ASASU committee to consider pulling away from ASA Senate petition suggests withdrawal from group

BY GREG ZEMEIDA
STATE PRESS

Associated Students of ASU members are considering a measure to withdraw from the Arizona Students' Association, saying "ASA is no longer working as a student advocacy group for this university."

That statement was among others made in a senate petition circulated last week. An ASASU committee will meet today to discuss the issue.

"In the future, unless ASA makes a structural change, I don't see a point in (belonging to) the ASA," said Kurt Wilhelm, ASASU campus affairs vice president and author of the petition. "This year, we would have been better off without them."

ASA is a lobbying group made up of representatives from the three state universities and their branch campuses. It is a statewide organization funded by university student governments, and lobbies on behalf of students at the Arizona Legislature and U.S. Congress.

"Overall, there seems to be quite a few questions on whether ASA represents the students," ASASU Senator Jason Rupp said.

Derek Lewis, an ASA delegate and president of UofA's student government, said ASA's goals will not change if ASASU withdraws from the organization.

"Whether ASU pulls out of ASA or not, that's not going to change ASA's footing with groups like the (Arizona) Board of Regents," Lewis said. "In my opinion, I think it's best if ASU stays in, but if they feel that is what they have to do, then that is what they have to do."

Jim Malicki, an ASA representative from Northern Arizona University, said that if ASASU leaves the ASA, ASU students will have a harder time getting their voices heard.

"ASA is recognized as a very vocal group with the Board of Regents and with the Legislature," Malicki said. "Withdrawing from ASA causes a very large burden to fall upon ASU to indecently do a lot more lobbying on their own."

Attempts to contact ASA Executive Director Patrick McWhorter on Monday were unsuccessful.

The most recent episode in the long-running feud between ASASU and ASA centered on ASA's three choices for student regent made last week. Several members of ASASU's executive committee claimed ASA's choices were biased.

ASASU Activities Vice President Chad Wolett was atop a list of six candidates for student regent given by ASASU to ASA for consideration. Wolett, who has reportedly clashed with ASA in the past, was not among the final three chosen by ASA, sparking resentment from some ASASU members.

But Ross Bell, ASASU legislative liaison, said a message tacked on to a wall in ASA's central office "was the straw that broke the camel's back."

Law brings controversy

Brady Act in effect; ASU community debates benefits

BY MIKA AKIKUNI
STATE PRESS

The controversial Brady Handgun Violence Potential Act became law Monday, but according to the advisor to the ASU Gun Devil Shooting Club, it won't reduce crime.

"It (the Brady Law) is a waste of time," said David Janecek. "In our society you are not judged before you commit a crime. There are people who use fire arms in a positive way."

Janecek said that the Brady Law asks people to wait for too many days before they can buy a handgun and "protect themselves."

The Brady Handgun Violence Potential Act, named after former Presidential Press Secretary James Brady, went into effect Monday. Under the Brady Act, handgun buyers will have to wait five business days while a criminal background check is done. Brady was wounded in an assassination attempt on former President Ronald Reagan by John Hinckley, Jr. on March 30, 1981.

According to Janecek, "The Brady law could hurt people that will use firearms to save lives."

Brett Elliott, the manager of The Sportsman, a Mesa gun shop, agreed with Janecek, saying that he is also against the new law.

"I'm against the Brady law because it violates my constitutional rights as a citizen," Elliott said, adding that handgun sales went up over the weekend because "no one wants the government to settle their business for them. A lot of people, although they are

Don Weir of Don's Sport Shop, 7803 E. McDowell Road in Scottsdale, is concerned by the Brady law, put into effect beginning Monday. The Sport Shop, along with many others around the Valley, has experienced a substantial increase in the volume of gun sales during the past few weeks, Weir said.

Symington plans to file suit against feds

BY MIKA AKIKUNI
STATE PRESS

Gov. Fife Symington late Monday said in a press release that he had directed Arizona Attorney General Grant Woods to file suit against the federal government to prohibit various mandates of the Brady Handgun Violence Potential Act.

Symington said he opposes the federal government forcing the states to spend money to do background checks required by the Brady law.

"Like every state, Arizona has a limited amount of funds to dedicate toward law enforcement," Symington said. "By imposing this law upon the state, the federal government would force Arizona to dedicate millions of dollars toward background checks."

"There is no persuasive evidence that such an expense will make any meaningful impact against criminals. And there is even less persuasive evidence that the federal government holds any licit power to impose such a mandate upon the sovereign states of this country," Symington said.

Campus Safety Bill breathing new life in Senate

BY PAUL MATTHEWS
STATE PRESS

Recently negotiated amendments have breathed new life into Senate Bill 1242 — the Campus Safety Bill — which was delayed by the rules committee of the state senate last week after an attorney determined that portions of the bill were unconstitutional.

Ross Bell, the ASASU legislative liaison, said he expects the bill to be passed by the committee in today's session.

"It looks like it is going to go through," Bell said.

The bill appeared to be in jeopardy Feb. 21 when the rules committee decided against passing the bill under the advisement of Gary Sundberg, an attorney for the rules committee of the state senate.

The bill stipulates changes in the manner in which campus crimes are reported and would require stiffer penalties against people convicted of perpetrating crimes on campus. The bill would also impose fines against universities for failure to comply.

Sundberg said last week that he had problems with the constitutionality of the portion of the bill, which mandates stronger penalties for people convicted of serious crimes within specified radiuses of Arizona's three major universities.

Bell said that under the new amendments those radiuses would be restricted to the boundaries of the campuses.

"Since we changed the zones to the boundary of the campus, the justification is that if you do a violent crime on campus you are impeding the educational process. When he (Sundberg) heard that, that was enough justification."

Bell said that he worked with Allan Price, ASU associate vice president for University relations, to come up to some sort of a compromise on the bill.

"In terms of the very proscriptive language of the bill regarding penalties, regarding actual micro-management of the University, we were very opposed to those," Price said. "Those are the portions we seem to have some very significant changes in terms of what is being discussed."

Rules committee member Sen. Lela Alston said that if the constitutionality problems are taken care of there should be no problem with getting the bill passed.

"Generally the subject matter isn't discussed (in rules committee), it is normally just to rule for constitutionality and proper form. If they have worked out the constitutionality problems, I don't think there will be any problem."

TODAY

The Today section is a daily calendar of events printed as a service to the ASU community. Requests are printed according to the space available each day.

Campus clubs and organizations may submit written entries to the State Press in the basement of Matthews Center, Room 15. Requests will not be taken over the phone. Entries must contain the full name of the group, a description of the event, date, time and the full address of the location. All requests are subject to editing for content, space and clarity.

Deadline for entries is noon the day before publication.

- Alcoholics Anonymous — Daily meeting, noon, basement of the old church at the Newman Center, northwest corner of College and University.
- Fellowship of Christian Athletes — Open meeting, with Wade Reimer and Wycliff Bible Translators, 7:30 p.m., University Activity Center Room 35.
- Active Volunteer Program — Alternative Spring Break, mandatory for all California earthquake relief trip applicants, 4 p.m., Best Hall Classroom, corner of Lemon Street and Forest Avenue.
- Gun Devils — Monthly video, 5 p.m., MU Hopi Room.
- Hillel Union of Jewish Students — Lunch, 11:30 a.m.-1 p.m., 1012 S. Mill Ave.
- Women's Student Center — Open discussion group for graduate women, 5-6 p.m., Women's Student Center, MU lower level.
- Center for Asian Studies — "The New Social Realism" Chinese Film Festival presents "Ormosia Inn," the third film in the series, introduction by Jennifer Hunt, Asian Studies Student Association, 7:30 p.m., Nursing Building Room 101.

The message had a picture of a hand with an outstretched middle finger, according to Bell. It said, "Please forward this suggestion to Sen. (Patricia) Noland, with all due respect from the Arizona Students' Association. Thanks!"

Noland, R-Tucson, proposed a campus anti-crime bill which was drafted by Bell. According to John Malik, ASASU executive vice president, the bill had an amendment attached that ASASU did not agree with and ASA did, which caused some conflict between the two groups.

Bell said he saw the message when he was in ASA's offices a few weeks ago.

"I am very disturbed (about the message) because Sen. Noland has been our chief ally," Bell said.

"For that to come from ASA is demeaning to our cause as lobbyists."

McWhortor told the State Press last week that the message was not printed as a memo and was not sent to anyone. It was a joke that was tacked to the wall in the ASA office, he said.

The bill to be discussed by ASASU tonight, Senate Petition 6, requests that appropriate structural changes occur in ASA to ensure that ASU is properly represented on the state level. If not, the ASA Investigative Committee should develop an alternative to the ASA in the event changes are not made, the petition says.

Meanwhile, the ASASU Senate has requested that ASASU President Rossie Turman start procedures for withdrawal from the ASA.

Wilhelm said he would rather see the ASA make changes than having the ASASU completely withdraw from the group.

"If it is all possible to save the organization, I would like to," he said. "But in its current state it is breeding mounds of emotional bureaucracy and I would like to see if we can restructure it so it doesn't do that."

According to Jennifer Broaddus, public relations director for ASASU, if the measure passes committee today, it will go before the full senate on March 8 for a vote.

State Press Editor Jake Batsell contributed to this article.

innocent, don't want the government to meddle in their own private lives."

ASU political science professor Sheldon Simon, however, said that although tougher laws are needed in the United States to fight crime, he thinks that the Brady Act is "at least a first step in fighting crime."

"My view about the Brady Bill is that it's a band-aid that it hardly does anything to do deal with the major problem," Simon said.

Simon said that hunters and target shooters should maintain their weapons in central locations and check them out when they go hunting or target shooting.

"What I am saying is that the Brady Bill does not go far enough," Simon said. "It is a very tiny step in the direction that we should be moving, but my view is that it's not going to have any significant impact on the use of handguns in America.

"I think what Congress did was to try to initiate a procedure to establish some kind of control over the massive number of firearms that are out there in the American public."

John Weir, manager of Don's Sport Shop Inc. in Scottsdale, said that he is "for some type of background check," but that he is "more for an instantaneous type of check, instead of a five-day waiting period."

Weir said that things would have been much better if the government had gotten "their act together." He said that the government was caught by the implementation of this bill "running around like chickens with their heads cut off." The government did not provide appropriate paperwork for the states so gun shop owners could easily make the transition to working under the Brady Act, he said.

According to Weir, handgun sales went up during the weekend because "every time you tell the American public not to do something, they do the opposite." Weir said he expects handgun sales to go "back to normal" as the week progresses.

Maricopa County will order layoffs to recoup $22 million

PHOENIX (AP) — The Maricopa County Board of Supervisors on Monday ordered that hundreds of employees be laid off and thousands more take unpaid days off to help reduce a budget deficit estimated at $22 million.

With Supervisor Mary Rose Wilcox dissenting, the supervisors voted 4-1 for a package estimated to save $9.7 million during the fiscal year that ends June 30.

The package includes laying off approximately 900 of the county's 8,000 general-fund employees to save $4.8 million and requiring remaining workers to take unpaid four-day furloughs to save $2.4 million.

"We want you to know that we are painfully aware that some of these steps will create hardship for those affected," County Manager Roy Pederson said in a taped message to county employees.

County officials have blamed the budget shortfall on lower than expected property tax revenue and higher than expected health-care costs for indigents.

Sheriff files handgun lawsuit, Symington may do the same

PHOENIX (AP) — Graham County Sheriff Richard Mack filed a lawsuit Monday contending the Brady handgun law is unconstitutional and asking for an order restraining its application.

"This is an obvious and blatant violation of the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of Arizona, two documents I am sworn to uphold," said Mack, whose suit was filed in U.S. District Court in Tucson.

Gov. Fife Symington was considering filing a similar, independent suit on behalf of the state. He said Friday that the law tramples states' rights.

The federal law that took effect Monday, named for presidential press secretary James Brady who was wounded in an assassination attempt on Ronald Reagan, requires a 5-day waiting period for handgun purchases.

Mack's suit contends the federal law:

- Violates the 10th amendment that says that rights not expressly given to the federal government are left to the states,

- Is unconstitutionally vague in violation of the 5th amendment's due-process protection.

- Violates the 13th amendment's ban against being placed in involuntary servitude by requiring Mack to carry out federal duties without compensation.

Jury selection begins in IRA case involving explosives

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Amid heightened security, jury selection begins Tuesday in the federal trial of a half-dozen supporters of a united Ireland accused of acquiring bomb detonators for the Irish Republican Army.

The defendants, four of whom are Irish nationals, are charged with conspiring to ship 2,900 detonators to New York City from Tucson by Greyhound bus in three boxes marked as clothing, and of trying to buy a Stinger shoulder-fired missile and three or four .50 caliber sniper rifles for the IRA.

Prosecutors say some detonators wound up in Northern Ireland for use in bombs during 1991 and the first half of 1992.

With the trial before U.S. District Judge John Roll expected to last two months or longer, 16 jurors will be seated, four as alternates.

Unusual security measures have been ordered for the trial, which is anticipated spectators that include supporters of the defendants, presumably some from Ireland.

NATO downs 4 Serb warplanes

Alliance strikes for first time

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Bosnian Serbs put NATO's long-questioned resolve to the test on Monday and received a swift, severe answer: missiles from U.S. F-16 fighter jets downed four Serb warplanes.

It was the first time that NATO had struck militarily in its 44-year history, and came after repeated threats by the alliance to intervene to back U.N. resolutions aimed at ending the 23-month war.

NATO said the planes ignored several warnings to leave a U.N.-imposed no-fly zone over Bosnia or face attack, then were observed bombing a Muslim-controlled area. U.N. officials said the Serbs were bombing an arms plant.

Bosnian Serbs first denied involvement. But one Serb army official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, confirmed that four of their planes were shot down. Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said Serb pilots might have been making "training flights."

No one was seen bailing out from the downed jets, which each seat two.

NATO and the United Nations say they are neutral in the Bosnian conflict and will act against any side violating U.N. agreements. Most recently, the alliance forced Serbs to pull their artillery away from Sarajevo.

Bosnian government officials, who have appealed repeatedly for outside help for their outgunned troops, were exuberant.

"Better days are ahead of us," Bosnian Vice President Ejup Ganic said in Sarajevo, Bosnia's capital.

Russia, a traditional Serb ally that criticized NATO over its ultimatum to Serbs on the Sarajevo siege, reacted mildly to the clash. "If the Serbs did this, I see no justification," said Defense Minister Pavel Grachev.

Although Russia has warned that military intervention could worsen the war, Grachev said he did not think the incident would escalate the conflict.

Hours after the planes were downed,

Two American F-16 fighter jets, similar to the one in this 1979 file photo, shot down four Serb fixed-wing aircraft that violated a U.N. no-fly zone over Bosnia Monday. It is the first time that alliance warplanes have shot down planes over Bosnia.

Karadzic arrived in Moscow to consult with Russian diplomats. The Bosnian Serb leader told reporters at Moscow's airport his visit was meant to "ensure the peace process," but he declined further comment.

U.S. Adm. Jeremy M. Boorda, the NATO commander for southern Europe, said the lesson to be learned from the incident was simple: "You ought not to violate the no-fly zone." He said NATO would not hesitate to fire on any other violators.

The pilot who shot down the fourth Serb aircraft, identified only as Yogi, said of the incident, "It wasn't much of a contest." He was interviewed by U.S. journalists in a joint telephone interview from Washington.

Boorda said U.S. pilots detected six planes by radar and broadcast three warnings for them to immediately land or leave Bosnian air space or risk attack. No response was received, and the Americans then saw the planes "make a bombing maneuver" and witnessed explosions on the ground, he said.

One U.S. plane then shot down three planes with air-to-air missiles and a second U.S. plane downed a fourth, Boorda said at a briefing in Naples, Italy. The two other planes escaped by flying west over Croatia and then north and back east over Banja Luka, a Serb-controlled region in northwestern Bosnia, NATO said. Many of the Bosnian Serb aircraft are based in Banja Luka.

The four destroyed planes were all hit over the Banja Luka area, NATO officials said.

None of the Yugoslav-built Soko G-4 Super Galeb attack aircraft returned fire at the U.S. jets, Boorda said. No one was seen bailing out of the four, two-seat planes hit by missiles in the five-minute engagement, NATO said.

U.N. officials said the Galebbs attacked a munitions factory in Novi Travnik, a town 45 miles northwest of Sarajevo that is held by government forces. Boorda said NATO received unconfirmed reports that bombs hit a storage facility and a hospital, but could not say that happened during the attack on the arms factory.

Russia dismisses diplomat in tit-for-tat retaliation

MOSCOW (AP) — Russia expelled a senior U.S. diplomat Monday to retaliate for Washington's expulsion of a Russian intelligence officer — a tit-for-tat action reminiscent of the Cold War.

Among his own spies, President Boris Yeltsin did some housecleaning, firing the head of Russia's counterintelligence agency which provides the Kremlin with reports on the political situation inside the country.

The abrupt removal of Nikolai Golushko was another sign of continued disarray in Yeltsin's camp, as well of the ongoing turmoil in Russia's internal intelligence operations. But Russia reacted swiftly on the foreign front, ordering U.S. Embassy counselor James L. Morris to leave the country within seven days. The action was a reminder that the Cold War legacy of mistrust still clouds efforts to forge a new U.S.-Russian partnership.

Russian diplomat Nikolai Golushko, head of Russia's counterintelligence agency, was fired Monday in a series of dismissals possibly related to the U.S. CIA spy case.

Russia's expulsion of a U.S. diplomat had been expected after Alexander Lysenko, chief of Russia's intelligence station in Washington, was ordered Friday to leave the United States within seven days.

U.S. officials said Lysenko "was in a position to be responsible" for CIA officer Aldrich H. Ames and his wife, Rosario, who were charged last week with spying for Moscow since 1985.

The Russian Foreign Ministry, in turn, said Morris was a CIA officer and was expelled in retaliation for "the unjust actions of the American side."

The reciprocal expulsions were the first between Moscow and Washington since the Soviet bugging of the U.S. Embassy in the mid-1980s. But they were not expected to spoil relations between the two countries.

Russia has said the Clinton administration is making too much out of the Ames affair and objected to the expulsion of Lysenko, the first Russian to be officially introduced in Washington as an intelligence officer.

"Even if we assume Ames really worked for us, what has this to do with Lysenko, who arrived in the United States last summer?" said Yuri Kobaladze, spokesman for the Foreign Intelligence Service.

In Washington, White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers said the United States would not retaliate for the expulsion of Morris. "We do not expect to take any more diplomatic action," she said.

Russia and U.S. cooperate in space

STAR CITY, Russia (AP) — Two American astronauts who have begun their yearlong training as cosmonauts will follow Russian training techniques and wear Russian space suits, bearing both nations' flags.

The dark days of the space race seem light years away, even as Russia and the United States are locked in an espionage tit-for-tat over spies.

Astronauts Norman Thagard, 50, and Bonnie Dunbar, 44, moved into their Star City apartments and started their Russian language courses Monday.

"We plan to train in the Russian program, in the Russian way," said Thagard, who will blast into space on March 1, 1995, aboard a Russian rocket and spend three months on the space station Mir with a Russian crew.

Dunbar, who is training as Thagard's backup on the Mir mission, is scheduled to fly aboard a U.S. shuttle that will bring a new Russian crew to the space station and take Thagard back to Earth in June 1995.

The first phase of the U.S.-Russian space partnership began in early February, when cosmonaut Sergei Krikalev flew aboard the U.S. space shuttle Discovery. Dunbar's husband, Ronald Sega, was among his crewmates.

The United States plans 10 shuttle flights to the Mir, which will be host to a number of astronauts.

Thagard's 90-day mission, although short by Russian standards, will be the longest period ever spent in space by an American. The current U.S. record is 84 days, set by Skylab 4 astronauts in 1973-74.

STATE PRESS Editorial

Civil war

Animosity is running rampant between the two organizations responsible for representing ASU's students.

An Associated Students of ASU committee will meet today to discuss the possible withdrawal of ASASU from the Arizona Students Association, which represents students from all three state universities.

Tension between the organizations has been mounting for some time, but the last straw for ASASU apparently occurred last week. Several ASASU executive committee members complained that ASA's three recommendations for student regent were the exact opposite of suggestions made by an ASASU committee.

Considering the dismal state of the two bodies' current relationship, a separation could actually be beneficial for ASU's students.

Sadly, the representative voice of the ASU student body has become splintered. This became painfully apparent in mid-February, when the two organizations bickered adamantly over amendments to an ASASU-sponsored campus safety bill currently being considered by the state Legislature.

ASA, which was created to lobby on behalf of students at the U.S. Congress and state Legislature, has apparently felt threatened since ASASU hired a legislative liaison. ASASU has basically been acting as an independent entity in the Legislature, pursuing issues of particular pertinence to ASU students.

The new presence in the Legislature has been a successful representative voice for ASU, but it's been tough for ASA to swallow — and perhaps justifiably so. While ASASU has vigorously addressed ASU-specific topics, it also has ignored utilizing the resources of an experienced lobbying group.

What we have now is a battle over territory. ASASU has jumped head first into a domain traditionally inhabited by ASA, and ASA hasn't exactly been receptive. Instead of unifying to rally behind legislation that would benefit students, the two groups have lapsed into bickering.

A combined, organized effort between both sides would be the most effective and powerful method in which to serve students. But, under the current circumstances, that doesn't appear to be feasible.

Given the bad blood between ASASU and ASA, Arizona students could very well best be served by dividing the two organizations.

It's just a shame they can't put personal differences aside to iron out their internal squabbles.

Media coverage of Olympic Games ignores sportsmanship for scandal

Now that the Olympic flame has been doused, I have one thing to say to the media: I sure hope you're proud of yourselves.

You took an image, a memory that means so much to the ones who participated in the games and summed it up in one horrible episode of Hard Copy.

No matter who hosted the CBS presentation (let's face it, Greg Gumbel?), no matter what smut followed Tonya Harding, the ones that got hurt were the others who earned their ways to Lillehammer — the Olympic athletes. They are the ones who deserve all the credit; they are the ones who should be all over the front pages, not in some cubicle below the full-color bust of Nancy and Tonya skating and/or ignoring each other.

They are the heroes and the media gets no medal by reflecting that all the public cared about was whether Harding got what was coming from Kerrigan or vice versa.

Ever since I witnessed the Olympic flame being carried through to Lake Placid in 1980, I've felt a part of these games. I even thought with my young mind that perhaps I had something to do with the ice hockey team winning gold. As I said, I was young. It did bring me to watch these games and feel like I was there, actually there with the defeats and victories.

I watched these games in Lillehammer. I cried with the Bosnians during the opening ceremony, knowing that they were representing a country at war and if they tried to return, they would probably be stuck in refugee camps. I cheered with the "golden boy," Tommy Moe, on the ski slopes. I gasped as Brian Boitano, Victor Petrenko, and Kurt Browning, all world champions in skating, fell on their technical programs, thus not putting themselves near medal possibilities. I cheered with Johan Olav Koss when he won his three speed skating golds.

Each country and each victory and each story kept me glued to the newspapers and TV to read and see them play. It became a nightly ritual.

The games have been full of so many emotions, all of which had nothing to do with Harding or Kerrigan. Yet, I still saw their faces all over the TV or the newspaper.

A. MARJORY KAMINSKI
Columnist

It's a shame that the Olympic Games, a proud tradition that I can feel from my 12-inch television thousands of miles away from Lillehammer, got more press coverage than ever due to the Harding-Kerrigan case. I almost felt ashamed to watch it, perhaps thinking I only wanted to see the competition between the two representing the USA.

If that's the Olympics' way of getting better press, then perhaps I misjudged them, but I don't think that's true, or I hope it's not true.

In the beginning of the opening ceremonies, Greg Gumbel announced what "the world had been waiting for," Harding would be skating for the USA and that now we could put it all behind and focus on the games.

I was happy to see this, then became extremely disappointed in CBS as it followed Harding to each and every airport terminal she was in before she landed in Norway. I lost any faith in Connie Chung that I ever had.

I felt for Harding a little. She couldn't handle all the press and wrecked her program. It happens. To tell you the truth, I was rooting for the French skater, Surya Bonaly. She got fourth place.

I've always wondered what the athletes who make it there think about the games. Do they respect the victors and the losers? Or are they in for it for themselves and could care less about their country? You never know: unless pushed by the media, they certainly won't say that.

The way the medal winners stand on the podium and sing and let their eyes tear up with the national anthem, I think not.

They're over now and we won't see the winter flame until Nagano, Japan, in 1998. Did you all miss it? The heroes of the games will slowly diminish from the public eye. Tonya Harding's 15-plus days of intense fame will be gone. She may get a clip in the sports page, but I think her career is about over. The media will move on to the next scandal.

Just give it a week and the athletes will be going back to their own lives and be publicly forgotten.

But I will remember them. I won't forget anyone that I saw. They, like the ones I first really cheered for in Lake Placid, will remain in my heart forever, no matter what little press coverage they received. I wish you all will do the same.

Umoja Hall not separatist program as reported in Press

I am writing this letter to respond to the article written by Mika Akikuni that appeared in the State Press on Feb. 14, 1994, entitled "Integration or segregation? Opinions differ on Umoja Hall."

First of all, I feel that this article was biased and did not offer the fairness that one should to both issues. I am also disappointed in how the campus media has chosen to "pick on" two floors of a dorm in which the majority of the students living there are of African descent.

Umoja is not the only ethnically based campus community. I have seen no — not that I am asking for them — articles announcing that the residents of the Native American hall are trying to segregate themselves. Umoja has paved the way for all of the ethnically based campus communities and should not be singled out only because the majority of the residents are black. In comparison, the majority of the residents living in the Native American hall are Native Americans. If we label Umoja Hall as being segregationist, we must also, in all fairness, label all campus communities, as well as fraternity and sorority housing, the same.

Why must the members of fraternities and sororities (and I know that not all of the members live in the houses, but for those that do) live together? Is it because they have similar interests and are members of the same group? Or is it because they want to isolate themselves from the rest of the campus? I choose to believe the former. This is true with Umoja Hall. We are not separating ourselves from everyone, as it is impossible to do on this campus; however, what we are doing is uniting, supporting, and appreciating African-American culture and people.

Umoja Hall is by no means a restricted area; nor do we state that residents must be black to live here. The hall is open to anyone who is interested in learning about African American culture. Furthermore, it is saddening to see that we, being black and one Hispanic last semester (she is now an RA), are the only ones interested in learning about African American culture.

Before I conclude this letter, I would like to make a few final points. First, yes, the majority of active Umoja Hall residents are "overwhelmingly black," as the article stated; however, we do have non-black residents living here. They choose, for whatever reason, not to participate. We have tried to make everyone who lives in this hall comfortable and feel a part of it. In referring to the point made in the article that "we have to have a separate hall to unite;" no, we do not "have to have a separate hall to unite" but neither do the Native Americans, Freshmen for FYE, or the sororities in PV Main. This hall is a meeting place where people interested in African-American culture can learn and support. Furthermore, I would like to extend an invitation for anyone who is interested in Umoja Hall to stop by or put in an application at Residential Life to live here. You can't state how something is if you have never experienced it.

In closing, Umoja Hall is a wonderful asset to ASU and to President Lattie Coor's idea for cultural diversity. It promotes this idea by merely existing. However, Umoja Hall doesn't just exist. So let's not scorn it, but instead let's appreciate and applaud it.

STATE PRESS Letters to the editor

Disabled students forced into segregated spaces

I am a disabled student, and because of my disability it is very difficult for me to walk long distances.

I have received four parking tickets since I started coming to ASU last summer. All of these tickets were given to me for parking in the disabled parking area. How is that possible, you may ask? Let me tell you what it's like living in a segregated society.

I'm sure whoever came up with the allocations for disabled parking slots had the best of intentions, but they have created a nightmare for the disabled.

The disabled person needs access to classrooms, facilities, and equipment in order to be on an even par with other students. What we have at ASU is a system to keep the disabled in tightly controlled areas in a limited number of locations.

Don't you dare park on the lines because the parking lot Gestapo will getcha!

I have come to ASU an hour or more early for my class to find myself circling the parking lots looking for an open disabled slot.

As time has started running out, in desperation, I have had to squeeze in wherever I could find space in the disability zone, trying to get close enough to class that I won't be worn out or in too much pain to pay attention and take notes in class.

And what do I get for not straying out of the disability zone? A big fat ticket.

One time I got a ticket for parking in an empty disability zone because I don't have a wheelchair. Not having to use a wheelchair yet doesn't mean I'm not disabled. When I came back several hours later to the zone, my car was still sitting all alone in the hot sun with a nice envelope and a form demanding money attached to my windshield. The parking lot Gestapo had struck again!

I know segregation is easier to administer than common sense. But it shouldn't be a crime to park as close to your class as possible. I usually can get a slot in a disability zone if I park in a lot several miles away from my class room, because no one wants to hike for an hour to get to class.

Why bother having disability zones if they are not close to anything? I'm not asking for carte blanche, just a little common sense and flexibility.

Why should a disabled person have to drive around in circles looking for a spot in the disability zone when there are open slots in the same parking lot? They should be able to park in an open space in the same lot if the zone is full. Or in any slot in a disability zone when it is obviously empty or has many open slots.

It doesn't make sense to segregate wheelchair-disabled people from the non-wheelchair walking wounded.

Disability access has become parking lot roulette caused by parking lot segregation and parking ticket excess. I'm sure the planners didn't intend to trap the disabled in a no-win situation.

Truth of AIDS prevention drowned out by activists

There are very few things that annoy me as much as AIDS activists and their bandwagon of sympathy. I acknowledge that AIDS is an epidemic, and that it is a tragedy that it is having such a devastating effect upon the population of this nation. But I also understand that it is, in most part, preventable.

Saying this is almost like screaming "No Nukes!" at the Republican National Convention, or circulating anti-drug propaganda at a Grateful Dead show. My argument is that the equity between AIDS research coverage and that of cancer or diabetes is drastically askew. The homosexual population campaigning for increased public awareness and increased governmental spending on AIDS research is simply a desire to have their cake and eat it, too.

AIDS is serious; I do not doubt that. I agree that what causes contraction of the HIV virus should be taught, but what I do not agree with is the proliferation of coverage, and the seeming mis-prioritization of AIDS over diseases which take proportionally more lives, are genetic, or simply pick victims at random. If I know an activity will increase my chance of cutting short my young life, I will avoid it!

I realize that homosexual activity is not the only source currently spreading the virus. Heroin users and hemophiliacs are among those at high risk, as are heterosexuals who engage in contact with infected patients, not to mention anyone who is involved in the transfer of blood, such as RyGn White back in the early 1980's. HIV is also contractible in foxholes when HIV positive soldiers are wounded and their blood is mingled with that of their comrades. The bottom line here is that it is indeed true that blood is the vehicle of the virus, not homosexual activity alone, but by and large this sort of sexual activity is the most available to you and me, (if we so choose), and it should be avoided, not pitied and continued.

In this same vein, I object to any University-sponsored academic offering which touts the engaging in these sorts of activities. The Transsexuals in Society course at NAU this semester is the first, and if Lattie Coor believes in diversity here in Tempe, I sure hope he can limit himself to racial diversity. Didn't Coffee Plantation receive persecution when allegedly "contributing to" a lifestyle-related choice group? Don't public schools receive condemnation when allowing students to engage in chosen public prayers? How, then, can an academic course involving homosexuality and transsexuality offered at a public university not be linked to the beliefs of the institution?

Homosexuality is a lifestyle, and has never been and will never be, genetic. I got brown hair from my parents and potential heart defects from my grandparents, but the simple fact that I have the genitals of a man indicate one thing—I am a man, not a mix.

Would John Lee mind offering tuition rebates?

I am a staff employee at Arizona State University, and like many of the faculty and staff here, I am suffering from economic hardship due to the extremely low pay here at the University. Like many here, I feel that if I work hard at my job for the state, then they should pay me a fair and equitable wage. I've done my part, but the state seems to ignore the desperate plight that they have put us in. We are the working poor and we deserve better.

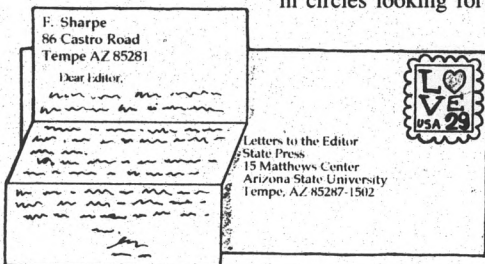

The reason I am writing is in response to John Lee's (of the JLBC) assertion that University employees don't deserve to be paid as much or brought up to the same level as other state employees because we get x amount of dollars in tuition waivers.

Well, I would like to inform you that many if not most of the people have never used this option. They work all day and take care of their children at night. Sadly, with many people there just isn't time. So using John Lee's logic of counting that tuition money (I believe he says $2,600 a year) as part of our income and is the reason for not bringing us up to pay equity with other state employees, my question is this: For the people who have never used this tuition waiver, and since John Lee considers it to be part of our salary, I propose that the state pay all University employees for the tuition money never used and for all the years that they have been paid less on the basis of this assertion.

If the answer he gives is that we had the opportunity, why should we be penalized for not having the circumstances to take advantage of that opportunity? I appreciate your thoughts on this matter and would definitely like a written response to this question and would implore you to bring up this matter during the budgetary process. I hope that as a representative of the people, you represent all the people, even the little ones.

The staff of Residential Life is in the process of circulating a petition to forward our concerns to our state legislators.

Student reactions mixed on rent hikes

Residence hall rate increases to force some into apartments

BY SHAWN BOYD
STATE PRESS

A vote by the Arizona Board of Regents Friday to raise residence hall rates has some students unhappy with the change, but others said their parents could absorb the increase.

David Marx, an undecided sophomore, said he will be moving out of McClintock Hall, the Honors College dorm, at the end of the semester.

Living off campus by that time will be cheaper, he said.

"We'll probably pay less to live off campus," Marx said.

"At this point, it (the increase) is pretty significant. It would hit pretty heavily, because it's basically $200 I don't have."

Marx and the other residents at McClintock are facing a $206 increase per year, one of the steepest increases among ASU halls.

The increase is from $2,044 to $2,250.

The average rate increase among the residence halls is 2.26 percent, but some halls, such as the Palo Verde wings and Sonora Hall, face small to no increases.

James Rund, dean of Residential Life and Student Development, said the high increases in dorms such as McClintock are an attempt to level out rate differences.

"These have been critically low rates," Rund said during the board meeting Friday.

Kim Helm, a freshman accounting major living at McClintock, said the increase will not cut into her spending money.

"It will not impact me very hard," Helm said. "My parents have been saving for me a long time. But I don't like the idea."

Helm said not all of the people living in McClintock are so lucky.

"I know that some people don't have the income to provide for the increase," she said.

Marx also said others at McClintock will have difficulty.

"There are a lot of people staying, and I'm not too sure it's pleasing for them," he said.

Jessica Lash, an undecided freshman, lives at Ocotillo Hall, where the largest increase will take place.

"It doesn't seem like that much of an increase," she said. She said the hike will be no problem to pay.

Rates at the hall will increase from ($2,209 to $2,250) during the 1994-95 school year, a difference of ($241). That is the largest increase at ASU.

Wendell Brierly, business manager for Residential Life at ASU, said the increase is an attempt to smooth out rates.

"With more predictable increases we're trying to stabilize the students' pocketbooks, eliminate the big hit and allow them to budget a little better," Brierly said.

In past years, residence hall rate increases have crested and bottomed out.

In 1985-86, rates rose 8.35 percent, while in 1986-87 they increased 1.67 percent.

A big increase occurred in 1987-88, when rates rose 11.5 percent.

The other increases include:

- A $74 addition at Hayden, Best and Saguro Halls, an increase from $1,926 to $2,000.

- A rate increase of $16 at Palo Verde, Manzanita and Mariposa Halls, a change from $2,484 to $2,500.

- The most expensive change at Cholla is $166 for a one bedroom room. The increase is from $3,084 to $3,250.

- The highest increase at Sonora is $23 for a one bedroom dorm. The change is from $3,227 to $3,250.

"It will not impact me very hard. My parents have been saving for me for a long time. But I don't like the idea."

POLICE REPORT

ASU police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A female ASU student reported that someone stole a telephone and answering machine from her unlocked room in Palo Verde West. The damage was estimated at $120.
- A female ASU student reported that someone stole $140 cash from Manzanita Hall.
- A man and woman both unaffiliated with ASU were arrested and released on their own recognizance for being in possession of marijuana, use of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia in Area 3.
- A male ASU student reported that someone criminally damaged two vehicle tires in Area 35 near Ocotillo hall.
- A man unaffiliated with ASU was arrested and charged with driving under the influence of alcohol at Area 3, on the west side of campus.
- A female ASU student was arrested, cited and released for being a minor in possession of alcohol.
- A male ASU student reported that someone stole his $250 car stereo from his vehicle while it was parked in the University Club parking lot.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A 66-year-old woman was sexually assaulted in her home

Sunday by a man who claimed to be looking for his cat.

The woman came to her back door when she saw the man in her backyard. He claimed to be looking for his cat and then forced his way into her house and raped her. He left through the back door taking with him a gallon jug of water and a telephone. He is described as a white male, 5-foot-9 or 5-foot-10, 150-160 pounds, brown hair, dark eyes and he was wearing a white T-shirt with a multi-colored design on the front. He was missing two front teeth.

• A man sexually assaulted a woman Saturday at her apartment in the 1400 block of East Broadway Road.

The woman noticed her front door was slightly ajar. When she went to close it, the man tried to force his way into the apartment. As the woman tried to fight him off he grabbed her genital area through her clothing. The woman's husband chased the man into the complex and while he was gone, the man returned to the apartment but was unable to get inside. Police conducted a search but were unable to locate the man.

He is described as black, 20-25 years old, 5-foot-10, 185 pounds, short black hair, round face, and he was wearing a black and white diamond patterned shirt and Levi's.

Hoping to boost their chances in the upcoming Tempe mayoral race, two out of the three candidates are using their connections with ASU faculty and fraternity members to expand their support bases.

Barbara Sherman is expecting some of her support to come from former ASU faculty members that she worked with, while Tempe Vice Mayor Neil Giuliano is expecting to draw votes from the Sigma Nu fraternity.

Mayoral candidate Don Cassano is not dismayed that both Sherman and Giuliano are using their connections with ASU to boost support. However, he said if the other two candidates obtain lists of possible voters through the University, he wants to be able to do the same.

"How you go about contacting them, whether it's public information that is being used or a special listing from the University, is important. If they are using a special listing, then it's inappropriate," said Cassano.

Cassano said he does not use his job as a sales representative at Waste Management in Phoenix for a forum to boost his campaign.

Sigma Nu has pledged its support for current University Relations Vice President Neil Giuliano by posting one of his campaign signs on their building facing southwest. The fraternity expects to have all of its 94 members vote in the March 22 election.

"We've always been involved with local politics and especially with Neil Giuliano," said Sigma Nu president Mike Pallad. Pallad said Giuliano frequently visits the fraternity house, and on one particular occasion distributed voter registration packets and his own campaign information.

"I also have support from other students that are involved in the Young Democrats and Republican organizations, so my campaign crosses partisanship lines," Giuliano said.

Pallad believes that because Giuliano is a former fraternity member, he will support their interests and also symbolize the "positive things that members do."

Sherman said that everyone uses contacts and that she herself is expecting to obtain a large number of ASU faculty to vote for her because of her previous teaching position at the University.

Sherman has taught Ethics in Government off and on for ASU Main and ASU Downtown, but she has temporarily quit teaching and has devoted her time to her campaign.

"We don't have it counted as to how many faculty votes we have, but we do have significant number," she said.

Although Tempe mayoral candidate Barbara Sherman is assuming that Giuliano is not campaigning at ASU on "company time," she warned that any move to campaign while on the job would be unethical.

"With any business you should be doing the work for your employer and not your personal activities on the job," Sherman said.

Samaritan layoffs offset by growth in non-traditional jobs, official says

BY MAXWELL HIGGINS
STATE PRESS

With the layoff of more than 150 Samaritan Health Systems administrators in the past three months, the effects of national health care reform are already manifesting themselves.

But even as management positions are being eliminated, job opportunities for other, less traditional positions are increasing.

"Just like any business, Samaritan will continue to streamline business expenses primarily through leaner management," said Sue Chasin, director of public affairs for Samaritan Health Systems. "The purchasers of health care want value. Value is a combination of high quality and low, predictable cost. What the restructuring has done is allow Samaritan to offer affordable health care to employers."

Chasin said there are no more layoffs planned, but she said the face of health care is changing as the nation approaches reform.

"There is a shift in care from the inpatient to out-patient setting," Chasin said. "We retrain staff to deal with patients in the out-patient setting. In management and administrative areas, computers and technology make things more efficient."

Others in health care also identify a trend in which hospitals will be used mainly for acute care situations, such as emergencies and severe injuries, and the bulk of medical patients will be treated at clinics, at doctors' offices, or at their homes. Job opportunities will reflect this change, as well as other trends.

Health care providers are cutting costs further by hiring medical assistants to do some of the work of nurses. At ASU Student Health, medical assistants take over basic nursing tasks such as checking vital signs, taking blood, testing blood and urine, and operating electrocardiogram machines.

No other advanced patient care can be given by medical assistants.

"Training (for medical assistants) is a matter of months, not years," said Linda McNeil, chief of nursing at Student Health. "In doctor's offices and clinics there will probably be a trend to hire more medical assistants."

JACKPOT, Nev. (AP) — Dr. Hook, who hoped to see his picture on the cover of the Rolling Stone, will have to settle for a police mugshot instead.

The entertainer, whose real name is Ray Sawyer, was arrested Saturday and charged with possession of marijuana. Police said they found the pot in Sawyer's Cactus Pete hotel room after receiving complaints that his band openly used drugs.

Sawyer was released on $2,500 bail, and finished his weekend performances at Cactus Pete.

The 57-year-old singer is known for such hits as "The Cover of the Rolling Stone," "When You're in Love with a Beautiful Woman," and "Sylvia's Mother."

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Andre Previn's homecoming to conduct his old orchestra was cut short by a fainting spell.

Previn performed Friday and Saturday with the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, but passed out at a party Saturday night and had to cancel Sunday's performance.

The 64-year-old composer and conductor was taken to a hospital for tests, which turned up nothing, and flown home to Bedford Hills, N.Y.

"I think he just blacked out for a bit, and that gives you a scare," said Previn's agent, Jonathan Brill.

Previn was music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony from 1975 until 1984. He left to become conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, a position he held for five years. Recently, he has been a guest conductor around the world.

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Joan Ganz Cooney, the woman who helped build "Sesame Street," predicts sunny days ahead for children's programming.

And that will sweep the clouds away for youngsters who have been deprived of quality television for too long, she said.

"Children have been shortchanged. They deserve a lot of different constructive programs," said Cooney, who co-founded the Children's Television Workshop in 1968.

Cooney was honored Saturday at the Nebraska Educational Television studios for her work. She also has been involved with "The Electric Company," "3-2-1 Contact" and "Square One TV."

"Sesame Street," launched in 1969, was an immediate success, filled with lovable monsters and catchy songs about the alphabet.

"Sesame Street" has become one nation's family," Cooney said. "Every child in America can tune in and say, 'This show includes me.'"

NEW YORK (AP) — Vanessa Williams, the once-defrocked Miss America, will make her Broadway debut this summer, weaving her musical web in the Tony Award-winning "Kiss of the Spider Woman."

Williams will replace Chita Rivera, who has been with the show since it opened in 1992 in Toronto.

Producer Garth Drabinsky announced the change Monday.

Williams was voted Miss America in 1984, but was stripped of her crown because she appeared nude in Penthouse magazine. Since then, she's enjoyed a successful recording career that has included such hits as "Dreamin'" and "Save the Best for Last."

She starts June 27 in "Spider Woman," which won the Tony Award for best musical of 1993.

Baseball falls in poll

The ASU baseball team fell three spots to No. 12 in this week's Baseball America Top 25 college baseball rankings.

The Sun Devils fell after losing two out of three at Stanford this weekend. The Cardinal moved up from 12th to 10th following their victories over ASU. No. 7 USC received the Six-Pac's only other ranking, moving up from No. 10 last week.

This week's rankings also introduced a new No. 1 team. Florida State, which swept ASU earlier this season, replaced Georgia Tech in the top spot. The Yellow Jackets fell to No. 3.

Track secures NCAA spot

The ASU women's track team succeeded in securing a spot for the 4 by 400-meter relay team last Saturday at the Mountain Pacific Sports Federation Championship in Reno, Nev.

The relay team, consisting of Jacque Gayle, Tayo and Lade Akinremi and Shanequa Campbell, clocked in at 3 minutes, 37.62 seconds, an impressive twelve seconds faster than the automatic qualifying time.

In the 400 dash, three athletes achieved qualifying scores. Jacque Gayle bettered her previous provisional score with a 54.25 time. Tayo Akinremi qualified provisionally at 54.62. Shanequa Campbell sprinted the ASU season's best at 53.92.

Kim Toney finally achieved her provisional score in the 800, stopping the watch at 2:08.65.

Chuck brings home 2 ESPYs

Charles Barkley, Barry Bonds and Mario Lemieux each won two ESPYs Monday night at ESPN's second annual American Sports Awards show.

Barkley, the Phoenix Suns' star forward, won awards for NBA performer of the year and outstanding performance by an athlete.

Bonds, San Francisco's outfielder and the NL's MVP, won ESPYs for baseball and male athlete of the year, while Lemieux of the Pittsburgh Penguins won for NHL and comeback athlete of the year.

Also, the Toronto Blue Jays were honored as outstanding team of the year, while the Blue Jays' Joe Carter won an ESPY for outstanding performance under pressure.

Wrestling takes 3rd at Pac-10s

Coach disappointed with ASU's showing

BY DAWN WAGNER
STATE PRESS

After taking first place at the Pac-10 Championships eight out of the past nine years, the ASU wrestling team captured only a third-place finish in this year's tournament.

The 20th-ranked Sun Devils, who scored a team total of 93.50 points, fell to 12th-ranked Cal State-Bakersfield, who scored 98.25 points and 9th-ranked Oregon State, who took first place with 128.75 points.

Wrestling coach Lee Roy Smith said that this third-place showing was a disappointment.

"Sure, it was a disappointment," Smith said. "That's not where we want to be in the conference. Our intentions are to be a program that will qualify eight to 10 wrestlers (for the Nationals) every year and to win the conference every year.

"But the five guys that did qualify are capable of placing in the Nationals."

Individually, two of the 10 ASU wrestlers who competed in championships captured Pac-10 titles.

Danny Felix, a freshman, who finished the regular season with a 19-6 record, defeated Oregon's Kevin Roberts to take the 118-pound weight class title.

Sophomore Markus Mollica captured his second Pac-10 title at the 158-pound spot when he defeated Dan Alar of Oregon State. Mollica, who is the defending national champion at 158 pounds, finished the season with a record of 16-4. Mollica defeated Alar 9-7 in sudden death.

In Pac-10 Championship competition, the top three finishers in each weight class advance on to the National Championships, which take place March 17-19 in Chapel Hill, N.C.

Along with Felix and Mollica, three other Sun Devils will be making the trip to Nationals. Steve St. John, Jeff Theiler and Pat Lynch all qualified in their respective matches.

St. John, who is ranked fifth in the nation at 134 pounds, had a season with only two losses entering Sunday's final. St. John lost to Oregon State's Bobak Mohammadi, 4-3.

Jeff Theiler lost the first-place match in the 150-pound weight class to Cal Poly's Jake Coeir, 6-3. Theiler is currently ranked fifth, and finished with a record of 22-5.

Pat Lynch, who was sidelined by injuries most of the season, placed second in the 177-pound weight class, when he suffered a 15-8 loss to Oregon State's Les Cutches. Lynch, despite being out for a portion of the regular season, is ranked 10th in the nation and sports a 12-6 record.

According to Smith, the five qualifiers are now getting ready for the Nationals, focusing on the seeding in the tournament.

"We'll focus on the seeds," Smith said. "All five of our wrestlers will be seeded in the top eight. The majority of our focus will be on peaking each individual and having our opponents well scouted."

HIGH FLYING HYSONG

Sun Devil pole vaulter breaking records by leaps and bounds

BY EVELYN SHEINKOPF
STATE PRESS

To ASU pole vaulter Nick Hysong, track is fun for the whole family.

Hysong, a 22-year-old senior, is the son of athletic parents, both of whom coach high school track. He also competed on track teams with his older sister Lesa, 24, and competes currently with younger sister Adra, 19, a sophomore on the ASU track team.

Although track has been a family affair, the Arizona native claims he never felt the pressure to become an athlete.

"My dad never forced me to do it," said Hysong. "I'd always tell him when I was little, and I wasn't serious about it, that I was going to quit. I was a competitive swimmer."

With his father Cranston as coach, Hysong jumped on one of the age-group track teams. It was there that the sport developed into a passion for him.

"He'd always laugh at me when I told him I was going to quit pole vaulting when I was younger, because he knew I wouldn't be able to. Because once you start, it's kind of addictive. It's fun. It's kind of the thrill of it, it's the rush. It's different and scary."

Hysong has set an ASU record for the pole vault with an 18-7 1/2 jump at the annual Double Dual Indoor Competition against intrastate competition UofA and NAU in February.

Comfortable with his accomplishments in indoor competition, Hysong's personal goals are firmly set at higher jumps.

Craig Macnaughton/State Press

Senior pole vaulter Nick Hysong already has an ASU record under his belt and hopes to add more records before the season is over.

Suns mania quickly fading around Valley

You don't hear many people discussing the Phoenix Suns anymore. Why is that? Has the novelty of Charles Barkley and Co. worn off? Did everyone get sick of hearing about the men in purple-and-orange 24-7? Is the magic gone?

This year's edition of the Suns isn't much worse than last season's, but nobody seems to care. Last year, everybody in the state was glued to the television for even the most meaningless games "Suns against Sacramento tonight? Yesss!" and the next day, everyone would talk about the previous night's contest.

This year, though, it's very different. The feeling just isn't there, not even for the big games.

Case in point: Sunday afternoon's Phoenix/New York tilt. This game had every reason to be huge — bad blood from last year's battle royale, a "what if?" preview of the 1994 NBA Finals, two Dream Teamers in Barkley and Patrick Ewing — the works.

And you know something? Nobody cared, at least not the 19,023 fans in attendance, supposedly "the best fans in the NBA," according to America West Arena announcer Jeff Munn. The fans never showed any enthusiasm, never showed any passion (save for the passel of Knicks-backers in front of me) and generally looked dead.

As a reporter, I found the crowd's actions interesting. As a fellow who has lived in Phoenix for just short of 20 years, I found the crowd's actions embarrassing and disgraceful.

There's no doubt about it — Suns fans have now become self-satisfied, smug and spoiled. And all this comes with no championship banners hanging from the rafters.

When Barkley and Charles Oakley got tossed from the game late in the second period, did the fans realize the gravity of the situation and exhort the team to do its best without its go-to guy? Nope, everybody got petulant that the man they came to see was thrown out for slapping Oakley's mug.

And that's what wrong with the fans in the NBA, not just in Phoenix. Your typical ticket-buyer today wants to be entertained by players who are more hype than hoop. The NBA is selling out the game to promote its stable of superstars. I want to see good basketball, which is the only entertainment I need. If I wanted a show, I would've gotten up a 6 a.m. and stood in line for Pink Floyd tickets.

How else can you explain Shaquille O'Neal? Here's a man who was hailed as one of the very best players the NBA had to offer when, personal statistics aside, he hadn't done anything remotely impressive in a team-oriented manner.

But back to the Suns. They looked very impressive against the Knicks. Their defense was suffocating, their offense kept mistakes to a minimum and when they lost Barkley, they didn't panic. However, whether they will be impressive against Seattle, San Antonio or Houston in the playoffs remains to be seen.

The big question is: Can Phoenix win it all this year? Of course. They have the talent, the experience and a superstar who shines under pressure.

Will they win it all? Probably not. This year, the magic has blessed the SuperSonics, Spurs and Rockets. Ask this reporter, and he'll tell you Phoenix had its chance.

Hysong

"Competition has gone well this season," said Hysong. "I've done what I wanted to do with indoors. I didn't want to have a meet under 18 feet and I've done that so far. 18-7 is still low for what I should be doing. But I've got one more meet to do it in. And that's the place to do it, too."

Although a mark that by far bests the old ASU indoor and outdoor records of 17-3 1/2 and 17-4 3/4, respectively, Hysong models his jumps after world record holder Sergei Bubka. He seeks to break the college record at the NCAA Championship Indoor Meet on March 11 and 12.

"Indoors, my goal is to beat the NCAA record of 19-1 with a 19-1 1/2 jump," he said. "I think I can get it at Nationals. I just have to keep my head on straight."

As he nears the end of his college career, Hysong hopes to stay in competition as long as possible, perhaps with an appearance at the 1996 Olympics.

Engaged to Charlie Pyle, also a marketing major at ASU, Hysong sees his future in Arizona for the next few years. He is expecting offers to compete for track clubs after graduation and hopes to stay in competition for as long as possible.

Along with competing in the pole vault, the busy Hysong finds time to coach younger track athletes.

"I enjoy coaching now," said Hysong. "I help with pole vault camps, I was just at one this weekend. I coach at summer camps too. I love going and helping kids."

Seattle's Johnson blasts, challenges His Airness

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Michael Jordan says he's feeling at home in the Chicago White Sox clubhouse, even though there is undoubtedly some unspoken resentment for the clamor surrounding his intrusion into the sport.

JORDAN

During a sliding drill on a mat Monday, Jordan took the challenge of several of his teammates and upended coach Terry Bevington, simulating how a player breaks up a double play.

There were "high fives" and laughter all around for Jordan, who routinely takes a ribbing from shortstop Ozzie Guillen and second baseman Joey Cora. Both have supported his attempt to switch sports.

"They are good people," Jordan said of his new teammates. "I've gotten to know a lot of them personally pretty good, they're a great bunch of guys and I can see how they've done well the last couple of years."

Nearly every day in a clubhouse that also includes a Cy Young Award winner and the Most Valuable Player, Jordan graciously holds a news conference to answer mostly the same questions about his hitting.

He did it again Monday, and also responded to criticism from Seattle's 6-foot-10 left-hander Randy Johnson, who said he'd like "to see how much air time he'd get on one of my (inside) pitches."

"He has a press conference every day and all he's doing is hitting 80 mph fastballs," Johnson said. "Big deal."

Johnson said he was going to ask the NBA SuperSonics for a tryout and could probably block a 235-pounder out of the middle better than Jordan can hit a baseball.

Jordan said he'd be willing to face Johnson one-on-one in either baseball or basketball.

"I'm pretty sure it would be lopsided on both ends," Jordan said.

White Sox manager Gene Lamont said Jordan would start Thursday's intrasquad game in right field and probably play all six innings. Jack McDowell and James Baldwin are the scheduled starting pitchers, but teams will not be chosen until Wednesday.

Jordan got his final look at major league pitching Monday before the intrasquad game. He faced 31 pitches from left-hander Wally Ritchie and 28 more from rookie right-hander Scott Ruffcorn, whose locker is next to his.

Jordan had 13 takes, two bunts, three fouls and a swing and a miss against Ritchie. He put 12 balls in play, three of which would have been hits.

Against Ruffcorn, he had 10 takes, six fouls and a bunt and put 11 balls into play, two of which would have been hits.

CLASSIFIEDS WORK!

The Psychology behind the Citibank Classic Visa card: The emotional security of the Photocard, now with No Annual Fee.

The Citibank Classic Visa® instills in students feelings of safety, security, and general wellness not unlike those experienced in the womb. Therefore, it is the mother of all credit cards.

¶ Some experts attribute these feelings to the Citibank Photocard, the first credit card

Subject suffering from Credit Card Theft Nervosa.

Subject after receiving Citibank Classic Visa Photocard.

with your photo on it. A voice inside says, "This is me, really me." (As opposed to, "Who the heck is that?"—a common response to the photo on one's Student ID.) It's an immediate form of ID, a boost to your self-image. ¶ Of course if your card is ever lost or stolen and a stranger is prevented from using it, you'll feel exceptionally good (showing no signs of Credit Card Theft Nervosa). ¶ Other experts point to other services, such as The Lost Wallet™ Service that can replace your card usually within 24 hours. Or the 24-Hour Customer Service line, your hotline if you will, for any card-related anxiety whatsoever. ¶ Further analysis reveals three services that protect the services you make on the Citibank Classic Visa card, at no additional cost. 1. Buyers Security™ can cover them against accidental damage, fire or theft, for 90 days from the date of purchase<sup>1</sup> (preventing, of course, Insecurity). 2. Citibank Lifetime Warranty™ allows one to extend the warranty for the expected service life of eligible products up to 12 years.<sup>2</sup>

3. And Citibank Price Protection assures you of the best price. You need only see the same item advertised in print for less, within 60 days, and Citibank will refund the difference up to $150<sup>1</sup> (hence no Post Purchase Depression). ¶ Special student savings are particularly therapeutic. For example, you can receive a $20 Airfare Discount<sup>3</sup> on any domestic flight.

(Case studies indicate that a Fear of Flying is overcome when Spring Break in sunny Florida is a possibility.) Not to mention savings on mail order purchases, sports equipment, magazines and music; a low variable interest rate<sup>4</sup> of 15.4% and No Annual Fee. ¶ Suffice it to say, you'll have a credit card you can depend on while building a credit card history. So, call 1-800-CITIBANK (1-800-248-4226), extension 19, to apply over the phone (students don't need a job or cosigner) or to have your photo added to your Citibank Classic Visa card. ¶ If we say that a sense of Identity is the first component of the Citibank Classic Visa card, a sense of Security the second, and a sense of Autonomous Will from your newfound financial independence the third, don't be crazy...Call.

Not just Visa. Citibank Visa.

The Monarch® Notes Version: The Citibank Classic card gives students no annual fee, peace of mind, protection against Freud—or rather fraud—and a low rate. Apply today. Call 1-800-CITIBANK (1-800-248-4226), ext. 19.

<sup>1</sup>Certain conditions and exclusions apply. Please refer to your Summary of Additional Program Information. Buyers Security is underwritten by The Zurich International UK Limited. <sup>2</sup>Certain restrictions and limitations apply. Underwritten by the New Hampshire Insurance Company. Service life expectancy varies by product and is at least the minimum based on retail industry data. Details of coverage are available in your Summary of Additional Program Information. <sup>3</sup>Offer expires 6/30/94. Minimum ticket purchase price is $100. Rebates are for Citibank student cardmembers on tickets issued by ISE Flights only. <sup>4</sup>The Annual Percentage Rate for purchases is 15.4% as of 1/94 and may vary quarterly. The Annual Percentage Rate for cash advances is 19.8%. If a finance charge is imposed, the minimum is 50 cents. There is an additional finance charge for each cash advance transaction equal to 2% of the amount of each cash advance transaction; however, it will not be less than $2.00 or greater than $10.00.
