Regents approve tuition increase

Coor endorses $50-$150 hike

BY SHAWN BOYD
STATE PRESS

TUCSON — In-state students will pay an additional $50 for tuition next fall, while those from out of state will fork over $150 more after a vote by the Arizona Board of Regents here Thursday.

COOR

The board voted 7-1 to increase tuition with only one regent, Spencer Insolia, a UofA student, voting against the measure.

ASU President Lattie Coor said he strongly endorsed an incremental increase in tuitions, and noted: "Last year's was a dramatic, and in many cases for students, an unmanageable increase."

MCWHORTOR

The increases won't hit students as harshly as last year, when in-staters faced a $250 increase and non-residents a $350 hike. Tuition levels had been frozen the previous two years.

Patrick McWhortor, executive director of the Arizona Students Association, said he expected the $50 increase for in-state students.

"Certainly, I think the in-state students had the feeling from the discussion that it was going to be $50," he said.

But Amy Pzittelo, assistant director of state relations for the Associated Students of ASU, said the regents pulled a surprise punch with the out-of-state increase.

"We were expecting the $50 (for in-state students), but $150 is a bit high for out-of-state," she said. "I wouldn't say we are happy."

MEChA conference begins today

Organizers expect over 1,000 participants in Chicano event

BY MIKA AKIKUNI
STATE PRESS

A national conference expected to draw more than 1,000 participants will be hosted this weekend by the ASU branch of the Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan, beginning today with a ceremony at Hayden West Lawn.

The National MEChA Conference will mainly attract Chicano university and high school students representing more than 10 different states, said Maria Elena Contreras, a member of ASU MEChA. The conference will feature an introduction to the Chicano rights movement, seminars discussing controversial issues facing Chicanos, and informational speakers.

"This year is a critical year to be hosting the National MEChA Conference at ASU because we are going to be addressing a lot of critical issues," said Armando Torres, president of ASU MEChA. "We will also discuss plans of actions that we will take for those issues."

Torres said the National MEChA Conference, which was assigned its name last year, is a product of the National Chicano Student Conference, which has been meeting every year since the 1970s. The seminars and other programs planned for the conference this year will take place mainly on the second floor of the MU and in the Business Building until Sunday.

Registration for the conference costs $25 for university students and $15 for high school students. Registrations will be held at the Hayden West Lawn today from 8:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m., and tomorrow at the fountain in front of the Business Building from 8:00 a.m. to noon.

"It is very exciting, because it will create a very good environment for the Chicanos here in Arizona, and especially here at ASU," said Contreras. She added that the mass distribution of information and education provided by the conference will help many Chicanos in becoming aware of themselves.

"The idea of this conference is to establish some form of communication with not only the Chicanos in here but nationally," Contreras said. "Also to the idea is to figure out ways to improve Chicano communities."

Contreras said she chose to call herself Chicana because she was not brought up completely Mexican. "I grew up under the influence of a lot of old Mexican traditions, but I was raised in the United States with a lot of American influence."

Jesus Trevino, assistant dean of Student Life for cultural diversity, said the word Chicano has indigenous roots.

"It was used predominantly during the

Colleagues mourn accidental death of ASU employee

Stolz struck by car while cycling; remembered as 'well liked' by all

BY PAUL MATTHEWS
STATE PRESS

Members of the ASU Department of Academic Facilities mourned the loss of a popular colleague Thursday after he was killed in a bicycle accident in Mesa.

William Stolz, a 30-year-old space planner, was struck by a car and killed early Thursday morning while riding his bicycle to work, Mesa police spokesman Earle Lloyd said.

Stolz' supervisor, Jack Shafer, said the entire department was shocked by the news and many of them were given the day off.

"The units here are relatively small; everyone is out there together," Shafer said. "It was very difficult to work today."

Stolz had been with the department for about five years,

Shafer said. As a planner, his job was to help compile the class schedules for the ASU Bulletin. He also worked at finding space for research facilities and employee offices.

"He was just a really normal guy, and he got along well with his colleagues," Shafer said. "He was well liked by everyone he worked with."

Lloyd said the accident occurred about 7 a.m. at the intersection of University Drive and Extension Road. Stolz was riding his bicycle northbound on Extension when he was broadsided by an eastbound 2-door Nissan driven by 33-year-old Telesforo Garcia.

Lloyd said Garcia had run the red light at the intersection and, after hitting Stolz, he jumped out of the car and he and

Tuition

McWhortor said it would be difficult to criticize the out-of-state increase, because Arizona's universities are comparatively less expensive than other schools.

"Out-of-state is so hard to measure, because compared to other states it is a good deal," McWhortor said.

The vote means students from Arizona, who now pay $1,778 per academic year, will have to cough up $1,828 next year. Those who come from other states will see the current total of $7,284 for tuition at ASU and UofA climb to $7,434, while out-of-state students attending NAU, who now pay $6,530, will pay $6,680.

John Malik, ASASU executive vice president, reacted negatively to the regents' decision to raise tuition, saying, "I'm very disappointed."

Malik said he is not convinced that the increase in costs of a university education warrant the size of the tuition increase voted for by the ABOR.

The board also approved a formula providing for $6.5 million set aside from the increased tuition to be used to help financially needy students.

1960s, when Mexican-American college students found pride in their indigenous roots," Trevino said. "They began to look at the Aztecs and the Mayans as a source of inspiration for the Chicano movement, a large scale, civil rights, educational movement that still exists today.

"MEChA is the organization that still carries the banner of civil rights and we should all be proud that MEChA has decided to work hard this year to bring this prominent conference to ASU. The future of the nation will depend on our youths."

Trevino said the word Chicano was chosen by activists as a word identifying themselves because the Aztecs used to pronounce their tribe's name as Mexicano.

Guadalupe Mizcles, a second year criminology and Chicano studies major representing Chicanos from the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities, said she is excited to be a participant of the conference.

"Coming from a predominantly white university, it's nice to see a his two companions took off running.

"They were chased down by a citizen," Lloyd said. "I don't know how he talked them into going back, but he did."

Lloyd estimated the car was traveling between 50 and 60 miles per hour when it struck Stolz. Garcia was arrested and charged with leaving the scene of a fatal accident.

The citizen who chased Garcia down was Stephen Martin, a 23-year-old pool cleaner who was driving behind Garcia when the accident occurred.

"They didn't hit the breaks at all," Martin said. "(Stolz) was tossed

In other action, the board also:

• Approved raising incremental registration fees for law school students at UofA and ASU by $2,000; of those added fees, 15 percent will be set aside for financial aid.

• Approved increasing tuition and fees at the UofA College of Medicine by $180 to $6,826.

Douglas J. Wall, regents' president, also created a Regents' Commission on Student Costs and Financial Assistance "to give these major policy matters the study and attention they require."

Earlier, during a public comment period, a Pulitzer Prize-winning UofA graduate urged the regents not to let the university's department of journalism be dismantled.

"The journalism department is already bleeding from an ill-advised (committee's) recommendation that the department be put to death," said Frank Sotomayor, now an editor at the Los Angeles Times.

The Associated Press and Chris Driscoll of the State Press also contributed to this article.

lot of brown faces, a lot of people claiming their Chicano background," Mizcles said. "The similarities that I see between the Chicanos in ASU and Minnesota is the fire that we all have to claim our indigenous background."

Mizcles said that racism is still prominent in her university because "they want to clump us (Latinos, Chicanos, Mexicans, indigenous people, and international Latino students) under the same umbrella." She also said that when her Mexican parents immigrated to the United States before she was born, they had to see signs on the streets saying "No pets, no Mexicans."

Elizabeth Dreier, a freshman Chicano studies major from the same university as Mizcles, said even though she is half Anglo, she identifies more herself with Chicanos because "I can't go into my white culture. There's nothing for me to look at and say, 'I'm proud to be white.'"

10 feet in the air and 50 feet forward.

"I hope I never have to see anything like that again."

Martin said he followed Garcia and his friends onto Cherry and finally caught up to them on Third Street where he convinced them to go back.

"I just said 'You guys are going to have to go back. You're fingerprints are on the vehicle and it will only be worse later,'" Martin said.

Stolz had no children and he is survived by his wife, Jane. Funeral arrangements will be determined today.

Libertarian tax day protest includes assault rifle raffle

PHOENIX (AP) — As if the income tax isn't a big enough target, the Libertarians are turning their annual Tax Day event into a double-barrelled protest by raffling off three assault rifles.

It's a way of demonstrating another Libertarian no-no — gun control — said Mike Dugger, Second Amendment Caucus director for the state Libertarian Party.

"We want to call attention to the fact that measures are pending in Congress to ban assault rifles," Dugger said. "We figured this would be a good way of killing two birds with one stone."

The party has sold more than 1,500 raffle tickets at $5 each, Dugger said. The winners will be drawn by Graham County Sheriff Richard Mack, who has filed a legal challenge to the Brady law which requires a five-day waiting period to buy a handgun to complete a background check.

"Contrary to what we've been told these rifles are the weapons of choice for freedom fighters everywhere," Dugger said. "Their use by criminals on the other hand is so low as to be almost nonexistent."

The party opposes any kind of gun control.

The party also opposes income taxes because citizens are forced to divulge information the party believes should be confidential.

Mustaf's cousin indicted in pregnant woman's death

PHOENIX (AP) — A grand jury Thursday indicted a cousin of Phoenix Suns forward Jerrod Mustaf in the July 22 slaying of a woman who told her family she was carrying Mustaf's unborn child.

Before she was shot to death at her apartment in suburban Glendale, Althea Hayes, 28, also claimed Mustaf had offered her $5,000 to have an abortion and that she had refused.

The fourth-year NBA player has not been charged in the death but has been described by police as an investigative lead. He has denied any involvement in the killing.

The Suns last week confirmed that he was subpoenaed to testify to the grand jury. The league on Monday approved the Suns' request to place Mustaf on the injured list, a move which allowed him to devote his time to his legal problems.

Mustaf cousin LeVonnie Wooten, 27, of Landover, Md., turned himself in last week in Maryland on Arizona charges of murder and burglary in the Hayes case. Wooten remains jailed in Upper Marlboro, Md., while fighting extradition.

The grand jury's investigation resulted in charges of first-degree murder, first-degree burglary and witness tampering against Wooten.

Two American Sikorsky Blackhawk helicopters, like the one shown on the left, were shot down Thursday by American F-15 pilots who mistook them for Soviet-built Iraqi Hind choppers (right).

U.S. downs own helicopters

WASHINGTON (AP) — American fighter jets mistakenly shot down two U.S. Army helicopters over northern Iraq Thursday, killing all 26 people aboard. "Something went wrong," said the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and President Clinton promised to find out what.

Twenty-one of the dead were military officers from the United States, Britain, France, and Turkey supporting the U.N. humanitarian relief operation for the Kurdish minority in northern Iraq. Five Kurd passengers also were killed.

The helicopters were shot down by two F-15C fighters enforcing the "no-fly zone" over the area.

Clinton expressed "terrible sorrow" and pledged a thorough investigation. He ordered U.S. flags on public buildings throughout the nation to be flown at half-staff through sunset Monday "as a mark of respect for those who died as a result of the tragic incident."

At the Pentagon, Defense Secretary William Perry said the fighter pilots mistook the UH-60 Black Hawk choppers for Iraqi "Hind" helicopters.

Both jets apparently had the helicopters in sight during the daylight mission and both fired missiles, Perry said. An AWACs reconnaissance plane was overseeing the helicopters' flight.

"The pilots of the F-15s feel they had positively identified the Hinds," said Lt. Gen. Richard Keller, chief of staff of the U.S. European Command in Stuttgart, Germany. Audio and camera tapes from the aircraft will be studied in the investigation, he said.

Asked what threat the helicopters might have posed that justified shooting them down, Keller replied, "I honestly don't know."

One F-15 fired a radar-seeking AMRAAM missile, the other a heat-seeking Sidewinder, the general said in a telephone briefing with reporters at the Pentagon.

Gen. John Shalikashvili, the Joint Chiefs chairman, said the final order to shoot normally is given "on the scene" and not from military commanders at the jets' base in Incirlik, Turkey.

"Clearly, something went wrong, and an investigation will have to determine exactly what did go wrong," said the four-star Army general, who spearheaded the relief effort for the Kurds in 1991.

U.S. warplanes and helicopters normally use electronic identification systems designed to tell friend from foe.

If proper procedures were followed, the helicopters' identification beacons should have been operating routinely, Shalikashvili said. He did not say whether the Pentagon knew if the beacons were on or if they emitted the proper coded messages.

70 crimes added to death penalty list

House rejects crime bill amendment

President Clinton addresses mayors and law enforcement officials on the South Lawn of the White House Thursday in a discussion of the crime bill.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House responded to demands for tough anti-crime legislation in an election year by authorizing the death penalty Thursday for nearly 70 additional crimes.

Working on a $15 billion crime bill, the House rejected by a 314-111 vote an amendment that would have substituted life without parole for the death penalty. Among new crimes that could result in execution: drive-by shootings, a killing committed while stealing a car and activities of big-time drug dealers, even if they don't result in death.

At the White House, President Clinton focused on other parts of the bill as he addressed a ceremony honoring police officers. The bill, he told the officers, would give them "the tools you need to do your jobs."

"This is not a partisan issue or a sectional issue or a racial issue or an income issue," Clinton said. "If anything should truly make us a United States of America, it should be the passionate desire to restore real freedom to our streets."

Judiciary Committee Chairman Jack Brooks, D-Texas, led the battle against the amendment to replace the bill's death penalty provisions with life in prison without parole.

"Plain common sense tells us that the death penalty is the only way to send an unequivocal message that some conduct simply will not be borne solely by innocent victims of heinous crimes without the highest price to be paid," Brooks said.

Rep. Michael Kopetski, D-Ore., who proposed the amendment with the support of the congressional Black and Hispanic caucuses, said, "In my view, life without any hope of release constitutes death by incarceration, a stiff penalty by any standard."

The House also rejected an amendment to eliminate the death penalty for murders committed during carjackings, drive-by shootings and federal drug and gun crimes, and another to eliminate the death penalty for drug kingpins even when no death occurred.

Many of the House bill's capital crimes — such as assassination of the president — carried the death penalty before the Supreme Court overturned capital punishment in 1972 on procedural grounds.

However, a number of them are new, including carjacking deaths, drive-by killings, murders by federal prisoners and retaliatory killings of witnesses, victims and informants.

U.N. warns of further strikes as Serbs threaten troops

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnian Serb troops challenged U.N.-controlled weapons depots and detained more U.N. soldiers Thursday in a war of wills following NATO air raids on Serb forces.

U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali warned of more air strikes if U.N. personnel were threatened, and President Clinton cautioned the Serbs that it would be a mistake to treat U.N. peacekeepers in Bosnia as enemy combatants.

Serbs detained 24 more peacekeepers Thursday, raising fears they might be trying to avert further air raids by holding U.N. people as virtual hostages. Serbs now are restricting the movements of 161 U.N. personnel.

Serb leaders also ordered all journalists for U.S. news organizations to get out of Bosnian Serb areas immediately. The order, which included two Yugoslav journalists for The Associated Press, reflected the Serbs' feeling that foreign news media are biased against them.

In hopes of defusing an explosive situation, international negotiators were meeting again with leaders of Bosnia's warring sides to try to achieve a truce. Angry over NATO strikes at Serb positions near the Muslim-held town of Gorazde on Sunday and Monday, Bosnian Serb leaders have threatened to shoot any more attacking NATO planes.

They say they will no longer negotiate with the U.N. commander in Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, saying U.N. troops in Bosnia have relinquished their neutral role and taken sides with Bosnia's Muslim-led government.

"That is not what we are doing," Clinton said Thursday. U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali said Thursday that more NATO air strikes on Bosnian Serbs could be called if needed to protect U.N. troops.

"We will not hesitate to ask air support in case the security of our United Nations forces ... is in danger," he said during a visit to Spain.

The Serbs, meanwhile, continued to confront the United Nations.

In one potentially dangerous faceoff, a Serb tank crew demanded entry at one of seven U.N.-monitored sites where Serb artillery and other heavy weapons have been collected inside the 12.5-mile exclusion zone around Sarajevo.

The weapons were left behind when the Serbs moved most of their artillery away from Sarajevo under threat of NATO air raids in February.

The 30 French peacekeepers guarding the depot at Krivoglavci outside the capital refused and the tank left after a half hour, U.N. spokesman Maj. Rob Annink said.

Late Thursday, Annink reported that six unarmed U.N. military observers were taken from an observation point at Hresa, northeast of Sarajevo, to a Bosnian Serb barracks in Mokro, near the Serb stronghold of Pale. "We are very concerned," he said.

In addition, 15 Canadian peacekeepers, three unarmed U.N. military observers and a translator were detained by Serb forces Thursday morning, near Sarajevo, Annink said.

STATE PRESS Boos & Bravos

BOO — to ASASU politicians who continue to hoist the standard of Martin Luther King, Jr. and Cesar Chavez in order to promote their personal political candidacies. The latest round in Chad Wolett's "name change bill" was Kurt Wilhelm's suggestion that the Social Sciences Building and Agricultural Building be renamed after King and Chavez, respectively. Although a much better suggestion than the original — the buildings are clearly more representative of the two civil rights leaders' goals and lives' work — it's still tainted by the fact that Wilhelm was running in the ASASU presidency race. Hmm. Political motives, anyone?

Has it occurred to either Wolett or Wilhelm that they are representative leaders? And that the majority of student opinion expressed has been a big, fat, cynical smirk? It did seem to occur to the majority of the ASASU Senate, which voted 17-3 against Wilhelm's suggestion (Wolett's original proposal will be voted on during the April 26 Senate meeting). Wolett's desire to bring ASU kicking and screaming into what he defines as the modern era is an ambition worthy of, say, Peter the Great, but do the majority of ASU students agree? For that matter, without administrative support, Wolett and Wilhelm are barking up the wrong trees.

BRAVO — To the Arizona Board of Regents, for a proposal to increase the entrance requirements at Arizona universities. Additional classes in math, science and foreign languages would be required if the proposal is approved. Despite difficulties the plan would create — additional expenditures by the secondary school system — it would also (optimally) help increase the University's graduation rate by making sure future students are better prepared. But, the ABOR should look at the effects the plan will have on poorer school districts, particularly minority-dominated districts, which may have difficulties in supplying the new requirements.

BOO — To that same Arizona Board of Regents, which voted Thursday to slap students with an additional $50-$150 tuition increase. The arguments are almost becoming ritualized now. With last year's increase — largest tuition hike in Arizona history — still shaking the pocketbooks of students, an increase this year makes it that much more difficult to swallow, particularly considering university administrations can't specify how last year's increase has benefited students.

BRAVO — To U.S. Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, for withdrawing from consideration for the Supreme Court vacancy because he was concerned the ensuing confirmation process would interfere with his ability to serve as a senator. One person who might want to follow Mitchell's lead is ASU student David Tung, who is running for ASASU activities vice president despite being selected as next year's student regent. By serving in both positions, Tung could likely spread himself too thin, which would result in a grave disservice to students.

Cobain's death spawns myth, sensation — and media circus

I am so unutterably tired of hearing about Kurt Cobain. I could not believe my eyes when I pulled my Newsweek from the mailbox, and his face was plastered across the front page. Star dead! Feeding frenzy!

Where were you when you heard the news that Kurt Cobain died? Write it down so you'll have an answer for your grandchildren, because this just may be the event of the century, judging from the media reaction. I heard the news from America Online, because it was the top news story of the day, proclaiming that Cobain's death is a "great loss for the world of music," or some such drivel. My immediate reaction was: now Courtney Love is really like Yoko Ono — a widow.

He's dead, and it's certainly nothing to celebrate, but aren't there more important things going on in the world? What about the 20,000 people who were massacred in Rwanda during that same week? Ultimately, what happens to the people and government of Rwanda will have more impact on the world than the death of a self-absorbed rock star. (At least, I'd like to think so.)

The American people don't relate really well to massacres (outside of Los Angeles), but star matters are positively titillating; the nasty bits and pieces of the lives of the famous sell magazines (all of those little fangirls are going to rush out and buy Newsweek, seeking insight into the horror). The best part of Cobain's death, though, is that it was a suicide, which means that the media can drag in all sorts of experts, discuss other suicides, and create alarm in the parents of teenagers; Cobain's death has brought an issue into the arena, and the media, make no mistake, will milk it for all it's worth. River Phoenix's accidental overdose didn't provide as much mileage, partly because it wasn't as well defined or interesting as the sensually morbid topic of suicide, which only increases an idol's appeal, and partly because drug overdose is a little more difficult to get a handle on (junkies look wasted and awful, not tragic and worthy of pity; the angst coefficient is far less impressive).

Radio stations in Seattle gave out numbers for suicide hotlines, because their listeners were so distraught, and arranged a candlelight vigil in Cobain's memory. Papers and local news programs across the country worked pieces on suicide into their offerings, comforting parents and advising them of signs to look for in their potentially troubled teens, trotting out the staff psychologist, and contemplating the potential for copycat suicides among Cobain's fans. The message: This is an important issue, and it can touch any one of our lives. The real message, however, sounds like this: This is sensational and we can exploit it endlessly to help our ratings, while cloaking our intentions in a mask of concern.

If we're lucky, there'll be a movie of the week, in addition to pieces on most of the dozen-plus television newsmagazines. The tone will be melodramatic, full of heart-wrenching statements. Perhaps school psychologists can form support groups to get the bereft fans through this tragic time. Online support groups will provide a forum for mourners world-wide to comfort others of their ilk, and then the people who form lasting friendships online, or are touched by this service in some other dramatic way, can go on Oprah and talk about "How My Life Was Saved in Cyberspace."

According to Newsweek, Cobain gave our generation a voice and a style, but I beg to differ: a style meant to threaten the establishment means nothing when it's worn on every back and can be purchased at Target, and that voice from MTV that whines about disenfranchisement is nothing short of tedious. Nirvana only defined Generation X for the media, because it provided a stereotype to go with the tag line coined by Douglas Coupland; the age group this refers to isn't completely composed of grungeniks, who are generally white and middle class, and find safe, institutionalized forms of rebellion most gratifying. The generation without a title will go on with or without a comprehensive name that conjures up a specific image in the minds of the public, but advertisers will have a hard time finding a direction for their pitches.

We shall lament wasted youth and talent. We shall talk about stars that burn too brightly and quickly, vaporized by the spotlight. We shall nod our heads and discuss the X Generation, crossing itself out in the face of dim prospects. I think I'll leave the room, because I don't wish to participate in the marketing of anyone's death.

Student Regent, ASASU VP not to be held simultaneously

Many students have reservations about David Tung's decision to remain in the race for ASASU activities vice president after being confirmed as next year's Student Regent. Count me among the concerned.

The front page article in the April 13 State Press focused primarily on the time commitments required of a student regent. Although Tung has obviously acquired some time management skills, there is a limit to how much any person can do. Regardless of an individual's ability to balance a fully loaded schedule, there are still only 24 hours in a day. Tung has already realized this fact since he has been unable to attend either of the two candidate forums to which he was invited. (True, he did show up at Tuesday's forum, but he arrived late and was rightfully prevented from speaking at the forum since all candidates were given sufficient notice to show up 30 minutes early.) While I agree with Tung that it is feasible for a person to make the time to serve this university in several different capacities, when the two positions in question are student regent and an executive officer of ASASU (or any other responsibilities which require similar levels of commitment,) I believe it is impossible to excel in both areas. It's not a question of whether or not he can do them both well. One of Tung's opponents was quoted as saying that Tung's candidacy was unfair to the other three people running for activities vice president. I contend that Tung's decision to pursue an ASASU executive office is also unfair to the students that he apparently wants to represent.

More critical than the issue of time, however, is the conflict of interest between these two positions. As student regent, Tung will be expected to represent the students at all three state universities. As activities vice president, if elected, Tung will be expected to represent only the students at ASU. It is inappropriate for any individual to serve both groups at the same time. Having Tung serve in both positions would be similar to having the governor of Arizona as the President of the United States.

Academic buildings, not stadiums, fitting tribute

This is in response to Chad Wolett's letter that appeared in the Wednesday, April 13, 1994 issue of the State Press.

First, let me say that I am a great fan of Martin Luther King, Jr. and of his dream. I also admire what I know about the work of Cesar Chavez on behalf of the migrant workers in this country. With that in mind, Wolett, I would like to address your proposal to change the names of Sun Devil Stadium and the University Activity Center to the Martin Luther King Stadium and the Cesar Chavez Center, respectively.

You ask us why we should not effect these changes. I ask you why we should. You ask, "What is terrible about honoring individuals that fought to make the world a little better place?" Nothing is wrong with that. But the question that must be answered is, why these particular changes? Why honor these men by putting their names on sports facilities? Outside of the Super Bowl controversy a few years ago, what connection has King ever had with football? Or Chavez with basketball? How does this honor the goals for which they worked?

Strangely, you seem resistant to a change in your proposal that would be a more fitting tribute. Kurt Wilhelm proposed that we rename the Social Sciences Building and the Agriculture Building the Martin Luther King Social Sciences Building and the Cesar Chavez Agriculture Building, a change that would honor those goals. Yet you seemed resistant to that change. Why is that? Why would it be so much better to change the names of two sports facilities, unless the goal is to announce to the world, "Arizona no longer has a racism problem! See? We renamed a stadium to prove it!"

Wolett, racism does not go away if you rename a stadium. It doesn't even go away if you rename a building that has something to do with those you wish to honor. Don't get me wrong, there is nothing wrong with tribute. But if King were alive today, would he be expending all this effort to change the name of a football stadium? I tend to doubt it. I like to think that he would be concentrating his energy on the problems that necessitate the feeling that we need to honor a civil rights leader. The problems that still plague this state, and this country. It's not a problem of having a racist image, and it won't go away by changing the name of the most prominent structure on campus. It is a problem of so many people hating others based on their skin color, or where they are from, or how they choose to worship God.

If you want to honor these men, these heroes, then I implore you, do so appropriately. Wilhelm's suggestion is a good one, and it makes sense. But if you really want to honor King, Chavez, and what they stood for, you will not stop at the renaming of buildings. You will work against the root of the problem, the irrational hatred and mistrust between people who are different from one another.

It's not about holidays. It's not about buildings. It's not about honoring men, but about honoring that for which they fought. It's about ideals and beliefs that many of us still hold true.

It's about a dream.

Fay's flogging too cruel, unnatural of a punishment

I am writing in response to the editorial about Michael Fay in the Tuesday, April 12 issue of the State Press. I think that flogging a guy for throwing eggs and spray-painting a car is a little too severe a punishment. From what I have read about this case in several newspapers I am in shock. Most Americans actually support this kind of punishment.

I don't know what this country has come to, to think that we actually get pleasure from seeing another man in so much pain that he passes out. Have we seen that many violent movies to think that this is right? No, I don't think we should have this kind of punishment. First of all, it's for third world countries; I would hope we are above this. There are better ways to deter someone from crime than physically abusing someone. I am sure that everyone has been spanked one time or another in our life for doing something wrong. But did that stop us from doing it again?

Probably not. So what makes this country think that if we cane somebody it will make them stop. Another thing that has me confused about this country is we think it is wrong to spank our children nowadays, that it is abuse, but yet we advocate taking a cane to them, leaving them with scars, and the memory of the extreme amount of pain. What's wrong with us?

Apologies proffered by Safety Escort Service

On behalf of the Safety Escort Service, we would like to express our sincere apologies to the escortees who were escorted Friday, April 8. It seems that there were certain escorts who made lewd, crude, and very offensive comments over the radio while on escort runs. They also caused many complaints to be made at the MU for being loud, offensive, and using extremely foul language. While they never made any comments to the escortees themselves, their behavior was not acceptable at all. These escorts will be reprimanded and fired thanks to the actions of Ms. Nelson and Mr. Genna, director and assistant director respectively. We are choosing not to name the offenders because of their political ties to ASASU's executive offices. It makes us sick to see that a service like this becomes a political stepping stone for certain executive office candidates. If that wasn't bad enough, they have to act crude and give the Safety Escort Service a bad reputation. An example of this would be to discuss with one another, over the radios, how they are going to "pick up girls" at the local bar after work; and how they will "take the girls home." One candidate has even had the gonads to leave his beeper number so that we could contact him if he was needed; then not respond to his beeper for thirty minutes. Well, once again, our sincerest apologies for their unacceptable behavior and we hope that this isolated incident hasn't deterred you from using the Safety Escort Service.

Let's see the commitment after the election, guys

This letter is in response to Chad Wolett's letter in the April 13 edition of the State Press and concerns this whole issue of renaming Sun Devil Stadium and the UAC. ASASU never ceases to amaze me.

Wolett, I found one particular sentence in your letter to be particularly ironic: You stated that "someone needs to stand up once in a while against what is popular and encourage discussion on campus issues." I found this statement to be an oxymoron coming from you. Did you "stand up against what is popular" when the ASASU Senate voted to repeal funding from STARS Association the day before their event, after Vice President Tima, at the time, had signed and approved the funding? Did you even inform STARS that the senate was contemplating this decision? I know you were not the only one involved, and therefore these questions are also addressed to all parties involved.

I definitely see this name change proposal by you as a political move. If you were so concerned about honoring these great leaders, why did you not make this proposal last semester or at the beginning of this semester? After all, you have been in office for almost a year. Why two weeks before the elections? Furthermore, why pick two of the most highly visible facilities on campus to rename? Facilities that you knew would evoke public attention and interest! As for Kurt Wilhelm's amendment for Wolett's proposal, the same reasoning applies. He is just jumping on the political band wagon and hoping to secure some votes for the election.

Personally, none of these last minute political ploys impress me. They only reinforce my notion of "politics as usual" and shows me how low people will stoop to secure votes. Whatever happened to campaigns like Rossie Turman's that were based on honesty, integrity and a true concern for students' needs? Well, I think that the true test of these political candidates' sincerity in regards to this issue will be seen after the elections. We will see if they will adamantly pursue these proposals after the elections. We will see if they will adamantly pursue these proposals after they have lost the bid for presidency or if these proposals will fall to the roadside once political aspirations are no longer a motive!

NASA hosts conference at ASU

Local businesses encouraged to participate in regional event

BY DAVID STROW
STATE PRESS

Attention small business owners! Has NASA got a deal for you. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration is hosting a three-day regional conference in the MU, and small business owners are definitely invited.

"(NASA) is really focusing on small business contracts," said Kathy Langdon, spokeswoman for the Tempe Convention and Visitors Bureau. "You would be surprised at the number of businesses involved."

One hundred and sixty businesses from seven states are registered participants, ranging from big name corporations such as Boeing, Allied Signal, and McDonnell Douglas, to small local businesses.

"We are focusing on small businesses doing business with the federal government and with primary contractors," said Eugene Rosen of NASA Headquarters in Washington, D.C. "We are really encouraging subcontracting."

Despite the amount of exposure the huge corporations receive, 98 percent of America's businesses are small businesses, a figure that is growing due to downsizing, according to Rosen.

"The percentage is going up," he said. "A lot of companies are laying off, and people are creating their own business. So while the bigger companies are downsizing, many new small businesses are being born, and we're seeking out those businesses."

NASA is primarily interested in technical firms and support services. Rosen said that 22 percent of the space agency's budget goes into computer software and hardware.

However, not all contracts are technical in nature. "NASA is a business, just like any other business," Langdon said. "They need janitorial services, paper supply services, and the like, just like any other company. "You don't have to help build spaceships to be involved." Even though the conference is under the banner of the space agency, NASA is not the only government agency in attendance, nor is it the only one seeking contractors.

NASA's $10.5 billion contracting budget is dwarfed by:

- Veteran's Administration: $35 billion.
- United States Army: $40 billion.
- Social Security Department: $45 billion.
- United States Air Force: $45 billion.

"People have a mistaken assumption that it is difficult to do business with the government," Rosen said. "Part of what we're trying to do is dispel those ideas. Doing business with the government is like doing business with your neighbor. You might get into disputes, but you work those out."

While all businesses are being sought out, many contractors are paying special attention to minority-owned and women-owned businesses.

"We've been looking for minority-owned and disadvantaged businesses," said Becky Oredsen, small/minority business administrator for McDonnell Douglas Helicopter Company. "Those companies usually have the hardest time finding business."

Eight percent of McDonnell Douglas' business comes from NASA.

"They're pretty big for us," Oredsen said. This is the first year that ASU has hosted the conference, which comes to an end on Friday. Co-sponsors include the City of Tempe, the Tempe Chamber of Commerce, Arizona Public Service, Norwest Bank Arizona, First Interstate Bank and Salt River Project.

"We're not doing it for the money," said Trish Saelens, assistant director of the MU. "We feel that the University needs to be involved in the community."

Media critic points out business' biases

BY JASON HILL
STATE PRESS

Freedom of the press is dead. Corporations and censorship have taken over, according to Norman Solomon, a media critic and nationally syndicated columnist who spoke Thursday to approximately 65 people in the ASU Architecture Building.

"There's not a single newspaper in this country with a daily labor section," Solomon said.

"Yet every newspaper in the country will have a business section whose primary sources are CEOs and managers," he added.

This media bias leaves the attitude of the common people unheard, according to Solomon.

The large corporation also influenced the media outlets, which it owns, during the Gulf War.

NBC, which is operated by General Electric, earned millions through military contracts during the war but Tom Brokaw never uttered a word about his network's profits, according to Solomon.

"We (Americans) have this myth that to have censorship it must be 100 percent. In our country, censorship is not 100 percent but is hidden in catch phrases and buzzwords," said Solomon.

Solomon then compared the buzzwords used by politicians and other powerful people to "white noise."

"We get a lot of white noise these days. White noise is like a big appliance that is loud and hums. We are becoming so used to it (the buzzwords) that we don't really hear it that much," Solomon said, emphasizing the word hear.

After Solomon's discussion, ASU adjunct professor John Minett asked for the solutions to the problem.

"I agree with what you've said, now I just want to know if there is any way out of this predicament," Minett said.

Solomon said that the "hope" for a free press lies in the involvement of grass roots campaigns which can fight to get other views into print and broadcast mediums.

"Like the anti-war and civil rights movements, a movement for fairness in media must also come from the bottom up instead of the top-down," Solomon said.

Sakena Marshall, ASASU lecture series director said Solomon was a top selection by her organization for a lecture.

"He is a very controversial speaker," Marshall said.

Candidate wants write-in votes disqualified

BY GREG ZEMEIDA
STATE PRESS

A disgruntled ASASU write-in candidate has asked the ASASU election commission to declare all write-in votes cast for senate offices during this week's elections invalid due to a mix-up with ballot forms.

Rob Gresser, a write-in candidate for senator from the College of Business, stated in a complaint to the group that official write-in ballot forms were not used during this week's ASASU elections. Instead, substitute forms were used, causing students to be confused about how to vote for write-in candidates.

He said the substitute forms, which were simply blank pieces of yellow paper folded over the ballots, had nothing on them to indicate how to vote for write-in candidates.

"The biggest reason why I (filed the complaint) was because it created a confusing election process in which I didn't feel the write-in candidates had a fair chance," Gresser said.

"I just want a fair election process for everyone."

ASASU Election Coordinator Jonell Lucca, who the complaint was filed against, said the system used to gather the write-in votes was fair.

She refused to comment on the reason why the official ballots were not used until she receives notification about the complaint from the commission.

Adena Bernstein, chairperson of the election commission, said the group will meet today to discuss the complaint. She said they want to get a written statement from Lucca before making any decisions.

Gresser has requested that the senatorial elections be held again next week in conjunction with the run-off elections.

"If that's possible for us to do, and that's the way the commission decides in favor of, then those will be the steps taken," Bernstein said.

Election results for all offices will be made public today at 5 p.m. on Hayden West Lawn.

If the commission rules in favor of Gresser, the senator elections may be considered invalid, Bernstein said.

Smoking not addictive, claims tobacco industry

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cigarettes are not an addiction but merely a pleasurable habit, much like a morning cup of coffee or a dessert, the nation's top tobacco executives told Congress on Thursday.

But in often angry exchanges, lawmakers charged cigarette makers with trivializing and suppressing information about the health impact of their products.

"You and I both know that Twinkies don't kill a single American," said Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif. "The difference between cigarettes and Twinkies and the other products you mentioned is death."

The chiefs of the nation's seven largest tobacco companies spent more than six hours Thursday testifying before the House Energy and Commerce health subcommittee, which Waxman chairs, about what goes into cigarettes and whether they're dangerous.

The hearing was sparked by the Food and Drug Administration's consideration of whether to regulate cigarettes. If the FDA decides companies manipulate nicotine in cigarettes, it could label the chemical a drug.

The government blames smoking for some 400,000 deaths a year. But the cigarette makers denied there is proof cigarettes cause lung cancer, heart disease and a host of other ailments.

They denied ever manipulating the amount of nicotine in cigarettes and they denied that the chemical is addictive. If it were, they said, 40 million Americans couldn't have kicked the habit since 1974.

"I have a common-sense definition of addiction," said Philip Morris President William Campbell. "I'm a smoker and I'm not a drug addict."

"We do not do anything to hook smokers or keep them hooked," added James Johnston, chairman and chief executive of R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. "We no more manipulate nicotine in cigarettes than coffee makers manipulate caffeine."

Tollefson favors 'diet plan' for federal budget problem

Congressional candidate proposes limits on welfare to trim the 'fat'

JOHN SULLIVAN
STATE PRESS

Bert Tollefson would like the federal government to go on a diet.

Tollefson, 64, is a local realtor and a candidate for the U.S. 1st Congressional District in Arizona. He said he favors removing the "fat" from the federal budget. He said this would include "A to Z sessions," where legislators prioritize funded programs on an individual basis.

Although the program is not established yet, Tollefson said it would be a part of the Republican alternative to the Clinton budget, which raises taxes and increases spending.

Tollefson said he is particularly interested in putting limits on welfare entitlements.

"I'm a humanitarian, but I don't want a welfare system that encourages illegitimacy. Right now it's set up in a way that gives an incentive for young single mothers to have another (child) and get that much more money," Tollefson said.

He added that there are already too many babies that are not being adopted.

"That's maybe too blunt, but let's deal with reality," said Tollefson.

Tollefson said that while he favors freedom of choice when it comes to the issue of abortion, he also would vote for the Hyde Amendment, which would forbid the federal funding of abortions.

While I have a pro-life inclination, I don't want the government in anybody's bedroom," said Tollefson.

Tollefson said his background in the federal government gives him a unique perspective on international affairs from other candidates in the race. He served as an ambassador-ranking official in the U.S. State Department and Chief of the U.S. Mission in Kenya.

"I'm the only candidate that's ever worn the uniform," said Tollefson.

Tollefson said that he will be a "people's congressman, mainly because he is not in debt to any special-interest groups.

"Some of my opponents are vulnerable at times to special interests and as that surfaces they cannot win on a district wide race," said Tollefson.

Dr. Bruce Merrill of the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism said that although Tollefson has a great deal of experience at federal level, he doesn't yet have the exposure or money to be considered a top candidate.

Jane Lynch, the Executive Director of the Arizona Republican Party, said that although Tollefson doesn't appear to be the current front runner, it is still too early to tell. Lynch said Tollefson's strengths are his experience at the federal level and his high degree of party activism.

Tollefson said his major support is tied to his contacts in the U.S. Congress. He said the fact he has good friends in both the Republican and Democratic parties would help him in his job as a legislator.

"I have worked with the congress over 30 years and I know how to get things done," said Tollefson.

The primary election will be held Sept. 13, and will determine the Republican and Democratic candidates for the 1st Congressional District seat being vacated by Rep. Sam Coppersmith, D-Ariz., who is running for U.S. Senate.

Judge says he was unaware of Tempe court controversy

PHOENIX (AP) — Lots of people knew about problems at the Tempe City Court but no one came forward to report suspicions, state officials say.

"How come if all this has been going on, how come nobody said anything," Arizona Supreme Court Chief Justice Stanley Feldman said Wednesday. "Well someone said, 'Everyone knew.' Who was everyone? Why didn't anyone say anything?"

Feldman released a report Wednesday on the alleged mismanagement and possible illegal actions by the former presiding judge of the Tempe court.

The 34-page report, prepared over two months by court administrators, indicated former Tempe City Court Presiding Judge Stephen Mirretti spent only a fraction of his time on court matters and suggested his actions were unethical and possibly illegal.

Some of the findings of the report will go to the State Bar, the Commission on Judicial Conduct and the Attorney General's Office, Feldman said.

Mirretti, who was appointed to the bench in 1977, has an unlisted home telephone number and could not be immediately reached for comment.

Mirretti resigned Feb. 4, setting off the investigation into his dealings and leading the Supreme Court to take control of the court.

Feldman and interim court administrator John Greco said Wednesday that many of the Tempe court problems were already addressed or being dealt with currently.

"As far as the morale problems, I think we're long past that," said Greco. "This is a milestone, though. We just want to put everything behind us. You have to remember that during all of this, we never closed our doors."

The report alleges Mirretti spent less than 25 percent of his work time on the bench prior to April 1993, after which he stopped hearing cases but continued administrative duties.

The report also says questions were raised that court funds may have been used by Mirretti in gambling and business dealings but that poor record keeping kept Supreme Court staff from being able to track down whether the money was missing at all.

An accounting firm has found a $61,000 difference between court accounts and the city ledger, the report said. The city and court were trying to reconcile the accounts, the report said.

The report also said an undetermined number of cases were handled improperly in the court, particularly in drunken-driving and traffic violations. Some DUI cases were automatically dismissed by Mirretti, who said he was unaware of any such dismissals, the report said.

All DUI cases are being reviewed by the court, Feldman said.

The judge also was accused in the report of improper personal and business relationships with court employees and city officials.

David Byers, director of the state Administrative Office of the Courts, said the problems were worse than any other in the 35 reviews of lower courts throughout the state.

"Certainly the city of Tempe did not get what it deserved to get, which was a court operating properly with integrity and doing justice," Feldman said.

Using sunscreen no guarantee against skin cancer, study says

ANGELIQUE MEDOW
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Sunscreens are regarded by many as a lotion for cancer-free sunbathing, but new research suggests it offers little if no protection against melanoma skin cancer.

The Jan. 19 issue of the Journal of the National Cancer Institute, contained a study conducted by researchers at the M.D. Anderson Cancer Center of the University of Texas in Houston. This study suggests that "sunscreens do not protect against the ultraviolet spectra that probably cause melanoma and therefore may mislead consumers into the mistaken belief that these products shield against this especially virulent form of skin cancer."

Because using sunscreen with a minimum sun protection factor of 15 has been proven to decrease the overall occurrence of skin cancer, SPF 15 was recommended as a method of reducing the chance of getting all types of skin cancers: basal cell, squamous cell, and melanoma.

Researchers at the JNCI also suggested that "since sunscreens did protect against sunburn, swelling and non-melanoma skin cancer (basal and squamous), it would also shield against melanoma cancer."

Unfortunately, "most sunscreens provide limited protection against the UV spectra linked to melanoma, which can be the most deadly," they said.

Sunscreen is still an important part of skin protection.

Danae Rodriguez, senior health educator at ASU's Student Health Center, said that since "sun and skin damage are a co-factor to the development of melanoma, then we assume that sunscreen will protect against the factors that produce melanoma."

San Diego epidemiologist Dr. Cedric said that although sunscreens do not protect against melanoma cancers, sunscreens with a minimum SPF of 15 reduce lifetime incidence of non-melanoma cancers by 78 percent.

Mary Jo Devall, media coordinator for the American Cancer Society, said that "of the 500,000 sun-related cases of skin cancer in 1993, one-half of those could probably have been avoided using sunscreens regularly."

"32,000 of the 500,00 cases were melanoma cancers. Almost 6,700 of the 32,000 cases died."

Devall also said Arizona is the state with the highest incidence of all types of skin cancers.

The American Cancer Society and the Food and Drug Administration have not published any articles to deny or support the findings about the connection between sunscreen and skin cancer because research discoveries are so recent.

Dr. Stephen Kessler, a Phoenix dermatologist said, "Until the FDA makes a decision verifying that melanomas can't be avoided through the efficient use of sunscreens, we will continue to advise our patients according to current FDA standards."

Law barring gay marriages upheld

TUCSON (AP) — Saying the "moral judgments are generally left in the hands of the Legislature," a judge has refused to overturn a state law cited by an official who refused to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples.

A suit filed Aug. 27 by two male couples and two female couples contended that the law cited by Pima County Superior Court Clerk James Corbett violates their rights to privacy and equal protection under the law.

The law states a marriage license is to be issued only to couples that include one male and one female.

Superior Court Judge Bernardo Velasco ruled Wednesday that it is up to the Legislature to decide whether gay couples should be allowed to marry.

"In Arizona, moral judgments are generally left in the hands of the Legislature," Velasco wrote in a four-page ruling denying the couples' motion for a pre-trial ruling in their favor.

"The statutory definition of marriage is a passive recognition of Arizona's societal desires," he continued. "Arizona's marriage statute was not enacted to discriminate selectively against any particular individuals. It merely codifies what has traditionally been defined as marriage."

Paul Gattone, an attorney representing the couples, said Velasco's ruling gives lawmakers too much latitude to determine whether the laws they pass are constitutional.

"Legislators have their own set agendas and viewpoints, and very often they pass laws that will not pass a constitutional challenge," Gattone said. "Historically we turn to the courts to make that determination."

Corbett said he was pleased by Velasco's ruling. "I believe the Legislature must change the law if it's to be changed," he said.

The plaintiffs in the case — Jerry Callender and Antonio Muniz, John Duran and Stephen Baker, Eileen Maura Jutras and Lizbeth M. Petrucci, and Kathy Greaves and Alleen Jacinta McMurrer — were denied marriage licenses by Corbett.

The lawsuit sought a ruling declaring the law unconstitutional, an order forcing Corbett to issue marriage licenses to the couples and an injunction preventing the future denial of licenses based on that law.

Gattone compared Velasco's ruling to trial court decisions in the 1960s that upheld state laws prohibiting interracial marriages. Those decisions were appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, which struck down such laws in 1967.

"The court ruled those statutes were unconstitutional because they violated the constitutional guarantee of equal protection," he said. "We've proceeded on the same theory in this case."

Gattone said he plans to appeal the ruling, but that he is unsure about the status of the lawsuit. While Velasco denied the couples' motion for summary judgment — which asked him to grant their demands without a trial — he did not rule on a defense motion for summary judgment.

Velasco said he did not expect any more hearings in the case in his court, but Gattone said he would press for a trial if the judge does not dismiss the lawsuit.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — He's hip. He's cool. He's adored by the MTV crowd. Tony Bennett?

"It's so exciting and it's thrilling for me to be accepted by the young and be considered hip and cool," the crooner told The Chattanooga Times in a telephone interview.

On Tuesday night, the 67-year-old Bennett taped an "MTV Unplugged" to be shown in May. His "Steppin' Out" video gets heavy play on MTV.

Cool, Bennett said, is more than just a great voice.

"Cool is knowing how to keep control of yourself even when things around you aren't as smooth as you might wish," he said. "In some type of crisis, if you can continue to make the best of the situation, that's cool."

Bennett won two Grammys for his 1962 "I Left My Heart In San Francisco." The other was in 1993 for his Frank Sinatra tribute "Perfectly Frank."

NEW YORK (AP) — Geraldine Ferraro is playing God.

The former vice presidential and Senate candidate will appear in Columbia University's annual varsity show.

"God sets the whole shebang in motion, sending our human heroes out on extraordinary adventures. God gets the funniest lines, too," said student-producer Rita Pietropinto.

The show, which opened Wednesday, is about three Columbia students sent back to Earth by God to find material for the varsity show's centennial production.

"So many people have told me that I am always trying to play God," Ferraro said. "Now I am finally going to end up a winner."

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Comedian Paul Rodriguez credits his roots in the barrio of East Los Angeles with helping him get his anti-drug message through to kids.

"For young Chicanos and young blacks, in our neighborhoods, the rules are different than in suburbia," he said. "In our neighborhoods, the guy who can steal the car the quickest and the guy who is the biggest and strongest have the attributes that are rewarded."

Rodriguez used humor rooted in his childhood to preach against drugs in two appearances Wednesday before thousands of young people at the University of Arizona.

"I basically tell them the same message that they've heard, but with a little humor," he said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tickets for two concerts by the Los Angeles Philharmonic sold out in 25 minutes in conductor Esa-Pekka Salonen's native Finland.

"Big family," the symphony's conductor and music director said at a news conference Wednesday.

Salonen said it's a big event for the Finns when a major U.S. orchestra visits, and that's why the two Helsinki concerts Aug. 26 and 27 "were sold out in 25 minutes."

"It's terrifying," Salonen joked.

The last one will conclude with music by Sibelius, composer of "Finlandia."

"The prospect is even more horrifying to play Sibelius in Helsinki," Salonen said.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — It's time for Phyllis George to return to the tube.

The former sportscaster will have a series of specials featuring celebrity interviews on cable TV's The Nashville Network beginning in June.

"Timing is everything in life and now is the time for me to go back to work on television," she said in a statement Thursday. "I've missed it."

Devils clash in annual spring game

Fans will see new faces at scrimmage

BY JULIE REUVERS
STATE PRESS

Before they line up to face Miami, Louisville or BYU — three bowl teams slated for their non-conference schedule — members of the ASU football team must first take a look at themselves.

The Maroon and Gold scrimmage, ASU's annual spring football game, kicks off Saturday morning at 10:30 in Sun Devil Stadium.

With close to a dozen Sun Devils sitting out this spring either rehabilitating or for academic reasons, the controlled scrimmage should give plenty of inexperienced players extra time on the field.

"It really isn't a game, but what it will do is some of the young kids that have never been in that stadium and been in a place where there's an audience — it will give them a taste of being in a game," ASU coach Bruce Snyder said.

Five players are still recovering from surgeries performed last season. Defensive tackle Mike Balian, inside linebacker Justin Drago and offensive guard Pat Thompson underwent reconstructive knee surgery and were limited to minor participation during spring drills. Wide receiver Joe Robertson

The No. 5 ASU men's golf team joins five of the nation's top-10 teams — Oklahoma State (No. 1), Stanford (3), UNLV (4), Oklahoma (6) and Texas (7) — as play opens today in the 14-school Thunderbird Invitational at Karsten Golf Course.

ASU is after its fifth team title in six years at the 22nd annual event, after its four-year winning streak was snapped last year. Intrastate rival UofA bested the Sun Devils by four strokes and Arkansas by one to claim first and second.

UofA, Arkansas and BYU are the other three top-20 teams set to do battle this year.

Competitors play 36 holes today, followed by 18 on Saturday.

Two teams will represent the Sun Devils, an approach which ASU Coach Randy Lein said often works to the advantage of the home team. At last year's Thunderbird Invitational, the No. 2 ASU

"Sometimes the kids feel more comfortable and you like to take that chance," Lein said of playing two teams on ASU's home course.

Lein automatically named Todd Demsey and Chris Stutts to the ASU-Gold team; the remaining Sun Devils had to qualify for spots earlier this week.

Demsey, the returning NCAA champion, has the team's second-lowest stroke average (72.7). He finished first in the Nike/Southwest Invitational, held March 27-28 in Westlake, Calif.

Demsey was the only amateur to make the cut in the Phoenix Open last month at the TPC Course in Scottsdale. He carded a four-round total of 284

Christian Hills, Cade Stone and Larry Barber round out the Gold team anchored by Demsey and Stutts. Jim Granat, Chris Hanell, Joey Snyder, Scott Johnson and Chris Ferguson make up the Maroon lineup.

ASU's Oskar Pallacio, Hunter Johnson and Richard Barber will compete individually.

Think of it as Athens vs. Sparta. Think of it as Ali vs. Frazier. Think of it the Hatfields vs. the McCoy's.

Another chapter will be written of the classic rivalry between the ASU and USC baseball programs when they kick off a crucial three-game series tonight at Dedeaux Field in Los Angeles.

Tonight's game begins at 7 p.m. while Saturday and Sunday's games start at 1 p.m. ESPN will televise tonight's game on a tape-delayed basis on April 19 at 10 a.m.

The seventh-ranked Sun Devils (30-12 overall, 12-6 Six-Pac) enter the weekend tied for second in the conference with Stanford, a half-game behind the No. 3 Trojans (28-11, 14-7). These games aren't just a renewal of acquaintances, it's also a battle for Six-Pac supremacy.

Still, Coach Jim Brock isn't putting too much weight on the results of this series.

"There's a lot of season left," he said. "12 conference games out of 30 left, so a lot of things happen between now and the end."

The expected starting pitcher match-ups are ASU's Jason Bond (4-1, 2.68 ERA) vs. Tony Nieto (4-7, 3.61) tonight, Billy Neal (4-4, 4.45) vs. Randy Flores (6-0, 1.42) Saturday and Kaipio Spenser (7-0, 4.17) vs. Scott Henderson (3-1, 3.86) Sunday.

While the pennant race adds more spice to the series, the history between the two schools is enough to fill a book which someone, somewhere needs to write. After all, catcher Todd Cady considers the Men of Troy to be "more our rivals than UofA."

Consider these choice bits of history

ASU designated hitter Senn Tyler has not only raised his batting average nearly 40 points in the past month; he also leads the team with 15 stolen bases. Tyler and his teammates venture to Los Angeles to play a three-game series against Six-Pac leader USC.

Even with the restored eligibility of ASU's top singles players, the No. 27 Sun Devil men's tennis team fell to 26th-ranked UofA Thursday afternoon at Whiteman Tennis Center.

The Sun Devils (8-11, 0-10) put up a good fight but faded toward the end of the match, allowing UofA (9-9 overall, 3-7 Pac-10) to power their way to a 4-3 win.

Sargis Sargsian and Eric Brunner were cleared by the NCAA to resume play after being declared ineligible for two games. They were among 60 players nationwide deemed ineligible for violation of NCAA rules.

Paul Reber, who beat Wildcat Brandon Hearn, 6-2, 7-5, said this loss against UofA is especially disappointing.

"It's (the rivalry) not as bad as football or basketball but sure, we hate losing to them," Reber said. "But compared to football, there's not the same amount of hype."

Reber also said that the team remained focused despite not knowing who was going to play and at what spot until right before the match.

Although Brunner was back in action, he struggled against Jason Appel, who won 6-1, 6-2.

Brunner said he is still recovering from a torn chest muscle and groin injury. And the road back to healthy play has been a long one.

In other singles play, No. 4 Sargis Sargsian defeated Jan Anderson in three grueling sets, 6-4, 3-6, 6-1.

The Sun Devils swept the doubles matches. The team of Sargsian and Peter Jeschke, ranked No. 2 in the nation, defeated Appel and Sten Sumberg 8-2, while Reber and Sergio Elias defeated Hearn and Matthew Foote 8-4. In the No. 3 spot, Wolf von Lindenau defeated Edward Schwartz and James Rey 8-5.

Another factor that ASU now has to consider in team play is the heat. As the weather heats up, the diet of the team changes. To keep up their energy during play, the team eats two things before each meet.

"Peanut butter and bananas," said Sun Devil Dennis Roberts. "You eat a lot of peanut butter before each match to give you energy. It helps you not to cramp."

"Yep, peanut butter and bananas are the key," added Brunner.

The Sun Devils now travel to Notre Dame, sans peanut butter, to face the Fighting Irish on Monday.

Reber said the team is looking forward to the last regular-season match against Notre Dame.

"Coach (Lou Belken) believes that we have a chance, so he put them in our schedule," Reber said. "I think we do. We definitely have a chance to beat them."

Softball hosts 49ers

BY TODD KELLY
STATE PRESS

In preparation for tonight's game against No. 18 Long Beach State, the ASU softball team had a light-hearted, loose practice Thursday, while adjusting to the loss of senior second baseman Anna Flores.

Flores left the team Tuesday, opening up second base for freshman Jayme Jenkins. Jenkins is hitting .299 in 30 games this season, and was on tap to take over second base next year.

"But it's kind of unfortunate what happened with Anna," Jenkins said. "She was someone I looked up to, you know, to learn how to play the position next year ... both mental and physical aspects."

Flores, a nursing major, felt that she needed more time to devote to her studies.

"My reasons for leaving the team were purely academical," Flores said. "Our losing record had nothing to do with it. I had to make school a priority."

"The nursing program is not easy. I'm also doing an internship at a hospital and I got overwhelmed. The way the schedule is set up, we're traveling more at the end of the season, and there is no time to study on road trips. It got too difficult."

Flores' departure leaves shortstop Amy

Day as the only upperclassman in the infield.

In fact, Day is one of only four seniors on the team. That means third baseman Alyssa Johnson, first baseman Jeanne Redondo, center fielder Lisa Dacquisto, and two pitchers, Carrie James and Jessica Niebuhr, are getting a lot of playing time.

Long Beach State, coming off a split with UC Santa Barbara Wednesday, comes in with a 21-17 record (8-8 Big West). Stacy Van Essen leads the 49ers with a .331 batting average, followed closely by Linda Luceford, at .330. However, the team batting average is only .248.

Van Essen leads the pitching staff as well, with a 1.48 ERA. The team ERA is 1.81, but it faces an ASU line-up that has five players at .283 or higher. Dacquisto leads the team in hitting with a .394 average and Johnson is hitting .354.

"I'm really impressed by some position players," Wells said. "Alyssa Johnson has not only played well, but remarkably well in light of the fact that the team has struggled. And it would be hard not to talk about Dacquisto. Offensively, she's been a surprise. Wendy Johnson has been the same. Wendy I would especially credit because she's a senior."

Football

has had surgery on both shoulders, keeping him out of pads and away from full contact. Defensive end Ken Talanoa is recovering from a broken wrist.

All-Pac-10 cornerback Craig Newsome has missed part of spring practice to concentrate on academics, as have wide receiver Jason McCorvey and defensive tackle Bryan Proby. Wide receiver Johnny Thomas and defensive end Brent Burnstein have missed all three weeks.

"The positive side to that is it allows us to develop depth," Snyder said of the experienced players sitting out. "If Proby were here, then maybe Manny Carbajal wouldn't get as much work. If Dragoo were out there, maybe (Sam) Santana wouldn't get as much."

"So there is a positive side to it. But once we get our players academically and physically healthy, then we have a chance to be a pretty good football team."

Despite the absences of McCorvey and Thomas, two of the team's top-three receivers, senior Clyde McCoy feels the unit will not suffer. He said he thinks Thomas will use the summer to compensate for his missed time.

"I believe J.T. (Thomas) will be working real hard over the summer and he'll be ready," McCoy said.

The Sun Devils have just two practices (April 18 and 19) remaining after the Maroon and Gold scrimmage. McCoy said several of his teammates have worked hard and shown enthusiasm for Saturday's events.

"I know a lot of the players are trying to treat this like a real situation," he said. "A lot of the guys will see their first chance getting to play. ... Every time we go out there on the field we have to take it as a game situation."

ASU looks to overcome losses

Women's tennis takes on UNM, UCSD without Schad

BY ELIZABETH APPELEN
STATE PRESS

Remember the old saying, "If you fall off your horse, you have to get right back in the saddle"?

Well, after two losses last weekend and the recent loss of its No. 2 player, the 12th-ranked ASU women's tennis team will be mounting their saddle again at 1:30 p.m. today against New Mexico and noon Saturday against No. 21 Cal-San Diego at the Whiteman Tennis Center.

The team's recent losses to California and Stanford are not the only challenges that the Sun Devils face. The recent discovery of the possible NCAA rule violations by numerous collegiate tennis players has caused ASU to lose one of their top players for both of the matches this weekend.

ASU's No. 2 player Joelle Schad will be excluded from this weekend's line-ups because she participated in the Women's Tennis Association tournaments, according to ASU coach Sheila McInerney. Schad only competed three times at the WTA tournament during the years 1991, 1992 and 1993, but because she was paid to attend the tournaments, she must be suspended for 10 percent of the matches, which amounts to two matches for this season, according to McInerney.

"We are just being cautious," McInerney said. "We have received no formal letter ... informing us of Joelle's suspension."

According to McInerney, Schad received about $1,800 for her competition in the WTA tournaments, but she also spent about $6,700 to participate in them. As long as Schad sits out the two matches this weekend and fills out the necessary documents, she should have no problem getting her eligibility back in time for the Pac-10 Championships April 21-24 in Ojai, Calif.

McInerney said the Sun Devils will not let the loss of Schad get them down for the upcoming matches.

"We're just going to go out and play ... you can't find reasons to lose," McInerney said.

Despite ASU's tough week, Sun Devil Kori Davidson remains a consistent bright spot on the ASU team. Davidson is ranked 11th in the nation, but after last weekend's win over first-ranked Laxmi Poruri of Stanford, her ranking is sure to go even higher. Davidson's overall record is 25-8.

Davidson has not only been an overpowering opponent in singles competition, but she and her teammate Meredith Geiger have also been laying down a trail of triumphs in doubles competition. The duo is ranked 20th in the nation and has a record of 14-4.

"In doubles, we're playing better than ever," Geiger said. "We go out there and we expect to win because we play to win."

ASU should face tough competition in both matches this week which will give the Sun Devils a good chance to play some strong teams before heading to the Pac-10 Championships.

Craig Macnaughton/State Press
Meredith Geiger and the rest of the ASU women's tennis team will face challenges from visiting New Mexico and UCSD beginning today.

between the Sun Devils and Trojans:

•USC defeated ASU three times in the championship game of the College World Series during the 70s (1972, 1973, 1978.)

•Four years ago, the teams got into a brawl of such massive proportions during a game at Packard Stadium, ASU Department of Public Safety sent officers to restore order. It took eight player ejections and a 40-minute delay before the game could be resumed.

•Earlier this season in the third game of an ASU series victory, Trojan bench-jockies rode mercurial Sun Devil reliever Noah Peery so hard, he retaliated with trash talk of his own. Peery's actions angered Coach Jim Brock and he punished his relief ace by making him run 40 miles.

Apparently, USC players have a habit of smack-talking.

"USC is real cocky. They'll be talking this weekend," Cady said. This time around, ASU may experience some deja vu. Last season, the Sun Devils entered Dedeaux from an April series a half-game behind the Trojans. Three wins later, ASU emerged with its first-ever sweep of USC in Los Angeles and the team turned into "something special," according to Brock.

"This series is a pivotal point for us," third baseman Antone Williamson said. "(Winning) two of three puts us in a nice position. We can't expect a sweep."

While ASU isn't expecting a repeat of last season's feat, the team is confident enough to make some brash predictions.

"USC is overrated, and I guarantee we'll win two of three," left fielder Billy McGonigle said.

Ballplayers not goofing off

DETROIT (AP) — Baseball players who go into a slump after signing long-term contracts aren't goofing off, they're just returning to their normal performance levels, a new study says.

Free agents pump themselves up and perform well above expectation the year before they hit the job market, according to a study by University of Michigan psychology student Todd Lebowitz.

"In the season before players become free agents, they get supermotivated," Lebowitz said. "Then, when the long-term contract is finally signed, there is a decline in performance, but the decline is only to the level typical of similar caliber players at the same age."

To measure players' performance, Lebowitz used their slugging percentage, which he said is a better indicator of offensive performance than batting average. Slugging percentage, a reflection of power, is calculated by dividing total bases — solely on hits — by the number of at-bats.

The study took 62 players from the 1990s and matched each with the player from the 1960s whose career slugging average and age at the time most closely matched his own. Baseball free agency started in 1976.

For example, he paired Fred McGriff, with a .528 career slugging average, and Willie Stargell, who averaged .529. Cal Ripken Jr. (.458) was matched with Vada Pinson (.442).

"I expected to find a sharp decline in performance" among former free agents, Lebowitz said. "When comparing the two groups, there was no decline."

Instead, Lebowitz found a jump in performance by players who are about to hit the market.

"Players who expected to be free agents the next year generated significantly higher slugging percentages in their contract year — the year before they entered the marketplace," he said.

The following year, their performances slipped, "but the decline wasn't because the player suddenly hit so poorly," Lebowitz said. "It was because the year before they were hitting so incredibly well."

Jim Bronner, who represents more major league players than any other agent, agreed with the findings.

"My experience is players are not motivated by the dollars they receive," said Bronner, who represents Cecil Fielder, NL batting champion Andres Galarraga and Larry Walker. "They got where they are because there is something inside them that drives them. ... Their pride is what motivates them."

For Friday, April 15, 1994

ARIES
(Mar. 21 to Apr. 19)
You'll make progress with an unfinished task, but people may be slow in getting back to you in business. You may find something you like in a mail-order catalog.

TAURUS
(Apr. 20 to May 20)
You may be helping a friend out with a problem. You're likely to meet with some extra expenditures. Shopping may lead to some nice additions to your wardrobe.

GEMINI
(May 21 to June 20)
Extra responsibilities are likely to come at work. Guard against an impulsive use of credit. Watch overdoing it tonight. Romance is a plus.

CANCER
(June 21 to July 22)
You may not get as much time for yourself as you'd like.
Others make demands on your time. You'll enjoy private moments with a loved one tonight.

LEO
(July 23 to Aug. 22)
Extra duties at work may take priority over social plans. A friend proves to be a help in business. You'll have new ideas about home improvement.

VIRGO
(Aug. 23 to Sept. 22)
You and a partner will be sharing a responsibility today.
At work, don't expect much to come of big talk you hear.
Business and pleasure mix favorably tonight.

LIBRA
(Sept. 23 to Oct. 22)
You may have a heavy workload today at the office.
Double-check schedules if traveling today. There may be some mix-ups in plans. Try to keep expenditures down.

SCORPIO
(Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)
An overdue bill may come to your attention. Think twice before assuming a financial obligation for another.
Emphasize partnership interests this evening.

SAGITTARIUS
(Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)
You may have extra household duties to attend to. A person you deal with today has trouble making up his or her mind. Don't wait forever for an answer.

CAPRICORN
(Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)
Morning hours are your best time for serious mental work.
As the day progresses, you may have a tendency to goof off a bit. Tonight accents romance.

AQUARIUS
(Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)
Be sure to stay on top of financial obligations. It's not a good day for mixing business and pleasure. You're likely to include your family in your social plans tonight.

PISCES
(Feb. 19 to Mar. 20)
Guard against a tendency to be too hard on yourself today.
Guests are likely to drop by unexpectedly. You'll have a heart-warming discussion with a relative.

YOU BORN TODAY are drawn to large enterprises in business and need a home to be happy. You are highly original, and you often become known as a person who does his or her own thing. Though you can succeed in business, you're usually happier in an artistic or professional career.
You often have an interest in politics and reform. You're a good moneymaker, but you tend to spend freely. Birthdate of: Henry James, writer;
Bessie Smith, blues singer;
and Thomas Hart Benton, painter.
