ASU community shocked, happy at withdrawal

BY GREG SEXTON
STATE PRESS

ASU students and faculty reacted with surprise and relief Thursday after U.S. Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., announced that he will not seek re-election to a fourth term in office.

"Great," said Michael Hecht, an ASU communications professor. "I think that is really good news. I think it was time for him to step aside, rather than take a beating."

Some students weren't as happy with the announcement, however.

"I was shocked," said Mike Evans, a masters student in public administration and chairman of the Maricopa County Democratic Party. "The state of Arizona is losing an eloquent and forceful representative on Capitol Hill."

But Evans added that DeConcini's absence in the 1994 Senatorial race would provide for a "healthy" and "contested" primary.

Hecht, who says he is registered as an independent, was the adviser for ASU Students for Clinton and Gore during the 1992 Presidential election. He said he has fundamental ideological differences with DeConcini.

"I am pro-choice, and I think Arizona has voted strongly pro-choice," Hecht said. "For (DeConcini) to be so at odds and vote his own religious conscience — rather than what voters want in that situation — is a real problem. I just don't think he had any guiding philosophy."

Many students questioned Thursday also agreed that DeConcini had lost control of his political ideology, often ignoring constituents' desires.

"His decision not to run didn't really surprise me," said Julie O'Connor, a junior communications major. "I figured after he casted his vote (for President Clinton's economic package) that he was done for."

O'Connor, who said she is a Republican, said she was surprised that DeConcini was re-elected for a third term.

But she quickly added, "with Arizona politics being what they are, much that happens in Arizona doesn't surprise me."

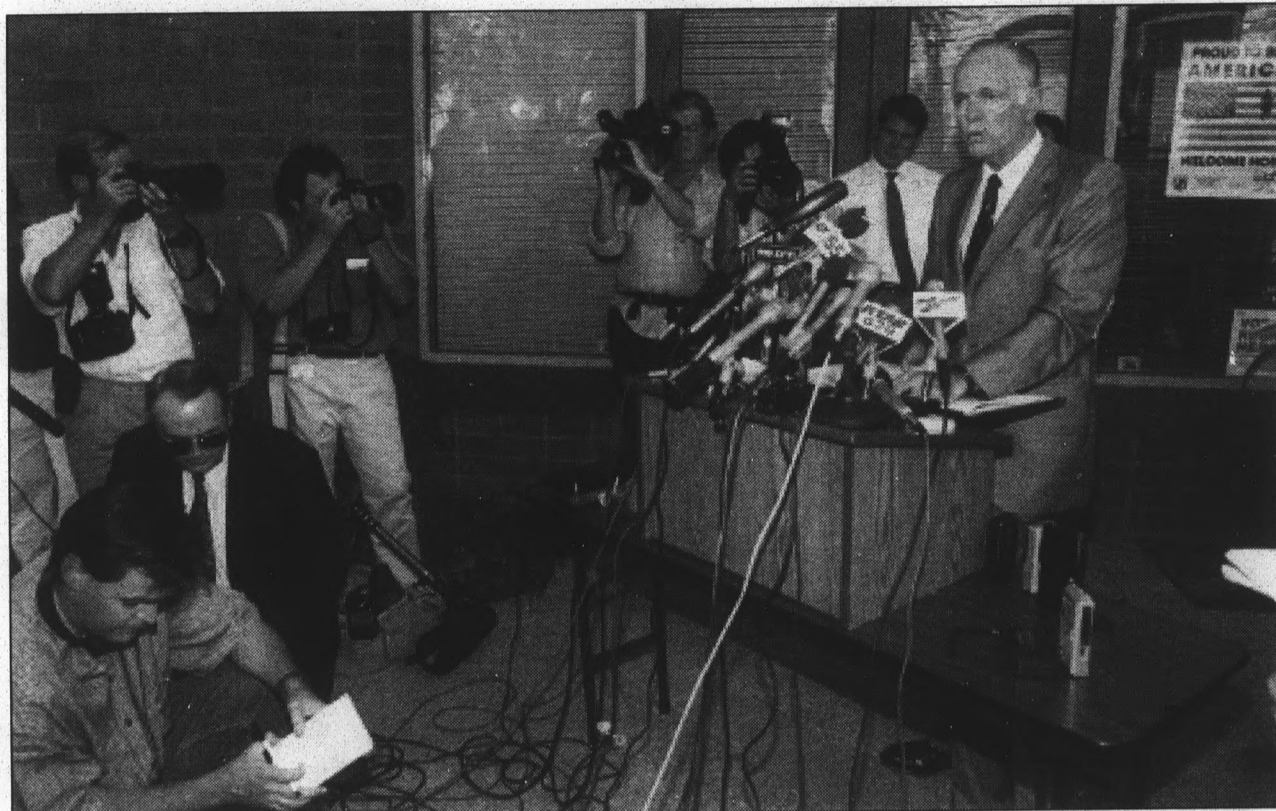

DeConcini's alleged involvement in the Charles Keating fiasco — along with his varied stance and eventual vote in support of Clinton's budget proposal — had placed the Senator under intense public scrutiny.

Hecht said he thought DeConcini's obstacles for winning a fourth term were too much for the embattled senator to overcome.

"I think he was not in a good position to win if he ran again," Hecht said. "I think he was pretty responsive to his constituents — and he was really strong on drug and crime

Arizona Sen. Dennis DeConcini announced Thursday that he will not seek a fourth term. He said he had a good chance of being re-elected, but had "enough of the fundraising... and all the B.S."

3-term senator says media 'B.S.' too much

BY MARK M. MACIAS
STATE PRESS

U.S. Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., chastised the media and political life on Thursday, saying he has had "enough of the B.S." and will not seek a fourth term in office.

"I understand (the media's) right and responsibility to criticize public officials, but I hope that you (the media) will also point out, more often, the positive things that public officials do," DeConcini said. "There is a lot of good in public life, but unfortunately it is not depicted by the media."

"I regret that the perception is that those of us in public office only take money and we are only there to serve ourselves. That's far from the truth. Yes, we have to ask for money, but when we ask for money, nobody buys you."

About 80 members of the media gathered in the courtyard at DeConcini's downtown office to hear his announcement, which came just two days after an ASU public opinion poll showing the senator in an unfavorable light.

According to Tuesday's KAET/Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Telecommunication poll, DeConcini's rating plunged 17 percentage points after he voted on President Clinton's tax package in July. DeConcini's vote helped push Senate passage of the President's Tax Reform Bill, which was approved by a 51-50 margin.

DeConcini denied concern for his poll ranking and said part of his decision to pull out of the Senate race was a dislike for fundraising tactics. He added that the remainder of the $700,000 his campaign has collected so far will be given back to contributors.

Existing student coalitions demand refocus of goals

BY JOY E. BEASON
STATE PRESS

Prompted by fear that ASU administrators are slacking on original cultural diversity goals, the four existing race-and-ethnic student coalitions met Thursday and defined specific expectations to present to officials today.

The public statement came after a meeting to unite the four race-and-ethnic coalitions was called by Jesus Trevino, assistant dean of Student Life for cultural diversity. Although the meeting was not open to the press or public, participants said discussion erupted into heavy debate over the administration's recent decision to name a fifth coalition — the Lesbian/Gay coalition.

Sakena Marshall, a representative from the Black African coalition, said a Council of United Coalitions (CUC) was formed by members of the existing Black African, American Indian, Chicano/Hispanic and Asian American coalitions.

Marshall added that the CUC was formed because members believe the administration is backing off of original cultural diversity goals by naming a fifth group that is not defined by race or ethnicity.

Although administrators have said that the addition of the fifth coalition is a completed action, the council said it will still present its statement to the administration. Administrative officials said they are willing to listen to the demands of the CUC.

"Sure, we will listen," said Leon Shell, associate vice president of Student Affairs. "There may be some things that are already clarified."

Shell said the addition of the fifth coalition would not diminish ASU's original cultural diversity goals.

"That is one thing I have tried to clarify with some of the student leaders on campus," Shell said. "We do not want to diminish the emphasis of ethnic coalitions. We want to build upon the ethnic/minority coalitions."

A meeting is planned between CUC and the Lesbian/Gay coalition to discuss concerns CUC has with the status of cultural diversity at ASU.

"The main concern (of the CUC) is that we wanted to enforce the initial intention and mission of the cultural diversity statement created seven years ago," said Sheldon Preston, a representative from the American Indian coalition.

"We also want to enforce that the position of cultural diversity assistant dean — which is Jesus Trevino's position — be so that his job is to work with racial-and-ethnic coalitions," Preston added. "All of it revolves around the fact that there is still a need for that organization (cultural diversity). It does not need to be broadened at our expense."

"Cultural diversity has taken on a new meaning," said Juan Guervara, representative of the Chicano/Hispanic coalition. "In the late '80s, the word 'cultural' was born from those four coalitions. Lifestyles and religious affiliations were not included. We do not want the philosophy or the mission changed.

"They (the Lesbian/Gay coalition) are a culture and they have diversity. The word has expanded through time, now we have to change cultural to race-and-ethnicity."

Guervara added that the council put together a draft stating that the "new coalition does not fall within the specific parameters of cultural diversity."

"They should not take away from the resources that were set aside for the sake of diversity. We fought to establish them and we want the administration to respect that."

"I don't know what to expect," Preston said. "I hope (the administration) will listen. I hope that they will be concerned for the students, for our needs — racial and ethnic needs."

"To us, it is not done," said Guervara. "To (the administration) it may be done, but we pay tuition here and what they did was make a decision on their own without including us."

Responses to last week's question:

"Should James Hamm have been admitted to ASU's law school?"

"I don't understand what the problem is. If he can pay his tuition and he's got all the requirements there's no problem with him getting an education. In fact, I think everyone would want (ex-cons) to get an education because that would make them much more sympathetic to what's going on in the world and they would be able to employ themselves. We should have the whole prison over here, especially if they'll pay tuition."
Charollette Miller, Senior, Theater

"One person's admission will not affect the law school's overall reputation, and he did earn his seat, despite what disgruntled people who didn't get in say. More importantly, his education — anybody's education, whatever goal they want to pursue — education should be available to those who seek it. That should be the case regardless of whether they will get to sit through the bar exam or not. Not everyone who enters any number of professional programs will actually get licensed in that area or even complete the program, so I think it's a non-issue. He may end up doing more good for the law community and for the prison system or any number of things than somebody else who should have had the seat."
Stephanie DeLuse
Graduate Student, Social Psychology

"I'm one of his classmates. I find him to be one of the most intelligent members of our class, and I think he's a real great addition. It is true he has committed a very terrible crime, but that was a number of years ago, and it seems to me that he has realized the gravity of what he has done. He has made his restitution to society for it, and he seems to be very rehabilitated. On a purely selfish level, I feel that having a man like Mr. Hamm in the class is much more of an educational experience to me as a law student due to his differing and unique perspective on the legal system than having someone like James McGregor who is simply just another business major in the program. I certainly support Mr. Hamm, I consider him my friend and I'm proud to have him as a classmate."

prevention — but on virtually everything else, he was all over the water."

Jed Clinch, a 23-year-old biology major, said he couldn't believe DeConcini had opted not to run in 1994, but he was glad that the Senator was out of the race.

"I have never really liked him," Clinch, a Republican, said. "But I don't think he would have won anyway. I can't believe he won last time."

Even with the differences Hecht has with DeConcini, he was surprised with Thursday's announcement.

"He's got a reputation of being a tough guy," Hecht said. "I thought he would tough it out, but I was happy to hear that he's out of the race."

"Quite frankly, I've had enough of the fundraising," DeConcini said. "I detest that part of it and I've had enough of all the B.S. that goes along with it."

"I'm proud of my accomplishments as a U.S. senator. I've helped a lot of people in Arizona. We've brought jobs here, we've kept jobs here and I'm grateful for the people in Arizona who have voted me into office three times."

Barry Dill, DeConcini's state director, said the threat of competition was not a factor in Thursday's announcement, despite rumors to the contrary.

"(Secretary of State) Dick Mahoney was not a factor in the Senator's decision," Dill said. "We would have roundly, flatly beaten him. It is the senator's personal view that Dick Mahoney is not seasoned enough to serve in the U.S. Senate."

When asked if he had notified Mahoney of the decision not to seek re-election, DeConcini replied, "No, do you think I'm crazy?"

Added Dill, "There was no single issue to his decision."

Sam Vagenas, assistant Arizona Secretary of State, said DeConcini's announcement now increases Mahoney's chances for entering the 1994 Senate race.

"I'd say his position prior to the announcement was that he was (leaning) about 75 percent (toward running), but I'd say he's about 99 percent now," Vagenas said. "(Mahoney) has formed an exploratory committee, but he will probably not make anything official until after January."

Rep. Jon Kyl, (R-Ariz.) is the only candidate who has officially announced his candidacy for the 1994 Senate race. Kyl was unavailable for comment.

In response to questions about future political aspirations, DeConcini said: "I've enjoyed working and knowing so many people in public office that I don't know if this is the end of it."

Gang connection suspected in slaying of Phoenix family

PHOENIX (AP) — Three members of a Phoenix family found slain in their home had been bound and then were shot in the head, and the fourth was strapped to a bed and may have been raped, a newspaper said Thursday.

Police spokesman Kevin Robinson didn't answer when asked whether he could confirm the Phoenix Gazette report, saying instead that the public should be wary of basing conclusions on unconfirmed reports such as that the slayings may have been the work of a gang.

The Arizona Republic had reported earlier that Albert Luna Jr., at 21 the family's elder son, was being pressured to join a gang. Luna found the bodies of his parents and their other two children when he returned from work late Tuesday.

"I know there are several theories out there," Robinson said. "But we don't have a theory as of yet or motive behind the whole thing. We don't have any suspects in mind or in custody."

2 arrested in Mesa abduction

CAMP VERDE (AP) — Two men, one of whom held police off with a suicide threat, were arrested Thursday after being chased into mountains following abduction of a cab driver at gunpoint.

Robert Sittard, 38, and David Edward Adams, 30, were arrested near Interstate 17 by Department of Public Safety officers, said Bob Stein, a DPS spokesman. Hometowns for the suspects were unavailable because they had used several aliases, he said.

The cab driver, Roy Lashley, 25, of Mesa was not injured in the ordeal which began Wednesday night in a grocery store parking lot in Mesa, Stein said.

Adams held a knife to his chest and threatened to kill himself after climbing a nearby mountain ridge before being caught Thursday, Stein said.

Police, fire awarded due OT

PHOENIX (AP) — Police and fire department supervisors should have been paid at overtime rates for extra work, rather than straight time or in compensating time off, a federal judge has ruled.

U.S. District Judge Earl Carroll's decision Tuesday could mean as much as $15,000 each for the about 100 individuals affected, their attorney, Stanley Lubin, said.

City attorney Rod McDougall said he didn't know whether the ruling would be appealed. He said similar rulings elsewhere indicate the city would lose if it did.

The employee suits sought compensation for overtime from July 1, 1985, to Sept. 18, 1991. The employees were awarded the time and a half compensation from March 1989 to the September date, based on a statute of limitations cutoff.

Panel adopts air-quality plan

PHOENIX (AP) — A legislative panel has adopted a draft air-quality plan for the Phoenix area featuring a stricter, more costly emission-testing program and registration surcharges on cars that cause the most pollution.

The plan also would restrict the use of wood-burning fireplaces on high-pollution days and would require use of cleaner-burning gasoline.

It was adopted Wednesday by a 6-4 vote with Phoenix Democrats Manuel "Lito" Pena and Chris Cumiskey voting "no." They objected to the enhanced emissions testing, which would cost motorists more and take longer than the current tests.

"The idea of surcharging for gross polluting vehicles doesn't sit well with me, either," Pena said.

Associated Press

President Clinton speaks to (from left) Jerome Strong of Ypsilanti, Mich., Stacey Askew of Flushing, N.Y., and Mable Piley of Iola, Kansas, during a health care forum at the White House Thursday.

Some will have to pay more for health plan, Clinton says

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton said Thursday some people will have to pay more to ensure health-care coverage for all Americans, his most direct description of the sacrifices his proposal will demand.

As Clinton spoke, he was surrounded by people brought to the White House to tell hard-luck stories of health coverage lost or in jeopardy.

"I don't want to pretend that this is all going to be easy, but it seems to me that it's a fair thing to say everyone in America should make some contribution to his or her own health insurance and all employers should make some contribution," Clinton said.

Later, he visited a hardware store to make the same point, but was told by the owner that "small business cannot afford this plan." He answered back that it would have to for its own good.

Clinton started his day listening to people buried in debt or fear because of problems with the nation's health care system.

He said his plan, to be unveiled Wednesday, will require workers and employers to share the burden to eliminate health care horrors: People going broke to stay healthy, losing jobs or insurance over-illnesses and staying with bad jobs only because they provided health benefits.

"Even the millions of Americans who enjoy health care coverage are afraid it won't be there for them next month or next year. They want us to take action to give them the security that all Americans deserve," Clinton told the gathering of people who had written the White House about their problems.

Under a white tent in the Rose Garden, on a dark, drizzly morning, Clinton invited 21 of the letter writers to tell their stories. The made-for-television event, meant to personalize the debate, kicked off a sales effort that will last months.

Cancer victim Suzy Somers read her letter, which told how she lost her health insurance after her ex-husband went bankrupt. Then she added, "Last week, I found another lump on my breast."

The audience fell silent. First lady Hillary Rodham Clinton abruptly clenched her hands into fists.

Another woman, Jean Kazmarck of Glen Ellyn, Ill., read the letter she had written about how she was having trouble getting health insurance because of problems she'd had with her first pregnancy. She wants a second child but is worried about her lack of coverage. "Now we find ourselves stuck," she wrote.

Mrs. Clinton, who chaired the president's health care task force, said insurance companies discriminate against people with histories of health problems, forcing many to go without coverage or stay locked in jobs with coverage.

The president also visited a local industrial hardware store to talk about how the plan would affect small businesses. Cans of paint lined the walls to his right and hammers and tool belts hung behind him as Clinton explained his proposal.

He said small businesses that don't pay premiums now will be forced to do so. Some self-employed people will "pay relatively more" but would be able to deduct the entire premium, instead of 25 percent under the current tax law.

Employers who don't provide any insurance "are getting a free ride in some ways from the rest of you," he said.

Allan Routzahn, the retailer from Frederick, Md., who has lost a third of his stores in 18 months, said his company was too small for a subsidy in the plan but not large enough to benefit from the plan's spending cap.

"Small business cannot afford this plan. Eliminating and tripling my costs will not work in today's economy," he said.

"All I can say to you, Sir, is that if we don't do something like this, then everybody's going to be going in the same direction you are," Clinton replied.

AT&T apologizes for drawing depicting Africans as monkeys

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — American Telephone & Telegraph Corp. apologized Thursday after workers and a civil rights group complained about a drawing in this month's employee magazine that uses a monkey to depict Africans.

The drawing, which appeared on a games page, shows characters on several continents conversing by telephone. All the characters are human except the one in Africa, which is a monkey.

The company said the drawing, done by a freelance artist and submitted by an outside design firm that produces the magazine, slipped by its editors.

Mary L. Peeler, executive director of the North Carolina chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, complained about the drawing this week in a letter to AT&T Chairman Robert Allen.

The group is "truly appalled at the humiliating and offensive way AT&T has chosen to depict persons in Africa," Peeler said in her letter. "This picture is highly offensive to Africans, to African-Americans and to many AT&T employees and customers."

Walter Murphy, AT&T's director of corporate information, said the company was equally appalled.

"We and everyone here at AT&T could not be more dismayed that this kind of thing could have gotten by us," he said. "Our people should have caught it, but they didn't so that's left us with a great embarrassment."

Murphy, who said the company also received complaints from employees, said AT&T no longer is using the New York-based design firm, which has dismissed one of its production managers.

The magazine's staff issued an apology over an internal electronic messaging service, and the company's senior vice president for public relations, Marilyn Laurie, issued a separate apology Thursday.

Peeler said she was satisfied with the apology.

BOO — to Suns' forward Richard Dumas, for lapsing back into his drug habit. The NBA told Dumas to report to a drug-rehabilitation clinic in Houston and said that Dumas had been uncooperative. He was suspended without pay, and, according to Suns President Jerry Coangelo, will not play in the next season.

Dumas was once hailed as the next Michael Jordan and was expected to have a brilliant career. He may never get back on track now.

Dumas not only let his teammates and fans down, he also let himself and his family down.

BRAVO — to Sen. Dennis Deconcini, for announcing that he will not run for another senatorial term.

The Democratic senator said Thursday during a press conference that he dropped out of the game because he has "had enough of the fundraising" tactics and said he was tired of the hassle that goes along with it.

Deconcini found himself under close public scrutiny after the investigation of his alleged involvement in the Charles Keating savings and loan scandal.

It was past time for Deconcini to get out of politics. His character had been called into serious question, and the competition for his senatorial seat was breathing down his neck. Perhaps he knew that if he didn't get out now, one of his competitors might dig up some dirt on him, so he quit while he was ahead. Either way, it was a long time coming.

BRAVO — to the ASU Honors College, for earning the reputation as one of the top honors programs in the country and as one of the "best deals in public education," according to Money magazine.

The accolades it has received will help ASU's standing among national colleges, and it will cause the high-demand students and scholars to look our way. This means more prestige, and therefore, more money for the University (and also, more money for moronic projects like the University Club).

Dean Humphrey and his clan are to be congratulated for the continual improvements to the college.

BOO — to AT&T, for printing an employee magazine which contained a drawing that used monkeys to depict Africans.

The drawing shows characters on several continents talking by telephone. All the characters are human except the one in Africa, which is a monkey.

Although a spokesperson for AT&T said the drawing was done by a freelance artist and that it "slipped by" editors, there is just no excuse for what happened.

Affirmative action a euphemism for racial discrimination policies

MICHAEL KANTOR
Columnist

At the University of Virginia in 1988, black freshmen had an average SAT score 246 points lower than the average SAT score for white freshmen.

To get into an Ivy League school, as a general rule, you will need a score of at least 1200 on the SAT. But the Ivies routinely accept black students with SAT scores under 1000.

These statistics are not surprising, given that whites, on average, score close to 200 points higher on the SAT than blacks on average. If a school wants the percentage of black students to be proportional to the percentage of blacks who take the SAT, that school will have to offer a 200 point handicap to black applicants.

The SAT has been shown to be a good predictor of college GPA. Furthermore, it is as valid a predictor for blacks as it is for whites. If a white and a black both scored 1000 on the SAT, they would both be predicted to have the same college GPA. If the research shows any difference in predictive capacity, it shows that the SAT tends to overpredict the college GPAs of black students.

Why do almost all colleges give such a tremendous advantage to black and certain other minority applicants? The buzzword used these days is "diversity." But all that diversity seems to mean is that we should give preferential treatment to certain minorities. People who never had a complaint against affirmative action got all upset about James Hamm's admission to law school. Yet James Hamm is a person who adds great diversity to the law school class. Thus I conclude that "diversity" is merely a palatable euphemism for affirmative action.

While on the topic of euphemisms, affirmative action is a euphemism for a "quota." In the game of college admissions, there is a clearly defined quota. Colleges desire that a certain percentage of the incoming class be of a certain minority. But the colleges don't call it a quota, they call it a "goal." The colleges have a very good idea of exactly how much preferential treatment is required to achieve a certain percentage of minority enrollment. Under a quota system, 200 offers of admission might be reserved for blacks. Under the affirmative action system, the number of blacks offered admission varies along a normal curve whose median is 200. I don't see the practical difference.

Affirmative action programs are completely unconcerned with giving preference to those who have suffered actual adversity. A person from a minority group whose parents are wealthy, and who went to an exclusive private school, is given the same preferential treatment as a minority from a more humble background. On the other hand, a white applicant from a poverty stricken background is given no preferential treatment at all.

Affirmative action causes racial animosity. We don't see ourselves as Americans working together, but rather as different racial groups competing against each other for special privileges. This creates resentment and other bad feelings.

Affirmative action causes a stigma to be attached to its beneficiaries. When a minority is spotted on a college campus, it is assumed that the minority wouldn't be at that particular college were it not for preferential treatment. At many colleges, especially the harder ones to get into, that assumption is usually correct.

Affirmative action was originally thought of as a temporary measure to make up for the period before the civil rights movement in which blacks were discriminated against. However, affirmative action is no longer thought of as temporary. It is now a permanent fixture of our society, and none of its advocates ever talk about dismantling the affirmative action system at anytime in the near future. And affirmative action is no longer limited just to blacks, but has expanded to include minority groups that voluntarily immigrated to this country.

Implicit in the concept of affirmative action is the notion that certain minorities are inferior. If they weren't inferior, why would there be a need for a permanent system of preferential treatment?

Given all the arguments against affirmative action in college admissions, my recommendation is that we abolish the disguised quota system and base admissions decisions on merit instead of the color of the applicant's skin.

Michael Kantor is a third year law student. His column appears on Fridays.

Affirmative action programs are completely unconcerned with giving preference to those who have suffered actual adversity. A person from a minority group whose parents are wealthy, and who went to an exclusive private school, is given the same preferential treatment as a minority from a more humble background.

Somalia becoming Aspen's military quagmire

After nine months of the Bush-Clinton errand in the Somali wilderness, after 12 American deaths there and spending more than a billion dollars on it, Defense Secretary Les Aspin decided to pop out of the Pentagon long enough last month to explain to the republic why exactly we are in Somalia at all. That was nice, but it would have been even nicer if we had cleared this up before we ever went there. Had we done so, Aspin might also have been able to tell us when we will be out.

SAM FRANCIS
WASHINGTON TIMES

As it is, there's no way to tell, and if Aspin's goals are the real ones, we may never be out. Those goals consist of the following: We must bring peace to the Somali capital of Mogadishu; we must make "real progress" in disarming the Somali clans; and we must oversee the establishment of "credible" police forces in Somalia's "major cities."

The last is particularly grim. The United States barely has "credible" police forces itself, though we, unlike Somalia, do have major cities. But that goal is no more ridiculous than the first two.

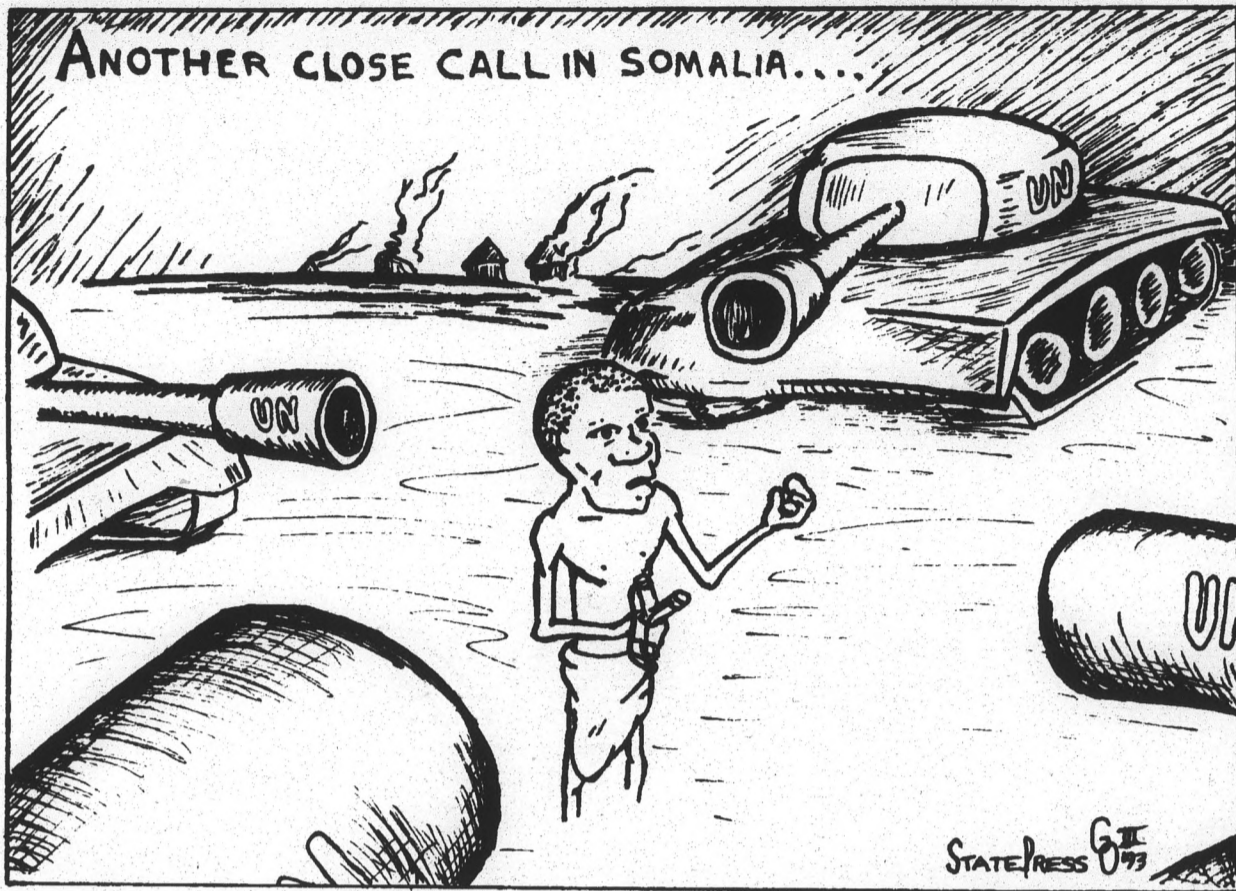

Goal I of the plan went into effect last week, as squads of U.S. Rangers seized two buildings in Mogadishu with the idea of nabbing the Darth Vader of Somalia, the elusive Mohammed Farrah Aidid. But the general wasn't home, and the New World rangers merely rounded up a few stray U.N. officials and destroyed their radios. Goal I, in other words, was an embarrassment, and it points to what's wrong with our being there in the first place.

All the military and technical skills the United States commands don't help in a place like Somalia. They don't help because Somalia's problems are not technical or military in their nature but essentially and deeply political, social and cultural. Unless the United States simply annexes Somalia, there's not much we can do about them.

Somalia is in anarchy because its extended clans recognize no binding national unity. The members of each clan regard not only Americans and assorted U.N. "peacekeepers" but also the members of other clans only as outsiders, aliens, barbarians and enemies. They do not hold this view because they are evil but because it is the only society and culture they have ever known.

Hence, pacifying the capital and disarming the clans are not simply the kind of administrative, managerial and military missions Aspin and his desk jockeys at Defense seem to think. Their goals involve nothing less than the long-term social engineering of Somalia. To achieve them, we can either take over the country and engineer it or we can do what the Roman historian Tacitus said the Romans did when they built their own empire: Make a desert and call it peace.

The latter would mean declaring war on the clans and fighting them until their men and weapons are obliterated. Presumably (note I do not say probably) we won't do that, but whether we do it or whether we stay in Somalia to undertake more-or-less peaceful social engineering, we will be there a long time — if Aspin's goals are the real ones.

The "if" is important because it is now widely conceded that Aspin's new goals are not those we proclaimed when we first went to Somalia last December. Back then, the goal was to feed the place and to undertake "pacification" only as necessary to provide food.

Now, Aspin says that even those goals are endangered if we don't achieve the new ones. "The danger now is that unless we return security to south Mogadishu, political chaos will follow any U.N. withdrawal. Other warlords would follow Aidid's example. Fighting between the warlords would ensue. And that, of course, is what brought the famine to massive proportions in the first place."

Aspin is correct, and he's not the only one. Just for the record, last December I wrote almost exactly the same thing. At the risk of slapping myself on the back, here it is:

"In order to ensure that U.N. relief efforts can take place, the United States must first pacify Somalia, which means defeating or disarming the warlords. It means, second, that a competent government must then be installed to preside over the distribution of food and medicine." I also noted that "'feeding the country' is not possible until we pacify it."

Aspin and his desk-jockeys are slowly but surely tumbling to the oracular wisdom I unbosomed last winter. They now see that in order to accomplish the original mission in Somalia, the present mission of "pacification" must be accomplished first. They do not seem yet to have tumbled to the further wisdom that only if we install a government or undertake it ourselves is "pacification" possible.

Or maybe, since neither Aspin nor the desk jockeys are dumb, they have tumbled to it. Maybe they tumbled to it a long time ago and just haven't gotten around to telling the republic that their plan from the first was to establish an empire.

Mall preachers have no right to raise hell

I couldn't agree more with columnist David Strow as to the importance of the right of free speech and the dangers it faces every day in this society and on this campus. However, I disagree with Mr. Strow when he refers to the mall preachers for an example. It is not a part of anyone's right to free speech to yell and shout at me or even to engage in a conversation with me without my consent or invitation. If a preacher or anyone else does it, it is a violation of my inalienable rights to liberty and to the pursuit of happiness.

The offending preachers have as many opportunities as anyone else on the mall to exercise their right to free speech without intruding uninvited on everybody else's space. Those who shout and harass do so out of lack of respect for the rights of others.

I agree with Mr. Strow that if anyone doesn't want to hear Rush Limbaugh, Beavis and Butthead or anything else, they have the option of changing the channel or turning them off. I regularly exercise my right to do that. However, I am denied that right and that option on Cady Mall, as well as in other places on this campus.

This is because the administration pays a lot of attention to the rights of privileged special interest groups and allows the rights of the individual to be violated with impunity. Welcome to Orwell's "Animal Farm" everybody.

Francis is only one we don't need to see

I take exception to Sam Francis' Sept. 13th article. Besides the obvious fact that Mr. Francis is parading his fatuity, this column is frankly useless. Not a line in the entire article is devoted to considerations of South Africa and its problems. Rather, he merely sinks to the level of expounding trite animadversions on what he sees as "chirpy liberalism" or "bubbleheaded naiveté."

As to the death of Amy Biehl, he writes "...and if there's one thing South Africa and the world do not need, it's more people like her." Perhaps, by this, Mr. Francis would have us believe that what the world does need is more people like himself — more self-complacent journalists who, from the safety of their well-fed ivory towers, too often do little more than censure those who attempt to set action to words. But, as is so often the case with myopic conservative pundits, inaction is preferable to action, just as op-ed newspaper columns are the preferred vehicle to world change. If there's anything indeed the world could do less with, it's the piffle and prating of columnist Sam Francis.

Press' abortion figures don't tell whole story

Day after day we are bombarded with stories appearing in newspapers across the country about a woman's right to abortion, which states are legalizing abortion, and which states are taking steps to limit it. While these are valid points, and indeed newsworthy, the unborn are still very much unrepresented in this country, especially in the media. When was the last time a congressional study was released reporting how many children were aborted in the United States? The figures would be astronomical.

For once, I'd like to hear about the other side of the coin. I think the American people deserve to know, within a public realm such as the media, just how many abortions take place each day and some of the atrocious ways they are carried out. I don't mean in back alleys, but in doctor's offices.

Open house brings scrutiny to Computing Commons

Students impressed by technology; some want more machines

This story is the last in a three-part series on the Computing Commons facility on campus.

BY MAXWELL HIGGINS

STATE PRESS

As the Computing Commons open house drew to a close Thursday, attention turned to how well the new center and its management have measured up to expectations so far.

Most students at the open house appeared impressed with the cutting-edge technology and the convenience of having everything in one location on campus. However, some have complained there are too few computers available for student use.

"There are 200 computers here and 40,000 students," Patrick Moody, an ASU junior, said Wednesday.

Students have also expressed concern that workstations scattered throughout the first floor may be a little too powerful for most students' purposes, since many use them only for writing papers or other tasks not requiring much memory or speed.

By purchasing top-of-the-line machines, the University could be getting high quality at the expense of inadequate quantity, Moody said.

The approximately 200 open-access computers and 150 classroom computers, are brand new, replacing the IBM XT models that have been used in other campus computer facilities. ASU's Information Technology (IT) Department purchased 270 of the new machines for about $700,000. The rest came as donations from computer manufacturers.

About half of the money came from University funds — the extra amount needed to get the desired number of machines was borrowed by IT.

Bill Lewis, IT Vice Provost, said aggressive pricing assured the University a very good deal.

Lewis admitted that ASU could have purchased about one-third more machines by sacrificing quality. However, since computer equipment becomes obsolete in two or three years, it will be more practical in the long run to have machines that can handle coming innovations in technology, he said.

"Software is becoming more demanding of the hardware," Lewis said. "We had to look at the long term and invest in equipment that would have a longer functional life. That'll make the cost per year better."

Other concerns centered around the availability of expensive, specialized machines, such as the top-of-the-line graphics equipment in the Visualization Center and the computer animation equipment in the Consortium for Instructional Innovation (CII).

Most of the specialized equipment can only be used by trained IT staff, but it is used mainly for faculty and student research projects, Lewis said. He added that the equipment has become more available since moving to the Computing Commons, because it now can be used 24 hours a day.

Lewis said another 30 computers will soon be added to the open-access area after repairs are made on water damage that occurred last summer.

ASU to host forum to debate pros, cons of NAFTA treaty

BY JOY E. BEASON

STATE PRESS

ASU will host a forum Saturday pitting both sides of the proposed North American Free Trade Agreement.

Ravi Batra, author of "The Myth of Free Trade," and National Farmers Union Secretary David Carter will be the central participants in the forum, which begins at 9:30 a.m. in the MU's Ventana Room.

NAFTA would free up trade relations between the United States, Canada and Mexico, creating the world's largest free marketplace.

The Arizona Chapter of United We Stand — a grassroots movement founded by Ross Perot — is hosting the forum. The organization has voiced staunch criticism against the proposed agreement.

"The purpose is to show how (NAFTA) will impact our government," said Marilou Stanley, director of United We Stand's Arizona chapter.

Batra said that NAFTA "will be the straw that breaks America's back."

"America is at a crossroads," he said. "The passionate debate stirred up by NAFTA suggests that the proposed accord could make or break the system."

Carter, meanwhile, supports NAFTA, contending that the agreement would positively impact farmers as evidenced by results of the U.S./Canada Free Trade Agreement.

The forum will feature other participants as well.

Michael Shea, director of the Committee on Political Education, will speak on NAFTA's potential impact on jobs, while Dick Kamp, director of the Border Ecology Project, will present current health and environmental issues along the Mexican border.

In addition, anthropologist Theresa Leal will discuss issues from a Mexican perspective, and Stanley said a law enforcement official will address illegal drug trafficking. General issues affecting NAFTA will also be discussed, Stanley said.

"It is going to be one of the most in-depth forums on this topic in the country," said Mark Vise, United We Stand member.

ASU's Honors College receives national media commendation

Money magazine recommends program as educational bargain

BY JAMES FRUSETTA
STATE PRESS

ASU's Honors College has been hailed as one of the nation's best bargains in education in the latest edition of Money magazine.

A Money college guide released this week recognizes the Honors College and seven other honors programs as "the best deals in public education."

ASU officials were pleased with the recognition, but said that the article is just one of the recent accolades for the program.

Michael Cochise Young, Assistant Honors College Dean, said that restructuring the college in recent years has helped propel the program into the spotlight.

"We have been increasing national attention over the last several years," said Young. "I think that is a function of some very real changes in the University."

Young also praised the efforts of administrators and faculty that have made a serious effort in maintaining the college.

"I've been gratified that — even in the rather grim economic times this University has seen over the past several years — the faculty are willing to put out the extra effort to nurture and work with these students," said Young.

ASU President Lattie Coor said the article simply recognizes the long-standing quality of the program.

"It is not surprising to me that the article was written," Coor said. "The Honors College has clearly established itself in terms of quality."

Students in the Honors College said the article will be a boon to the college, as well as a comforting assurance of the quality of the program.

"It might bring in more out-of-state students," said Theresa Stephenson, a sophomore French major. "It might also encourage people to apply here instead of the more prestigious schools."

"I have a lot of friends who went to UofA who thought that it was a better school — it's nice to see ASU ranked higher."

Brenda Leiter, a freshman accounting major, added: "I think the article is great, because now we know the education we're getting is one of the best."

ASU officials are confident that the Money article will be a benefit to Honors College recruitment, as well as recruiting students for the entire University.

"I think it's definitely going to help out our efforts in recruiting top students, not only in Arizona, but nationwide," said Bob Hancock, Assistant Director for Admissions Recruitment. "That's one of the goals that the University has, to create not only a diverse undergraduate population but to recruit top students."

The article also came as a welcome relief to faculty and staff members concerned with the portrayal of ASU as a "party school" by such magazines as Playboy.

"Any national exposure that highlights the academic side of Arizona State can only benefit us in the long run," Hancock said.

Despite the national attention focused on the Honors College, Young said there are still areas in which the college can expand and improve. She said plans are in the works to institute an honors curriculum in the College of Architecture and to implement similar programs in social work and nursing.

IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

Can't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning.

By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferral and give your money time to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month beginning at age 30 and you can accumulate over $172,109* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $219 each month to reach the same goal.

Even if you're not counting the years to retirement, you can count on TIAA-CREF to help you build the future you deserve — with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research put TIAA-CREF at the top of their list for retirement planning. Why not join them?

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

Doonesbury

BY GARRY TRUDEAU

"Now, you can't hurt each other with those things, so next time you bicker, just go ahead and vent your anger—you'll both feel better."

PEOPLE

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Did David Letterman have a date with the cable guy? Was he rushing home to Connecticut to make sure his house intruder wasn't back? Or did he just want to catch the Mets game?

The world may never know. The talk show host took his speeding ticket Monday night without a peep of explanation to police Officer Christopher Simone.

"The only thing he asked was how fast I clocked him at, and that was the extent of our conversation," Simone said.

The $14-million man was going 78 mph on the Hutchinson River Parkway.

Letterman, who has a history of driving fast and getting caught, joked about his latest encounter with the law on Wednesday night's "The Late Show," his new CBS gig.

A tip for Letterman's old network: The next time you go looking for intellectual property swiped by Dave, check his garage. He was driving a red Dodge registered to NBC, Simone said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Ivana Trump as Everywoman?

"I am not poor," she said in an interview for this weekend's Parade magazine.

"But I went through the same trauma, hurt, betrayal and insecurity every woman goes through in a divorce. It's not a question of money. Your world falls apart."

That's why she wrote a self-help book for single, divorced and widowed women after her split with millionaire developer Donald Trump.

That was three years ago. Now Trump, 44, plans to write an advice column, so Parade asked what advice she would give to her successor in Trump's esteem, Marla Maples.

Maples is expecting Trump's child but apparently has been frustrated in her reported desire to get Trump to the altar.

"I don't comment on Marla Maples," Trump's ex said, but added: "You can't fault someone for not marrying someone they do not love."

NEW YORK (AP) — Lauren Hutton, a supermodel before there was such a word, turns 50 in two months and is quite happy about it, thank you.

"When you're 50, you don't have the aches and pains of old age. But you also don't have the horrible anxieties of youth," she said in an interview for Thursday's "PrimeTime Live" on ABC.

Hutton said that probably explains why her sex life has improved over the years.

"I'm older and more relaxed," she said. "Smarter and finer, and I ask more questions. ... And it has to do with growing up."

GRAND FORKS, N.D. (AP) — Garth Brooks has done it again. Telephone lines were jammed when tickets for his two North Dakota concerts went on sale.

Emergency lines were interrupted and dial tones went dead throughout the Red River Valley early Saturday.

Brooks is playing in Fargo on Oct. 23 and 24.

"I don't see this happening frequently," said Vivian Dockter, a spokeswoman for the phone company, U S West.

Last year, a doctor in Oklahoma sued Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., saying he tried repeatedly to reach 911 to help his dying wife but the lines were jammed with calls for Brooks concert tickets.

NEW YORK (AP) — Sylvester Stallone. Sean Connery. Denzel Washington. They're actors as different as Rocky Balboa, James Bond and Malcolm X, but Wesley Snipes said he's picked up acting tips from all three.

"I learned a lot from Stallone," said Snipes, who plays Sly's adversary in "Demolition Man."

"He's cool. Maybe back in the day he might have been a little difficult, but hey, this is a cat who was struggling all his life," Snipes said in the October issue of Vibe magazine.

From Connery, his co-star in "Rising Sun," Snipes said he learned consistency.

"I'm a little beyond the level of how to play a scene. Now I'm into the intricacies of line delivery."

And Washington, his sax-playing rival in "Mo' Better Blues," helped him with "understating. He underplays a lot of his work. And the subtleties of that are valuable."

ASU X-country to compete out West

ASU's cross country team hits the road for the second straight weekend when they travel to San Diego to compete in the Aztec Invitational, hosted by San Diego State, Saturday, September 18.

The Aztec Invitational features a mix of schools from the Southwest and Southern California, and will also give the Sun Devils their first look at other Pac-10 rivals.

The men's invitational contains 14 teams, including Stanford, UCLA, USC and NAU, in addition to ASU and SDSU. The women's field is largely the same as the men's, but also includes last year's NCAA runner-up Arkansas, along with Texas Tech and Cal State-Los Angeles.

Winfield gets 3,000th hit

Minnesota Twin Dave Winfield singled in the ninth inning Thursday night off Oakland's Dennis Eckersley to become the 19th player in baseball history to get 3,000 career hits.

The ground single to left, in his fourth at-bat, drove in a run off Eckersley, the dominant relief pitcher of this era. Winfield was presented with the ball at first base as jubilant Metrodome fans tossed paper on the field.

Eagles sign free agent Bahr

Matt Bahr, a 37-year-old free agent who has kicked for two Super Bowl champions, signed a one-year contract Thursday with the Philadelphia Eagles.

The Eagles needed another kicker after Roger Ruzek injured his hamstring during Sunday's victory over Green Bay.

Coach Rick Kotite planned to keep Ruzek and Bahr on the team's 53-man roster. He would not say who would start Sunday when the Eagles are home against Washington.

Salmon sidelined by broken finger

California Angels outfielder Tim Salmon will have surgery for the broken finger that ended his outstanding rookie season.

Salmon fractured a bone in his left ring finger Wednesday when he fielded a line drive off the bat of Seattle's Larry Sheets. The operation will be performed at Centinela Hospital sometime next week, the Angels said Thursday.

The injury closes the books for Salmon on a season in which he hit the most homers, 31, ever by an Angels rookie. He also ranked first among all-time California rookies in doubles (35), extra-base hits (67), and walks (82).

He batted .283, fourth on the club's rookie list, and had 95 RBIs, second on the list.

Louisville ready for revenge

State Press File

ASU defensive end Shante Carver prepares to stuff Louisville quarterback Jeff Brohm in last year's game at Sun Devil Stadium. The Sun Devils sacked Brohm 10 times and held the Cardinals to 13 yards in total offense en route to a 19-0 shutout.

BY SHAUN RACHAU
 STATE PRESS

Louisville Coach Howard Schnellenberger said he has been waiting for a rematch with a lot of teams the past couple of years.

But Schnellenberger hasn't anticipated a rematch more than this Saturday's matchup with the No. 23 Sun Devils, after ASU literally embarrassed and surprised him and the Cardinals last season in a 19-0 shutout at Sun Devil Stadium, giving Coach Bruce Snyder his first win at ASU.

"We're looking forward to playing Arizona State at Louisville, which is going to be a great game here for our fans," Schnellenberger said. "Obviously, with name recognition and the quality of the program they have, it is going to be quite a treat for our fans. We hope our football team is equal to the test of making it a good football team."

The Sun Devils (1-0) held Louisville to 13 yards of total offense last year, establishing the first indication of dominance for ASU's defense. Cardinals' quarterback Jeff Brohm was sacked 10 times, three-and-a-half of them coming from Harlen Rashada in his collegiate debut as a freshman.

"Certainly we were surprised," Schnellenberger said about last year's game. "(Our) coaching staff wasn't prepared to handle some of the things they were doing."

"We weren't able to handle the pressures and we were confused. We looked as poor as the score indicated and they beat us soundly. In fact, they beat the coaching staff more than they beat our team."

Despite last season's game, Snyder is expecting a better effort from Louisville (2-0) Saturday.

In the Cardinals' first two games this season they beat San Jose State 31-24 and Memphis State 54-28.

"Their whole football team is improved and it should be a heck of a football game, I think," Snyder said. "The more I look at what they've done, they're off to a great start and I think they will be much better prepared. They went to Memphis State and beat them handily."

Golfers defend No. 1 title

BY SCOTT DAVIS
 STATE PRESS

The time has come for the No. 1-ranked ASU women's golf team to defend itself.

Not in terms of doing something wrong, but in the sense that the Sun Devils, last year's NCAA champions, are starting their title defense on Sunday in Portland, Ore., for the Oregon Fall Preview.

ASU has only been practicing as a team for two weeks, but the Sun Devils couldn't have asked for a better time to have one of their best weeks of practice.

"Last week was probably our best week of practice," ASU coach Linda Vollstedt said. "I think they finally settled in with their school work."

However, ASU did not practice on its normal home turf. *Because ASU's Karsten Golf Course is closed because of overseeding, the Sun Devils were forced to venture to other golf courses in the valley to prepare themselves for the upcoming tournament. Other courses they played were the Camelback Golf Club and Stonecreek Golf Club.

The wide variety of golf courses may turn out to be a big advantage when ASU begins its season this weekend. Vollstedt said the Oregon Golf Club is more of a "northern golf course."

"It's very different than the courses around here," Vollstedt said. "There are a lot of trees and it's very hilly."

One thing that won't look too different is the squad that will be competing for ASU.

The top four Sun Devil finishers from last season's NCAA championships — Wendy Ward, Emilee Klein, Linda Ericsson and Tracy Cone — will be competing once again, and ASU will also add two new faces to the lineup.

All-American transfer Kristel Mourgue d'Algue, formerly of Furman University, and Heather Bowie, a heavily recruited freshman from Edmond, Okla., will attempt to make a significant impact for the Sun Devils.

With all of the returning and incoming talent, the Sun Devil golfers cannot wait to get the sea-

Spikers begin Pac-10 action on home court

BY PAUL J. MATTHEWS
 STATE PRESS

ASU volleyball coach Patti Snyder and her merry band of spiking bandits predicted in the preseason that the Sun Devils would be contenders for the Pac-10 title this year.

This weekend that prophecy will be put to the test as ASU opens its Pac-10 schedule against the University of Washington Huskies and the Washington State Cougars at the University Activity Center.

ASU will open its conference schedule with a Friday night match against Washington and a Saturday night match against Washington State. Both matches begin at 7:30 p.m.

Washington began the season ranked No. 24 in the American Volleyball Coaches Association (AVCA) poll but

However, the Sun Devils will have to battle the Cardinals without the services of some starters. Linebacker Dan Lucas has a sprained left ankle, tight end Steve Bush has a sprained shoulder and running back George Montgomery has not been cleared to play yet from a broken bone in his right foot.

Nonetheless, Snyder is ready for the challenge.

"I know they better take care of (defensive rush end) Shante (Carver)," he said. "If you're an offensive coach, you figure out a way to defend him. If (Ken Talanoa) comes along and Larry Boyd comes along, I think we'll be okay and it will be a good matchup."

Defensively, the Sun Devils will have contain halfback Ralph Dawkins and Brohm at quarterback.

This season Brohm has completed 27 of 39 passes for 414 yards and five touchdowns. Dawkins has gained 153 yards on 23 carries for two touchdowns.

son under way.

"I'm really psyched about the team this year," Ward said. "Everybody can play in the top five at any time. I really feel that we should dominate again this year."

In actuality, six of the Sun Devils could play in the top five of any golf team in the country.

In the preseason rankings released yesterday, ASU had five girls listed as preseason all-Americans.

Mourgue d'Algue and Klein were listed as first-team all-Americans, and Ward, Cone and Ericsson were all listed as second-team all-Americans.

Bowie, in her first season with the Sun Devils, was listed as a "freshman to watch."

Although ASU is well-prepared for its first tournament, that doesn't necessarily mean the other teams have given up.

"The thing you don't know in your first couple of tournaments is what the other teams are going to look like," Vollstedt said. "They could have improved, they could have brought in some foreign players you're not really aware of; you just don't really know."

have lost five of its first seven matches.

Snyder said that although Washington has struggled early, it is a better team than its record indicates and she expects a "dog-fight."

"Teams are not necessarily beating them as much as they are beating themselves," Snyder said of Washington. "We're expecting that they will probably put it all together against us."

If the Sun Devils are to win, they will have to improve their consistency. ASU has had a tendency to jump out to quick leads and relax, allowing its opponents to get back into the match.

"We just have to go in there feeling confident and not let down at any point no matter how far ahead we are," ASU sophomore Christine Garner said.

Garner, ASU's leader in kills after recording 34 in last week's match against New Mexico, said she isn't worried about Washington making adjustments to defend her.

"I think that I'm a smart enough player to adjust to anything they might send my way," Garner said. "We're not going to have problems getting up for Washington and Washington State."

The Huskies are led by swing hitter Dawn Austin. The 6-foot-2 senior has registered 88 kills and 12 service aces this season.

Washington State (6-0) opened its season ranked No. 23 by the AVCA but has had an easy schedule thus far, according to Snyder.

Your Individual Horoscope

For Friday, September 17, 1993
ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19)
Be wary of today's deceptive business trends. A friend may disappoint you now. Romantic happiness is yours to enjoy. Partners will feel especially close.
TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20)
It is a mixed day regarding business interests. Higher-ups may be difficult to deal with now, yet your performance on the job is sterling. Be alert for new opportunities.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 20)
Fantasy could interfere with good judgment where romance is concerned today. Joy will come through pleasure interests if you keep your feet on the ground.
CANCER (June 21 to July 22)
An extra expense incurred now may be simply unavoidable. Don't fret about it. Instead, welcome today's good news about property interests and family concerns.
LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22)
It will take awhile for you to win a partner over to your way of thinking. By day's end you are in happy agreement. Work concentration may not be at its best.
VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22)
Today brings some financial good news, yet you must be wary of those who would take advantage of your good fortune. A business delay is followed by a breakthrough.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22)
Think twice before making what may be unnecessary changes at home. You have greater self-confidence now and your optimistic attitude invites opportunity.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)
Much of what you hear today may be inaccurate, so heed your own intuition. Despite distractions, you will be successful in completing some unfinished business.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)
Today brings some great developments in your social life. You may be invited to a spectacular party. Watch spending and avoid wasteful shopping.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)
You must concentrate your efforts if you wish to be successful today. Don't spread yourself too thin. You will meet with bonafide chances to get ahead now.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)
Guard against gullibility now. Don't believe everything you hear at face value. However, do take advantage of today's wonderful travel and social opportunities.
PISCES (Feb. 19 to Mar. 20)
It is a day that brings new monetary opportunities and perhaps good news about an investment. However, avoid dubious financial involvements with others.
YOU BORN TODAY have a good eye for detail and financial acumen. You would make a fine lawyer, accountant or tax adviser. You are ambitious, but sometimes fail to see the larger picture. Though you are intellectual and practical, you are also given to introspection and reminiscence. You can succeed in banking and can successfully commercialize your artistic talents. Birthdate of: Anne Bancroft, actress; William Carlos Williams, writer; and Roddy McDowall, actor.
