ASU in 3-way battle for Williams campus

University must compromise for deal to work

BY LISA GONDERINGER
STATE PRESS

Negotiations in a three-way game of tug-of-war over the land at the proposed ASU East site depend strongly on the University's ability to compromise, said the two other groups involved.

Along with the proposed ASU East campus at the former Williams Air Force Base, a consortium of seven homeless agencies and the Gila River Indian Community have presented strong proposals expressing interest in the Williams site, which is a former pilot training facility that closed 11 months ago.

Proposals for the land must be filed by Oct. 3 with the U.S. Air Force, which will then decide how to distribute the property. But the Air Force has requested the three groups come to a compromise among themselves before submitting proposals to them.

The homeless agencies would like to use about 400 of the 700 houses on the base for supportive housing for clients who are attending adult basic education classes there.

The tribal community's proposal is to use about one-third of the available land, where it says ancient artifacts are buried. After artifacts are excavated, officials said they would like to work with ASU to use some of the housing for American Indian students taking classes.

"If all parties can reach an agreement at the local level, the Air Force will probably accept that," said Terry Isaacson, senior planning officer at ASU. "Otherwise, the Air Force may be forced to choose between the groups."

And ASU may not have the strongest claim to the land in the Air Force's eyes.

A federal law called the McKinney Act mandates that homeless agencies have first

Career Fiesta to provide employment contacts

Representatives from about 100 companies will be on campus Thursday and Friday during Career Fiesta '94 to answer questions and exchange information about their businesses with students.

The event will be held both days from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Cady Mall. Students will be able to inquire about job requirements, descriptions and will have a chance to make contacts with people in their fields of interest, said Elaine Stover, ASU associate director of Career Services.

Bill Becher, manager of University relations for Motorola, said Career Fiesta is a good prelude for on-campus recruiting.

"It helps us identify good matches in terms of jobs for students and employers," he said.

Although companies are not interviewing at Career Fiesta, students can drop off their résumés to the various employers, Stover said.

"They should also have a list of questions in their mind in terms of the kind of individuals or the kind of positions they interview for," she said.

Stover said most of these companies will be back on campus interviewing students for

Manzanita java house offers alcohol alternative

BY CHRISTINA BAILEY
STATE PRESS

For two bucks and some change, ASU students can drink all they want at the Imagination Cafe. All the coffee they want, that is.

The Imagination Cafe, a coffee house located in Manzanita Hall's cafeteria, is open to all students Thursday through Saturday from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

The cafe was opened at the end of last semester by the Student Action Team Educating and Training on Critical Issues (SATETC), a new chapter sponsored by the Resident Hall Association. The group opened the cafe to draw attention to itself and to provide an alternative place for people who don't want to spend their weekends drinking.

SATETC provides educational programs on issues such as cultural diversity, date-rape, AIDS and alcohol and drug use. And although it did not open the cafe to hold educational forums, it is being used, in part, to educate students on these topics.

Currently the cafe is used by students to study, to meet with friends and make new acquaintances. Plans to bring in different types of entertainment are in the works, said

Heather Cooley, SATETC president.

The cafe has tentatively scheduled the Farce Side, a popular ASU comedy group, for the first week of October. It has also booked a couple of bands and is putting together poetry readings. Talent shows and the installation of a karaoke machine also are being planned.

"Once SATETC gets off the ground, we will probably do 60 percent educational activities," Cooley said. "We want to educate people about things that they really take for granted."

Susan Panganiban, vice president of SATETC, said programs it is developing are unique to RHA and will reach a wide audience.

"We want to develop programs that are entertaining as well as informative," she said, adding that people get tired of just hearing lectures or having pamphlets handed to them. "The programs are very diverse, ranging from speakers to skits and different games."

SATETC's focus is on date-rape now, said Cooley, who added that freshman women have the highest incidence of rape among college students.

Cooley has written a skit, "Bad boys, Bad boys," that SATETC uses to educate students about date rape. It is not just a bunch of statistics thrown at them, Cooley said, but a program that grabs students because it is based on her personal experience.

"A lot of people are clueless and don't realize how fragile life is. If only one person shows up, maybe we can make a difference for them," Cooley said.

RHA President James Roosevelt, who was an actor in Cooley's skit, said it helped him and others identify with the misconceptions of date rape.

"It made me aware of situations that can happen on a one-on-one level," he said. "It was a positive experience and helped students become more aware of situations that may not be safe for them."

SATETC is creating a huge resource file center with all its programs in it. Any organization can go to SATETC and request its programs or other information pertaining to a certain subject, Cooley said.

"It really comes down to the amount of money we can come up with as to where we go," Cooley said. "We want to do so much. It is kind of sad that money is what it all hinges on."

priority in obtaining surplus federal land like the former base site.

And the Gila River Indian Community's proposal offers to pay the Air Force for the land it wants, whereas the ASU proposal would be a straight public benefit land transfer with no exchange of money.

Conrad Spohnholz, a leader of the homeless consortium, said the process of negotiating with ASU has not been favorable.

"ASU has indicated a willingness to discuss our proposal," he said. "But it seems as if they want to put us in a position of inferiority."

He said part of the reason for this could be the stigma associated with homeless people and that they don't see homeless people mixing well with ASU students.

Spohnholz said the consortium is trying to negotiate for equal membership in Education, Research and Training Partnership, the group backing the ASU East plan. He said if his group becomes an equal member in the partnership, it will not need to submit a proposal to the Air Force requesting ownership of the land.

"If we can't work something out with ASU, we'll let our application stand and let the chips fall where they may," Spohnholz said, "I don't think the University wants to see that happen."

Urban Giff, community manager for the Gila River Indian Community, said the tribal council is seriously considering an offer to join the Williams Gateway Airport Authority, the organization heading private development of other portions of the base.

"If we take that offer, it would be in lieu of possibly purchasing the land," Giff said.

Giff said the tribe's main concern is protecting and preserving the artifacts.

Rudy Campbell, a member of the Arizona Board of Regents, said ASU is concerned about the competing claims to the land, so much so that it has started looking at alternate sites for the ASU East campus.

The main alternate choice is a piece of state-owned open land near the Superstition Freeway and Superstition Springs Road.

"It all depends on the negotiations," Campbell said. "We don't want to go out there and try to set up in a place that is too small for us. It also depends which part of the property the Gila River Community wants. We don't want to have a Swiss-cheese campus."

Campbell said if ASU's proposal is granted, the campus could be ready for classes by January.

be back on campus interviewing students for jobs and internships. While some companies have already started interviewing students, the bulk of the interviews will take place in October and November.

Patti Munson, recruiting coordinator for career services, said students can register for interviews throughout the entire semester, but they need to be in the system to participate.

"When they are in our database, we can send out an electronic résumés to companies looking for people to fill certain jobs."

Students have to attend a registration orientation, then complete the résumé before they are eligible for on-campus interviewing, Stover said.

On-campus interviewing has been an overall success because the companies that come are requesting interviews with the intent to hire, Stover said.

"There has been a 37 percent rise in the number of on-campus recruiters from last year," Stover said, adding that competition is stiff because students also are competing against other schools.

College tuitions up 6% nationwide

BOSTON (AP) — The average tuition at America's four-year colleges rose 6 percent this year, twice the rate of inflation, and studies show a growing share of the money is going toward public relations instead of teaching.

Although the increase was twice the inflation rate, it was also the smallest since 1989, according to the College Board, an association of 2,800 higher-education institutions. The figures were released Wednesday.

According to the College Board, average tuition is now $11,709 at four-year private schools and $2,686 at four-year public schools, both 6 percent increases over last year.

The cost of two-year private institutions rose 5 percent, to $6,511, and two-year public colleges, 4 percent, to $1,298.

When room, board, books, supplies and transportation are added in, the average total cost of a college education comes to $18,784 for resident students at four-year private schools and $8,990 at public schools.

Separate government statistics also show that the proportion of money used by colleges for instruction, libraries and maintenance is shrinking, and the amount spent on public relations, marketing and fundraising is increasing.

"We're paying more and getting less than we got 10 years ago," said Stephanie Arelonio, president of the U.S. Student Association. "We're learning from videotapes in some instances. Class sizes have grown. ... It would be nice to see the professor sometime."

David Warren, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, said health-care benefits for faculty members and staff account for much of the tuition increase.

Cuts in federal grants and loans are also forcing colleges to give their own scholarships, Warren said. School spending on scholarships and fellowships rose 70 percent from 1982 to 1992, according to the U.S. Education Department.

During the same period, the proportion of their budgets that colleges spent on instruction fell from 32.4 percent to 30.7 percent, the department said.

Spending on libraries fell from 2.7 percent to 2.3 percent and on maintenance from 8.4 percent to 6.6 percent.

On the other hand, administrative

U.S. soldiers stretch out concertina wire while securing the area around the Haitian parliament building Tuesday. The parliament is scheduled to go into session this afternoon.

U.S. troops expand Haiti mission

1st U.S. fatality reported; believed to be suicide

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — American troops expanded their mission Tuesday from disarming the Haitian military to taking up posts around the Parliament building and City Hall in anticipation of Haiti's return to civilian rule.

The U.S. forces suffered their first fatality Tuesday. An American soldier was found shot to death at a hillside mansion being prepared for legislators returning to Haiti for Wednesday's Parliament session.

Pentagon spokesman Dennis Boxx said the soldier's death was being investigated as "an apparent suicide." He was part of the 10th Mountain Division from Fort Drum, N.Y., and his identity was not immediately released.

Military police strung concertina wire in front of the white colonnaded Parliament building, a day before the Haitian legislative body was to begin discussing a bill authorizing amnesty for the country's top military leaders.

The amnesty measure was part of a deal worked out Sept. 18 between the U.S. delegation led by former President Carter and Haiti's military junta.

A soldier posted on the roof of the Parliament scanned the area with binoculars, and others took up posts at the gate. Army vehicles stood watch in front of the building.

Small crowds of Haitians gathered in front of the building, and others sat under trees in a park across the street, watching the U.S. Army activity.

At City Hall, U.S. military police in armored vehicles were posted inside the compound and Army Humvees, machine guns mounted on their tops, took up guard just outside.

Mayor Evans Paul, exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide's former campaign manager, is expected to come out of hiding and return to his office on Thursday, U.S. officials said.

Paul, who had been targeted for assassination, has been out of sight for most of the three years since Aristide — Haiti's first democratically elected president — was overthrown by the military.

The first U.S. fatality came as American troops were refurbishing the Villa d'Accueil, a Haitian state guest house during the dictatorship of Jean-Claude Duvalier that now houses the independent Electoral Council, which is to oversee elections.

"They found him dead," said U.S. Embassy spokesman Stanley Schrage. "They don't know if this was a sniper or self-inflicted."

But Boxx said in Washington that the shooting was being investigated as "an apparent suicide."

Witnesses said they heard two shots about 11 a.m. on the northern side of the Villa d'Accueil, adjacent to a private golf course and country club.

Helicopters hovered over the area after the shooting, and platoons of American soldiers stood guard behind twin rows of concertina wire. They walked openly, however, showing no signs of the tension that would follow a sniper killing. They refused to talk about the death.

In the capital, not all welcomed the U.S. preparations for Wednesday's special Parliament session.

The lack of a quorum prevented the discussion of similar amnesty legislation last year, and contributed to the breakdown of the U.N. accord that was to have brought Aristide home.

Simpson trial draws more jury volunteers than expected

A man identified only as "Ralph" demonstrates in support of O.J. Simpson outside the Los Angeles Criminal Building Tuesday. The sign refers to "The Naked Gun" movies.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The judge in the O.J. Simpson case predicted speedy selection of a jury and expressed surprise Tuesday at the number of people willing to give up months of their lives to participate in the famous murder trial.

Superior Court Judge Lance Ito said the number willing to serve was 25 percent to 30 percent higher than he had anticipated when he summoned 1,000 prospective jurors.

Ito had four sets of roughly 250 people on call this week, but said the last batch may not be needed. His goal is to find 250 people who pass the so-called hardship phase of jury selection and can proceed to the next portion, where they will be asked about their personal lives as well as their attitudes toward the Simpson case.

The first wave of prospects Monday yielded 100 people who could participate in the trial, which could stretch through February. Initial screening Tuesday of the second group, which included 241 people, showed 72 could serve, 79 said it would be a hardship and 90 would be questioned further.

"Given the number of people who indicate they can stay, we may come to the conclusion Thursday," Ito said of the initial screening process.

The "survivors," as Ito calls them, fill out a 75-page questionnaire and must return to court next month to be quizzed by the judge and lawyers.

Although he has the right to bar attorneys from asking questions, Ito indicated Monday that he would allow limited queries from both sides.

In another development Tuesday, New York Newsday reported that a preliminary DNA test concluded that blood found on the carpeting of Simpson's Bronco is consistent with Ms. Simpson's blood. More tests are planned, the newspaper said, quoting unidentified sources.

STATE PRESS Editorial

Eclipsed by Haiti

There's actually a world out there beyond Haiti. With the onset of the almost-invasion, almost-occupation and almost-peace in the Caribbean state, we as Americans have perhaps neglected the rest of the world — and in some cases, events which may have more significance than the U.S. operation on Hispaniola.

Remember Russia?

For the past few months, you haven't heard much about the heir to the Soviet Union's superpower status. Russia and the Confederation of Independent States have been largely written off by Americans as burnt-out shells, crippled by economic problems and political turmoil. And to some degree, this is true.

But did you know that even as U.S. Marines occupy Haitian police headquarters, Russian troops are intervening in the Georgian civil war? Or that Russian troops are still stationed in the majority of the new "independent" republics?

Boris Yeltsin, in reaction to the criticism of conservatives and Russian nationalists, is carefully dedicating himself to the idea of maintaining Russia's superpower status — and, part and parcel, is de facto supporting the Brezhnev doctrine by maintaining Russian influence and power in the territories of the former Soviet Union. A dramatic shift in Russian policy, and one largely overlooked by the popular media.

Remember Serbia?

The Yugoslavian "civil war," still shuddering on, hasn't ended just because the news coverage did. NATO aircraft conducted the fourth airstrike of the year last week, and strife between Bosnian Serbs and Moslems continues.

The bloodiest conflict in post-World War II Europe seems to be grinding to a gradual halt under the weight of peace accords. But the potential for ethnic violence is hardly limited to Bosnia. We hear little of the Albanians of Kosovo, the Hungarians of Transylvania, or Macedonian-Greek conflicts: despite the fact that these are all potentially explosive areas.

The issues and concerns of Bosnia, once all-topical, have been forgotten, and the tinder has been lain for the next fires of ethnic cleansing to inflame Eastern Europe.

Remember Rwanda?

The central African nation still has more than two million refugees residing in other countries, victims of civil war, famine and ethnic strife. But it remains a page three story in most major newspapers (behind the O.J. trial, state elections and the featurey fluff of the day). The conditions and problems which caused the civil war still remain — and don't seem likely to go away. But you don't hear much about it anymore; it's not news.

There are other such issues: plague and national separatism in India. The IRA ceasefire in Northern Ireland. Political changes in Western Europe. The continuing question of North Korea.

But, until Haiti becomes old news, it seems you won't be seeing them. Until they, too, receive their shining moment in the sun.

Only to be shortsightedly forgotten again, until they explode into crisis and the front pages of newspapers.

In defense of women's studies

This woman got up in front of our women's studies class and told us how her father would come into her bedroom at night and have sex with her.

DANIEL BLANCO
Guest Columnist

He told her it was normal. She told us how she had become addicted to drugs and alcohol and eventually used sex to get them. She became completely disconnected from herself to survive. It all started back in her bedroom when she was a girl.

It was one of the most moving moments of my life to see someone have the strength to share herself so openly with so many students. She said that she would be glad to talk to anyone in the class who wanted to tell someone that they had endured similar suffering. At least one girl was moved to go talk to her immediately.

This is a problem. This is one of the many reasons why we need women's studies. Men abuse women and then construct the rules of society to keep the women suffering silently. We need women's studies to empower women who suffered abuse, to empower women to stand up and show men the big picture of their interaction with women.

The guest speaker said she continued to try and please her father into her 20s, because she was raised to be a good little girl. Good little girls are suppose to please the men in their lives, even if they are verbally, physically and emotionally abused. Little boys aren't trained to be like this. We are trained to be verbally, physically and emotionally dominant over others, including people we "love." This is why we need women's studies, because we raise these little girls to be victims and little boys to be victimizers.

We should hear that 25% of married women are regularly abused by their husbands and half suffer occasional abuse. Approximately 25% of women will be raped and 25 to 35% of girls are sexually abused.

A very enlightening Yale Law Review article in the women's studies text shows the basis for the law against rape is the concept of male ownership of women. The reason a woman is raped twice — once by the rapist and a second time by the police and courts — is that she has to be proven worthy of the law's protection. Original laws against rape weren't based on a woman's rights being violated but on the loss suffered by the victim's abuser for having his property defiled.

There is the concept of normative dualism that should be understood. If there are two standards, one of them is going to be held superior to the other. Little boys are raised to be competitive, aggressive and assertive. Do you believe that children raised like this are going to allow themselves to be held as the lower standard, especially if they're in a position to make the rules? An ex-friend once asked me if I was going to let a girl come between our friendship. He asked that like he meant "just a damn girl."

Men have been making the rules for a long time. First, there were the rules of the church that lead to laws to make women submissive and now we have the media doing it. Look at the young women who are anorexic or bulimic. Too many women have been programmed by a pop culture and only care about their appearance. The technology is different, but the message is still the same: "Woman, please your man, and you will be somebody. You will be his trophy." What happens to all trophies? They get put on a shelf, while the man proves his manliness by pursuing new trophies.

Unfortunately, in this new era of equality, women play by men's rules. Anyone playing a game by rules that are advantageous to the other party involved is going to lose. I like to say that women are giving up superiority for equality with men. Instead of women demanding that men become more like them and be more nurturing, caring and sensitive — the better human qualities — women are becoming more like men: insensitive, emotionally distant, aggressive and so on.

We want government to be nurturing, caring and sensitive, but men have run government and made laws and, except for a few, women suffered silently. Why are the women who have fought for changes not worth studying? Why should women generally have to suffer more in relationships with men and why should this be so acceptable? Why should women accept being treated as inferior by men? Why should women be paid less than men of equal education and experience doing the same job? Why didn't the equal rights amendment pass in this enlightened age of equality? These questions deserve reflection so that we can strive for real equality.

My women's studies class made me think more than any class I have taken. It made me think about men, women and minorities going beyond feminine issues. We studied Native Americans, African Americans and other minorities to show similarities in oppression and to get to the truth about our differences — differences that we should respect, rather than wipe away in forcing conformity on people.

ASU students do care

I am writing in response to the Sept. ?? unsigned editorial written by the State Press staff titled "Lazy Days at ASU." This editorial states that "the typical ASU student, it seems, could give the proverbial rat's behind." The editorial goes on and says that students don't care about things that affect the campus, all they care about is sports, socializing, and music. The editorial is basically putting down the student body and the reasons ASU has some problems is because of these selfish, "me-first" attitude of the students.

First of all, the State Press writers are not very open minded individuals. Who do these people think they are to judge the 43,000 students who attend this university on subjects they deem worthy of judgment. The editorial dwells on the subject that "only 18 people bothered to show up to a forum questioning candidates for District 27. And only a couple of those people were students." Somebody spent a lot of time listening to the issues if they were counting who was there and figuring out if they were ASU students. Who are they to decide this is more important than Greek Rush, social fun, ASU football or other college sports? I do understand that an academic reputation is very important in picking schools, but lets take a hypothetical situation. What would happen if ASU did not have a social reputation and school spirit shown through its sporting activities? If I were to answer that I would say that ASU's all-around reputation would be shot. The staff also talks about the "self-centered stupidity of the egomaniacal idiots who ride their bikes through pedestrian traffic." I understand your claim, but the truth is that the overcrowdedness of the pedestrian traffic may be caused by the ASU employees who drive their trucks through the pedestrian walkways. Now you tell me what is more dangerous? These are the people who are the ones who care the most about the university?

To bring this rebuttal to a close I would like to challenge the writers of the "Lazy Days At ASU" editorial to come out of your caves and find out what is behind a true ASU student.

Letters to the editor e-mail policy beneficial

Bravissimo to you, the State Press staff, for making yourselves accessible through e-mail, the communication medium of the '90s!

What better contribution from the Fourth Estate to help establish that e-mail is not merely the bastard child of the print medium?!

Hopefully other ASU departments, service areas, and organizations will follow your example.

Your next brave move should be to establish and publicize a sexy e-mail address, e.g., State.Press@asu.edu. Anyone at ASU or any other institution with access to the mother of all networks, the Internet, should be able to reach you at that address. Send a note to EMAIL-Q@ASU.EDU if you get a deluge of e-mail and need to know how to handle it, or otherwise have questions about any aspect of electronic messaging.

We'll leave a virtual light on for ya ...

Stevens' poking fun at population was wrong

Columnist Mike Stevens proves himself to be not only crude, in his column "One Billion Chinamen Can't Be Wrong" (Sept. 19), but vicious as well. He lumps together "the Plague, Hillary and the Holocaust." In trying to be a "wise-guy" he insults the First Lady of the United States who is trying to save the lives of thousands by bringing national health care to this less than civilized nation.

Trying to be funny, he makes light of the Population Conference in Cairo by saying, "It appears that mankind is screwing itself out of a meaningful future." He opines that America "has no need to worry, though," which further proves his ignorance.

He wrongly suggests that "America's wealth and resources are greatly untapped and our land underdeveloped." He proves that he understands nothing of the raping of our forests, the polluting of our lakes and the dilemma of numerous unwanted children in the high-school pregnancy explosion. He even doubts that there is a population problem by saying, "that is, if there is a population crisis." And Mike Stevens, the Chinese people do not appreciate being called "Chinamen," which is insulting and again proves your crude nature.

I think the readers of the State Press deserve a higher quality of writing. Your writing proves to be a disgrace to your Sophomore class. How about a taste of first-class journalism?

Not PC, but freedom of speech more important

In response to Charles Calleros's "Politically correct speech: the new frontier," I have to say, he's missing the point. The reason that most people hate political correctness is not that they object to referring to these "touchy" subjects, such as race and religion, with tact, but that political correctness is quickly taking away a freedom that our constitution promises us. According to the constitution, I have the right to the freedom of speech, the freedom of the press, the freedom to assemble, and the freedom of religion, (if I missed one or two it's because I haven't been to a history class in a while).

My point, however, focuses on the freedom of speech. If I can't refer to a Native American as an Indian, if I choose, that is infringing on my right to say what I want to say, the way I want to say it. If I don't like you, and I call you a garbage-picking hyena, that's my right. If it hurts your feelings, then you have every right. Your feelings are not as important as my first amendment rights. It has nothing to do with racism, it has to do with my rights as a citizen of the United States of America. What are my rights? It seems as if one of my rights is the freedom of speech. This means I can express myself in any verbal form I choose. It's a wonderful freedom that shouldn't be taken for granted. If I were to write this same letter in a completely politically correct society, run by the "speech police," I might be kicked out of school, or worse, put in jail.

As a child, I used to hear stories about Communist Russia and how horrible it must be to live in a society that banned books because they didn't like what the author said. What has to happen before the American people go in the same direction? The government is violating your rights as well as mine. Lafayette, in a speech to the French Constituent Assembly in 1790, said, "When the government violates the people's rights, insurrection is ... the most sacred of rights and the most indispensable of duties." We must not allow any more of our rights to be taken away.

I will not kowtow to a bunch of bleeding-heart liberals and let them rearrange my vocabulary. As far as I can remember, our founding fathers founded this country so that the people of their time and ours could live a life, not without structure but without the censorship of bureaucratic windbags. Housman wrote,

"The laws of God, the laws of man,
He may keep that will and can;
Not I: let God and man decree
Laws for themselves and not for me;
And if my ways are not as theirs
Let them mind their own affairs."

ASASU debates staggered vs. yearly term dilemma

BY DAWN DECHRISTINA
STATE PRESS

A proposed referendum to abolish staggered terms for Associated Students of ASU representatives is "taking the easy way out," said Alan Frost, ASASU president.

Frost said he would prefer that ASASU look into alternatives instead of returning to the past system where all offices were elected once a year.

"The idea (of staggered terms) that last year's senate and executive officers had was a valid one," Frost said. "If you had half and half (staggered) that would be great, in the sense that the senator that was there last semester would be a buddy to the new one."

The proposed referendum would allow students to determine if all representatives are chosen in one fall election or in two elections, one in the fall and the other in the spring. If approved by the senate, the proposal would be on this fall's election ballot.

This referendum is designed to correct the dilemma created during the spring's election when students approved conflicting propositions.

Students voted to stagger terms for representatives, which would require two elections per year — but also voted to have just one election per year.

As a result, a special election is tentatively scheduled for November to elect the representatives whose terms were shortened because of the staggered term proposition.

"This is a costly experiment that we are doing," said Sen. Sanjay Vidyadharan from the College of Law, author of the proposed referendum. "This is the easiest fix I could come up with."

John Malik, executive vice president, said returning to the once-a-year election would lead to consistency in the student organization.

"One (representative) will be there throughout the course of the academic year and students will be able to recognize them," he said.

Frost said the senate might be better off if some terms were staggered in order to have a smooth transition each semester.

He also said current representatives would be able to help incoming representatives learn the intricacies of ASASU if terms were staggered.

"I'd like to see the senators more knowledgeable on the bylaws," Frost said. "Until every senator figures out that's what they need to do to be effective, they won't do it."

ASASU President Alan Frost argued against changing from staggered to yearly elections at last night's committee meeting. N. Scott Trimble

Instant background checks offered for gun sales to speed process

PHOENIX (AP) — Most firearms dealers and law enforcement officials think that the state Department of Public Safety has hit a bulls-eye with its new Insta-Check Program.

Beginning Saturday, federally licensed weapons dealers will be able to sell a weapon within five to 10 minutes of contacting the DPS by phone or within 15 to 20 minutes if the information is sent by fax. That's all the time it will take for DPS workers to conduct background checks on potential gun buyers under the department's new clearance system.

DPS will set up a toll-free number and use six different databases to conduct the checks.

But Graham County Sheriff Richard Mack, who challenged the law, said he still questions the constitutionality of the DPS program.

"Between that and the Brady Bill regulations the DPS program is the lesser of the two evils," he said. "It's better than a five-day waiting period."

Mack also questioned the effectiveness of the background check program.

"Even if these statistics were not fictitious and 38,000 felons were actually prevented from purchasing weapons, you cannot point to one crime rate or assault rate that has changed," he said. "There are too many other matters to devote our attention to."

DPS is taking over the background check responsibility from local law enforcement agencies that have been conducting the checks since the Brady Law went into effect in February.

"The system is automated to process the name, license number and telephone number of the potential gun purchaser," said Georgene Ramming, supervisor for the DPS Program. "The information will then be cross-referenced with records provided by the Bureau of Alcohol Tobacco and Firearms. If the sale is approved, the weapons dealer will be given an Insta-Check number within 10 minutes."

Similar to the rules regulating concealed weapons licenses in Arizona, purchasers must not have a felony conviction, drug offense or history of mental illness, Ramming said.

Concealed weapons permit holders will automatically be approved for a gun purchase because the Brady Law makes them exempt from the background checks.

The cities will be happy to be relieved of their checking duties.

Mike Torres, spokesman for Phoenix police, said that between Feb. 28 and June 19 his department had 16,071 requests for background checks, 15,603 of which were processed.

Torres said 346 requests were turned down because of outstanding felony or misdemeanor warrants, 195 because of convictions for drug charges and 183 because of felony convictions for burglary or theft.

"We averaged just under a thousand requests a week and had a turndown rate of 6.9 to 7 percent," Torres said.

International students get lessons in cultural diversity

New program explores African American studies, issues

By DAVID PROFFITT
STATE PRESS

International students are learning first-hand about cultural relations in the United States, as part of an annual year-long diversity issues program.

This year's program, called The Martin Luther King Project, is a two-directional approach to teach international students about diversity, focusing on African American culture, and is sponsored by the International Student Office.

"Many of them (international students) were not introduced to the idea (diversity) back home, but they hear about it here all the time in the newspaper and TV," said Suzanne Steadman, director of International Programs.

The program starts with a reception and lecture 3 p.m. Thursday in the MU Pima Room. The lecture will cover the background of the civil rights movement in the United States.

The program will include one event every month. Planned activities include participating in Martin Luther King Day activities, visiting campus and community leaders and the state legislature and a Christmas celebration at a black church. Students will view the film Eyes on the Prize on Oct. 27, which is about Martin Luther King, and discuss the issues it raises with students from the African American studies hall, Umoja Campus Community.

Christina Gonzales, director of Campus Communities, said students from Umoja will bring a valuable perspective to the discussion of cultural diversity in the U.S.

"A discussion about the film could incorporate the reactions of African American students who might have a better grasp on talking about what the relevance of Martin Luther King is than if the international students were just talking amongst themselves about the series," she said.

Steadman said everyone is welcome to most of the programs.

Program planners chose to focus on African American and cultural diversity issues because the department's last program had a European focus, according to Martin Luther King Project Assistant Sarojini Lucht.

"In the future, who knows? We may focus on another group," Lucht said. "What we'd really like to do is give international students a comprehensive picture of U.S. society and U.S. history so they have a feel for everything that makes up the society."

The program has room for 40 students, but Lucht said it currently has only 19. Steadman expects enrollment to increase after the first lecture because news of the program will spread by word of mouth.

Most of the participants are African, Steadman added. "A few white South African students also signed up. That's good for us; it should make for interesting discussions," she said.

Ben Kinard, assistant professor of educational media and computers and faculty adviser to Umoja Campus Community, said he hopes the program will foster better cultural understanding from both groups.

POLICE REPORT

ASU police reported the following incidents Tuesday:

- A male student was contacted in Parking Structure 5 while acting suspiciously. A California driver's license belonging to his brother was impounded.

- Two male students were arrested for underage possession of liquor at 701 Alpha Drive.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Tuesday:

- A 26-year-old Tempe man was arrested for criminal trespass. He had attempted to steal liquor and tamales from Fry's at 3115 S. McClintock Dr.

- A 30-year-old man was arrested for assault. He kicked, punched and choked the victim, a clerk at the AM/PM convenience store at 1734 E. Apache Blvd. The victim suffered injuries to the legs, stomach and throat.

- A 20-year-old man was arrested for possession of burglary tools, possession of dangerous drugs, possession of drug paraphernalia and delaying and obstructing the police. He was originally stopped at Darrow Drive and Baseline Road for civil traffic bike violations. While being taken into custody, he broke free and ran. He was located 45 minutes later by a police K-9 unit.

- Four men, ages 21, 22, 19 and 19, were arrested for kidnapping and robbery. They entered a townhouse in the 100 block of East Broadway Road and held three victims at gunpoint for a ransom of $10,000. During this time, they removed property, including guns, from the victims. One of the men was also charged with aggravated assault for taking one of the victims at gunpoint to Phoenix in a vehicle.

ASU preschool offers kids diverse cultural environment

By ELIZABETH APPELEN
STATE PRESS

Who would have guessed ASU's most diverse "melting pot" would be simmering in the Farmer Education Building?

ASU's College of Education is helping children and researchers become more culturally sensitive by bringing children from many different cultures and socio-economic backgrounds together in a preschool located in the Farmer building.

"We talk a lot about different cultures, countries and languages (in the school)," said Chari Woodward, director of the preschool. "I think it has a profound effect on the kids."

"Diversity is encouraged," said Abdul Jibril, whose son attended the preschool in 1992. "It has a good affect on the kids ... they are exposed to many different languages and cultures."

Debbie Smith, an intern at the preschool, said even though many of the children are from different cultures and speak different languages, there is no tension between them.

"I think they have a real universal language between all of them," she said. "Language doesn't seem to be a barrier."

She said the language differences between the children may be a bigger barrier for the instructors and interns than for the children.

"It would be interesting for me to understand Spanish because they play in their native language," Smith said. "It is fun to watch."

The preschool, which opened in 1988, currently has 80 children from ages 3 to 4 attending the school, Woodward said.

At least eight cultures are represented in the program, including a Swedish and an Iranian child, she said.

The majority of children who attend the program have no connection to ASU besides the preschool, Woodward said, adding that parents hear about the program by word of mouth.

Woodward said about 20 percent of the children come from low-income families and attend the preschool on scholarships given by the College of Education. These children are transported by bus to ASU.

Other children attending the school need to pay tuition and find their own transportation to ASU.

The preschool also provides ASU students with internship experience and ASU faculty with a unique environment in which to study young children.

The preschool, Woodward said, allows researchers to study young children's interactions and development in a "multi-cultural sensitive environment."

"They (researchers) are studying both the intellectual and social development of the children," said Bob Weigand, director of child laboratory programs.

A culturally diverse group of children play at the College of Education's preschool. The multicultural environment offered is one of the school's stronger suits, teachers and interns say.

College

budgets increased 45 percent at private universities and 26 percent at public universities, the Education Department said.

"It raises the question of what educational institutions are here for," said James Perley, a biology professor at the College of Wooster in Ohio and president of the American Association of University Professors.

But Warren said many of the increased administrative costs are going to counseling and job placement services, which he said college students are demanding.

And colleges must spend to promote themselves in an increasingly competitive market, said David Breneman, former president of Kalamazoo College and now a professor at the Harvard School of Education.

"Marketing is a term you wouldn't have even heard in higher education 15 years ago," he said.

Haiti

Deputies and senators refused to attend because they felt their lives were in danger if they did. Some Aristide supporters left the country or went into hiding.

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Christine Shelly said six Haitian Parliament members in Canada and five in the United States were expected leave Miami early Wednesday for Port-au-Prince.

"We are trying to be sure that there is an environment in Haiti which permits those who have been in hiding to feel comfortable about coming out and participating," in the session, she said.

But Haitian Sen. Thomas Eddy Dupiton, an Aristide opponent, decried the U.S. Army preparations.

"I once admired the bald eagle for its grace," he said. "Now I am struck by its rapacity. They came to reinforce our institutions. Now they are tolling their death."

Dupiton said he would not participate in Wednesday's debate, saying the process was "a masquerade."

Sen. Firmin Jean-Louis, president of the 17-member Senate, and France-Robert Monde, speaker of the 82-member lower house, said several other measures in addition to amnesty would be debated. Those included forming a committee of conciliation, a local government and a new civilian police force.

Eleven other senators who were elected during military rule will be barred from the session.

Looting and rioting broke out at least twice Monday night and Tuesday. On Monday, a U.N. Development Program warehouse lost 11 tons of food worth an estimated $35,000 when Haitians ransacked the building.

Tuesday, about 2,000 people rioted at a feeding center in central Port-au-Prince. American military police drove up and the rioters fled. The MPs remained a few minutes, then pulled away and the looting resumed.

America's Haiti policy subject to Clinton's daily whims

Rubbing my eyes didn't help. The incredible image was still on the TV.

There outside the Pentagon were the secretary of defense, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and other big-time American military people.

A band played rousing anthems and troops wore formal uniforms. There were cannons blasting away in a 21-gun salute.

And what was the occasion for so dramatic a display? What great national event was taking place?

It seems that this fellow Jean-Bertrand Aristide, said to be a slightly unhinged Marxist, had consented to come to the Pentagon to make a speech about President Clinton's policy on Haiti.

Assuming, of course, that Aristide understood Clinton's muddled policy, or that the policy hadn't been switched in the past few minutes.

Until recently, most Americans didn't know Jean-Bertrand Aristide from Joe Glutz. He was and is a bit player on the world stage, the exiled president of a poor and dinky nation of little or no importance to the United States.

But there we were, fawning over him and treating his appearance at the Pentagon as if it was a major event in international diplomacy.

How did the United States, the most powerful nation on Earth, get into this goofy bind?

Because Aristide was in a snit over the dippy-do switcharoo that Clinton had pulled on him.

Instead of our troops roaring ashore and kicking out the evil military bosses of Haiti - as Clinton had vowed we would do - we were now almost pals with the evil military bosses.

And our soldiers had been ordered to just mind their own business when the Haitian troops crushed the skulls of Haitian citizens, including kids and that simple coconut vendor who was whacked to death.

Well, you can't blame Aristide for being a bit out of sorts. After all, he had been told we were going to seize Haiti in order to kick out the military thugs and restore him to the presidency.

It was never clear to most Americans why we would take on that chore, since there are more than enough able-bodied Haitians who could rise up against their oppressors if they wanted to. They aren't so inclined.

But we said we would do it, and a promise is a promise. However, in a twinkling, Clinton decided that all the brutal killers, rapists, cutthroats and thieves in the military junta should be given amnesty for all of their crimes.

And they should be permitted to remain in Haiti and, in fact, continue running the country until some time next month.

If running the country included thugs beating up on ordinary citizens, so be it. Our thousands of soldiers could just put their hands over their eyes if the cruelty bothered them.

Aristide was not thrilled by Clinton's bizarre double-cross. So he pouted in silence, and that prompted the White House to say something like this:

"We can't have Aristide saying we are wishy-washy jerks, even though we are. So let's butter him up, give him an oil rub. Invite him to the Pentagon. Put on a big show. Full dress uniforms, brass band, and a 21-cannon salute. And put Aristide on CNN making a speech about the glories of democracy. Yeah, if that doesn't confuse the hell out of the viewing public, nothing ever will."

This will surely be recorded as one of the wackiest moments in our history.

We started out with the goal of kicking out the bad guys and sent a substantial army to do the job.

Then we decided that the bad guys weren't so bad after all, and we'd let them keep running things for a while.

So our soldiers had to stand around helplessly while the bad guys ran amok. And we don't even know what atrocities they were committing in the countryside, where there were no TV cameras.

When the thugs were shown on American TV, some yuppie in the White House said:

"Oops, that doesn't look good. Tell some general to do something, quick, before the next presidential approval poll is taken."

So the Pentagon sent word that we should bring in a few hundred military police to keep an eye on the Haitian thugs and make sure they don't do anything that will result in more distasteful TV video clips.

And the crowd that created this situation is going to give us universal health care?

I'd rather take my chances with a veterinarian.

Paper reports Drexler to Heat for Miner

Portland Trail Blazers All-Star Clyde Drexler will be traded to the Miami Heat for Harold Miner in a deal said to be in the works.

The Sun-Sentinel of Fort Lauderdale reported today that the trade will be made.

Drexler said he heard about the negotiations from "a good source," and he added that he wouldn't oppose such a deal.

"After being in Portland for so long, it's not like I want to go, but it might be best for everybody," Drexler said Monday. "And Miami would be a good place for me. Nice young team, good climate and they need a two-guard."

Broncos lose RB for rest of season

The Denver Broncos, with four losses in four games, got more bad news today, learning that running back Rod Bernstine is out for the rest of the season with a severe knee injury.

Bernstine tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee in the first quarter of Monday night's Buffalo game.

Cleveland's Nance retires

Larry Nance, one of the NBA's best defensive forwards for the past 13 years, retired Tuesday because his ailing right knee would not let him continue playing.

Nance, 35, played in three All-Star games and ranked eighth in career blocked shots, first among all forwards. He averaged 17.1 points and eight rebounds since coming to the NBA with the Phoenix Suns in 1981.

"One of the positive things about this is that I know I can't play at all on my knee. So there won't be any regrets," said Nance.

Cavaliers owner Gordon Gund said Nance's uniform number — 22 — would be retired in a ceremony sometime this season.

COURTING SUCCESS

ASU's Sargsian poised to win 1st leg of Slam

BY DAN MILLER
STATE PRESS

ASU tennis player Sargis Sargsian is a man possessed.

Sargsian came one-match short of winning the first leg of the collegiate Grand Slam last October, the Skytel National Clay Court Tournament, losing in the finals to former No. 1 Laurent Orsini of Mississippi State.

But this weekend, when the tournament resumes in Jackson, Miss., Sargsian said it may be a different story.

"I'm looking to win it this year," said Sargsian, a returning All-America selection who will be the No. 1 seed in this year's event. "Clay is my favorite surface. If I don't win, I'll be disappointed."

Sargsian stormed onto the NCAA tennis scene last year, posting a 35-10 match record during his collegiate debut. Last February, he became the first Sun Devil player in history to win a Grand Slam tournament as he devoured the field at the Rolex National Intercollegiate Indoor Tournament in Dallas, eventually disposing of Texas-Christian's 19th-ranked Paul Robinson in the championship, 6-3, 6-3. He finished the 1993-94 season ranked seventh in the nation.

"He is one of, if not the premier player in the country," ASU Coach Lou Belken said. "certainly we expect him to be in the top three. He's going to be a contender for the NCAA Championship."

Sargsian's rapid rise was hampered last May when an untimely lower back injury forced him to pull out of the NCAA Championships. Sargsian was the fourth seed in the singles draw but was upset by Mississippi State's Joakim Appelqvist in the first round. He was unable to compete with Peter Jeschke on ASU's second-seeded doubles team.

One week after the championships, Sargsian underwent back surgery to repair a herniated disc. After the surgery, he decided to return to collegiate tennis for his senior year, despite his original plans to turn pro.

"I couldn't serve at all and I was feeling a pain in my left leg," Sargsian said. "Mentally, I couldn't really play. I was really hurting."

However, some intense conditioning and rehabilitation in recent weeks has Sargsian feeling close to match shape.

"I've been doing physical therapy, lifting weights and stretching my back everyday," he said. "It's feeling better."

The senior business major still has his sights set on a pro career after college and considers tennis his top priority right now.

"It's my job," he said. "It's the way I want to make my living."

Sargsian was born in Yerevan, Armenia and arrived at ASU last January.

He began playing tennis at age seven with a group of other enthusiastic youngsters, but Sargsian caught on quicker than the rest and noticed a separation after about two years.

"I was kind of different from the other kids," he said.

Now at age 21, Sargsian is a well-oiled tennis machine with punishing groundstrokes that fuel a menacing baseline game. He was ranked fourth in the Intercollegiate Tennis Association's preseason poll released Tuesday. Sargsian has been working to improve his net game to round out his arsenal.

"I'm a baseliner, but I'm changing," he said. "I'm trying to work on my volley. I'm kind of an all-around player. I want to be (an all-around player)."

Sargsian, who loves to watch football on his days off, said his favorite professional tournament is Wimbledon, though he rarely watches tennis on television.

"I'd rather be there," he said.

"I really like Agassi's game because he's a baseliner," he said.

But Sargsian isn't quite ready to change his style just to be like the U.S. Open champion.

"I have short hair," he joked.

ASU free safety looking for 'killer instinct' to stop foes

BY TODD KELLY
STATE PRESS

Indiana basketball coach Bobby Knight once said, "The will to win is not nearly as important as the will to prepare to win."

Eddie Cade must be a Bobby Knight fan. Cade, ASU's 6-foot-1-inch, 192-pound free safety, knows the only way for ASU to improve on its 1-3 record is to practice hard everyday.

"If we come out here, mope around, if we don't want to do it, don't want to play hard, we're going to be in the same spot we were (on the losing side of the field)," Cade said.

ASU opened the season with a 22-16 defeat of Oregon State but has dropped three straight, the most recent a 25-21 loss at California.

Apparently there is always room for improvement. "I see some people doing a few things and staying after practice and trying to get things corrected," he said. "But we've got to get the whole team doing it this week, so we can bounce back and win against Stanford."

The ASU - Stanford game isn't until Oct. 8, but preparation for Cade and the rest of the Sun Devil defense for that game and the rest of the season has already begun.

In recent Pac-10 statistics, the ASU defense ranks eighth overall in total defense. It's giving up just over 28 points per game.

However, Cade, a senior from Eloy, Ariz., ranks second in the conference in tackles. He is averaging 11 per game. Now there is only one thing the team needs to do to come together.

"The only thing we need to do is play hard," Cade said. "Everybody needs to play hard. If we get everybody to play hard ... including me, on every play, we'll be fine."

Cade recently had one of his best statistical performances last Saturday against Cal.

He intercepted a Dave Barr pass that was tipped by teammate Traivon Johnson, recovered a fumble and recorded nine total tackles. It was the first time that Cade had an interception and a fumble recovery in the same game.

As a whole, however, the defense is still learning how to work together. Cade said the team needs to learn how to put opponents away when it has the chance.

"We don't have that killer instinct that we need to have in order to put the team down and keep them down and we need to get that," Cade said. "and it starts out here on the practice field."

After all, as Knight said, practice is where it all begins. "Every day, we've got to have that (instinct) to run to the ball, even when it's hot," Cade said.

Frosh players strengthen ASU volleyball team

BY LEE NEWMAN
STATE PRESS

At the end of this season, the ASU volleyball team will lose four starting seniors, including All-America candidates Tiffanie Johnson-Gates and Leanne Schuster, but don't look for anyone involved with the team to get overly concerned. The Sun Devils have a young crop of talent that should fill the void left by the seniors' departures.

Freshman Terri Cox, Jennifer Snyder and redshirt freshman Hilary Clark hope to be the nucleus around which the ASU volleyball team's future is built.

"They're three different types of players," Coach Patti Snyder said. "They bring versatility to the line-up because their skills are so different."

The three are already making an impact on the ASU team.

Cox, who is fourth on the team in games played, has started the past four games because of an ankle injury to junior Holly Sones. Cox is also fourth on the team in digs (101).

"Teri is a great all-around player," Coach Snyder said. "She reminds me a lot of Leanne. She's always up and smiling, and she really gets behind her teammates."

Snyder, who went to Independence High School in Phoenix, notched her career high and tied ASU's season high with four block solos last weekend against UCLA.

"The level of play compared to high school is amazing," the 6-foot-2-inch outside hitter said. "I like it so much better. In high school, players don't have the same kind of motivation that players in college have."

Despite being only a freshman, Snyder is very familiar with the type of play ASU likes to implement. For two years, Snyder was coached by ASU Assistant Coach Jeff Nelson in the Junior Olympics.

"There wasn't any real surprise or change when I came to ASU, already being coached by Jeff," she said. "That helped me a lot."

Clark, who redshirted last season because of surgery on a bad knee, doesn't show any ill effects of that injury this season. Clark is first on the team in blocks per game and is second in block solos and total blocks.

"Hilary is a great blocker," Coach Snyder said. "She has the ability to dominate a match with her blocking."

"I try and be a team player," Clark said. "I like to help out my teammates."

Most freshman athletes have trouble adjusting to a new group of players, but no one on the volleyball squad is finding that to be a problem.

"Everyone's great," Clark said.

"It's hard to find a team where everyone gets along so good," Snyder said. "That is one of the reasons why I chose to come here."

Even though the Sun Devils have lost two straight matches, the one thing the new players agree on is their team's ability.

"I know we have so much more potential than what we are showing," Clark said. "I have a feeling we're about to turn it around."

"I think we can beat just about anybody if we play as a team," Snyder said.

Cox, Snyder and Clark are gaining the experience they need in the toughest volleyball conference in the nation.

"When you get in the Pac-10 there's a reality for a freshman thinking, 'I'm in the big leagues now,'" Coach Snyder said.

The reality for the rest of the Pac-10 better be preparing to face a dominant ASU volleyball team for years to come.

Theresa Boettcher/State Press

Basketball fan declares Accu-Rim inventor genius

With the start of the basketball season just around the corner, it's time to take a serious look at the NBA.

What aspect of the game does every center in professional basketball fail miserably at? What does every player, with the exception of Mark Price and Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf, have problems with?

Free throws.

Which brings me to my first declaration. I LOVE STEVE RIEPE. Granted, I've never met the man and I'm sure I never will, but he might revolutionize the game from the line.

This genius invented a contraption he likes to call the Accu-Rim. Designed to increase foul shooting percentages, the simple invention is a 15-inch rim affixed to a standard 18-inch rim.

Assuming that if the player can sink a shot through a 15-inch rim he won't have any problem making one in a standard size basket, the hoop-within-a-hoop just might work.

Of course, it's probably easier said than done. First, the owners would have to invest in the product. Then, to make things even tougher, the players would actually have to practice with it.

That might sound relatively easy, but take Phoenix for example. The Suns can't even get their superstar to get off the golf course let alone practice his free throws.

• I remember a couple of years ago when I prayed every night for the impossible. It was a huge dream, one I felt would change Phoenix forever. It's finally happening.

Michael Jordan is coming to the Valley.

I'll admit that it's not exactly the way I wanted Jordan to land in Phoenix, but it will still be awesome to say the Valley has hold of two of the biggest superstars in basketball history.

Except one of them will be playing baseball.

His arrival has already sparked a boom in Scottsdale

Scorpions season ticket sales, and rumor has it that the lines are long and tickets are dwindling fast.

I love it. Every year the Arizona Fall League draws some of the best prospects in baseball. In the 1992 fall season, Mike Piazza played for the Fall League and was then named the National League Rookie of the Year when he joined the Dodgers 1993.

But what was attendance like when he was here? I can guarantee it wasn't as large as the draw Jordan will receive.

I think that's pathetic.

The Phoenix population would rather shell out their money to see a former basketball superstar attempt to play mediocre baseball over legitimate players proving themselves. Whatever happened to real baseball fans? I'm still trying to figure that one out.

• Finally, one early prediction. This is going to be the Buffalo Bills' year. Even though they've struggled in past Super Bowls, the Bills showed a glimmer of promise in Monday night's win over Denver. Finally, my team will have the ring it deserves.

We need your HELP
Every weekday, we give you the State Press absolutely free. Great news. Great features. Even a magazine. Crosswords and horoscopes. Not to mention the huge savings from all the coupons.
We do this for you every day. Will you do something for us? Good! Thanks!
When the State Press inserts, they tend to flop to the ground and create a safety hazard as well as an eyesore. Would you be so socially correct as to bend over and pick an insert that might slip out of your State Press? Thanks.
We appreciate your help. And so does the earth.

YOUR INDIVIDUAL HOROSCOPE

FRANCES DRAKE

For Wednesday, Sept. 28, 1994
ARIES (Mar 21 to Apr. 19)
You'll be receiving good news about a property matter or an investment. Home decorating projects are favored now. Tonight brings happy times with guests.
TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20)
There's a happy accent on romance and partnership interests today. Couples will feel especially close to each other. Singles will meet with romantic introductions.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 20)
Your social graces will be a valuable asset in business today and some of you will meet with romance through the job. Financial and career gains are likely.
CANCER (June 21 to July 22)
Passions are likely to quicken in romance today. Your positive outlook and friendly manner open good doors for you. Tonight there's a decided accent on having fun.
LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22)
You'll be spending quality time now with a romantic interest. You'll opt for time with each other over outside socializing. Home-based activities bring happiness.
VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22)
Be sure to accept invitations which come now. You'll have a grand time. Benefits come through friendship and interests of the heart are happily highlighted.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22)
Your charming personality will be a factor in career successes today. New business opportunities arise now and you'll make a great impression in your dealings.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)
If you don't receive an invitation to go somewhere special now, you'll make your own plans for either travel or a delightful outing. Things go your way today.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)
Good news comes now about a financial matter. You'll have luck today in raising money for a project. Some will be devoting time to a humanitarian concern.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)
You'll be pleased with today's relationship developments. Couples will enjoy happy get-togethers with friends. Some of you will definitely fall in love now.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)
Chances for advancement will arise now. Business and pleasure combine to your advantage. A higher-up is amenable to requests. Your future today looks bright.
PISCES (Feb. 19 to Mar. 20)
You'll be making happy plans for the weekend now. Today too is favorable for recreationalists and the enjoyment of romance. Go somewhere special tonight.
YOU BORN TODAY are both independent and cooperative. Though you can succeed in business, you're usually happier in an artistic or professional career. At times, you must be careful not to let private worries get the best of you. More self-reliant and willing to take a chance than the typical member of your sign, you're likely to come before the public as a person who does his or her own thing. Birthdate of: Ed Sullivan, TV personality; Marcello Mastroianni, actor; and Brigitte Bardot, actress.
