University officials request salary hike

Presidents, regents plead case for increased funding

BY SHAWN BOYD
STATE PRESS

Officials from the state's universities and the Arizona Board of Regents told a state legislative committee Tuesday that salary raises are the key issue in this year's budget.

The three state universities' presidents and members of the ABOR asked the House of Representatives' Appropriations Committee to channel more funds into the university system.

"The budget request the Arizona Board of Regents has given you today is prudent and realistic," Regent John Munger said.

Munger said the universities' requested budget increase of 9 percent is justified because the universities "weathered a period of significant mid-year budget cuts."

ASU President Lattie Coor agreed with

COOR

Munger's sentiment, saying salary increases are necessary in any budget increase.

"We need to make salaries a meaningful part of the appropriations process so we can make a significant addition next year," Coor said.

He added that he supports Gov. Fife Symington's budget recommendation of a 5 percent salary increase for all state employees, including those at the universities.

An additional $5 million in the governor's budget for faculty market equity is needed, he said.

"I also embrace that market equity position," he said.

In a recent ASU report, it was documented that 40 of the 100 faculty who left the University in 1992-93 did so because of financial reasons.

It has been estimated that faculty salaries in Arizona are about 15 percent lower than at most of the nation's institutions.

Grad student recruitment to be initiative's focus, dean says

BY GARIN GROFF
STATE PRESS

The difficulty of recruiting high-quality graduate students despite below-average stipends is one of the issues slated to be addressed in a graduate student initiative set to be released this fall.

Brian Foster, dean of the Graduate College, said making the ASU doctoral program more competitive, increasing stipends, and increasing interdisciplinary research are the focus of the subcommittee on graduate education, which he chairs.

"(We're looking at) being more competitive in recruiting really top-flight students into our doctoral programs — the ones with the very highest test scores and the very best recommendations," he said.

"Oftentimes, it is very hard to get the best students here, because stipends are low," he said.

Stipends vary from program to program, but are $4,000 to $7,000 below other institutions, he said. Top programs elsewhere pay as much as $19,000, while ASU's top stipends pay about $12,000.

"In most fields, three-quarters of the universities we compete with pay better than we do," he said. "And we're below the median in virtually every field."

Most universities pay graduate students' tuition, but ASU does not pay its students the $1,700 tuition fee, he said.

Lack of funding is to blame for the low stipends, Foster said.

Davis' speech spurns talk about minority women's health issues

Lecturer suggests ASU students form local project chapter

BY WANDA JACKSON
STATE PRESS

An ASU student's comment to renowned social rights activist Angela Davis during a guest lecture late last week has sparked the emergence of an organization for minority women's health issues at the University.

When approximately 400 people gathered Friday at the College of Law to see Davis lecture on "Race, Class & Gender," Mashona Cole, an ASU junior engineering student, addressed Davis with a concern.

"I believe that I see a decrease in the self-esteem of blacks, especially here in Arizona," Cole said. "I have many friends that are dark complexion and feel as though they are not beautiful because of it."

"What do you think could be the reason for this attitude, and could you inform the people about your views," Cole asked Davis.

Davis said she agreed that many African Americans share the same mentality as Cole's friends, but the answer to her question was not so simple. Davis' solution to the issue was to suggest that students form a chapter on campus of the National Black Women's Health Project. Davis immediately appointed Cole as president of the chapter.

The NBWHP is a national and international organization that focuses on self-help and health advocacy for women of color. The goal of the organization is to improve the health of black women, both mentally and physically, according to Juanita Berry, a representative for the NBWHP, based in Atlanta, Ga.

The organization was formed as a result of the women's health movement in the '70s. Many women felt that the movement had not effectively addressed black women's issues — issues caused by socioeconomic factors such as racism, poverty, and increase of crime in their communities, Berry said.

Although NBWHP was formed to focus on helping black women, membership is open to anyone. After Davis' lecture, more than 50 people signed up to support the organization.

According to Jim Driscoll, a Tempe resident who is helping organize an ASU chapter of NBWHP, men and women of mixed races signed up for the committee.

"The people were very excited and eager to get together," Driscoll said.

Although the organization will deal with many issues, Cole said her main reason for organizing the group is to deal with some of the issues that she feels are current on campus.

Cole said the complexion of one's skin affects the attitudes of people on and off campus.

"I have friends who say they walk on campus and the other black students pass them by without looking them in the eye. She also said that men pass them over in clubs for the lighter-skinned women," Cole said. "This type of attitude hurts me."

According to Erica Wade, an ASU senior broadcast major, shades of color are not a problem at ASU. "I don't think it's a problem at all," she said. "I've been here at ASU for four years and I've never encountered anything like that on this campus, and none of my friends have encountered it either."

"If people don't like you, then they don't like you. Color has nothing to do with it."

Cole, however, said that many students approached her after the lecture to tell her they agreed with her and have experienced the same problems.

the committee that a pay raise is also her school's top priority. She presented a report at the meeting showing the widening gap between salaries at her university and peer institutions such as the University of North Dakota and Ohio University.

John Lee, associate staff director of the Joint Legislative Budget Committee — which issued the Legislature's recommendation — said the universities don't have to ask for state funding to pay for market equity.

"We suggest some other way for the universities and the Board of Regents to fund an increase," Lee said.

This would be done by increasing faculty productivity by 5 percent, he said.

"They could then save money and use it to fund market equity," he said.

The three state universities requested a total funding increase of $29.6 million over last year. The JLBC has recommended an increase of $6.9 million, while the governor's suggestion is $18.1 million.

During the meeting, Coor also mentioned the importance of dealing with a projected boom in the number of university students by the year 2010. One way to handle the increase would be to fund ASU East, he said.

The university presidents and ABOR will move their request for money across the Capitol Courtyard today when they speak before the Arizona Senate Appropriations Committee.

Graduate

ASU President Lattie Coor said he would like to see more money for graduate students and stipends, but he does not expect an increase in funding by the Legislature for graduate assistance or research. Coor is addressing the Legislature today, arguing for increased university funding.

"This is important to the University, but the immediate issue before the Legislature absolutely has to be a strong commitment to salary increases," Coor said.

Tonnvane Wiswell, president of the Graduate Student Council, said students should be the subcommittee's main concern while formulating the graduate initiative. Wiswell said students have been listened to so far, but she added she is concerned that their needs may not be addressed.

"The idea of trying to meet the community needs more, trying to grant more Ph.D.s. I kind of think it will benefit the University more than the graduate students in the long run," Wiswell said.

"They need to make sure that they're looking at the students' interest and not just what's going to make ASU more of a big name or what's going to earn more money for ASU."

For example, Wiswell said she fears humanities are in danger of being cut because they aren't money-makers.

One way students can be helped, she said, is through increasing interdisciplinary studies, what she called the cutting edge of learning.

"Academics is hampered by overspecialization," Wiswell said. "People get locked into boxes and they're not getting out there and seeing new ideas because they're only dealing with people in the same field."

Foster agreed such learning is vital.

"An awful lot of the most important intellectual activity, research and instruction fall in areas that don't fall in the traditional disciplines," Foster said. "They cut across these boundaries."

Foster said offering professional master's degree programs is another high priority. He said this is one of the most important services ASU provides to Arizona because it educates students in the fields of architecture, nursing, business and administration.

"We're looking at how we serve the community and how to be more responsive," Foster said.

Foster said a final undergraduate report is scheduled to be completed by March 15, after the committee receives feedback from a Feb. 15 preliminary report.

Alleged drug transporter sentenced to 30 years

PHOENIX (AP) — A Colombian said to have transported drugs for the Medellin cartel has been sentenced to 30 years in prison for his role in a cocaine-importing plot.

Carlos Javier Marulanda, 50, will have to serve at least 25 years of the sentence imposed Monday by U.S. District Judge Robert Broomfield.

Marulanda, who was convicted last fall of two counts of conspiracy, indicated that he will appeal.

He was convicted of conspiring to import and distribute 2,200 pounds of cocaine in September and October 1989.

UofA professors eyeing new merit pay system

TUCSON (AP) — Faculty leaders at the University of Arizona have endorsed a new concept for a merit or step pay system for faculty members.

J.D. Garcia, chairman of the faculty senate, said the system would equalize the way professors' salaries are determined.

"It is very difficult in any rational way to explain why we have full professors that are falling into the same pay range as assistant professors," said Provost Paul Sypherd.

Sypherd said the system would be loosely modeled after one used by California universities.

Under the plan, each faculty member is assigned a rank — assistant, associate or full professor. There is a sequence of salary steps within the ranks. Promotions are based on merit.

University President Manuel Pacheco probably would present the plan to the Arizona Board of Regents in April, Sypherd said.

Tucson council passes gag rule

TUCSON (AP) — The City Council has passed a rule keeping the mayor and council from talking to the media about "private or personal" issues dealing with city employees.

The rule passed the all-Democratic council 4-3 Monday but not without criticism that it violated the First Amendment right to free speech.

"It is a gag rule that is chilling and inappropriate to a public organization such as the city of Tucson and its employees," Councilman Bruce Wheeler said.

Councilman Roger Sedlmayr drafted the rule after media reports about former City Attorney Fred Dean and Laura Nichols, the assistant director of the parks and recreation department.

5 arrested in verdict protest

TUCSON (AP) — Five people were arrested after lying in a downtown intersection to protest the acquittal of a former Border Patrol agent in the slaying of an unarmed illegal alien during a drug stakeout near Nogales.

About 15 protesters gathered at the intersection Monday afternoon to protest the acquittal Thursday of Michael Elmer on federal civil rights charges.

Elmer had previously been acquitted of state criminal charges in the June 1992 death of Dario Miranda Valenzuela and then was found innocent after a jury in Phoenix deliberated four hours.

Ten people lay in the road, but five got up when asked to leave, police said.

The remaining five were accused of disorderly conduct and failure to obey a traffic officer, police said.

The arrested were identified as Christine Frey, 28, Adriana Gallego, 19, Erik J. Lundquist, 30, Miguel Ortega, 27, and Audrie Steward, 20.

Ortega was the only one booked into the Pima County Jail, officials said.

Rains trigger California mudslides

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rain tapered off today after deluges that set off mudslides on the fire-stripped, quake-shaken Malibu hills, burying cars on a highway and trapping people in precariously perched seaside homes.

"There was this huge bank of mud coming toward me. The things you see in the movies, it was happening to me," Vera Smith said Monday after a mudslide swallowed her Mercedes and pushed it down the scenic Pacific Coast Highway.

Hills stripped of grass by November's wildfires melted into mud that caught motorists by surprise when it spread a goopy carpet three feet deep across the highway, closing down a 5-mile stretch into this morning.

Later, bulldozers scraped up the mud and dumped it onto Malibu's legendary beaches, adding insult to injury for the community's disaster-weary residents.

"The fires, the mud, the earthquake —

Malibu is kind of like 'Disasterland,'" said Lisa Haslehurst. "In fact, I think I'm moving."

About 25 Malibu homes were damaged, with losses estimated at $1.6 million, said sheriff's Deputy Diane Hecht.

Mudslides aside, earthquake-ravaged Southern California also weathered an avalanche that closed a mountain highway, a tornado that battered Orange County and high winds that blacked out neighborhoods from the San Fernando Valley to San Diego.

Malibu officials had known for months that slides were probable in areas charred by the firestorms. Sandbag berms were installed to protect multimillion-dollar beachfront homes and hay bales made into makeshift dams.

The persistent downpour tapered off to intermittent showers this morning, and they were expected to end tonight. The storm had dropped 1 1/2 inches on the Malibu area since the first waves of rain began late Sunday, and an additional tenth of an inch was possible, the National Weather Service said.

On Monday, the torrent of muddy water racing down Big Rock Canyon poured into about a dozen beachfront homes perched along Pacific Coast Highway.

The soupy mud smashed through doors and ran like a waterfall off the decks of the stilt-perched houses in the celebrity-packed community 25 miles west of Los Angeles.

Crews plowed through the muck in tractors to rescue about two dozen residents who crawled through their windows to safety well after nightfall.

By this morning, everyone who needed to get out was out, but "We're still buried in mud," said Dennis Cutting of the state transportation department.

Clinton's health plan likely to increase federal deficit, budget office officials say

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's health plan would drive the federal deficit up by $74 billion over the next six years, not cut it by $58 billion as the White House forecast, the Congressional Budget Office said today.

The CBO said Clinton's program would require more subsidies for employers than the White House initially projected. It also predicted that more low-wage workers would qualify for the promised subsidies.

In another setback for the White House, the CBO said Clinton's mandatory premiums for employers should be included in the federal budget. Clinton wanted them treated off-budget as a strictly private transaction.

Clinton said the CBO's estimates would not deter him.

"We'll fix that. That's not a problem. That's a Washington policy wonk deal. No serious person out here in the real world will be too troubled by that," Clinton told reporters after making a speech on the plan in Louisiana.

CBO Director Robert D. Reischauer, in testimony prepared for the House Ways and Means Committee, said the Clinton proposal would boost national spending on health in its early years. But, he said, the plan would "reduce spending for health in the longer run" and could reduce the deficit after 2004.

He estimated the plan would reduce the deficit by $10 billion in fiscal 1995, but then increase it from 1996 through 2000 by more than $80 billion.

Clinton's program, which seeks to guarantee private coverage for all Americans no later than January 1998, should be included in the federal budget because "it establishes both a federal entitlement to health benefits and a system of mandatory payments to finance those benefits," the CBO said.

It said the regional alliances where most Americans would get their coverage "would operate primarily as agents of the federal government."

North purges name from Iran-Contra files

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate hopeful Oliver North purged his name from court files detailing his efforts to suppress the prosecutor's final report on the Iran-Contra scandal, sources familiar with the matter said Tuesday.

A three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals released hundreds of pages of previously secret court documents filed in December by former President Reagan and former Attorney General Edwin Meese III seeking to block the Jan. 18 release of the prosecutor's report.

But North's name was absent from the court files. One court document had black ink blotting out the name of a third party seeking to suppress the report. The name was North's and it was blacked out by court officers at the request of North and his lawyers, according to the sources, who have closely followed the seven-year investigation of the scandal and who spoke on condition of anonymity.

In addition, said the sources, North's lawyers removed from court files their secret motions seeking to stop release of the report.

"We just don't have any comment," North lawyer Nicole Seligman said when asked about the former White House aide's decision to keep his court motions off the public record.

North is seeking the Republican nomination for the Senate seat held by Charles Robb, D-Va.

The report by prosecutor Lawrence Walsh concludes that Reagan acquiesced in a coverup of the Iran-Contra scandal spearheaded by Meese. It also concludes that North regarded Reagan's comments about secretly assisting the Nicaraguan Contras as "an invitation to break the law."

In the newly released court papers, filed Dec. 3, Reagan's lawyers complained that Walsh's then-secret report "contains page after page of innuendo that former President Reagan and others might have transgressed criminal laws."

Educational budgeting

It's nightmare time on Pennsylvania Avenue.

President Clinton has just unleashed his new $1.52 trillion federal budget, and now we get to sit back and watch the sparks fly — sort of a “Wrestle mania meets C-SPAN.” Inevitably, we will be treated to rallying cries from the Democrats, attacks from the Republicans and both counterpoised by the agonized shrieks from special interest groups missing their slice of the pie.

No doubt, Hillary will be assuring Bill that the big, bad Bob Dole monster really isn't under the bed, and that the Congressional Budget Office isn't lurking in the closet.

All the upcoming fun aside, taking a superficial glance at the new budget suggests that one of its most promising aspects is a new focus on education — part of Clinton's new “focus” for the Democratic Party.

Science research programs would receive a 4 percent increase overall in funding, much of the new funding going to biological and medical areas of inquiry — a great deal of which would take place at the university level.

The budget also allocates funds to create an Office of AIDS Research, allowing for more effective research on the disease. Again, the universities may benefit.

The Education Department would receive a 7 percent increase in funding. In addition, nutrition and disease control programs for elementary-age children are to receive increases in their budgets.

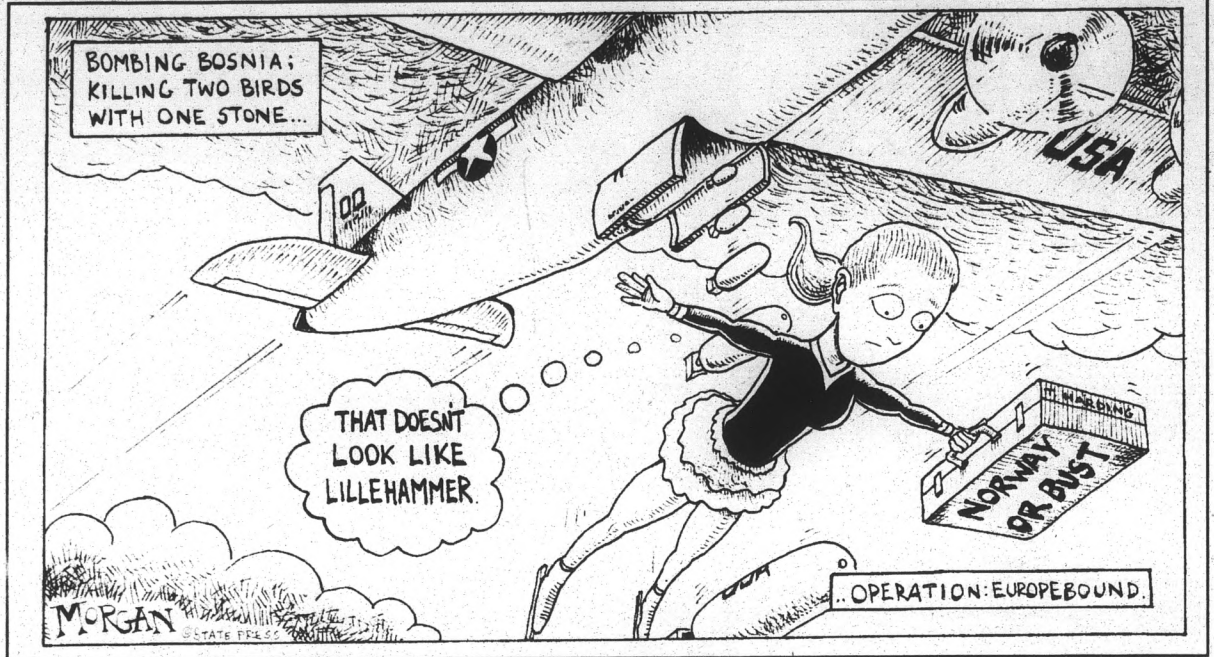

The only big educational loser would be the space program, whose funding would remain relatively static despite the president's previous rhetoric to increase funding. A large chunk of NASA's budget would be eaten up by the “Space Station Freedom,” the eventual merit of which is still debated. Needless to say, the amount of funds which trickle down to the university level won't be phenomenal.

The big question is, can Clinton get the new budget passed?

It doesn't seem likely, considering that several of the groups Clinton is cutting funds from to fund the new increases — defense contractors, the tobacco industry, farmers and the elderly — are among the biggest, baddest lobbying groups on the Hill.

Odds are, Clinton's budget will undergo some pretty severe changes in Congress before being passed, particularly since Clinton has all the backbone of a limp noodle in the wind when it comes to maintaining his promises.

But, for the sake of American education, let's hope that he can preserve at least a little.

Davis' logic, rhetoric 'still crazy after all these years'

For reasons unknown, the media in this country over the past four years have felt a constant need to remind conservatives that the Cold War is over. If that is true, will somebody please tell Angela Davis?

Like the Paul Simon tune, Professor Davis cannot seem to get over her old lover, Karl Marx. The affair which began during the Age of Aquarius failed, according to her, because of his infidelity.

But like a bad penny, he returns.

Responding to a question from an audience member after her address last Friday, Davis took issue with the near-universal recognition that capitalism defeated communism. “The assumption is that capitalism is triumphant ... I don't think that capitalism can be triumphant by default.”

Mikhail Gorbachev expressed the same sentiment in 1991, when he said the United States did not prevail in the Cold War, but rather both countries won. He told the United States that it was not the time to gloat, but rather for reproaches. Now, in an orgasm of historical revisionism, Angela Davis tells us that the game was called on account of rain. I don't think so.

I say, let's gloat! The truth is Marxism-Leninism got its head handed to it by Levi-Strauss. Adam Smith and “The Wealth of Nations” went up against Karl Marx and “Das Kapital” and threw a shutout. After the Super Bowl of International Politics, Thomas Paine and “The Rights of Man” are swimming in Dom Perignon, while Angela Davis and the Lenin Sisters are hitting the showers. Now she's calling us out for a rematch? What does she want us to do, run up the score?

Capitalism, using philosopher Ayn Rand's definition, is a market of “pure, uncontrolled, unregulated laissez-faire capitalism” with the state and economics segregated in the same way as church and state. Something we haven't had since the days of Coolidge. In other words, we fought the Cold War since FDR with one hand tied behind our back, and we still kicked Bolshevik butt.

Davis is not quite ready to abandon her socialist ship. She waxes nostalgic for the '60s. Her comrades were “convinced that capitalism was on its last legs” only to awake in the '90s to disappointingly find that it is still “limping along on that leg today.” Yet, she insists that “the contradictions of capitalism

... are becoming more and more acute.” Although surviving, “capitalism is very much in crisis.”

If capitalism is indeed in crisis as Davis contends, this would surely come to as a surprise to a great many people.

Ayn Rand's capitalism is alive and well, thank you very much. More apparent in the backstreets of Shanghai and Warsaw than in New York or Washington, capitalism blooms where the pesticide of government cannot reach.

In China, the removal of price controls has unleashed a torrent of economic growth south of the Yangtze River. In the Chinese province of Guangdong, the demand for Western goods is so great, that the world's largest manned army cannot stop Cantonese entrepreneurs from smuggling goods in from Hong Kong. The result: Annual economic growth is the highest in world, giving China the third largest economy in the world.

In Peru, government regulation has grown so oppressive it has driven underground merchants and businessman. Yet, somehow the capitalist instinct continues to thrive while regulated enterprise stagnates. Economist Hernando deSoto estimates that the size of Peru's “underground” economy now eclipses the official economy.

“The failure of capitalism to respond to the needs of the people of this and other capitalist countries” is what spurs Davis in her crusade for the mythical “third way.” This is an economic nirvana voluminously touted by the Left, yet which continues to escape them in practice. The only thing that flourishes under socialism is their never-ending run of adjectives used to describe the latest collectivism en vogue.

In the eyes of Davis, socialism failed in the Soviet Union because of the “lack of democracy, absence of economic democracy ... of social democracy. Simply because it did not work at that moment in history, does not mean we have to give it up. I have not given up the goal of moving toward another social system, some kind of democratic socialist society.”

A brilliant analysis of the obvious, Angela, but a little slow on the uptake. Lenin discovered this around 1923.

As Ayn Rand said, the only difference between socialism and communism is the means each chooses to take power: one by force, the other by vote. They simply are different denominations of the same currency; different ways of achieving death — one by murder, the other by suicide.

When Ronald Reagan told Europeans that communism would be relegated to “the ash-heap of history,” the mainstream media ridiculed him. History vindicated him. Underneath that heap you'll find Angela Davis.

This is how it will work: In order to receive a high school diploma, students will have to pass proficiency tests in reading, writing, math, science, and social studies, and prove competency in the fine arts or some branch of vocational education. These tests can be taken at any point during the high school career. Standards will be set by the state, but it will be up to the local boards of education to develop the tests.

I loved it when a similar program was passed in the state in which I came of age. In fact, because I'm such an edu-weenie, I wish that I could've taken a competency test or two before being unleashed on the world. At the time, I thought proficiency tests were a great idea, and I still do; I couldn't see how anyone could reasonably object to such a program. People, I've found, can create objections to anything.

A prime example, culled from the pages of the Arizona Republic, comes from a state school board member, who feels the assessment program is too new and untried to be valuable, mainly because the tests require students to use their knowledge in real life situations. God forbid the children should learn to apply what they've learned, or that school should, in some way, prepare them for life outside of the classroom; the world might end if its youth learned to think critically and creatively. If secondary education is not intended to carry out these functions, then proficiency tests are unnecessary, indeed, and school becomes a mere holding cell for individuals who the workforce is not able to accommodate.

The most frequent objection is that kids who aren't working up to par will lose out on these tests, because they won't be able to graduate, even if they've been attending school regularly. The tests aren't intended to shut people out; they are meant to set a standard that is not so low as to be meaningless, but not so difficult that a passing score is unattainable for the majority of students. The NPR report referred to giving away little pieces of paper to keep the students feeling good about themselves, at which point all that paper truly signifies, across the board, is that an individual has done his time in high school and made it out alive. Recognizing these kids for seeing school through is all very nice and pleasant, but how can anyone feel warm and fuzzy when a high school diploma no longer means that the bearer has learned to read, write, and do simple math?

Hey, if we want to pat everyone on the back, then give the youths who have gone to school every day, but haven't learned a damned thing, a nice certificate that says as much, which is the policy in Ohio, another state with a proficiency-testing program. More importantly, children who attend school regularly but can't pass these tests point to a much larger problem: Why aren't they learning? How can a child who attends school daily avoid picking up the essentials?

This program, the Arizona Student Assessment Program, will be instituted in 1996. In the best of worlds, it will accomplish two things: It will insure that a high school diploma has value, and that the bearers of such a document possess a modicum of skills to bring to college, or the labor force, or everyday life; and, the ASAP has the opportunity to point out the weaknesses of education, to examine why little Johnny or Bonnie can do their time at school and come out the same empty vessel that went in, be that due to teaching, or a lack of motivation, or subtle and institutionalized discrimination.

I hope, quite fervently, that these tests won't be used simply to weed out those who have learned from those who haven't, making sure that only those who have win the prize. I hope the goal of this program is to make certain that all students are able to pass these tests without too much of a struggle, but I haven't heard this addressed on the radio, or seen it in the papers. I haven't heard any talk about changing curricula, or improving and innovating teaching methods, and this worries me.

Perhaps these things are meant to be implicit, but I'm still worried, because if the educational status quo is maintained, the results of those first tests in 1996 will be dismal; simply testing for proficiency doesn't guarantee that it will be taught, or learned. If the school system is presently turning out busloads of incompetents, then there's a bug in the system, and testing to check who has been bitten by the bug won't eradicate the pest.

I don't want to know if Johnny and Bonnie can function in the world; I already know the answer to that question. I want the bug to be squashed, so that all of the Johnnys and Bonnies can pass those tests alongside the eggheads, and the much-promoted and protected system of universal education in America can be meaningful once more.

Miller giveaway requires superhuman alcohol intake

I am writing in response to the Miller Genuine Draft "We've got you covered" advertisement which has surfaced several times over the past weeks. You know, the full-page color ad which offers free merchandise in exchange for UPC proof-of-purchase symbols from Miller Beer bottles and cans. I appreciate the fact that the State Press is an independent paper which receives its monies through advertising. However, I wonder at which point do the best interests of the students of ASU overcome the economic gain of running advertisements which are, at best, in poor taste, at worst, irresponsible?

In general, the State Press shows an obvious commitment to providing accurate and timely information to the students of ASU through responsible reporting on issues affecting our daily lives. However, I note a distinct conflict of interest in promoting a marketing gimmick which encourages alcohol consumption above and beyond the recommended federal health guidelines. Perhaps your advertising department neglected to do the math. Miller encourages you to "think when you drink." Think about this: If you really want a nifty MGD jacket, and you are in the habit of buying 6-packs, you will have to drink 10.38 bottles of beer a day for 130 days. That's 1,346.80 bottles of beer in a little over 4 months! Okay, say you go for the economy pack, and buy a case. You are still going to have to drink 2.77 bottles a day for 130 days, or 360 beers, to get that jacket. Federal health guidelines state that men should not exceed 2 alcoholic beverages per day, and women should not exceed 1 alcoholic beverage per day. The MGD jacket is worth 225 points. The neon MGD guitar is worth 965 points. Depending on whether you buy Miller in 6-packs, 12-packs, cases, bottles or cans, you will need to consume between 12 and 45 beers per day for 130 days to get that sign (that adds up to 1,560 to 5,850 beers in just over 4 months).

Yes, we live in a nation which espouses freedom of speech. Miller undoubtedly met all of the appropriate advertising guidelines in designing this promotion. The State Press is an independent paper, and depends on advertising dollars for its publication.

However, I would like to encourage a new trend toward social responsibility through media, and I would like to believe that the State Press would agree that with a readership of more than 40,000 people, it should shoulder some of that responsibility. I am not suggesting censorship, but rather discretion. The fact that Miller chooses to promote their products through redemption of proof-of-purchase symbols for prizes is not offensive. The fact that the design of this program inherently promotes and encourages irresponsible consumption of alcohol is.

This Week's Question: "What are your feelings regarding closer relations between United States and Vietnam?"

Tuesday's rain hinders travelers; several accidents reported in Tempe

By JONI TAIT
STATE PRESS

Sporadic, heavy rain Tuesday made traveling across campus and other parts of the state difficult for many.

Several people called in to report accidents in the Tempe area because of the slick roads caused by the downpour, according to a spokesman at the Tempe Police Department.

"The only significant activity that we've been involved in relates to the closing of McAllister (Avenue), which was flooded from Apache Boulevard to Lemon Street," said Bill Bess, director of ASU's Department of Public Safety.

He said the department also had some minor flooding in the east wing of the Campus Inn.

"We're just getting reports of minor leaks, and that can be expected from the amount of rain we received in a short time," said Polly Pinney, assistant to the director of facilities management.

She said there was no reported property damage on campus.

While some students took off their shoes and plunged into the fairly deep puddles that were dispersed across campus, others found alternative routes.

"The worse thing is getting your feet wet," said history Professor Jim Rush, after scaling a wall to avoid the pool that formed outside at the west entrance of the Social Sciences Building entrance.

"It is really deep."

A female student balancing on the bike rack outside the same building said, "You do what you can," before jumping on her bike and riding to drier ground.

Even though the thunderstorm system died down around 5 p.m. Tuesday, early morning showers are likely today but are expected to clear up later in the afternoon, when the low pressure system moves farther eastward.

The National Weather Service's extended forecast is mostly sunny days and clear nights Thursday through Saturday with highs in the upper 60s, and overnight lows in the lower 40s.

New ASASU proposal aims to 'reinvent student government'

By VICKY YOUNG SCHAUER
STATE PRESS

A proposal to "reinvent student government" was presented by ASASU President Rossie Turman at the Tuesday senate meeting. The major changes recommended in Senate Bills 88 through 94 concern ASASU elections and the duties of elected officers.

"Elections bring more people into the ASASU circle than anything else," said Activities Vice President Chad Wolett during his presentation to the senate.

Election timeline changes were proposed by Turman which will effect future ASASU elections. The offices of president, vice president of campus affairs, and one-half of the senate by college will be elected in the May election. The other half of the senate, the vice president of legislation and fiscal planning, and the vice president of student outreach will be elected in December if the proposal is enacted. Referendums will be allowed on either ballot.

"College councils will have to be more responsible and active because a new person will be elected every six months," said Kurt Wilhelm, campus affairs vice president.

Sen. John Malik was nominated and confirmed as ASASU executive vice president for the remainder of this term. Two new senators, Rebecca Rilling and John Salai, were also sworn into office.

POLICE REPORT

Phoenix police placed two men in custody Tuesday night in connection with a series of sexual assault incidents committed in the East Valley and Phoenix over the past two weeks.

"We have two people that we have taken into custody that we're talking to at this point," Phoenix police detective Leo Speliopoulos said. "At this point we're interviewing them; we have not charged anybody with anything yet."

Speliopoulos said it was premature to discuss the investigation but he did say one suspect was in his 20's and the other guy was approximately 20 years of age.

A man fitting the same description and driving the same type vehicle attempted to abduct a Mesa girl at gunpoint Sunday and has been linked by police to six other incidents in Mesa and Phoenix over the past two weeks.

Police believe the same man sexually assaulted a Tempe girl at knife-point Jan. 31.

Members of the Mesa, Phoenix and Tempe police departments formed a task force Monday to track the suspect. Mesa police Sgt. Earle Lloyd said they received over 300 tips on Tuesday.

Speliopoulos said another incident involving a white Jeep Cherokee was reported Tuesday off 60th Street near Horizon High School. In that incident, the suspect pointed a gun at the female victim. Horizon is on 56th Street and Greenway Road, in Scottsdale.

"Basically we believe we have evidence to show probable cause that we have the individuals," Speliopoulos said. "We have reasonable suspicion to believe that they are the individuals but the investigation is continuing until such point that we can charge them."

ASU police reported the following incidents Tuesday:

- A male ASU student reported that unknown persons stole several parts from his bicycle including the handlebars, seat, brakes and pedals while it was at Manzanita Hall, where it had been locked. Estimated loss is $150.
- The Arizona Sports Foundation reported that unknown persons stole five banners from Sun Devil Stadium belonging to the foundation. Estimated loss is $5,015.
- Police were dispatched to Manzanita Hall after a resident complained a male ASU student was following her. He was told not to make contact with her and informed that the hall director had been made aware of the situation.

• A male ASU student reported that unknown persons stole the spare tire from his 1993 Chevrolet pickup while it was parked in Lot 59. Estimated loss is $200.

• An affiliated male man reported his black Giant mountain bicycle stolen from the bicycle racks at the Engineering Center F-wing, where it was secured with a U-lock. Estimated loss is $450.

• A female student reported her teal and black Cadex CFM mountain bicycle stolen from the bicycle racks on the east side of Physical Education East, where it was secured to the bike rack with a U-lock. Estimated loss is $800.

• A male employee reported that unknown persons criminally damaged a 3-foot by 7-foot glass window in the Physical Sciences H-wing. Estimated damage is $200.

• Police answered a call in Lot 8 where a female ASU student drove her car over a curb and hit an ASU sign. A towing company was called to pull her car back on the lot. The sign did not need to be replaced.

• Police responded to a call in Tempe Center where a non-affiliated male was intoxicated and disturbing the peace. He asked to be transported to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital for detoxification and was left in the hospital's care.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Tuesday:

• A 35-year-old Chandler man was arrested Sunday for possession of narcotic drugs and contributing to the delinquency of a minor after he purchased what police believe to be cocaine in front of his three children.

He was in possession of cocaine at the time of his arrest but he claimed it was planted on him.

• A 20-year-old male ASU student was cited for use of a fraudulent identification card to enter a liquor establishment. He presented the fake ID at Balboa Cafe, 404 S. Mill Ave.

• Two men robbed and assaulted a 22-year-old Mesa Community College student at Bank of America, 619 S. Mill Ave. Sunday by punching him in the face and stealing $40 the man had just taken from an ATM. The two suspects were arrested at Fifth and Maple Streets.

The first suspect, 34, was charged with delay and obstruction of justice and aggravated robbery. The second suspect, a 37-year-old Glendale man, was charged with driving under the influence and aggravated robbery.

Throw away your scale. Celebrate "Fearless Friday" on Feb. 11 by giving up your diet for a day.

"Fearless Friday" is part of a proclamation by Gov. Fife Symington making Feb. 7-13 Eating Disorders Awareness Week.

"The proclamation states that preoccupation with weight and obsessive food and body concerns can lead to an eating disorder," said Kim Phelps, an official at the governor's office.

Phelps said the emphasis for the week is on a positive body image.

"This week people should focus on inner beauty and personal strengths rather than on appearance and weight," Phelps said.

There are many different types of eating disorders, varying in severity. The most familiar eating disorders are anorexia nervosa, or self starvation; bulimia, a cycle of bingeing then purging; and obsessive eating.

Dr. Ray Lemberg, a psychologist in private practice in Scottsdale, sponsored the proclamation in Arizona. He is a member of the Eating Disorders Professional Association, an organization dedicated to public education.

"Our association declares Eating Disorders Awareness Week nationally to get the severity of eating disorders into the public conscious," said Lemberg.

Lemberg said the project has been developing for the past several years and about 30 states are participating.

"Eating disorders are a disease and represent a major problem in the United States," Lemberg said.

Dr. Vivian Meehan agreed. Meehan is a psychologist and the president and director of the National Associations of Anorexia Nervosa and Associated Disorders, an organization formed in 1976 to study eating disorders.

"More than 8 million people in the United States have an eating disorder, seven million of these are women," Meehan said. "What's worse is that in all of the research we have done only 50 percent of the people treated for an eating disorder consider themselves cured."

Meehan said 86 percent of people with eating disorders reported having them before the age of 20. She said the disease lasts between one and 15 years for more than 76 percent of people.

According to Meehan, 6 percent of the people documented with eating disorders die from complications of the disease.

"This is a hidden, shameful illness for people that suffer from it," Meehan said. "People don't tell their friends that they have been throwing up in the bathroom, they don't want people to know they are starving themselves."

"Eating disorders make people focus on food to the exclusion of any other issues."

Jeanne Phillips focuses on the other issues. Phillips is a certified eating disorders counselor and a graduate student in counseling at Ottawa University. She said it's important to find out the issues beneath the eating disorder.

"People come to me thinking that I can teach them not to throw up after they eat, or how not to starve themselves," Phillips said. "But we can't help a person with their eating disorder until we find out what the underlying problems are."

NEW YORK (AP) — Conjecture about President Clinton's sexual history is a violation of his human rights. That's the word from Fidel Castro.

"It's an interference in his personal life," the Cuban leader said in the March issue of Vanity Fair.

On the other hand, Castro noted, "There are many countries where it is a good idea for the candidate in order to be elected to have a lot of girlfriends, where being a womanizer is a virtue."

Castro, long fodder for romantic legend, was asked how many children he has.

"Well, I don't have a tribe," he said, laughing. "Not that much. Fewer than a dozen." He paused. "I think."

NEW YORK (AP) — Balladeer Julio Iglesias worked like crazy on his latest album. He should have. It's called "Crazy."

"He's been locked behind closed studio doors for the past eight months working on this," said his publicist, Enid Lewin.

The album's title track is the love song made famous by the late country singer Patsy Cline. The album also features a duet with Dolly Parton, "When You Tell Me

That You Love Me."

"Crazy" has 10 love songs and will be released in April by Columbia Records.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The marriage of Washington Redskins owner Jack Kent Cooke and Marlena Ramallo Chalmers is over, perhaps before it even started.

Cooke declared the 3 1/2-year union void because Chalmers' divorce from her former husband was "falsely obtained" in the Dominican Republic in 1986.

Because of bigamy statutes "we are not legally married and never have been," the 81-year-old Cooke said Tuesday in a statement.

Cooke said he plans to "return permanently" to his farm in Middleburg, Va., and "the life I lived before my purported marriage to Marlena Chalmers on May 5, 1990."

In the past two years, Chalmers has been involved in a series of high-profile and embarrassing events. She visited a hospital after mysteriously shooting herself in the hand and was arrested for driving through Georgetown with a man pounding on the hood of her Jaguar.

Neither Chalmers nor her previous husband, David Chalmers, could be reached for comment.

Cooke has married four times. He divorced his last wife, Suzanne Martin Cooke, when he discovered she had become pregnant and failed to get an abortion as she had allegedly promised.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tenor Placido Domingo has a new job: adjunct professor of music at the University of California, Los Angeles.

He'll be on campus when his performance schedule permits.

"We're honored and delighted that UCLA students have the invaluable opportunity to study directly with one of the world's leading artists today," UCLA art school Dean Robert Blocker said Monday.

Last month, UCLA music students participated in a series of choral and orchestral master classes conducted by Domingo.

"Coming here brings me so much joy. How great it is to work with young people," Domingo said at the time.

Baseball rained out; twin bill starts at 2 p.m.

Tuesday's rain forced the postponement of the scheduled baseball game between ASU and Southern Utah at Packard Stadium.

The game will be made up today as part of a doubleheader beginning at 2 p.m.

Athletic department mum over Pac-10 probe

The ASU athletic department offered no comment Tuesday regarding charges made by the family of a former Sun Devil football player.

Samieh Wood, the mother of former wide receiver John Livingston, filed a grievance with the Pac-10 last month, alleging that ASU committed numerous violations of NCAA recruiting rules.

ASU Football Coach Bruce Snyder deferred comment to Mark Brand, ASU sports information director, who said the department had no comment.

Smith to coach Goodwill Games

Lee Roy Smith, head coach of ASU wrestling, has been chosen to serve as assistant coach for the 1994 Goodwill Games wrestling team.

Smith, who will be joined by Greg Strobel, a coach with the Team Foxcatcher club, will be training the USA team for the competition in Russia. Both men were active with the 1990 U.S. Goodwill Games team, which defeated the former Soviet Union in the championship dual meet.

Basketball to play in Maui

The ASU men's basketball team will be part of an eight-team field competing in the 1994 Maui Invitational from Nov. 21-23.

The tournament, which is hosted by Chaminade University in Maui, Hawaii, will feature two of the most prominent names in NCAA basketball tournament history, Indiana and Michigan.

Also taking part in the tournament are Maryland, Texas A&M, Utah and Tulane.

DREAMS OF HOME

Armenian tennis star longs for absent family, fame

BY DAWN WAGNER
STATE PRESS

He would like to return to his home country, but he can't. So Sargis Sargsian focuses all of his attention on the one thing that keeps him away from it: tennis.

Originally from Armenia, Sargsian began to play tennis at the age of seven. He credits his father for his development.

"My dad, he really helped me with this," he said. "Being from Armenia, it is really hard to play. Tennis is a sport where you need to spend money to learn it, and my dad really did it. He believed in me."

Although he admits that tennis is not a popular sport in Armenia, he spent most — if not all — of his time practicing with the few players that were better than him. By the age of 14, he had run out of competition.

"I did really good right from the beginning," Sargsian said. "I was successful. I was the number one player in the USSR."

This elite ranking meant a lot of traveling, and as a member of the Armenian National Tennis Team, he first traveled to the United States in January of 1993.

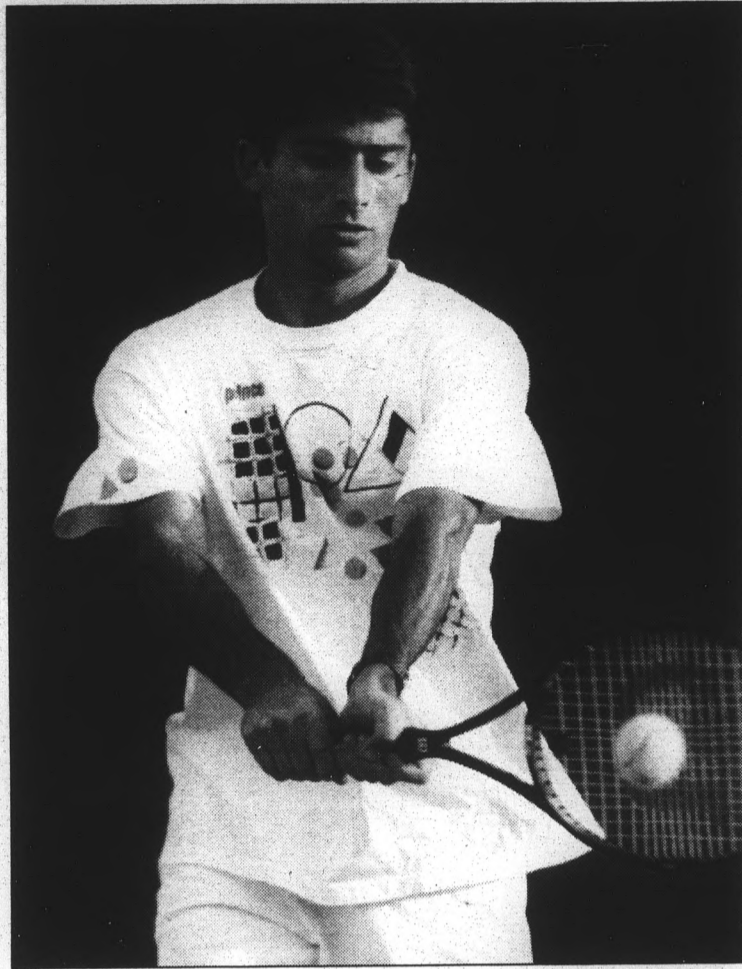

"When I came here, I thought that I was going to go back," Sargsian said. "But instead I decided to go to college, and so my family is in Armenia and I am here."

Although this is Sargsian's first year at ASU, he has taken the NCAA tennis circuit by storm. He recently won the Rolex National Intercollegiate Indoor Championships, and is expected to be No. 1 nationally when the new tennis rankings are released.

Sargsian said the indoor championships meant a lot to him, but he believes tennis is more than just a game of skill.

"Tennis is the kind of sport where everyone has the chance to win," he said. "Yeah, I can win easily, but you just need a little bit of luck, and I had luck this time. I lost in the Sun Devil's loss puts on pressure

BY JULIE REUVERS
STATE PRESS

Saturday's loss to Washington State served as an ultimatum to the ASU men's basketball team, leaving it little margin for error during this week's games at California and Stanford, coach Bill Frieder said Tuesday.

"If you win two, it puts you in great shape. If you lose two, it kills you, and if you split, you're still alive for a lot of things," he said. "So that's about where it is."

The loss to the Cougars put ASU at 11-7 overall and 6-3 in the Pac-10. The Sun Devils are in a three-way tie for third place in the conference with UofA (17-4, 6-3) and Stanford (13-5, 6-3). All three teams play each other this week and are fighting for an eventual berth in the NCAA Tournament.

"The bottom line is: I think if we're 7-2 in the last nine games, we'll be in the NCAA (Tournament) and if we're 6-3, we might be on the bubble," Frieder said.

However, ASU still has to play the final two of its four consecutive road games, something that happens once every 10 years in the Pac-10. In his 13 years of coaching, Frieder said he has never played more than three consecutive road games.

"I don't like the fact that we have to go back on the road," Frieder said. "You try to get back home after a loss and get a couple victories and get your confidence back up."

Part of road games includes dealing with

Security had to move the man to another part of the arena.

"It's the worst crowd I've ever encountered," Frieder said. "Never have I had a crowd give us the finger and throw stuff at us and talk about our mother. I've never had the crowd come and slap one of our players."

Wes Werner, assistant sports information director at Washington State, said what happened to Riley is not typical of Cougar fans in general.

"We haven't had an incident like this in the five years I've been here," Werner said. "We've never had an altercation between players and fans. What happened Saturday is not accustomed to the type of fans we have."

Werner also cited the Texas A&M game last weekend in which the Aggies' coach and more than one player were involved in a scuffle with fans after the game. Werner said this is evidence that there are similar outbursts happening around the country this season.

Frieder, who did not file a complaint with the Pac-10, said the WSU crowd should have been a motivator for ASU to step up its play.

the opposition's fans, and Saturday's crowd in Pullman, Wash., did not take well to Frieder or the Sun Devils. The fans' contempt for Frieder stems from a comment two years ago when he called Pullman a dump.

During an out-of-bounds play in the first half, ASU guard Ron Riley was pushed by a WSU fan and they exchanged punches.

Picks, pans and predictions in the world of sports

Some thoughts on the NBA, the NCAA, Kilroy, and Buddy:

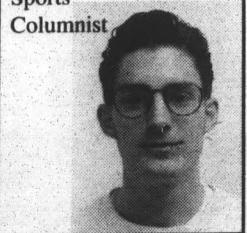

•The Phoenix Suns are limping their way to the finish line, and at the halfway point in the season, their record is only good enough for fourth in the Western Conference.

Not bad, but if they cannot catch the Seattle SuperSonics and win the Pacific Division, they will be forced to face both the Sonics and the Houston Rockets en route to the NBA Finals.

Once there, they would have to face either the New York Knicks or the Atlanta Hawks.

TODD KELLY

Sports Columnist

That adds up to three seven-game series against the most elite of elite teams. A daunting task, to be sure, but not out of the realm of possibilities for them. After all, the Suns are among the elite, too.

•The NBA's "So-Far" Awards, four days before the All-Star break: Coach of the Year- Lenny Wilkens, Atlanta Hawks. MVP- Hakeem Olajuwon, Rockets. Surprise of the year- Hawks and Chicago Bulls (tie). Disappointment of the year- The Charlotte Hornets. Biggest Non-surprise of the year- The woeful, pitiful Dallas Mavericks. The sports scene in the city of Dallas is the ultimate dichotomy.

•The best commercial during the Super Bowl: Michael Jordan as Johnny Kilroy, the mysterious basketball player. Question: How will he fit that afro under his White Sox hat?

•The Arizona (underachieving) Wildcats (losers) had absolutely no business losing (chokers) to the Washington Huskies (ha, ha, ha) last Saturday. Lute Olson (bad motivator) never has his team ready for every game, even the lesser ones (Santa Clara), and I hope that when ASU beats them on March 12 it costs UofA a spot in the NCAA tournament. That's what they get.

•The Phoenix Cardinals began the Buddy Ryan Era on February 3, when owner Bill Bidwill signed Ryan to a four-year deal worth about $400,000 per year. The honeymoon will be short; I will be surprised if Ryan makes it to a contract renewal.

The team will be more competitive than in the past, and I expect Ryan to make good on his promise of "smart, physical, aggressive football." But he provides no stability because of his brashness and abrasiveness.

But if the Cards win a few more games and make it to the playoffs, and put a few more seats in the stands, well, then I guess it was worth it. And Bidwill will finally look like someone who knows what he's doing ... What am I saying?

other finals (National Claycourt tournament). I could tell that the guy wasn't better than me, but he just had good luck and I had the bad luck."

This knowledge doesn't distract Sargsian in the least. He still goes into tournaments with one thing on his mind — to win.

"I just go to the match and I am not interested in who I am playing against. I am just trying to win," he said. "I don't do anything special. I just try to play my style and if it doesn't work you try something different. I will do anything to win the match."

Sargsian said he hopes that this attitude will lead to a professional career in tennis.

"I would love to win the Grand Slam, but I just want to be a good tennis player. I would love to be, you know ... famous. That's my goal, to be famous."

But, in the short run, Sargsian said he's concerned with being able to travel back home. Right now, it doesn't seem likely.

"We have war with the country next to us (Azerbaijan), and it is getting worse and worse. I hope it gets better someday."

Sargsian said. "I want to play tennis, and if I go back I can't do that. There is no way, but I want to go back. "I really miss my parents but I can't (go back) because they might want to take me to the army, and nobody cares there."
