Administrators laud ASU's landing of Research I status

BY JAKE BATSELL
STATE PRESS

University administrators on Monday hailed ASU's designation as a Research I institution, labeling the recognition as a major victory toward establishing national academic credibility.

A list published in this week's Chronicle of Higher Education and compiled by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching categorizes ASU as one of 88 Research I institutions in the nation. There are 3,597 colleges and universities in the United States.

"It's a step in the evolution of this institution into a major national university," said ASU Provost Milton Glick. "It's a statement to the community that this is a serious contender that is in business here, and we're a serious place when it comes to research agenda."

All Research I institutions must award 50 or more doctoral degrees and receive $40 million in annual federal funding.

ASU President Lattie Coor is in Germany and was unavailable for comment, but he said in a University-issued statement that the designation "provides public recognition for what ASU has become: a modern major research university well positioned to continue its emergence into the 21st century."

The Carnegie Foundation, based in Princeton, N.J., began classifying Research I institutions in 1973, according to Mary Jean Whitelaw, the foundation's director of data management. Since then, the foundation has compiled rankings in 1976 and 1987, she said.

ASU was designated a Research II institution in 1987.

Whitelaw said the purpose of the designation is to group institutions with similar missions and is not a ranking of superiority among schools.

"It's not a quality ranking," she said. "We're not saying (ASU) is better or worse than anybody else, just that these institutions share these characteristics."

"Certainly, (ASU) is an institution that has a huge commitment to doctoral-level education, and they're receiving plenty of federal funding."

ASU is one of a handful of Research I schools that do not have either a medical school or land grant status. Others include the California Institute of Technology, Princeton University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

UofA, which has a medical school, has been recognized as a Research I institution since the Carnegie Foundation began categorizing schools, according to Charles Geoffrion, UofA associate vice president for research.

Geoffrion credited ASU for achieving Research I status without having agriculture or medical schools.

"I think it is all the more significant that (ASU) has achieved this ranking without

Dean will no longer serve as ombudsperson

Officials hope terminology switch will alleviate conflict

BY GARIN GROFF
STATE PRESS

An ASU dean who was found last week to be in the contradictory position of both defending and disciplining students has been asked not to refer to himself as an ombudsperson.

Larry Mankin, chairman of ASU's ombudsperson committee for 9 years, said that David Swain, interim assistant dean of student life for judicial conduct, informally helps students with complaints, but is not part of the official ombudsperson committee.

Mankin said he talked Monday with the vice president for student affairs, Christine Wilkinson, to ask that Swain stop identifying himself as an ombudsperson.

"I ... requested that they find another term, since there is now a confusion between what Swain does in his division and what the ombudsperson committee does," Mankin said. "And she (Wilkinson) was receptive to that."

Swain's role as an ombudsperson was questioned last week by Torin Newton, a construction engineering senior who dealt with Swain. Newton sought help from an ombudsperson when he was placed on administrative hold and feared he would not be able to register for his final class before graduation.

Newton was put on hold after he failed to meet with Swain to resolve a code of conduct complaint.

After asking for an ombudsperson's assistance for a meeting with Swain, Newton said he was surprised to find out that Swain is his ombudsperson.

Newton did meet with Swain last week, however, and said he had no hard feelings toward Swain and was pleased that his administrative hold was lifted.

Newton, however, questioned the accountability of the Crime creeps onto campus during Easter weekend

Weapons seized in 2 incidents

BY PAUL MATTHEWS
STATE PRESS

ASU police seized three guns in two separate on-campus incidents late last week.

Police reports indicate that ASU students Robert Hall, 21, and David Gunter, 19, were both cited for interfering with the peaceful conduct of an educational institution.

ASU police Lt. Bennett Rowe said Saturday that the charges stemmed from the seizure of an assault rifle Thursday and a pistol and shotgun on Friday.

On their way back to the station Thursday night, Tempe narcotics detectives noticed Hall allegedly unloading the assault rifle from the trunk of his car. They called ASU police, who stopped Hall in the parking lot of a fraternity house at 701 Alpha Drive, Rowe said.

Hall could not be reached for comment.

On Friday, ASU police were called to Cholla Apartments, where they found a 12-gauge shotgun and a Glock 9 mm pistol in Gunter's room.

Gunter said he does not normally keep the guns in his room, but he spent Friday afternoon at a shooting range and was cleaning the weapons when police arrived.

"I have guns because I like shooting as a sport," Gunter said. "I don't usually keep the guns here, I keep them at a friend's house. Both of the guns are registered in my name."

Possession of guns on campus is a violation of section 5-303 of the student code of conduct, which prohibits the "unauthorized use, possession or storage of any weapon, explosive device or fireworks on the University campus or at a University sponsored activity."

Student fends off would-be rapist

BY PAUL MATTHEWS
STATE PRESS

Tempe police are searching for a man who attempted to rape an 18-year-old ASU freshman early Saturday morning.

According to police reports, the student, a Manzanita Hall resident, was walking along the sidewalk in front of Tuneup Masters, 808 S. Rural Road, when a man grabbed her from behind and pulled her behind some bushes.

He told her he had a gun and would kill her if she screamed, then he pulled down her shorts and tried to rape her.

The student was able to fight him off and ran to the road, where she flagged down a police officer. The suspect ran away and was not located.

those two mainstays of research activity," he said. "I think it indicates the strengths that are here in the state of Arizona, and particularly the growing strengths at ASU."

"I think that we all should be very proud of this achievement. There's no reason why there can't be two very healthy, thriving institutions to serve the needs of the state of Arizona."

Glick said ASU's selection despite the absence of schools of agriculture and medicine indicates that the University had to overachieve to garner Research I status.

"I think what it says is that we attained it by a much more difficult route," he said. "Being in the company of MIT and Cal Tech doesn't make us MIT and Cal Tech — they're different institutions."

"But the conclusion I will draw is that in order to obtain this status without medicine or agriculture, you've had to overachieve, because it's much harder to attain it without a med school or (agriculture) school."

Robert Barnhill, ASU vice president for research, said the designation culminates a team effort between ASU and its surrounding community.

"It's been a team effort over many, many years, and it involves the community as well as some of our industrial partners," he said.

Barnhill said ASU may not have been able to meet one of the key criteria for Research I status — a minimum of $40 million in annual federal funding — without corporate and industrial sponsorship to match federal grants.

"Sometimes, federal support is predicated on some local support as well," he said. "The federal funding always comes later."

Honors College Dean Ted Humphrey said the designation will enhance ASU's academic image.

"The impact is going to be enormous, because it confirms what we've been doing and what we've been saying about ourselves," he said. "This just says something really important about the progress and the effort that this University has made."

"With this designation, I don't have to work nearly as hard to convince (potential ASU students) that this is one of the premier institutions in the country."

ombudsperson system, which he said allowed Swain to be "the man with two hats" because he was acting as both prosecutor and defender.

Swain said Monday that when he met with Newton last week, he told him that he is an ombudsperson, but "I'm not acting as one now."

Leon Shell, associate vice president for student affairs, said the University wants to avoid such misunderstandings. He said ASU is looking at ways to eliminate confusion when employees of any University office who act as unofficial ombudspersons may be confused with members of the official ombudsman committee.

"We don't want to detract from the official ombudsman system," he said.

Shell added that University officials want to avoid conflicts of interest in ombudsperson matters and do not allow a person to judge a student while acting as a student's representative at the same time.

Mankin said ASU's ombudsperson system receives few complaints, is effective in resolving conflicts and is being considered as a model by other institutions that do not have such a system.

Senate approves creation of constitutional defense council

PHOENIX (AP) — The Senate approved creation of a proposed "constitutional defense council" Monday, rejecting Democrats' complaints that it is no more than a $1 million contribution to Gov. Fife Symington's re-election campaign.

The council would consist of the governor, House speaker and Senate president. It would be empowered to hire lawyers to challenge federal government mandates, such as the Clean Air Act, the Endangered Species Act and other federal laws that affect the states.

"The purpose of the council is restoring, maintaining and advancing the state's sovereignty and authority over issues that affect this state and the well-being of its citizens by taking any action it deems necessary," the bill states.

The council could, by majority vote, "direct the attorney general to initiate and prosecute any action that the council determines will further its purposes."

In addition to creating the council and authorizing it to file lawsuits on behalf of the state, the bill also would provide $1 million a year to fund the operation.

4 activists arrested during protest against observatory

TUCSON (AP) — Police arrested four activists during a protest against the University of Arizona's controversial astronomy project on Mount Graham.

The protest took place at the offices of the Tucson-based Research Corp., one of the organizations funding construction of a third telescope on Mount Graham near Safford.

The Research Corp. is a non-profit company which handles technology transfers for universities.

In a statement issued after the arrests, the Student Environmental Action Coalition said the company's involvement in the Large Binocular Telescope project would deprive other research of funding.

When ordered to leave the premises, all of the 20 protesters did so except the four who were arrested, Officer Tammie Penta said.

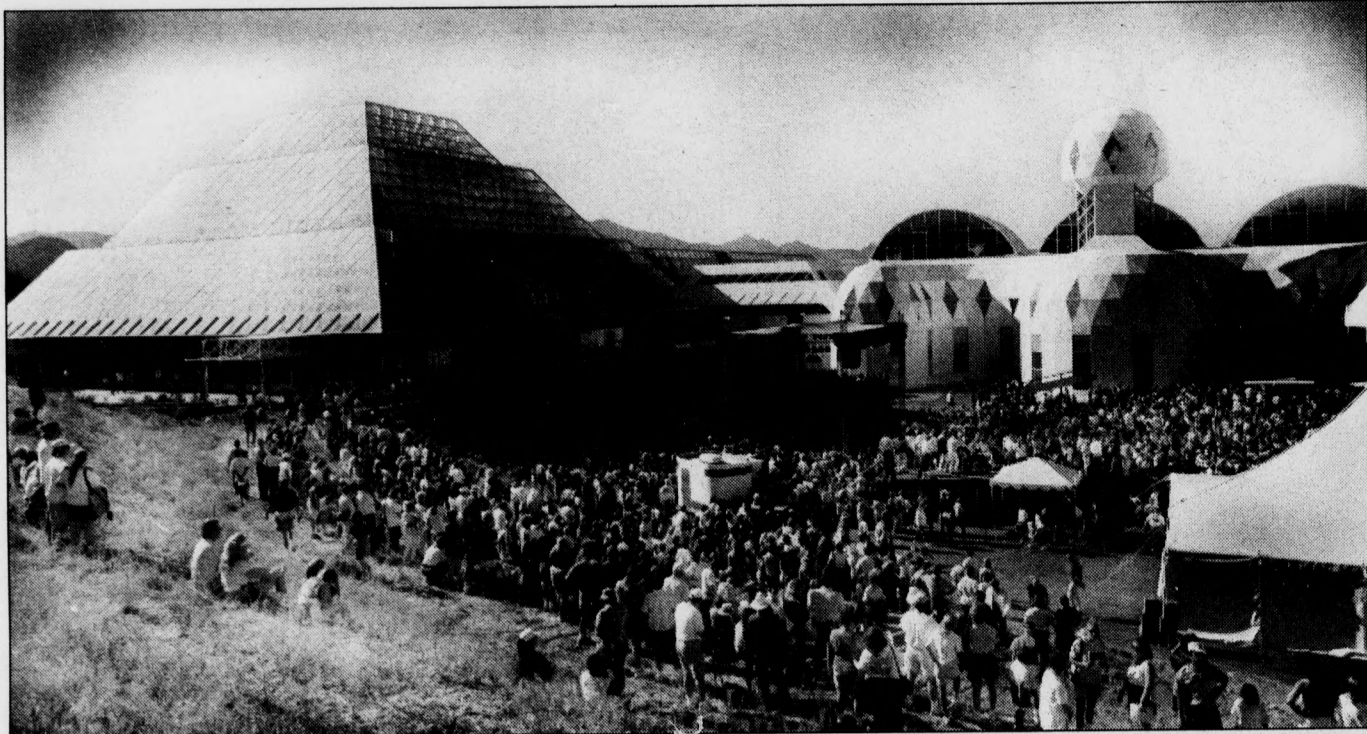

Penta identified those arrested as Henry Soto, 21; William Gremp, 18; James Jordan, 34, and Christine Graziano, 20, all of Tucson.

Arizonans turn out in droves for new Powerball lottery

PHOENIX (AP) — Arizonans got their first chance to play the multi-state Powerball lottery Monday, lining up for tickets for a $30 million drawing.

The Legislature voted to join the Iowa-based game last year, earmarking some of the money for transit improvements.

After a ceremonial sale of the first Arizona ticket at a Phoenix grocery store, customers lined up to buy the tickets for Wednesday's drawing, said Arizona Lottery spokeswoman Mary Ross.

Two former crew members of Biosphere 2 were accused Monday of breaking into the three-acre complex and damaging seals that exclude outside air.

Biospherians accused of sabotage

Managers point to Alling, Van Thillo

ORACLE (AP) — Two members of the crew that spent two years inside Biosphere 2 were accused by project managers of breaking into the sealed environmental experiment, sabotaging equipment and letting in outside air.

The Monday morning break-in came three days after a representative of Biosphere's main backer, Texas billionaire Ed Bass, seized control of the project and barred the pair from the grounds.

Pinal County Sheriff's deputies were seeking Abigail Alling and Mark Van Thillo for questioning, said sheriff's spokeswoman Belia Fessenden.

Biosphere managers reported getting a 4 a.m. call in which Alling claimed responsibility for the break-in and named Van Thillo, Fessenden said. The caller spoke to three Biosphere officials and all recognized the voice as Alling, she said.

A crew of seven remained in the 3-acre domed world, which wasn't significantly damaged, said Biosphere spokesman Chris Helms. Reporters were barred from the complex in the desert 35 miles north of Tucson and paid public tours were suspended.

"Biosphere 2 is totally and completely operational," Helms said.

The project seeks to duplicate the Earth's environment as a laboratory and prototype space colony. It is designed to be self-sufficient and sealed from the outside world. Air, water and waste are recycled.

During her two-year stay in the dome, Alling, a marine biologist from New York, was best known for her scuba dives in the project's miniature ocean. Van Thillo, of Belgium, ran most of the life-support equipment.

Jack Corliss, the project's research director, said one airlock double door — which allow people to enter and leave without letting in outside air — and three single-door emergency exits were left opened for about 15 minutes. The emergency doors are not locked and the airlock doors are not locked on the inside, Corliss said.

There also were five broken panes of glass on the "lungs," two huge, rubber-like diaphragms that bulge in and out, equalizing air pressure within the dome as the artificial atmosphere expands and contracts with temperature variations, Corliss said. The glass panes act as emergency valves, breaking to relieve pressure if the lungs get over-inflated, he said.

Eight people were sealed into the $150 million dome on Sept. 26, 1991, for a much-publicized two-year stay. The project was clouded by disclosures that Biosphere operators concealed such negative news as installation of mechanical air-purifiers, injection of oxygen and importing equipment into what was supposed to be a self-contained world.

Colosio's death a conspiracy, special prosecutor suggests

MEXICO CITY (AP) — At least seven people were involved in the assassination of the man who was likely to have become Mexico's next president, a special prosecutor said Monday.

The suspects include the head of local security for presidential candidate Luis Donaldo Colosio at the March 23 rally where he was slain, as well as three men hired to guard him. The prosecutor, former supreme court justice Miguel Montes Garcia, said still others may be involved.

Montes did not discuss a possible motive, nor directly address the issue of a broader conspiracy that many Mexicans believe existed.

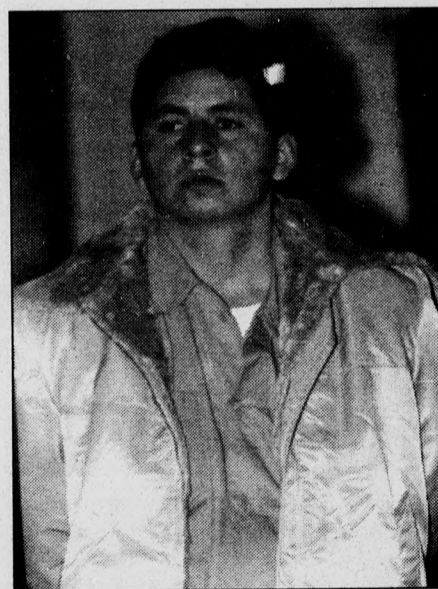

But the announcement dramatically widens the number of suspects in Mexico's most serious political assassination since 1928. Colosio, as the candidate of the long-incumbent Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, was seen as a shoo-in for the Aug. 21 election.

Initially, the government insisted that Mario Aburto Martinez, the confessed gunman, acted alone. Officials later said several people might have been involved, while discounting a wider conspiracy.

Montes said Monday that Aburto, 23, is still the man accused of firing the shots that killed Colosio. But he said four members of the security detail hired for the day were in custody, and two others are being sought.

Aburto told police he went to the rally alone, but also said he belonged to an unspecified political group that has thousands of members.

Associated Press

A special prosecutor said Monday that Mario Aburto Martinez, above, did not act alone in the assassination of Mexican presidential candidate Luis Colosio.

Study says minorities more open to mixed-race socializing

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Minority college students are more likely to eat, study and go out with people outside their race than white students are, a study says.

The researchers who conducted the study say it debunks the idea that minorities socialize only among themselves. In fact, the researchers say, the study shows that white students are most likely to stick together.

"The current concern about whether minority students are promoting and practicing self-segregation is misplaced," said Sylvia Hurtado, an assistant professor of education at the University of Michigan. "In fact, students of color are crossing ethnic-racial lines the most, while white students seem to be segregating themselves."

Hurtado and her fellow researchers — Eric L. Dey of the University of Michigan and Jesus Trevino of Arizona State University — were to present their findings Tuesday at an educational research conference in New Orleans.

The researchers said they wanted to find out if ethnic and racial organizations, minority-theme dorms and minority cultural centers were contributing to segregation on college campuses.

In 1987, they surveyed 209,000 college freshmen from 390 schools across the country. Four years later, they sent a follow-up survey to 28,000 of those students; 6,107 responded.

The students were asked if they crossed racial lines when studying, dating and dining.

The study found:

— About three-quarters of the Mexican Americans surveyed frequently studied or dined with someone from another race. That was followed by Asian Americans (69 percent reported crossing racial lines to dine, and 60 percent to study) and blacks (55 percent to dine, 49 percent to study).

— Fewer than 1 in 4 white students frequently dined with someone from a different ethnic group, and fewer than 1 in 5 frequently studied with someone from a different ethnic group.

STATE PRESS Editorial

Against all odds

ASU has become one of 88 U.S. universities ranked as premier academic research institutions, according to a report conducted by the Carnegie Foundation and published in the Chronicle of Higher Education.

Considering that there are nearly 3,600 colleges and universities in the United States — and considering that ASU has been underfunded in the past years, does not have a medical school and is not a land grant institution — the already prestigious Research I status is that much more impressive.

This honor comes as a result of the hard work of the faculty, staff and assistants, whose salaries have yet to be brought up to par with others in the Pac-10 (even though the Arizona Legislature did pass last week's "3 + 2" pay increase.)

It would seem logical that the amount of funding a university receives is roughly correlative to the number and magnitude of honors and commendations the university receives. If the funding ASU receives is any measure of that logic, then it would seem the University is lacking in such honors.

But that isn't true.

The Research I ranking is just one of the many recent honors the University has had bestowed upon it. Let's not forget that the Honors College in September was recognized by Money magazine as one of the best deals in public education. The Fiske guide to colleges also gave ASU four out of a possible five stars in its annual ranking. This is further proof of hard-working faculty, staff and assistants forging ahead, overcoming urges to flee to better-paying schools. The question remains, how long are they willing to stay and take these repeated financial slaps in the face?

Our researchers should be applauded; the Research I accreditation was earned despite the fact that ASU still ranks about 100th in the nation in federal research grants for sciences and engineering (as compared to UofA, a Research I school that ranks in the top 20 nationally and receives three to four times as much as ASU).

With any luck, the University will quickly gain financial recognition that can begin to be comparable to such other existing Research I institutions as CalTech and MIT. The added funding could go toward areas the University cut earlier this semester.

But, for now, the research faculty, staff and students at ASU deserve a giant pat on the back.

Sin tax bill targets cigarette 'ills' by sacrificing smokers' freedoms

"Sucking down a cloud of smoke, staring blankly at health. Denial. Ignorance."

That was the way I described myself one night as I puffed away a pack of Camel filters one night.

This view has changed, though, to something different. Primarily due to the demand for explanations every time I decide to light up. Now, I feel pangs of guilt every time I grab for a cigarette.

The fact is, I like to smoke — and not only when I'm drinking. And here's a shocker for all of you out there: I do know that it is bad for me. So, you don't have to constantly say that to everyone who lights up. I do realize that I have knocked down my life expectancy by a few months (or years) and I may regret it; but right now it's my life and I choose to lead it any way I damn well please. I've spoken to many of the other smokers out there and there seems to be agreement about this.

The "sin tax" bill on tobacco will definitely be "make it or break it" for a lot of us smokers — particularly those of us who may be students and/or others hovering around the poverty level. The stats show that with every previous one percent increase in tobacco taxes, the result has been an 0.04 percent decline in use. This, of course, has the big wigs up in Washington thinking, "Uh, hey, if we put a gigantic tax on tobacco, they'll all quit, duh."

I'd like to say that because I smoke just a little bit more than anyone should, I am going to fight the taxing of the bill until the bitter end. But I'm afraid that is not true.

Hey, I wish it would work. I love smoking but it obviously has taken a little bit of a toll on physical exertion. No, we all can't go out jogging like Bill and Hillary. Perhaps we really don't care to, either ... ever think of that?

The bill is a sweet thought, but it's not going to work with everyone. Maybe a slight decrease, but nothing to bust open the champagne on.

America is supposed to be the land of the free, right? Well, taking a privilege away from us will most likely have some people rebel by smoking more. It all comes down to the fact that we don't like being told what to do and that "sin tax" is doing just that.

One time my brother visited me and said that I smoke too much. I made a face at him and lit up another one. I told him he drank too much, and he belched and cracked open another Miller Genuine Draft.

Smokers are not ruffruff; we are not scum because we smoke. We're just normal people who have a habit that offends a lot of people. I can think of a ton of those that don't involve a cigarette.

I, myself, learned to be courteous because I know that a lot of people don't like it. For example, if I'm at a social gathering, I don't blow smoke in people's faces. If it somehow drifts towards them, I make an effort to apologize and try not to do it again. If the smoking section is packed in a restaurant, I'll bow out and stub out. I never light up until everyone is done with their dinner. If I am in someone's home, I will go outside or not smoke until I'm in the comforts of my Subaru.

If they are in my territory, however, I will be smoking. I'll open the door or window, but I won't put that cigarette out. The bottom line is: I smoke, get used to it.

If there is, and there are, people who don't like me because I or the people who I hang around smoke, then they're obviously not worthwhile. Smokers are outcasts in a lot of areas. This is like not letting someone do something because of their beliefs. Do I detect a little prejudice here? Hmmm.

If smoking were illegal, I doubt I would be doing it. But it's not. Of course if it were, you know you'd be seeing dealers on the street or in the office taking names and offering some smokin' deals on the Marlboro Reds. It would go over just about as well as prohibition did with Al Capone and the gang. We don't really need our jails crowded with tobacco dealers and pushers.

Classic excuses for smoking have been heard way too often. Things like, "Everybody has at least one vice, this is mine," or "Well, you drink too much booze/ have high cholesterol intake/ snort glue. Who do you think is going to kick first?" or my personal favorite, "I'm have an oral fixation, in eating, talking and smoking."

The problem is that we are identified as dumb ignoramuses who don't know what's good for us. "Duh, let's go smoke."

The truth may be that we are a little dumb, but we accept that fact and try to go about it in our own way.

One may be trying to quit, and perhaps that tobacco tax will insure that it happens. The teenage kids who are just starting may stop because their jobs at Carl's Jr. won't cover the bill.

But, assuming that this tax will promote miracles is moronic.

Give it a shot, guys.

Moral double standard creates anti-Israeli bias

The Arab and Islamic reactions to the massacre by a lone Israeli gunman in Hebron were severe and predictable. The Palestine Liberation Organization, Lebanon and Jordan quickly cast blame entirely on Israel. The United Nations issued a strong condemnation. Libya chalked it up to Western domination. And the Iranian mullahs followed with demands for Israel's total annihilation.

But the world is selective in its outrage. Arab terror has claimed an average of one Israeli civilian a week since the Palestine Liberation Organization renounced terrorism last September. And yet, unlike Israel, Arabs have received no UN condemnations or pining editorials about the danger to their souls, as Anthony Lewis warned Jews last week. For the world is selective in its blame. Syria's United Nations envoy had this to say: "Israel ... is directly or indirectly responsible for extremism in the region."

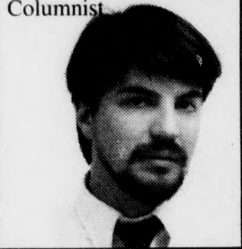

Now, to point out a double standard in judging and condemning Arabs and Israelis is not to excuse anyone. The Hebron massacre deserves our special outrage because of its scope and setting. But to hold Israel responsible for the acts of one deranged citizen, while overlooking the premeditated policy of mainstream Arab groups, is to engage in moral affirmative action. It's to use a double standard.

Consider. On February 18, Tsipora Sasson, 33 years old and five months pregnant, was driving home with her husband and two children, ages 6 and 9. Palestinian Arab gunmen waiting in ambush shot her once in the head and once in the abdomen. Hours later, she died. That was a week before Hebron. The Washington Post gave it five sentences. The New York Times gave it three. The United Nations Security Council said nothing.

For a world that has stood silent through years of Arab terror against Jews (and other Arabs) suddenly to condemn Israel is to send an obvious, disturbing signal: Arab killings will be ignored. Jewish killings will get wrath.

DAVID

Columnist

That's hypocrisy. And it's usually bad enough. This gets worse. The double standard becomes more preposterous when you compare how Jewish and Arab politicians and legal systems respond to murderers in their own midst.

The Jewish response to Hebron was overwhelming. "There is no understanding, no forgiveness, and no atonement for this horrible act," said the president of Israel. "I am shamed over the disgrace imposed upon us by a degenerate murderer," said the prime minister. In synagogues throughout the world, including ASU Hillel, congregation and clergy offered statements of contrition. The themes were shame, regret, and responsibility. No excuses.

The Israeli government immediately offered reparations to the victims' families. It banned extremist parties and arrested their leaders. Then a judicial commission formed to cast the net of responsibility beyond the gunman. Up the chain of command, judges could implicate the chief of staff and prime minister — maybe force some resignations.

Compare: Eight years ago, a Palestinian Arab gunman burst into a synagogue in Istanbul, bolted the door to prevent escape, and murdered twenty-two worshippers. In how many mosques around the world were there expressions of regret? How many judicial commissions held leaders to extraordinary standards of responsibility? How did Palestinian Arab leaders react? A Palestine Liberation Organization spokesman said this: "We are against the murder of innocents even if they are Jews."

Four Arab and Islamic groups claimed "credit" for the attack. That's typical. After bloody attacks on synagogues in Copenhagen, Antwerp and Rome, many Arab groups scrambled for the honor.

And thus, through one-sided condemnations, the double standard becomes routine. As the only Middle East democracy, Israel's open society bares itself to scrutiny, criticism, and, most commonly, the double standard.

Take the press. With the region's only free press, Israel is the best country for journalists to get information. Jerusalem hosts more foreign correspondents than any other city, except Washington and Moscow. But this makes Israel's misdeeds overreported. In contrast, only a handful of foreign correspondents covers the entire Arab world, leaving the Arab world underreported. And the Arab governments virtually free of scrutiny.

Then there's the self criticism. The Israeli judicial commission investigating Hebron won't ask whether Israeli leaders had adopted "reasonable measures" to prevent the massacre — that's a conventional standard. They'll ask whether leaders had taken "all possible steps" to prevent harm to civilians — that's an extraordinary standard. And Israel will find those indirectly responsible. In a just world, such self-criticism would be a point of honor.

For Israel's enemies, it's ammunition for attack.

That's because the double standard is mainly a weapon. Self-righteous hands hold Israel to a higher standard than the Arabs, to criticize it. Yes, that's unfair and dangerous. But there's a more insidious flip side.

And here's the tragedy: Under the lower standard, apologists excuse the Arab world's most horrendous crimes: The systematic denial of human rights to women, Jews, and foreigners.

At some point even hypocrisy must have its limits. To denounce the Jewish state for crimes that we overlook in Arab countries is to use a double standard. To call it a higher standard, as columnist Charles Krauthammer once observed, is a euphemism. It's no compliment or mere oversight. It's discrimination. And discrimination against Jews has a special name. It's called antisemitism.

Kelley exposes hypocrisy of Women's History Month...

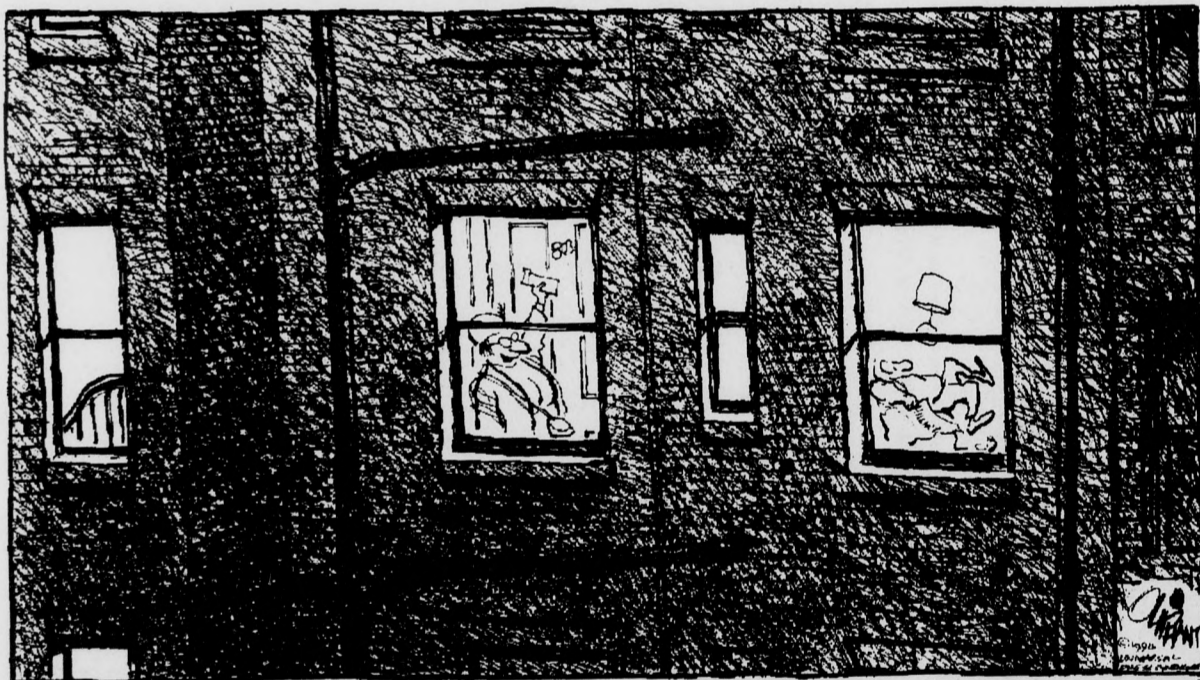

Bravo! Here, here! Accolades! And all the rest... I take my hat off to Barry Kelley for his intelligently constructed article in the Wednesday, March 30, issue of the State Press. The part I was most relieved to read was his lamentation of the noticeably absent celebration of women who deserve to be celebrated. Women have indeed put forth history-shaping efforts in the past, and deserve the notoriety they should have received. The point of Women's History Month being used as nothing but a vehicle to propel the feminist agenda is well taken, and strongly agreed with.

Probably the biggest reason I was so relieved to hear Kelley's intelligent and coherent argument is because I am so sick and tired of reading the infamous Maureen McClarnon's circus side-show of mindless drivel. Just once I would like to hear some logic, case history, precedence or even literacy on her part rather than denigrating the Opinion pages into nothing more than creative hate mail.

The American "battle of the sexes" has played its part in cultural history, and made its point in the professional realm, the educational realm, and everywhere else it has tried to. I would like to see it bow its head one last time, and get out of my face. I can't express how sick I am of countless people, male and female alike, taking potshots at members of the other gender. We're like a bunch of children calling each other names because we have nothing else to do.

Often pointless and unsolicited, these attacks serve as nothing other than embarrassments to the mediocrity of popular American culture. Can't we find anything more important to worry about in this country other than whether men or women are superior human beings? Maybe if we tried, we'd end up with someone other than the most photogenic and best dressed governor in the White House.

'CATTLE FUTURES IS WHERE IT'S AT! I JUST PUT ALL OUR SAVINGS IN CATTLE FUTURES!'

...but writer reveals ignorance and stereotypes of women

Barry Kelley's column "Women's history month celebrated with propaganda, PC and whining" (Mar. 30, 1994) was so obviously written by someone driven by stereotypes and misconceptions that I had to write and shed some enlightenment.

First and foremost, in rebuttal to his statements that Women's History month is not used as a time to reflect and give respect to those women who have contributed to the world as a whole; Kelley, maybe you were serious when you said you had to pay attention to Truck Sale Month or, more likely, you just didn't look around. This very university that you attend held lectures on prominent women. Outside of the university, there were plays, lectures, and other activities geared toward the same goal.

Secondly, I am truly shocked at your seemingly automatic assumption that all feminists, or those who are in Women's Studies, are lesbians. Your sarcastic remark about the Second Law of Thermodynamics was not only a cheap shot, it exposed your shallow, ignorant view of those who are involved in Women's Studies.

Next, with respect to women being under-represented in certain professions, let me explain one of the reasons this is true so that next time you do this, you won't embarrass yourself so much. There is a noticeable deficiency in the number of women who graduate from the more "rigorous" degrees. It isn't because they aren't intelligent and it isn't because they'd rather sit and read "Lesbian Love Affairs;" it has to do with study groups. Nobody who comes out of the other end of, say, medical school, does it without a lot of work, often in groups. Working in groups helps to gain a better understanding of the material, and students who participate in groups have a better chance of getting specific questions answered. The problem? Often, female students are excluded from these study groups, often not intentionally. Groups meet in all male dorms, stick to the people they know, etc. In short, on the whole, female students receive less support in these areas than their male counterparts.

Lastly, regarding equal pay for equal work, you have shown your shallow head again. The fact that women make 64 cents to the one dollar that men make for the same work is not an economic theory. It is a fact. I don't care if it doesn't make good money sense, many things don't. I question your logic.

Kelley, the next time you try to write something like this, think about writing on something you actually understand. As a matter of fact, I see that you are an Asian history student. It was Asian Culture Awareness Week, wasn't it? Oh, I forgot, you were at the Mel Clayton Ford truck sale all this month.

STATE PRESS POLICE REPORTS— Real cops. Real reports. Real strange.

POLICE REPORT

ASU police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A male ASU employee reported that someone stole $1,600 worth of computer hard drives from the Computing Commons. He was not sure when the theft took place.
- A woman not affiliated with ASU reported that she was assaulted by a man on March 26.
- A man unaffiliated with ASU was arrested, cited and released for driving on a suspended license at 1000 E. University Drive.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Monday:

- Police arrested a 26-year-old Tempe man Friday and charged him with burglary and criminal damage after he broke into a Tempe woman's apartment. The occupant of the home could find nothing missing from the home except some chocolate cake from her refrigerator. The suspect was too intoxicated to answer questions from police.
- A man who asked for change from the owner of Super Mat, 3 W. Baseline Road, pulled a gun and robbed the owner of an undetermined amount of cash.

The suspect then told the owner not to do anything for two minutes while he made his escape. Other customers in the store didn't realize the robbery had taken place.

- A 35-year-old Tempe woman was arrested Friday after she took a kitchen knife and cut up her furniture, punched holes in her apartment wall and broke two television sets while yelling in front of her 6-year-old son. The arresting officer tried to have her committed to County Crisis because of her delusions that "Jesus" was making her do the violent acts. The Crisis Center denied her admittance.

- A 23-year-old Tempe man was arrested for criminal trespass Friday after he broke into a Tempe family's apartment at 1230 E. Lemon Drive and fell asleep on the couch. The victims said they had never seen the man before.

- Police arrested a 28-year-old Apache Junction man they found sleeping inside his car after a records check revealed an outstanding warrant from Mesa. A search of the man and his car revealed a packet of white powder believed to be cocaine and a pipe. They also found small quantities of marijuana and zigzag rolling papers. He was charged with possession of dangerous narcotic drugs, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia.

Candidates scarce in ASASU elections

Only 26 hopefuls in running for 28 elected office positions

By GREG ZEMEIDA
STATE PRESS

Associated Students of ASU officials are split on opinions why a low number of students chose to run for student government offices in the upcoming elections, leaving many positions with no candidates.

ASASU Election Coordinator Jonell Lucca said she blames student apathy for the lack of participation.

ASASU Activities Vice President Chad Wolett, on the other hand, said even though the number of candidates running for office is low, it is better than it was last year.

"I don't look at it as student apathy," he said. "The bottom line is that, in the (four) executive offices, there are 14 students running. Last year when I ran, there were only nine students running, so I see that as an increase."

All together, there are 26 candidates running for the 28 ASASU office positions this year.

There are only 12 people running for the 24 senatorial spots, with the other 14 candidates running for the four executive positions.

The colleges of architecture, fine arts, graduate, nursing, and social work currently have no one officially running for their offices.

Lucca said that she thinks most of the vacant candidate positions would be filled by write-in candidates recruited by their respective colleges.

"Now that the word is out that certain colleges do not have candidates, I'm sure that most of the current senators for the colleges that have no candidates are going to be going out there and try to encourage people to run as a write-in (candidate)," she said.

Candidates for president are:

- Ross Bell, a graduate student majoring in political science and the former ASASU legislative liaison.
- Marci Hendrickson, a senior communications major.
- Mark Macias, a senior journalism major and former State Press reporter.
- Bill Weston, a junior economics major and president of the Residence Hall Association.
- Kurt Wilhelm, a senior communications major and ASASU campus affairs vice president.
- Chad Wolett, a senior psychology major and ASASU activities vice president.

Running for executive vice president are Alan Frost, a graduate student majoring in educational media; and Jason Rupp, a senior architecture major.

Brandi Aguilar, a sophomore broadcasting major, and sophomore pre-business major Eddie Genna are up for the office of campus affairs vice president.

Pat Baker, Andy Krals, David Tung and Mark Wendell are running for activities vice president.

Lucca said students may still jump into any of the races by becoming an official write-in candidate.

She said that if a person contacted ASASU and was put on a write-in candidate list by April 8, then any write-in votes on the ballots that they received would be officially recognized.

After the elections, if there is no senate candidate elected from a particular college, then the college council for that school will find someone to fill the position.

There will be two candidate forums held this week to let students hear the candidates' stances on the issues facing students at ASU.

The first one will be on Wednesday at 12:30 p.m. on Hayden lawn. Candidates for executive, activities, and campus affairs vice president will be participating.

The second forum will be for presidential candidates. It will be on Thursday at noon on Hayden lawn.

A third forum will be held for all executive candidates on April 12 at 1 p.m. at the southwest corner of Cady fountain.

There also will be a debate on April 19 for the candidates involved in the run-off elections. It will be on Hayden lawn at noon.

The general election will be held on April 12 and 13. Run-off elections will be on April 20 and 21.

Health experts to try to trace origins of hantavirus

2 new cases of viral infection reported in state

By DAVID STROW
STATE PRESS

Health officials, still baffled by the mysterious hantavirus, are planning to conduct a sweeping, multi-state program to investigate the origins of the disease.

The Centers for Disease Control project comes at a crucial time. The Arizona Department of Health Services reported a new case of the viral respiratory infection in a desert area in northern Pinal County. The victim, a 27-year-old woman, was hospitalized in early March. The CDC confirmed it was a case of hantavirus on March 18.

"There have been no cases in Maricopa County yet," said Brad Christensen, spokesman for ADHS. "But this case occurred an hour's drive from the Phoenix area."

The case was the second reported in Arizona this year, and the thirteenth reported in Arizona so far.

The Pinal County case is a new twist to the hantavirus mystery. The first eleven cases had been isolated to the Four Corners area, but both of the cases reported this year occurred in desert areas away from that region.

The other case, reported this February, was found in northwestern Pima County.

"The two desert cases really changed the picture," said Craig Levy, ADHS program manager. "But the largest percentage of cases will still be in the northeastern part of the state."

Previous searches have revealed that 30 percent of deer mice and 19 percent of pinon mice in the region carry the virus.

The viruses found in those mice were live, which means that they will spread the virus "for the rest of their lives," Levy said.

Hantavirus antibodies have also been detected in chipmunks, squirrels, house mice, and cottontail rabbits, he added. Antibodies indicate a shorter, temporary period of infection.

The springtime search will involve a dozen different sites scattered throughout the state, Levy said. Among the sites will be an "upper Sonoran desert" site located in northern Maricopa County.

"But this is not meant to suggest that towns like Cave Creek and Carefree are at risk," he said. "We are surveying regions all over the state."

Levy said that CDC and ADHS employees will trap wild rodents at a different site each week from May through September. The rodents will be euthanized, then dissected on-site at a field laboratory. Workers will take blood samples, and samples of liver, spleen, lung and kidney tissue.

"The people that are doing the trapping and dissection are at about as high a risk as anybody," Levy added. "They are not only being exposed to large numbers of rodents, but they will be exposed to the tissues, urine, feces, and all of that stuff."

"We will be taking a lot of precautions."

Levy said that surveyors will wear full protection gear, including rubber gloves, surgical gowns, respirator masks and goggles.

"Nobody has come down with hantavirus yet that has used those precautions," he said.

After the field test, tissue samples will be put on dry ice and sent to the CDC headquarters in Atlanta to scan for the virus and its antibodies.

Previously, 60 percent of hantavirus victims died. However, an experimental anti-viral drug called Ribavirin has been credited with saving the lives of both of this year's Arizona victims, according to Christensen.

The virus has claimed 65 lives, including four in Arizona.

Christensen added that the Phoenix area is probably not at risk of a hantavirus epidemic.

"Anything's possible," he said. "But so far, every case has been rural in nature."

However, Christensen emphasized that residents should be cautious.

"People should always avoid wild rodents, just to be safe," he added.

ASU coaches honored

ASU swimming coach Tim Hill and diving coach Ward O'Connell were announced Pac-10 Women's Coaches of the Year in their respective sports on Friday, in a vote of Pac-10 Conference coaches.

Hill led the Sun Devils to their best finish ever at the Pac-10 Championships with a second-place finish with 1,186 points. Hill also coached sophomore Beata Kaszuba to ASU's first NCAA individual championship since 1980.

O'Connell coached junior Amy Garner to the highest overall point total at the Pac-10 Championships.

Men's tennis falls to UofA

The UofA Wildcats managed to come from behind to capture a 4-3 victory over the Sun Devils Friday in Tucson.

ASU won two of the three doubles matches to win a point in the overall score, but the Wildcats came back to win the overall match by winning four of the six singles matches.

In singles, the Sun Devils' Sargis Sargsian defeated Jan Anderson 7-6, 7-5, 6-3, and Paul Reber defeated UofA's Brandon Hearn 6-3, 7-5.

Women's tennis stamped

ASU's 11th-ranked women's tennis team lost 8-1 to the second-ranked Texas Longhorns Saturday at the Penick-Allison Tennis Center in Austin, Texas. The loss gave the Sun Devils a split of their two weekend matches, as they defeated Kentucky on Friday by a 6-3 score.

Texas swept singles play by winning all six matches in straight sets and recorded straight-set wins in No. 1 and No. 3 doubles.

Records fall at Sun Angel Classic

Sun Devil relay team breaks school mark in 4x400-meter

BY ELIZABETH APPELEN
STATE PRESS

Carl Lewis may have drawn the crowd to Saturday's Sun Angel Track Classic, but it was the ASU women's 4 x 400 relay team who stole the show. The relay broke the school record and possibly set the fastest time in the NCAA so far this year with a 3 minute, 29.77 second mark.

The four record-breaking sprinters are Jacqui Gayle, Tayo Akinremi, Lade Akinremi and Shanequa Campbell. The relay broke the school record of 3:29.95 set in 1988.

"There was more competition than last week, and that helped me to go faster," Tayo said.

The anchor of the relay, Shanequa Campbell, lost the team's lead in the beginning of her 400 meters, but she made a dramatic comeback in the last 150 meters to win the race.

"When she passed me, I knew all I had to do was stay with her, because I have a stronger finish," Campbell said.

"When we got to the last 150 (meters), she was already tired and I said 'Look, I feel good — I am going for it,'" Campbell said.

Jackie Gayle dominated the women's 400-meter dash by taking first place, and Clevon Clair came in strong in the men's 800-meter dash and took third place.

Sun Devil coach Leonard Braxton was very happy with his squad's results, "I am elated," he said.

ASU's sprinters were not the only ones to please Braxton, as many of the field event competitors also performed well.

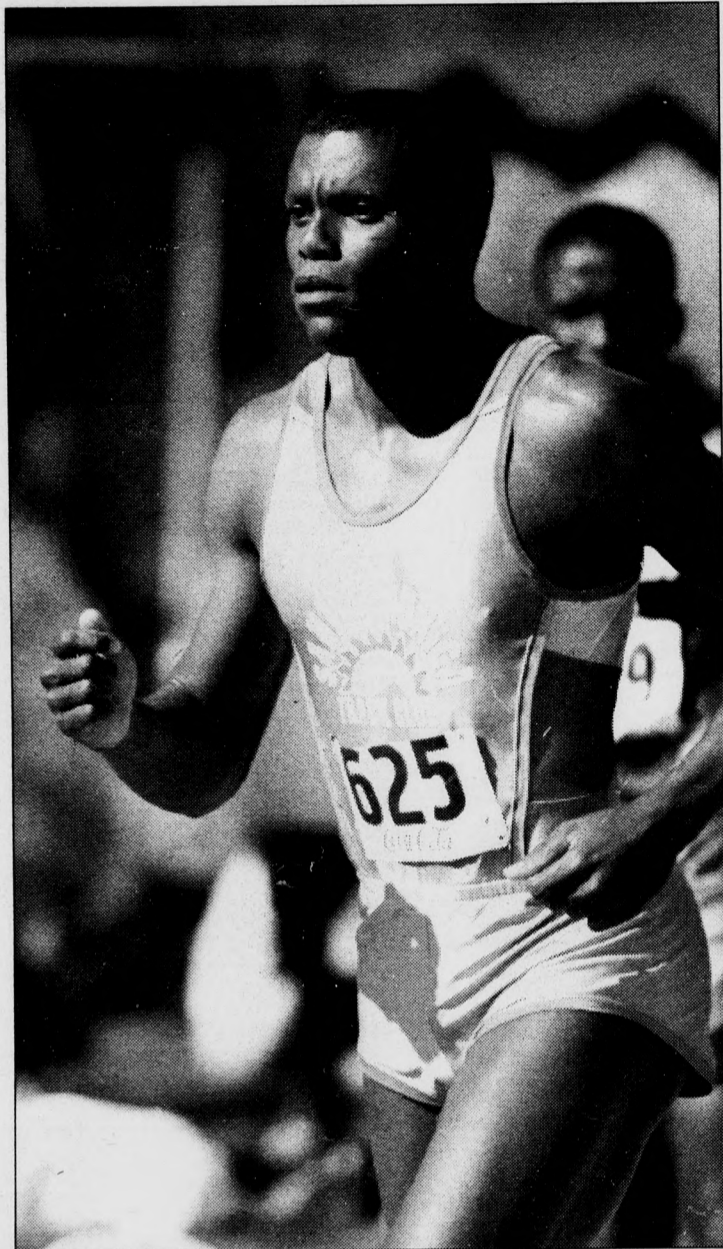

Pole vaulter Nick Hysong and triple jumper Brian Ellis, both all-Americans, have had very strong performances this season. Hysong blew away the field with a vault of 18 feet, 5 3/4 inches (5.6 meters). The second-place finisher, Erik Noaksson of Florida, could only manage a 16-10 3/4 (5.15 meters) vault. Ellis leapt to a third-place triple jump finish by jumping 52-0 3/4 (15.87 meters).

Discus thrower Mark Landa improved his personal best with a 169-10 (51.76 meters) hurl, something he attributed to the top-notch competition.

"I look forward to getting my butt kicked, so to speak, because it always pushes me," Landa said.

Braxton is excited that many of the Sun Devil's on the track and field team have already qualified for the NCAA's.

"We got a lot of our qualifying times out of the way, so from this point on, we don't have to worry about qualifying people for the NC's," he said. "This way, we can experiment a little more."

Carl Lewis warms up before running the anchor leg in the 4x100 meter relay for the Santa Monica Track Club at Saturday's Sun Angel Track Classic. The team of Mike Marsh, Leroy Barrell, Floyd Heard and Lewis set a stadium and meet record with a time of 38.42 seconds.

Olympic stars shine at premiere track event

BY TODD KELLY
STATE PRESS

Saturday's 15th annual ASU Sun Angel Classic Track Meet included a field of over 20 colleges as well as some of the most recognized athletes in sports, including the Olympic relay team that owns the world record in the 4x100-meter relay.

The Santa Monica Track Club, including Carl Lewis, Leroy Burrell, Mike Marsh and Floyd Heard, chased their world record of 37.40 seconds, did not set a new one, but they ran a fast 38.42 in the 4 x 100, setting a new track and a new meet record. Their mark exceeds the time of 38.48 set in 1984 by the team of James Butler, Larry Myricks, Calvin Smith and Mel Lattany.

The Santa Monica Club competes in the Sun Angel Track Meet quite often, but it had been four years since Lewis was here.

"It's exciting to get back to winning," said Lewis after the race. "We were looking forward to running fast and we did. We ran well."

After the race, Lewis said that it felt good to be back running and competing after missing part of last year with a back injury. He said that he still plans to continue competing in the long jump.

"I haven't skipped a beat, so everybody should be scared," he said, commenting on his return to full strength.

Burrell was happy with his performance in the race as well. He also talked of his future in track.

"I plan to continue to run the 100, and dabble with the 200," said Burrell.

Santa Monica's 4 x 200 entry had to be scratched, however, because Burrell suffered a slight muscle strain in his left leg.

Lynda Tolbert-Goode, a former ASU standout and current ASU assistant coach, won the 100 hurdles with a time of 13.36. Tolbert-Goode is ranked fourth in the world in the 100 hurdles.

Rotten Strawberry found in L.A.

It's 10 o'clock, do you know where your star slugger is?

This was the question being asked of the Los Angeles Dodgers Sunday after their star outfielder Darryl Strawberry was AWOL for an exhibition game with the California Angels. Then just as Carnation was printing up new milk cartons with Strawberry's picture, he appeared with a proclamation that would be earth shattering had it come from anyone else.

On Monday, the Dodgers announced that Strawberry has a substance abuse problem and would seek treatment immediately. After hearing this news, I have just one question. What kind of a role model is this?

Some people might argue that substance abuse is a disease and therefore out of Strawberry's control. I would agree with this if we were talking about someone with a spotless record, but Strawberry is far from a saint.

Strawberry has been fined a total of eight times by the New York Mets for missing or showing up late to games and practices, was accused of striking his ex-wife, and got into a fight with Mets teammate Keith Hernandez. The list goes on and on.

JEREMY

Assistant Sports Editor

I believe Strawberry deserved a second chance, and he got that chance a little over three years ago.

Here is a man who in November 1990 agrees to a $20.25 million, five-year contract with the one team that he has always dreamed of playing for, the Dodgers. When Strawberry signed this contract, he said that he had found God and would use this opportunity to put an end to the lengthy incident record he established in the Big Apple.

In the beginning it appeared that Strawberry had turned over a new leaf and was finally on the right track. Then came the 1993 season.

•On June 25, Strawberry is fined one day's pay, $19,230, for showing up late to a game.

•On Sept. 4, Strawberry is arrested for allegedly striking his live-in girlfriend.

•On Sept. 23, Strawberry announces that he flirted with the idea of suicide.

This man is far from the kind of person kids should be looking up to.

While it is true that, as Charles Barkley says, parents should be role models, every athlete has a certain responsibility to make a good impression on the thousands of young fans that literally worship them.

Fiery Sun Devils face GCU tonight

BY MIKE BRANOM
STATE PRESS

When Grand Canyon enters Packard Stadium tonight to play the 10th-ranked ASU baseball team, the Antelopes won't be playing a squad that is merely hot, they'll be playing a team which is en fuego.

First pitch is scheduled for 7 p.m.

The Sun Devils (27-10 overall, 10-5 Six-Pac) have a 16-2 record in their last 18 contests and are coming off a series sweep at UCLA, their first sweep of the season.

"We got a lot of breaks," Coach Jim Brock said. "Their shortstop (Gar Valonne, the Six-Pac's fifth-best hitter) was out."

Brock said Jason Ruskey will be ASU's starting pitcher tonight. Ruskey (3-2, 4.69 ERA) did not see any action against the Bruins.

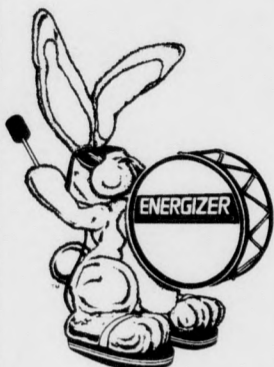

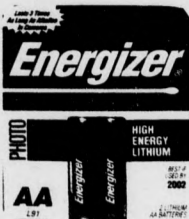

The Antelopes (22-15) are struggling after a hot start, losing 11 of 19, but Brock said Gil Stafford's team can't be taken lightly.

"Grand Canyon has the best ballclub they've had in the last five years."
