reported the following incidents Tuesday:

- A man unaffiliated with ASU was advised by police on Monday to leave the Gammage Auditorium area. He told police he was waiting for concert tickets.

- A student was injured at the Student Recreation Center Monday morning. He was transported to the Student Health Center by ASU DPS.

- A man unaffiliated with ASU was told to leave campus Monday after he was seen rummaging through garbage cans at the MU.

- A student had his bicycle stolen from the Physical Sciences Building Monday night. He estimated loss at $50.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Tuesday:

- A 21-year-old Tempe man was arrested Monday at Maloney's — On Campus, 955 E. University Drive, after he was seen stealing beers from an unattended bar. He was also seen fighting with bouncers while being ejected.

- A 20-year-old Tempe man was also arrested Monday at Maloney's — On Campus, 955 E. University Drive, after fighting with bouncers and threatening to shoot them. The man was fighting with bouncers because they were detaining his friend for using a fake ID. When officers arrived, they discovered fake ID's on both men, who were cited for the offense.

- In a burglary Monday night in the 2400 block of East Fairmont Drive, a suspect kicked open an unlocked front door to gain entry to the home.

- A UPS district loss prevention officer turned over 1 1/2 pounds of marijuana in two packages to Tempe police last week. It is unknown who mailed the two packages, which were addressed to Illinois and Kansas.

Poll: DeConcini's rating drops 17 points in 3 months

Loss of approval linked to 'yes' vote on Clinton's Tax Reform Bill

BY JAKE BATSELL
STATE PRESS

The approval rating of U.S. Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., has taken a 17-point plunge over the past three months, according to an ASU poll released Tuesday.

A survey of Arizona voters co-sponsored by KAET-TV and ASU's Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Telecommunication found that 42 percent of poll respondents with an opinion said they approved or strongly approved of the job DeConcini was doing in office. In a June 1993 KAET poll, that number was 59 percent.

The poll also found former Phoenix Mayor Terry Goddard ahead in Arizona's 1994 gubernatorial campaign, seven points ahead of current Phoenix Mayor Paul Johnson and 10 points above current Arizona Gov. Fife Symington.

The dive in DeConcini's approval rating comes after his controversial vote in favor of President Clinton's Tax Reform Bill, which was passed by the U.S. Senate in July by a 51-50 count.

Bob Maynes, DeConcini's press secretary, attributed the fall to a misperception that Clinton's plan will raise taxes for middle-income citizens.

"Basically, what (the poll) confirms is that the Republicans did a superb job of convincing people that the Clinton proposal was going to raise people's taxes," Maynes said Tuesday from DeConcini's office in Washington, D.C.

"If you tell a lie frequently enough, there will be a substantial number of people who believe it. It will take time for the truth to come to the fore."

Maynes said Clinton's plan will raise taxes only for Americans making more than $180,000 per year and will not affect the middle class.

The poll, headed by Bruce Merrill of the Cronkite School's Media Research Program, was conducted from September 9-12 and is based on telephone interviews with 437 registered voters statewide. There is a 4.9 percent margin of error in the overall results.

"At least in the short run, DeConcini's support for Clinton has been costly," Merrill said in a release issued by KAET.

Maynes said the senator was aware his vote would fall under public scrutiny.

"He assumed it would be politically unpopular, because of the misperception that (Clinton's plan) would affect the middle-income folks," Maynes said.

Of 184 surveyed Democrats, 41 percent said they would vote to re-elect DeConcini in the 1994 Arizona U.S. Senate primary. Thirty-three percent said they would support Arizona Secretary of State Dick Mahoney.

The poll's other findings:

- Goddard led a pack of five frequently-mentioned gubernatorial candidates, as 26 percent of registered voters saying they would vote for him if the election were held today. Johnson was next with 19 percent, followed by Symington (16 percent), Arizona Board of Regents member Eddie Basha (11 percent) and Arizona Attorney General Grant Woods (8 percent).

- President Clinton registered a 51 percent approval rating among Arizona voters, while 49 percent said they disapprove of the job he's doing.

- Three other local politicians scored favorable approval ratings — Johnson as Phoenix mayor (94 percent), Woods as attorney general (77 percent) and Arizona Secretary of State Dick Mahoney (78 percent).

Beeware — 'killer' bees head toward Phoenix area in full force

Domestic bees have no effect on African bees' deadly poison

BY GARIN GROFF
STATE PRESS

Prompted by speculation that Phoenix-bound "killer" bees would become less aggressive before reaching the United States, an ASU professor has discovered that these African bees are genetically unchanged after 30 years of breeding.

The bees, which have killed humans and animals, will likely thrive in southern areas of Arizona, including the Phoenix area, said Jon Harrison, an assistant professor of zoology who has studied bees since 1982.

The entire strain of African bees, introduced to South America in the 1950s, was expected to become tamer after breeding with less-aggressive European bees already inhabiting the Americas, Harrison said.

Harrison found otherwise in a 500-bee study conducted with Glenn Hall from the University of Florida.

No weakening of the entire African strain was found, he said. However, there has been a formation of a third, small group of hybrids which have done poorly in nearly every area they have inhabited, Harrison said.

The strong African group is expected to enter and multiply in Arizona.

"They'll be coming in fairly rapidly over the next couple of years," Harrison said.

"It's going to be something that we're going to learn to live with, like we live with scorpions and rattlesnakes."

No African bees have been found in Maricopa county, but they are expected here within one or two years, said Suzanne Sorich, public relations officer from the Arizona Department of Agriculture.

"The bees certainly are in the state and are moving northward," Sorich said.

Sorich said the bees are now established in southern portions of the state.

Harrison predicts the bees will spread rapidly through warm areas of the state and stop advancing when they reach cool climates, as they did when introduced to South America.

"Presumably, something similar will happen in Arizona where the African bees will do very well around Tucson and Phoenix, and the European bees will do well around Flagstaff," Harrison said.

Attempts to stop the bees' northward progress from Central and South America proved unsuccessful, Harrison said, adding that it is impossible to stop them from moving into the United States.

The bees were first introduced to the Americas in the 1950s, following experiments by a Brazilian geneticist to increase honey production of European bees.

People do not need to panic over the arrival of the bees, Harrison said, but should use caution when encountering bees since African and European bees look alike and cannot be differentiated without tests.

Harrison anticipated several problems as a result of the bees' aggressive nature.

The African bees are more likely to sting after being provoked, he said, leaving a chemical in whatever bothers them as a signal for others to attack.

"Essentially, it's like tagging you for destruction," he said.

Harrison said occasional attacks could occur on the edge of the city or on desert hikers, but few swarms will come into the metropolitan area since the bees do not like to be close to humans.

One concern of beekeepers is that European bees, which have lived in the Americas for about 400 years, could be nearly eliminated by the African bees.

"These bees have done so well, in fact, that it has been virtually impossible to keep European bees in many parts of South America," he said.

Higher prices in honey, fruits and nuts could result, since honey from African bees must be collected more often than from European bees.

Going into a hive to obtain honey requires more body protection and care than European bees.

"Of course, going into the hive and taking honey out is a less pleasant experience with African bees," Harrison said.

Bee extermination companies said they have prepared for the advance of African bees.

Exterminator Robert Ramirez of Dixon Pest Control said he went to Mexico to receive training and found the African bees difficult to deal with.

"The ones that were already established were very aggressive," he said.

Mary Young of A-Westside Bee Swarm Control said that after media reports of bees advancing, the business usually receives 10 calls from Valley residents who claim to have the aggressive bees in their yards.

However, she said the exterminator has found all cases to be false alarms from frantic people.

Young said the only way people can hope to avoid contact with the bees is to "put a net over your house and stay inside for the rest of your life."

Graduate studies to be new focus of Coor's education initiatives

By JAMES FRUSETTA
STATE PRESS

ASU President Lattie Coor said he plans to parallel his undergraduate initiatives with a new set of goals aimed at refining the University's graduate studies.

Although planning is in the early stages, Coor said he recently named a strategic planning committee headed by Vice Provost Kathleen Church to study issues facing graduate education. The findings of the committee are expected later this semester.

"What I did in advance of the undergraduate initiative was announce a year in advance that we were going to get after this task," Coor said. "I'm doing that now for graduate studies."

In January, Coor outlined a specific set of goals for improving the quality of undergraduate education at ASU.

Coor declined speculation on a date for the goals to be announced, saying the planning process is still in the preliminary stages.

"I have asked for a report by the end of the semester," Coor said. "My hunch is that report will say — 'Here are the dimensions that we intend to reach resolution on.' But I will not predict that until we see how the process goes now."

Church said adequate funding will play a key role in determining how the graduate goals progress.

"(What we're looking at is) part funding, it's partially those areas where we should be increasing in size, where we should be decreasing in size, and how we can be competitive nationwide," Church said.

"This is very preliminary, we're just starting to look at it, and there'll be a lot of discussion and debate before we're done."

Graduate student leaders are pleased, but cautious that Coor will put more emphasis on research than improving actual coursework.

"I think graduate students, in general, are happy with the quality of education at ASU," said physics graduate student Thomas Roessler. "I think they're not so happy about how they're integrated with the University as a whole."

"We need to have a feeling that (ASU) is a community of scholars," said history graduate student J. Scott Matthews. "I think we lose students because of it, I think people here don't get the full benefit of the ASU experience."

Although graduate goals may be on a different level for administrators and students, both groups agree that reform is needed for graduate stipendships.

"Funding and money for graduate students is very important," Roessler said. "It would be good (if the report considered) health insurance waivers or in-state tuition waivers."

Coor agreed.

"My own belief is that we've got to be looking at stipend increases for graduate students in the $3,000 — $4,000 range," he said. "But we can't say that's a goal unless we understand it, its implications and how we're going to finance it."

Expert panel links childhood vaccines to illnesses, deaths

WASHINGTON (AP) — The risk of illness and even death from childhood disease vaccines is real, but "extraordinarily low," experts report in a study from the National Academy of Sciences.

A 14-member committee that studied scores of reports on reactions to childhood vaccines concluded that there were instances where vaccinations were the cause of serious side effects, including life-threatening illnesses. There were even rare instances of death attributable to the shots, the committee said.

"Most of the pathologic conditions our committee studied are rare in the general population and the risk of getting them from vaccines is extremely low," said Dr. Richard B. Johnston Jr., a pediatrician who was chairman of the experts committee.

Johnston said the committee was not asked to assess the benefits of childhood vaccines and, as a result, "the report only talks about findings of vaccine causing problems."

He said such problems were "very rare events" and that the committee findings did not change his opinion "as a pediatrician and a father that all children should be fully immunized."

The committee report said there was a "causal relationship" between measles vaccine and death from measles infection, and between oral polio vaccine and death from polio virus infection. The risk in both cases was said to be "extraordinarily low."

There also was found to be an "extraordinarily low" risk of death from anaphylaxis, an extreme form of allergic reaction, following injection of the hepatitis B vaccine.

Some forms of the diphtheria and tetanus toxoid shots also resulted in rare deaths from anaphylaxis. The report noted, however, that there had been no deaths reported in one study of almost 30 million diphtheria and tetanus shots from 1979 to 1990.

Evidence favored, but did not prove, that diphtheria and tetanus toxoid shots could cause rare deaths from Guillain-Barre syndrome, an acute inflammation of nerve tissue, the panel said.

The committee said there was evidence establishing a link between measles shots and thrombocytopenia, a blood disorder that disrupts clotting. A link between oral polio vaccine and developing polio was also established. In some cases, polio was passed to unvaccinated family members, the report said. In both cases, however, the risk was said to be low.

No causal relationship could be established between childhood vaccinations and a large number of other illnesses. Disorders with no proven link include arthritis, sudden infant death syndrome, diabetes, meningitis, deafness and seizures.

Mandela to whites: 'We need you'

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — If much of white South Africa is huddling behind barbed-wire fences and thinking about emigrating, Nelson Mandela's ANC is putting out a soothing message: "Don't panic. We need you."

As Parliament convened to pass bills that will end white rule, Mandela and ANC officials launched an exhaustive campaign tour across the Cape Town area this week to reassure whites and the mixed-race population — classified as "colored" under apartheid — that they have a future in the new South Africa.

Mandela says the message is "critically important" for the African National Congress, the expected victor in South Africa's first non-racial election April 27.

Whites represent only about one-sixth of South Africans, but they are the most prosperous population group. Along with the mixed-race population, the second-largest minority group in the country, they comprise about 9 million of South Africa's 40 million people.

If they flee, taking their wealth with them, it will undermine the new government's ability to reverse a four-year recession and meet the expectations of millions of mostly impoverished blacks.

The ANC is facing an aggressive campaign from the ruling National Party, which is trying to convince whites an ANC victory will lead to communists in government, more crime in white neighborhoods and continued political violence in black areas.

The National Party already has heavy inroads among the "coloreds," attracting more than 30 legislators from the mixed-race Labor Party since dropping its whites-only policy in 1990.

So Mandela led a chorus of ANC speakers of every possible hue at a rally Monday night specifically designed to woo whites and coloreds to the ANC camp and convince them the future is not so dire.

"I hope to persuade you that we are in reality the only organization with the commitment, the will and the courage to reconstruct our war-torn and divided society," he said.

"Our detractors say we are going to nationalize everything, including your cups, your utensils and even lipsticks," he said.

In a country weighed down by gloomy predictions of civil war, ANC regional chairman Allan Boesak, whose mixed-race skin is a tawny brown, set a lighthearted tone in his warm-up remarks.

"All you white people, don't be afraid. You can laugh. You can smile. Be happy," he chided at the rally held at Cape Town's downtown Civic Center.

The venue was selected as being more friendly to whites than the outlying black and mixed-race townships where most ANC meetings take place, but even so only about 20 percent of those attending appeared to be white.

Boesak moved effortlessly between English and Afrikaans — the Dutch-derived language spoken by many Afrikaners, descendants of the white Dutch settlers who formulated apartheid.

Mandela, a Xhosa who normally addresses crowds in English, also tried his tongue on the language.

"Let's bury the past," he said in Afrikaans to roars of approval. "What's done is done."

The speech was in stark contrast to those Mandela has made in the past few weeks to black township crowds. In the townships, Mandela has mixed calls for reconciliation with angry attacks on whites in government and the security forces, labeling them racist and blaming them for violence in black townships.

In one controversial speech, he demanded the removal of all white police from black townships, a call that sparked allegations of racism from the government.

But Mandela confines such remarks to whites in the security forces and government, longtime enemies of the ANC, and he emphasized to Monday's crowd the number of white leaders the ANC has had in its 81-year history.

They include Carl Niehaus, a white Afrikaner, an increasingly high-profile figure who is used to espouse the ANC's point of view to often-hostile Afrikaner crowds.

One of the speakers who addressed Monday's crowd was Melanie Verwoerd, a South African of flawless white credentials. One of Verwoerd's in-laws was Hendrik Verwoerd,

Associated Press
Nelson Mandela, president of the African National Congress, addresses youths in the mixed-race township of Mitchells Plain near Cape Town Monday.

the prime minister from 1958-66 who outlawed the ANC and is considered the architect of apartheid.

She joined the ANC last year, deciding it was the only group dedicated to nonracialism.

"When you get involved in an organization like the ANC, I believe that you will find that you have less and less time for morbid talk and fears, which I find is the most popular hobby among white Afrikaners at the moment," she told the crowd.

Verwoerd conceded that joining the ANC has had its risks for someone of her background.

"People often regard you as a weirdo or an opportunist when you do this seemingly crazy thing," she said.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Walter Payton has some advice for parents: Get rid of the television set.

"You know who is raising our kids? TV. It's the worst thing in the world for kids," the National Football League hall of famer said Monday while on a five-city tour for the Food for Thought literacy program.

"When you do have kids, please take all your TVs out of your house or at least lock them up."

The former Chicago Bears running back said his 12-year-old son and 8-year-old daughter may choose from two television categories: "They can watch either sporting events or anything their mother picks out."

DENVER (AP) — A daughter of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. thinks too many people have ignored his call for nonviolent social change, so she's hoping her multimedia mix of theater and the arts can make a difference.

Yolanda King, 37, plans to intersperse her father's voice and a videotape of him speaking in her solo show "Tracks," which begins a Midwest tour in Denver on Oct. 21.

King believes her father's message can have a positive effect on the lives of young people in communities wracked by gang violence, drug addiction and family breakups.

"If more of us had listened, then maybe we would not be in the predicament we are today with our young people," she said.

Since 1991, King has performed "Tracks" at only two other locations: the National Black Theater Festival and the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Heidi Fleiss' exclusive tales of commercial romance in Hollywood are of no interest to Playboy magazine founder Hugh Hefner.

"She's not my cup of tea. She's not my kind of girl," said Hefner, who according to Tuesday's Daily News of Los Angeles rejected an offer for print and video rights to the reputed madam's life.

Hefner told the newspaper he was offered the package, which included photographs for a magazine layout and videos for the Playboy cable channel, during a telephone call from financier Bernie Cornfield. No price was discussed.

Cornfield, a longtime friend of Fleiss, has said he once gave Fleiss $1 million and a Rolls-Royce convertible.

HAMPDEN-SYDNEY, Va. (AP) — Oliver Stone will tell what it was like to be a soldier. Neil Sheehan will cover the role of the war correspondent. And George McGovern will reminisce about the struggles on the home front.

On a small college campus where the students are too young to remember the Vietnam War, a wide range of speakers gather this week to bring history alive.

Jason Sandoval was an infant when the war ended in 1975. Like most of his fellow students at Hampden-Sydney College, "I just remember hearing about this conflict that tore the country apart, and I didn't understand why."

Others got their Vietnam history lessons from "Platoon," Stone's motion picture about the war, or from "The Bright and Shining Lie," Sheehan's Pulitzer Prize-winning book.

Other speakers at the three-day symposium beginning Thursday include Gen. William Westmoreland, who will analyze the military strategy he used as commander of U.S. forces in Vietnam.

William Colby, a former Central Intelligence Agency director, will talk about his role in directing the "other war," the struggle for the support of the Vietnamese people.

Walter W. Rostow, national security adviser to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, and former Sens. Eugene McCarthy and McGovern will get into the political strategies that began and ended the war.

LoDuca up for Golden Spikes

Former Sun Devil catcher Paul LoDuca, a prospect with the Los Angeles Dodgers, was named one of nine finalists Tuesday for the Golden Spikes Award, given to the most outstanding amateur baseball player in the country.

LoDuca, who signed with the Dodgers in July and opted to forgo his senior season at ASU, is looking to become the fourth Sun Devil to receive the award, behind Bob Horner (1978), Oddibe McDowell (1984) and Mike Kelly (1991).

Along with Jason Varitek from Georgia Tech, LoDuca will vie to become the first catcher to ever win the Golden Spikes Award.

In his junior season at ASU, LoDuca was named The Sporting News Player of the Year, leading the nation in hits with 129. He finished with a .446 batting average, setting an ASU record. LoDuca hit in 61 of ASU's 66 games last season, and hit in 37 consecutive games, best in the nation last season.

Other finalists for the award include pitcher Brian Anderson, Wright State University; pitcher/designated hitter Darren Dreifort, Wichita State; pitcher Jeff Granger, Texas A&M; pitcher/designated hitter Brooks Kieschnick, University of Texas; pitcher John Powell, Auburn; short-stop Alex Rodriguez, Westminster Christian High, (Miami, Fla.) and second baseman Todd Walker, Louisiana State.

Duva protesting decision

Pernell Whitaker's promoter Dan Duva said Tuesday he has protested his fighter's controversial draw with Julio Cesar Chavez based on remarks by British judge Mickey Vann.

Vann was quoted by The Star of London as saying he took it upon himself to deduct a point from Whitaker for a low blow in the sixth round of Friday night's WBC welterweight title bout in San Antonio.

Referee Joe Cortez of Las Vegas, the only official permitted under the rules to take a point away, declined to penalize Whitaker.

Duva said his attorney, Pat English, had written the Texas Department of Licensing and Regulations, which oversees boxing, requesting Vann's decision be changed.

"I deducted a point from Whitaker for an appallingly low blow in the sixth round," Vann was quoted as saying. "The referee did not issue an official warning, but I took the point away from him anyway."

The single-point difference on Vann's scorecard would have given Whitaker a majority decision. Vann scored the round 10-9 for Chavez and had the fight even at 115-115. Franz Marti of Switzerland also scored it 115-115 and Jack Woodruff of Dallas had it 115-113 for Whitaker, who retained the title.

"The only one who can take a point away is the referee, and that's true in fights all over the world," Duva told the New York Times on Monday. "I've never heard, in the fights we've ever done, anyone taking away a point when the referee didn't."

ASU spiker survives worst

Major knee surgery can't stop Monson

By PAUL J. MATTHEWS
STATE PRESS

Life at ASU hasn't exactly gone the way volleyball player Michelle Monson planned.

She had lived and breathed volleyball since the fifth grade. In high school, she discovered that she could play for club teams in the off-season and suddenly volleyball was year-round.

"Volleyball was everything to me," Monson said. "I never missed a practice. I played every summer, went to different cities in Colorado every weekend: Vail, Aspen. Volleyball was it."

After being selected to the All-State team her junior and senior years of high school, the Colorado native was heavily recruited by the likes of the University of Colorado, Washington State, San Diego State University and a host of east coast schools.

She chose ASU because it was the most competitive conference in the country and she wanted to help ASU win a Pac-10 championship.

But the only competition Monson saw as a freshman was the race to the end of the bench, as Coach Patti Snyder went with experience on an ASU squad dominated by seniors.

"It was really hard," Monson said. "I had never sat the bench before. I used to call my coach at home, 'What am I doing wrong?' It was a very big transition year."

Monson was determined to earn a starting position her sophomore year. She had played sparingly, but was put into the rotation in an October game against Washington. A few minutes after being substituted into the game, her world was shattered by a knee injury that nearly ended her volleyball career.

"I went up to hit the ball and I think I landed at an angle," Monson recalled.

After somersaulting across the floor, Monson looked down to see her dislocated knee wrenched about 30 degrees to the left.

"I went into shock. My knee was completely twisted around. (Teammate Mindy Gowell) heard my knee pop, and she ran into the bathroom and got sick."

Monson had surgery a week later. Doctors discovered that she had completely torn her anterior cruciate ligament. With the exception of her posterior ligament, she had stretched or damaged every major ligament in her knee.

Doctors told her that she would probably never play volleyball again.

Rehabilitation was excruciating, and she

Louisville coach produces winning QBs

Schnellenberger's latest weapon similar to Unitas

By SHAUN RACHAU
STATE PRESS

Louisville Coach Howard Schnellenberger, in his 34 years as a football coach, has become known for developing some of the nation's most memorable quarterbacks.

As an assistant coach under Bear Bryant at Alabama from 1961-65, Schnellenberger worked with Joe Namath.

With the Miami Dolphins from 1970-72 as the offensive coordinator, he won a Super Bowl ring while working with Bob Griese.

And as head coach at the University of Miami from 1979-84, Schnellenberger won a national championship in 1983 and assembled a legendary trio of quarterbacks — three-time Super Bowl quarterback Jim Kelly, Bernie Kosar and Vinny Testaverde.

Now, Cardinals quarterback Jeff Brohm is the next in line to play for Schnellenberger. Only time will tell if he becomes as successful as Schnellenberger's past prodigies.

So far, Brohm has lived up to the praise, already being tabbed as a candidate this season for the Johnny Unitas award — an award given annually to the nation's top collegiate quarterback in honor of the NFL Hall of Famer and Baltimore Colts star.

But being a candidate for an award named in Unitas' honor isn't where the similarities end between the two quarterbacks.

Sports Illustrated went as far to say Brohm is the best quarterback to come out of Louisville since Unitas, who played college ball as a Cardinal from 1951-54.

And ironically, Brohm surpassed Unitas on the all-time career

Baseball realignment good news

Changes not a threat to national pastime, can only help situation

In these pages yesterday, my peer Scott Davis took some time to say why he did not like baseball's proposed divisional re-alignment and three-tiered playoff format.

I am now here to say why I believe that these changes would be a good idea for baseball.

Without further ado, I'll begin:

• More teams making the playoffs means more fans staying interested late in the season.

If your favorite team is battling it out for a playoff spot, that's exciting. If your team is running away and hiding with the division crown, that's great. If it's late August and your team is 20 games out of first, that's boring. There is nothing fun about watching second and third-place teams play out the string late in the season.

However, when you add the possibility of a wild-card berth in the playoffs, the last month of games take on meaning for more teams. Some teams will be fighting tooth and nail to get into the postseason. Teams out of the pennant race have more chances to act as spoilers, knocking others out of contention.

Yes, I know that all four divisions are having great pennant races. However, I remember last year when both National League division winners pretty much ended all the excitement by early September. It didn't matter what the second-place teams did, because there was no way short of a miracle that they could catch the division leaders.

• Postseason play will improve, not decline, with more teams.

Mr. Davis brought up the point that wild cards could win the World Series. He is absolutely right and I think baseball would be better for that.

Do you remember the Phoenix-Los Angeles series in the first round of this year's NBA playoffs? Of course you do, because it was a great story. The over-achieving Lakers came within a Byron Scott jumper of knocking out the choking Suns. It was drama at its best.

With the new playoff format, baseball teams will face this same kind of gut-check that their basketball peers do. A team must prove itself better than its opponent in three series. If a team can't do that, then it doesn't deserve to be World Series champion. The regular season determines who has the most talent; the postseason determines who has the most heart.

MIKE BRANOM
SPORTS EDITOR

• It forces baseball to expand and start inter-league play.

For some reason, this fact has bounced off of everyone. Two divisions in the new alignment, the NL West and the AL Central, have only four teams. Baseball has been thinking of expansion anyway, so why not put a team into each of these divisions to even things out?

From what I've heard, the American League badly wants a franchise in Tampa-St. Petersburg to balance out the Florida Marlins of the National League. Also, a perfect team to fill out the NL West would be the Phoenix franchise, led by Suns CEO Jerry Colangelo, Nike chairman Phil Knight and businessman Martin Stone.

Once expansion is in place, each league would have 15 teams. If intra-league play continues, there would be one inactive team each day. With the American and National Leagues locking horns on occasion, it's a full schedule every night.

• Tradition can be replaced.

The old ways of baseball were good, but it's time to change. Change is not necessarily a bad thing. Here's a short list of some good changes in baseball: Batting helmets, breaking of the color barrier, the first split into divisional play in 1969 and night baseball. All are good ideas that went against the grain of "tradition", whatever that means.

Baseball is not breaking away from being the national pastime at all, as Mr. Davis alleges. What baseball is doing is catching up with the times. The three other major sports in America have playoffs that involve more than four teams. Basketball is booming, hockey is poised to be the growth sport of this decade and football chugs along like the juggernaut it is.

The re-alignment/expanded playoff plan isn't perfect. The season will last too long unless something is done. (More double-headers? A 154-game season?) Some old rivalries like Dodgers-Reds are being split up. There are still some rough edges.

However, if something isn't done, less and less people will care about baseball and baseball simply can't afford that.

didn't touch a volleyball until the following spring. She was given a medical redshirt her junior year.

Monson was finally cleared to play her fourth year but once again she was relegated to a backup position, this time behind outside hitter Nancy Christian.

"It was pretty much the same thing, very frustrating," Monson said. "You go through all that work, rehabilitating your knee, hoping for the best and you're pretty much in the same spot before it all happened."

Monson is now in her final year of eligibility. She has also earned the starting role she coveted when arriving in Tempe four years ago.

"I had a really good spring. It felt good to have such a good season like that for once, to finally have a season where everything goes right for you. That made me work hard this summer because I knew I was finally getting somewhere. It's been a long time."

As Monson's volleyball career winds to an end, she is realizing other priorities in her life.

Next year she will marry long-time boyfriend and former ASU baseball star Doug Newstrom.

"We had gone together and picked out our ring," Monson said. It was just a matter of when (he) would ask."

In May, she will graduate with a communications degree. She hopes to work in a sports-related field but her career will depend in part on where Newstrom's baseball career takes him.

Monson's life is almost complete. When she thinks back on her career, Monson said that life at ASU has been an "experience."

"I don't regret that I came here. I've had fun playing volleyball. I'm happy."

Brohm

passing list Sept. 4, when he threw for 195 yards vs. San Jose State in the Cardinals' season-opener. Unitas passed for 3,007 yards in his four-year career at Louisville, placing him at No. 8 on the all-time passing list and one place behind Brohm at 3,239 yards.

"Jeff Brohm continues to improve," Schnellenberger said. "He's getting better with each game and is now getting to the point where he can direct the football team."

Besides all of the praise, Schnellenberger still believes that his quarterback has not yet reached his prime.

Brohm has had some really tough times in some games, especially against ASU last season at Sun Devil Stadium in which Louisville was shut out 19-0.

In that game, the Cardinals' quarterback was 12 of 28 passing, had two interceptions and only threw for 91 yards. It was one of two games that Brohm did not throw a touchdown pass in.

"Jeff Brohm is a very solid quarterback, and he's making progress each day," Schnellenberger said. "But he hasn't developed into the traditional quarterback."

"I think he's got a chance to be considered an outstanding quarterback by the season's end. He certainly isn't at this time."

A Major League Baseball prospect and member of Louisville's baseball team, Brohm decided to not play on any summer league teams to concentrate on the current football season.

His decision to not play baseball, Schnellenberger said, is because he recognized that football is his future.

"If he is to have a great senior year, he needed to commit the entire summer to it," Schnellenberger said. "I agreed with him, although I didn't help him make that decision."

"I think it has been very helpful to him. He is a much more prepared quarterback."

Dumas sought drug treatment, Rodman trade dead

PHOENIX (AP) — Richard Dumas, the Phoenix Suns forward pursued by Detroit in a possible trade for Dennis Rodman, sought treatment for two weeks last month at a drug-rehabilitation clinic in Houston.

Dumas, who has a history of substance abuse, was treated at the John Lucas clinic, a Houston television station reported Tuesday.

Dumas did not check into the NBA's Adult Substance Abuse Program center in Van Nuys, Calif., as expected, and one of his agents told KRIV-TV the league had not yet become involved.

"We're concerned about Richard's medical problems," said James Bryant, a Tulsa, Okla., lawyer. "Richard felt he needed further help from John Lucas and his people in his recovery. That's why he voluntarily checked back in. At this point, we don't know what action the NBA will take as far as Richard seeking further help."

Bryant said Dumas left the Lucas clinic in late August for his hometown of Tulsa but planned to return soon. He acknowledged the August visit was for help beyond Dumas' after-care program.

In any case, these developments apparently ended the Suns' hopes of trading Dumas and other players to the Pistons for Rodman.

"I think it would be safe to say anything happening with Dumas would be remote," Pistons player-personnel director Billy McKinney said.

The 6-foot-7 forward lasted only two years at Oklahoma State before substance abuse caused him to leave for a season in Israel. Then he was suspended before the 1991-92 season after failing a random test.

The ASAP center is where the NBA sends players who either voluntarily admit to a substance-use problem or have a positive drug test. Each referral or check-in counts as a strike. Three strikes result in banishment for two years. Reinstatement is not automatic.

A clause in the collective bargaining agreement says a player may not come forward on his own until he has played in an NBA regular-season game. Since Dumas' problem two years ago was detected before the team had played, he may not have a strike against him.

"When we signed the new contract, I was under the impression that he had a strike," Colangelo told The Phoenix Gazette. "Now I've been told that maybe he doesn't. His first trip is hazy — whether it was voluntary or not."
