1981 ASASU high court: Campaign spending limits breach of constitution

Past ruling irrelevant, chief justice says

BY DAWN DECHRISTINA
STATE PRESS

Campaign spending limits that caused an ASASU president to be removed from office this spring had been declared unconstitutional 12 years ago in an ASASU Supreme Court decision.

Marci Hendrickson was elected Associated Students of ASU president in April and was removed from office in May for exceeding the $500 campaign spending limit by $123.81.

In a similar 1981 case, an ASASU candidate who spent more than the limit took his case to the student government's Supreme Court, which overturned the spending limit bylaw.

The court ruled that restricting campaign spending was unconstitutional and declared the policy void.

The court's 1981 ruling stated that a spending limit "reduces the quality of expression by restricting the number of issues discussed, the depth of their exploration, and the size of the audience reached."

However, the court did write that ASASU had the power to regulate the time, place and manner in which the material is disseminated.

The court also said ASASU may impose more stringent requirements on the disclosure of the candidates' sources and uses of funds as well as limits on the size of individual contributions to a candidate.

Barry Markson, current ASASU Supreme Court chief justice, defended the court's decision to remove Hendrickson, saying the limits are constitutional because bylaws created

Convicted felon fighting for graduation rights

BY LISA GONDERINGER

Whether Michael Davis gets his law degree from ASU may depend on how well he can argue a case — his case — in the courtroom.

Davis completed graduation requirements for a law degree last May, yet ASU is withholding his diploma because he did not mention on his application that he had previously attended Southwest Texas Law School.

University administrators also discovered that Davis was convicted in 1979 for assisting in the murders of a Houston couple and their baby.

Davis filed a suit Friday with the Maricopa County Superior Court, claiming it is "illegal and invalid" for ASU to keep him from graduating.

Davis' Phoenix attorney, Olin Hale, said he is serving as Davis' advisory counsel and does not yet know if he will represent Davis in court. Davis might represent himself.

The suit was filed against several defendants, including ASU, the Arizona Board of Regents, Student Affairs Vice President Christine Wilkinson and law school Dean Richard Morgan.

Representatives from Wilkinson's and Morgan's offices declined comment, referring any questions to the ASU General Counsel.

Nancy Tribbensee, associate general counsel, said ASU has not yet been served with Davis' complaint, so she could not comment on the case.

After discovering Davis' violation on his application, an ASU disciplinary committee decided July 18 to withhold Davis' diploma. Davis appealed the decision, but his request for a rehearing was denied.

Davis' suit claims the law school "failed to produce key

Professor: Ticket scalping a fair alternative to long lines

BY CHRISTINA BAILEY
STATE PRESS

Cha-Ching.

Ticket scalpers, brokers and some promoters are steadily cashing in at every major sports melee, concert extravaganza and theatrical performance around. All of which is at the "little people's expense."

Or so it would seem, said ASU economics professor Steve Happel, who believes scalping is a not only a healthy part of the economy, but without it, "the little people would be the ones who would suffer the most."

Happel and Marianne Jennings, professor of legal and ethical studies, have both studied the practice and have recently come into the spotlight with their endorsement of scalping.

Happel said scalping may not seem fair from an emotional standpoint, but from a logical standpoint, scalping seems to be the only fair alternative.

As a free-market economist, Happel said he hates price controls of any sort because they distort the marketplace.

A few years ago, Bruce Springsteen testified in New Jersey court that all of his fans were blue-collar workers and the scalpers were selling the tickets for too much, keeping his true fans from getting the good seats, Happel said.

"I have every album Springsteen ever made," Happel said. "Just because I don't want to wait in line doesn't mean I am not a true fan. All it means is that I would rather trade my money for their time."

Many promoters have adopted the first-come, first-serve policy that Happel believes is a discriminatory practice.

"I want to be able to trade my time for money," said Happel. "I value my time so highly, I think of scalpers as time-brokers. They provide a service for those people who don't have the time to stand in line or call in."

A ticket buyer for Ticket Express who would only identify himself as Mike, said he is providing a service for people who don't have the time to hang around in long lines or get tied up on the phone. He said he should be paid according to how much the tickets are worth.

"We sit in line and buy tickets like everyone else does," he said. "We have costs too. So it depends on how much we buy them for as to how much we sell them for."

"If people want to go to a concert and are willing to pay the market price, then they should be able to go," said Happel, who added that if scalping is prevented, the more productive members of society are penalized.

Doug Whitby, a senior nursing student, agrees with Happel's assessment. "People pay what the market will bear. You can call it free enterprise," Whitby said. "If they have the $300 to spend on a ticket, more power to them."

Other people disagree with Happel's opinion of scalping.

Marie Carey, athletic ticket manager, said scalping is bad because it takes away from ASU's ticket sales on the day of a big game.

"Instead of getting in line and buying a ticket for the game, people will try to buy from a scalper because they can get better seats," Carey said. "Therefore, we lose money from a walk-up purchase."

Carey and Happel would like to see changes in the scalping regulations so that situations like these would not occur.

In an article Happel and Jennings wrote on scalping, Happel suggests scalpers be able to set up outdoor booths on the night of an event, posting bid-and-ask prices. That way people would be able to shop around and see what the ticket prices are going for.

Scalpers would have to purchase inexpensive licenses, under their system. These licenses would have a basic set of rules of conduct to follow. They also would tell where they bought the tickets and how much they spend, eliminating box-office employees or pro-after the 1981 ruling state the spending caps are acceptable.

"Whatever happened in '81 has no direct effect here," Markson said. "At best, it would be used as more information to assist the current court."

Gary Kleemann, former adviser to ASASU, said any student can challenge the current bylaw if he or she thinks it's unconstitutional. However, Hendrickson cannot be reinstated even if the current bylaw is declared unconstitutional, he said.

He added that the bylaw can be taken to court and challenged for limiting the right to freedom of speech.

"We don't know if it's unconstitutional until someone takes that to court," Kleemann said.

Currently, Hendrickson is unsure if she will file a complaint to change the bylaws on campaign spending limits. She said taking the matter to court is unlikely to get her back in office.

Hendrickson said she is thinking about running for ASASU president again, but she remains leery of the idea because she said she was harassed during her campaign and after the election.

The suit also says that ASU put a permanent note on his transcript and permanently denied him the right to enroll in any classes at ASU.

Davis was contacted Tuesday by phone but declined comment.

Hale would not discuss details of the case because Davis wants to keep the case private.

"We've decided we don't want this case tried in the media," he said.

Hale said Davis was frustrated by all the "bad press" he had been getting.

Hale said earlier that he could not predict the outcome of the case if it goes to court because he did not know of similar precedents in Arizona.

This way, the people will know the market prices of the seats they want and can choose whether to buy them.

Another option is to have a Dutch auction, where tickets would be priced extremely high for a week or so and gradually decrease in cost. The best seats could sell for hundreds, if not thousands, of dollars while the less desirable seats would sell later for less.

Date rape seminar rescheduled

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The coordinator of an ASU safety seminar who became frustrated when no one attended a free date rape seminar Monday has rescheduled the event for tonight.

Radawna Michelle, acting crime prevention coordinator for ASU's Department of Public Safety, said she will teach the one-hour seminar at 6:30 p.m. at the Memorial Union in Room 215.

Michelle said she will teach the course even if just one person attends.

"We promised to do it and we're committed to helping people," she said.

The program, for men and women, will discuss how to prevent rape and how to survive a sexual assault.

The State Press incorrectly reported Tuesday that no more seminars are planned. Michelle said events on other topics such as car- and bike-theft prevention are in the works.

She also will put on about 25 seminars on various crime prevention topics for faculty and staff this semester.

Serbs organize new Muslim expulsions

TUZLA, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Serbs are showing a new determination to root out all remaining Muslims from Serb-held areas of northern Bosnia, taking over their homes and demanding they pay for bus rides to safety.

Since mid-July, more than 2,000 people have been forced from the Banja Luka region of northern Bosnia and Bijeljina in the north-east.

While the numbers are small compared to the mass expulsions at the start of the war in 1992, they represent a significant portion of the Muslims still living in those areas.

The expulsions have increased dramatically in recent weeks, and they appear to be more organized.

"These acts of ethnic cleansing are being condoned at the highest level," Peter Kessler, the Sarajevo-based spokesman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, said Tuesday.

"Should it continue, the 3,000 Muslims who remain in Bijeljina will be cleansed within one month. This is ethnic cleansing at its worst, and the Serbs should be held accountable."

The International Committee of the Red Cross demanded on Tuesday that Bosnian Serbs stop the expulsions and "guarantee the security and dignity of minorities on their territory."

Refugees said local Serb commander Vojislav Djurkovic directly takes part in some expulsions, which usually occur at night, and personally collects money from those he expels.

Senija Kahrimanovic, a 40-year-old sales assistant, said Djurkovic and two militia men came to her home on August 22.

"They shouted, banged the door, and cursed," she said in an interview Tuesday. "They were shouting at us to pack our things, but they didn't allow us to take anything."

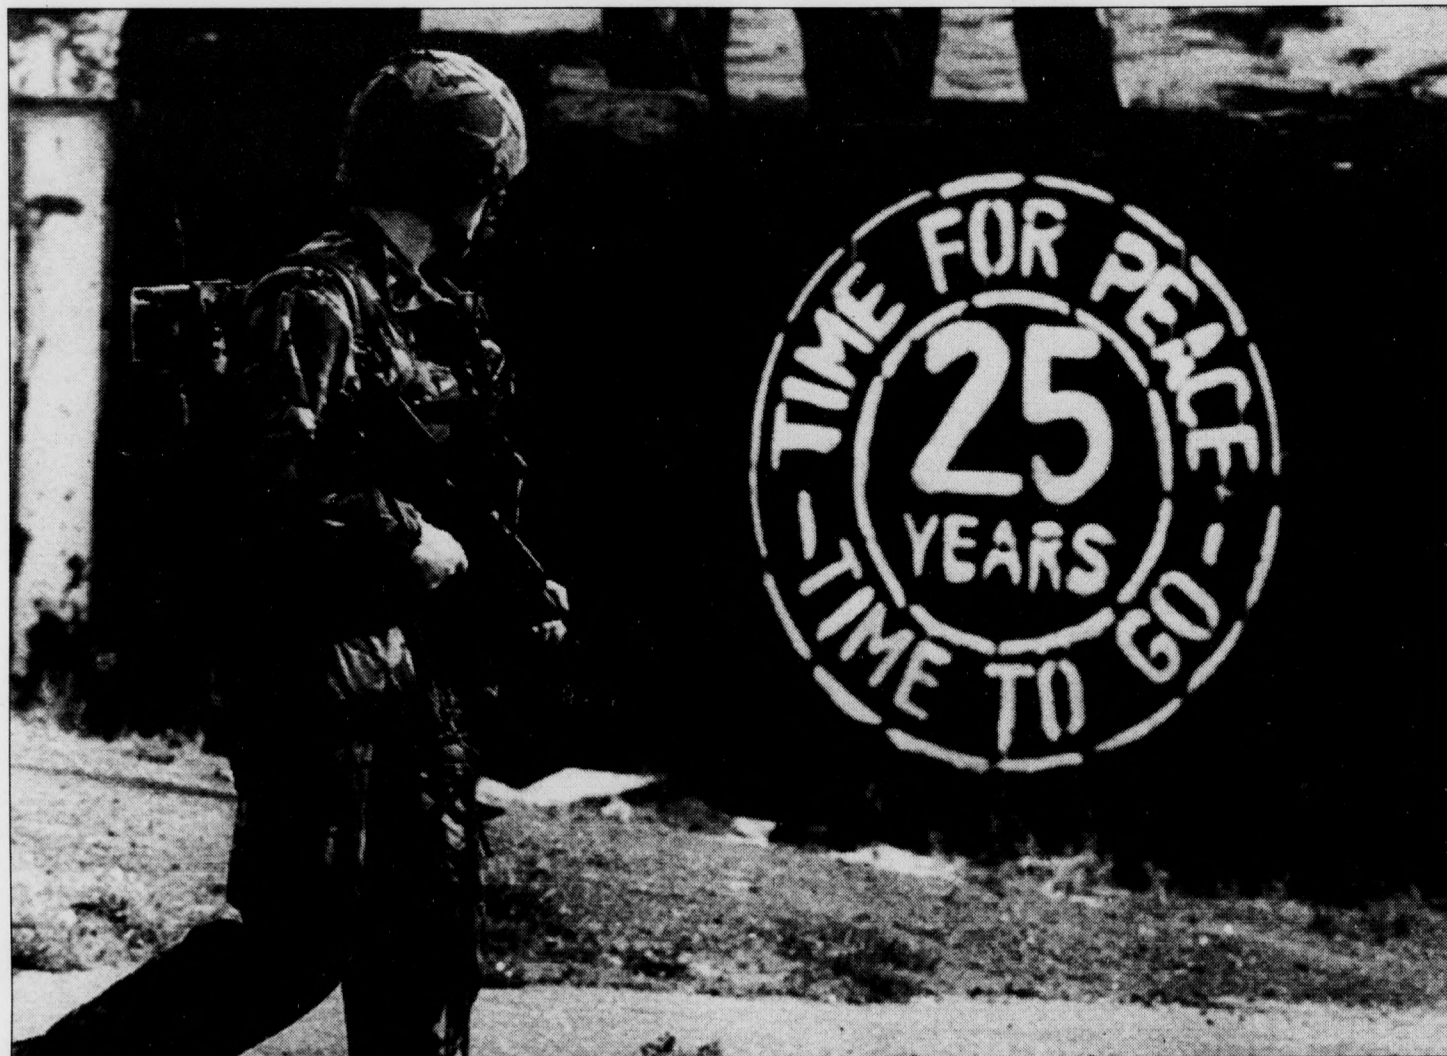

"One guy kicked my 67-year-old mother in the back, and slapped my brother," she added.

Kahrimanovic was wearing the same navy blue dress she wore when the men arrived. She has nothing else. Her mother and two ill brothers also left with little more than the clothes on their backs.

Kahrimanovic repeated the story told by most of the refugees.

She was given only minutes to leave her house, then transported to a collection center, where refugees

A British soldier patrolling in Belfast, Northern Ireland, passes one of many recent messages painted on walls hailing an expected IRA cease-fire. British troops have been deployed in Northern Ireland since 1970. Associated Press

IRA, Britain nearing peace pact

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Reports that the IRA was about to call a cease-fire after a quarter-century of bloodshed put nerves on edge Tuesday in Northern Ireland's majority Protestant community.

Expectations of a breakthrough rose as the United States granted a visa to senior IRA leader Joseph Cahill, a rare exception to its policy against admitting IRA figures.

In Dublin, Irish Prime Minister Albert Reynolds declared: "I believe we are poised for peace and in a very short time we will be able to make an entirely new beginning on this island."

That enthusiasm was not shared in Protestant districts of Belfast, where any agreement acceptable to the IRA is automatically suspect.

"Sure the English want rid of us. They'll do a deal with the IRA if the loyalist people let them. But we won't let them," said Jimmy Creighton, a Protestant community worker in the pro-British Glencairn district.

Speculation became intense after Gerry Adams, leader of the Sinn Fein party, said Monday that he had met with IRA leaders and told them the time was right to "break the political, constitutional and military stalemate and create the potential to eradicate the underlying causes of conflict."

Adams, whose party is the main political ally of the Irish Republican Army, said its leaders promised a swift response.

In an interview with Ireland's RTE television Tuesday, Adams demanded that after a cease-fire, Britain remove its troops from Northern Ireland and recognize the "democratic mandate" of Sinn Fein, possibly meaning meeting directly with its leaders.

Adams also demanded an "immediate end to censorship," apparently a reference to the ban on Sinn Fein-IRA supporters being broadcast on television or radio in Britain.

Cahill and Patrick Treanor, a member of Sinn Fein, were allowed into the United States to allow Sinn Fein to seek support to end the violence in Northern Ireland, said a U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Arriving in New York, Cahill said only, "It's a private visit."

Many among the Protestant majority feared the IRA would not suspend its terror campaign to reunite the province with the largely Roman Catholic Irish republic unless it had won concessions from the British government.

The Ulster Defense Association, one of the two main Protestant guerrilla groups, warned of civil war if the IRA had its way.

"Do you, the Irish, seriously believe we will sit back and allow ourselves to be coerced and persuaded into an all-Ireland?" the group, which also is outlawed, said in a statement to news media.

But a Belfast politician closely linked to the other "loyalist" group, the Ulster Volunteer Force, said Protestants should "take a calm approach."

"Those people who say they are prepared to fight and die for their country should be prepared to wait and think," said David Ervine. "If there is a window of opportunity for all of us to end violence, don't let loyalists be the ones to close it."

The British and Irish governments agreed in December not to change Northern Ireland's status without the consent of its people. They said Sinn Fein could not participate in peace talks unless the IRA permanently halted violence.

The British government denied there had been any change in its policy on Northern Ireland.

The IRA took up arms in 1970 after British troops moved in to stop Catholic-Protestant rioting in Northern Ireland.

Disciplined and inventive, the IRA's tactics include sniper attacks on army patrols, long-range attacks with homemade mortars, huge bombs that shattered town centers and pocket-size incendiaries that devastated shops.

The IRA has killed more than half of the 3,100 people slain since 1970, but Protestant groups have killed more people in recent years. This year, the IRA has killed 17 people, compared with 18 by the Ulster Volunteer Force and 11 by the Ulster Defense Association.

Scout leader arrested for shooting boys with BB gun

Sean Turner, a former Boy Scout leader at a summer camp in New York, gets into a car for a trip to jail. He was charged with seven counts of second-degree assault for shooting at least six scouts with a BB gun.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Boy Scouts have fired a 24-year-old counselor for allegedly shooting a BB gun at scouts attending a summer camp, hitting one boy between the eyes.

Sean Turner, 24, faces seven counts of assault. He was being held in lieu of $10,000 bail Tuesday after pleading innocent in Sullivan County, where the city youths attended the camp.

Turner fired at six of the 12 scouts under his care, ordering them to dance, police said.

The 14-year-old shot between the eyes suffered a superficial but bloody wound.

"He would point the gun at us and we would all run," police quoted the injured boy as saying. He said he told Turner he "didn't want to play any more."

"He turned around and pointed the pistol at me and fired. The BB hit me between the eyes and I fell down," the youth told state police investigators.

Sullivan County District Attorney Stephen Lungen said the BB gun, a type powered with a cartridge of compressed carbon-dioxide gas, is strong enough to cause serious injury. "We've had a case where someone lost an eye with one of those things," he said.

Turner tearfully told Town Justice Robert E. Luben in court Monday that he hadn't done anything wrong. "I've got two daughters of my own. Why would I do anything like this?" he asked.

STATE PRESS Editorial

Apathy and ASASU

"There are more instances of the abridgement of the freedom of the people by gradual and silent encroachments of those in power than by violent and sudden usurpations." So wrote James Madison in 1788, and so it remains true today.

Of course, in a case where most of the people aren't concerned about their freedoms, encroachments are probably more accidental than deliberate.

Welcome to Arizona State University.

And welcome to the Associated Students of Arizona State University, the representatives of student interests within the proud domains of the main campus.

Today's issue revolves around ASASU's decision to remove Marci Hendrickson from the 1993 presidential election — having overspent the $500 limit allowed for campaign expenses.

In 1981, however, the ASASU supreme court ruled that "a restriction on the amount of money a person or group can spend on political communication ... [is] unconstitutional on its face and it is hereby declared void."

Thus, a potential, juicy political debate could occur concerning the way ASASU is elected and managed. But you're not going to see one.

No doubt, you'll see articles in the State Press. Factions at ASASU will spar, damage control teams will react and there might even be some heated debate.

But does anyone really care?

At a University where it takes divine intervention to get more than 8 percent of the student body to vote, what effect will all this really have on most people? Probably none, since the ASU student motto is "ignore it, and it'll go away."

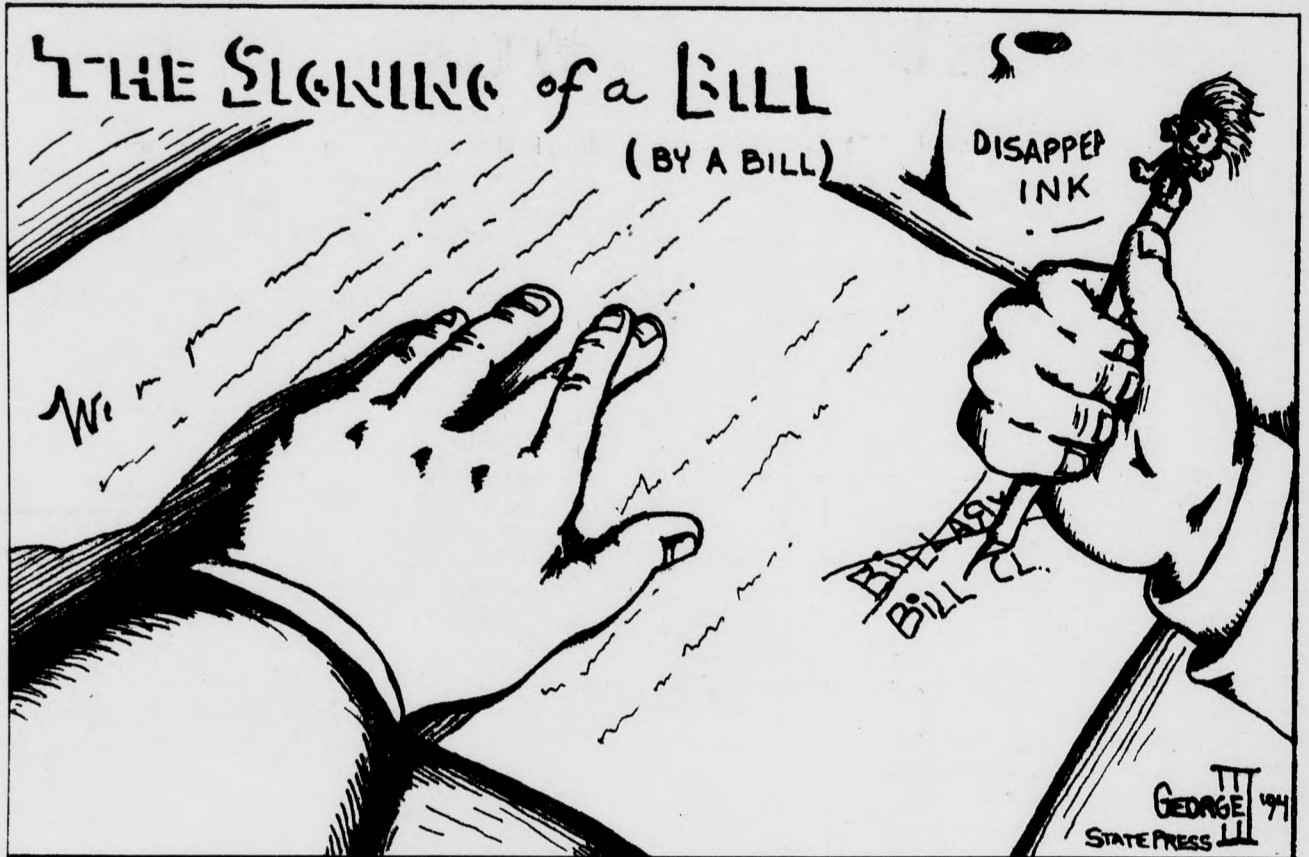

Which probably doesn't exactly provide a lot of direction for ASASU to go on. So policies (which probably have little in common with what the student body really needs or wants) are sometimes created, criticized by the State Press and politico wanna-bes, and more-or-less ignored by the rest of the campus.

Which is a little odd, since the current issue is about what passes for democratic student government at ASU.

The merits of the individual candidates aside, one important note is the fact that the candidate in question — Marci Hendrickson — did receive the most votes. And, because of ASASU election procedures, she was prevented from filling the office she ran for because of violations of the election code. No one questions this.

Which is kind of the problem — you'd kind of think that all those voters would comment or something, wouldn't you?

There are real problems on campus. There are real concerns of the student body. Unfortunately, until that student body decides to act, none of those are probably going to be addressed, are they?

Call it what you want But Hendrickson should be in office

Perhaps I'm just a stickler for detail, but I can't stop wondering about the person that we, the students of ASU, selected to be our student body president.

As I recall from last spring, Marci Hendrickson was elected. You remember Marci, don't you? She was the one who got the most votes. Call me a simpleton, but I think the person with the most votes wins. The only problem is, somebody else is in her office.

Now, I'm not a political science major, but it's quite apparent that a really foolish mistake has been made.

And as you might have heard, the foolishness began shortly after elections concluded last spring.

It seems that there was a question about Marci's campaign spending. I guess she was resourceful enough to find a company that would donate copies for her at a penny and a half a piece. Yet, one of Marci's opponents, who wasn't so ingenious (and who subsequently lost the election to her) felt that Marci's ambitiousness was a violation of the election rules, and he filed a multitude of complaints with the ASASU Supreme Court.

Sounds like the foolish games we've come to expect from ASASU, doesn't it?

Believe it or not, the mistake wasn't even made yet.

After receiving the complaints, the Supreme Court rejected Marci's reported expenses and assessed her "fair market value" for items that they believed she obtained too cheaply. The arbitrarily added expenditures pushed Marci's campaign spending over the $600 limit. Enough, in the opinion of the almighty and omniscient court (which is, actually, just six ASU law students appointed by past ASASU presidents), to warrant disqualification.

Thus, Marci was accused of lying, humiliated, and finally ousted for a violation that the court wantonly imposed upon her campaign.

Call it a witch hunt or call it justice. Like Marci or hate her. It doesn't matter, because the fact remains that the action of the ASASU Supreme Court was both foolish and a mistake.

First, the Supreme Court was foolish for giving credence to the complaint. Were they not sophisticated enough to see the vengeance inherent in a complaint filed by a candidate's opponent? Then they compounded the foolishness by mistakenly disqualifying our president-elect under a provision that they, themselves, found to be unconstitutional just a few years ago.

Since the argument gets legally complicated here, let it suffice to say that the ASASU Supreme Court has previously ruled that spending limits on campaigns are unconstitutional.

Specifically, in the 1981 ASASU Supreme Court case of Clark vs. Cosgrove, the court wrote, "The crucial question now before this court is this: is the spending limitation on campaign expenditures imposed by Article 3.2G(1) of the ASASU By-Laws unconstitutional? The answer is simple, yes." Since the spending limit was found to be unconstitutional, the court declared that "it is hereby declared void."

According to available Supreme Court records, this ruling has never been overturned. This means the current ASASU by-law regarding spending limits, which the Supreme Court used to remove Marci, is also unconstitutional.

Thus, the only provision that Marci Hendrickson purportedly violated should not, technically and legally, exist. In other words, the complaint against Marci was foolish, and her disqualification was, plain and simple, a mistake.

Which leaves the Supreme Court of ASASU (and ultimately the administration of ASU) with no other alternative than to rescind their ridiculous ruling and reinstate Marci Hendrickson as student body president.

Anything else would just be another foolish mistake.

Student government is a joke, so laugh

During a recent back-to-school BBQ, I was introduced to a very big, loud guy who was going on about how terrible ASU's student government is.

My instincts told me to drift toward the pool, where one of my engineering friends might be talking about something exciting, like research into the properties of quark particles. But that would have been rude of me. Besides, he was standing in front of the refreshment table.

"Why can't something be done?" he asked. There was silence, then I realized he was looking at me and expecting an answer.

I resisted the urge to say, "I am going to do something. I'm going to ignore you and go for another hotdog. Could you please move over? Thank you."

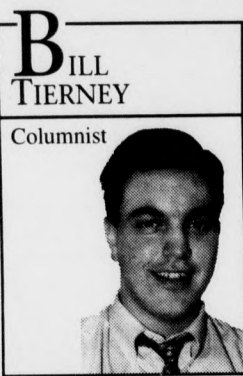

Instead, I just shrugged, and he went on about how many scandals Associated Students has every year.

"Did you know that their president was thrown out? What good are they? What have they ever done for us?" he asked, his volume increasing at decibels per second.

I figured he was going to shatter my eardrums if he kept talking. So I jumped in and said, "They do a lot. You just don't appreciate what they do."

He looked a little confused, which probably isn't very uncommon for this guy anyway. So I explained that student government isn't a complete waste. It has great entertainment value.

I don't think there is anyone who doesn't read about the latest scandal and not get a good laugh out of it. What makes it especially humorous is the ineptness of the perpetrators. Real politicians are much more careful.

In just the last few years, we've had plenty of petty corruption to joke about.

- An ASASU presidential hopeful "allegedly" offered the elections director a new car in exchange for rigging the election. Dum de dumb-dumb. (A professional political wanna-be would have had a flunky do it for him. It's called "plausible deniability.")

- One activities vice president hyped the donation of her salary to charity — only to have it discovered she did so to remain eligible for social security payments. Payments, incidentally, made on the basis she was "unable" to work. (Odd claim for any elected official to make.)

- An ASASU senator running for a vice president slot "discovered" flyers touting his opponent in an unauthorized area and petitions to have him disqualified from the election. Powerful accusation, until someone noticed his opponent's name was misspelled on this "illegal" literature. (The moral of the story: for a good "frame up," hire a proof reader.)

- An activities vice president made it an entire year without getting caught at anything. Then, just before his term expired, he got caught scalping concert tickets belonging to ASASU for personal profit. He said it was a "mistake," but claimed not to have done anything wrong. (The student senate believed him and voted against impeachment.)

- This year's first scandal: the president-elect (whom I, regrettably, voted for), was discovered to have cheated in her election and falsified documents. Especially laughable: ASASU didn't re-run the election, or even give the spot to the guy who placed a strong second. Instead, they appointed someone who didn't even run for the position. (I can't wait to see what he gets caught doing.)

Not only does student government have entertainment value, it has academic value as well. Thanks to Associated Students, your State Press reporters gain valuable experience writing about all the mistakes and goof-ups the wanna-be politicians make.

Aspiring Bob Woodward and Bernstiens get to investigate petty corruption, stay awake during long meetings and hound evasive officials, all while building portfolios that will enable them to get real jobs some day.

Without student government, our young journalists would be forced to rely on criminal activity by our student athletes for juicy headlines.

The big guy finally interrupted me. "Hey, I don't want to pay for all that @$%*."

I said nothing and moved quickly toward the pool. Like it or not, student government at ASU is a big joke. Students and taxpayers are paying tens of thousands of dollars for it. So, until someone straightens it out, everyone might as well get a big chuckle out of it.

We certainly aren't getting much else for our money.

Bill Tierney is a senior education major.

Will someone pay attention to children already born?

A couple of months ago, on a hot Arizona afternoon, I saw a group of pro-life demonstrators holding up signs and pictures on the sidewalk. At the same time, a group of pro-choice demonstrators were also holding up signs on the opposite side of the street. As I drove by, both groups were shouting slogans and showed a hatred for the other side.

Twenty minutes later, I arrived at a school for homeless children. The classrooms were crowded and the teachers appeared tired. Nevertheless, the kids were eager to learn and the teachers were eager to teach. Many of the school's staff are volunteers, and the teachers do not get paid nearly as much as their counterparts in the wealthier school districts. However, most of these kids will not stay for more than two weeks, despite the teacher's sacrifice in bringing education to these kids. Soon, their parents will be moving to a different homeless shelter.

Each year, abortion lobbyists and special interest groups spend millions of dollars to advance their beliefs. While some crusade under the name of life, others champion the freedom of choice. Meanwhile, thousands of children in America are going to bed hungry at night, and millions more are not receiving the adequate care they deserve.

Not only has the issue of abortion provoked debates and violence, it has also divided America and its political platforms. While we all have some form of opinion on the issue of abortion, and we all prescribe to some moral and ethical equation to arrive at those opinions, abortion activists cannot seem to realize that moral equations and opinions do not govern the issue of abortion. Instead, abortion is the indirect product of our society's cultural standards and economic conditions.

The truth is, no pregnant woman feels good about having an abortion, but for many pregnant women, society and its stigma do not allow them to take alternative courses of action.

If a pregnant woman wants to have an abortion, she will do so largely because of her personal and surrounding conditions, not because of any invisible moral guidelines. When a woman is willing to go through vicious protesters to have an abortion, you know that she is not doing so because she wants to, but because she feels that she has no choice. Instead of dedicating so many resources into political campaigns that cannot change abortion rates, abortion activists should turn around and pay attention to the children already born.

Recent pro-life television advertisements portray children playing in schools and sharing fond memories with their parents. These advertisements end with the slogan, "Life, what a wonderful choice."

Indeed, many aborted unborns had opportunities to live a full life, and many pregnant women do have the resources to adequately raise a child. However, not all unborns have a bright future ahead. Today, America's children are still the nation's largest poverty group. Many children grow up without adequate health care or education. In the urban districts, children face obstacles such as drugs and violence.

All too often, children in poverty are abandoned by their fathers, and their mothers simply cannot make enough money to support a healthy childhood.

While these conditions do not justify abortion, they certainly justify diverting more resources to our children. We need to devote resources to education programs such as Head Start, and support stricter child support enforcement laws, such as the recently passed Child Support Enforcement Act of the last state legislature session. This act, among other things, increases the Arizona Supreme Court's authority to collect money from fathers that have abandoned their children.

I doubt that we will ever resolve the debate on abortion, and I believe that no laws or Supreme Court decisions can prevent abortions from taking place.

If we really want to deal with abortion, we need to focus on the very core of our social structure. Meanwhile, there are children out there who need attention. They need new clothes, new toys, and the proper care that will nurture them through a healthy childhood. Most of all, they need volunteers who are willing to dedicate time.

To all those people who chain themselves in front of a clinic, and all those people who hold up signs in hot summer afternoons, there are children who need you.

David Yang is a senior political science major.

entered a room one-by-one and Djurkovic demanded money and jewelry. She was forced to turn over 4,500 German marks ($2,000) and her jewelry.

"He said give me more or I'll put you in a camp," Kahrimanovic recalled. "Then, they took the key to the house."

Sajda Nisic, 61, from Bijeljina, said her seven-member family slept in a field for the past month for fear that soldiers would come and rape her 19- and 21-year-old granddaughters.

She said Djurkovic had publicly ordered all Muslims to leave Bijeljina by Sept. 1, which is Thursday.

Salih Mujic, a 58-year-old truck driver, said he was forced to house a Serb militiaman and his family for 10 months before he and his wife were expelled on Saturday.

He said Djurkovic demanded $60 per person for transportation.

The refugees are bused to the front line and then made to walk across, often a distance up to 10 miles. Many of those expelled have found shelter in a stuffy university gymnasium in Tuzla, an enclave controlled by the Muslim-led government.

Men of fighting age are separated ahead of time, and aid officials believe they are taken away for forced labor, either harvesting or digging trenches near the front.

In the rush and confusion, many people lose their identification documents or invitations they need to resettle abroad.

Police Chief Brown takes over new post

By MIKA SUSANA AKIKUNI
STATE PRESS

Tempe Police Chief David Brown has taken over the duties of the deputy city manager of Tempe, a post he will permanently hold once a new police chief is hired.

Brown replaced Jim Piper, former deputy city manager, who was fired in March. According to Nachie Marquez, public information officer for Tempe, Piper was terminated because of poor job performance.

At the time of Piper's firing, a $170,000 loan he made to Stephen Mirretti, former presiding judge of the Tempe City Court, was under investigation.

Brown said he is not familiar with Piper's case.

"As far as I know, the position has been open and I applied for it," Brown said.

Brown said that he, along with Tempe City Manager Terry Zerkle, are currently looking for a permanent replacement for Tempe police chief.

As deputy city manager, Brown will be responsible for Tempe's Administrative and Strategic Issues Group and will oversee the areas of management services, police, fire strategic issues teams and community relations.

Brown said he wants to focus on encouraging the community to work with the Tempe Police Department and bringing working teams to tackle police and other important issues.

"Instead of people saying, 'Oh, that's a police issue,' I want them to come and work together," Brown said.

He will earn $103,000 a year in his new position, 5 percent more than he made as police chief.

"I accepted the new position because it gave me the opportunity to stay in Tempe and work here," Brown said. "I think that we are very unique and we have an excellent working relationship between the city, the citizens and the University."

Tempe Councilwoman Carol Smith said she finds Brown very open.

"I've worked with him ever since he came back from Yuma and he has been active in implementing community policing," Smith said.

Councilman Joseph Lewis said he has known Brown for two years.

"I've seen that he has experience, and I think he is good at working with the community," Lewis said. "I think he knows how the city of Tempe operates and he will probably be the best one to oversee the police department."

Brown, 47, started his career with the Tempe Police Department in 1968 as a patrol officer and ultimately attained the rank of major before he became the police chief of Yuma. After working in Yuma from 1980 to 1988, Brown returned to Tempe as police chief and has held that position since.

Brown has a bachelor of science degree in criminal justice from ASU and is a graduate of the FBI's Law Enforcement Executive Development and Northwestern University's Traffic Institute.

Giant shark teeth, dino eggs on view at geology museum

BY ELIZABETH APPELEN
STATE PRESS

Between five million and 15 million years ago the prehistoric ancestor to the great white shark swam in the ocean. Today, the 45-foot long sea creature's 6-inch teeth are on display in ASU's Geology Museum in Bateman Physical Sciences Center F-Wing.

The shark that owned these teeth weighed more than 50 tons and is the second largest predator that ever lived on land or in the sea. The shark's teeth, collected from the Cooper, Ashapoo and Morgan rivers in South Carolina, make up the authentic part of the shark's jaw. The rest of the jaw is mostly made of fiberglass.

Since shark skeletons are made of cartilage, the teeth are the only parts to survive as fossils, said Brad Archer, the museum's curator.

The museum has other unique and fasinating displays, Archer said. The six-story long Foucault pendulum and a seismograph that can record earthquakes anywhere in the world are two of the crowd-drawing external exhibits.

The museum also features dinosaur eggs from China and a 600-pound meteorite.

"Our museum is very unique," said Troy Péwé, the museum's director and professor emeritus of geology. "We have one of the largest collections of dinosaur eggs ... plus the shark jaw which has generated national coverage."

The geology museum was founded in 1976 by Péwé as a place for people to learn more about the sciences, he said.

This semester the museum will be open from 9 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. daily. Archer or a geology graduate student will be available to assist visitors.

ASU's Guinn, Larsen compete in USA Championships

Two members of the ASU men's gymnastic club recently competed in the USA National Gymnastics Championships on August 25.

Senior Marty Lasren placed 37th in the all-around Senior Elite division while freshman Nate Guinn placed 8th in the Junior Elite division. Guinn missed qualifying for the Junior Elite National Team by one place.

This was the first trip to the USA National Championship as competitors for both gymnasts. Both now begin training for the USA Winter Nationals which will be held in January 1995 in Colorado Springs, CO.

Friesz beats out Shuler for starting spot in season opener

Washington Redskins head coach Norv Turner ended weeks of speculation Tuesday and named John Friesz as the starting quarterback for Sunday's regular-season opener against the Seattle Seahawks.

Friesz, a four-year veteran who signed as a free agent during the off-season, got the nod over No. 3 overall draft pick Heath Shuler.

For the past few weeks, Turner has emphasized he wanted to choose whichever quarterback he felt gave the Redskins the best chance to defeat Seattle. And it turns out, experience was the deciding factor.

"It's not that I think that Heath can't handle it. He'd handle it fine," Turner said. "I think in terms of this football team... I just feel more comfortable with John in that role, early in the game."

Shuler seemed neither surprised nor disappointed by the decision.

"It's pretty much what I expected when I came to camp," he said. "I knew what was expected of me in training camp, and I tried to work with that as best as I can."

Manning's spot remains open as Hawks await ruling

Danny Manning's spot on the Atlanta Hawks' roster may remain vacant while the team awaits a court ruling on the NBA's one-year-and-out salary cap issue, said team president Stan Kasten.

Atlanta acquired Manning from the Los Angeles Clippers last February in a trade for Dominique Wilkins. The free agent forward then rejected a seven-year, $35 million offer from Atlanta and said he would sign with Phoenix, even though the Suns could pay him only $1 million a year.

The NBA is challenging the use of such deals to circumvent the league's salary cap.

NBA teams currently operate under a salary cap of $15,175,000, which restricts the signing of free agents.

One-year-and-out deals circumvent the rule when a player signs at a figure under market value with the intent of becoming a free agent after one season, able to sign at any figure.

The one-year clause surfaced a year ago when Chris Dudley turned down $3 million from the New Jersey Nets to play in Portland for $700,000, with the clear intent of becoming a free agent after a year.

Young poses running threat to ASU defense

Courtesy of OSU Media Relations
Oregon State halfback J.J. Young looks for a repeat performance Saturday when the Beavers face ASU. Young rushed for 105 yards on 11 carries with one touchdown against the Sun Devils last season.

Big things expected from Beavers' halfback

By TODD KELLY
STATE PRESS

When J.J. Young was a kid, so the story goes, he pretended he was Walter Payton.

As things would turn out, Young is a pretty good running back himself. Nowadays, he stars for the Oregon State Beavers as a starting halfback.

A two-time letterman starter for the Beavers, Young will be a co-captain and a true running threat for 1994. He led the team in rushing last year with 955 yards and stands poised to finish on the Beavers' top ten list of career rushers. In 1993, he was named to the Pac-10 Second Team behind ASU's Mario Bates and Washington's Napoleon Kaufman.

His coach, Jerry Pettibone, thinks that even bigger things await Young this year.

"I've said all along, since the season that he had last year, that he was a legitimate All-American candidate," Pettibone said. "He's got great speed and he's a tough football player. He's a great blocker, he can catch the ball out of the backfield. He's a threat every time he touches the ball."

Saturday's game is not only the season opener for both ASU and OSU, but it's also a conference game, which raises the stakes. Neither Pettibone nor ASU head coach Bruce Snyder like the fact that the first game of the season is a conference game, but Young disagrees with them.

"I think it's good," Young said. "We'll be able to test where we are right off the bat. I think it's great to be able to open up against ASU, and test where we are."

One such test will be if Young can continue to have success running the football against ASU's defense. He has tallied 114 yards rushing against ASU in two games. He had only nine yards in 1991, but last year he rushed for 105 yards on just 11 carries. (Young missed the 1992 showdown with ASU due to injury.) Last season he had a touchdown scamper of 75 yards against the Sun Devils, which proved to be his longest gain of the season. The only other conference opponent that he has had better success against is Washington.

Last year's win was OSU's first over ASU since 1971, yet that doesn't seem to be a factor in this contest.

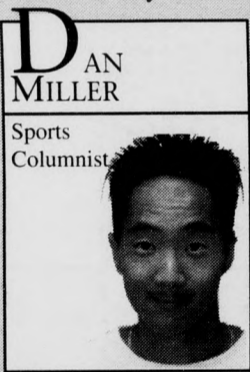

"This is a totally different scenario," Young said. "The atmosphere around this game is a lot different. They're going to give us their best, and we're going to give them our best. So, we'll see what happens at the end."

Hockey won't be same without Lemieux

Monday was a dark day for the fledgling National Hockey League.

They are still the only major professional sport without a network television contract. Unlike other sports such as pro football or baseball, most of their stars' names are nearly unrecognizable. The number of hockey teams losing money each year makes the recent reports of baseball's losses pale by comparison.

Then just when you thought things couldn't possibly get any worse, Mario Lemieux decides to sit out the 1994-95 season. Lemieux, who is the Pittsburgh Penguins franchise, is arguably the finest hockey player to ever strap on a pair of skates. He couldn't have had better timing.

Throughout his colorful career, Lemieux has been plagued with numerous back problems and has endured a courageous bout with Hodgkin's disease. This rare form of cancer kept him out for most of last season, and it looked as though he was on the road to recovery.

But Lemieux is actually far from coming back.

Although he gave a heartfelt reassurance to the media that the announcement didn't mean he had lost his love for hockey, I think Lemieux was lying through his teeth.

Lemieux will never be 100 percent again and he knows it. And a player like Lemieux, who is accustomed to greatness, would rather never come back than come back and play the game he loves half

GARNERING SUCCESS

ASU junior set for season after summer tour

By LEE NEWMAN
STATE PRESS

When the ASU volleyball team was eliminated from the NCAA tournament last season, junior outside hitter Christine Garner didn't force herself to watch the rest of the tournament on television.

"I pretty much stayed away from it," Garner said. "I guess it was good to know who won, but I know we should have been there."

Garner took her mind off ASU volleyball during the off-season by doing something totally off the wall. She played volleyball.

However, she didn't just go down to the local health club to hit the ball around with aspiring players. Garner joined the U.S. volleyball team that took on the best teams in the world during a tour of Japan and China in May. Then she competed with the team at the Goodwill Games in St. Petersburg, Russia. A team that came home with a silver medal.

"I was able to start and play against the top four teams in the world and that was great," Garner said. "I thought I got a lot of experience. When you're playing the best teams in the world, how can you go wrong?"

Garner's extended play over the summer has brought up concerns that it might have tired her out for the upcoming season, but neither Garner nor her coach feel there's a problem.

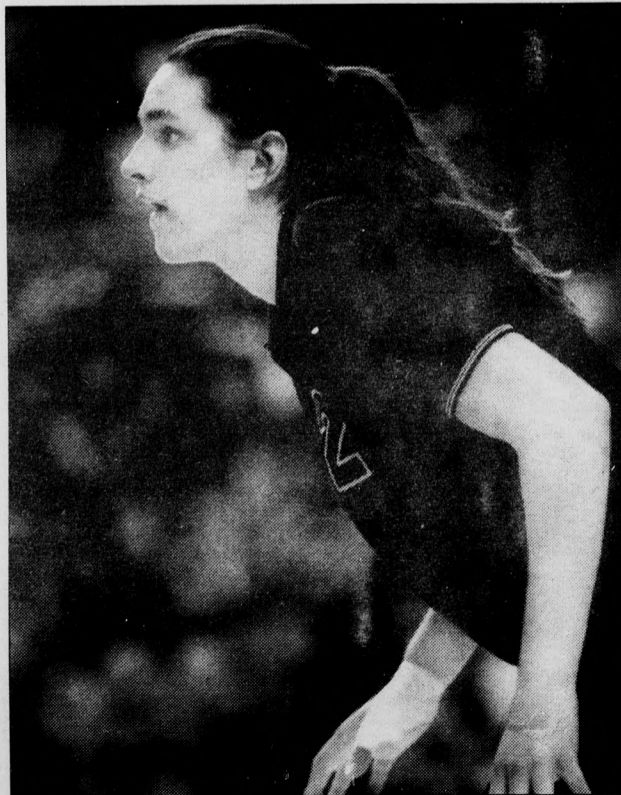

"We gave her 10 days off when she returned from the Goodwill Games," said Head Coach Patti Snyder. "At the Games, she had a little problem with her shoulder, but she's fine now. She's healthy and doesn't have any problems now. At least none that she's telling us about, anyway."

"I'm not sorry I played so much," Garner said. "I love volleyball, so I'm never going to get tired of it."

The summer's over now and there's only one thing on Garner's mind and that's to help lead the Devils to a Pac-10 title and the Final Four. To do that, ASU can't have a repeat of last year's UofA upset.

"All the players agree. We feel we were thinking about the next match instead of the match we were playing, which was a mistake because your speed. Professional athletes set lofty standards for themselves, and those select few like Lemieux in the upper echelon of their sport accept nothing less than perfection.

It's sad to see a game that is in desperate need of more stars to lose one of their brightest. Lemieux brought the Penguins out of the depths of mediocrity and led them to consecutive Stanley Cup titles in 1991-92. Only the Los Angeles Kings' Wayne Gretzky can boast more impressive career numbers for assists and goals scored in the games he played. It will be a long time before any player can take control of a game like Lemieux could.

Gretzky will always be the "Great One", but his time has passed and he ought to be spending more time with Janet.

The emergence of the Soviets in the last two years has added excitement to the game but has not yet been widely received by fans. How many people still haven't the slightest idea who Pavel Bure is? Or Sergei Fedorov?

Brett Hull, who was once considered the most dangerous sniper in hockey, seems to be fading as of late. Eric Lindros' star is on the rise, but he hasn't exactly dominated from day one like everyone expected.

Sure the Mighty Ducks have nice uniforms, but is there anyone on that team you would recognize if you saw them at your local Denny's?

It is a shame that we will never have the pleasure of seeing Lemieux eclipse every scoring record on the books, and the poor Pittsburgh Penguins will probably never make it past the second round of the playoffs again.

But I guess I'm being selfish. Lemieux's health is what is most important. If Lemieux did come back, he would be risking the rest of his life on a game. I'm sure he'll stick around and coach somewhere, but it won't be the same. Hockey will never be the same.

When Lemieux said he hasn't lost his love for the sport, he meant he hasn't lost the memories. It's the thought of playing the game he still loves.

Mario knows that memories will have to suffice because that is all he has left to dull the pain.

Young

The quarterback is always the key to any offense, and the wishbone is no different. Don Shanklin, a sophomore, will guide the Beavers this year. He played in only three games last season, but is at full-strength now after recovering from a foot injury. Shanklin and Young should provide the Beavers with an impressive one-two punch.

"I think the first thing you do is decide who do you not want to have the football," Snyder said. "In their case, the fact that they have Shanklin coming on and they have J.J. Young... that's a hard decision between the two. J.J. Young is a terrific runner."

Can the wishbone be an effective offense in the pass-happy Pac-10 conference? Young thinks it can.

"Once you start recruiting the right athletes and getting the depth that it needs to function, it can be very successful, especially if it's a change-up. There's so many teams around the league that pass, and drop back and run the professional offense, it provides a change when we come off the ball, drive blocking and cutting and just running hard nose football."

Defense looks for dismissal of suspect in Jordan case

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — Charges should be dismissed against one of the teen-agers charged with killing Michael Jordan's father because the prosecutor has held back critical evidence, defense attorneys said Tuesday.

Evidence includes one sighting of James Jordan after the date he was supposed to have been killed and two reports indicating other people talked about committing a similar crime, said defense lawyer Woodberry Bowen. The evidence is a year old.

"Most of these reports would have been in the district attorney's hands way back in the fall," Bowen said. "Some of them contain exculpatory material."

Bowen represents Daniel Andre Green who, with Larry Martin Demery, is charged with first-degree murder, armed robbery and conspiracy to commit armed robbery in the elder Jordan's death last July. Demery and Green were charged Aug. 15, 1993.

Superior Court Judge Gregory Weeks said he would rule on the motion by the next hearing, which may be held in October. The judge will review the reports in the meantime.

District Attorney Richard Townsend said he made the decision to hold the reports back, but that the defense had gotten or would get everything it was entitled to.

"In a case like this, there are a lot of incredible claims that are made," he said.

Bowen said whatever the nature of the claims, the defense hadn't had the chance to investigate them until now. The prosecutor apparently hasn't followed them up in an effort to exclude other possible suspects, he said.

"There is no order this court can enter that can give us our year back to go back and pick up our trail," Bowen said.

Bowen said Townsend gave the defense 23 statements from individuals from as far away as Florida, New York and California. The statements were handed over on Friday and should have been provided much earlier and certainly no later than a discovery conference held in July, he said.

Bowen said the statements included:

— A report from a Cumberland County librarian who said a man identified himself as James Jordan and tried to call his son at Fort Bragg. The man was with two other men, neither of whom was the defendant, and said he had lost his car in the county because of a bet.

— A report from a New York woman that her sisters living in Florida had as a guest a man who was a neighbor of Jordan's and who told them on Aug. 15, 1993 he had "killed a man in the woods of South Carolina."

— A college student in Fayetteville overheard four men talking in a cafeteria last summer that "they had left a car in Fayetteville, disposed of a body in another state and that they had done it to throw off a police investigation."

Bowen didn't elaborate on the statements. "This is not negligent conduct," Bowen said. "This is intentional conduct. ... (Green's) investigation has been thwarted. His constitutional rights have been trodden on."

play isn't as good as it should be."

Garner believes that other teams don't have much respect for ASU, due mainly to what happened last season.

"A lot of the teams in the country didn't get to meet us because of the upset against UofA," Garner said.

"This year there's not going to be an upset, so I think those teams that aren't in the Pac-10 better be ready for us."
