Job outlook improving for ASU graduates

BY LISA GONDERINGER
STATE PRESS

Despite economists' claims of an expanding economy, recent ASU graduate Chris Carbajal is still experiencing the job-search blues, nine long months after receiving his degree.

"I got a degree in the liberal arts, so I wasn't expecting to get a really high paying job," he said. "But I was expecting to at least get something."

Carbajal received a bachelor's degree in history from ASU in December. Since then, he has sent out a barrage of applications and résumés to several employers, including ASU, the federal government and utility companies.

"No one has bitten," he said. "It's extremely discouraging."

Carbajal may be living every student's worst nightmare, but ASU economists believe students graduating this year are entering one of the best job markets in years.

The U.S. economy gained 2,986,000 nonagricultural jobs between July 1993 and July 1994, a 2.7 percent increase. This is the largest increase in the month of July since 1988.

Tracy Clark, an economist with the ASU Economic Outlook Center, said students graduating this year are going to have an easier time finding a job than those in the past three or four years.

"It is noticeably better this year," he said. "There are still some problems on the East coast, but on the whole, employment is up across the board and doing particularly well in the Western states, except California."

The six states with the largest number of new jobs created in July 1994 were Texas, Florida, Georgia, Michigan, New York, and Arizona. Last July, Arizona ranked 11th in the nation in job growth.

Clark predicted that this growth will continue through 1996.

Students will still have to work hard to prepare for a job, he said, but they will find it much easier than students graduating in the early 1980s, when the country was in the bottom of a deep recession.

Clark graduated from ASU with a bachelor's degree in December, 1982. He registered with Career Services and had interviews set up with several companies.

"Every single one of them canceled," he said. "Needless to say, I went to graduate school. Students today are not going to experience anything near that difficult."

The number of recruiters coming on-campus is up 37 percent from last year, according to Elaine Stover, associate director of Career Services. Recruiters will begin interviewing soon-to-be graduates and alumni who have registered with Career Services Monday.

Stover said job placement for students has been fairly difficult in the last few years.

ASU Student claims assault by state DPS officer

Officer denies charge, says student acted aggressively

BY CHRISTINA BAILEY
STATE PRESS

An ASU student claims he was assaulted by an Arizona Department of Public Safety officer after leaving the Arizona Cardinals game last Sunday night.

Edmund Orr, an ASU student majoring in photography, said he and his friends were going to their car when the incident occurred.

He said that when he tried to go underneath a barricade set up near Sixth Street and College Avenue a DPS officer "threw him to the ground," and handcuffed him.

"He just threw me on the ground," said Orr, who said the incident happened so quickly that his friends weren't even aware of what happened. "I couldn't believe this was happening to me."

Orr said DPS officer K.E. Williams was "in his face for no reason," and used unnecessary force, breaking his watch, scratching up his knees, knuckles and face.

Failure to obey an officer was the citation issued to Orr. It is a criminal misdemeanor offense and, if convicted, Orr could face possible jail time.

"It was without any provocation at all," Orr said. "I was just going underneath a barricade. Nobody was in any danger."

ASASU considers special election to solve staggered term dilemma

Return to once-a-year elections anticipated

BY DAWN DECHRISTINA
STATE PRESS

The Associated Students of ASU is considering the possibility of holding a special election this fall to correct a problem created during the spring elections.

A proposition will be introduced during this Tuesday's ASASU Senate meeting, calling for the special election.

The proposition is necessary because during last spring's election, students voted to stagger the terms of ASASU positions every spring and fall, but also voted for only one election per year.

If passed, this will solve the contradiction by holding a one-time special election to fill the vacant seats created by the staggering of terms.

During this special election, students will have a chance to remove staggered terms from the ASASU bylaws if a proposition is placed on the ballot for that purpose.

The seats that will be up for re-election are campus affairs vice president, executive vice president, and half of the senate seats.

Kim Demarchi, senator for the Honors College, said special elections are rare and only happen when ASASU has a bad year.

"I understand we are going to get negative publicity for having two elections in a year," she said. "But would the students rather see half of the positions in the senate arbitrarily filled, because that's what's going to happen if we don't have elections."

The ASASU election budget has $6,950 available for next spring's elections.

If the proposition passes, half of this money will be used for next spring's elections and half for this fall's, Demarchi said.

"I think we can do two elections for the same amount of money of one election," she said.

In order to save money, ASASU will need volunteers to work at the polls in both elections to eliminate the $2,000 paid to poll workers, Demarchi said.

"People are going to be mad (that) there is another election," said Brandy Aguilar, ASASU campus affairs vice president. "They don't want to see elections, but we have to go by what is voted by the student population, whether or not that's what they really wanted.

"I don't think people understood the referendum when they voted last year."

Aguilar said this should be overturned in this fall's special election because no one wants two elections each year.

ASASU President Alan Frost said he agrees with the idea of staggered terms, but said that current bylaws are "goofed up."

He said there are other ways of handling the election terms, such as having representatives serve for two years instead of one.

Frost said he plans to put that idea up for discussion during next Tuesday's senate meeting.

"So many companies were reducing the number of people in their organization, but they need them back now," she said. "It is not impossible to get a position, and that goes for our liberal arts graduates as well as our business and engineering majors."

Stover said the most successful students are those who are flexible with where they are willing to go geographically, adding that those who sent out a large number of résumés will also benefit.

ASU has scheduled its annual Career Fiesta on Sept. 29 and 30 on Cady Mall next to the Memorial Union. At this event, students can meet informally with employers and circulate their résumés.

Police

There was a large crowd of people coming from the game and there were people breaking through the barricades without any problems, he added.

Williams kept Orr on the ground, and later had a Tempe police officer write the ticket for him, Orr alleged. This was because Williams did not have any citation forms in his possession.

However, Williams said he wasn't the one to restrain Orr. Williams said he warned Orr three times not to cross a barrier, and after the third time Orr ripped it down.

"It was obvious to me that his (Orr's) sole purpose was to tear (the barriers) down," he added.

Williams said he then placed his hand on Orr's shoulder and turned him around. He said he was about to tell Orr once again to put the barrier back up when Orr started "slapping his hands" at him.

According to Williams, a Tempe police officer at the scene with him was the person who actually restrained Orr. He said the Tempe officer took that action when he saw Orr make a fist and prepare to strike Williams.

"The only reason (Orr) was detained was because he was violent when I tried to restrain him from tearing down the fence," Williams said.

Williams said he does not know the identity of the Tempe officer.

Orr denies Williams' account of the incident, saying he is not a violent person, nor would he try to take such evasive action against a police officer. If he acted irrationally, he said that he did so out of surprise.

Orr admitted that he had three beers during the game but claimed that he was not drunk, nor deserved to be handled in such a manner.

"Whether I had three beers or 10 beers, it shouldn't have happened the way it did," Orr said. "I was not driving and I was not out of hand."

Williams said he thought Orr acted intoxicated.

Jennifer Tittes, assistant manager at Photomark, where Orr works, said she was shocked when she heard what had happened to her fellow employee. Orr is a manager at the business.

"I have known Ed (Orr) for awhile now and I don't believe he would be capable of doing anything like that," Tittes said. "He is a gentleman, he is very nice and I just can't see him doing something like that at all."

Shortly after the incident occurred, Orr went to the Tempe police station to file a complaint against Williams.

Craig Stapp, Tempe traffic supervisor, took Orr's complaint Sunday night.

Although he wouldn't divulge certain information because of an impending investigation, he did say that Orr had scratches on his body, which he photographed. Stapp also stated that he gave Orr a breathalyzer test that registered at .09 percent.

Under Arizona law, intoxication is defined as having a blood alcohol level of .10 percent or over.

"Whether or not Orr was drinking should not affect the way we handle the investigation," Stapp said.

Orr is scheduled to appear in court September 19. An attorney said it will cost up to $1,000 for him to fight the citation in court. But $1,000 is too expensive for Orr, who said he may receive jail time and a fine for something he did not provoke.

"Things like this only happen on TV," Orr said. "I don't even feel like I can trust the police to protect me anymore."

DNA test results hurt O.J.'s defense

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Final DNA tests point to O.J. Simpson as the source of at least two drops of blood in a trail leading from the crime scene, and a hair found on one victim's body came from a black person, sources said Thursday.

Meanwhile, Simpson's lawyers are considering calling as witnesses his younger children, including his 8-year-old daughter, who reportedly told police she "heard Mommy's best friend" the night of the slayings.

The genetic test results on two drops of blood, first reported in Thursday's Los Angeles Times, were forwarded to the Simpson defense and confirm preliminary results reported last month by prosecutors, sources speaking on condition of anonymity told The Associated Press.

The sources said there was nothing new in the latest results, which the defense plans to attack as unreliable because of sloppy police and lab work.

Simpson, 47, is charged with murder in the June 12 slashing deaths of his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman.

A hair whose existence was never previously reported in the media was found on Goldman's clothing and matches that of a black person, the sources told the AP. The strand is being analyzed to determine whether it matches Simpson's hair.

But the finding may work in the defense's favor, the sources said, because if prosecutors try to argue the hair is Simpson's, the defense can ask why only one hair was found on the body when presumably the attacker would have lost more in a struggle.

Family of slain exchange student awarded $653,000

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — A homeowner was ordered to pay $653,000 Thursday to the parents of a Japanese exchange student who was shot to death in 1992 when he went to the wrong door while looking for a Halloween party.

State District Judge Bill Brown rejected Rodney Peairs' explanation that he thought 16-year-old Yoshihiro Hattori was a lunatic bent on hurting him and his family.

"There is no justification that the killing was necessary to save himself or his family," Brown ruled in a lawsuit filed by the boy's parents.

Peairs, 32, was acquitted of manslaughter last year in the slaying, which reinforced the United States' image in Japan as a land of gunslings.

Masaichi and Mieko Hattori, who had asked for as much as $850,000, plan to give the money to a foundation they set up in their son's name to foster understanding between the United States and Japan.

"Although the verdict was in our favor, the hole in my heart will always be there forever," Mrs. Hattori said. And in a plea to the American people, she said: "Please decrease the number of handguns as much as possible."

Peairs was ordered to pay $85,000 — the maximum allowed under state law — for the youth's pain and suffering, $275,000 each to his parents, for the wrongful death; and about $18,000 to cover funeral expenses.

"I hope a trial like this won't ever be necessary in the future," the teen-ager's father said.

Tug boats push the USS Mount Whitney from the pier at Norfolk Naval Base Thursday. The Whitney, an amphibious command ship, would likely be the command ship in any invasion of Haiti.

Haiti gets final warning

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a final warning before an American military invasion, President Clinton bluntly told Haiti's military leaders Thursday night, "Your time is up. Leave now or we will force you from power."

Against a chorus of opposition, Clinton built his case for an invasion in a speech prepared for delivery from the Oval Office.

"We have exhausted diplomacy," the president said. "Now, the United States must protect its interests — to stop the brutal atrocities that threaten tens of thousands of Haitians; to secure our borders and preserve stability in our hemisphere; and to promote democracy and uphold the reliability of our commitment around the world."

In Washington and in the Caribbean, every sign pointed to an imminent invasion.

Twenty American warships ominously shadowed Haiti's coast, and two troop-laden aircraft carriers were on the way, expected to be on station by the weekend.

Clinton signed an executive order authorizing the call-up of 1,600 reservists to support the 20,000-person invasion force.

In his remarks — excerpts of which were released in advance — Clinton sought to explain why American lives should be risked to restore deposed President Jean-Bertrand Aristide after three years in exile.

Americans overwhelmingly oppose an invasion, according to polls, and there is widespread opposition in Congress among Republicans and Democrats alike. The White House acknowledged Clinton couldn't turn around public opinion with one speech.

Blaming the military rulers for abusing Haitians and driving them deeper into poverty and despair, Clinton said, "I know that the United States cannot and should not be the world's policeman. But we have a responsibility to respond when inhumanity offends our values."

"And we have a particular interest in stopping brutality when it occurs so close to our shores," he said.

Clinton said Aristide had pledged to step down when his term expires in February 1996. Aristide's lawyer, Mike Barnes, said it has always been Aristide's intention to abide by the constitutional schedule.

However, Aristide has not made that commitment publicly. There had been speculation he would add his time in exile to the end of his scheduled term of office, enabling him to have five full years as Haiti's president.

Defense Secretary William Perry said there was no indication that Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, leader of the military junta, Lt. Col. Michel Francois, the police commander, or Gen. Philippe Biamby, the Army chief of staff, were ready to leave, despite an offer of safe passage to a comfortable life in another country.

Still, he said there have been reports from Haiti "indicating a fair amount of turmoil in the ruling regime there."

Clinton signed an intelligence "finding" last week authorizing covert activities in Haiti, as well as an offer to spirit the ruling junta out of the country, according to a congressional source briefed on the plan. The offer included promises of transportation to another country, visas and help in recovering assets from frozen bank accounts.

In his speech, Clinton emphasized allegations of human rights abuses. The United States estimates 3,000 people have been killed in three years of political assassinations.

"Cedras and his armed thugs have conducted a reign of terror," the president said. "Executing children. Raping women. Killing priests. As the dictators have grown more desperate, the atrocities have grown ever more brutal."

Administration officials said Clinton's speech puts the United States on a sure path to invasion, unless the military leaders flee into exile. After five months of threatening an invasion, aides argued the nation's credibility was at stake.

As long as Cedras rules, Clinton said, Haitians will continue to seek sanctuary in the United States. More than 14,000 Haitians are housed at the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo, Cuba, and the United States has spent $177 million to support them and maintain the economic embargo on Haiti.

Clinton said.

Some 300,000 Haitians are in hiding in their country, eager to flee, Clinton said.

"If we do not act, they will be the next wave of refugees at our door," he said. "We will continue to face a mass exodus of refugees and a constant threat to stability in our region and control of our borders."

— President Clinton

Meanwhile, four Republican senators sought an opinion from the Justice Department on whether President Clinton must have congressional authorization before launching an invasion of Haiti.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and Sens. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo.; Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., and William Cohen, R-Maine, said they were seeking "any legal opinion that may have been rendered, orally or in writing, by the Office of Legal Counsel, concerning whether congressional authorization is required before U.S. military forces initiate an invasion of Haiti."

The Office of Legal Counsel is the chief advisor to the Clinton administration on constitutional matters.

Former Secretary of State James A. Baker III said the United States should not invade "because the national interest doesn't require that we put American lives at risk. There is a national interest in restoring democracy in Haiti, but I think it's probably best served through political means, diplomatic means, economic sanctions and that sort of thing."

At a briefing, White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said "there's no plan for a massive manhunt" for the military leaders if they refuse to leave. She said the offer of safe passage to a third country would be withdrawn if forces have to "go in to kick them out." In that case, she said, they would be subject to arrest.

A U.S.-Haiti confrontation would be a bizarre mismatch, pitting the world's mightiest military against one of the weakest.

It is widely assumed that most of Haiti's ragtag forces would run from a fight, throwing off their uniforms and trying to melt into the civilian population. The fear is that Americans would become targets of ambush and guerrilla warfare.

BOO — To the death of major league baseball in 1994. Yes, greed on the part of both the owners and players will deny fans the chance to see nine men whack a white ball around a field. OK, it's not the most exciting sport — but it has its remaining fans, who will now be denied the pleasure of the season. At a time when the sport of baseball is struggling with basketball, football and hockey for revenues and fans, the move is a stroke of idiocy rarely matched by professional athletics. See you in 1995, guys — if the League still exists in a year's time.

BOO — To "Critical Mass," Wednesday's attempt by ASU bicyclists to protest the treatment of cyclists on University Drive by blocking traffic on said roadway. Although meant in good faith, the protest is far too likely to result in resentment and anger from the affected motorists — and far too unlikely to result in the reforms and changes the cyclists desire. There are better ways to protest than by illegal, inconsiderate and unsafe actions like the blockade — however obstinate and foolish Tempe's policies regarding bicyclists on University Drive may be.

BRAVO — To the 1994 Arizona primaries. This year's horseraces for the Democratic nomination for governor and Democratic nomination for U.S. Senate were an exciting demonstration of the democratic process, not over "until the chubby grocer sings." This year's close vote totals and higher-than-average voter turnout suggest that voters are taking more interests in Arizona politics this year.

BOO — To Mother Nature, for bringing us more expected 102° weather next week. Just what Tempe needs — more heat. Break out the iced drinks and swimming pools, ASU, and hope for a cold spell.

BOO — To President Bill Clinton, for his disregard for the people of the United States in his pursuit of the invasion of Haiti. Clinton's lack of regard for the people he represents and leads is only matched by his inability to master the intricacies of international negotiation. By sending in the gunboats, the president demonstrates that, self-serving Vietnam "war protests" aside, Clinton is hardly adverse to using force as long as he is in command and as long as it won't be his blood that flows in the heat of battle. Ironically, the single instance on which the president has taken a firm political stance (contrary to his usual wishy-washy waffling) is the one policy most Americans fail to support. One can only wonder where Clinton will want to enact change through the power of six million bayonets next — welcome to Washington, the world policemen's number one precinct.

BRAVO — To Paul Johnson and Terry Goddard for uniting behind Eddie Basha to support the 1994 Democratic effort for governor. We can only hope that the race between Basha and Gov. Fife Symington will not be marked by the mudslinging and dirty politics so present in the Democratic and Republican primary races — a hope which we probably make in vain.

Never mind the Haiti invasion, U.S. occupation is main worry

With the invasion of Haiti looming in the immediate future it would seem pertinent to reflect on the reasons why we are about to take such a serious step.

ALEXANDER
S. WYLIE
Guest Columnist

On the surface and to the general populace (only 23 percent were in favor of an invasion in a recent Newsweek poll), it would seem that the roots of the invasion are fairly simple.

There is a dictator in power illegally in Haiti and he has sought to solidify his power in blood. The United States and the United Nations have been trying unsuccessfully for three years to oust the military rulers with a combination of sanctions and threats. Because Clinton has no credibility regarding Haiti or any foreign policy issue, the Haitians have called his bluff. Now that Clinton has found himself in this situation, it would be political suicide not to invade.

So what do we do now? And what's more important: why? Enter Kweisi Mfume. The chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus brings with him a block of about 40 democratic votes in the House of Representatives. This block of votes is crucial to President Clinton on nearly all of the legislation he has tried to pass and will try to pass. "General Mfume," as John McLaughlin refers to him, has been slighted in the past by Clinton (most notably on the nomination of Lani Guinier to the Justice Department, and a racial justice act for the Crime Bill) is now looking for payback. Mfume and the Black Caucus have non-negotiable demands on the upcoming reforms of health care and welfare. Clinton cannot afford to lose the Caucus's support for what will no doubt be a tough fight in Congress on both issues.

Clinton has already taken steps to appease Mfume. March 18, the Caucus sent a letter to President Clinton detailing the group's demands on Haiti. The result was the firing of the old special envoy to Haiti, Lawrence Pezzullo, and the insertion of a past Chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, William Gray.

The plan now, it seems, is to invade with a surgical strike, return ousted president Aristide and to secure the Caucus's support for some time to come — never mind the fact that Aristide himself has been quoted as being against an invasion.

Were we only planning to invade, take care of the bad guys and get out, that would be to some measure more acceptable, but then remember we're dealing with liberals. Haiti is the perfect place to practice all of their great ideas on how nations should be formed. As soon as the marines touch ground in Haiti, we would become responsible for everything that happens. Just because the country has been in abject poverty for decades before all of this doesn't mean that we could leave it like that.

The ensuing occupation of Haiti could be as much folly as the 1915 invasion of Haiti, which resulted in the longest occupation in US history: 19 years.

William Gray says that we must not only restore Aristide, but also "bring economic growth," something we have enough trouble with at home.

The old Haiti envoy has taken an opposite stance. Pezzullo says, "You've got the makings of a real ugly scene" and that intervention "would be a disaster....The problem is, this will not work. If we invade—which is very likely, not because the President has the stomach for it, but because he's going to find himself with no option but to invade—then the costs will come."

We can conclude the invasion itself is not the problem, it's what they want to do afterward that will be the costly part, then the real social justice motives for invading would become apparent. The most disturbing notion is what Pezzullo suggests, that Clinton is so mired in his politicking that he is forced into rash decisions and what Sen. Larry Pressler calls "foreign policy by the Black Caucus."

Though many liberals have sought to draw comparisons of Haiti to Kuwait, this isn't valid. A better comparison would be to compare Haiti with Somalia, but even that is being generous. Like it would be with Haiti, the invasion was minor. American lives were lost when the natives started to get sick of us, as they will in Haiti. The invasion will mostly likely come and, with it, American casualties.

What we should ask ourselves at the outset of any invasion is, how many American lives are worth social engineering in a small Caribbean country where the people have not taken the responsibility upon themselves to fix their problems? I say none.

Hey prez, it's the welfare state

Now that Congress has, for the second time this year, ended crime as we know it, it is free to screw up the nation's health-care system. Obviously, $4 trillion is simply not enough to show our compassion and sensitivity toward the less fortunate.

To show that we really care, it will be necessary for the government to overhaul, nationalize, devastate and ration one-seventh of our economy. After all, some people are not receiving as much medical attention as others. We must right this wrong and ensure that no one gets good treatment; then life will be more fair and equal for all.

The $64 question is this: do you really think that more government intrusions and mandates are going to do one thing to improve the quality or availability of health-care in this country?

If you do, then you're a bigger flake than the nut we've got in the White House! Just look at the federal government's track record. I challenge you to name just one thing that the government has ever done to "improve the quality of life" that has ever worked like it was intended. Name one program that has ever cost what it was supposed to cost or has operated as efficiently and non-intrusively as it was supposed to operate. Even the military, the one thing at which the government does a reasonably good job, is stuffed with bureaucracy and waste. Government is simply the most complicated, least efficient way to distribute goods and services.

A government run health-care system would be far too expensive, inefficient and unworkable. In fact, two of the biggest problems in the industry, Medicare and Medicaid, are government creations. Besides, do you really want the same people who have appointed a raving lunatic, like Joycelyn Elders, to the post of Surgeon General to have anything whatsoever to do with making serious choices regarding your health?

JIM MAHIN

Columnist

The truth is that, as usual, President Clinton is deliberately trying to deceive the American public into believing that a minor problem is a crisis. This is how he justifies his radical, left-wing agenda. After listening to one of his speeches you would swear that we have millions of people dying in the streets because they either have no health-care coverage or are in need of an operation. What a bunch of garbage!

America has the greatest health-care system in the world. I realize that a few people end up falling through the cracks, but this is hardly justification for an entire overhaul of the system. In one recent survey, over 85 percent of Americans said they were content with the coverage that they receive. Additionally, it's already illegal to turn away anybody who's in need of emergency medical attention. So, where is the crisis?

The only crises facing our health-care system are the Clintons, liberal congressmen, and other bleeding-hearts who will not rest until we become the U.S.S.A.: The United Socialist States of America. This is what it's really all about. Let's call it for what it really is: socialized medicine. Of course, the Clintons would never use this term, for if they let the truth be known, they would lose what little public support is left for them on this issue.

What Bill Clinton fails to realize is that the welfare state, or pseudo-socialism, as I like to call it, has been nothing but a complete and utter failure. Its legacy is horrific. We are faced with a debt that we'll never recover from. We've created a permanent, dependent lower class who, while they leach off the backs of the hard-working taxpayer, complain bitterly that they are the victims of society. And to top it all off, we've taxed the middle class into oblivion in the name of fairness and justice. But instead of remedying these disasters, Clinton seeks only to expand it.

Liberals and socialists alike fail to realize that, regardless of where our starting point is, life is a series of choices.

Sometimes we choose wisely and sometimes we really blow it. Indeed, it is individuals who choose to drop out of school, ruin their lives with drugs or alcohol or place themselves in the position (no pun intended) to become pregnant at a young age. But instead of telling people, "Hey, you screwed up, now you're going to have to work your butt off to get ahead," we send them a far different message. Our social policies tell people that they are not responsible for any of their actions and that it's not their fault that they blew it. Indeed, it's societies fault and, therefore, society will pay for you, your problems, and your kids.

I, for one, am sick and tired of this mentality. I don't have sympathy for those who will not help themselves. I can not feel warm and fuzzy about government programs that steal my hard-earned money and give it to able-bodied people who don't deserve it and haven't earned it.

What pisses me off the most is that we have social policies that actually encourage people not to be responsible for their own actions.

The tremendous redistribution of wealth that occurs daily in this country is criminal. Yet, every day we are inundated with yet another liberal belly-ache to help end poverty by giving more money to more people. This is ridiculous!

People have got to begin to realize that this is the problem, not the solution. Marginal people will not do for themselves so long as others are willing to do it for them.

Listen and learn, President Clinton: it's not the economy, stupid.

It's not health-care, stupid.

This nation's biggest problem is the whole concept of the welfare state, and its perilous impact on the economy, health care, crime and every other aspect of our society, stupid.

If our government really and truly wanted to show compassion, they would get out of the wallets of productive Americans so that we could enjoy life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness without the burden of those who are unwilling to better or help themselves.

Jim Mahin is a senior political science major.

What Bill Clinton fails to realize is that the welfare state, or pseudo-socialism, as I like to call it, has been nothing but a complete and utter failure.

Math department has no trouble with religious holidays

The article in the State Press of Sept. 13 ascribing "culturally imperialistic" attitudes of some faculty toward Jewish students because of absence during High Holy Days contains at least two significant misstatements of facts in reference to mathematics faculty.

The first claims that a student had to miss an exam scheduled on a holiday. The truth is that the "exam" was actually a minor quiz and that the student initially had not informed the instructor as to her reason for her intended absence. Once that was made clear, she took the quiz and was very happy.

The second is the claim that the instructor and the chair of the department did not show up for a meeting with Rabbi Lee. This is totally false and Rabbi Lee himself does not know how this perception arose in the mind of the reporter. Rabbi Lee and the chair of the department did talk by phone and the problem was discussed, resolved and no meeting was scheduled.

The department of mathematics is proud of its faculty record honoring observance of religious holidays. The student in question did file a complaint through my office and it was promptly attended to.

As indicated above, it was due to an error in communication between the student and the instructor and not a matter of discrimination. It is a remarkable fact that in this department with more than 10,500 students taking mathematics classes this semester this is the only alleged complaint. I believe this fact clearly refutes the implications of the State Press article.

ASU dorms safe, secure, not 'dungeons', 'prisons'

As I walked down University Drive, I read the Sept. 15 article: "Dorms Like Dungeons." I must admit it, I did not choose ASU because of its reputation as having top-notch dorms.

I am a staff member in Manzanita Hall, and while I think it a good dorm, my friend thinks of it as "Manzanita Prison," his reasoning being that of the famous "Night-Host Desk" of North Campus.

The security in my dorm is very tight. But it keeps the unwanted people (vandals, burglars, etc.) out of the dorm at night. I also find the other rules to be necessary. There is an alcohol policy and a drug policy, but students still find ways to sneak these items into the dorm. For Keith Aspinall, the freshman who has not had a "rosy" experience so far, I think you should find yourself some friends who do not drink or do drugs. There are a lot of alcohol/drug-free students on this campus.

I agree with the Dean of Residence Life. The people that conducted The Princeton Review need to "update their information."

Can relate with the politically correct blues

I was pleased to find Linda Bowden's article Sept. 9 on political correctness (PC).

It was a nice surprise to find a conservative view among your liberally-dominated paper. Ms. Bowden's views on how PC tyrants are getting out of hand with their "blacklist" (whoops, is that not politically correct?) is extremely warranted and needs to be heard.

For a great time now I have shared Linda Bowden's ideas but have never publicly voiced my opinion. As our culture becomes more diverse and is exposed to different people we need to concentrate on education and opening our minds. We need to stop concentrating our efforts on petty issues like whether or not Lion King is PC, or taking American literary classics like Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn off the shelves of our libraries.

One would think that the same people who want to control our speech, movies and books would like to educate the public instead of closing them off. Like Ms. Bowden so eloquently stated: "a word only has meaning when we attach a meaning to it." A word is only a word. Don't these politically correct people have anything better to do than analyze everything said? I never hear any suggestions from these critics on how we should deal with this "so-called problem". Will the next required book for all English 101 students be the Politically Correct Dictionary? What would our founding fathers (whoops, I meant initial political leaders) be labeled in our modern society? Sexist? Bigots?

With Ms. Bowden's article the issue of political correctness has been truthfully exposed. Now it is our turn, the students, to understand other cultures and people so that our society can interact. The last thing we need to do is spend our valuable time on this PC nonsense.

ASU electric car ranks high in field

BY ELIZABETH APPELEN
STATE PRESS

An electric race car developed by ASU students is not only a step toward pollution-free vehicles, it's also one of the fastest cars of its type.

ASU's electric race car, Formula Lightning, is one of 15 such race cars owned by universities nationwide. It has competed against the other 14 cars in three races so far and fared very well.

Formula Lightning team leader John Happ said that ASU's car, which was built last March, took first in a race at Phoenix International Raceway, third at the Cleveland Grand Prix, and fourth at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway during the past several months.

ASU's car can reach 100 mph, coming within 7 mph of the electric race car speed record, said Happ, a computer science major with six years of professional race car mechanic experience.

ASU's Center of Energy Systems Research, which is part of the engineering department, formed the Formula Lightning team. It is currently made up of 14 undergraduate students.

"This is an opportunity for the public to see that electric vehicles are not like slugs," said Murray Sirkis, professor emeritus in the engineering department.

Sirkis said that the Formula Lightning team allows students to use the knowledge they get in the classroom for practical purposes.

"It provides an opportunity for students to participate in the design and construction of an electric vehicle," Sirkis said. "This complements the education that they get in the classroom."

Besides giving ASU's students practical experience, the car is also a testing tool for energy researchers, Happ said.

"We are discovering things that the designers might never find because they haven't had severe duty service," Happ said. "We take the engineering designs and test them to the limit."

California has adopted legislation to reduce their air pollution, Sirkis said. The legislation mandates that auto manufacturers in California sell at least two percent of zero-emission vehicles per year starting in 1998, Sirkis said.

Frederick Bermudez, Salt River Project spokesman, said the studies show that people in the Valley are ready for an electric car.

"I think Arizona is in a great position to follow those mandates," Bermudez said. "Electric vehicles are a lot closer than people think."

Dissections still performed, despite computer programs

By ELIZABETH APPELEN
STATE PRESS

Even though highly educational alternatives are available for animal dissection, ASU biology students are still performing animal dissections because of their educational value and the department's lack of funding, a biology professor said.

ASU is not using more computer technology to replace some of the animal dissections because the software is too expensive for ASU, said Jon Harrison, an ASU zoology professor.

"The zoology department has submitted a grant to the Howard Hughes Foundation last spring for hundreds of thousands of dollars," Harrison said. "We are hoping to get it."

If ASU gets the grant, it will put the money toward computer equipment, software and lab renovation, he said. The Hughes Foundation will announce its grant recipients in two to three weeks, said Steven Koppes of ASU's news bureau.

Biology student Angelina Swanson said she hopes the grant is approved so the number of animal dissections is reduced.

"I want to get the best education possible and there are much better alternatives than animal research," she said.

Harrison said software exists that would provide a comparable substitute for human anatomy visualization and for many of the animal dissections.

"We hope to minimize the amount of animal dissections by using computer technology; however, in some cases it (dissecting) is extremely useful," Harrison said.

The human anatomy visualization software is detailed cartoons of the human body, Harrison said. He added that performing real dissections enhances learning, but said the computer programs are thorough enough for introductory level classes.

For higher level zoology classes, it is better for students to have the three-dimensional experience they get when they perform animal dissections, Harrison said.

Currently, ASU biology students have the right to chose available alternatives, other than computerized labs, if they are not comfortable with animal dissection, said Russel Benford, a representative for Concerned Arizonans for Animal Rights and Ethics.

However Benford said some students do not choose alternatives because their professors do not tell them of their choices.

"A lot of students don't know that they actually have the right to opt out of a dissection or vivisection," Benford said.

Ron Rutowski, associate chairman of the zoology department, said professors in his department communicate with students about their choices.

"I don't know anyone in our faculty who hasn't worked with our students to accommodate with their ethical concerns," he said.

Harrison said he prefers students in his Zoology 201 and 202 classes to perform real animal dissections.

"Pictures, which are two-dimensional, really don't give the same information," Harrison said. "It goes from words on a page to the real world — a very useful kind of learning."

ASU Telefund overcoming bad image, high turnover rate

By GREG ZEMEIDA
STATE PRESS

Officials at the ASU Telefund have reduced a high turnover rate after working to change what they call an erroneous "telemarketing" image.

The ASU Telefund is an organization that uses students to contact alumni by phone to raise donations for scholarships and building renovations.

Chris Koenig, a program manager for the Telefund, said the fund had trouble getting employees in the past because students thought it was just another telemarketing scam, whose workers were tightly stuffed together in "boiler rooms" with a menacing boss pushing employees relentlessly.

Koenig said the Telefund is nothing like that.

"We try to differ ourselves from those types of organizations," he said.

This negative image led to a high turnover rate, with the average employee working about three months, Koenig said.

"It has changed tremendously here," he said.

Much of the turnover problem was eliminated by having Telefund management train employees for a longer period of time, he said.

Also, Koenig said the fund tries to hire people who want to work at this type of job.

"We make sure individuals we hire understand what is expected of them," he said.

The average employee works there for about six months now, Koenig said.

Starr DeBerry, an office manager for the Telefund, said starting pay is $5 an hour, with bonuses paid to those who obtain large or numerous donations from alumni. The average student gets from $2 to $20 a day in bonuses, she said.

One of the best recruitment tools the fund has is its flexible hours, Koenig said.

Students can pick the hours they want to work each week and the Telefund lets them work around classes.

Koenig said students can work from 10 to 32 hours a week, but that the average student works about 15 to 20 hours a week.

Even with the changes made to the fund, Koenig said Telefund is not the right job for every student.

"At times, the nature of the job is not always the best," he said.

DeBerry said most people quit the job because they become discouraged with the number of rejections they get each day. About seven out of every 10 people contacted do not donate, she said.

Hild Peersen, a graduate student who worked for the fund for one month this summer, said she quit because she became frustrated with all of the negative reactions she received.

"The nature of this job just sucks," she said.

Peersen did say that she was treated well there and thought it was a good working environment.

"They pushed us in a positive way," she said.

Another student who worked at the fund over the summer, Travis Meisner, said he enjoyed his two months there but had to quit because of a conflict with school.

Meisner, a graduate student in musical performance, said he liked the idea of raising money for the University, instead of working at a "sleazy" telemarketing company.

"I thought it was great," he said. According to Koenig, the Telefund raised about $1.1 million last year and hopes to get $1.5 million this year.

He said the donations are used in four areas — scholarships, faculty recruitment, building renovations and new equipment purchases.

The donations from alumni go to the college they attended while at ASU and the dean of that college decides how it will be used, Koenig said.

About 50 students work at the fund, which is located at University Drive and Rural Road, but Koenig said he wants to hire an additional 20 employees.

POLICE REPORT

ASU police reported the following incidents Thursday:

- A female employee reported that someone removed $50 from the assistant hall director's office in Mariposa Hall.
- A missing juvenile was found at Manzanita Hall and was turned over to the Phoenix police.
- A man unaffiliated with ASU was arrested for criminal trespass at Palo Verde West.
- Two students were contacted at Gammage Auditorium while rollerblading.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Thursday:

- Two men, ages 18 and 20, were arrested for possession of stolen property. After police observed them in a stolen vehicle, they abandoned the car and fled on foot before police arrested them in the 3000 block of South Mill Avenue.
- An 18-year-old man was arrested for possession of stolen property, felony flight and misconduct involving a weapon. While driving a stolen vehicle, he fled from police, driving 60 to 85 mph in heavy lunch-hour traffic. He abandoned the vehicle and fled on foot before being apprehended.
- A 30-year-old Tempe man was arrested for possession of dangerous drugs and possession of drug paraphernalia. He was arrested after a search, in which he was found to be in possession of a substance believed to be methamphetamine. Evidence also indicated that he was involved in the sale of illegal drugs.

- A 26-year-old man was arrested for possession of prescription drugs, for selling prescription drugs and for possession of drug paraphernalia. He had attempted to sell Fioricet tablets to several people at Java Road.
- A 25-year-old Tempe woman was arrested for domestic violence assault after allegedly assaulting her live-in boyfriend in the living room of their shared residence. She reportedly pulled him off the couch and tried to drag him outside. In the process, she ripped his shirt off and scratched him under the left arm, leaving a raised red welt.
- A 22-year-old woman was arrested for possession of narcotic drugs, possession of drug paraphernalia, and providing false information. She gave false information in order to help her boyfriend avoid arrest for an outstanding warrant. A search of her truck revealed a blue "school box" containing heroin and drug paraphernalia such as spoons, ties and needles.

LONDON (AP) — Bono paid top dollar for a bit of Charlie Chaplin.

The lead singer of U2 paid $55,500 for the military costume Chaplin wore in his 1940 movie "The Great Dictator." Chaplin was Adenoid Hynkel, a parody of Adolf Hitler.

The Irish rocker bought the costume Tuesday at a Sotheby's auction. He plans to display it in a restaurant he owns in Dublin.

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Bobcat Goldthwait's no-contest plea for setting fire to "The Tonight Show" set is now official, and he has handed over TV spots he was ordered to make on behalf of a burn center.

The comedian also must pay $3,888 in fines and restitution, including $698 to NBC for damage to the chair he set on fire with lighter fluid May 6. Jay Leno and guest Lauren Hutton doused the fire with cups of water.

Goldthwait, 32, was in Municipal Court on Wednesday to make final the plea bargain, which also includes six months' probation.

"We don't think there was maliciousness here," Deputy City Attorney Robert Walters. "It was reckless. It was a joke gone bad."

Goldthwait gave Walters the public service messages. They warn of the dangers of playing with fire.

"We're pleased," defense attorney Karen Brodtkin said. "We'd like to get everything behind us."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Country singer Trisha Yearwood learned two things in college.

"I knew to get a lawyer first and never sign anything," she said. "Whether we like it or not, the creative side and the business side have always clashed."

major gave me an overview of all the different aspects of the business, so when I tried to make a name for myself, I knew what questions to ask."

Yearwood, who turns 30 on Monday, was nominated last month for the Country Music Association's female vocalist award. The winners will be announced Oct. 5.

CERRITOS, Calif. (AP) — Shirley MacLaine doesn't mind being ribbed about her cosmic beliefs. Just make it funny.

"I'm used to the jokes," she said. "If they're bad jokes, I hate them. If they're good jokes, I laugh harder than anybody. In fact, comedians phone me up and I help 'em."

The actress and singer has written books and lectured on her beliefs in reincarnation and the supernatural. She tours regularly with her musical variety show and believes humor is essential to her philosophy.

"My show involved a lot of joking — humor through music, that kind of thing. And the audience jokes back," MacLaine said this week.

Sun Devil football team looks to deck Cards

ASU wary of Louisville, despite losing record

BY TODD KELLY
STATE PRESS

This weekend, there will be more than one Cardinals team trying to shake a 0-2 start.

The Louisville Cardinals, losers to Kentucky and Texas, come into Saturday's 7 p.m. game at Sun Devil Stadium seeking their first win of the season.

ASU will be trying to bounce back from a 47-10 loss to Miami and a 35-17 loss at Louisville last season.

The game last season was statistically close but the score told a different story. ASU Coach Bruce Snyder said the Sun Devils don't really have a revenge factor for this one because there are too many other things to worry about.

"We better clean up our own stuff here," he said. "We've got enough of our own issues that we can't make them (the Cardinals) the target."

This will be Louisville's third road game of the season. The opener, against Kentucky, led to a 20-14 loss. It was the first meeting between the two schools since 1924.

Louisville traveled to Texas last weekend, but lost a tough game there too, 30-16.

The Cardinals' 0-2 record means little to Kendall Rhyne, ASU's senior defensive gunner.

"Every opponent worries me," he said. "If you don't go out and play your best, what happened last week can happen. I think if we play as well as we can and execute all of our responsibilities, we should be alright."

Howard Schnellenberger, head coach at Louisville, said the Cardinals could easily have a different record than they do.

"We've had a lot of unusual things that happened to keep us from winning," he said. "We could very easily be 2-0 at this time."

The last time Louisville started 0-2 was in 1988, but the Cardinals rallied to an 8-3 season.

And no Schnellenberger-coached team has ever gone 0-3.

"I don't know how good this football team is right now," Schnellenberger said. "We've got nine new starters on defense; we've got six new starters on offense. I think it's a talented team."

Following in typical Schnellenberger tradition, the Cardinals have a solid quarterback, Marty Lowe, leading the offense. Lowe is a junior from Chattanooga, Tenn.

"Marty has been with us for three years," Schnellenberger said. "He's gone through all the preparation for a starting quarterback that Jeff Brohm, Browning Nagle, Bernie Kosar, Vinny Testaverde or Jim Kelly did. I think he has the capacity to be a winning quarterback and to lead our team."

Schnellenberger is known for his work with quarterbacks. He's also worked with Joe Namath, Bob Griese and Roman Gabriel over the years.

"I think Howard Schnellenberger does a great job," Snyder said. "He's proven that, not just over one year, but over a career. That's a good, young football team he has. Like he said, they could easily be 2-0 as opposed to 0-2."

Craig Macnaughton / State Press

Kendall Rhyne (No. 22), Dan Lucas (50), Brent Burnstein (94) and the rest of the Sun Devils will attempt to hand Louisville its third consecutive loss Saturday at 7 p.m. at Sun Devil Stadium.

Louisville is one of only two major independents in the country, the other being Notre Dame.

Schnellenberger said he thinks it's advantageous for the Cardinals to stay an independent because it gives his team a chance to play teams from all over the country and not worry about conference ties.

UofL's starting halfback, Anthony Shelman, agrees and likes "... the opportunity to get to play different teams in different conferences. You're not playing a cupcake schedule. I think Louisville faces some of the toughest teams in the country."

ASU volleyball anticipates tough matches in Oregon

Craig Macnaughton / State Press

Hillary Clark and the No. 12 ASU volleyball team open Pac-10 play on the road this weekend against Oregon and Oregon State.

BY LEE NEWMAN
STATE PRESS

The preliminaries are over. It's time for the ASU volleyball team to show what it is made of.

The Sun Devils travel to Oregon this weekend to battle Oregon and Oregon State on Friday and Saturday in their first two conference matches of the season.

With the likes of ASU, Stanford and UCLA, the Pac-10 is considered to be the toughest volleyball conference in the country, and according to ASU Coach Patti Snyder, both Oregon (6-2) and Oregon State (8-1) are teams that the conference has to reckon with.

"Both teams are very tough," Snyder said. "They both have very strong line-ups."

Snyder knew Oregon State would have a good team this season, but she considers Oregon's play to this point to be surprising.

"Oregon State's really solid," Snyder said. "They returned all their starters but one, and they have an outstanding freshman setter."

"Oregon's a surprise. They are a lot stronger than everyone anticipated."

All of Oregon and Oregon State's losses this season have been to ranked teams. The Ducks lost to 19th-ranked Georgia and eighth-ranked Long Beach State, while the Beavers' only loss came at the hands of a team that ASU is familiar with, No. 2 Nebraska.

No. 12 ASU knows they should come home with two wins, but the players also realize they can't walk through either game.

"I think we are going to have to play well to beat them," said senior co-captain Leanne Schuster. "I think we will beat them, but we will have to focus and play together as a team."

"We need to play to our level," Snyder said. "We can't play at anyone else's level. We have to play at ours, and by doing that, I think we can dictate our match outcome."

The team doesn't feel it played at its level last weekend when the Sun Devils lost two of three matches at the Nebraska First Tier Invitational. In one of those matches ASU was two games ahead and then

Cards look for win at 'Dawg Pound'

Quarterback Jim McMahon will look to end the Cardinals' skid Sunday, when Arizona takes on Cleveland. Craig Macnaughton / State Press

By DAN MILLER
STATE PRESS

A new quarterback. Old uniforms. The No. 1-rated defense. The No. 28-rated offense.

No one knows what to expect when the winless Arizona Cardinals take their entourage to Cleveland for a Sunday afternoon rendezvous in the "Dawg Pound."

The Cardinals' unstable quarterback situation looms largely heading into the contest. On Wednesday, they announced that 35-year-old veteran Jim McMahon will replace Steve Beuerlein as the starter.

Beuerlein's second straight sub-par outing (10 for 22, 108 yards and one interception) last Sunday against the Giants was enough for Buddy Ryan to summon the back-up.

"Most coaches don't have enough guts to make a change at quarterback," Ryan said. "They'd rather go with the status quo and not create any problems."

This is a team sport though and you've got to try to win. If you think that's the thing to do to win, well then you better do it."

Despite McMahon's comments about the starting job being only for one game, like a similar situation when both he and Ryan were with the Philadelphia Eagles two years ago, the coach noted otherwise.

"If he wins the game, I think I'd be an idiot to take him out," Ryan commented.

The Cardinals' top-ranked defense will see a few changes also. New acquisition Bernard Wilson will replace Chadrick Brown on the line and assume right tackle. Last week's defensive standout Michael Bankston (11 tackles, 3 assists and 2.5 sacks) will move to the left side.

Wilson was just picked up off waivers from the Tampa Bay Buccaneers last week. He is quickly adapting to the dropped three straight games and the match to unranked Wyoming.

"With Wyoming, we fought hard but we played down on Wyoming's level," Schuster said. "At the beginning of the season we talked about beating the teams we were supposed to beat, and I don't think we did that."

"We had a two game lead on them [Wyoming], and definitely let up," Snyder said. "They were playing with a lot more enthusiasm than we were. We let them back into the game."

Although Snyder never likes to lose, she feels the Wyoming defeat will really help the team.

"I'm glad we lost a game like this early in the season, because the kids really learned a lesson," she said.

One thing the Sun Devils will have to get accustomed to this season is that they are the team other teams want to knock off.

"Wyoming was fired up to beat a top-ten team," Snyder said. "Teams are out to get us this year. We have never been in that position before. We were always out to upset the other team, but this year it's a little different."

ASU will be without junior middle blocker Holly Sones this weekend. She sprained her ankle in the Bowling Green match last weekend and did not travel with the team. Sones is tied with middle blocker Hilary Clark for the team lead in block solos with eight.

complexities of the Cardinals' "46" defense.

"When you're stepping into the No. 1 defense, it puts a little pressure on you to perform," the two-year pro from Tennessee State said. "In some ways, this is like a one hundred eighty-degree turn. It's (the '46') not a gap defense where you just hit one gap and take it. I have to get back into the two-gap mode."

The Browns defeated the Cardinals at Sun Devil Stadium in October of last year, 29-21. The two teams have only met four times since 1969. The Cardinals last visit to Cleveland Stadium was in 1985 when they came away with a 27-24 victory.

Fourth-year head coach Bill Belichick knows facing the menacing Cardinals defense is a tall order.

"There's no question we'll get a big challenge from that front seven (of the Cardinals)," Belichick said. "We know they're going to blitz a lot and be in some different alignments. We're going to have our work cut out for us."

Cleveland (1-1) was thwarted by the Pittsburgh Steelers last week, 17-10, thanks in part to quarterback Vinny Testaverde's four interceptions. Testaverde has been picked off six times in the first two weeks of the season.

He can sympathize with Cardinals' quarterback Steve Buerlein, whose every move has also been under a magnifying glass.

"As an offense I think we have to start getting on the same page," said Testaverde, who is in his eighth year in the NFL. "I take the blame for a lot of what happened, but I'm not fully responsible for all of it."

The Cardinals will be wearing uniforms from 1920, and the Browns will wear their 1964 uniform, as part of the first day of a series of NFL "Throwback Weekends" celebrating the league's 75th anniversary. The Cardinals' red jersey will have three white sleeve stripes with a large white "C" enclosing a smaller "C" on the left sleeve, symbolizing "Chicago Cardinals," the city where the team got its start.

"It'll be fun to see them (the players) out there," Ryan said of the nostalgic attire. "I don't know what the hell kind of shoes you wear with khaki pants though."

ASU men's golf opens fall season

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The ASU men's golf team kicks off the fall 1994 season today at the William Tucker Invitational.

The Invitational, which is hosted by the University of New Mexico, will match up some of the top-ranked teams in the United States.

There will be 18 teams competing, including seven top-10 squads including Oklahoma State, Oklahoma, Texas, UofA and defending NCAA Champion Stanford. The teams will play 72 holes overall in the two-day tournament.

The Sun Devils will have an experienced squad for this tournament, returning four players from the NCAA Championships last June.

Coach Randy Lein said he is excited to face such stiff competition on their first outing this year.

"To meet up with this field right off the bat is a good following," Lein said. "We are getting even stronger than we were last year, with four returning players (Demsey, Hanell, Barber, and Johnson) from the NCAA Championships in June."

FREE
Every weekday, we give you the State Press absolutely free. Great news. Great features. Even a magazine. Crosswords and horoscopes. Not to mention the savings from all the coupons.
Will you do something for us?
When the State Press inserts, they tend to flop to the ground and create a safety hazard as well as an eyesore. Would you be so socially correct as to bend over and pick an insert that might slip out of your State Press?
Thanks. We appreciate it.
